OPINIONS OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL FROM JANUARY 10, 1917, TO JANUARY 8, 1918.

STATE BOARD OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS—FORCE AND EFFECT OF ACT CREATING SAME—MEMBERSHIP ON SAID BOARD—ITS DUTIES—DUTIES OF ADJUTANT GENERAL IN REGARD TO PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

The act providing for a state board of public buildings is still in force and effect and is not obsolete, due to its special nature.

Membership on said board ceases at the same time that the terms of office cease in the bodies from which the members are appointed; and this though the members should be re-elected or reappointed to the bodies from which they were originally appointed.

There is no conflict between the provisions of this act and the provisions of the act found on page 319 of the 105-106 Year Book, which has to do with the duties of the adjutant general. The duties of the board are special and limited. The duties of the adjutant general are general and continuous.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 13, 1917.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In accordance with your oral communication of recent date, I am rendering you an opinion in reference to an act passed by the eighty-first general assembly to provide for the appointment of a state board of public buildings.

> "1. Is said act still in full force and effect, or has it become obsolete, due to the fact that it is of a special nature?"

It is my opinion that this act is still in full force and effect and that the members of said board have the authority to proceed further in carrying out the provisions of the same. There are many cases having a bearing upon this question which might be cited with profit.

In Homer v. Commonwealth, 106 Pa. St. 221, the court held in the syllabus:

> "An act of assembly cannot be repealed by non-user. It can be repealed only by express provision of a subsequent law, or by a clause of such subsequent law so positively repugnant to its provisions that the two cannot stand together, or be consistently reconciled."

In its opinion on page 226 the court holds:

> "It was long ago settled that an act of parliament cannot be repealed by non-user. That this is also the rule in this state accords with reason and the absence of authority to the contrary. The settled rule is, that a statute can be repealed only by express provision of a subsequent law or by necessary implication."

In 1 Bland Ch. (Md.) 550, Snowden v. Snowden, the court lays down the law in the syllabus as follows:

"The express provisions of a constitutional act of assembly cannot become obsolete and are of superior authority to any usage or adjudged case whatever."

In the opinion at page 556 the court say:

"No judge or court, either of first or last resort, can have any right to legislate; and there can be no difference between the power to declare an act of assembly obsolete, and the power to enact a new law. The power to repeal and to enact are of the same nature."

I merely cite the following cases without quoting:

26 Wash. 405.

Further in answer to above query, it is plainly evident, from the authority given to the board and the duties imposed upon them in said act, that their authority and duties are not at an end. In section 4 they are empowered:

"to inspect and cause to be made or to procure surveys, measurements and drawings of the state house, judiciary building and state house grounds, for the purpose of determining whether alterations in or additions to the state house or the judiciary building, or in or to both of them, and improvements and embellishments of the state house grounds can be made."

In the same section they are to determine:

"(b) Whether improvements or changes can be made in the state house and judiciary building to provide for a more economical and efficient conduct of the business of the state and to promote the health and welfare of the officers and employes therein.

"(c) Whether repairs are needed for the proper preservation of the state house and judiciary building.

"(d) Whether the state house grounds can be improved and embellished in a manner to make them conform to and more nearly express the function and dignity of the state of Ohio."

Under section 5 of said act the board is authorized and empowered, under subdivision 1 of said section, to proceed with additions to or alterations in or repair of the state house, judiciary building or other building or buildings which may be acquired for the use of the state, and under subdivision 2 of said section to proceed with the improvement and embellishment of the state house grounds.

In view of all the above, I am of the opinion that said law is still in full force and effect.

"2. Does the term of office upon the board of public buildings of those members appointed from the general assembly and the Ohio board of administration cease when said members cease to be members of the general assembly and the Ohio board of administration, or is the membership upon said board of public buildings continuous and indefinite?"

Section 1 of said act provides that the board of public buildings shall be composed of seven members; that not more than four of them shall be of the same political faith; that the adjutant general is ex officio a member; that the governor in appointing the members of said board must appoint two members from each branch of the general assembly and two from the Ohio board of administration. From this it is evident that this board is to have a certain complexion; that there is a limitation upon the membership of the board; that it was the intention of the legislature that two members of the board should be members of the house of representatives, two should be members of the senate and two should be members of the Ohio board of administration. Or in other words, the board of public buildings must from time to time be composed of the adjutant general ex officio, two members from each branch of the general assembly and two members from the Ohio board of administration.

Hence, it is my opinion, if a member of the board of public buildings cease to be a member of the general assembly or of the Ohio board of administration, due to the expiration of his term, removal or resignation, that he at the same time ceases to be a member of the board of public buildings, this for the reason that he no longer has the qualifications for membership on said board. It is my opinion that he ceases to be a member for all time. And the mere fact that he might be re-elected for another term in the general assembly or be reappointed on the board of administration, would not reinstate him upon the board of public buildings. Vacancies on the board of public buildings would be filled in the same manner and with the same limitations as set out in item one of said act.

"3. Do the provisions of the act creating a state board of public buildings and the duties imposed upon said board conflict with the provisions of the act relative to the duties of the adjutant general, which act is found on page 319 of the 105-106 Year Book?"

It is my opinion that there is no conflict of duties to be performed by said board and the adjutant general. The only part of the duties of the adjutant general, as set forth in said act, that could in any way conflict with the duties of the board of public buildings, is found in section 146 G. C. as follows:

"Sec. 146. * * He shall have the supervision and control of * * the grounds and appurtenances thereof and all work or materials required in or about them. * * *"

These duties are general; they are continuous; they extend from year to year. The adjutant general takes the buildings and the grounds as they are or as they may be put by the law-making body or its agents, and exercises supervision over them. He has no authority to erect buildings or make general and costly repairs upon the same. While on the other hand the duties of the board are special, are limited. They take one general survey of the whole situation in order to enable them to ascertain what ought to be done, if anything. When this is ascertained by the board, they do the work necessary to be done to the buildings or to the grounds. Then the general oversight of the property and the grounds as they leave them passes to the adjutant general.

From this it is my opinion that there is no conflict between the two provisions.

Respectfully,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—INTERPRETATION OF SECTION 12912 G. C. IN REGARD TO ONE YEAR CLAUSE THEREOF—STREET INSPECTOR—OFFICER OF MUNICIPAL CORPORATION MAY ACT AS SAME WITHIN ONE YEAR AFTER TERM EXPIRES—WHEN FORMER DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE MAY ACT AS STREET INSPECTOR.

The one year provision of Section 12912 G. C. serves merely as a prohibition against an officer described therein acting as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or township within one year after his term had expired.

A position of street inspector is not one of the prohibited positions under said one year provision of said section.

A former director of public service may act as street inspector within one year after his term of office expires, no matter whether his compensation is paid by the city or the contractor, or paid by the city and afterwards deducted from the estimate allowed the contractor on his contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 20, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 9, 1917, you submitted to me for my opinion the following request:

"In view of the provisions of section 12912, General Code:

"(1) May a former director of public service of a municipality, within one year after the term for which he was appointed. legally act as inspector on street improvement work if his compensation is paid by the city and borne by the city?

"(2) May a former director of public service of a municipality, within one year after the term for which he was appointed, legally act as inspector on street improvement work if his compensation is paid by the contractor and borne by the contractor?

"(3) May a former director of public service of a municipality, within one year after the term for which he was appointed, legally act as inspector on street improvement work if his compensation is paid by the city and later deducted in payments for work made by the city to the contractor, and therefore borne by the contractor?"

Section 12912 G. C. reads as follows:

"Section 12912. Whoever, being an officer of a municipal corporation or member of the council thereof or the trustee of a township, is interested in the profits of a contract, job, work or services for such corporation or township, or acts as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation or township during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter, or becomes the employe of the contractor of such contract, job, work, or services while in office, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than six months, or both, and forfeit his office."

In order to determine the proper answers to your questions it will be necessary first to ascertain what meaning the expression, "during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter," has with respect to the rest of said section.

This department has considered the bearing of this portion of said section heretofore and its interpretation of same is set forth in an opinion rendered by Hon. U. G. Denman, Attorney-General, under date of January 21, 1910, to Hon. L. C. Barker, city solicitor, Galion, Ohio, found in the report of the Attorney-General for the years 1910-1911, at page 1033, and cited with approval by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, Attorney-General, in an opinion rendered on March 7, 1914, to Hon. William B. James, city solicitor, Bowling Green, Ohio, found in the report of the Attorney-General for that year at page 386, which is as follows:

> "It will be noted with respect to the original act that the subject 'no member of the council or any officer of the corporation' is repeated; in fact the entire structure of the original section indicates clearly that the portion thereof which follows the parenthesis is absolutely separate and distinct from that which precedes and that it would have been proper grammatically to have placed a period at the division point. This conclusion eliminates one of the possible meanings suggested and indicates clearly that the phrase 'during the term for which he was elected or appointed, or for one year thereafter' does not modify the verb 'is interested.'"

Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, Attorney-General of Ohio, considered same further in an opinion rendered May 27, 1912, to Hon. James L. Leonard, city solicitor, Mt. Vernon, Ohio, found in the report of the Attorney-General for that year, at pages 1744-1745, as follows:

> "The purpose of this section is to prevent an officer of a municipality from having any interest in the profits of any contract or work done for the city. It specifically prohibits such officer from acting as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, in work undertaken by the municipality during the term for which he was elected or appointed and for one year thereafter. The statute seeks to prevent any officer from securing any interest in any contract with the municipality, so that he might not be tempted to use his official position to further the interests of a contractor or of himself.
> "It is not the purpose of the statute to prevent an officer from holding another office in the village or city, at the expiration of the term of his first office, even though the second office has duties which pertain to work undertaken by the municipality. Likewise this section does not prevent an officer resigning a position in the city government and accepting appointment to another office in the service of the city."

It has always been considered by this department that the one year provision served merely as a prohibition against such officer acting as commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer in work undertaken or prosecuted by such corporation within one year after his term had expired.

Inasmuch as one holding a position of street inspector cannot be considered a commissioner, architect, superintendent or engineer, and being of the same opinion on the one year provision of said section, as this department has held heretofore, I can see no objection to a former service director acting as a street inspector within the one year period, no matter whether his compensation is paid by the city or contractor, or paid by the city and afterwards deducted from the estimate allowed the contractor on his contract.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—INTERPRETATION OF SECTION 7735 G. C. IN REGARD TO NOTICE REQUIRED THEREIN—TUITION FOR NON-RESIDENT PUPILS.

Tuition for non-resident pupils, provided for by section 7735 G. C. is not an obligation against the school district of the residence of such pupils until after notice of such attendance is filed with the board of education of such district.

Notice must be given to the board of education of a school district in which pupils reside before tuition for such pupils attending school in another district, as provided by section 7735 G. C. becomes an obligation against the district of the residence of such pupils.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 22, 1917.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 6, 1917, wherein you request my opinion upon the following state of facts:

> "Suppose pupils in Plain township attend school in Chester township, the school in Plain township being more than a mile and a half from their residence, but the school in Chester township less than a mile and a half from their residence.
> "There was no agreement between the boards and the Chester township board did not notify the Plain township board of such attendance by said pupils until about a year after such pupils commenced to go to school in Chester township. Can the Chester township board collect tuition for such past year, the demand having been made at the end thereof and not at the beginning?"

General Code section 7735 provides as follows:

> "When pupils live more than one and one-half miles from the school to which they are assigned in the district where they reside, they may attend a nearer school in the same district, or if there be none nearer therein, then the nearest school in another school district, in all grades below the high school. In such cases the board of education of the district in which they reside must pay the tuition of such pupils without an agreement to that effect. But a board of education shall not collect tuition for such attendance until after notice thereof has been given to the board of education of the district where the pupils reside. Nothing herein shall require the consent of the board of education of the district where the pupils reside, to such attendance."

You will note that under the provisions of the above section no agreement of the several boards is necessary to be made, but the board of education of the district where such pupils are in attendance shall not collect tuition for such attendance until after notice thereof has been given to the board of education where the pupils reside.

The first question to be determined, then, is the effect of the requirement of notice. Notice in its legal sense, is the information given of some act done, or the interpellation by which some act is required to be done. Whenever the giving of notice is a condition precedent to the right to recover, no liability attaches until such notice is given. It is held in Moore vs. Given, 39 O. S. 661, that where a statute requires notice to be given, actual notice alone will satisfy such requirement. So that until the Plain township board of education gave actual notice to the Chester township board of education of such attendance by said pupils, no liability existed against said Chester township board.

Our position, however, is fortified also by an opinion of former Attorney-General Timothy S. Hogan, rendered April 22, 1912, to Hon. R. H. Sutphen, prosecuting attorney of Defiance county, and found in the reports of the Attorney-General for the year 1912, at page 1273, wherein the following language is used:

> "While it is true that the statute says 'shall not collect tuition for such attendance,' yet from a reading of the entire section and the fact that it does not require any agreement or consent from the board of education of the district in which the pupil resides, I am of the opinion that the liability to pay for such attendance will not attach until the notice provided for in the section (7735) has been given, I do not believe that the section means that the notice merely establishes a right to collect for tuition of pupils who have attended prior to the giving of such notice as it would seem to me that the object of the notice, since no contract is necessary, is to fix the time when the obligation for the tuition commences."

I agree with the above holding and adopt the same as a part of my opinion, in answer to your question.

To answer your question specifically, then, I am of the opinion that the Chester township board cannot collect the tuition from such Plain township board for such past year because of the want of notice.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICER OHIO NATIONAL GUARD—ON RETIRED LIST—ELIGIBLE TO MEMBERSHIP ON STATE ARMORY BOARD.

An officer of the Ohio National Guard on the retired list is eligible to membership on State armory board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 22, 1917.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 15th, wherein you inquire as follows:

> "Section 5254, Revised Statutes, provides that the 'armory board shall consist of four officers of the Ohio National Guard' and, at present, I desire a ruling from your department as to whether a retired officer of the national guard is eligible as a member of the armory board.

"Section 5201 makes a provision for the retirement of an officer and provides, further, that 'the commander-in-chief may detail officers so retired on various duties.'

"As Colonel Bryant, one member of the armory board, is now on the retired list, and Lieutenant-Colonel Rieger, another member of the armory board, has made application to be placed on the retired list, the above question becomes a serious one, as an answer in the negative would make it necessary for the governor to appoint two members to fill the vacancies."

Section 5254 of the General Code provides:

"The State armory board shall consist of four officers of the Ohio national guard to be appointed by the governor, by and with the consent of the senate, each of whom shall serve four years. * * *"

There is nothing in the above provision which states that the officers so appointed shall be from the active list. The only requirement in the statute is that they shall be officers of the Ohio national guard.

Section 5201 of the General Code, to which you call my attention, provides as follows:

"Any commissioned officer who has served as a member of the national guard for a period of ten years, five of which have been as a commissioned officer, at his own request may be placed upon the retired list, which shall be kept in the office of the adjutant general. * * * The commander-in-chief may detail officers so retired upon duty other than in the command of troops, and when so detailed, they shall receive like pay and allowance as officers on the active list detailed or employed under like conditions."

It appears from the above section that an officer on the retired list is still an officer of the Ohio national guard and as such, subject to detail.

In view of the fact that section 5254 G. C. does not provide that the members of the State armory board shall be chosen from the officers of the Ohio national guard on active duty, I am of the opinion that an officer of the Ohio national guard on the retired list is eligible as a member of the State armory board.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—TOWNSHIP TREASURER PERSONALLY RESPONSIBLE FOR POSTAGE USED IN COMMUNICATING WITH TOWNSHIP BANK DEPOSITORY.

Township trustees cannot legally reimburse a township treasurer for money expended by him for postage used in communicating with the township bank depository in the performance of his duties as such public official.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 24, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 8, 1917, you request my opinion on the following:

> "If a township treasurer does a portion of his transactions with the bank, or banks, which have the custody of the township funds, by mail, is there any authority of law under which the township trustees can reimburse him for moneys expended for postage?"

Section 3318 G. C. reads as follows:

> "Sec. 3318. The treasurer shall be allowed and may retain as his fees for receiving, safe keeping and paying out moneys belonging to the township treasury, two per cent of all moneys paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees."

The above section provides for the compensation of a township treasurer and specifies what services are to be rendered by him in return for said compensation.

It is a well known principle of law, sustained by a long line of authorities, that a public official is not entitled to compensation for services rendered, unless such compensation is fixed by statute, and then only for the particular duties specified. This principle applies to a township treasurer, as held in Debolt v. Trustees, 7 O. S. 237.

Said section 3318 contains the only provisions in the Code relating to compensation of a township treasurer for performing his general duties as such official. Under the provisions of this section said treasurer receives compensation for the receiving, safe keeping and paying out of township funds.

It is my opinion that any dealings that the treasurer might have with the township bank depository would be a part of the duties of receiving, safe keeping and paying out township funds, for which he is entitled to a two per cent fee. If the township treasurer found it necessary to use the mails in communicating with the bank depository, he should pay for the postage required, out of the two per cent allowed him by law.

Hence, for the reasons given above, I am of the opinion that the township trustees cannot legally reimburse a township treasurer for money expended by him for postage used in communicating with the township bank depository in the performance of his duties as such public official.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COMMON PLEAS JUDGES—NOT ENTITLED TO ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR SERVICES RENDERED UNDER ASSIGNMENT OF CHIEF JUSTICE BY VIRTUE OF SECTION 1469 G. C.—IF ELECTED PRIOR TO AMENDMENT OF SECTION 2253 G. C.

Common pleas judges elected prior to amendment of section 2253 G. C., 104 O. L. 251, are not entitled to additional compensation of $10.00 for each day on which they render services under assignment of the chief justice of the supreme court acting by virtue of section 1469 G. C.

Opinion to that effect by Attorney-General Turner, rendered March 1, 1915, concurred in.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 31, 1917.

HON. JAMES W. TARBELL, Judge of Common Pleas Court, Georgetown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have carefully considered the question submitted by you in your letter of January 17, which is whether or not common pleas judges, elected prior to the amendment and taking effect of section 2253 G. C. (104 O. L. 251), are entitled to the additional compensation of ten dollars for each day on which they render services under the assignment of the chief justice of the supreme court, acting by virtue of section 1469 G. C.

In an accompanying letter you call my attention to inconsistent opinions of former attorneys general on this subject, one rendered by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan in August, 1914 (Vol. I, Annual Report for that year, 1057), and the other by Hon. Edward C. Turner (Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1915, Vol. I, 206).

My conclusion agrees with that of Mr. Turner, who holds that the common pleas judges in the above described situation are not entitled to the special compensation referred to, for the reason that to allow them such compensation would be violative of article IV, section 14 of the Constitution of this state.

I do not feel that I can add anything to Mr. Turner's statement of the reasons by which he supports this view, and inasmuch as you have made reference to the opinion, I take it that you are familiar with it.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

AUTOMOBILE DEPARTMENT—CASHIER IN UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE —NOT PRACTICABLE TO DETERMINE FITNESS OF SAID OFFICIAL BY COMPETITIVE EXAMINATION.

It is not practicable to determine the merit or fitness of applicants for the position of cashier in the automobile department by competitive examination, and such position is, therefore, in the unclassified service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 31, 1917.

HON. W. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On January 11, 1917, you addressed an inquiry to this department in reference to your authority to appoint a cashier in the automobile department, and as to whether such position is included in the classified civil service.

Your request is by letter as follows:

> "I desire an opinion from you relative to my power to appoint a person to the vacancy in the position of cashier in the automobile department.
> "Am advised that the civil service commission has a list of names from which they can certify a list to me from which to select. Am I bound to appoint from this list so furnished, or can I ignore it and appoint whomsoever I choose? In the event that the appointment must finally be made from the list furnished by the commission have I the power to make a temporary appointment of a person of my own selection, and for what period of time?
> "I am especially interested in this position and desire to obtain a man for the place, if possible, who possesses the highest standard of qualifications, honesty and integrity, as all the funds and receipts of that department pass through the hands of the person holding the place.
> "Kindly advise me upon these points at your earliest convenience, and oblige."

It transpires upon examination that this is not a question of detail as to a ramification of the power possessed by the civil service commission, but it goes to the very marrow in the spine of the civil service act itself—its scope and meaning with reference to the organic law upon which it is founded.

The constitutional provision is as follows:

> "Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties and cities, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examinations. Laws shall be passed providing for the enforcement of this provision."
> Article XV Section 10.

The legislature then must have passed this law in question for the enforcement of this provision. The law is found in Vol. 106 p. 400, G. C. 486 to 486-31. The portion of this law applicable to the question in hand is that part defining the classified and unclassified service beginning at Sec. 486-8. Under subdivision (a) of this section, in subsections numbered from 1 to 12, is what purports to be a complete schedule of all positions in the unclassified service, but which, as shall presently be submitted, has one important limitation—the constitutional one.

If this particular position be unclassified under the letter of the act, it is by virtue of sub-section 9,

> "the deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act for and in place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

There might be doubt as to whether this cashier is a deputy but that doubt should probably be resolved in the affirmative under the description of his duties contained in your inquiry and with reference to this provision containing a qualification of the meaning of deputy and with reference to the change made in that qualification from the law in force immediately before this, and the word "generally," qualifying "to act," having been dropped out of the old law. This functionary though not called a deputy substantially is one in a particular department of the duty of the secretary of state. There is no doubt as to his holding a fiduciary relation, superlatively so, almost exclusively so. There is no doubt of his being authorized to act in the place of his principal. There is a doubt, however, as to whether he is "authorized by law" to so act, there being no statute making any specific provision in that respect, so that it may at least be considered doubtful as to whether he comes under the description of unclassified, as the same is expressly set forth in the law. He does, however, come within that designation by the necessary test of the law by its constitutional foundation.

The addition to the unclassified service alluded to above consists of all those officials whose merit and fitness it is not practicable to ascertain by competitive examination. This class of officials is recognized in the act itself expressly.

Passing to subdivision (b) of the section in question—there is a preliminary statement that all other persons in the public employment not specifically mentioned in subdivision (a) are in the classified service, which is there subdivided into the competitive and the unskilled labor classes.

The recognition of the constitutional qualification above referred to, and creating additional unclassified service appears in subsection 1 of this subdivision in the following language:

> "(1) The competitive class shall include all positions and employments * * * for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations."

Now this is the exact language of the constitutional qualification, except that in one case we have "for which," and in the other "as far as," a mere verbal difference. The conclusion is irresistible that this language was employed to effectuate this constitutional qualification. It can do so in no other way than by including as unclassified all those positions for which it is impracticable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations. To so hold is to hold the statute in accordance with the constitution, a construction which is always adopted where possible, even though it be a forced one. To hold otherwise would be to suppose that the law attempts to exceed its constitutional bounds, in which case it would be of no effect and void to the exact extent that it did so. The express list, then, of positions in the unclassified service is only a complete list of those which can be included within the operation of the law at all, viz: those whose merit, etc., it is practicable to determine in this manner. It then only remains to consider whether it is practicable to ascertain the merit and fitness of the cashier by an examination, or to determine between two applicants for such position by a competitive examination.

In no place does the letter of the statute commit the determination of this question to any authority. The spirit of the act, however, would seem to place the responsibility of such decision upon the civil service commission, subject to control by the courts, and there, generally speaking, it is the disposition of this department to leave it. In any case where there could be any doubt upon the subject it should first be left to the decision of the commission. There are, however, some positions that in the common knowledge of everyone are not practicably subject to the test of such examinations, in which case, if there can be no doubt what the commission would find, or what the courts would determine upon the subject, such conclusion may be acted upon as a matter of law, in the first instance, by the appointing authority or its advisers without the unnecessary circumlocution and circumvention of going through the proceedings and records of the commission. This office is such position, and it may safely be said, as a matter of law, that the fitness and merit of a cashier cannot be determined by an examination for the obvious reason that more than ninety-nine per cent of such fitness is a question of integrity, which is inscrutable, past finding out, by any such test, and which no man can determine except as a result of intimate acquaintance or careful observation thereof on his part, or of someone in whom he confides. What would be said of a board of bank directors who would select a cashier for the bank by a competitive examination? Yet the nature of that duty would render it much more appropriate than this cashier, for that cashier has other very prominent duties and requirements aside from the handling of money.

Suppose a warden of the penitentiary wanted a cashier. He would not have to go outside his own walls to find a goodly number from which to make a selection, most of whom could stand the test of a very severe examination, and yet their very reason for being his involuntary guests is that they are unfit to be cashiers.

It is a matter of common knowledge that this cashier will handle over a million dollars a year. His clerical duties are purely negligible compared to this main consideration. He is not like a bank cashier, required to increase the business. He has no competition. All the vast multitude of people who do this particular business can go to nobody but him. It is correct to state, as a matter of law, that it is not practicable to ascertain his merit or fitness by an examination whereby his intellectual acumen or scientific or literary attainments may be compared with those of other persons seeking the same position. He is once for all in the unclassified service.

In so holding there is no underestimate of the exalted object of the civil service law, or disregard of the disinterested purpose of those entrusted by the state with the duty of enforcing it, nor intention of establishing a precedent of deciding as a matter of law anything which should be left to the civil service commission to draw as inference from facts. This action is taken with reference to this case alone, because, as shown above, it is so peculiarly and exclusively an unfit case for the test of an examination, that there could be no doubt but what the commission would so hold or that the courts would so hold in the event of its reaching them.

This, of course, is taking the duties of the position as set forth in the inquiry. Not being specified by law they will be prescribed by the head of the department.

In this holding we are not without precedent in this office. Each of the last two incumbents have expressed an equivalent opinion. On May 28, 1914, in an opinion to the State civil service commission, in reference to the inclusion or exclusion of certain officers in the classified service, Attorney-General Hogan says:

> "As to some positions it can be determined as a matter of law that it is impracticable to hold examinations therefor."
> Vol. I Attorney-General's Report, p. 715.

On January 16, 1915, Attorney-General Turner, in an opinion rendered to the State civil service commission, gives a practical application of this general statement as follows:

> "I have no hesitancy in saying, as a matter of law, that the secretary to the governor * * * are not within the classified service, for the reason that it is impracticable to determine their merit and fitness by competitive examination."
> Vol. I Opinions Attorney-General, p. 3.

It is true in the latter opinion the attorney-general held that the matter was for the determination of the commission, but inasmuch as he expressly declares what that determination must be as a matter of law, I see no reason why the appointing power may not cut cross-lots and assume the decision without going to the Commission for the main purpose of a determination of that which is already pre-determined.

This opinion, of course, is based entirely upon the state of facts as set forth in the inquiry set out herein.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—LEASE OF CERTAIN LANDS FOR OIL AND GAS IN ROSS AND MORGAN COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 2, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication of January 26, 1917, transmitting to me four leases in triplicate in which certain lands are leased by the state for oil and gas, was received, which leases are as follows:

1. To W. V. Walton, lands in Ross county.
2. To J. D. Varney and D. G. Coyner, lands in Ross county.
3. To George R. Barrett, lands in Morgan county.
4. To George R. Barrett, lands in Ross county, the latter lease embodying two different tracts of land.

I have carefully examined those leases and find them legal in form and that they protect the interests of the state of Ohio in the premises so leased.

I therefore am returning the same properly endorsed.

Your communication states that there are five leases. I am assuming that the lease to George R. Barrett of two tracts in one lease accounts for this, as there were only four separate leases enclosed in your communication to me.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY—MAY INCORPORATE ONLY FOR PURPOSES DESIGNATED IN FIRST PARAGRAPH OF SECTION 9510 AND IN SECTION 9556 G. C.—DISAPPROVAL ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF "THE MUTUAL FIRE AND AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE COMPANY."

A mutual fire insurance company under the provisions of the act of February 6, 1914 (104 O. L. 202 et seq.—sections 9607-1 to 9607-29 G. C.) may incorporate only for the purposes designated in the first paragraph of section 9510 and in section 9556 of the General Code; and such company cannot incorporate for purposes designated in paragraph 2 of section 9510 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 3, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am herewith returning to you without approval the articles of incorporation of "THE MUTUAL FIRE AND AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE COMPANY." The purpose clause of the articles of incorporation of this company reads as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of insuring houses, buildings, automobiles and automobile accessories and all other kinds of property in and out of the state against loss or damage by fire, lightning, and tornadoes; and to insure against loss or damage by theft of automobiles and accessories and damage thereto from said cause; and also to insure against loss or damage on account of public liability in the operation of automobiles and automobile accessories by collision, and damage to automobiles and accessories from any other cause whatsoever."

No provision is made in these articles for the capital stock of the proposed company, but the same evidently contemplate the incorporation of the proposed company as an insurance company on the mutual plan.

In the case of State v. Pioneer Live Stock Company, 38 O. S. 347, it was held that the purposes for which a domestic insurance company may be incorporated are limited to those purposes which are specified in the statutory provisions as to insurance companies, and that the general corporation statutory provisions which, with certain exceptions, permit incorporation for any purpose for which individuals may lawfully associate themselves, are not applicable to such companies.

Looking, therefore, to the statutory provisions applicable to insurance companies it will be noted that the only provisions authorizing the incorporation of insurance companies, other than life, on the mutual plan are those contained in the act of February 6, 1914 (104 O. L. 202). which have been carried into the General Code as sections 9607-1 to 9607-29, inclusive.

Sections 2 and 26 of the said act (Secs. 9607-2 and 9607-26 General Code) provide as follows:

> "9607-2. A domestic mutual company may be organized with such powers to transact the business of insurance as are, or may be, granted by law to stock fire insurance companies organized under the laws of this state."

"Sec. 9607-26. The laws of this state governing corporations and the laws relating to insurance, to the extent they are now or hereafter may be applicable to any such mutual companies and not in conflict with the provisions of this act (G. C. sections 9607-1 to 9607-29) are hereby made specifically applicable to such mutual companies."

An examination of section 9510 of the General Code which provides specifically as to the purpose for which insurance companies other than life may be incorporated reveals that this section by separately enumerated paragraphs thereof divides all such insurance companies into four distinct classes with reference to the purposes for which they may be organized and may issue policies, as follows:

1. Insurance companies covering losses against fire, lightning, tornadoes; and insurance companies covering losses upon goods in the process of transportation.
2. Insurance companies covering losses against casulty other than fire.
3. Live stock insurance companies, and
4. Deposit insurance companies insuring the safekeeping of books, stocks, etc.

Paragraph 1 of said section 9510 of the General Code provides that a company may be organized and admitted to "Insure houses, buildings, and all other kinds of property in and out of the state against loss or damage by fire, lightning and tornadoes, and make all kinds of insurance on goods, merchandise and other property in the course of transportation on land, water, or on a vessel, boat, or wherever it may be."

Section 9556 of the General Code provides as follows:

"All companies organized or admitted for the purpose of insuring against loss or damage by fire, may insure against loss or damage by water, caused by the breakage or leakage of sprinklers, pumps, tanks, water pipes and fixtures connected therewith, and by lightning, explosions from gas, dynamite, gunpowder, and other like explosions, and tornadoes; and may also insure against loss by the theft of automobiles and accessories, and against damage thereto from this cause."

In view of the provisions of Section 2 of the act of February 6, 1914 (Sec. 9607-2), granting to a mutual fire insurance company such as is here contemplated such powers to transact the business of insurance as are granted by law to stock fire insurance companies organized under the laws of this state it follows from the provisions of the first paragraph of Section 9510 of the General Code, and those of Section 9556 of the General Code, that the company here contemplated would have authority to incorporate for the purpose of insuring houses, buildings, automobiles and automobile accessories and all other kinds of property in and out of the state against loss or damage by fire, lightning and tornadoes, and also to insure against loss or damage by theft of automobiles and accessories and damage thereto from said cause. However, the articles of incorporation submitted indicate a further purpose on the part of the proposed company to "insure against loss or damage on account of public liability in the operation of automobiles; and also to insure against loss or damage to automobiles and automobile accessories by collision, and damage to automobiles and accessories from any other cause whatsoever."

Paragraph 2 of section 9510 of the General Code provides that a company may be organized to > "make insurance against loss or damage resulting from accident to property, from cause other than fire or lightning."

and to

> "make insurance to indemnify employers against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to employes or persons other than employes and to indemnify persons and corporations other than employers against loss or damage for personal injury or death resulting from accidents to other persons or corporations."

These statutory provisions in the second paragraph of section 9510 of the General Code are broad enough in their terms to authorize insurance covering the purpose above quoted, stated in the latter part of the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation herein questioned. However, section 9511 of the General Code, which was formerly a part of the same section of the Revised Statutes (Sec. 3641) with section 9510 of the General Code, provides as follows:

> "No company shall be organized to issue policies of insurance for more than one of the above four mentioned purposes, and no company organized for either one of such purposes shall issue policies of insurance of any other."

Inasmuch as under the provisions of section 2 of the act of February 6, 1914 (Secs. 9607-2 G. C.), a mutual fire insurance company such as is contemplated by the articles of incorporation here in question can exercise no greater powers than any other fire insurance company organized for the purpose indicated in the first paragraph of section 9510 of the General Code, it follows by force of the provisions of section 9511 of the General Code, above quoted, that this company cannot be incorporated for the purpose provided for in the second paragraph of section 9510 of the General Code, and inasmuch as the purpose stated in the latter part of the purpose clause of these articles, above quoted, are sanctioned only by the provisions in the second paragraph of section 9510, which are rendered inapplicable by the provisions of said section 9511, I am unable to approve the articles of incorporation here submitted.

I also herewith enclose the check accompanying the said articles of incorporation in the sum of $25.00 payable to your order.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PHILIPPINE GOVERNMENT BONDS—NOT BONDS OF THE UNITED STATES WITHIN MEANING OF SEC. 10933 G. C.—GUARDIAN NOT AUTHORIZED TO INVEST MONEY OF WARD IN SUCH BONDS.

Philippine government four per cent registered gold bonds are not "bonds of the United States" within the meaning of section 10933 of the General Code authorizing the guardian of a minor ward to invest the money of the ward in such bonds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 3, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM H. LEUDERS, Probate Judge, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 17, 1917, asking my opinion as to whether or not Philippine government four per cent registered gold bonds are

> "bonds of the United States within the meaning of section 10933 authorizing the guardian for a minor ward to invest the money of his ward in such bonds?"

With respect to the question at hand, section 10933 of the General Code reads as follows:

> "* * * he may invest such money in bonds of the United States, or of a state on which default has never been made in the payment of interest, or bonds of a county or city in this state, issued in conformity to law; * * *"

It is an elementary rule in the construction of statutes that terms therein contained should be taken in their ordinary and natural import unless the context indicates otherwise, and should be given such meaning as comports with common sense or the understanding of the community and which will effectuate the manifest purpose of the statute. (Allen v. Little, 5 Ohio, 65, 71; State v. Peck, 25 O. S., 26, 28.)

The manifest purpose of this statute, in so far as it designates the manner in which the guardian shall invest the money of his ward, is to provide for the security of such fund, and giving effect to the rule above noted—that terms in a statute should be taken in their ordinary and natural import—it is my opinion that the words "bonds of the United States" mean bonds which are the direct and primary obligation of the United States government issued in pursuance of its constitutional power "to borrow money on the credit of the United States" and for the payment of which the full faith of the United States is solemnly pledged by the act of congress under date of April 18, 1869 (Revised Statutes Sec. 3693).

I assume that the bonds of the Philippine government, which are the subject of your inquiry, are bonds issued by the Philippine government pursuant to an act of congress under date of February 6, 1905 (U. S. Stat. at Large, Public Laws, Vol. 33, page 689); which provides, in part, as follows:

> "For the purpose of providing funds to construct port and harbor works, bridges, roads, buildings for provincial and municipal schools, court houses, penal institutions, and other public improvements for the development of the Philippine islands by the general government thereof, the said government is authorized from time to time to incur indebtedness, borrow money, and to issue and sell therefor (at not less than par value in gold coin of the United States) registered or coupon bonds of such denominations and payable at such time or times, not later than forty years after the date of the approval of this act, as may be determined by said government, with interest thereon not to exceed four and one-half per centum. Provided, that the entire indebtedness of said government created by the authority conferred by this section shall not exceed at any one time the sum of five million dollars: And provided further, That the law of said government creating the indebtedness and authorizing the issue of the bonds under this section shall be approved by the President of the United States.

"All bonds issued by the government of the Philippine islands, or by its authority, shall be exempt from taxation by the government of the United States, or by the government of the Philippine islands or of any political or municipal subdivision thereof, or by any state, or by any county, municipality, or other municipal subdivision of any state or territory of the United States, or by the District of Columbia."

With respect to the question at hand it may possibly be of some significance to note that although with respect to the external and political affairs of the United States its insular possessions are in no way to be considered as foreign countries, yet with respect to the internal affairs of the nation, though our island possessions are territories appurtenant to the United States, they are not a part thereof.

In Vol. 29 of the American and English Encyclopaedia of Law, at page 146, it is said:

"It was held by the supreme court at a very early day that the term 'United States,' even when employed in our internal affairs, designated 'our great republic, which is composed of states and territories.' But the supreme court has recently departed from this early doctrine, and held that, in our internal affairs, the term 'United States' must not be understood as including any territory which is merely appurtenant to the United States, but as embracing only those states whose people united to form the constitution, as also such other states as are or shall be admitted to the Union on an equality with them, and such territory as is incorporated into and forms a part of the United States."

In the case of Downes v. Bidwell, 118 U. S. 244, it was held that the island of Porto Rico by treaty of cession with Spain became territory appurtenant to the United States, but not a part of the United States within the revenue clauses of the constitution, such as article I, section 8, requiring duties, imposts and excises to be uniform

"throughout the United States."

However, it seems manifest that whatever may be concluded with respect to the general question of the status of the Philippine islands in their relation to the United States, it is manifest that bonds issued by the Philippine government under authority of the act of congress above noted are direct and primary obligations of the Philippine government and in no proper sense bonds of the United States.

To my mind, there is no more reason for considering these bonds as bonds of the United States by reason of said act of congress authorizing the Philippine government to issue them than there would be for holding that the bonds of a county to be state bonds in any sense by reason of the fact that the legislature of the state authorized the county to issue bonds for any purpose. To this point, the court in the case of First National Bank of Brunswick v. County of Yankton,

101 U. S. 129, in its opinion says:

> "All territory within the jurisdiction of the United States not included in any state must necessarily be governed by or under the authority of congress. The territories are but political subdivisions of the outlying dominion of the United States. Their relation to the general government is much the same as that which counties bear to the respective states, and congress may legislate for them as a state does for its municipal organizations."

An extended search discloses a dearth of authorities not only on the precise question, but on any question relating to the matter of United States bonds, but in keeping with the rule of construction before noted that unless the context of a statute indicates otherwise the terms therein employed are to receive their natural and ordinary meaning I note the case In Re Hamilton-Bazely v. The President and Governors of the Royal National Hospital, etc., a case decided by an English Court of Appeals in 1900, and reported in Vol. 6, Times Law Reports, at page 173, in which it was held that the words:

> "'Government stocks or securities' as used in a bequest do not include Indian or colonial securities."

Lord Justice Cotton, in his opinion in the case above cited, said that the question was whether the court could say that colonial securities or Indian railway stock guaranteed by the Indian government passed under the words "bonds or other securities." He said that he could not come to that conclusion; that it was conceded that "government stock or securities" according to the ordinary meaning of those words in legal documents, would not include colonial or Indian government securities, and that he could not find anything in the will to induce the court to give to those words a meaning other than their prima facia meaning.

With reference to the precise question at hand it will be noted that the act of congress authorizing the Philippine government to issue the bonds in question itself indicates a legislative recognition that bonds issued by the Philippine government are not bonds of the United States in any complete or proper sense by specifically providing that such bonds shall be exempt from taxation by the government of the United States or by the government of the Philippine islands, or by any state or political subdivision thereof. For, if bonds of the Philippine government are to be considered as bonds of the United States, it would follow that there was no necessity for the provision in the act of 1905 specifically exempting such bonds from taxation for the reason that by the provisions of section 3701 United States Revised Statutes enacted many years prior to 1905 all bonds and other obligations of the United States are exempt from taxation by any authority.

In this connection it will be conceded that a territory of the United States and the political subdivisions thereof are federal agencies in the performance of governmental functions, and on this consideration it has been held that the bonds issued by a municipality within such territory are exempt from state taxation. (Farmers and Mechanics Savings Bank of Minneapolis v. State of Minnesota, 232 U. S. 516.) There is nothing in the opinion of the court in the case just cited, however, indicating that such bonds are in any sense obligations of the United States or to be considered as United States bonds.

On the foregoing considerations I am of the opinion that the bonds of the Philippine government are not bonds of the United States within the meaning of such term as used in section 10933 of the General Code.

Respectfully,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—MAY SENTENCE WOMEN TO OHIO REFORMATORY FOR WOMEN—IN MISDEMEANOR CASES OF WHICH HE HAS FINAL JURISDICTION.

This opinion holds that a justice of the peace in all misdemeanor cases in which he may rightfully exercise final jurisdiction, has authority to sentence women so convicted to the Ohio reformatory for women.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 3, 1917.

HON. D. H. PEOPLES, Prosecuting Attorney, Pomeroy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 16, 1917, as follows:

"Mr. E. R. Titus, one of the justices of the peace in and for this county (Meigs), this day came to my office relative to the following: A notorious character has been arrested upon a warrant of assault and battery upon one of her brothers-in-law. She always enters a plea of guilty to all charges and never has money to pay her fine. She has been sent to the work house four times and confined in the county jail more than a dozen times within the past year, and is a great expense to this county. After a time the commissioners release her.

"Under section 2148, 5-6-7-8, has the justice jurisdiction to sentence this party to the Ohio reformatory for women upon a plea of guilty to a charge of assault and battery?"

Section 2148-5 G. C. provides:

"As soon as the governor shall be satisfied that suitable buildings have been erected, and are ready for use and for the reception of women convicted of felony, he shall issue a proclamation to that effect, attested by the secretary of state, and the secretary of state shall furnish printed copies of such proclamation to the county clerk of courts and from the date of said proclamation all portions of this act except those relating to the commitment of misdemeanants and delinquents shall be in full force and effect. Whenever additional buildings have been completed so as to care for misdemeanants and delinquents, a proclamation shall be issued and published in the same manner and copies furnished to county clerks of courts and to all judges and magistrates having authorities to sentence misdemeanants and delinquents and from and after the date of this proclamation all portions of this act relating to the commitment of persons to said reformatory shall be in full force and effect.

"All female persons convicted of felony, except murder in the first degree without the benefit of recommendation of mercy, shall be sentenced to the Ohio reformatory for women in the same manner as male persons are now sentenced to the Ohio state reformatory. And in so far as applicable, the laws relating to the management of the Ohio state reformatory and the control and management thereof, shall apply to the Ohio reformatory for women."

Section 2148-6 G. C. provides:

"Female persons over sixteen years of age found guilty of a misdemeanor by any court of this state shall be sentenced to the Ohio reformatory for women and be subject to the control of the Ohio board of administration, but all such persons shall be eligible to parole under the provisions of this act."

Section 2148-7 G. C. provides:

"After the issuance of the first proclamation hereinbefore referred to, it shall be unlawful to sentence any female convicted of a felony to be confined in either the Ohio penitentiary or a jail, workhouse, house of correction or other correctional or penal institution, and after the issuance of the second proclamation, it shall be unlawful to sentence any female convicted of a misdemeanor or delinquency to be confined in any such place, except in both cases the reformatory herein provided for, the girls' industrial school or other institution for juvenile delinquency, unless such person is over sixteen years of age and has been sentenced for less than thirty days, or is remanded to jail in default of payment of either fine or costs or both, which will cause imprisonment for less than thirty days, provided that this section shall not apply to imprisonment for contempt of court."

Section 13510 G. C. provides:

"When a person charged with a misdemeanor is brought before a magistrate on complaint of the party injured and pleads guilty thereto, such magistrate shall sentence him to such punishment as he may deem proper, according to law, and order the payment of costs. If the complaint is not made by the party injured, and the accused pleads guilty, the magistrate shall require the accused to enter into a recognizance to appear at the proper court as is provided when there is no plea of guilty."

Section 13511 G. C. provides:

"When the accused is brought before the magistrate and there is no plea of guilty, he shall inquire into the complaint in the presence of such accused. If it appear that an offense has been committed and that there is probable cause to believe the accused guilty, he shall order him to enter into a recognizance, with good and sufficient surety, in such amount as he deems reasonable, for his appearance at the proper time and before the proper court; otherwise he shall discharge him from custody. If the offense charged is a misdemeanor and the accused, in a writing subscribed by him and filed before or during the examination, waive a jury and submit to be tried by the magistrate, he may render final judgment."

I shall assume for the purpose of this opinion that the justice of the peace referred to had final jurisdiction under sections 13510 and 13511, above quoted. I take it that what you really want to know is whether or not a justice of the peace, in misdemeanor cases in which he may rightfully exercise final jurisdiction, may sentence to the Ohio reformatory for women instead of to the work house, county jail or other such institution. I am informed by the Ohio board of administration that Governor Willis, on December 27, 1916, issued the second proclamation referred to in section 2148-5, above quoted.

That the legislature meant to include justices of the peace in the term "any court of this state," used in section 2148-6 G. C., is clear from the wording of section 2148-5 G. C. providing that copies of the governor's proclamation opening the institution shall be furnished by the secretary of state to "the county clerks of courts and to all judges and magistrates" having authority to commit to said institution.

In Tissier v. Rhein, 130 III, p. 114, the court was construing section 29 of article VI of the constitution, providing:

> "All judicial officers may be commissioned by the governor. All laws relating to courts shall be general and of uniform operation," and the court say:

> "A justice of the peace is a judicial officer, and, by section 8 of chapter 79 of the Revised Statutes, the legislature has required his commission to be issued by the governor. A court has been defined to be that 'body in the government to which the public administration of justice is delegated.' The public administration of justice is delegated to justices of the peace. They are among the bodies, in whom the constitution vests the judicial powers of the state. While engaged in the performance of their public duties as judicial officers, they are 'courts' within the meaning of said section 29."

In view of these sections of the General Code, above quoted, and the authorities herein cited, I am of the opinion that a justice of the peace has jurisdiction to sentence the women referred to to the Ohio reformatory for women.

The question of cost is not passed upon in this opinion.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

1. NAVAL MILITIA OFFICER—SAID OFFICER IS IN THE ARM OF THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT OF STATE AND COMES WITHIN PURVIEW OF SEC. 2313-3 G. C.
2. EMERGENCY BOARD—MUST ACT UNDER SEC. 2313-3 G. C. WHETHER LEGISLATURE IS IN SESSION OR NOT.

1. A naval militia officer is an officer in the arm of the executive department of the state and as such comes within the purview of Sec. 2313-3 G. C.

2. The duties imposed upon the emergency board by section 2313-3 G. C. have no reference to whether or not the legislature is in session, and the allowance under said section must be obtained at all times, whether necessary during a recess or session of the legislature.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 5, 1917.

GEN. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 25, 1917, wherein you state:

> "The annual meeting of the naval militia association will be held in Washington, D. C., February 9, 1917. It would be wise to send representatives of the Ohio naval militia to this meeting. A construction is requested on two propositions:

"(a) Does an officer of the naval militia (and if delegates are sent they will be officers) come within the purview of section 2313-3?

"(b) The legislature being in session, would the emergency board have authority to act under this statute?"

Answering your first question, I would call your attention to the fact that section 5189 of the General Code provides that the commander-in-chief shall organize the Ohio national guard in such tactical units of the several arms and branches of the service, and the departments thereof, as he shall from time to time prescribe, conforming as nearly as practicable to the organization of the armies of the United States, etc.

Section 5214 of the General Code reads:

"There shall be allowed as a part of the organized militia of Ohio, and in addition to the Ohio national guard, not more than two ship-companies of Ohio naval militia as hereinafter provided."

Article 3, section 1 of the Ohio constitution provides:

"The executive department shall consist of a governor * * *"

Article 3, section 10 of the Ohio constitution provides:

"He shall be commander-in-chief of the military and naval forces of the state, except when they shall be called into the service of the United States."

In Wright's Ohio Report, at page 424, the court says:

"The faithful execution of the laws when enacted, expounded and applied by the courts to cases when necessary, is confided to the executive. The governor is our chief executive officer; and, as such, is made commander-in-chief of the militia, except when in the service of the general government. The militia is an arm of the executive power; * * *"

In view of the foregoing it is my opinion that an officer of the naval militia is a part of the executive branch of the government.

Section 2313-3 G. C. provides:

"No executive, legislative or judicial officer, board, commission or employe of the state shall attend at state expense any association, conference or convention outside the state unless authorized by the emergency board. Before such allowance may be made, the head of the department shall make application in writing to the emergency board showing necessity for such attendance and the probable cost to the state. If a majority of the members of the emergency board approve the application, such expense shall be paid from the emergency fund."

Since an officer of the naval militia is a part of the executive branch of the government and the above quoted section provides that no executive officer shall attend, at state expense, any association, conference or convention outside the state, unless authorized by the emergency board, it is plainly evident that such naval militia officer comes within the purview of said section 2313-3 G. C.

Answering your second inquiry, an examination of the history of the laws appertaining to the emergency board discloses that on March 11, 1889, 86 O. L., p. 77, after making it unlawful for the trustees of state institutions, and officers of the state, to create a deficiency, incur a liability or expend a greater sum of money than is appropriated by the general assembly for the use of any public institution or department, section 3 of the act provided:

> "In case of an emergency requiring the expenditure of a greater sum than the amount appropriated by the general assembly for such institution or department in any one year, or for the expending of money not specifically provided for by law, the said officers may, on the written advice and consent of the governor, auditor of state, and attorney general, incur such liability as circumstances may require."

In 89 O. L., at page 407, section 3 of the act of March 11, 1889, was amended and read as follows:

> "In case of an emergency requiring the expenditure of a greater sum than the amount appropriated by the general assembly for such institution or department in any one year or for the expending of money not specifically provided by law, there is hereby created an emergency board consisting of the governor, auditor of state, attorney general, chairman of the house finance committee, and chairman of the senate finance committee, to authorize deficiencies to be made. The governor shall be the president and the chairman of the house finance committee shall be the secretary of the board. The secretary will keep a complete record of all the proceedings. Any officer contemplated in this act desiring to ask authority to create a deficiency will notify the secretary in writing setting forth fully the facts in connection with the case. As soon as can be done conveniently the secretary will arrange for a meeting of the board, and will notify the officer of the time and place of meeting and requesting his presence. Before a permit is granted it must have the approval of not less than four members of the board who shall sign the same. The necessary expenses of the chairmen of the senate and house finance committees while engaged in the duties herein specified shall be paid out of the fund for expenses of legislative committees upon itemized vouchers approved by themselves, and the auditor of state is hereby authorized to draw his warrant upon the treasurer of state for the same."

This section was carried into the General Code under sections 2312 and 2313.

These sections were amended and supplemented in 103 O. L., p. 444, and following. Section 2313, as amended in 103 O. L., reads as follows:

> "In case of any deficiency in any of the appropriations for the expenses of an institution, department or commission of the state for any biennial period, which may lawfully and by any unforeseen emergency happen when the general assembly is not in session, the trustees, managers, directors or superintendent of such institution, or the officers of such department or commission, may make application to the board for authority to create obligations within the scope of the purpose for which such appropriations were made. Such applicant shall fully set forth to the secretary in writing the facts in connection with the case. As soon as can be done conveniently, the secretary shall arrange for a meeting of the board, and shall notify the applicant of the time and place of the meeting, and request his presence.

No authority shall be granted with the approval of less than four members of the board, who shall sign it."

The supplemental section 2313-1 provides what the written authority shall specify and where filed and section 2313-2 G. C. provides for a contingent appropriation for the uses and purposes of the emergency board and how same shall be applied.

It will be noted that section 2313, above quoted, provides for deficiencies "by any unforeseen emergency happen when the general assembly is not in session." The last general assembly, as evidenced by 106 O. L., 182, amended sections 2312 and 2313 of the Code and supplemented section 2313 by the enactment of section 2313-3. The amended section 2312 merely made a change of the secretary of the board.

Section 2313 G. C., as found in 106 O. L. 183, reads as follows:

"In case of any deficiency in any of the appropriations for the expenses of an institution, department or commission of the state for any biennial period, or in case of an emergency requiring the expenditure of money not specifically provided by law, the trustees, managers, directors or superintendent of such institution or the officers of such department or commission, may make application to the emergency board for authority to create obligations within the scope of the purpose for which such appropriations were made or to expend money not specifically provided for by law. Such applicant shall fully set forth to the secretary in writing the facts in connection with the case. As soon as can be done conveniently, the secretary shall arrange for a meeting of the board and shall notify the applicant of the time and place of the meeting and request his presence. No authority to make such expenditure shall be granted with the approval of less than four members of the board, who shall sign it."

It will be noted that the amended section omits that portion of the former section which provides for a deficiency "by any unforeseen emergency happen when the general assembly is not in session," and adds the provision "to expend money not specifically provided for by law." So that the present emergency board act provides for a board constituted as in the statute set forth and provides how authority is obtained to make expenditures in case of deficiency, but makes no reference as to whether the board acts during the recess of the legislature or otherwise.

Section 2313-3 G. C. provides:

"No executive, legislative or judicial officer, board, commission or employe of the state shall attend at state expense any association, conference or convention outside the state unless authorized by the emergency board. Before such allowance may be made, the head of the department shall make application in writing to the emergency board showing necessity for such attendance and the probable cost to the state. If a majority of the members of the emergency board approves the application, such expense shall be paid from the emergency fund."

Now since we have determined that a naval militia officer is an officer in the arm of the executive department, and since said section 2313-3 seems to have imposed further duties upon the board known as the emergency board, and since it further appears there is nothing in the present statute which limits the time of meetings or the transaction of business of the emergency board to the time of the recess of the legislature, it is my view, and in answer to your second inquiry I would say, that if an officer of the naval militia could, under the law, attend, at state expense, any convention outside of the state (a matter concerning which no opinion is asked and concerning which I make no ruling), the head of his department would have to make application in writing to the emergency board, showing necessity, etc., and such application would have to be approved before any expense could be paid from the emergency fund; and that the fact that the legislature was in session would make no difference.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DEED OF LAND TO GOVERNOR IN TRUST FOR RELIGIOUS PURPOSES —CONTAINING NO DEFEASANCE CLAUSE—DOES NOT REVERT UPON FAILURE TO USE SAME FOR PURPOSES OF SAID TRUST.

The deed made by the heirs of John Garrett to the governor of Ohio and his successors in office, in trust, for certain religious purposes, but containing no clause of defeasance whereby the title is to revert upon the failure of the use of the property for the purposes of the trust, conveys the whole title without reversion. The remedy in such case, if the trust were violated, would be in favor of the beneficiaries, by preventing the misuse and compelling execution of the trust. No remedy is left to the heirs of the grantor.

The governor, as such trustee, will not consent to, or connive at, a perversion of the terms of the trust.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 6, 1917.

Hon. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR:—In reference to deed from John Garrett to Jeremiah Morrow, governor of Ohio, submitted by you to this department with letter attached from J. J. Jackson for an opinion, the letter is as follows:

> "The enclosed letters are self-explanatory.
> "You will confer a great favor upon the young people of Garrettsville, Ohio, if after reading the enclosed documents, you will advise me how we may obtain possession of this property by purchase or lease, without its reverting to the original owners through a false step on our part.
> "We would like to build a community house and gymnasium on this property which is now idle.
> "Kindly let me hear from you by return mail and oblige."

It will be noticed that this is really an inquiry from Mr. Jackson of you, rather than an inquiry on your part to this office, yet it is safe to assume that what you desire is information in reference to this property and your relation to it as trustee, especially as to the inquiry made.

A number of different considerations are involved both of fact appearing from the deed and the communication and of law arising on the facts thus disclosed, which will be stated separately and briefly.

John Garrett, of Garrettsville, in his will devised a piece of land "to the Baptist Society of Christians for the purpose of a burying ground, and also of erecting thereon buildings for public worship for said society," being the land conveyed in the deed in question.

This will failed through some defect in its execution, but the intention of the testator was carried into effect by his heirs in the execution of this deed.

We will assume that the deed was delivered to Jeremiah Morrow and that he thereby accepted the trust.

The terms of this trust are set forth in the deed as follows:

> "Unto the said Jeremiah Morrow, governor of the said state of Ohio, and his successors in office forever in trust for and for the use of the said Baptist society holding and believing the doctrines and tenets contained in a confession of faith adopted by the Baptist Association met in Philadelphia, September 25, 1742, for the purpose of sepulture interment or burial of the dead, and of erecting buildings for public worship for said society and no other."

There is no clause of defeasance or condition in the deed providing for reentry or for reversion of the title in the event of the failure of the designated use.

No information is given as to whether there has ever been any use of the land for the purpose of this trust as set out in the deed.

The trust is what is known as passive. No active duties are devolved upon the governor as such trustee and he is merely the repository of the naked legal title in trust for the objects above set out.

The description of the use for which the property is given, as stated above, is by a uniform current of authority classed as covenant and not condition. That is to say, Jeremiah Morrow, for himself and his successors, by accepting this deed agreed to the use of the property for the purpose of the trust thereby created; and his acceptance amounts to a covenant upon his part, and the provision describing the use is not a condition upon the violation of which the heirs of the original grantor may enter upon the land or recover possession of it, as would be the case were it expressly provided that the title should be defeated upon the failure of the use.

It is perfectly apparent that the use sought to be made of this land by "the young people of Garrettsville" is very far removed from that intended by John Garrett and indicated by his heirs in the deed. Their purpose is to use it for a community house and a gymnasium—his for a church and graveyard. Their purpose is temporary or at least temporal—his eternal. Every comparison unavoidably becomes a contrast. Therefore, the use now desired and suggested would be a perversion of the terms of the trust as set forth in the deed.

It follows from what is set forth above that what is technically known as the doctrine of cy pres can have no application and be of no assistance, that doctrine meaning in ordinary terms that where lands are devised to a charitable use and that use becomes impossible, the courts may apply the gift to some other related charity.

On account of the exalted station of this trustee, it cannot be supposed that he would consent to, or connive at, any artifice or measure to defeat the real intent of the trust and no means are apparent whereby the purchase or lease of this property could be obtained from any other source or by any other agency.

It follows from what is stated above that if the good people of Garrettsville were to use this property as they desire, there would be no danger that thereby the title would revert to the Garrett heirs. The only consequence of such use, or misuse, would be that the adherents of that faith, for whose use John Garrett intended the property, and no other, might prevent the continuance of such use by those who are exercising the same, in which event, if such interference were successful, those who expended money upon the land for modern purposes for which it is desired, might lose it.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO CANAL COMMISSION—BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS—DUTIES OF SAME DEVOLVE ON SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC WORKS—CHIEF ENGINEER OF BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS—OFFICE OF SAID OFFICER ABOLISHED.

The necessary jurisdictional steps leading up to the making of the deed for said sale have all been taken, the duties of the Ohio canal commission and the board of public works now devolving upon the superintendent of public works and the office of chief engineer having been abolished.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 7, 1917.

HON. FRANK R. FAUVER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 22, 1917, transmitting to me resolutions providing for the private sale of certain canal lands in Ohio, township of Madison, county of Licking and state of Ohio, to C. M. Johnson.

I note that the valuation of the land to be sold is less than five hundred dollars and that all the jurisdictional facts have been found by you to exist.

I would like to suggest, however, that section 13971 G. C., among other things, provides that:

> "such land or lands shall not be sold or offered for sale unless the said commission, board of public works, and the chief engineer of the board of public works shall have, by a majority vote in joint session, determined that such land or lands are not necessary or required for the use, maintenance, and operation of any of the canals of this state."

Under the second "Whereas" of the resolutions you set out the fact that you alone as superintendent of public works have found and determined that the land so sold is not necessary or required for the use, maintenance and operation of any of the canals of the state.

Under section 464 G. C. the duties of the Ohio canal commission and board of public works devolve upon the superintendent of public works, but there is no provision in the statutes that the duties of the chief engineer shall so devolve upon the superintendent.

SECTION 421 G. C. provides for the bond of the chief engineer and section 420 G. C. provides for the appointment of engineers, but there is no provision in the statute for the appointment of a chief engineer, and your department informs me that there is no such employe or officer in your department as chief engineer. If there were such an employe or officer, he would be compelled to join with you, under the provisions of section 13971 G. C., in finding that the lands so sold are not required for the use, maintenance and operation of any of the canals of this state.

The seeming uncertainty of the statutes in reference to the office of chief engineer in the department of public works arises from the fact that the statute providing for said officer was repealed in the act found in 103 O. L. 119; while the act providing for the deposit of all bonds with the secretary of state, found in 103 O. L. 528 (530) and being section 421 of the General Code, provides that the bond of the chief engineer of public works shall be deposited with the secretary of state, notwithstanding the fact that the office of chief engineer had been abolished by the said act found in 103 O. L. 119.

Inasmuch as there is no such employe or officer in your department, I have attached my signature to the duplicate copies of the two resolutions providing for the sale of the lands in question, and I am herewith returning the same to you.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 1, 1917, in which you ask my approval of the final resolution for the following road improvement:

"Harrison county—Section 'J' Dennison-Cadiz road, Pet. No. 942, I. C. H. No. 370."

I have examined said resolution carefully and find the same regular and legal, and am therefore returning the same with my approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—RESOLUTIONS FOR SALE OF CERTAIN CANAL LANDS IN CITY OF TOLEDO, OHIO, AND PICKAWAY COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 9, 1917.

HON. FRANK R. FAUVER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communications of February 6, 1917, in which you ask my approval of certain resolutions leading up to sales of canal lands:

"1. In the city of Toledo, Ohio, to The Investors Realty Company, for the sum of $265.00.

"2. In Pickaway county, Ohio, to J. S. Caldwell, for the sum of $480.00."

Both of said tracts to be sold at private sale.

I have carefully examined the resolutions and find that they contain all jurisdictional matters required by law.

I am therefore returning said resolutions with my approval of the sale of said lands.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—LEASES OF CERTAIN CANAL LANDS IN MAUMEE, OHIO, AND SIDNEY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 9, 1917.

HON. FRANK R. FAUVER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 6, 1917, in which you ask my approval of the following leases of canal lands:

"To Henry N. Perrin, lands in Maumee, Ohio, valuation $700.00.
"To David Oldham, lands in Sidney, Ohio, valuation $150.00."

I have examined carefully the above leases and find them regular in every respect and that they protect the interests of the state of Ohio in said lands.

I am therefore returning said leases to you with my approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARDS OF EDUCATION—WHICH FAIL TO ORGANIZE ON FIRST MONDAY OF JANUARY AFTER ELECTION—SHALL ORGANIZE AS SOON THEREAFTER AS SUCH FAILURE IS CALLED TO THEIR ATTENTION—PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT HOLD OVER UNTIL SUCCESSORS ARE CHOSEN AND QUALIFIED.

1. Boards of education which fail to organize on the first Monday of January next after the election of members of such board, should organize under the provisions of section 4747 G. C. as soon as the matter of their failure to organize is called to their attention.

2. The president and vice-president of such boards hold over only until the board of which they are members may reorganize.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 10, 1917.

HON. EUGENE WRIGHT Prosecuting Attorney, Logan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of February 6, 1917, you submit the following proposition for my opinion:

"Under section 4747, if the school board of a rural school district should fail to organize and elect a president and vice-president on the first day of January, in any one year, could they after that date meet and organize by electing a president and vice-president, or would the old president and vice president hold over their term until the next regular date for organization, namely, the following first Monday in January?"

General Code section 4838 provides as follows:

"All elections for members of boards of education shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the odd numbered years."

General Code Section 4745 provides as follows:

"The terms of office of members of each board of education shall begin on the first Monday in January after their election, and each such officer shall hold his office for four years except as may be specifically provided in chapter 2 of this title (G. C. sections 4698 to 4707), and until his successor is elected and qualified."

General Code Section 4747 provides in part:

"The board of education of each city, village and rural school district shall organize on the first Monday of January after the election of members of such board. One member of the board shall be elected president, one as vice-president and a person who may or may not be a member of the board shall be elected clerk. * * *"

You will note from the above the time of the election of members of the board of education, the length of the term of such members and the direction to the members so elected or to those holding over as to the time of the organization of such board. I do not understand, however, that the language as to the organization of said board is mandatory. It is a well settled principle of law that the provisions regarding the duties of public officers, and specifying the time of their performance, are, in that regard, generally directory, "though a statute directs a thing to be done at a particular time, it does not necessarily follow that it cannot be done afterwards."

Southerland on Statutory Construction, Sec. 612.

As stated by the author just named, the designation of the power in this instance is not a limitation on the power of the board to act, and since the duty is enjoined by law, even though it be delayed beyond the particular time designated in the statute, it can be legally performed at a later date.

It is also provided by General Code section 8 that a person holding an office of public trust shall continue therein until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified and the members of boards of education, being school officers, I am of the opinion would also come under the provisions of said section 8. It has also been frequently held, and particularly in Marvin v. Withrow, 21 O. C. D., 215, that a president of a board of education is an officer within the meaning of said section 8 of the General Code, and would therefore hold over until his successor is regularly chosen and qualified.

This identical question was considered in opinion No. 147, Vol. I, Attorney-General's Reports for 1911-1912, wherein it was held that a board of education that had failed to organize on the first Monday of January next after the election of members of such board should organize as provided under section 4747 G. C. as soon as the matter of their failure to organize is called to their attention.

I agree with the opinion mentioned and advise you that the president and vice-president hold over only until the board of which they are members may reorganize, which reorganization should occur at once.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—SYNOPSIS OF PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT—BY PEOPLE'S POWER LEAGUE OF CINCINNATI.

The synopsis of the proposed constitutional amendment filed with the secretary of state by the People's Power League of Cincinnati on January 30, 1917, is sufficient under the statutory provision that a synopsis of such measure may be so filed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 12, 1917.

HON. W. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 30, 1917, the following communication was received from your office:

> "I have just received a communication from The People's Power League of Cincinnati, Ohio, enclosing a draft of a proposed amendment to the Ohio constitution, together with a synopsis of the same. I enclose them to you as they desire your approval of the synopsis.
> "Will you kindly give this your earliest attention and advise me."

The constitutional provision referring to this matter is as follows:

> "A true copy of all laws or proposed laws, or proposed amendments to the constitution, together with an argument or explanation, or both, for, and also an argument or explanation, or both, against the same, shall be prepared * * *. The persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for any proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution may be named in the petition proposing the same."
> Art. II, section 1-g.

The statutory provision providing for synopsis is as follows:

> "Whoever seeks to propose a law or constitutional amendment by initiative petition or to file a referendum petition against any law, section, or items in any law, may file a duly verified copy of the proposed law, constitutional amendment or the law, section or item to be referred, together with a synopsis of the same with the secretary of state before circulating such petition. If such copy is not filed with the secretary of state, the persons primarily directing the circulation of such initiative or referendum petition shall within ten days after commencing the circulation of such petition, file with the secretary of state a written notice setting forth the date when such circulation was commenced, and embodying the title and text of such law, section, item or constitutional amendment, and signed by one of the persons promoting the circulation of said petition."

Sec. 5175-29c G. C.

It will be observed that this section is permissive and the legislature has not attempted to impose it as an absolute requirement, but if the synopsis be not filed, has imposed a regulation probably more difficult than to furnish the synopsis.

Comparing the synopsis as submitted, along with the amendment, there is one important correction that should be made. Section 2 of the proposed amendment provides that the income for each eligible person shall be not less than twenty dollars a month, while the synopsis says it shall not be more than that amount. The second paragraph states it fixes the maximum pension of twenty dollars a month. For maximum should be substituted "minimum." This undoubtedly is an oversight.

In other respects the proposed synopsis appears to be what it purports to be, a synopsis of the proposed amendment, though this amendment is drawn with such brevity and succinctness that it is difficult to make a synopsis shorter than the amendment itself.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—WHEN HE TAKES OVER CONSTRUCTION OF ROAD OR BRIDGE—UNDER FORCE ACCOUNT—MUST BE GOVERNED BY SECTION 1209 G. C.

1. When the state highway commissioner takes over a contract for the construction of a public highway and finishes same under force account, and to finish same under force account he enters into a contract with another party, he will be controlled in his future course under the provisions of section 1209 G. C. and the provisions of the contract entered into for completing said highway.

2. When one contract is let by the state highway commissioner, covering the construction of a steel bridge on the highway as well as the construction of the highway proper, and the same is taken over and completed under force account, the same principles of law will apply to the completion of the bridge as apply to the completion of the other parts of the highway.

3. When the state highway commissioner, in completing a contract under force account, makes certain propositions to parties interested, he should govern his future conduct by said propositions so made.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 13, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 16, 1917, in which you ask my opinion upon certain matters set out in the communication which is as follows:

"The state highway department in 1915 let a contract to Frank J. Bentz for the construction of a section of highway in Morgan county, known as section 'K,' intercounty highway No. 162. The contract for the construction of the highway included a steel bridge with reinforced concrete abutments.

"This office has been informed that Contractor Bentz sub-let the erection of this steel bridge.

"Because of the unsatisfactory progress made by Mr. Bentz on this contract, the time of completion having expired, this department appointed an agent to proceed with the construction of the highway by employing labor and purchasing necessary materials, and charging the cost thereof to money appropriated for the work, all subject to the approval of the highway commissioner. The original contractor withdrew, and has since taken no hand in the management of the work. The substructure of the bridge above referred to has been completed by the agent of this department, and is now ready to receive the steel superstructure. The bondsman for the original contractor has been informed by this office of this fact.

"We beg to inquire what method of procedure should be adopted for procuring a steel bridge for this place, such that the state's claim against the bonding company may not be weakened should the cost of doing the work exceed the amount of the contract."

To this communication you attached certain correspondence had about the matter upon which you desire my opinion, but the only parts of said correspondence that have any particular bearing are the following:

A letter written by The Bellefontaine Bridge and Steel Company to your department, bearing date November 29, 1916;

A letter of January 2, 1917, from your department to the National Surety Company, which is as follows:

"Referring to the Frank J. Bentz contract for the construction of section 'F' of I. C. H. No. 182, Morgan county, and to my letter of November 1, 1916, with regard to the steel bridge to be included in that contract, and subsequent correspondence.

"I beg to advise that Mr. Shoemaker, of the Engineering Service company, states that the substructure will be ready to receive the steel superstructure by January 10. As mentioned in my letter to you, dated November 1, we are informed that Mr. Bentz has a contract with the Bellefontaine Bridge Company for the erection of the necessary superstructure. In view of this, it would seem desirable for all concerned, for Mr. Bentz to cause this bridge to be placed as called for in the contract. We also believe that the National Surety Company, as bondsman for Mr. Bentz, is directly or indirectly interested in the bridge being placed for the least possible cost.

"Will you please advise us whether or not we can expect Mr. Bentz or yourselves to furnish a bridge for this place, and if not, whether there are any objections to this department, through Mr. Shoemaker, inviting bids from three or more reputable bridge concerns for placing a bridge at the earliest possible date? An early reply will be appreciated. We would be glad to be advised as to your pleasure in this matter not later than January 10, at which time, if we do not hear from you, we will proceed as above indicated.;"

A letter of January 5, 1917, to the state highway department from the National Surety Company.

In your communication you state that the state highway department gave a contract to Frank J. Bentz for the construction of a section of highway in Morgan county, which contract included a steel bridge, and that owing to the unsatisfactory progress made by Mr. Bentz on this contract, and the time for completing the same having expired, your department took over the contract and appointed an agent to complete it under force account.

This you did under authority of section 1209 G. C., which is as follows:

> "Section 1209. If, in the opinion of the state highway commissioner, the contractor has not commenced his work within a reasonable time, or does not carry the same forward with reasonable progress, or is improperly performing his work, or has abandoned, or fails or refuses to complete a contract entered into under the provisions of this chapter (G. C. sections 1178 to 1231-3), the state highway commissioner shall have full power and authority to enter upon and construct said improvement either by contract, force account or in such manner as he may deem for the best interest of the public, paying the full costs and expense thereof from the balance of the contract price unpaid to said contractor, and in case there is not sufficient balance to pay for said work, the state highway commissioner shall require the contractor or the surety on his bond to pay the cost of completing said work. It shall be the duty of the attorney-general or the prosecuting attorney of the county in which said improvement or some part thereof is situated, upon request of the state highway commissioner, to collect the same from the contractor and the surety on his bond."

Inasmuch as you have let one contract for not only the construction of the highway proper, but also for the erection of the steel bridge, you will be governed in your further proceedings in the matter by this same section 1209, which provides that the state highway commissioner has full power and authority to enter upon and construct said improvement, either by contract, force account or in such manner as he may deem for the best interest of the public.

As you are completing said work under force account under and by virtue of a contract entered into with the Engineering Service Company, you will be controlled in your further proceedings not only by section 1209 G. C., but also by the provisions of this contract, the third item of which reads as follows:

> "Third. The party of the second part agrees to act as the agent of the party of the first part in the purchase of all necessary materials for the completion of said highway, the character and quality of such materials and the price to be paid therefor to be subject to the approval of the party of the first part. The party of the first part shall pay for all such materials."

It will be noted that in this third item the party of the second part, the Engineering Service Company, is to purchase all necessary materials for the completion of said highway, subject to your approval. This would apply to the material for the bridge as well as to materials for the other parts of the highway; so that the Engineering Service Company, subject to your approval, has the right to purchase the material necessary for the construction of said bridge.

The letter from The Bellefontaine Bridge & Steel Company makes it clear that said company will not furnish the bridge under the terms of their contract with Frank J. Bentz. The letter from said company reads as follows:

"Please be advised that the price we recently quoted you on the 90-foot span which we originally fabricated for Frank J. Bentz, is herewith withdrawn. Should you desire to take the matter up with us later, and if the bridge has not in the meantime been sold to others we shall be glad to quote you a revised price."

While you wrote to the National Surety Company as to whether they had any objections to your inviting bids through Mr. Shoemaker, representing the Engineering Service Company, from three or more reputable bridge concerns, for placing a bridge, yet you were under no obligations to do so. Their letter in reply to yours of January 2, 1917, is as follows:

"Receipt is acknowledged of your letter of January 2, and while this company has denied and continues to deny any liability to the state of Ohio, for the reasons stated in former communications, I have suggested to Mr. Bentz that he do what he can at once to put Mr. Shoemaker in possession of his contract with The Bellefontaine Bridge Company, if this has not already been done. My understanding with Mr. Bentz several months ago was that this contract had been assigned to Mr. Shoemaker and that all of the superstructure had been fabricated by the bridge company and was awaiting orders for shipment.

"You have already been advised of our position with respect to this particular subcontract."

Now, inasmuch as (a) your department let the construction of the bridge and the highway under one contract, (b) your department has taken over the contract and is completing the same under force account, (c) the Engineering Service Company is completing the construction of said highway under a contract to furnish all material, subject to your approval, and (d) your department wrote to the National Surety Company that you were contemplating the inviting of bids, it is my opinion that you should proceed along said lines and ask for bids through the Engineering Service Company from three or more reputable firms, for the placing of the bridge, one of which firms should be The Bellefontaine Bridge and Steel Company, and notify both Frank J. Bentz, the original contractor, and the National Surety Company, who is on his bond, of your action, so they may be in position to have any other reputable bridge company bid, should they desire to do so. This course will protect to the fullest extent possible the interests of Frank J. Bentz, the National Surety Company and the people of the state.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CHILDREN'S HOME—INMATES THEREOF ARE ENTITLED TO ATTEND SCHOOL FREE IN DISTRICT IN WHICH HOME IS LOCATED—TUITION FOR SAME PAID BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FROM GENERAL FUND—STATE COMMON SCHOOL FUND—APPORTIONMENT IS BASED UPON ENUMERATION.

1. A children's home maintained for the care, raising and education of children, whether said home is maintained by contributions of parents of the children located therein or contributions from philanthropic bodies, comes within the provisions of section 7681 G. C., and the children who are inmates of the same are entitled to attend the schools of the district in which said home is located, free of charge.

2. The tuition of said children, paid for by the county commissioners of the county in which the schools are located, as provided for by statute, must be taken from the general county fund.

3. As the apportionment of the state common school fund by the state auditor is based upon the enumeration, and the portion paid by the county commissioners is based upon enrollment, the enumeration of said children must be taken and the enrollment kept. The share of the state common school fund going to the county commissioners from the county treasurer is based upon the enrollment of said children.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1917.

HON. CHARLES L. FLORY, Prosecuting Attorney, Newark, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of January 8, 1917, you ask for an opinion based upon the following statement of facts:

> "Located in the Granville village school district, Licking county, is a children's home, organized by the American Baptist Foreign Missionary Society, which has its headquarters in Boston, Massachusetts. Such society has the general control of the maintenance of the home, but its affairs are indirectly under the control of what is called a local board, consisting of fifteen members of the Baptist church in Ohio. The inmates of the home are the children of foreign missionaries in the service of the Baptist church; the children being placed in the home for raising and education while the parents are engaged in their work in foreign countries. When able, the parents of the children in the home pay a portion of the cost of the maintenance of the home, but such parents do not pay enough to cover the full cost of maintaining their children; the balance of such maintenance is furnished by Baptist societies.
> "The children, in the home mentioned, have been attending the schools in the village of Granville. Under favor of section 7681, General Code, as amended Ohio Laws 106, page 489, the board of education of the Granville village school district has presented to the commissioners of Licking county a bill for the tuition of such pupils. I shall be grateful for your opinion on the following propositions:"

Upon the above statement of facts you ask for my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Is the children's home mentioned such a home as comes within the terms of said section 7681, General Code?

"2. From what fund under the control of the county commissioners shall such tuition be paid to the Granville village school board?

"3. What procedure shall be followed by the commissioners to obtain a distributive share of school funds from the state for the children of such home for whom such tuition is paid?"

The answers to these questions are to be found in sections 7681, 5630 and 7582 G. C. Said sections are as follows:

"Sec. 7681. The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district, including children of proper age who are inmates of a county or district or of any public or private children's home or orphan's asylum located in such a school district, but the time in the school year at which beginners may enter upon the first year's work of the elementary schools shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the local boards of education. The board of education in any district in which a public or private children's home or orphans' asylum is located, when requested by the governing body thereof, shall admit the children of school age of such home or asylum to the public schools of the school district. The county commissioners shall pay the tuition of such pupils to the school or schools maintained by the board of education at a per capita rate which shall be ascertained by dividing the total expenses of conducting the elementary schools of the district attended, exclusive of permanent improvement and repairs, by the total enrollment in the elementary schools of the district, such amount to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the whole month. The distributive share of school funds from the state for the children of such home or asylum shall then be paid to the county commissioners. But all youth of school age living apart from their parents or guardians and who work to support themselves by their own labor, shall be entitled to attend school free in the district in which they are employed."

"Sec. 5630. The commissioners of any county, at their June session, annually, may levy not to exceed three mills on each dollar valuation of taxable property within the county, for county purposes other than for roads, bridges, county buildings, sites therefor, and the purchase of lands for infirmary purposes. For the purpose of building county buildings, purchasing sites therefor, and lands for infirmary purposes, they may levy not to exceed two mills on such valuation."

"Sec. 7582. The auditor of state shall apportion the state common school fund to the several counties of the state semi-annually, upon the basis of the enumeration of youth therein, as shown by the latest abstract of enumeration transmitted to him by the superintendent of public instruction. Before making his February settlement with county treasurers, he shall apportion such amount thereof as he estimates to have been collected up to that time, and, in the settlement sheet which he transmits to the auditor of each county, shall certify the amount payable to the treasurer of his county. Before making his final settlement with county treasurers each year he shall apportion the remainder of the whole fund collected, as nearly as it can be ascertained, and in the August settlement sheet which he transmits to the auditor of each county shall certify the amount payable to the treasurer of his county."

Now, as to the first question, it will be noted that section 7681 G. C. provides that:

"The schools of each district shall be free to all youth * * including children of proper age who are inmates of a county or district or of any public or private children's home or orphans' asylum located in such a school district. * * *"

The home mentioned in your agreed statement of facts would come under the designation of "private children's home." The only question that could be raised is as to whether the limitation found in the first part of said section, namely, that the children must be children of actual residents of the district, would apply to the children of the home mentioned by you.

I am of the opinion that this limitation does not apply and that the only conditions applying are that the children be inmates of the said home and that they be of school age; further, that the governing body of said home makes the request that they be admitted to the district schools.

It is my opinion, therefore, that said children's home comes within the provisions of section 7681 G. C.

Further, as to the answer to the second question:

Section 5630 G. C. provides that the county commissioners may levy not to exceed three mills on each dollar of valuation, for county purposes other than certain enumerated purposes mentioned in said section.

It is my opinion that the money to pay said tuition must be taken from the fund created for county purposes, as the object and purpose for which it is paid is not in the least related to the other purposes enumerated in said section for which a levy may be made by the county commissioners.

Now, as to the answer to your last question:

Section 7582 G. C. provides that the auditor of state shall apportion the state common school fund to the several counties of the state upon the basis of the enumeration of youth therein.

Section 7681 G. C. provides that the county commissioners shall pay the tuition of such pupils at a per capita rate which shall be ascertained by dividing the total expenses of conducting the elementary schools of the district attended, exclusive of permanent improvement and repairs, by the total enrollment in the elementary schools of the district. Then said section provides that the county commissioners shall be paid the distributive share of school funds from the state for the children of such home. Hence, the enumeration of the children in the home must be taken with the other children of the district, that they may be included in the distribution of the state common school fund by the state auditor. Then the county commissioners will receive from the county treasurer, out of the state common school fund, such a percentage of the said state common school fund credited to said district as the total enrollment of pupils from the home is of the total enrollment of pupils in said elementary schools.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BLIND PERSONS—MUST RESIDE IN COUNTY ONE YEAR BEFORE ENTITLED TO RELIEF THEREIN.

1. Under section 2966 G. C. a blind person securing relief in one county of the state, then removing to another county, cannot secure relief in the county to which he removes, short of one year's residence therein.

2. The facts submitted not being such as to warrant it, no opinion is expressed upon a former decision of this department, found in volume II, page 1432 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1915.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1917.

HON. T. ALFRED FLEMING, Member of the House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of recent date, which communication was written by Frank Taylor of Lorain, Ohio, to Hon. James M. Cox, governor of Ohio. The communication to the governor is as follows:

> "I am a victim of the present blind pension law. Note, please, a clause in section 2966 of the General Code of Ohio reads as follows:
> "'In order to receive relief under the above provisions, a needy blind person must become blind while a resident of the state.'
> "We have no objections to the above clause.
> "Note the following clause:
> "'And shall be a resident of the county one year.'
> "Now the point can be raised, does the law apply only to the applicant's first application, or does it apply to all the following applications?
> "Now, if the first proposition is correct, well and good. But if the second proposition is true, then we hold the clause entirely void of logic. For example, take my own case. I was born in this state sixty-six years ago; have been a resident of the state all my life. I had been getting a blind pension in my original county for five years.
> "Now, must I wait one year in Lorain county in order to become a full fledged citizen of said county, when the basic law of the state requires only thirty days? It don't look good to me. It works a hardship on many blind persons moving from one county to another.
> "Suggestion: Could not the attorney-general give a ruling on the matter? That is to say that clause applied only to an applican't first application and not applications thereafter.
> "We hope we have made this matter clear to you and sincerely hope you will give it favorable consideration, not for myself alone, but for the sake and relief of the five thousand in the state who are afflicted like myself. Do not consider this a personal appeal, but an appeal to relieve many others who are handicapped like myself."

The particular matter about which inquiry is made in said letter is this:

If a blind person has become blind while in the state of Ohio; has resided in a county of the state for one year before making application for relief; makes application for relief and secures relief in one county of the state; then removes to another county in the state, is he then compelled to reside in the county, to which he has removed, one year before he can be granted relief in the county to which he has removed?

It will assist in an understanding of the matter to give a brief history of recent legislation and decisions in the matter of relief for the blind.

In 103 O. L. 60 we find an act passed by the legislature February 18, 1913, which act was approved by the governor March 7, 1913. This act repeals sections 2962, 2963 and 2964 of the General Code, and amends sections 2967, 2967-1 and 2968 of the General Code. The legislature during the same session enacted a law found in 103 O. L. 833, which created an institution for the relief of needy blind and repeals sections 2962 to 2970, inclusive, of the General Code. This act was passed April 28, 1913, and was approved by the governor May 9, 1913.

The supreme court, however, in the case reported in 89 O. S. 351 found the said act passed April 28, 1913, to be unconstitutional for certain reasons set out in their opinion and found further that the act passed February 18, 1913, was constitutional and in force and effect. Hence, this act (103 O. L. 60) with sections 2965, 2966, 2969 and 2970 of the General Code controls in the matter about which you make inquiry.

Section 2966 reads as follows:

> "In order to receive relief under these provisions a needy blind person must become blind while a resident of this state, and shall be a resident of the county for one year."

Section 2967 of the General Code, as found on page 60 of 103 O. L., reads as follows:

> "At least ten days prior to action on any claim for relief hereunder, the person claiming shall file with the board of county commissioners a duly verified statement of the facts bringing him within these provisions. The list of claims shall be filed in a book kept for that purpose in the order of filing, which record shall be open to the public. No certificate of qualification of drawing money hereunder shall be granted until the board of county commissioners shall be satisfied from the evidence of at least two reputable residents of the county, one of whom shall be a registered physician, that they know the applicant to be blind and that he has the residential qualifications to entitle him to the relief asked. Such evidence shall be in writing, subscribed to by such witnesses, and be subject to the right of cross examination by the board of county commissioners or other person. If the board of county commissioners be satisfied upon such testimony that the applicant is entitled to relief hereunder, said board shall issue an order therefor in such sum as said board finds needed, not to exceed one hundred and fifty dollars per annum, to be paid quarterly from the funds herein provided on the warrant of the county auditor, and such relief shall be in place of all other relief of a public nature."

Now, it will be noted that the county commissioners of each county have jurisdiction over the subject of relief for the needy blind.

Section 2966 of the General Code provides that in order to receive relief under these provisions a needy blind person shall be a resident of the county one year.

Said section 2967 of the General Code, as found on page 60 of 103 Ohio Laws, provides that:

> "1. At least ten days prior to action on any claim for relief hereunder, the person claiming shall file with the board of county commissioners a duly verified statement of the facts bringing him within these provisions.

"2. No certificate of qualification for drawing money hereunder shall be granted until the board of county commissioners shall be satisfied, from the evidence of at least two reputable residents of the county, one of whom shall be a registered physician, that they know the applicant to be blind, and that he has the residential qualifications to entitle him to the relief asked."

In view of the above, one of the residential qualifications is that the applicant shall be a resident of the county one year before he can receive relief. This is a jurisdictional matter and must exist before a certificate of qualification for drawing money can be granted by the board of county commissioners. Hence, answering your question directly, it is my opinion that a blind person, under the conditions set out in your query, cannot secure relief from the county to which he has removed short of a year's residence in the county.

But there is another matter to which I desire to call your attention, although it is not directly involved in your question, and that is a former opinion rendered by Hon. Edward C. Turner, while attorney-general of the state, which opinion is found on page 1432 of Vol. II of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1915. The syllabus of this opinion you will note is as follows:

"Relief under the blind relief laws, sections 2962 to 2970, inclusive, of the General Code, can only be granted by the county charged with the support of the applicant under the poor laws of the state."

The section of the statutes controlling the granting of relief under the poor laws of the state is section 3477 G. C., the first paragraph of which reads as follows:

"Sec. 3477. Each person shall be considered to have obtained a legal settlement in any county in this state in which he or she has continuously resided and supported himself or herself for twelve consecutive months, without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor.* * *"

No facts are stated in connection with the present inquiry, calling for the application of Mr. Turner's opinion, and I do not wish to be understood as expressing either concurrence therein or disagreement therewith.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CITY AUDITOR—MAY ACT AS CLERK OF BOARD OF EDUCATION.

This opinion holds that positions of city auditor and clerk of the board of education in a city school district are not incompatible and may be held by one and the same person.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of January 8, 1917, as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following question:

"May the auditor of a city legally occupy the position of clerk of the board of education in the school district of that city?"

The rule of common law incompatibility is stated by the court in the case of State ex rel. v. Gebert, 12 C. C. (n. s.), page 274, as follows:

"Offices are incompatible when one is subordinate to or in any way a check upon the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

After a careful examination of the statutes, I am unable to find anything that prohibits one person from holding both of these offices, and I am, therefore, of the opinion, in direct answer to your question, that the city auditor may act as clerk of the board of education in the school district of the city.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

VILLAGE—BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS—POWERS AND DUTIES DESCRIBED IN SECTION 4361 G. C. APPLY ONLY TO SAID BOARD—NOT TO DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE.

Section 4361 G. C. refers only to villages and has no application to cities.

The powers and duties of directors of public service in cities are not broadened or affected in any way by section 4361 G. C. Reference to the powers and duties of directors of public service in said section is made only in a descriptive way to insure brevity in vesting powers in boards of trustees of public affairs of villages and of placing duties upon them.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 12, 1917, you submit for my opinion the following request:

"We refer you to section 4361 G. C. as amended 103 O. L. 561, and would call your attention to the following excerpt from said section:

"'And all powers and duties relating to water works in any of these sections shall extend to and include electric light, power and gas plants, and such other similar public utilities.'

"Question: Does this portion of section 4361, G. C., just quoted, apply to both cities and villages, or does it apply to villages only?"

Section 4357 G. C. and section 4361 G. C., as amended 103 O. L. 561, read as follows:

"Sec. 4357. In each village in which water works, an electric light plant, artificial or natural gas plant, or other similar public utility is situated, or when council orders water works, an electric light plant, natural or artificial gas plant or other similar public utility, to be constructed, or to be leased or purchased from any individual, company or corporation, council shall establish at such time a board of trustees of public affairs for the village, which shall consist of three members, residents of the village, who shall be each elected for a term of two years."

"Sec. 4361. The board of trustees of public affairs shall manage, conduct and control the water works, electric light plants, artificial or natural gas plants, or other similar public utilities, furnish supplies of water, electricity or gas, collect all water, electrical and gas rents, and appoint necessary officers, employes and agents. The board of trustees of public affairs may make such by-laws and regulations as it may deem necessary for the safe, economical and efficient management and protection of such works, plants and public utilities. Such by-laws and regulations when not repugnant to the ordinances, to the constitution or to the laws of the state, shall have the same validity as ordinances. For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing such water works, plants and public utilities, of making necessary additions thereto and extensions thereof, and of making necessary repairs thereon, such trustees may assess a water, light, power, gas or utility rent, of sufficient amount, in such manner as they deem most equitable, upon all tenements and premises supplied with water, light, power or gas, and, when such rents are not paid, such trustees may certify the same over to the auditor of the county in which such village is located to be placed on the duplicate and collect as other village taxes or may collect the same by actions at law in the name of the village. The board of trustees of public affairs shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as are possessed by, and are incumbent upon, the director of public service as provided in sections 3955, 3959, 3960, 3961, 3964, 3965, 3974, 3981, 4328, 4329, 4330, 4331, 4332, 4333 and 4334 of the General Code, and all powers and duties relating to water works in any of these sections shall extend to and include electric light, power and gas plants and such other similar public utilities, and such boards shall have such other duties as may be prescribed by law or ordinance not inconsistent herewith."

An examination of the above mentioned sections makes it apparent that the board of trustees of public affairs described therein refers only to villages, for the reason that the board is mentioned only in connection with the term "village."

No difficulty arises in determining the meaning of the first part of the last sentence of said section 4361 G. C., wherein it is stated that the board of trustees of public affairs shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as are possessed by and are incumbent upon the director of public service as provided in sections 3955, etc., of the General Code. The latter part of said sentence is to the effect that all powers and duties relating to water works in any of these sections shall extend to and include electric light, power and gas plants and such other similar public utilities, and such board shall have such other duties as may be prescribed by law or ordinance not inconsistent herewith.

The question then presents itself, does the statement in said section 4361, that "all powers and duties relating to water works in any of these sections shall extend to and include electric light, power and gas plants," etc.,

refer to the powers and duties of said board of trustees of public affairs, to said director of public service, or both? The proper answer to said question in my opinion is, that said "powers and duties" refer only to the board of trustees of public affairs.

I am led to this conclusion by the fact that the title of the act amending said section 4361, in 103 O. L. 561, is as follows:

> "An act to amend section 4361 of the General Code, relating to the powers and duties of the board of trustees of public affairs."

The title of said act refers only to the powers and duties of boards of trustees of public affairs and does not make any reference to the powers and duties of directors of public service who have powers and duties in city governments similar to those had by said boards in villages.

Article II, section 16 of the constitution of Ohio provides that:

> "* * No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. * *"

The courts have held that they will look to the title of a bill to determine the intention and object of the legislature in enacting the law.

> Bronson v. Oberlin, 41 O. S. 476.
> State ex rel. v. Kinney, 20 O. C. C. 325; 11 O. C. D. 261.

In my opinion, the title of the act amending this section shows clearly that it was the intention of the legislature to enact a law that would vest powers in and place duties upon the village board and no other board or official.

Further, the language of said section 4361, wherein reference is made to the powers and duties of a director of public service and to the sections granting and fixing same, does not disclose in my opinion any intention to broaden this official's powers and duties, but rather a use of these references only in a descriptive way, to insure brevity in vesting powers in said board and placing duties upon it.

Hence, being convinced that the boards of trustees of public affairs, above mentioned, refer only to villages, and that the powers granted and duties fixed in said section 4361 refer only to boards of trustees of public affairs, I am of the opinion that the portion of said section 4361 quoted by you in your request for an opinion applies only to villages and has no application to cities.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL PARK COMMISSION—WHEN AUTHORIZED BY COUNCIL MAY INSTALL CHRISTMAS TREE IN PLAY GROUNDS—HAS NO AUTHORITY TO PURCHASE GIFTS OR PAY COMPENSATION FOR EXERCISES IN CONNECTION THEREWITH.

Under sections 4057 and 4058 G. C. a municipal park board or commission, being properly authorized by council, may install and decorate and conduct a municipal Christmas tree in a park or children's play ground. Such authority refers only to the enjoyment and equipment of parks and children's play ground property, and does not sanction the installation of Christmas trees generally and in places not dedicated to public use for parks or children's play ground purposes; nor does it permit the purchase and distribution of gifts or the payment of compensation to persons for services rendered in conducting appropriate exercises in connection with said tree.

In effect, the authority granted would amount to the right and power to add to the ornamental features of a park or children's play ground, so that same would be equipped and could be enjoyed in accordance with the spirit and sentiment of the Christmas season.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 15, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 8, 1917, you submitted for my opinion the following proposition:

> "Is the expense covering the purchase, decoration, lighting and expense of conducting a municipal Christmas tree a legal charge against the municipal funds?
> "Is such expense authorized under section 4058 General Code?"

Sections 4057 and 4058 G. C. are as follows:

> "Sec. 4057. The board of park commissioners shall have the control and management of parks, park entrances, parkways, boulevards and connecting viaducts and subways, children's play grounds, public baths and stations of public comfort located in such parks, of all improvements thereon and the acquisition, construction, repair and maintenance thereof. The board shall exercise exclusively all the powers and perform all the duties, in regard to such property, vested in and imposed upon the director of public service."
> "Sec. 4058. The board shall have the expenditure of all moneys appropriated by the city council or received from any other source whatever, for the purchase, acquisition, improvement, maintenance, equipment or enjoyment of all such property, but no liability shall be incurred or expenditure made unless the money required therefor is in the treasury to the credit of the park fund and not appropriated for any other purpose."

Section 4057 G. C. vests in the board of park commissioners the control and management of parks and children's play grounds.

Section 4058 G. C. among other powers authorizes the board to expend money appropriated by council or received from other sources for the improvement, equipment or enjoyment of said property mentioned in said section 4057 G. C.; the authorization being contingent upon the money required therefor being in the treasury to the credit of the park fund and not appropriated for any other purpose.

The parks and children's play grounds are established and maintained by public agencies for the use of the general public in the way of affording recreation and serving as ornamental public domain. It would be difficult to establish any set of rules to govern the exact bounds within which the recreation or ornamental features of a park or children's play ground could be limited, as these features are largely matters of taste and of varying ideas by those in charge.

It is my opinion that the incurring of expense for the installation of a municipal Christmas tree in a park or children's play ground by the park board or commission, being properly authorized by council and supplied with funds therefor, would be a rightful exercise of the power to equip or enjoy park or children's play ground property.

The authorization as above set forth, however, would extend only to the installing, decorating and conducting of the Christmas tree proper, and would not be sufficient to sanction the incurring of expense in the purchase of gifts to be placed on said tree and distributed therefrom, nor the payment of compensation to persons for special services rendered in conducting appropriate exercises in connection with said tree.

In other words, the authority granted would refer to decorative features only and in application would amount to an exercise of the power to add to the ornamental features of a park or children's play ground, so that same would be equipped and could be enjoyed in accordance with the spirit and sentiment of the Christmas season.

Further, I am convinced that this authority refers only to the enjoyment and equipment of parks and children's play ground property and that these sections would not authorize the installation of municipal Christmas trees generally and in places not dedicated to public use for parks or children's play ground purposes.

It is a well settled principle of law that municipal corporations have only those powers that are specifically granted by the legislature and the above mentioned provisions are the only ones, to my knowledge, that could be construed in any way to permit the erection of municipal Christmas trees at municipal expense.

Hence, it is my opinion that the expense of the purchase, decoration and lighting and expense of conducting a municipal Christmas tree, under the law as it now exists, could be made a legal charge against municipal funds only in the way above mentioned.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRUSTEES—OHIO STATE AND MIAMI UNIVERSITIES—ABSENCE FROM MEETINGS NOT ABANDONMENT OF OFFICE—DOES NOT CREATE VACANCY.

Mere absence from meetings of the trustees of the Ohio, Ohio State and Miami universities will not constitute an abandonment of the office so as to produce a vacancy; neither is mere absence a cause for removal under section 13 G. C., or section 6 of the act of 1809, 7 O. L. 184. The causes of removal are specifically enumerated and for them alone can a removal be made, and in the manner provided by law. Suggestion made that absence be added to the statutory causes for removal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 17, 1917.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR:—You have made inquiry of this department concerning the three educational institutions hereafter mentioned, stating that it has been reported to you that certain trustees have failed to attend meetings of their respective boards and that you desire to know:

"First. Would such absence produce a vacancy in the office that could be filled by appointment under the law?

"Second. If such absence would not constitute a vacancy, would it constitute a cause for removal?

"Third. What suggestions could be made as to a change of the statutes that might correct the language used?"

To properly answer the inquiries it would not be amiss to look into the legislative history of the institutions.

OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY.

Section 7942 G. C. provides:

"The government of the Ohio state university shall be vested in a board of seven trustees, who shall be appointed by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate. One trustee shall be appointed each year for a term of seven years from the fourteenth day of May of such year, and serve until his successor is appointed and qualified. A vacancy in the office of trustee shall be filled by an appointment to be made in the same manner as an original appointment, but only for the unexpired term. The trustees shall not receive compensation for their services, but shall be paid their reasonable necessary expenses while engaged in the discharge of their official duties."

Section 7946 G. C. provides for the meetings of the board.

I herewith attach references to the acts found in 67 O. L. 20, 74 O. L. 100, 75 O. L. 126. An examination of these acts shows that on March 22, 1870, an act was passed establishing "The Ohio Agricultural and Mechanical College." In 75 O. L. 126, an act was passed reorganizing and changing the name of The Ohio Agricultural and Mechanical College to "The Ohio State University." Sections 2 and 3 of that act have been carried into the General Code as section 7942.

There is no specific statute providing for the removal of trustees and the question of removal of these officers must be found in section 13 of the General Code. The appointment of the trustees shall be made by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate.

THE MIAMI UNIVERSITY.

Section 7939 G. C. provides:

> "The government of Miami university shall be vested in twenty-seven trustees, to be appointed by the governor by and with the advice and consent of the senate. Nine trustees shall be appointed every third year, for a term of nine years, beginning on the first day of March in the year of their appointment. Vacancies in the board of trustees shall be filled for the unexpired term in the same manner."

I am attaching hereto a legislative history of Miami university, as far as necessary for this opinion, and an examination of it will disclose that the Miami university was originally established February 17, 1809, as found in 7 O. L. 184. The original act, section 6, gave the right to the corporation to suspend and dismiss a member of the corporation, who by his conduct renders "himself unworthy of the office, station or place he sustains, or who from age or other infirmity, is rendered incapable to perform the duties of his office."

Section 7 of the original act provided that the trustees should have the power to fill all vacancies which may happen in their board during the recess of the legislature "who shall continue in office until the end of the next session of the legislature," and that the president should make report thereof to the governor and enable him to lay the same before the next legislature, which under section 8 should fill vacancies.

The act itself names the trustees and succeeding acts at different times name the trustees of this institution. The act of February 10, 1824, found in 22 O. L. 68 amends several acts establishing the Miami university and at section 4 provides for eighteen trustees to be chosen by the legislature.

On March 7, 1842, as found in 40 O. L. 123, the first section of the act provided:

> "Be it enacted, etc., that so much of the act entitled 'An act to establish the Miami university,' passed February 17, A. D. 1809, or of any act amendatory thereto, which gives authority to the board of trustees to make removals from, or fill vacancies in, their own body, be and the same is hereby repealed. When any vacancy shall hereafter occur in the said board by removal from the state, death, or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the secretary of the board to report such vacancy to the governor of the state, who shall, thereupon, appoint some suitable person to fill the same, who shall hold the office until the end of the next succeeding session of the legislature; and it shall be the duty of the governor to report such vacancy to the legislature, as in case of other offices, and the legislature shall fill the same for the remainder of the unexpired term, in accordance with the fourth section of the 'act further to amend the several acts establishing the Miami university,' passed February 10, A. D. 1824; provided that the seat of any member of the board who may absent himself for two years together, from the regular meetings of the trustees, may, at the discretion of the board, be declared vacant, and such vacancy shall be reported to the governor as other vacancies are."

While the matter is not carried into the General Code, section 1, as above quoted, seems to be the only existing statute referring specifically to the removal of officers of this corporation. This act takes away from the board of trustees the authority to make removals and fill vacancies in their own body, yet in the same section it is provided that "the seat of any member of the board who may absent himself for two years together, from the regular meetings of the trustees, may, at the discretion of the board, be declared vacant, and such vacancy shall be reported to the governor as other vacancies are."

I have not been able to obtain any information as to what the practice has been since the amendment of 1842, but I am inclined to believe that it has been treated as if there were no specific statute for the removal of the trustees of Miami university and in consequence relief as far as this institution would be concerned would have to be sought under the provisions of section 13 G. C.

Section 13 G. C. provides:

> "When not otherwise provided by law, an officer who holds his office by appointment of the governor with the advice and consent of the senate, may be removed from office by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate, if it be found that such officer is inefficient or derelict in the discharge of his duties or that he has used his office corruptly. If, in the recess of the senate, the governor be satisfied that such officer is inefficient or derelict or corrupt, he may suspend such officer from his office and report the facts to the senate at its next session. If in such report the senate so advise and consent, such officer shall be removed, but otherwise he shall be restored to his office."

This section authorizes the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, to remove a trustee of either one of these educational institutions. There is no question as far as Ohio state university is concerned and there is no other provision of law which would effectuate a removal, and the present condition of the statute in relation to Miami university, with the single exception as to absence from meetings of the board for two years, would provide no other statutory method of removal, and hence, the manner of removal would have to be found in the general section 13 G. C., supra.

Since this section makes a finding of inefficiency or dereliction in the discharge of the duty, or that the office has been used corruptly, the grounds for removal, under the law, before a trustee of such institution could be removed, it would be necessary that specific charges under the statute be filed with the governor, that notice be given to the officer, that a hearing be had and a finding be made of guilty of the charge preferred. Then, if the senate were in session, a report of such hearing would have to be made to the senate and no removal could ensue, unless with the advice and consent of the senate. On the other hand, if the senate were not in session, and the governor was satisfied that the officer was guilty after a hearing upon proper charges, after due notice, such officer might be suspended from office and it would be the further duty of the governor to report all the facts to the senate at the next session, and if the senate would consent to the governor's report, the officer might then be removed.

Our supreme court in State ex rel. v. Sullivan, 58 O. S. 504, and later in State ex rel. v. Hoglan et al., 64 O. S. 532, as well as in other cases, has adhered to the proposition of law settled as far as this state is concerned, that in cases where the statute fixes the causes for which an officer may be removed, the power of removal cannot be exercised arbitrarily, but only upon complaint and after a hearing had in which the officer is afforded an opportunity to refute the case made against him.

Now, as to these two institutions, I am satisfied that since it would be necessary, under section 13 of the General Code, to find that the officer is "inefficient or derelict in the discharge of his duties or that he has used his office corruptly" before an officer could be removed, mere absence from meetings is not a specific cause for removal, neither would proof of absence alone be sufficient to substantiate either one of the above named charges, which are grounds for removal. There would have to be something more than mere absence—a failure partial or total in the performance of some duty—in fine, evidence that would conclusively show that the officer was either inefficient, or derelict, in the discharge of his duties, or that he had used his office corruptly. Of course, if continued absence, or wilful absence were made a ground of removal by the statute, then proof of that fact would be sufficient.

OHIO UNIVERSITY.

The position of Ohio university is somewhat different from the two institutions heretofore spoken of. I have attached hereto some legislative history pertaining to this university, from which it will be seen that the act establishing the university in the town of Athens in 1804 by the name and style of the "Ohio university" is found in 2 O. L. 193, etc. This is the recognized charter of that institution. There was a prior act found in 2 Laws of Northwest Territory at page 161 which establish at the same place "The American Western University."

What became of the last named corporation, whether it was ever organized or not, does not appear as far as the state legislature is concerned. It seems to have been dissolved by the act creating the Ohio university, which act invested the Ohio university with all the powers and privileges of the American western university, for the act of 1804 as a matter of law empowered the obligations of the contract giving the American western university corporate powers. This last named act might be unconstitutional, unless the trustees of the American western university assented to the act of 1804. Since the trustees of the two institutions were practically the same persons, it may be well argued that there was such assent.

Section 2 of the act of 1804 provides:

> "That there shall be and forever remain in the said university, a body politic and corporate, by the name and style of 'The president and trustees of the Ohio university;' which body politic and corporate shall consist of the governor of the state (for the time being), the president, and not more than fifteen nor less than ten trustees, to be appointed as hereinafter is provided."

Section 6 of the act provides:

> "That the said corporation shall have power and authority to suspend or remove the president or any member of the said corporation, who shall, by his misconduct, render himself unworthy of the office, station or place he sustains, or who, from age or other infirmity, is rendered incapable to perform the duties of his office; and the said corporation shall have power and authority to suspend or remove from the university, any professor, instructor or resident student, or servant, whenever the corporation shall deem it expedient for the interest and honor of the university."

Prior to the adoption of the constitution of 1851, the trustees of the Ohio university were appointed by resolution of the general assembly, but since then they have been appointed by the governor by and with the consent of the senate, by virtue of sections 2 and 3 of article VII of the constitution.

Section 2 provides:

> "The directors of the penitentiary shall be appointed or elected in such manner as the general assembly may direct; and the trustees of the benevolent, and other state institutions, now elected by the general assembly, and of such other state institutions, as may be hereafter created, shall be appointed by the governor, by and with the advice and consent of the senate; and upon all nominations made by the governor, the question shall be taken by yeas and nays, and entered upon the journals of the senate."

Section 3 provides:

> "The governor shall have power to fill all vacancies that may occur in the offices aforesaid, until the next session of the general assembly, and, until a successor to his appointee shall be confirmed and qualified."

The term of these trustees is for life or until they resign, or are removed by the board of trustees for misconduct, for such causes as are set forth in section 6, supra. The legislature at different times has passed acts authorizing an increase in the number of trustees of colleges and universities, and changing the number of trustees as provided for originally in the act of 1804.

In 7 Ohio Reports 82, will be found the case of State ex rel. Jacob Linley v. Thomas Bryce, the syllabus of the case reading as follows:

> "A trustee of the Ohio university cannot be regarded as having vacated his place, if he has not resigned, unless there is a judicial decision that such vacation has taken place. A legislative appointment of a successor, without such resignation or adjudication, confers no legal right upon the person appointed."

From the facts stated in the above case, Linley was appointed trustee of the Ohio university in 1805, at which time he resided in Athens, Ohio, and regularly performed his duties on the board until 1828. He then removed to the neighborhood of Cincinnati, having care of a church on Walnut Hills. In 1829, he removed to the flats of Grave Creek in Virginia, one hundred and twenty miles east of Athens. Later he removed to Washington county in Pennsylvania, where he was residing on January 11, 1832. Between the time of his removal from Athens in 1828, and January 11, 1832, he appears to have been present at but one meeting of the board in 1830, when he transacted business with them without objection. This being prior to 1851, the original act providing for appointments of trustees by the general assembly was in force and in 30 O. L. 326 is found a resolution that Thomas Bryce was "appointed a trustee of the Ohio university to fill the vacancy occasioned by Jacob Linley having removed out of the state."

Judge Lane, at page 83, says:

> "It is conceded that the legislature have no power of appointment, except in the event of 'a vacancy.' Unless, therefore, the non-residence or non-attendance of Linley renders his office vacant, the appointment of Bryce is not good.

"It is well settled that neither a neglect to exercise corporate powers, nor even an abuse of them, ipso facto, works a forfeiture of the franchise; that the corporation subsists until the forfeiture be ascertained and declared by a competent tribunal, in a judicial proceeding instituted for that purpose against it by government. 2 Burr. 869; 5 Mass. 230; 16 Mass. 94; 7 Pick. 344; 2 Term 515; 9 Cranch 51; 6 Cowen 23; 5 Johns. 380; 16 Serg. & R. 140; 1 Blackf. 267. It is equally well settled that no member of a corporation shall be disfranchised, no officer removed, without the agency of a tribunal competent to investigate the cause and pronounce the sentence of the loss of right. The office is not vacant by neglect or abuse, it requires an act done, or the exercise of power, to work the forfeiture and determine the title to the office. 2 Black. 156; 4 Kent's Com. 127; for it is the forfeiture of a vested right for the breach of a condition in law. Where the charter prescribes the terms under which the power of a motion is to be exercised, they must be pursued; where the organic law is silent, the corporation itself possesses the inherent power to ascertain and declare the forfeiture either of franchise or office. 2 Kent's Com. 297; 1 Burr, 517; 2 Binn. 441; 4 Binn. 448; 5 Binn. 486; Angell and Ames on Corp. 237.

"This proceeding is essentially adversary in its character. The justice of the common law permits no investigation of facts which may be followed by the loss of a right, or by the infliction of a penalty, to be conducted ex parte. It is essential to its validity that the party should be duly summoned. 4 Black. Com. 282; 1 East 638; 6 Conn. 542; 2 Serg. & R. 141; 1 Burr. 540; Doug. 174.

"In the present case, if the relator had forfeited his office by neglecting his duties, it was necessary that the corporation, after reasonable notice to him and an opportunity for hearing; should investigate the facts, and determine his title to the office by sentence, and thus create the vacancy. Until this was done, the relator was entitled to his seat, and the contingency had not happened in which the legislature could lawfully appoint a trustee.

"As no statutory provision has prescribed a rule of proceeding in cases of quo warranto, the forms of proceeding are as at common law. As this application is made by the prosecuting attorney of the county, and the defense sets up a title to the office without objection to the authority for prosecuting, the court have adjudicated no other questions."

In the case of State v. Trustees of the Vincennes University, 5 Ind. 89, the court held that removal from the state by a trustee of the university or failure to attend three successive meetings, will not of itself vacate the office. In this case the charter of the university provided that willful absence constituted a ground of removal and the court at page 81 said that failure to hold meetings, or that failure of particular members to attend for three successive meetings would not, per se, vacate their seats, in fact, that their removal from the state would not vacate their seats; while these acts would be grounds on which the remaining trustees might vacate the seats of such absent members, by electing others in their places. The court further said:

"Indeed, simple absence for three meetings was not, by the charter, a ground for vacating the seat of a member. It was willful absence that constituted such ground, and this would present a question to be tried on an attempt by the remaining trustees to insist on a vacancy for such cause."

It is my opinion, therefore, that mere absence from meetings, either for the Ohio State and Miami universities for which the causes are practically identical, or for the Ohio university, the causes for removal being as stated supra in section 6 of the act of 1804, would not be sufficient of itself to constitute a cause for removal. So, where an attempted removal was by the governor in the one case, or the board of trustees of the Ohio university in the other, the settled law of Ohio is that prior to any finding, charges would have to be filed with the officer or the board authorized to hear the same, due notice would have to be given the officer charged, a hearing had, and a determination or finding made before the appointing power could exercise the right of removal.

Conditions as above stated, apply to mere absence, and it might be well to further consider where and how an officer can abandon his office and thus create a vacancy. In determining whether there has been an abandonment, the primary object is the intention of the officer, for ordinarily there can be no abandonment by him without an intention, actual or imputed, so to abandon. This intention is a question of fact, to be determined as any other fact, and may be inferred from his acts, his conduct or his statements. Such a relinquishment, however, which ipso facto vacates the office, is not to be confounded with non-user or neglect of duty. The former vacates the office, the latter constitutes a ground for proceeding in the proper forum against the officer, but it does not of itself produce a vacancy in the office without a judicial determination or finding to that effect by the officer or board authorized to try the cause.

It is said by Justice Marshall, in Page v. Hardin, 47 Ky. (8 P. Mon.) 648:

> "A right may be forfeited or lost by neglect or misconduct, though the party has continually asserted or claimed it. Its vacation by abandonment, implies a voluntary and intentional rejection, disclaimer or surrender of it by the party to whom it pertains. An office may be forfeited by non-user or by official misconduct or misbehavior. A partial neglect to perform certain duties of an office, may amount to misbehavior, and as such, be cause for forfeiture. But no partial neglect or non-user can, in itself, be sufficient evidence of abandonment—which implies a mental renunciation of the office. And if abandonment may be inferred conclusively from non-user or neglect of duties, so as to amount, in itself, to an absolute vacation without express renunciation of the office once lawfully held by the party, it can only be when the non-user or neglect is not only total or complete, but of such continuance, or under circumstances so clearly indicating absolute relinquishment, as to preclude all future question of the facts."

My conclusion on this question is that mere absence from meetings by the officers of the institutions above named would not constitute an abandonment of the office so as to produce a vacancy. So far as Miami university is concerned, this is evidenced by the provisions in the act of 1842 which specified that even an absence for two years would not necessarily create a vacancy and it would be up to the board at their discretion, which would imply a finding, to make such declaration.

It strikes me that the only safe method to be followed would be in the case of Ohio state university and Miami university to either, by amendment to sections 7939 and 7942 G. C. make provision that absence without cause from the regular or special meetings of the board of trustees of the respective institutions for two or more such consecutive meetings shall constitute dereliction in the discharge of the duties of such trustee within the meaning of section 13 of the General Code, and to repeal section 6 of the act of 1804 of the Ohio university, which empowers the corporation to suspend or remove its members, thus giving the right of removal to the governor under section 13 G. C. since then there would be no other provision of law for such removal, or, to amend section 13 G. C. in such a manner as to provide that whenever a member of the board of trustees of the said educational or benevolent institutions or universities which receive state aid, who holds his office by appointment of the governor on the advice and consent of the senate, absents himself without cause from the regular or special meetings of such board of commissioners or trustees for two such consecutive meetings, such absence shall constitute dereliction in the discharge of the duties of such member.

There is a further observance to be made concerning the Ohio university and the possible right to amend or repeal section 6 of the act of 1804. Under the rule in the Dartmouth college case, the right of the legislature to change the corporate franchise granted in 1804, might be seriously questioned. I would further recommend that since the change in any event could be made with the consent or assent of the trustees of Ohio university, that as an inducement to such assent, some sort of an act be passed requiring as a condition precedent for the receipt of state aid of any incorporated educational institution, that such corporation should first file with the officer authorized to pay the trustees any levy. for state aid, a certified copy of a resolution properly passed by the board of trustees of such corporation, assenting to the change or changes above mentioned.

The Ohio university occupies an anomalous position and there is always the question that it is not a state institution under section 2 of article VII of the constitution, although ever since the adoption of the 1851 constitution the trustees have been appointed and all the trustees now serving were appointed under the provisions of said section 2.

The state of Ohio, as trustee, accepted a land grant made by the act or resolution of congress of 1787 for the sale of a large tract of land in Ohio "to the Ohio company" wherein it was provided that:

> "Not more than two complete townships to be given perpetually for the purposes of an university, to be laid off by the purchaser or purchasers as near the center as may be, so that the same shall be of good land to be applied to the intended object by the legislature of Ohio."

The state placed the immediate care and supervision over the lands granted as aforesaid as well as the affairs of the university in the hands of certain agents of the state in its behalf appointed by the legislature and denominated the "president and trustees of the Ohio university."

There is no duty devolving upon the state to grant further and additional sums to this university, but an entering wedge was secured in 1875, 72 O. L. 84, when an act refunding certain funds was passed by the general assembly. It was not until 1896, 92 O. L. 40, that the levy of an annual tax for this institution was passed in what was known as "the Sleeper bill." This is followed by an act in 95 O. L. 45, establishing a normal school there, and later acts of April 2, 1906, 98 O. L. 309, which determined the policy of the state towards the Ohio and other named universities, and fixed the state taxes to be thereafter levied for their support.

Inasmuch as this policy is firmly established and each succeeding legislature has contributed to these institutions, I hardly think the trustees would fail to withstand inducement offered for their assent to such a change in the corporate franchise as will place beyond question the appointment of the trustees in the hands of the governor under sections 2 and 3 of article VII of the constitution and give him the right to make removals under section 13 of the General Code.

Miami university, likewise, is not owned and operated by the state, but the legislature in 1869 passed an act authorizing the governor to make the appointments of the trustees and this has been acceded to ever since and no question has ever been raised as to the legislature's right to make this change. It might be observed that the original act establishing Miami university in section 15 reserved the right to the legislature to alter the provisions of that charter, which right does not appear to have been reserved in the incorporation of Ohio university.

Trusting that this fully answers your inquiry, I am,

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION—UTILITIES COMMISSION—ACTS CREATING SAME ARE CONSTITUTIONAL UNDER SECTION 16, ARTICLE 11.

1. The act creating the public utilities commission of Ohio is not unconstitutional under and by virtue of section 16 of Article II of the Constitution. The conditions of said section of the Constitution are fully met in said act. The sections amended or changed are repealed. The act nowhere refers to sections that are repealed. The act is not in the least dependent upon repealed sections for its force and vitality, but it is one full, complete, rounded out act, embodying within itself everything that is necessary to give it force and vitality.

2. The act creating the industrial commission of Ohio is not unconstitutional under and by virtue of said section of the Constitution. This for the same reasons as set out in reference to the act creating the public utilities commission; and for the further reason that said act specifically provides that the powers and duties conferred on said industrial commission are such as are conferred by law. Not conferred by repealed statutes, but by living, vital statutes.

3. There is no aim or intention to find or decide in this opinion as to what extent or in what respects the Parrett-Whittemore law is unconstitutional under and by virtue of the recent decision of the supreme court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 17, 1917.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication of January 20, 1917, in which you make inquiry as to the constitutionality of the acts creating the public utilities commission and the industrial commission, was received. The communication reads as follows:

> "One of the grounds upon which the Parrett-Whittemore law was held to be unconstitutional, was that in its construction certain vitals were carried into it from the Warnes law, by reference to sections from the Warnes law, and then, in the concluding part of the Parrett-Whittemore law, the Warnes law was repealed, embodying the sections that were to be a part of the Parrett-Whittemore law."

Your inquiry refers to the industrial commission law and the public utilities commission law, and is as to whether these two laws might possibly be unconstitutional for the same reasons as set out in the recent opinion of our supreme court, for which the Parrett-Whittemore law was declared unconstitutional.

I will first notice your inquiry as to the act creating the public utilities commission. Let us first consider just what the supreme court decided in the case of The State of Ohio ex rel. Willis R. Godfrey, a Taxpayer, v. P. C. O'Brien, Treasurer, et al., wherein the court held the Parrett-Whittemore law to be unconstitutional, and why said court so decided.

In so far as your inquiry is concerned, the criticism of the court was aimed at section 3 and section 17 of said act (106 O. L. 246).

Section 3 of said act is as follows:

"Section 3. Whenever any person, company, firm, partnership, association or corporation was by any existing provision of any law repealed by this act required to return property to the district assessor for taxation, the same shall be returned to the county auditor; and whenever the district assessor was by any provision of any such law charged with any duty or vested with any powers in making up the original tax list, or in listing and valuing any property which has been omitted from the tax list, or in correcting any returns or statements of property for taxation, either with respect to its valuation or amount, such duty shall devolve upon and be performed by the county auditor and such power shall vest in him and be exercised by him."

Section 17 of said act is as follows:

"Section 17. At the regular election to be held in November, 1915, and biennially thereafter, assessors shall be elected in the manner provided by law for the election of ward, district, city, village and township officers as follows: In municipal corporations divided into wards, one assessor shall be elected in each ward; in villages one assessor shall be elected; in cities not divided into wards, the board of deputy state supervisors of elections or the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, as the case may be, shall, acting in conjunction with the county auditor, within ten days after this act shall become effective, divide such cities or such part or parts thereof as may be located in their county, into such number of assessment districts as in the judgment of the county auditor may be necessary in order to provide for the assessment of all the property therein; a division so fixed shall remain in effect for a period of four years, at the expiration of which and quadrennially thereafter a like division shall be made in the same manner and by the same authority. One assessor shall, at the time specified in this section, be elected in each assessment district so created; provided, however, that nothing therein shall be so construed as to require a division of any municipal corporation or part thereof into assessment districts when, in the judgment of the county auditor, such division is not necessary, in which event one assessor shall be elected in the entire municipal corporation or in that part thereof which may be located in one county as the case may be; in townships not having a municipal corporation therein, one assessor shall be elected in such township; in townships composed in part of a municipal corporation, one assessor shall be elected in the territory outside such municipal corporation. An assessor shall be a citizen possessing the qualifications of an elector of such ward, district, city, village or township. Such assessor shall take and hold his office for the term of two years from and after the first day of January following his election. Upon the election and qualification of such assessor, the right of the deputy assessor, theretofore appointed under any provision of law to exercise any powers or perform any duties as such deputy assessor shall cease and determine, and he shall turn over to the person so elected and qualified, all the books, records, papers and furniture of said office. Such elected assessor shall be the successor of said appointed officer, with full power to take up, carry on and complete any and all of the unfinished business thereof, and he shall perform all the duties, exercise all the powers and be subject to all the liabilities and penalties devolved, conferred or imposed by law upon the deputy assessor so appointed."

The court held that these two sections were not in harmony with section 16 of article II of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

"No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in the title. And no law shall be revived or amended, unless the new act contains the entire act revived or the section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed."

The court held in the syllabus as follows:

"6. The provisions of section 16 of article II of the Constitution of Ohio, providing that no law shall be revived or amended unless the new act contains the entire act revived, or the section or sections amended, is mandatory. The inclusion by reference, of the provisions of a repealed statute is in violation of this provision of the constitution of Ohio, and void.

"7. The statute defining the duties, powers, liabilities and penalties imposed upon deputy assessors being repealed, the provisions of section 17 of the act of the general assembly of Ohio, passed May 7, 1915 (106 O. L. 246), that the elected assessor 'shall perform all the duties, exercise all the powers and be subject to all the liabilities and penalties devolved, conferred or imposed by law upon the deputy assessor so appointed,' is unconstitutional and void.

And in the opinion the court says:

"Section 3 of this act provides that the duties imposed upon the district assessor, 'by any existing provision of any law repealed by this act * * * shall devolve upon and be performed by the county auditor.'

"* * * * * * * * * *

"While it was held by this court in the case of Lehman v. McBride, 15 Ohio St. 571, that the clause in section 16 of article II which provides that, 'the section or sections so amended shall be repealed,' is directory only to the general assembly, and was not intended to abrogate the long established rule as to repeals by implication; yet it is clear that this court entertained a different view as to the other provisions in the same section of the constitution.

"In the opinion in that case (page 603), it is said that the purpose of this constitutional provision is to make 'all acts when amended intelligible without the examination of the statute as it stood prior to the amendment. It requires every section intended to supersede a former one to be fully set out. No amendments are to be made by directing specified words or clauses to be stricken from or inserted in the section of a prior statute which may be referred to, but the new act must contain the section as amended.'

"Aside from this positive declaration of this court in the case of Lehman v. McBride, supra, it is clear that this provision of the constitution requiring each new act to contain the entire act as revived, or the section or sections amended, is mandatory; otherwise repealed sections must be given the same force and effect as if they were not in fact repealed.

"The repeal of a statute is the end of that statute. To all intents and purposes it is the same as if it had never existed. A reference in a legislative act to a repealed law, as supplementary or explanatory of the new act, is an absurdity, prohibited by this provision of the constitution.

"Any other course would lead to endless confusion and uncertainty, and prevent an intelligent administration of the statutory law of this state. The fact that a statute is recently repealed, or repealed by the same act which refers to it, is no argument in favor of such loose legislation. If that can be done, then reference can be made to a statute repealed half a century ago, or, the new section might remain unrepealed for the next half century. In either case it would require that all repealed statutes be carried into each edition of the General Code published, otherwise there would be no means available to determine the scope, intent and purpose of the act which incorporates by reference a part of the provisions of the repealed law. This, of course, would be wholly impracticable, if not impossible."

From the law as laid down in the syllabus and from the opinion of the court, it is plainly evident that the part of the Parrett-Whittemore act which the court criticised, was that part in which the said act referred to sections of the former act and then repealed said sections.

In considering the decision of the court as to the unconstitutionality of the Parrett-Whittemore law, it must be noted that the Parrett-Whittemore law is one whole and complete scheme of taxation, and was enacted to take the place of the Warnes law (103 O. L. 786), and it repealed the entire Warnes law in repealing sections 5579 to 5624-20 both inclusive, but at the same time that the Parrett-Whittemore law repealed every provision and every section of the Warnes law, it provided in section 3 that the county auditor shall perform the duties of the district assessor, which duties were set forth nowhere but in the law repealed.

Further, section 17 of the Parrett-Whittemore act provided that—

"Such elected assessor shall be the successor of said appointed officer, with full power to take up, carry on and complete any and all of the unfinished business thereof, and he shall perform all the duties, exercise all the powers and be subject to all the liabilities and penalties devolved, conferred or imposed by law upon the deputy assessor so appointed."

It was the Warnes law which provided for the appointment of deputy assessors and conferred upon them their duties. Thus, the Parrett-Whittemore law, at the same time that it conferred upon the elected assessor the duties then and theretofore devolving upon the appointed deputy assessor, repealed the whole law in which the duties of the appointed deputy assessor were set forth.

In considering the recent decision of our supreme court, it is very clear that this is the foundation and whole ground work of its decision.

Now, the question is as to whether the act creating the public utilities commission is unconstitutional by virtue of this same provision of the constitution. First, let us notice a few things in general as to this act.

The act creating the public utilities commission amended the act creating the public service commission and conferred further duties and powers upon the public utilities commission. The title to the public utilities commission act, as found on page 804 of 103 O. L., is as follows:

to create the public utilities commission of Ohio, to prescribe its organization, its powers and its duties, and to repeal sections 487 to 499, inclusive, sections 543 to 551 inclusive, sections 614, 614-24, 614-25, 614-26, 614-69, 614-70, 614-80, 614-81 and 614-83 of the General Code."

In other words, it created the public utilities commission to take the place of the public service commission, provided for its organization, prescribed its duties and repealed certain sections of the public service commission act.

The act creating the public service commission is found in 102 O. L. 549, the title of which reads as follows:

"AN ACT

"Changing the name of the railroad commission of Ohio, to that of the Public Service Commission of Ohio, defining the powers and duties of the latter commission with respect to public utilities, and to amend sections 501, 502 and 606 of the General Code."

This act created the public service commission to take the place of the railroad commission and prescribed the duties of the public service commission and repealed certain sections.

Section 614-1 of the General Code, which is a part of the act creating the public service commission, is as follows:

"The railroad commission of Ohio shall hereafter be known as the Public Service Commission of Ohio. In addition to the powers, duties and jurisdiction conferred and imposed upon said commission by chapter one, division two, title three, part first, of the General Code, and the acts mandatory or supplementary thereto, the public service commission of Ohio shall have and exercise the powers, duties and jurisdiction provided for in this act."

The act creating the railroad commission and prescribing its duties is found in 98 O. L. 342, the title of which is as follows:

"AN ACT

"To regulate railroads and other common carriers in this state, create a board of railroad commissioners, prevent the imposition of unreasonable rates, prevent unjust discriminations and insure an adequate railway service."

It will be noticed that each one of these acts is full and complete within itself. The act creating the railroad commission was one entire, complete act. The act amending the railroad commission act and creating the public service commission to take the place of the railroad commission provided that the public service commission should perform all the duties and have all the powers of the railroad commission, and in addition thereto such powers and duties enumerated in the act itself.

The act amending the public service commission act and creating the public utilities commission to take the place of the public service commission, provides that the public utilities commission shall succeed to all the rights, powers and authority heretofore exercised by the public service commission, and in addition gives the public utilities commission further rights, powers and authority enumerated in the act itself.

Section 20 of the act, which is section 499-7 of the General Code, reads as follows:

> "Section 499-7. The public utilities commission shall succeed to and be possessed of the rights, authority and powers now exercised by the public service commission of Ohio and perform all the duties now imposed upon the public service commission of Ohio, and said powers and authority shall be exercised and enforced, and said duties performed in the manner now provided by law for the said public service commission. Said public service commission of Ohio shall on and after the time when this act shall take effect have no further legal existence, and the public utilities commission is hereby authorized and directed to assume and continue as successor of said public service commission of Ohio. Wherever in the General Code the terms railroad commission or public service commission occur, the term public utilities commission shall be substituted therefor."

And this section is the only section of the act which has any similarity to sections 3 and 17 of the Parrett-Whittemore act, and is the only section of the act which could be open to the same criticism as sections 3 and 17 of the Parrett-Whittemore law.

But section 20 does not contain the provisions which drew the fire of the supreme court in its recent decision and because of which the supreme court declared the act unconstitutional. Section 20 does not refer to repealed statutes. It refers to no statutes that are not in full force and effect. It does not even refer to anything outside the very act which was amended by the act creating the public utilities commission, and of which section 20 is a part. It does not pretend to do anything other than to place the powers, duties and authority heretofore devolving upon the public service commission, upon the public utilities commission. So there is no similarity whatever between the provisions of section 20 of the public utilities commission act and sections 3 and 17 of the act declared unconstitutional by the supreme court.

But let us go further and consider the public utilities commission act in the light of section 16 of article II of the Constitution, and independent of the late decision of the supreme court. Said section 16 reads in part as follows:

> "And no law shall be revived or amended unless the new act contains the entire act revived, or the section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed."

The act creating the public utilities commission comes clearly within the above constitutional provision. The act does not revive a repealed act. It amends a living act.

Now, what does the constitution require when this is done? Simply, that the new act contain the section or sections amended, and secondarily that the section or sections so amended shall be repealed. These conditions are fully and completely complied with. The sections of the new act which modify sections of the old act are all set out. The sections amended or changed are repealed. The sections repealed, namely, sections 487 to 499 inclusive, 543 to 551 inclusive, 614, 614-24, 614-25, 614-26, 614-69, 614-70, 614-80, 614-81 and 614-83 of the General Code do not contain any matter which is not provided for in the new act. The new act nowhere refers to the sections repealed. Neither is it in the least dependent upon the repealed sections for its force and vitality. The new act simply transfers the duties of the old public service commission to the public utilities commission, and gives the latter commission further duties. The act as amended is one full, complete, rounded-out act, embodying in itself everything that is necessary to give it force and vitality.

Hence, it is my opinion that the act amending the public service commission act and creating the public utilities commission to take the place of the public service commission, and prescribing its duties, is clearly constitutional in the light of section 16 of article II of the Constitution.

Your second query goes to the question of the constitutionality of the act creating the industrial commission of Ohio, which act is found in 103 O. L. 95. The title of said act is as follows:

"AN ACT

"Creating the industrial commission of Ohio, superseding the state liability board of awards, abolishing the departments of commissioner of labor statistics, chief inspector of mines, chief inspector of workshops and factories, chief examiner of steam engineers, board of boilers rules and state board of arbitration and conciliation, merging certain powers and duties of said departments in and transferring certain powers and duties of said departments to said industrial commission of Ohio, and granting such commission certain other powers, and repealing sections 872, 873, 874, 876, 877, 878, 879, 880, 881, 883, 884, 897, 898, 900, 902, 903, 908, 979, 981, 983, 984, 986, 987, 988, 993, 1001, 1028-4, 1038, 1039, 1042, 1043, 1044, 1046, 1058, 1058-6, 1058-9, 1058-13, 1058-14, 1058-15, 1058-27, 1059, 1060, 1061, 1062, 1078 of the General Code."

It will be noted in the title that this act creates the industrial commission to supersede the state liability board of awards and abolishes a number of departments theretofore existing in the state, and grants to the industrial commission additional powers and repeals certain sections of the General Code.

A careful consideration of the sections repealed by this act will convince one that this is all that was contemplated by the act. The sections providing for the duties of the boards and departments abolished are not repealed excepting in a few minor points. The sections repealed simply refer to the appointment of the members of the different departments, their organization, their bonds and their reports, leaving in the statutes the sections which refer to the duties of these different departments and boards which the act abolishes, and then confers upon the industrial commission these same duties and powers.

Very much the same line of reasoning applies to the consideration of the constitutionality of this act as was used in considering the constitutionality of the act creating the public utilities commission. There are three sections, and only three, in the act creating the industrial commission, which must be considered. The first is section 11 of said act, which is section 871-11 of the General Code. This section reads as follows:

"Section 871-11. On and after the first day of September, 1913, the following departments of the state of Ohio, to wit: Commissioner of labor statistics, chief inspector of mines, chief inspector of workshops and factories, chief examiner of steam engineers, board of boiler rules, and the state board of arbitration and conciliation, shall have no further legal existence, except that the heads of the said departments, and said boards, shall within ten days after the said date submit to the governor their reports of their respective departments for the portion of the year 1913 during which they were in existence, and on and after the first day of September, 1913, the industrial commission of Ohio shall have all the powers and enter upon the performance of all the duties conferred by law upon the said departments."

Section 24 of this act is very similar to section 11, this being section 871-24 G. C., and reads as follows:

"Section 871-24. All duties, liabilities, authority, powers and privileges conferred and imposed by law upon the commissioner of labor statistics, special agents for the commissioner of labor statistics, chief inspector of mines, district inspectors of mines, chief inspector of workshops and factories, first assistant chief inspector of workshops and factories, second assistant chief inspector of workshops and factories, district inspectors of workshops and factories, chief examiner of steam engineers, assistant chief examiner of steam engineers, district examiners of steam engineers, the board of boiler rules, head of the department of the board of boiler rules and chief inspector of steam boilers, assistant chief inspector of steam boilers, general inspectors of steam boilers, special inspector of steam boilers, state board of arbitration and conciliation, are hereby imposed upon the industrial commission of Ohio and its deputies on and after the first day of September, 1913.

"All laws relating to the commissioner of labor statistics, special agents of the commissioner of labor statistics, chief inspector of mines, district inspectors of mines, chief inspector of workshops and factories, first assistant chief inspector of workshops and factories, second assistant chief inspector of workshops and factories, district inspectors of workshops and factories, chief examiner of steam engineers, assistant chief examiner of steam engineers, district examiners of steam engineers, the board of boiler rules, head of the department of the board of boiler rules and chief inspector of steam boilers, assistant chief inspector of steam boilers, general inspectors of steam boilers, special inspectors of steam boilers, state board of arbitration and conciliation, on and after the first day of September, 1913, shall apply to, relate and refer to the industrial commission of Ohio, and its deputies. Qualifications prescribed by law for said officers and their assistants and employes shall be held to apply, wherever applicable, to the qualifications of the deputies of the commission assigned to the performance of the duties now cast upon such officers, assistants and employes."

These sections do not provide that the industrial commission shall perform duties and exercise powers set out in certain sections repealed by the act, as did sections 3 and 17 of the Parrett-Whittemore law. These sections simply provide that the industrial commission is to perform the duties and exercise the powers which theretofore had been performed and exercised by the boards and departments abolished, and the legislature was careful to make this clear in the wording of these sections.

Section 11 of the act under consideration provides that:

"On and after the first day of September, 1913, the industrial commission of Ohio shall have all the powers and enter upon the performance of all the duties conferred by law upon the said departments."

Section 24 provides that "all duties, liabilities, authority, powers and privileges conferred and imposed by law upon" the various boards and departments abolished, "are hereby imposed upon the industrial commission of Ohio and its deputies, on and after the first day of September, 1913."

Now, the language used in these sections is just the reverse of the language used in sections 3 and 17 of the Parrett-Whittemore law. Under no view that could be taken of sections 11 and 24 could it be held that repealed statutes confer powers and duties by law. The only duties and powers to be performed by the industrial commission are those duties and powers conferred upon the departments mentioned in sections 11 and 24, as found in living, vital statutes.

We must also note section 12 of the act under consideration. This section was amended at the same session of the legislature in which the original law creating the industrial commission was enacted. As amended, it is found in 103 O. L. 656 and reads as follows:

> "Section 12. The industrial commission shall supersede and perform all of the duties of the state liability board of awards, provided in and by the act of the general assembly of the state of Ohio passed the thirty-first day of May, 1911 (102 O. L. 524), entitled, 'An act to create a state insurance fund for the benefit of injured and the dependents of killed employes and to provide for the administration of such fund by a state liability board of awards,' and all amendments to said act, and by the act of the general assembly passed February 26, 1913, approved March 14, 1913, and filed in the office of the secretary of state March 17, 1913, entitled 'An act to further define the powers, duties and jurisdiction of the state liability board of awards with reference to the collection, maintenance and disbursement of the state insurance fund for the benefit of injured, and the dependents of killed employes and requiring contribution thereto by employers, and to repeal sections 1465-42, 1465-43, 1465-45, 1465-46, 1465-53, 1465-54, 1465-55, 1465-56, 1465-57, 1465-58, 1465-59, 1465-60, 1465-61, 1465-62, 1465-63, 1465-64, 1465-65, 1465-66, 1465-67, 1465-68, 1465-69, 1465-70, 1465-71, 1465-72, 1465-73, 1465-74, 1465-75, 1465-76, 1465-77, 1465-78, 1465-79 of the General Code,' on and after the first day of September, 1913; and said commission on and after the first day of September, 1913, as successor of the said liability board of awards, shall be vested with and assume and exercise all powers and duties cast by law upon said liability board of awards, and on the first day of September, 1913, the term of office of the members constituting the said state liability board of awards of Ohio shall cease and terminate, together with all rights, privileges and emoluments connected therewith."

To understand this section as amended, several facts must be noted:

(a) The original act creating the state liability board of awards is found in 102 O. L. 524, the title of which act is as follows:

> "To create a state insurance fund for the benefit of injured, and the dependents of killed employes, and to provide for the administration of such fund by a state liability board of awards."

(b) This act was radically amended by an act which is found in 103 O. L. 72, which act is commonly known as the workmen's compensation law, the title of which act is as follows:

"AN ACT

"To further define the powers, duties and jurisdiction of the state liability board of awards with reference to the collection, maintenance and disbursement of the state insurance fund for the benefit of injured, and the dependents of killed employes and requiring contribution thereto by employers, and to repeal sections 1465-42, 1465-43, 1465-45, 1465-46, 1465-53, 1465-54, 1465-55, 1465-56, 1465-57, 1465-58, 1465-59, 1465-60, 1465-61, 1465-62, 1465-63, 1465-64, 1465-65, 1465-66, 1465-67, 1465-68, 1465-69, 1465-70, 1465-71, 1465-72, 1465-73, 1465-74, 1465-75, 1465-76, 1465-77, 1465-78, 1465-79 of the General Code."

Hence, section 12 of the act under consideration confers upon the industrial commission all the powers and duties originally conferred upon the state liability board of awards and all amendments to said act, together with all the duties and powers conferred upon the state liability board of awards by the act passed February 26, 1913, and found, as above set forth, in 103 O. L. 72. But it confers upon the industrial commission no duties and powers set out in certain sections of the statutes which are repealed by the same act. The legislature was again careful to provide in this section also that—

"said commission on and after the first day of September, 1913, as successor of the said liability board of awards, shall be vested with and assume and exercise all powers and duties cast by law upon said liability board of awards," not duties and powers conferred by repealed statutes, but duties and powers conferred by law.

I know it might be thought at first sight that, inasmuch as the act found in 103 O. L. 72 repeals many of the sections of the act found in 102 O. L. 524, conferring duties upon the state liability board of awards, section 12 of the act under consideration confers duties and powers set forth in repealed sections of the act; but the legislature was careful to provide that there should be conferred on the industrial commission the duties of the state liability board of awards provided for in the act found in 102 O. L. 524 and all amendments to said act, and by the act of the general assembly passed February 26, 1913, to prevent such a construction being placed upon said section.

Not the original act alone, but the original act as amended, was in the mind of the legislature. Not the repealed sections of the original act creating the state liability board of awards, but the act as amended, is referred to in section 12 of the act under consideration. Not dead provisions in repealed statutes, but living principles in an amended law, were in the mind of the legislature.

I am therefore of the opinion that the act creating the industrial commission of Ohio is not unconstitutional in the light of section 16 of article II of the Constitution. The only theory upon which the acts creating the public utilities commission and the industrial commission could be held unconstitutional in view of section 16 of article II of the Constitution, would be the following, that no statute or section of a statute can be made to refer to the provisions of any other statute or section thereof. But it is my opinion that said section of the constitution would not bear this construction. Neither do I consider that the supreme court in its recent decision placed such a construction upon the same.

I might say, in passing, that sections 1465-37, 1465-40 and 1465-41 G. C. ought to be repealed. The industrial commission supersedes the state liability board of awards and the provisions of said sections are at the present repealed by implication. Hence they should be repealed in fact.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CORPORATION—CANNOT INCREASE CAPITAL STOCK BY INCREASING NOMINAL VALUE OF SHARES.

A corporation has no power under the statutes of Ohio to increase its capital stock by increasing the nominal value of its shares.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 17, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio. 1

DEAR SIR:—This office is in receipt of a communication from you under date of February 1, 1917, in which you ask my opinion as follows:

> "The Ohio Oil Company, a corporation of Findlay, Ohio, has made application to this office to increase its capital stock from $15,000,000.00 to $60,000,000.00. It is attempting to do this, as shown by the enclosed certificate, by increasing the par value of its shares without increasing the number of shares.
> "I desire an opinion from you whether this can be done; also whether the enclosed certificate should be accepted and filed by this office."

By reference to the certificate of increase tendered you by the corporation and referred to in your communication to me I note that at a special meeting of the stockholders of the Ohio Oil Company held at the general offices of the company at Findlay, Ohio, on January 31, 1917, called in apparent conformity to the provisions of the statutes, the stockholders of the company voted an increase of the capital stock of the company by resolution, which, in words and figures, is as follows:

> "Resolved, That the capital stock of the Ohio Oil Company be increased from the present amount thereof, to wit: Fifteen million ($15,000,000.00) dollars, consisting of six hundred thousand (600,000) shares of the par value of twenty-five ($25.00) dollars each, to sixty million ($60,000,000.00) dollars, to consist of six hundred thousand (600,000) shares of the par value of one hundred ($100.00) dollars each; and
> "Be it further Resolved, That the president and secretary of the company be, and hereby are, directed to file with the secretary of state of state of Ohio, a certificate of such increase, and to do all acts and things that may be necessary to comply with the provisions of any law or laws applicable to and regarding the increase of stock."

The certificate of increase of capital stock above referred to further provides:

> "And this is to further certify: That all of the capital stock of the said the Ohio Oil Company heretofore authorized, amounting to fifteen million ($15,000,000.00) dollars, has been subscribed and fully paid up."

With respect to the increase of the capital stock voted by the stockholders of the Ohio Oil Company, as indicated by your communication and the certificate thereto attached, I may add that I am in receipt of a communication from the attorneys representing the Ohio Oil Company in which they say:

"Referring to the certificate of increase of the capital stock of the Ohio Oil Company, recently presented for filing in your office, we beg to advise that on January 1, 1916, the assets of the Ohio Oil Company exceeded its capital stock and all other liabilities by $65,811,743.12, and the capital stock has been increased in order that it may more nearly equal the assets.

"In notices of the special meeting mailed to all stockholders it was stated that if a proposed increase of capital stock was authorized the same would be distributed pro rata to all stockholders and in conformity to this plan on January 31, 1917, immediately following the adjournment of the stockholders' meeting, all of the directors of the Ohio Oil Company met and unanimously adopted a resolution to distribute this stock, represented by the increase, pro rata to the stockholders of the Ohio Oil Company.

"By increasing its capital stock the stockholders of the Ohio Oil Company had only in mind the purpose of eliminating a great disparity between assets and capital stock and distributing the additional stock pro rata to all stockholders. This was the plan and it has been consummated.

"This increase is effected by increasing the nominal value of existing shares to avoid the great additional expense of bookkeeping that would be required if the increase had been made by increasing the number of shares, the statute, as we think, plainly contemplating these alternative modes to suit the accommodations of the stockholders. This places the nominal value of the shares of stock precisely where it was at the original organization of the company and where it might now be placed by original articles of incorporation."

From the certified copy of the articles of incorporation of this company and the certificate of increase and reduction of its capital stock heretofore made, it appears that the company was incorporated in 1887 with a capital stock of $1,000,000.00 divided into 10,000 shares of $100.00 each. Thereafter, in 1889, proceedings were had increasing the capital stock from $1,000,000.00 to $3,500,000.00. In 1890 the capital stock was further increased from $3,500,000.00 to $8,000,000.00. In 1892 a certificate was filed by this company in the office of the secretary of state reciting proceedings had by the stockholders of the company reducing the capital stock from $8,000,000.00 to $2,000,000.00; the action of said stockholders and directors of the company being indicated by the following taken from the said certificate:

"KNOW ALL MEN BY THESE PRESENTS, That we, the undersigned, being all of the stockholders of the Ohio Oil Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Ohio, do hereby consent and agree to and with each other, and with all others concerned, that the board of directors of the said the Ohio Oil Company may reduce the amount of its capital stock from eight millions of dollars ($8,000,000.00) to two millions of dollars ($2,000,000.00), and that the board of directors for that purpose may reduce the nominal value of all the shares of the capital stock of the said the Ohio Oil Company from one hundred dollars ($100) per share to twenty-five dollars ($25) per share, and issue certificates therefor.

"Resolved, That the capital stock of the Ohio Oil Company be, and the same is hereby reduced from eight millions of dollars ($8,000,000.00) to two millions of dollars ($2,000,000.00) and that for the purpose of effecting said reduction in the amount of the capital stock of this company, the par value of each and every share of its capital stock is hereby reduced from one hundred dollars ($100) to twenty-five dollars ($25) per share; and

Resolved, That each and every stockholder of this company shall be, and he is hereby required to surrender the stock certificate which he now holds, and on such surrender the president and secretary are hereby instructed and directed to issue to him a new certificate for the same number of shares as represented by the certificate surrendered for cancellation, at the nominal value of twenty-five dollars ($25) per share, and

"Resolved, That the president and secretary be, and they are hereby instructed and directed to prepare and file with the secretary of state of the state of Ohio a certificate under the seal of this company certifying the action of the stockholders and board of directors decreasing the capital stock of this company from eight million of dollars ($8,000,000.00) to two millions of dollars ($2,000,000.00), as required by section 3264 of the Revised Statutes of the state of Ohio."

Later, it appears, proceedings were had increasing the capital stock of the company to $15,000,000.00.

Section 8625 of the General Code provides that any number of persons, not less than five, a majority of whom are citizens of this state, desiring to become incorporated, shall subscribe and acknowledge articles of incorporation, which must contain;

* * * * * * * * * *

"4. The amount of its capital stock, if it is to have capital stock, and the number of shares into which it is divided. * * *"

Preceding section 8698 we find the head line "Changes in Capital Stock." This is adopted first in the General Code, not appearing in the Revised Statutes. It is, nevertheless, in three sections, a codification of all the statutory provisions upon the subject. Section 8719, however, takes up the subject and imposes a restriction, stating Section 8699 provides that upon increasing the capital stock the company may issue and dispose of preferred stock. It will be seen that there is no express authority for increasing the nominal value of shares of stock. The implication is against the authority to do so.

Abbreviating section 8698, we have:

"* * * may increase its capital stock or the number of shares into which it is divided. * * * After organization the increase may be made by a vote of the holders of a majority of the stock. * * * Or the stock may be increased at a meeting of the stockholders at which all are present in person, or by proxy. * * *"

The increase after organization refers to the same increase mentioned above. The expression "may increase its capital stock or the number of shares" is capable of two constructions, either it provides for two separate and distinct things—the increase of capital stock and the increase of the number of shares, either of which might take place without the other, in which case the "or" is used in the disjunctive sense, but the meaning that seems to be apparent is the other use of the word, making of the expression following it an equivalent of the one preceding.

Amet v. T. and P. Ry. Co. 117 La. 454-458;
Board of Trustees v. Attorney-General, 228 Mo. 514; syl. 4.
State, etc., v. Chesapeake, etc., Ry. Co., 98 Md. 35;
Bryan v. Menafee, 21 Okla. 1-11.

To suppose it in the disjunctive and assume that it provides for an entirely different and new act by a corporation, it would seem to be introduced with very little ceremony. If the legislature had meant to permit a different thing to be done, that different thing would have been conspicuous in the legislative intent, and more conspicuous in the expression of the same. This view is reinforced by the comparison with section 8700 where the opposite thing is done from what is desired here and intended to be meant. It is expressly provided that the corporation may reduce the nominal value of all its shares. Had there been a legislative intent to permit the corresponding increase, it would have been expressed with the same clearness, and this presumption of construction is a violent one. Again taking these two sections, being the two which provide for increase and reduction of capital stock, set off the expression in the one against the other.

"Increase its capital stock or the number of shares into which it is divided."

"Reduce the amount of its capital stock and the nominal value of all the shares."

The first seems to give the method of increase; the second the method of reduction. You increase by adding an additional number; you decrease by boiling down the size. In other words, the expressions in each case are equivalent, and while in each case a designation of a particular power is given, the additional expression describes the mode of the exercise of that power and is an implied exclusion of other methods.

It is here important to observe that there is absolutely no power to increase the stock of a corporation except by the permission of statutes, and in this case, these statutes are what we are here considering.

"In the absence of express authority from the state, a corporation has no power whatever to increase or reduce the amount of its stock, and any attempt upon the part of the corporation, either by the corporation's officers or by the stockholders, to do so, is wholly illegal and void."

(1 Cook on Corporations—7th Ed., Sec. 281.)

The same author, in section 290 of his work on Corporations above noted, says:

"It is a well settled principle of law that the number of shares into which the capital stock has been divided and the par value of those shares can neither be increased or diminished without express warrant of authority either from the legislature or the charter of the company. When, however, the charter does not fix the number or amount of the shares it devolves upon the stockholders or directors to fix them; and in such a case it seems that the limit established might lawfully be changed without special authority."

To this point, Beach, in his work on Private Corporations, at section 468, says:

> "The shares of a corporation can neither be increased or diminished in number or in their nominal value, unless this be expressly authorized by the company's charter or by act of the legislature."

Supporting the rule noted by Beach, as well as by Cook, the following decisions may be cited:

> Re Financial Corporations, L. R. 2 Ch. App. 714;
> Droytwich Salt Co. v. Curzon, L. R. 3 Exch. 35, 42;
> Smith v. Goldsworthy, 4 Q. B. 430;
> Tschumi v. Hills, 6 Kan. App. 549;
> Seigmouret v. Home Insurance Co., 24 Fed. Rep. 332.

The pedigree of these acts justifies and strengthens the same view, and in the main is as follows:

The first act permitting an increase of capital stock was April 12, 1865 (62 O. L. 134). It provided that manufacturing bridge and gas corporations might increase capital stock. Section 3 of the act is as follows:

> "Upon the vote of the stockholders owning two-thirds at least of the stock of any such company in favor of such increase of its capital, the directors of such company shall apportion such increase, pro rata, to the stockholders of said company, in proportion to their stock therein."

It then went on to say that if anybody didn't take his in thirty days the directors might dispose of it otherwise. Now this must have assumed that the increase would have been made by the issue of additional shares, as otherwise the provisions would have been difficult or incapable of carrying out.

In 1872, 69 O. L. 24, the above provision was amended to include certain other corporations, and contained a significant provision which parallels the situation in the present case, that is, that before voting on the proposition to increase the capital stock, or after such vote and before issuing any certificate of such increase in stock, it shall be lawful for the directors by and with the consent of the majority in the interest of the stockholders to cause a correct inventory to be made of all the earnings and increase of property belonging to the company, that had not already been divided among the stockholders, and add the aggregate amount thereof to the then capital stock.

Now this you might naturally have supposed would have been done by increasing the nominal value of shares, but not so, as that provision is followed by a direction to issue certificates of such additional stock to the stockholders of such company in proportion to the amount of stock then held by each, and to no other person. Here you have the exact thing which the Ohio Oil Company seeks to do—increase of stock by absorbing surplus assets, but the terms of the statute compel them to do it by increasing the number of shares. This was again amended in 70 O. L. 37, to include other corporations, and in this form was carried into the Revised Statutes as section 3262.

In 1883 (80 O. L. 23) this section was amended so as to include any corporation for profit after its original capital stock is fully paid up, and finally in 1886 (83 O. L. 134), it took its present form by including the words in question, "or the number of shares into which its capital stock is divided." It surely seems from this that the introduction of those words was only a short form of expressing that understanding which had been in the statute all through.

It is equally well settled that at common law, upon an increase of stock, the holders of the stock already issued, have the first option to take the increase.

Thompson on Corporations, Sec. 3642.

This last purpose of the law would be defeated, if an increase were permitted by simply increasing the size of shares. That is, take the proposed increase in this case. The proposition is to do that thing which was provided for in the act of 1872—give the increase entirely to the existing stockholders, and this could be done and well done in this form. This, however, is not permitted by the rule. The stockholder has only the option to take the additional shares allotted to him and is not compelled to do so. He has a right to say to the company that they shall sell the additional stock, and directly or indirectly give him the proceeds. That right is taken away if you simply swell each share of stock to four times its original size; otherwise, they would be compelled to take up the certificate he already has, issue a new certificate for the amount he desires, and other certificates for the residue, represented by his shares, to purchase if any were found. This is not contemplated in this proceeding. It might be possible to do it because if a man now has one share worth $25.00 you would issue him one-fourth of a share and sell the other three-fourths to some one else, and in ordinary cases, say where capital would enlarge from $25,000.00 to $35,000.00, or something like that, the aliquot parts into which the shares would be divided, would work out very curiously.

The desired interpretation of this statute finds no encouragement in contemporary construction, as, so far as known, it has never yet been done in Ohio, and presumably for the reasons given above that the law does not contemplate it.

Your inquiry is whether the increase of stock can be made in this manner. The answer is: Not according to law. You then inquire whether the enclosed certificate should be accepted and filed by this office. This is not a legal question, but an administrative one for your own determination. The law does not commit to your department the power to grant authority to make such increase any further than may be necessarily involved in your filing or refusing to file the certificate and certify a copy of it, as you are not required by any statutory provision to make any certificate as to the legality of it. Undoubtedly, however, if a certificate be presented to you, showing an increase in a manner now provided by law, you have authority to refuse to receive and file it.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE BY BROOK PARK VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 17, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"RE:—Bonds of Brook Park village school district in the amount of $10,000.00 issued for the purpose of completing school house in the said district, being fifty bonds of $200.00 each."

I have examined the transcript of proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Brook Park village school district; also copy of the bond and coupon form attached thereto; and I find the same regular and in conformity with the provisions of the General Code.

I am of the opinion that said bonds when drawn in accordance with the form submitted and executed by the proper officers will, upon delivery, constitute valid and binding obligations of the said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS—FUNDS FOR CURRENT EXPENSES MAY NOT BE RAISED BY BOND ISSUE UNDER SEC. 7625 G. C.

Bonds for school districts may not be voted and issued under section 7625 of the General Code for the purpose of raising additional money for current expenses in conducting the school, but the board of education of such school district may find under sections 5656 and 5658 of the General Code a valid indebtedness so incurred, and may make an additional levy for such purpose for a period not exceeding five years on a favorable vote of the electors of the school district under sections 5649-5 and 5649-5a, General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 17, 1917.

HON. GEORGE F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your favor of February 1, 1917, in which you ask my opinion on facts stated as follows:

> "There are a number of city, village and rural school districts in my county that are unable to keep even under the Smith taxation law. There is one district, notably the Ithaca village district, that will be unable to keep its schools in session for the period required by law unless some relief is given soon.
> "Borrowing money to extend a debt, as I understand the board may do, only causes the board more trouble in the future. I do not understand that section 7625 of the General Code would authorize a bond issue for the general running expenses of the school. The board has asked for sufficient money to run its schools, but this has been reduced by the board of equalization. It seems to me that if section 7625 as it now stands would not authorize a bond issue, it should be so amended as to include the general running expenses of the school. In other words, it does not seem right that the efficiency of the schools of a district should be curtailed, when if the people had a right to vote on the question, they might vote for their efficiency.
> "I wish you would take this matter up at your very earliest convenience and give me your opinion as to the relief these people can have under existing laws."

The question submitted by you is not specific and therefore does not admit of an answer as specific as might otherwise be the case.

You are correct in your assumption that section 7625 of the General Code has no application for the purpose of raising money for the general running expenses of the taxing district. This section has application only for the purpose of raising money by bond issues on a vote of the electors of the school district for purposes incident to the erection or improvement of school buildings.

In saying that the money levied by the board of education of this village school district to run its school has been reduced by the "Board of Equalization" I presume that you have reference to the county budget commission, and with respect to the action of this board it is obvious that it had no discretion to do otherwise than to see that the tax levy for school purposes in the school district was within the five mill limitation for school purposes, as provided in section 5649-3a of the General Code, and that the aggregate tax for all purposes was within the ten mill limitation of section 5649-2 of the General Code.

By compliance with the provisions of sections 5656 and 5658 of the General Code, provisions which I infer you have in mind, the board of education of this school district can fund any existing valid indebtedness created by the board in the conduct of the schools of the district, which the board may not be able to pay at maturity by reason of the limits of taxation to which the district is subject. Such indebtedness may be funded by the issue of bonds or notes, but as you have observed taxes levied for the purpose of retiring such bonds or notes and the interest thereon would likewise be subject to both the internal limitation of five mills for school purposes and the external limitation of ten mills for all purposes provided by the Smith one per cent. law.

You suggest that section 7625, General Code, should be amended so as to be available for the purpose of procuring additional money for current expenses of the school. As to this it may be observed that except that no special election is authorized therefor practically the same relief can be afforded by a vote of the electors of the school district under sections 5649-5 and 5649-5a of the General Code for a period of years not exceeding five. The vote therein provided for can be taken only at a regular November election, and if the proposition for an increased tax rate carries, taxes levied in the school district will be subject only to the limitation provided in section 5649-5b, that the combined maximum rate for all taxes shall not exceed fifteen mills. This limitation is, of course, the same as that applicable in the case of a bond issue on a vote of the electors of the school district under section 7625 of the General Code.

You do not in your communication state facts which suggest a discussion by me of the question whether or not the school district referred to by you is entitled to state aid under the statutory provisions providing for state aid for weak school districts. Such provision is made by sections 7595 and 7596 General Code to which you are referred.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BONDS OF SAN JUAN, PORTO RICO—NOT TAXABLE UNDER STATE LAW.

Bonds of the city of San Juan, Porto Rico, owned by residents of the state of Ohio, are not taxable under the laws of such state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 17, 1917.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your favor under date of February 8, 1917, asking my opinion on the following question:

"Are bonds of the city of San Juan, Porto Rico, taxable when owned by residents of Ohio?"

In March, 1898, congress passed an act applicable generally to the territories of the United States authorizing municipal corporations in such territories having a bona fide population of not less than 1,000 persons to issue bonds for sanitary and health purposes, construction of sewers, water works and the improvement of streets. (30 Statutes at Large 252.)

Later, in June, 1900, congress passed an act likewise applicable to territories generally authorizing municipal corporations in such territories having a bona fide population of not less than 10,000 persons to issue bonds for erecting a city building and purchasing ground for the same. (31 Statutes at Large 683.)

In the organic act of congress under date of April 12, 1900, providing for the government of the Island of Porto Rico (31 Statutes at Large 77), it is provided by section 7 of the said act that the citizens of Porto Rico and the citizens of the United States residing therein:

"Shall constitute a body politic under the name of 'the people of Porto Rico' with governmental powers as hereinafter conferred and with the power to sue and be sued as such."

Sections 32 and 38 of said organic act of congress read as follows (4 U. S. Compiled Stat. An. Sec. 3781):

"The legislative authority herein provided shall extend to all matters of a legislative character not locally inapplicable, including power to create, consolidate and reorganize the municipalities, so far as may be necessary, and to provide and repeal laws and ordinances therefor; and also the power to alter, amend, modify, and repeal any and all laws and ordinances of every character now in force in Porto Rico, or any municipality or district thereof, not inconsistent with the provisions hereof; provided, however, that all grants of franchises, rights and privileges or concessions of a public or quasi-public nature shall be made by the executive council, with the approval of the governor, and all franchises granted in Porto Rico shall be reported to congress, which hereby reserves the power to annul or modify the same.

"Sec. 38. No export duties shall be levied or collected on exports from Porto Rico; but taxes and assessments on property, and license fees for franchises, privileges and concessions may be imposed for the purposes of the insular and municipal governments, respectively, as may be provided and defined by act of the legislative assembly; and where necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues, bonds and other obligations may be issued by Porto Rico or any municipal government therein as may be provided by law to provide for expenditures authorized by law, and to protect the public credit, and to reimburse the United States for any moneys which have been or may be expended out of the emergency fund of the war department for the relief of the industrial conditions of Porto Rico caused by the hurricane of August eighth, eighteen hundred and ninety-four; Provided, however, that no public indebtedness of Porto Rico or of any municipality thereof shall be authorized or allowed in excess of seven per centum of the aggregate tax valuation of its property."

Pursuant to the legislative power granted by section 32, above quoted, the legislative assembly of Porto Rico has from time to time authorized municipalities therein to issue bonds for various purposes.

A diligent search fails to reveal any legislation by congress expressly exempting from taxation bonds issued by the Island of Porto Rico or by any of its municipalities. As against the right of taxation of such bonds by the state or under state laws, however, it seems clear that no act of congress declaring such exemption is necessary. The question has been conclusively settled by a decision of the supreme court of the United States in the case of Farmers' and Mechanics' Saving Bank of Minneapolis v. State of Minnesota, 232 U. S. 516, where it was held broadly that a state may not tax bonds issued by a municipality of a territory of the United States, and so held as to an attempt by the state of Minnesota to tax bonds issued by the municipalities of the Indian Territory and the Territory of Oklahoma held by banks in Minnesota. The court in this case, grounding its decision on the broad principle that states may not tax agencies of the federal government, held that territories of the United States are instrumentalities established by congress for the government of the people within their respective borders, with authority to subdelegate that governmental power to the municipal corporations therein, and that the latter, therefore, are likewise instrumentalities of the federal government. The court further held that a tax upon the exercise by such municipalities of the function of issuing bonds is a tax upon the operation of such municipal government, and that to tax the bonds as property in the hands of the holder is in effect a tax upon the right of the municipality to issue them.

The Island of Porto Rico is a territory of the United States, and as stated in the case above cited, it and the municipalities therein acting under delegated power are instrumentalities or agencies of the federal government, and for this reason, on authority of the case cited, I am of the opinion that the bonds of the city of San Juan, Porto Rico, are not taxable when owned by residents of Ohio.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION—BIDS FOR SAME MUST BE ACCEPTED WITHIN REASONABLE TIME—OTHERWISE NOT BINDING ON CONTRACTOR—HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER MAY ASSUME SUCH PART OF COST OF CONSTRUCTION AS HE DEEMS BEST.

1. When a person bids for the construction of a highway under instructions from the state highway department, and the contract for said construction is not let under said bidding for an unreasonable length of time, during which time materials and labor have greatly increased in price, said person so bidding ought not in good conscience and morals be held to his bid, and cannot be so held in law.

2. Where the state highway commissioner proceeds to construct an intercounty highway through a village under the provisions of section 1231-3 G. C., he can by agreement with said village, either original or supplemental, assume such part of the costs of said construction as he deems to be for the best interests of the village and the state at large.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 17, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication of February 7, 1917, asking my opinion upon the matters set out therein, was received. The communication reads as follows:

"Under date of August 30th, this department received bids for the improvement of sections 'H' and 'h' of intercounty highway No. 400 in Jackson county. This improvement lies partly in the village of Oak Hill, and partly in Jefferson township outside of the village of Oak Hill. The firm of Charles and George P. Mahl was lowest and best bidder.

"Bids were received on this work before all the proceedings had been taken by the village of Oak Hill for the financing of its proportion of the cost of the improvement. I am attaching hereto a transcript of the proceedings of the village in the matter. No certification has yet been filed with this department to the effect that the funds of the village are properly deposited and available for the contract.

"Since the date set for the completion of the improvement was December 15, 1916, and since the above firm wrote this department on December 14th, requesting that they be relieved of the above proposal, for the reason stated that all quotations had been withdrawn and the prices of labor and materials had advanced, this department wrote the council of the village of Oak Hill on January 12th, expressing its opinion that the justice of the matter favored releasing the bidder from its proposal, and requested the opinion of the council of the village in the matter.

"The members of the council of the village of Oak Hill have since called at this office, and expressed the fear that were the bidder released from its proposal, it would be impossible to secure another satisfactory bid at as low a price, and further, that the amount of bonds issued by the council would not provide for a substantial increase in the cost of the improvement.

"The state had proposed paying one-half of the cost of the improvement lying within the village of Oak Hill, and the entire cost, with the exception of the amount to be assessed abutting property, on the section to be improved in Jefferson township outside of the village of Oak Hill.

"This department can eliminate part of the proposed improvement outside of the village of Oak Hill, and use the funds which were to have been used on the portion omitted, for the payment of the extra cost of a new contract for the improvement of the section through the village of Oak Hill. In this case, the village of Oak Hill would pay as much of the cost of the improvement as their funds would permit, and the state will pay the balance of the cost.

"In view of the above facts, I respectfully request your opinion as to whether the bidder may legally be released from his proposal, and the work be readvertised for improvement on the above basis."

You also attach copies of resolutions and ordinances as enacted by the village council of Oak Hill.

This legislation is too voluminous to set out in full, but the facts in reference to your communication, as I understand it, are as follows:

1. Your department received bids on August 30, 1916, for the construction of a road running through the village of Oak Hill, Jackson county, O., and lying also partly in Jefferson township of said county.

2. The lowest and best bidder for the construction of said highway was the firm of Charles and George P. Mahl.

3. The work under said bid was to be completed by December 15, 1916, but owing to the fact that the village had not enacted the necessary legislation, the contract was not let nor the work begun upon said improvement up until December 14, 1916, on which date said firm of Charles and George P. Mahl requested that they be released from their bid or proposal, for the reason that material and labor had increased in price and that quotations made to said firm for material had been withdrawn, and that they would suffer a loss owing to the fact they were not enabled to begin said improvement in time to complete it by the date set out in said proposal,

Now, your first question is as to whether the firm ought to be held to their bid, or whether they should be released from the same. In a letter written to the village council of Oak Hill you express the opinion that said contractors ought to be released from their proposal. In this I concur. I do not feel that these contractors ought in good conscience or morals to be held to their bid or proposal. Neither do I believe they could be held in law. They were not responsible in any way for the delay in entering upon the construction of the work, but they were damaged on account of the delay over which they had no control, due to the rise in price of material and labor.

We come now to the second proposition that you submit. This proposition is based upon the following state of facts:

1. The highway to be improved lies partly in the village and partly outside the village.

2. The part lying outside the village was to be improved entirely at the expense of the state.

3. The state and the village were to bear equally the expense of constructing the part of the highway lying within the village.

4. In pursuance of the above, the village enacted the following legislation:

(a) On August 23, 1916, a resolution was adopted by the said village, providing for the necessary steps in reference to said improvement.

(b) On August 23, 1916, said village passed an ordinance consenting to have constructed the highway through the village by the state highway commissioner.

(c) On August 23, 1916, said village passed an ordinance approving the plans, specifications, profiles, cross sections and estimates as prepared and approved by the state highway commissioner, and provided that the village should pay one-half the estimated cost of said improvement.

(d) On November 14, 1916, said village passed an ordinance agreeing to proceed with said improvement; that one-half the total cost be assessed against abutting property owners; that assessments be paid in ten annual installments; that bonds be issued in anticipation of collecting said assessments, and that the village assume the cost of intersections, of appropriation proceedings and of damages awarded any owner of abutting lands.

(e) On November 14, 1916, said village passed an ordinance providing for issuing bonds to the amount of $13,500.00, for paying one-half of said improvement; that the proceeds from the sale of said bonds shall be applied to the payment of one-half the total cost and expenses of said improvement, as hereinbefore provided, and for no other purposes; and that the bonds issued should set out the purposes for which the money derived from the sale of the same should be used. Said ordinance further provided for a levy to take care of the sinking fund and interest of said bonds.

On December 5, 1916, said village proceeded to advertise that the bonds would be sold on January 10, 1917.

Now, in view of all the above, it is clear that the village has provided $13,500.00 from the sale of bonds, to take care of the one-half of the cost of the construction, provided said construction had been made under the estimate heretofore made by your department, but the village will not have sufficient funds to pay half under an increased estimate, which will be necessary, due to increased cost of labor and material, and the village further suggests that they are not in a position to raise any further money to take care of their share of an advanced estimate.

What is best to do now under all these circumstances? You have proceeded under section 1231-3 G. C., which reads as follows:

"Sec. 1231-3. The state highway commissioner may extend a proposed road improvement into or through a village when the consent of the council of said village has been first obtained, and such consent shall be evidenced by the proper legislation of the council of said village duly entered upon its records, and said council may assume and pay such proportion of the cost and expense of that part of the proposed improvement within said village as may be agreed upon between said state highway commissioner and said council. The state highway commissioner may also enter into an agreement with the council of said village to improve any part of the road within said village to a greater width than is contemplated by the proceedings for said improvement, and the state highway commissioner and the council of said village shall be governed as to all matters in connection with said improvement within said village by the statutes relating to road improvements through municipalities, by boards of county commissioners."

This section states the same course of procedure shall be followed by you as is followed by county commissioners in similar cases. The procedure of county commissioners is set forth in section 6949 to 6954, inclusive, G. C.

Section 6949 G. C. reads as follows:

"The board of county commissioners may extend a proposed road improvement into or through a municipality when the consent of the council of said municipality has been first obtained, and such consent shall be evidenced by the proper legislation of the council of said municipality entered upon its records, and said council may assume and pay such proportion of the cost and expense of that part of the proposed improvement within said municipality as may be agreed upon between said board of county commissioners and said council."

Section 6951 G. C. reads as follows:

"If the board of county commissioners approve the same, said board shall have prepared the necessary plans, profiles, cross-sections, specifications and estimates for the improvement of such portion of said road, to the width indicated in said resolution of such municipality. The estimates therefor shall set forth in detail the probable cost and expense of so much of said improvement as is made necessary by reason of the same being improved to said increased width. After the plans, specifications, profiles, cross-sections and estimates have been returned to the county commissioners by the county surveyor, and by them approved, the county commissioners shall cause a copy thereof to be filed with the clerk of said municipality. Said plans, profiles, specifications and estimates shall also state what proportion of said increased cost is made necessary by improving street intersections."

Section 6952 G. C. reads in part as follows:

"Upon receipt of such copy the council of such municipality may approve such plans, specifications, profiles, cross-sections and estimates, and such council may enter into an agreement with the board of county commissioners of such county as to the part of the estimated cost and expense of said improvement that is to be paid by said municipality on account of the increased width of the said improvement.

* * * * * * * * * *

"The council of said municipality may assess against abutting property owners all or any part of the cost and expense of said improvement to be paid by it under agreement with the county commissioners. Said assessments shall be made in one of the methods provided for in the case of street improvements wholly within the municipality, and under the exclusive control of the council."

Section 6953 G. C. provides as follows:

"The municipality shall pay to the county treasurer its estimated proportion of the cost of said improvement as fixed in said agreement between the council and the county commissioners, out of any funds available therefor, and in anticipation of the collection of assessments to be made against abutting property hereinbefore provided, and in anticipation of the collection of taxes levied for the purpose of providing for the payment of the municipality's share of the cost of such improvement, said municipality is authorized to sell its bonds under the same conditions and restrictions imposed by law in the sale of bonds for street improvement under the exclusive jurisdiction and control of the council of a municipality."

It will be noticed in the legislation had by the said village that all the provisions of these statutes have been complied with.

Section 6954 G. C. provides that after this is done the county commissioners shall thereupon receive bids and let the contract for improving such portion of said road as lies within the municipality, either in connection with the remainder of said improvement or separate, as such board of commissioners may determine. This provision governs you also.

So that, in view of the facts and the law, it is my opinion that you should simply make a new estimate of the cost of the construction of that part of the highway lying within the village. It is my opinion that this new estimate will not need to be submitted to the village for its approval, inasmuch as the village has already approved the estimate so far as the part of the cost of the improvement which it has to bear. So that after the new estimate is made you would simply enter into a supplemental agreement with the village, in which agreement the village would assume that part of the cost of the improvement which it had already agreed to assume, and the state, through your department, would agree to assume all the cost over and above that assumed by the village. You would then be in position to accept new bids for the construction of the part of the work located in the village. The auditor of the village should certify that the funds are in the village treasury.

This opinion is given on the theory that your department has entered into no contract or agreement with the county commissioners or township trustees in reference to the part of the highway lying outside of the village. This is evidently the case, for the reason that you set out in your communication that the state was to bear all the cost of the improvement lying outside the village.

In passing I would like to call attention to the latter part of section 6952 G. C., which provides the manner in which the village shall proceed to make assessments against the abutting property owners. While this is not involved in your query, yet it might be well for your department to call the attention of the village to this matter, so that it would also proceed in the matter according to law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—TO ISSUE BONDS FOR SCHOOL IMPROVEMENT MUST DO SO UNDER SEC. 7630 G. C.—MUST FIND THAT FUNDS AT ITS DISPOSAL, OR THAT CAN BE RAISED UNDER SECS. 7629 AND 7630, ARE INSUFFICIENT—DISAPPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF VERMILLION VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT, ERIE CO., OHIO.

Proceedings by a board of education of a school district to issue bonds under the provisions of section 7630-1 General Code, for the purpose of installing an improvement in a school building ordered by the department of workshops and factories of the industrial commission of Ohio, must conform with the provisions of section 7625 General Code, and before the question of a bond issue for said purpose is submitted to the electors of the school district the board of education must affirmatively find that the funds at its disposal or that can be raised under the provisions of sections 7629 and 7630 are insufficient for the purpose.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 20, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"RE:—Bonds of Vermillion village school district, Erie county, Ohio, in the sum of $8,000.00 for the purpose of providing funds to pay the cost of purchasing and installing a new heating system in the school building of said school district."

The transcript furnished to me by the clerk of Vermilion school district shows that the resolution of the board of education submitting to the electors of the school district the question of issuing said bonds in the amount stated is in words and figures as follows:

"Be it resolved, by the board of education of Vermilion village school district, Erie county, Ohio, that in the opinion of said board, it is expedient and necessary, for the protection of the health and welfare of the pupils attending the only school in said village school district, to construct a new heating system in the said school building in said village school district and also by virtue of the industrial commission of Ohio, directing that a new heating system be erected in said school building and that in the furtherance of the same, the necessary legal procedure be taken to bring about a special election in said village school district on November 7, 1916,

"That the question of the issuing of bonds in the amount of eight thousand dollars ($8,000.00), for the purchase and erection of said heating plant in said school building, be submitted to the qualified electors of said Vermilion village school district.

"The clerk of this board is hereby directed to file a certified copy of this resolution with the deputy state supervisors of elections of Erie county, Ohio, not less than ten days before the time of said election and the deputy state supervisors of elections, shall cause to be prepared and furnished ballots for said election."

From the resolution it appears that the contemplated improvement for which the bonds were issued was directed by the industrial commission of Ohio, and this fact suggests the consideration of section 7630-1 of the General Code, which reads as follows:

"If a school house is wholly or partly destroyed by fire, or other casualty, or if the use of any school house for its intended purpose is prohibited by any order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and the board of education of the school district is without sufficient funds applicable to the purpose, with which to rebuild or repair such school house or to construct a new school house for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district, and it is not practicable to secure such funds under any of the six preceding sections because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district, such board of education may, subject to the provisions of sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven, and upon the approval of the electors in the manner provided by sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-five and seventy-six hundred and twenty-six issue bonds for the amount required for such purpose. For the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds and on bonds heretofore issued for the purposes herein mentioned and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, such board of education shall annually levy a tax as provided by law."

It will be noted from the provisions of section 7630-1 of the General Code that proceedings for the issue of bonds under this section are subject to the provisions of sections 7625, 7626 and 7627, General Code, it appearing further that the only purpose of the provisions of section 7630-1 is to provide for a bond issue in the cases therein provided, which shall not be subject to the tax limitation applicable to bonds issued pursuant to the provisions of sections 7625 and 7629 of the General Code.

Section 7625 of the General Code, referred to in section 7630-1 G. C., as applicable to bond issues under said section, provides as follows:

"When the board of education of any school district determines that for the proper accommodation of the schools of such district it is necessary to purchase a site or sites to erect a school house or houses, to complete a partially built school house, to enlarge, repair, or furnish a school house or to purchase real estate for play ground for children, or to do any or all of such things, that the funds at its disposal or that can be raised under the provisions of sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-nine and seventy-six hundred and thirty, are not sufficient to accomplish the purpose and that a bond issue is necessary, the board shall make an estimate of the probable amount of money required for such purpose or purposes and at a general election or special election called for that purpose, submit to the electors of the district the question of the issuing of bonds for the amount so estimated. Notices of the election required herein shall be given in the manner provided by law for school elections."

It appears from the provisions of this section that before the question of a bond issue for any purpose therein mentioned can be submitted by the board of education to the electors of a school district it must appear that the funds at the disposal of the board or that can be raised under the provisions of sections 7629 and 7630 are not sufficient to accomplish the purpose for which the proposed bond issue is contemplated.

Section 7629 of the General Code provides that the board of education may of itself issue bonds to improve the public school property subject to the provision that no greater amount of the bonds can be issued in any year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills for the year next preceding such issue.

In submitting to the electors of the school district under section 7625 the question of a bond issue for any purpose therein provided for, I know of no way in which the fact that the funds at the disposal of the board or which can be raised under the provisions of section 7629 are not sufficient for the purpose for which the bonds are to be issued can be evidenced otherwise than by a finding by the board of education itself, which finding should be made by the board before the submission of the question of a bond issue to the electors and regularly should be incorporated in the resolution providing for the submission of the question of such bond issue to the electors of the school district.

It will be noted that the resolution here in question does not contain any such finding by the board of education, nor does it appear that it was made by the board at any time prior to the submission of the question of bond issue to the electors of the school district, and for this reason I am of the opinion that the issue of the bonds in question has not been made in accordance with the laws of the state of Ohio, and that you should not purchase the same.

I also note in an examination of the transcript that the canvass of votes on the question of this bond issue was made by the board on November 13, 1916, which date was the first Monday after the election; whereas section 5120 of the General Code specifically provides that in school elections the board of education shall canvass the returns of such election at a meeting to be held on the second Monday after election. It is probable that the provisions of this section with reference to the time when the canvass of votes should be made by the board are directory rather than mandatory, and I am not disposed to advise you to reject the bonds on this ground.

I may say, in conclusion, that the transcript fails to disclose the tax duplicate of the valuation of real and personal property in the school district, the existing rate, the fact whether or not there is any outstanding bonded indebtedness, whether or not the school district has a board of sinking fund commissioners, and a number of other facts which should be in the transcript. These facts could undoubtedly be afforded by a supplemental transcript to be furnished by the clerk of the board of education of the school district, but inasmuch as the defect in the proceedings first above mentioned is sufficient to invalidate the bonds here in question, I herewith enclose the transcript submitted to me.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—UNLAWFUL FOR SAID OFFICIAL TO SELL MAPS TO COMMISSIONERS—COMMISSIONERS CANNOT PAY HIM ADDITIONAL SALARY THAN PROVIDED BY LAW AND PAYMENTS MAY BE RECOVERED—MAPS MADE BY COUNTY SURVEYOR FOR USE OF COUNTY—CANNOT BE RECOVERED BY HIM UPON RETURN OF MONEY PAID THEREFOR.

It is unlawful for a county surveyor to sell maps or other supplies to the county, and unlawful for the county commissioners to contract with him to pay him additional fees and compensation over and above those provided by law for the performance of any of his official duties, and any such payments may be recovered back.

Maps made by the county surveyor for the use of the county, upon which he expends time for which he received his regular compensation, are the property of the county, and if he sells maps to the county which are his own private property, he cannot, upon returning the purchase price, recover back such maps.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 21, 1917.

HON. DONALD F. MELHORN, Prosecuting Attorney, Kenton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 8, 1917, you request an opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "On November 29, 1916, I addressed a letter to Hon. E. C. Turner, attorney-general of Ohio, asking for an opinion relative to the finding of Mr. Edwin E. Hall, state examiner, against Mr. L. R. Anspach, former surveyor of Hardin county. On December 18, 1916, Mr. Turner rendered his opinion to me (No. 2117), sustaining the finding in question.
> "This opinion, while fully responsive to the precise questions submitted, does not touch upon this further circumstance which I now desire to call your attention to. If, agreeably to the examiner's ruling, Mr. Anspach pays back into the county treasury the $375.00 drawn by him for ditch maps, he will doubtless demand, and will be entitled to receive back, said ditch maps. In such case, the county surveyor's office will be deprived of the use of these maps, which, I am informed, are of great utility in that office.
> "Granting that the county commissioners have no authority to contract with the county surveyor for the purchase of such maps, have the commissioners the right to buy them from a person holding no official relation to the county?"

It also appears from the examiner's report shown in the opinion of Mr. Turner referred to in your inquiry, that during the whole period of time in which the surveyor was engaged in making these maps, he was also employed as such officer for the county and receiving his regular per diem of $5.00 for each working day, and in addition thereto was compensated at the rate of $25.00 per month as tax map draughtsman, under authority of the statutes governing the same; so that while the contract in form purports to be one for supplies, yet in reality and essentially it was a mere additional contract in reference to the performance of service by the incumbent of the office, for which he was fully paid by the compensation allowed by law for his services as such officer, which he received.

We will consider the matter, however, in both aspects as a contract for supplies to be furnished the county, which it purports upon its face to be, and as a contract for the performance of services by the county surveyor for the county. It may be remarked that if these maps were such as the county had a right to purchase (which seems to be disputed in the former opinion referred to), then the service in making them was a duty of the county surveyor especially required by the statute to be done by him and his deputies. (G. C. 2792.)

Your inquiry states and assumes as a fact a proposition with which I cannot agree, that is, when Mr. Anspach pays back into the county treasury the $375.00 drawn by him for ditch maps he will be entitled to receive back said ditch maps. The county commissioners of Hardin county, on the 28th day of December, 1914, had authority to purchase for a county surveyor's office any suitable articles which the board of commissioners might determine necessary for said office. Said authority is granted by and under the provisions of General Code section 2786, which reads in part as follows:

> "The county surveyor shall keep his office at the county seat in such room or rooms as are provided by the county commissioners, which shall be furnished with all necessary cases and other suitable articles, at the expense of the county. Such office shall also be furnished with all tools, instruments, books, blanks and stationery necessary for the proper discharge of the official duties of the county surveyor. The cost and expense of such equipment shall be allowed and paid from the general fund of the county upon the approval of the county commissioners. * * *"

But, said board of commissioners were not authorized to enter into a contract for the purchase of said suitable supplies with a county official, for General Code section 12910 provides in part:

> "Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election * * * is interested in a contract for the purchase of * * * supplies * * * for the use of the county, * * * with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

The contract between the board of county commissioners and the county surveyor was an illegal one and the money which was paid from the county treasury, under the terms of such illegal contract, should be recovered upon the finding of the state inspector by and under authority of section 286 of the General Code of Ohio. The property being in the possession of the county, the surveyor could not recover same, for General Code section 2789 provides in part that:

> "On going out of office, the county surveyor shall deliver to his successor all books, papers and other property and effects belonging to his office. * * *" and the illegal contract having been completely executed by delivery on the one part and payment on the other, neither party may maintain an action against the other, either for a return of the money (in the absence of statute, which in this case is covered by section 286 G. C.) or for the specific property.

In Insurance Company v. Hull, 51 O. S., 270, the following language is used:

> "The rule that a party who would rescind a contract must restore what he has received under it, does not apply to contracts founded on an illegal consideration, and are void for that reason."

In Hooker et al v. DePalos et al, 28 O. S., p. 251, the following language is used on page 258:

> "Plaintiffs below in their petition base their right of recovery on the ground that the defendants below had disabled themselves to perform the contract, by conveying the lands sold to them to other parties, in consequence of which they were justified in regarding the contract as rescinded, if they chose to do so, and in demanding that they should be placed in statu quo, by a return of the money paid. This alleged state of facts would, without doubt, if proved, have entitled the plaintiffs below to recover, provided the contract had been a legal one, and as such binding upon the parties. But it was wholly illegal, and bound neither of them. The non-performance of it by either of the parties gave no right of action to the other. * * *"
> "The maxim 'Ex turpi causa, non oritur actio,' is an old and familiar one, resting on the clearest principles of public policy, and never to be ignored. In accordance with this maxim, nothing is better settled than that, in regard to contracts which are entered into for fraudulent or illegal purposes, the law will aid neither party to enforce them whilst they remain executory, either in whole or in part, nor, when executed, will it aid either party to place himself in statu quo by a rescission, but will, in both cases, leave the parties where it finds them."

Recovery, then, is made upon the finding of the inspector under and by virtue of the provision of the section of the General Code above named, to wit: General Code section 286, and the surveyor having received money out of the county treasury, other than that specifically provided by law, is liable under the statute to an action upon his bond and recovery can be had for the amount wrongfully received.

State v. Kelly, 25 O. S. 421.

If, however, the original contract be considered for services only, recovery of the illegal payments can still be made under the authorities above cited, and such recovery would give no right of action to the ex-surveyor to recover the property from the county. The ex-surveyor was employed by the county for each working day of the time between the letting of the contract and the payment of the money, at the rate of $5.00 per day for his services on other matters. Whatever services he performed during that time should be for the benefit of the county. Good morals and public policy both require faithful services on behalf of all public officials. The only thing the county received from him outside of the articles furnished was his services and he was in duty bound to render these.

Answering your question, then, fully together with all that your inquiry might suggest, you are advised that this was an illegal payment and should be recovered back, illegal if it be considered for supplies, by reason of the law preventing the officers furnishing them to the county. If it be considered service, illegal because it is additional pay and perquisite over and above his salary, which he has no right to receive. That, really being service performed by him for pay for the county, the maps belong to the county; or if it were supplies illegally sold by him to the county, he would have no recourse to get them back again and the maps should be kept in the surveyor's office as public property.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO REFORMATORY FOR WOMEN—WOMEN MUST BE SENTENCED THERETO WHEN SENTENCE WILL RESULT IN IMPRISONMENT FOR MORE THAN THIRTY DAYS—VIOLATORS OF CITY ORDINANCE NOT TO BE SENTENCED THERETO.

A woman convicted of a misdemeanor must be sentenced to the Ohio reformatory for women when such sentence will result in imprisonment for more than thirty days and in such cases where a prisoner is remanded for non-payment of fines and costs, she must be remanded to the Ohio reformatory for women instead of to a jail, workhouse or other such institution, when the imprisonment so caused will be in excess of thirty days.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1917.

HON. PERRY SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 27, 1917, as follows:

"M. G. was sentenced by the court of common pleas to 30 days in the workhouse and a fine of $25.00 and costs of $9.76, making a total of $34.76. It will take 88 days in all to work this fine and costs out. I. L. was sentenced to the workhouse from the police court to pay a fine of $5.00 and costs $3.90, total $8.90, and a fine of $20.00, costs $3.90, total $23.90, in all $32.80, which amounts to 65 days at 60 cents a day. I desire to know from you if it is proper for the superintendent of the workhouse of the city of Zanesville, county of Muskingum, to accept these women.

"Under section 2148-7 of the General Code, as amended in 105-106 Ohio Laws, why should they not have been sentenced to Marysville as contemplated by this law. Please give me an answer by return mail as these parties are now confined in the workhouse. We do not desire to violate this law, but my contention and construction of the law is as follows:

"So long as the sentence of the court is no more than 30 days, they are not violating this law. Am I right or wrong in my interpretation of the statute?"

Section 2148-1 G. C. reads:

"The Ohio reformatory for women shall be used for the detention of all females over sixteen years of age, convicted of a felony, misdemeanor, or delinquency as hereinafter provided, and for the detention of such female prisoners as shall be transferred thereto from the Ohio penitentiary and the girls' industrial school as hereinafter provided.

Section 2148-7 reads:

"After the issuance of the first proclamation hereinbefore referred to, it shall be unlawful to sentence any female convicted of a felony to be confined in either the Ohio penitentiary or a jail, workhouse, house of correction or other correctional or penal institution, and after the issuance of the second proclamation it shall be unlawful to sentence any female convicted of a misdemeanor or delinquency to be confined in any such place, except in both cases the reformatory herein provided for, the girls' industrial school or other institution for juvenile delinquency, unless such person is over sixteen years of age and has been sentenced for less than thirty days, or is remanded to jail in default of payment of either fine or costs or both, which will cause imprisonment for less than thirty days, provided that this section shall not apply to imprisonment for contempt of court."

The governor issued the second proclamation above referred to on December 27, 1916.

This department has just rendered an opinion to Hon. D. H. Peoples, prosecuting attorney, Pomeroy, Ohio, to the effect that a justice of the peace in misdemeanor cases in which he has final jurisdiction may sentence a woman prisoner to the Ohio reformatory for women.

In reply to your inquiry I beg to state that I am of the opinion that the provisions of section 2148-7 make it mandatory upon the sentencing court or magistrate to sentence a woman convicted of a misdemeanor to the Ohio reformatory for women instead of to the workhouse, jail or other such institution when such a sentence so impqsed is in excess of thirty days, and that when in such misdemeanor cases a woman is remanded for non-payment of costs, she must be remanded to the Ohio reformatory for women intead of to a jail, workhouse or other such institution, when the imprisonment so caused will be in excess of thirty days.

I note, however, that one of the women referred to in your letter was sentenced to the workhouse from the police court of Zanesville, and the possibility that she may have been sentenced for a violation of a city ordinance induces me to take up a question here concerning which official inquiry has been made of this department frequently within the last week. This question is whether or not a female person convicted of a violation of a city ordinance can be committed to the Ohio reformatory for women.

Section 12372 G. C. defines "misdemeanor" as follows:

"Offenses which may be punished by death, or by imprisonment in the penitentiary, are felonies; all other offenses are misdemeanors."

Section 2148-1 G. C. provides in part:

"The Ohio reformatory for women shall be used for the detention of all females over sixteen years of age, convicted of a felony, misdemeanor, or delinquency" and section 2148-7 G. C. makes it unlawful to sentence prisoners convicted of these classes of crimes to the workhouse or jail where the sentence is in excess of thirty days. The question then is, does the word "misdemeanor" as used in these sections include violations of municipal ordinances.

Bouvier defines misdemeanors as follows:

> "The word is generally used in contradistinction to felony; misdemeanors comprehending all indictable offenses which do not amount to a felony, as perjury, battery, libels, conspiracy and public nuisances, but not including a multitude of offenses over which magistrates have an exclusive summary jurisdiction, for a brief designation of which our legal nomenclature is at fault."

State v. McConnell, 70 N. H., 158, gives the following definition:

> "A crime or misdemeanor is an act committed in violation of a public law, either forbidding or commanding it, which the state punishes in criminal proceedings in its own name."

Also Adams Express Company v. State, 161 Ind. 328.

In the case of Pearson v. Wimbish, 124 Ga. 709, the very question at issue here was passed upon. In that case the penal code of the state read in part:

> "Crimes or misdemeanors shall consist of a violation of a public law, in the commission of which there shall be a union or joint operation of act and intention or criminal negligence."

And also provided:

> "Every crime, other than a felony, as therein defined, is a misdemeanor."

The court in construing these provisions said:

> "This definition appertains to the subject matter of the penal code wherein only offenses against the public laws of the state are considered. Municipal offenses are not treated as a violation of public laws, but as any fractions of the legal laws of the municipality which have no place in the penal code of the state."

The holding pointed to by these authorities is strengthened by the fact that the state institutions are maintained by the state at state expense and were not intended to care for local municipal charges.

In view of the authorities herein cited, I am of the opinion that women convicted of violations of city or local ordinances cannot be sentenced to the Ohio reformatory for women at Marysville.

Since you have not stated what crimes the women referred to have been convicted of, I will not pass upon their individual cases in this opinion, but leave the application of the rules herein laid down to their cases for yourself.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO PENITENTIARY—PAROLE OF LIFE PRISONER WHOSE TERM HAS BEEN COMMUTED TO 20 YEARS BY BOARD OF MANAGERS VOID—VIOLATION OF SUCH PAROLE DOES NOT FORFEIT "GOOD TIME" NOR PAROLE DEPOSIT.

A prisoner was sentenced to the Ohio penitentiary in July, 1904, to serve a life term for murder in the second degree. The sentence was commuted by the governor in April, 1908, to a term of 20 years, and in August, 1908, he was paroled by the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary, and under this rule was required to deposit $25.00 at the time of the parole. In December, 1908, the board of managers revoked the prisoner's parole and declared the parole deposit forfeited. At the time of his parole the prisoner had served less than five years in the penitentiary, whereas the statute provided that a prisoner serving the sentence for murder in the first or second degree should not be eligible for parole until he had served twenty-five years.

HELD: That the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary had no authority to parole this prisoner, nor to require the parole deposit, and they therefore had no authority to deduct "good time" from the prisoner for violation of parole under section 2174 G. C., nor to declare the parole deposit forfeited for such violation. The prisoner should be released at the expiration of his twenty-year term as though never paroled, and the $25.00 parole deposit should be refunded to him.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1917.

HON. F. E. THOMAS, Warden, Ohio Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 8, 1917, as follows:

"I respectfully request your opinion based on the following facts, as to the status of the case of Harry Mapleson, serial No. 35623, and advice as to whether Mapleson should have the benefit of diminution of sentence so as to release him on February 28, 1917.

"Mapleson was tried at the April, 1904, term of court in Cuyahoga county on an indictment charging murder in the first degree. His trial resulted in a disagreement and before his second hearing began Mapleson volunteered a plea of guilty to murder in the second degree, and was sentenced to life imprisonment in this institution, which sentence he began on July 1, 1904.

"On April 29, 1908, Mapleson's life term was commuted to a term of 20 years, which, with the diminution of sentence allowed by law, expires on February 28, 1917.

"On August 13, 1908, the then board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary released Mapleson on parole.

"Mapleson was declared a parole violator and returned to the Ohio penitentiary on November 13, 1908, and on December 10, 1908, the board of managers revoked Mapleson's parole, but held that he should forfeit no "good time." This is recorded in the minutes of the proceedings of the board of managers in session on December 10, 1908, in the following entry:

"'Harry Mapleson, serial No. 35623, parole No. 1860, paroled August 13, 1908, was returned to prison November 13, 1908, by Field Officer B. S. Ogle for violation of his parole. On account of the long time he has yet to serve, on motion, his parole was revoked, his parole deposit forfeited, but no time taken, Warden's recommendation, which was unanimously concurred in.'

"At the time Mapleson was paroled the statutes prescribed that a prisoner serving life for murder in the second degree was not eligible to parole until he had served twenty-five full years of imprisonment. Mapleson had served a little more than four years when released on parole.

"Section 2174 of the General Code, also Opinions of the Attorney-General (No. 567, July 24, 1912, to the warden of the Ohio penitentiary, and No. 574, August 8, 1912, to the Ohio board of administration) hold that a person who violates the conditions of his parole, and whose parole is revoked, must serve the unexpired period of the maximum term of his imprisonment, with no "good time" allowance.

"Mapleson has in his possession a "Notice of Action by Board," issued to him by the former board of managers, advising him that no 'good time' was declared forfeited because of his violation and revocation of parole. Similar entries also appear on the records of the Ohio penitentiary, which, if held to be proper, will release Mapleson on February 28, 1917.

"I wish, therefore, that you would advise me whether Mapleson should have the benefit of the diminution of sentence and the action of the former board of managers be discharged at the expiration of the original 'short time' sentence, February 28, 1917."

Sections 2164, 2169 and 2174 of the General Code read as follows:

"Section 2164. The board of managers may deduct from a prisoner a part or all of the good time gained, for a violation of the rules of discipline, or a want of fidelity and care in the performance of work, according to the aggravated nature or the frequency of the offense. The board may review the conduct record of a prisoner. If a violation of the rules and discipline was committed through ignorance or circumstances beyond his control or abuse by an officer, the managers may restore to the prisoner the time lost by such violations."

"Section 2169. The board of managers shall establish rules and regulations by which a prisoner under sentence other than for murder in the first or second degree, having served the minimum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted, and not previously convicted of felony or not having served a term in a penal institution, or a prisoner under sentence for murder in the first or second degree, having served under such sentence twenty-five full years, may be allowed to go upon parole outside the buildings and enclosures of the penitentiary. Full power to enforce such rules and regulations is hereby conferred upon the board, but the concurrence of every member shall be necessary for the parole of a prisoner."

"Section 2174. A prisoner violating the conditions of his parole or conditional release, having been entered in the proceedings of the board of managers and declared to be delinquent shall thereafter be treated as an escaped prisoner owing service to the state, and, when arrested, shall serve the unexpired period of the maximum term of his imprisonment. The time from the date of his declared delinquency to the date of his arrest shall not be counted as a part of time served."

It will not be necessary in this opinion to discuss the question as to whether or not the time forfeited under section 2174 by a prisoner for violation of parole, can be restored to him by the board of managers (now the board of administration) under section 2164, for the reason that the answer to your question will be based on other facts stated in your letter.

Section 2169 G. C., above quoted, provided that "the board of managers shall establish rules and regulations by which a prisoner under sentence other than for murder in the first or second degree * * * or a person under sentence for murder in the first or second degree having served under such sentence twenty-five full years" may be paroled.

Your letter shows that the prisoner M. was tried in April, 1904, and sentenced at the April, 1904, term of court, and paroled in August, 1908.

This section as above quoted, though amended since, was in force as quoted at that time. M. was sentenced to the Ohio penitentiary to serve a life term for murder in the second degree, and the fact that on April 28, 1908, his life term was commuted by the governor to twenty years in no way affected the question of his eligibility for parole.

See Opinions of the Attorney-General, 1912, volume 2, page 1923.

It seems very clear, therefore, that the board of managers at the time they paroled prisoner M., or rather when they attempted to parole him, had no authority to do so, and their action was, therefore, null and void. The same thing is true concerning their action in declaring his parole revoked on December 10, 1908. In other words, they really never paroled him or revoked his parole, and he, therefore, neither lost nor gained any good time by either attempt of the board to do these things. This being the case he is entitled to his release when his twenty-year sentence, minus the good time gained under section 2163, is served.

The parole statute provides that "the time from the date of his declared delinquency to the date of his arrest, shall not be counted as a part of the time served, but inasmuch as he was never really paroled, and never really became delinquent as a parole violator, he could not be charged with this loss of good time. However, I am informed that in his case the board declared him delinquent and revoked his parole at the same time that he was arrested and returned to the prison, so that this question will not, in his case, affect the date of release.

At the time of his parole the rules of the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary provided that a prisoner must deposit with the warden of the penitentiary the sum of $25.00 at the time of his parole, and that in the event the board should later find it necessary to revoke his parole they should declare the deposit of $25.00 forfeited. This you inform me they did in the case of the prisoner referred to in your request. Inasmuch as the board had no authority to parole him, they had no authority to require him to make this deposit, and their action in doing so, and in later declaring the deposit forfeited was null and void.

It might be argued that even though the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary had no authority to parole this prisoner, nor to take away lost time from him because of violation of parole, nevertheless it was in their power to find him guilty of misconduct for violation of prison rules under section 2164 G. C., and that the prisoner M. could lose his good time under this section. If this be true, and it be held that the old board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary had authority to take this time from M., not for violation of parole, but for violation of prison rules, even then their later action of December 10, 1908, in restoring his time would bind them and leave the prisoner's date of release unaffected.

For these reasons I am of the opinion that the prisoner you refer to should be released on February 28, 1917, when you state the twenty-year sentence will be completed, and I am also of the opinion that the $25.00 which the state took from him as a parole deposit should be returned to him.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

RESOLUTION—BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS PROVIDING FOR ISSUANCE OF BONDS DOES NOT THEREBY ISSUE BONDS—PROVISION IN SAID RESOLUTION REQUIRING LEVY ON TAXABLE PROPERTY FOR INTEREST AND SINKING FUND SUFFICIENT PRIOR TO ISSUANCE OF SAID BONDS—MONEY COMING INTO SINKING FUND FROM OTHER SOURCES THAN TAX LEVY—MAY BE USED TO PAY INTEREST ON SAID BONDS.

A resolution by the board of county commissioners providing for the issuance of bonds under section 1223 of the General Code does not thereby issue said bonds, and therefore a provision in said resolution requiring an annual levy on the taxable property of the county in a sum sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity is a provision for such purpose "prior to the issuance of such bonds" within the meaning of said section.

Moneys legally coming into a county debt or sinking fund with respect to such bond issues from sources other than the proceeds of the annual tax levy required by said resolution may be used in paying interest accruing on said bonds after issue.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1917.

HON. BEN A. BICKLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your favor under date of February 17th, enclosing copy of the resolutions adopted on January 3, 1917, by the board of county commissioners of your county providing for bond issues in the sum of $18,000.00, $45,000.00 and $55,000.00 respectively, to apply on the cost of a number of intercounty highway improvements which have been projected in your county. In your communication you ask my opinion as to the validity of this bond issue, but inasmuch as I have not the complete transcript of the proceedings relating to these proposed improvements I shall, as requested by you, address myself to one question only, to wit: that raised by the auditor of your county, as to which you say:

> "Objection has been made by Quincy A. Davis, county auditor, for the reason that he claims that the county commissioners have not provided, prior to the issuing of bonds for levying and collecting annually a tax upon all taxable property of the county to provide a sum sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity. He claims that no such provision has been made and that there will be no money to pay the interest on the bonds if issued, and for said reason he has intimated he will not sign the said bonds."

As before noted, these three bond issues are provided for in the same resolution. I do not understand that a question has been raised as to this procedure, and on the authority of the case of Heffner v. Toledo, 75 O. S. 413, it would seem that such procedure is entirely regular so far as this question is concerned.

As I understand from the information imparted by you on the occasion of your visit to this office a few days ago, the proposed intercounty highway improvements were projected by application made to the state highway commissioner by the commissioners of your county, and that the respective bond issues provided for in the resolution above mentioned covered the shares of the cost and expense of such improvement to be ultimately borne by the county and the owners of property abutting upon said respective improvements, and that the several townships in which these proposed improvements are located are not to pay any part of the cost and expense of said improvements, but the county commissioners acting, as I presume, under the provisions of section 1217 of the General Code have as to each of said improvements assumed the part of such cost and expense as would otherwise be apportioned to said respective townships under the provisions of section 1214 of the General Code.

I do not deem it necessary to discuss or even note all of the various statutory provisions relating to the improvement of intercounty highways under chapter 8 of the Cass Road Law.

Section 1218 of the General Code provides that where the improvement of an intercounty highway is projected on the application of the county commissioners for state aid in such an improvement, no contract shall be let by the state highway commissioner unless the county commissioners of the county in which the improvement is located shall have made a written agreement to assume in the first instance that part of the cost and expense of the said improvement over and above the amount to be paid by the state; while section 1212 of the General Code provides in such case that the proportion of the cost and expense of constructing such improvement to be paid by the township, county and property owners shall be paid by the treasurer of the county in which the highway is located upon the warrant of the county auditor issued upon the requisition of the state highway commissioner.

These provisions, as well as those of section 1223 of the General Code, hereinafter noted, are full warrant for the conclusion that the state in such case has a right to look to the county for such part of the cost and expense of the improvement as is not to be borne by the state itself.

Section 1223 of the General Code reads as follows:

> "The county commissioners, in anticipation of the collection of such taxes or assessments, and whenever in their judgment it is advisable, are hereby authorized to sell the bonds of any such county in which such construction, improvement or repair is to be made to an amount necessary to pay the respective shares of the county, township or townships, and the lands assessed for such improvement, but the aggregate amount of such bonds issued shall not be in excess of one per cent of the tax duplicate of such county. Such bonds shall state for what purpose issued and bear interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and in such amounts as to mature in not more than five years after their issue, as the county commissioners shall determine. Prior to the issuance of such bonds the county commissioners shall provide for levying and collecting annually a tax upon all taxable property of the county to provide a sum sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity. The proceeds of such bonds shall be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement or repair of the highway for which the bonds are issued. If bids are made for a portion of the proposed issue, the commissioners may accept a combination of bids, if by so doing the bonds will produce the best price to the county, and at the request of the purchaser the bonds may be issued in denominations of one hundred dollars or multiple thereof, notwithstanding a provision of the resolution providing for their issue."

Though, as before noted, the respective bond issues provided for by the resolution adopted by the commissioners of your county covered not only the share of the cost and expense of the improvement of these respective improvements to be ultimately borne by the county, but the share of the cost and expense to be borne by the owners of the property abutting on said improvements as well, yet by virtue of the provisions of section 5630-1 of the General Code said bonds, when issued, are to be deemed county obligations in the full and complete sense of the word. I presume that the question made by the auditor of your county arises by reason of the following provision in section 1223:

"Prior to the issuance of such bonds the county commissioners shall provide for the levying and collecting annually a tax on all taxable property of the county to provide a sum sufficient to pay interest on such bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity."

This provision, quite identical to that found in section 6929 of the General Code relating to the issue of bonds by the county commissioners for the construction of county road improvements under section 6 of the Cass Road Law, is not, as I view it, to be interpreted as making a requirement with respect to the provision for the issue of bonds under section 1223 in addition to that required by section 11 of article XII of the State Constitution, which reads as follows:

"No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

Construing this provision of the state constitution, the court, in the case of Linke v. Karb, 89 O. S. 326, in its opinion at page 339 of the report, says:

"This, of course, does not require the immediate levying of a tax certain, either in the amount or rate, for the provision of this amendment is that this tax shall be levied annually and collected annually, but it does not mean that, at the time the issue of bonds is authorized, the taxing authorities proposing to issue such bonds shall provide that a levy shall be made each year thereafter during the term of the bonds in an amount sufficient to pay the interest thereon and retire the bonds, and such provision, so made at the time the bonds are authorized, shall be binding and obligatory upon these taxing officers of that political subdivision and their successors in office until the purpose of such levy shall have been fully accomplished by the retirement of the bonds so issued. Such a provision fills the full purpose of this amendment to the constitution and is not subject to the objection that it is impossible at the time of issue to determine either the amount that must be raised for that purpose or the rate that must be levied to raise such an amount. That amount may be determined from year to year, and levied annually, for that is the command of the amendment itself; but having declared at the time of the issue of such bonds that a levy shall be made in an amount sufficient, there then remains for the taxing officials the mere matter of calculation as to the amount. The levy must be made at all events in pursuance to the original provisions therefor, and subsequent taxing authorities must make such annual levy, regardless of what exigencies may arise in the future."

With respect to the question here made, the resolution of the board of county commissioners of your county providing for the bond issue above noted further provides as follows:—

"Be it further resolved that for the purpose of providing funds to pay the interest upon the aforesaid bonds as the same fall due, and also to create and maintain a sinking fund sufficient to discharge the principal of said bonds at maturity there shall be levied and collected upon all taxable property in Butler county, for the year 1917, and for each year thereafter up to and including the year 1922, in addition to all other taxes, taxes to produce an amount sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds, and provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, and all funds derived from said taxes shall be placed in a separate and distinct fund, which together with all interest collected on the same shall be irrevocably pledged to the payment of interest and principal of said bonds as the same fall due."

This provision in the resolution seems to be a substantial compliance with the requirements of section 11 of article XII of the State Constitution, and inasmuch as the particular provision above quoted from section 1223 of the General Code is not to be interpreted as adding anything to the constitutional provision I am of the opinion that the county commissioners have all the provision for levying and collecting an annual tax for interest and sinking fund purposes as is required.

The resolution of the county commissioners provides for the issuance of these bonds, but the bonds are not thereby issued; and the provisions above quoted from said resolution does, therefore, prior to the issuance of said bonds, make provision for an annual tax levy to secure the payment of interest on these bonds and the creation of a sinking fund to retire them at maturity.

Inasmuch as the proceeds of the first annual levy to be made by the county commissioners under the direction of the resolution providing for this bond issue may not be available until the tax distribution of February, 1918, it is obvious that the first semi-annual installment of the interest on said bonds falling due August 1, 1917, cannot be paid out of such proceeds.

As to this, however, I note from a memorandum enclosed by you that the bonds in question, aggregating $118,000.00, have been purchased by the First National bank of Columbus, Ohio, at a premium of $2,843.80. Section 2295 of the General Code provides that money paid by way of premium and accrued interest on the purchase of bonds shall be credited to the sinking fund from which such bonds are to be redeemed. This being so, I see no objection to the payment of the first annual installment of interest on these bonds from the amount received for premium and accrued interest on the sale of the bonds.

In this connection it is plain that neither the constitutional provision nor that of section 1223 of the General Code, above quoted, contemplates that the proceeds of the annual tax levy directed by these provisions, or by resolution issuing the bonds, shall be the sole fund from which these bonds and interest thereon are paid. On the contrary, the only purpose of this tax levy is to protect the bonds and the interest thereon as against a deficiency in the collection of special taxes and assessments laid to cover the respective shares of the cost of the improvement to be paid by the county (township), and property owners. This is recognized by the provisions of section 5630-1 of the General Code, and it is only when there are not other moneys coming into the sinking or county debt funds applicable to the payment of the bonds or interest thereon that resort to the levies directed by the constitutional provision and section 1223 of the General Code must be made. Consistent with other constitutional provisions, this is as far as the annual tax levies thus directed can go.

Wasson v. Commissioners, 49 O. S. 622;
Hubbard v. Fitzsimmons, 57 O. S. 436;
State ex rel. Brennan v. Benham, 89 O. S. 351.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that if there are in the sinking or debt funds of the county moneys from any source from which the first semi-annual installment of these bonds can be paid such interest payment can be made from said moneys, and that unless there are other objections to the validity of these bond issues, such as would justify the purchaser in refusing to take the same, the fact that the first semi-annual installment of interest cannot be paid from the proceeds of the taxes should not avail to defeat said bond issue.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TAX MAPS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY LET CONTRACT FOR SAME TO DEPUTY SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The law does not prohibit county commissioners from letting contract for tax maps to the deputy sealer of weights and measures provided the county commissioners have advertised for bids and the contract is otherwise properly let.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1917.

HON. C. C. CHAPMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Ashland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 2, 1917, as follows:

"The county commissioners of Ashland county have advertised for bids on making tax maps for the auditor and assessors for the year 1917. In your opinion can the deputy sealer of weights and measures do this work if the contract should be awarded to him. The making of the tax maps would not in any way interfere with his duties as sealer of weights and measures as the making of the maps would be done outside of his office hours. Would the opinion No. 205, rendered by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan on March 30, 1911, apply to this same case?"

Sections 5549, 5550, 5551 and 5552 of the General Code read:

"Section 5549. If, in the opinion of the county commissioners, it is necessary to the proper appraisal of the real estate of such county, on or before their June session, one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and every fourth year thereafter, they may advertise for four consecutive weeks in one or more newspapers of general circulation in the county, for sealed proposals to construct the necessary maps and plats to enable the assessors in the county, or any district thereof, to correctly reappraise all real estate. The maps and plats shall be made under the supervision of the county auditor, and such advertisement shall particularly specify the extent and character of the work to be done. Each bid shall be accompanied by a good and sufficient bond of not less than one thousand dollars conditioned that said bidder will not fail or refuse to enter into contract in accordance with the advertised proposals, in case his bid is accepted. The commissioners shall open the bids on the day named in the advertisement, and, within three days thereafter, award the contract to the lowest and best bidder, if, in their opinion, it is to the interest of the county so to do, or they may reject any and all bids.

"Section 5550. If the contract is awarded, the bidder to whom it is awarded shall forthwith give a good and sufficient bond, with two or more sureties, in an amount of not less than two thousand dollars, nor more than ten thousand dollars, as required by the county commissioners, conditioned for the prompt, faithful and accurate performance of the work to be done. On completion of any city, village, township, or district, the work shall be paid for out of the county treasury, on the warrant of the county auditor, after it has been duly accepted and approved by the county commissioners. No bill shall be allowed until the auditor and commissioners are satisfied that the labor has been performed in accordance with the contract on file with the county auditor. In counties or districts having no map, the commissioners shall furnish it under the provisions of this chapter.

"Section 5551. The board of county commissioners may appoint the county surveyor, who shall employ such number of assistants as are necessary, not exceeding four, to provide for making, correcting, and keeping up to date a complete set of tax maps of the county. Such maps shall show all original lots and parcels of land, and all divisions, subdivisions and allotments thereof, with the name of the owner of each original lot or parcel and of each division, subdivision or lot, all new divisions, subdivisions or allotments made in the county, all transfers of property showing the lot or parcel of land transferred, the name of the grantee, and the date of the transfer, so that such maps shall furnish the auditor, for entering on the tax duplicate, a correct and proper description of each lot or parcel of land offered for transfer. Such maps shall be for the use of the board of equalization and the auditor, and be kept in the office of the county auditor.

"Section 5552. The board of county commissioners shall fix the salary of the draughtsman at not to exceed two thousand dollars per year. They shall likewise fix the number of assistants not to exceed four, and fix the salary of such assistants at not to exceed fifteen hundred dollars per year. The salaries of the draughtsman and assistants shall be paid out of the county treasury in the manner as the salary of other county officers are paid."

Assuming that the county commissioners still have the power to contract for tax maps under these sections, which is a very doubtful question in view of the present chaotic condition of our tax legislation, I will proceed to answer your question as to whether or not they may contract with the deputy sealer of weights and measures.

The opinion you refer to in your letter was rendered by former Attorney-General Hogan on March 30, 1911, and is found in volume I of the Opinions of the Attorney-General, 1911-12, page 225. In this opinion it was held that:

> "Where the county commissioners advertise for bids for making plats for the use of the quadrennial real estate appraisers and the recorder of the same county submitted a bid, was awarded the contract, rendered the service and was paid the amount of his bid, there should be no recovery as there is no prohibition in the law against the letting of such a contract to the county recorder."

The effect of section 12910 G. C. was not discussed in this opinion for the reason that the opinion treated the making of the tax plats as a contract for services and not one for "supplies" within the meaning of the section.

This view, I am inclined to think, is correct, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the law does not prohibit the county commissioners from letting the contract for the tax maps referred to, to the deputy sealer of weights and measures, providing the county commissioners have advertised for bids and the contract is otherwise properly let.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1917.

HON. W. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 10, 1917, in which you ask my opinion upon certain matters therein contained. Said communication is as follows:

> "I am herewith enclosing a certificate of increase of capital stock of The Culver Art and Frame Company, to increase its present capital stock of $35,000.00, all common, to $50,000.00, the increase to be preferred.

"The articles of incorporation provide only for common stock, which has all been subscribed for and issued.

"I desire to know whether preferred stock can be issued as attempted in this case without any provision for preferred stock in the articles of incorporation.

"I direct your attention to sections 8667, 8668 and 8669 of the General Code, and section 8699 of the Code under which the present increase is attempted to be made.

"I desire an opinion from you whether it is necessary to first amend the articles to provide for preferred stock before such an increase as is provided by the enclosed certificate can be made. Also advise me if I shall accept and file the enclosed certificate without any further procedure on the part of the corporation."

The material facts upon which you ask an opinion are as follows:

"(1) The Culver Art and Frame Company incorporated with a capital stock of $35,000.00, all common stock.

"(2) This stock is all subscribed for and issued and an installment of 10% paid on each share.

"(3) Said company desires to increase its capital stock to $50,000.00, an increase of $15,000.00, all to be sold as preferred stock."

The certificate sent to you as secretary of state, to be filed as provided by law, contains certain preferences, designations, restrictions and qualifications. The said certificate reads as follows:

"The Culver Art and Frame Company hereby certifies that on the 3rd day of February, A. D. 1917, the capital stock of said company was fully subscribed for, and an installment of ten per cent on each share of stock has been paid; that at a meeting of its directors, held at the office of said company on the 3rd day of February, A. D. 1917, the assent in writing of three-fourths in number of the stockholders, representing more than three-fourths of the capital stock of said company, having been first previously obtained, the following resolution was adopted, viz:

" 'Resolved, That the capital stock of said, The Culver Art and Frame Company be and the same is hereby increased from $35,000.00 to $50.000.00, and that $15,000.00 of said increase be issued and disposed of as preferred stock, in one hundred and fifty (150) shares of $100.00 each, and that the holders thereof be entitled to receive a dividend on said preferred stock of 6% per annum, payable semi-annually out of the surplus profits of the company for each year, in preference to all other stockholders, and such dividends shall be --------cumulative.

" 'Such preferred stock may be redeemed at not less than par at the time and price hereby fixed, and to be also expressed in the stock certificates thereof; to wit: * * *

" 'The purchasers and owners of the preferred stock shall be entitled to a dividend of 6% per annum payable semi-annually out of the surplus profits for each year, in preference to all other stockholders, and such dividends shall be cumulative.

" 'The holders of the preferred stock shall have no voting power upon any question in the management of the corporate business.

"'The preferred stock shall be subject to redemption at par and accrued dividends and 5 per centum additional at any time on or before five years from its date of issue.'"

Now your question is as to whether the certificate of increase of stock to be issued and disposed of as preferred stock can legally contain these preferences, designations, restrictions and qualifications, or must these be provided by way of an amendment to the original articles of incorporation?

Before answering your question, I want to call your attention to an opinion rendered by Hon. Edward C. Turner, found in volume II, page 1835, of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915. In this opinion Mr. Turner held that the articles of incorporation may be amended after the filing of the certificate in such a way as to show the preferences, restrictions, etc., of the preferred stock, but he says that he does not at all pass upon the question as to whether these same preferences and restrictions might be placed in the certificate of increase of capital stock. In volume II, page 1856, of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, Hon. Edward C. Turner rendered another opinion in which he held that it is not necessary to set out preferences, restrictions, etc., in the certificate of increase, but he did not pass upon the question you ask.

The answer to your question is to be found in the following sections of the General Code, which I quote in full:

"Section 8667. If a corporation be organized for profit, it must have a capital stock, which may consist of common and preferred, or common only; but at no time shall the amount of preferred stock at par value exceed two-thirds of the actual paid in in cash or property.

"Section 8668. When the capital stock is to be both common and preferred, it may be provided in the articles of incorporation that the holders of the preferred stock shall be entitled to yearly dividends of not more than eight per cent, payable quarterly, half yearly, or yearly out of the surplus profits of the company each year in preference to all other stockholders. Such dividends also may be made cumulative.

"Section 8669. A corporation issuing both common and preferred stock may create designations, preferences, and voting powers, or restrictions or qualifications thereof, in the certificate of incorporation, and if desired, preferred stock may be made subject to redemption at not less than par, at a fixed time and price, to be expressed in the stock certificates thereof.

"Section 8699. Upon the assent in writing of three-fourths in number of the stockholders of a corporation, representing at least three-fourths of its capital stock, to increase the capital stock, it may issue and dispose of preferred stock in the manner by law provided therefor. Upon such increase of stock, a certificate shall be filed with the secretary of state as provided in the next preceding section."

Section 8667 G. C. provides that a corporation for profit must have a capital stock, which may consist of common and preferred, or it may consist of common stock only.

Section 8668 G. C. provides that when the capital stock is to be both common and preferred, the articles of incorporation may provide for preferences on behalf of holders of preferred stock.

Section 8669 G. C. provides that when both common and preferred stock is issued, the certificate of incorporation may create preferences and restrictions as to voting power of preferred stock and as to time of redemption of preferred stock.

Section 8699 G. C. provides that when three-fourths of the stockholders, representing three-fourths of the capital stock, assent in writing to increase of capital stock, it may issue and dispose of preferred stock in the manner provided therefor by law.

Now, what is the answer to your question under the above provisions of law?

It is my opinion that the corporation can provide for designations, preferences, voting powers and restrictions, such as set out in the certificate deposited with you for filing. It is true sections 8668 and 8669 G. C. state that these preferences, restrictions, etc., must be set out in the articles of incorporation, but this obtains only when both common and preferred stock are provided for at the time of the incorporation.

Section 8699 G. C. does not limit the issuing and disposing of preferred stock to corporations which were incorporated with common and preferred stock, but it does provide that preferred stock may be issued and disposed of in the manner by law provided therefor. It is my opinion that the words: "in the manner by law provided therefor" refer back to sections 8667, 8668 and 8669 G. C. in so far as the effect; and that preferred stock can be issued and disposed of by way of increasing the capital stock of the incorporation under the same terms and conditions as it could have been at the time of the incorporation of the company, even though at the beginning, no preferred stock was provided for; that the certificate for such increase may contain such preferences, restrictions, etc., as might have been provided in the original articles of incorporation had both common and preferred stock been provided for.

You also ask in your communication whether you should file this certificate without any further procedure on the part of the corporation. It is my opinion that you should do so. It is true the provision found in section 8667 G. C. applies to the issuance of preferred stock, which provision is as follows:

> "* * * but at no time shall the amount of preferred stock at par value exceed two-thirds of the actual capital paid in in cash or property."

but I take it that this provision has nothing to do with the certificate, but merely regulates the action of the corporation in the issuance of stock.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—MAY PROVIDE FOR BOND ISSUE UNDER SEC. 1223 G. C. TO PROVIDE MONEY FOR HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION—BEFORE ACTUAL TAX LEVY IS MADE BY COUNTY OR TOWNSHIP UNDER SEC. 1222—RESOLUTIONS SHOULD, HOWEVER, DIRECT ANNUAL LEVY.

A board of county commissioners may under section 1223 General Code provide for the issue of bonds covering the share of the cost of the construction of an intercounty highway to be borne by the county, township and abutting property owners before an actual levy of taxes is made either by the county or township under section 1222 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1917.

HON. CHARLES G. WHITE, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—This office is in receipt of your communication of January 23, 1917, asking our opinion on the following matter:

> "The state highway department and the county commissioners have agreed to build a piece of road in Ohio township, this county, but as I understand it neither the county nor the township have made any provision for the levy of a tax, nor has any arrangement been made for the assessing of abutting land owners. The commissioners now desire to proceed and issue bonds under section 1223 of the General Code, provided they have the right.
> "Will you please inform me whether or not the county commissioners have the right to issue bonds under section 1223 of the General Code of Ohio, as amended in 106 Ohio Laws, before any arrangements have been made for the levy of the county or township tax, and also, before anything is done toward the assessment against the abutting owners of the property along the suggested state highway."

I assume that the road the construction or improvement of which is contemplated, is either an intercounty highway or a main market road, and with reference to the matter of the construction or improvement of such road, section 1191 of the General Code provides that the commissioners of any county may make application to the state highway commissioner for aid from any appropriation by the state from any fund available for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of such road.

Section 1192 of the General Code provides that if the county commissioners do not make application for state aid for the construction or improvement of any such road on or before the time herein designated, the township trustees of any township within the county may file such application, in which case the state highway commissioner may co-operate with such trustees in the construction or improvement of such road in the same manner as is provided in cases where the county commissioners make application.

Section 1193 of the General Code, among other things, provides that each application for state aid, whether made by the county commissioners or the township trustees, shall contain an agreement to pay one-half of the cost and expense of the surveys and other expenses preliminary to the construction or improvement of the road.

By section 1195 of the General Code it is provided that if upon receipt of an application for state aid for any construction or improvement of an intercounty highway or main market road, the highway commissioner approves the construction or improvement of the same, he shall certify his approval of the application or any part thereof to the county commissioners or township trustees, as the case may be.

With respect to the payment of the cost and expense of the construction or improvement of such road, section 1212 of the General Code provides that the state's portion of the cost and expense shall be paid by the treasurer of state upon a warrant of the auditor of state, and the proportion of the cost and expense thereof to be borne by the county, township and property owners shall be paid by the treasurer of the county in which the road is located upon the warrant of the county auditor, the same to be issued on the requisition of the state highway commissioner.

Section 1214 of the General Code provides the manner in which the cost and expense of the improvement other than the part thereof to be paid by the state shall be apportioned between the counties, the township or townships and the abutting property owners, and further provides that the township trustees shall apportion the amount to be paid by the owners of abutting property according to the benefits accruing to such owners of the land so located. This section further provides as follows:

> "When bonds are issued in anticipation of taxes and assessments the interest thereon shall be treated as a part of the cost and expense of the improvement and apportioned among the county, the township or townships, and the specially benefited property in the proportions to which they severally contribute to the payment of the total cost and expense thereof not paid by the state under the provisions of this or any other section."

> "Each contract under the provisions of this chapter (G. C. Secs. 1178 to 1231-3) except as otherwise provided in section 156 of this act (Sec. 7199) shall be made in the name of the state and executed on its behalf by the state highway commissioner and attested by the secretary of the department. No contract shall be let by the state highway commissioner in a case where the county commissioners or township trustees are to contribute a part of the cost of said improvement, unless the county commissioners of the county in which the improvement is located shall have made a written agreement to assume in the first instance that part of the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount to be paid by the state. Where the application for said improvement has been made by the township trustees, then such agreement shall be entered into between the state highway commissioner and the township trustees. Such agreement shall be filed in the office of the state highway commissioner with the approval of the attorney-general endorsed thereon as to its form and legality."

Sections 1222 and 1223 of the General Code provide for tax levy and the issuance of bonds with respect to the construction or improvement of such road, and the same read as follows:

> "Sec. 1222. For the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the county's proportion of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy a tax not exceeding one mill, upon all taxable property of the county. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for county purposes, but subject, however, to the limitation upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force.

"For the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the proportion of the cost and expense to be paid by the township or townships for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter (G. C. 1178 to 1231-3), the township trustees are authorized to levy a tax, not exceeding two mills, upon all taxable property of the township in which such road improvement or some part thereof is situated; such levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for township purposes and shall be outside of the limitation of two mills for general township purposes, but subject, however, to limitation upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force.

"A county or township may use any moneys lawfully transferred from any fund in place of the taxes provided for under the provisions of this section.

"Sec. 1223. The county commissioners, in anticipation of the collection of such taxes or assessments, and whenever in their judgment it is advisable, are hereby authorized to sell the bonds of any such county in which such construction, improvement or repair is to be made to an amount necessary to pay the respective shares of the county, township or townships, and the lands assessed for such improvement, but the aggregate amount of such bonds issued shall not be in excess of one per cent. of the tax duplicate of such county. Such bonds shall state for what purpose issued and bear interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and in such amounts as to mature in not more than five years after their issue, as the county commissioners shall determine. Prior to the issuance of such bonds the county commissioners shall provide for levying and collecting annually a tax upon all taxable property of the county to provide a sum sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity. The proceeds of such bonds shall be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement or repair of the highway for which the bonds are issued. If bids are made for a portion of the proposed issue, the commissioners may accept a combination of bids, if by so doing the bonds will produce the best price to the county, and at the request of the purchaser the bonds may be issued in denominations of one hundred dollars or multiple thereof, notwithstanding a provision of the resolution providing for their issue."

The provisions of section 1223 of the General Code requiring that county commissioners, before issuing the bonds therein provided for, should provide for the levying and collecting annually of a tax upon all the taxable property of the county to provide a sum sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity is in keeping with the provisions of section 5630-1 of the General Code making all bonds of this kind county obligations and in itself, in my opinion, evidences an unmistakable intent to authorize the county commissioners to provide for the issue of the bonds before any tax is levied either by the county commissioners or the township trustees under the provisions of section 1222 of the General Code. The township trustees should, of course, make the assessment on the abutting property in the manner provided for by section 1214 of the General Code to pay the cost and expense of the improvement to be borne by such abutting property, and also make an annual levy of taxes on the taxable property of the township to pay the township's share of the cost of the improvement.

The county commissioners are required to make an annual levy on the taxable property of the county in an amount sufficient to pay the county's share of the cost of said improvement and any deficiency in the collection of the assessment installments for the township's taxes to the end that said bonds and interest thereon may be paid from time to time as they respectively mature.

In conclusion I note that specifically your question is whether or not the board of county commissioners can issue bonds under section 1223 "before any arrangements have been made" for the levy of county or township taxes and before anything is done towards the assessment against abutting or the owners of the property along the highway to be improved.

As to this I desire to say that I know of no arrangements that the county commissioners or township trustees have to make with reference to said tax other than the actual levy made by them with the rest of the respective budgets which, under the provisions of section 5649-3a, are to be submitted to the auditor on or before the first Monday in June each year except, of course, as just before noted, the county commissioners in the resolution providing for the issue of bonds under section 1223 should by provision therein, in compliance with the provisions of this section (Sec. 5630-1 General Code) and section 11 of article XII of the state constitution expressly direct an annual levy by the county commissioners and township trustees as will be sufficient in amount to pay interest on these bonds as they accrue and provide a sinking fund for their payment as they may mature.

The township trustees should, of course, proceed to assess the owners of abutting property for their shares of the improvement, designating the number of the installments in which said assessments are paid. The issue of bonds, however, under section 1223 is not contingent on prior assessment by the township trustees on the property owners for this is a ministerial duty which the township trustees can be compelled to perform.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO ISSUE BONDS FOR TOWNSHIP'S SHARE OF COST OF ROAD IMPROVEMENT—WHEN WORK IS DONE UNDER SUPERVISION OF STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER.

The trustees of a township have no authority to issue bonds to cover the township's share of the cost of constructing an intercounty highway improvement when the work is done under the supervision of the state highway commissioner on an application for state aid in such improvement made by the county commissioners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1917.

HON. G. B. FINDLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 27, 1917, asking the opinion of this office, in which you say:

"The trustees of Huntington township, of this county, desire to submit to the electors of their township a proposal to issue bonds for the improvement of an intercounty road lying partially within their township. They desire to issue sufficient bonds to pay to their county 25% of the construction cost, and also the 10% to be later assessed upon the abutting property; the special assessment of 10% to be collected by the county and thereafter returned by it to the township, who will use it toward the retirement of the bonds. The work will be let and managed by Lorain county in conjunction with the state. Has the township authority to issue its bonds, after a favorable vote, for 35% of the cost of the work?"

From what you say in the letter above quoted I assume that the improvement contemplated is one to be constructed under the supervision of the state highway commissioner on an application for state aid in the construction of said improvement made by the commissioners of the county to the state highway commissioner under authority of section 1191 General Code.

The construction and improvement of intercounty highways is provided for by chapter VIII of the Cass road law, which has been carried into the General Code as sections 1178 to 1231-3, inclusive. I do not deem it necessary in answering your question to refer to all of the different sections of the General Code directing the successive steps and proceedings to be taken in the construction of intercounty highway improvements under the Cass law.

I note, however, that section 1214, General Code, provides as to the manner in which the cost and expense of such improvement over and above that to be borne by the state shall be divided between the county, the township or townships and the owners of abutting property.

Section 1217 General Code provides that the county commissioners of a county in which such highway is constructed or improved may, by resolution, waive a part or all of the apportionment of the cost and expense of such highway to be paid by the township or townships, and assume a part or all of the cost and expense of such highway improvement, in excess of the amount received from the state up to the entire cost and expense of such improvement without any assessment or charge whatever upon the township or townships. This section likewise provides that the township trustees of a township in which such highway is constructed may, by resolution, waive a part or all of the apportionment of the cost and expense of such highway to be paid by the county, and assume any part or all of the cost and expense of such highway improvement, in excess of the amount received from the state without any assessment upon the county.

Where application for state aid in the improvement of such highway is made by the commissioners of the county, section 1218 General Code provides that no contract shall be let by the state highway commissioner in a case where the county commissioners or township trustees are to contribute a part of the cost of said improvement, unless the county commissioners of the county in which the improvement is located shall have made a written agreement to assume in the first instance that part of the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount to be paid by the state.

By section 1212 General Code it is provided that the state's proportion of the cost and expense of the construction or improvement of such highway shall be paid by the treasurer of state upon the warrant of the auditor of state, upon requisition of the state highway commissioner, and that the proportion of the cost and expense of such construction or improvement to be made by the county, township and property owners shall be paid by the treasurer of the county in which the highway is located upon the warrant of the county auditor, issued upon the requisition of the state highway commissioner.

Upon the facts stated in your communication it is evident that the state has a right to look solely to the county for the payment of that part of the cost and expense of the improvement not paid by the state itself. Funds for the payment of that part of the cost and expense of the improvement to be borne by the county, township and property owners are provided for by sections 1222 and 1223 General Code, which read as follows:

> "Section 1222. For the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the county's proportion of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy a tax, not exceeding one mill, upon all taxable property of the county. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for county purposes, but subject, however, to the limitation upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force.
> "For the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the proportion of the cost and expense to be paid by the township or townships for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter, the township trustees are authorized to levy a tax, not exceeding two mills, upon all taxable property of the township in which such road improvement or some part thereof is situated; such levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for township purposes and shall be outside of the limitation of two mills for general township purposes, but subject, however, to limitation upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force.
> "A county or township may use any moneys lawfully transferred from any fund in place of the taxes provided for under the provisions of this section.
> "Section 1223. The county commissioners, in anticipation of the collection of such taxes or assessments, and whenever in their judgment it is advisable, are hereby authorized to sell the bonds of any such county in which such construction, improvement or repair is to be made to an amount necessary to pay the respective shares of the county, township or townships, and the lands assessed for such improvement, but the aggregate amount of such bonds issued shall not be in excess of one per cent. of the tax duplicate of such county. Such bonds shall state for what purpose issued and bear interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and in such amounts as to mature in not more than five years after their issue, as the county commissioners shall determine. Prior to the issuance of such bonds the county commissioners shall provide for levying and collecting annually a tax upon all taxable property of the county to provide a sum sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity. The proceeds of such bonds shall be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement or repair of the highway for which the bonds are issued. If bids are made for a portion of the proposed issue, the commissioners may accept a combination of bids, if by so doing the bonds will produce the best price to the county, and at the request of the purchaser the bonds may be issued in denominations of one hundred dollars or multiple thereof, notwithstanding a provision of the resolution providing for their issue."

It is evident from the foregoing statutory provisions and others relating to the construction and improvement of intercounty highways that the only bond issue authorized to pay the cost and expense of the improvement other than that paid by the state is that provided by said section 1223 General Code, which bond issue is to cover not only the amount to be borne by the county and abutting property owners, but the township as well, whether the amount to be paid by the township be the amount apportioned to it by the provisions of section 1214 General Code or an amount assumed by such township under section 1217 General Code.

In arriving at this conclusion I am not unmindful that section 3295 General Code, as amended 106 O. L. 536, provides that the trustees of any township may, among other purposes, issue and sell bonds "for the purpose of providing funds to pay the township's share of the cost of any improvement made under an agreement with the county commissioners." In the enactment of this particular provision into section 3295 the legislature must have had in mind some provisions of then existing statutory law authorizing the trustees of a township and the commissioners of the county to enter into agreement with respect to improvements made under such agreement.

With respect to road improvements, the only statutory provision that I have been able to find in terms authorizing a board of county commissioners and the trustees of a township to make and enter into an agreement with respect to such road improvements was section 6905 General Code (the same being a part of the Dodge road law) providing for the construction by county commissioners of road improvements on the foot frontage plan. However, said section 6905 was repealed by the legislature in the enactment of the Cass road law. There are now no statutory provisions which authorize the construction of road improvements on agreement between the county commissioners and township trustees, nor are there any which in terms authorize an agreement between the county commissioners and township trustees with respect to the division of the cost of a road improvement. I do not, therefore, know anything in the way of road improvements to which the language above quoted from the provisions of section 3295 G. C. can apply.

Moreover, it will be noted that section 3295 General Code is a general statute, conferring power upon the county commissioners to issue bonds for practically all purposes having relation to the needs of the township, and the particular language of section 3295 above quoted has no special reference to road improvements, the language being that the township trustees may issue bonds for the purpose of providing funds to pay the township's share of the cost of any improvement made under agreement with the county commissioners.

The Cass road law, which was filed in the office of the secretary of state the same day as the law amending section 3295 G. C. in the above particular, by chapter III thereof makes special and comprehensive provision with respect to the matter of road construction and improvement by township trustees.

Sections 3298-8, 3298-9 and 3298-10 General Code, the same as enacted being a part of said chapter of the Cass road law, make provision for the issue by township trustees of bonds for township road construction, improvement and repair. Inasmuch as the sections of the General Code enacted as chapter III of the Cass road law have special and exclusive reference to the matter of road construction, improvement and repair by township trustees, these sections of the Cass road law, including those providing for issue of bonds by township trustees, should govern rather than the general provisions of section 3295, and for this reason I am inclined to the view that sections 3298-8, 3298-9 and 3298-10 General Code furnish the only authority for the issue by township trustees of bonds for road purposes.

I may add that my conclusion with respect to the want of application of the provisions of section 3295 General Code to bonds issued by township trustees for road improvement purposes accords with that of my predecessor expressed by him in Opinion No. 1520, directed to the industrial commission of Ohio under date of April 27, 1916.

Answering the question made by you categorically, therefore, I am of the opinion that the trustees of the township named in your communication have no power, either with or without a vote of the electors of the township, to issue bonds for the improvement of the intercounty highway in question.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR CONSTRUCTION OF STEUBENVILLE-CAMBRIDGE ROAD.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 23, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 19, 1917, in which you ask my approval of a final resolution of the county commissioners of Jefferson county, Ohio, for the construction of:

"Sec. 'L' Steubenville-Cambridge road, Pet. No. 2538, I. C. H. No. 26."

I have carefully examined these resolutions and find them legal and regular in every respect, and I am, therefore, returning the same to you this day with my approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,

DEPUTY SEALER OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES—SERVES AT WILL OF APPOINTING POWER—COMMISSIONERS MAY CHANGE SALARY DURING TERM OF SERVICE—MANDAMUS WILL LIE IF THEY DO NOT FIX SALARY.

A deputy sealer of weights and measures serves at the will of the appointing power. The commissioners have authority to fix his salary and may change same during his time of service. If they refuse to act, mandamus will lie.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 24, 1917.

HON. GEORGE F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 1, 1917, you request my opinion upon the following proposition:

> "On January 11, 1916, our present county auditor appointed, under the statute, a deputy sealer of weights and measures for the term to end at the time of his own term, to wit: the third Monday of October, 1917. Thereupon, the county commissioners fixed his salary as provided by law at $100.00 per month for the term of one year.
> "Differences, political and otherwise, have arisen between the county commissioners and the county auditor; the county commissioners claiming that some complaints of inefficiency and neglect of duty have come to them regarding the deputy. At any rate, they have so far neglected and refused to make any appropriation for the current year. The deputy sealer and the county auditor, as county sealer, make the claim that the appointment of the deputy, having been made to the third Monday on October, 1917, and the salary having been fixed at $100.00 for the term of one year by the county commissioners, makes it obligatory upon the said county commissioners to fix the same salary for the remainder of the term.

"I wish you would kindly advise me how to take care of the situation."

General Code section 2615 provides in part as follows:

"By virtue of his office, the county auditor shall be county sealer of weights and measures. * * * It shall be the duty of the county auditor to see that all state laws relating to weights and measures be strictly enforced throughout his county and to assist generally in the prosecution of all violations of such laws."

General Code section 2622 provides:

"Each county sealer of weights and measures shall appoint by writing under his hand and seal, a deputy who shall compare weights and measures wherever the same are used or maintained for use within his county, or which are brought to the office of the county sealer for that purpose, with the copies of the original standards in the possession of the county sealer, who shall receive a salary fixed by the county commissioners, to be paid by the county, which salary shall be instead of all fees or charges otherwise allowed by law. Such deputy shall also be employed by the county sealer to assist in the prosecution of all violations of laws relating to weights and measures."

The county auditor by virtue of his office is by law made the county sealer of weights and measures and is charged with the performance of the duties of said office as prescribed by law, and also charged with the enforcement of all laws in relation thereto.

The language of section 2622 G. C. is certain and specific in relation to the appointment of the deputy sealer; the provision, I think, in relation thereto is mandatory and very good reasons are apparent why this should be so because the duties of the sealer in comparing weights and measures, wherever the same are used or kept for use makes it necessary for the person performing those duties to go about the county where such weights and measures are so kept and so used and necessarily makes it impossible on account of the other duties of his office for the county auditor to perform that portion of the duties of the office of county sealer.

The deputy sealer of weights and measures is not protected by the civil service laws. Reasons therefor are set forth in an opinion of my predecessor, No. 943, found in Attorney-General's Reports for 1915, at page 2021, as follows:

"A deputy sealer of weights and measures is a deputy of the county auditor. * * * The former is appointed under the provisions of section 2622 G. C., which considered in connection with the provision of section 2616 G. C., as amended, 106 O. L. 169, gives him ample authority to act for and in the place of the county auditor in all matters relating to weights and measures, and as to such transactions his relation to the county auditor is a fiduciary one coming clearly within the provisions of paragraph 9 of section 486-8, as amended, 106 O. L. 404, which latter section defines and specifies the positions in the unclassified service. Said paragraph nine provides as follows:

"'The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act for and in the place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals.'

"Under the provisions of this paragraph and the sections noted above I conclude that the deputy sealer of weights and measures is in the unclassified service and not protected by civil service laws."

The statute authorizing the appointment does not fix any term of service, and it must, therefore, be held to be within the provisions of General Code section 9 which reads in part as follows:

"* * * A deputy * * * appointed in pursuance of law, shall hold the appointment only during the pleasure of the officer appointing him. * * *"

It would, therefore, follow that such deputy sealer of weights and measures is removable at will, that there is no fixed term of service, but that he serves only during the will of the appointing power.

There is but one difference betweeen the appointment of a deputy sealer of weights and measures by the county auditor and the appointment of any other deputy which he is permitted by law to appoint, that is, that the county commissioners, under the provisions of General Code section 2622, are empowered to fix the salary of the deputy sealer of weights and measures and inasmuch as the county auditor, as county sealer, must make said appointment under the mandatory provisions of said section 2622, and inasmuch as the county commissioners are empowered to fix such salary, their discretion in fixing the same can only be interfered with by a court of equity in case they have acted unreasonably and have abused the power reposed in them.

In re Application of Deimer, 17 O. N. P. (n. s.) 369.

The commissioners, then, having once acted, the question is, is their action functus officio or are they permitted to act again. As noted above, there is no fixed term of service and an act is functus officio when it is applied to something which once has had life and power, but which has become of no virtue whatever. Such is not the discretionary power of the fixing of a salary for service.

A case very similar to the one in question is Collingsworth County v. Meyers, 35 So. W. Reporter, 414, in which case suit was filed by Myers against the county to recover a balance due him on his ex officio salary:

"On the 16th day of February, 1893, the commissioner's court of the county passed, adopted and entered of record the following order: 'In the matter of ex officio services to be ordered by the court, that the county judge, P. W. Meyers, be, and he is hereby, allowed the sum of six hundred dollars per annum for two years, and the same shall be paid quarterly at the end of each quarter; * * * on the 13th of November, 1893, said commissioners passed, adopted, and entered of record the following order: 'It is ordered by the court that order No. 16, passed by this court on Thursday, the 16th day of February, 1893, be and the same is hereby rescinded and revoked and it is further ordered by the court that the ex officio salaries of county officers be set at the amounts following each name, to wit: P. W. Meyers, county judge, shall receive the sum of four hundred and twenty dollars per annum on and after the first day of November, 1893 * * * and each officer shall receive his salary quarterly. The county warrants shall be issued by the clerk for their quarterly allowances against the general county fund.' It will be observed that this last order reduces the allowance or ex officio services and it is contended by the appellee that the first order having fixed the amount of these services for two years, or for their full term of office the commissioners had no jurisdiction or power to change or reduce the salaries and amounts during their terms of office, which would not expire until November, 1894. * * *

"Section 15, article V, constitution of Texas, provides that the county judge 'shall receive as a compensation for his services such fees and perquisites as may be prescribed by law.' The legislature under this provision of the constitution, having fixed certain fees of office, and article 2450, Revised Statutes, 1895, provides as follows: 'For presiding over the commissioners' court, ordering elections and making returns thereof, hearings and determining civil causes and transacting all other official business not otherwise provided for, the county judge will receive such salary from the county treasury as may be allowed him by the order of the commissioners' court.' * * * This order fixing the salary in February, 1892, cannot be regarded as a contract, article 4853 Revised Statutes providing that: 'The salaries of officers shall not be increased or diminished during the term of office of the officers entitled thereto,' does not apply to any officers whose salaries are not fixed by law, * * * and therefore does not apply to the orders of the commissioners' courts auditing and fixing the amounts of the ex officio services to be paid the county judge. * * * We are of the opinion that in * * * fixing the amount to be paid such officers for ex officio services the commissioners' court acts in a legislative capacity more than in a judicial * * * and that whenever the commissioners conclude, for any reason, that such allowances are too great or too small, they have the right and power at any time before the money is actually paid out, to the officer to change, modify or even entirely repeal or revoke the order. It is necessary that they should have such power and authority in order to properly protect and administer the affairs of the county. * * *"

It is also held in People v. Supervisors, 65 N. Y. 225:

"The boards of supervisors are mere local legislative bodies, in many respects of limited power; but where they have jurisdiction they may act for their county precisely as the legislature may act for the state."

In People, etc., v. Supervisors, 105 N. Y., 180, it is held:

"The board of supervisors of the county of K., in whom was vested the power to fix the compensation of the district attorney, his assistants, clerks and officers, in August, 1877, fixed the salaries, and among them the salary of the chief clerk, at $3,000 per annum. In November, 1877, however, said board fixed the amount to be raised by taxation for the salaries in that office for the current fiscal year, at a sum considerably less than the aggregate of the salaries as fixed in August, 1877. The relator was appointed by the district attorney, whose term of office began January 1, 1878, chief clerk from that date, at a salary of $1,500, the salaries in the office having been scaled down to come within the appropriation. The relator accepted the appointment and continued in the office until August 1, 1881, receiving and accepting the salary so fixed, making no claim for additional compensation until after his employment had terminated. In an action to recover the difference between the amount received and the amount of salary as fixed by the board, HELD, that the action of the board in November, 1877, plainly indicated an intention on its part to reduce the salaries, and authority was thus impliedly given to the incoming district attorney to make such arrangements with his appointees as would bring the aggregate within the sum to be raised; that it was fairly presumable that, by the voluntary acceptance and retention by the relator of his employment at the reduced salary, the board was led to omit adopting a formal resolution reducing the salary to that fixed by the district attorney; and that, therefore, plaintiff was not entitled to recover."

In Somers v. State, 5 So. Dak., page 321, it is held:

"But the plaintiff contends that section 3, article 12, of the constitution, declaring that 'compensation of no public officer shall be increased or diminished during his term,' was a plain prohibition upon the legislature from passing a law reducing his salary from twelve hundred to nine hundred dollars. This contention is not correct for the reason that under the law plaintiff had no 'term.' He was simply appointed by the superintendent under the powers conferred by section 6, c 56. The law fixed no time for the continuance of such appointment. He had no title or tenure to the office beyond the pleasure of the appointing power. The word 'term' when used in reference to the tenure of office means, ordinarily, a fixed and definite term, and does not apply to appointive offices held at the pleasure of the appointing power. * * * We cannot assent to the theory of the plaintiff that by virtue of the law and his appointment under it his term was co-extensive with that of the superintendent who appointed him. Our conclusion is that the demurrer to plaintiff's complaint must be sustained and is so ordered."

I have quoted at length from the above opinions only for the reason that they are decisions foreign to the state and because of a sometimes lack of accessibility to same. From the above, then, I conclude that the deputy sealer of weights and measures holds at the will of the appointing power, that he has no fixed term of service, that the commissioners having the authority to fix the salary and it being for no term certain, they have the right at any time they desire to do so to change the same, and that their action can only be questioned by a court of equity in case of abuse. If, however, the commissioners refuse either to fix the salary or to appropriate funds for the proper payment thereof, an action in mandamus will lie to compel them to act.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DEED—CONVEYING LAND AUTHORIZED UNDER 106 O. L. 141 FROM STATE TO P. C. C. & ST. L. RY. CO.—MUST RESERVE "ALL OIL, GAS, COAL, ETC.," UNDER 105 O. L. 9.

The act of April 20th, 1915 (106 O. L. 141), authorizing the auditor of state to execute a deed in fee simple for a strip of land to the P. C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co., is to be read in connection with section 4 of the act of July 20th, 1914 (105 O. L. 9), and requires that such deed contain a reservation of all gas, oil, coal or other minerals under such land.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On January 18, 1917, you addressed an inquiry to this department with reference to a deed directed by an act of the legislature to be delivered by you to the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Ry. Co., your communication being as follows:

> "On April 20, 1915, the general assembly enacted a law (106 O. L. 141) requiring the auditor of state to prepare a deed of conveyance for execution by the governor, for certain lands in the Gnadenhutten district.
> "The question arises as to the effect, if any, upon this act is had by the act of July 20, 1914 (105 O. L. 6).
> "The act of 1915 requires a deed in fee simple of the 'land' in question. While we understand that by the word 'land' is meant the surface and all that lies above and below, and that the act in question requires us to prepare a deed conveying a fee simple title in the subject, namely the land, yet we are in doubt as to whether the general act of 1914 qualifies the special act of 1915.
> "Will you kindly advise us whether, in such deed, we should make reservation of minerals as required by the act of 1914."

This inquiry involves an examination and comparison of the two statutes mentioned for the purpose of giving the construction of same in reference to the extent of the subject matter of the deed as to whether it should convey the entire land or merely the surface.

The act first mentioned, being the latter of the two in point of time, in its title professes to authorize a settlement with this railroad company for a right of way through two lots of the Gnadenhutten tract. The preamble contains a number of recitals, stating:

First. Ownership by the state in trust for the use of the common schools.

Second. That the railroad and its predecessors have been in possession of a right of way across it since 1852.

Third. That the railroad with permission of the agents of the state borrowed earth from the site of this right of way and that it desires to widen the right of way to one hundred and forty feet and also quiet its title to the entire strip of one hundred and forty feet, and have all claims for such borrowed earth satisfied.

Fourth. That the trustees, in whose hands the state has placed the administrative charge of said school lot, and the railroad have agreed to settle the claim of the state as trustee of said lot by widening the right of way to one hundred and forty feet, quieting its title by conveyance from the state and release of all claim of the state for the earth removed, in consideration of which the railroad was to pay fifteen hundred dollars ($1,500.00), but that the trustees doubt their authority to consummate such agreement.

Fifth. That the trustees have by resolution requested the auditor of state through an act of the general assembly to carry out the settlement.

The above recitals are abbreviated, but the language is, generally speaking, that of the act, which then proceeds in section 1 of the enacting clause to require the auditor of state to prepare a deed conveying in fee simple to the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis Ry. Co., a tract of which a description by metes and bounds follows, but fails to state the section or sections a part of which is conveyed.

The second section requires the railroad to maintain a farm crossing.

The third requires the governor to sign the deed and cause the great seal of the state to be affixed and the secretary of state to countersign it, and requires its delivery to the auditor of state.

The fourth section requires the auditor to deliver the deed to the railroad on the payment of fifteen hundred dollars, in full satisfaction of the claim of the state for the earth so removed, and in full payment for the land so conveyed.

Volume 106 O. L., p. 141-143.

The former act referred to is found in volume 105, pages 6 to 9, which is found in the very beginning of the volume above cited. It is entitled, "An act for the conservation of oil, gas, coal and other minerals upon the school and ministerial lands of the state, and to amend sections 3209-1, 3210, 3214, 3222, 3223 G. C. and enact new sections 3211-1 and 3229-1."

Section 3210 in this revision, found on page 8, authorizes sale of lands in section 16 and all lands instead thereof, granted for school purposes, but makes no reference to section 29 and provides for the manner of effectuating such sale by a conveyance and then contains a proviso that such sales shall exclude all oil, gas, coal and other minerals on such lands, and that the deed by the state to the purchaser shall expressly reserve the same with the right of entry, etc.

Section 4 of the act, found on page 9, is as follows:

> "All sales or leases of canal, public or other state land shall exclude all oil, gas, coal or other minerals on or under such lands, and all deeds executed and delivered by the state shall expressly reserve to the state all gas, oil, coal or other minerals on or under such lands with the right of entry in and upon said premises for the purpose of selling or leasing the same, or prosecuting, developing or operating the same and this provision shall affect and apply to pending actions."

This act was passed July 20, 1914, and approved the same day.

The other act above quoted was passed April 20, 1915, and approved the next day.

Another act was passed upon May 5th, or as it will be noticed, just a half a month after the act requiring the deed from the railroad company and by the same general assembly, which is an amendment of section 4, quoted above, and makes some exceptions to the lands out of which such reservations were to be made.

The answer to your inquiry involves a consideration of the act of April 20, 1915, as affected by the other two referred to above if it is affected by them or either of them. That it is so affected by at least the former act of July 20, 1914, and that the last act, May 5, 1915, may also be looked to for its construction, is a consequence of the intimate connection of all three in point of time and identity of subject-matter. Even taking the act of May 20th alone, it contains ambiguity and might well be said to involve doubt as to whether the reservation of the minerals is not contemplated by it. This ambiguity arises out of the fact that the subject under consideration was a right of way, simply an easement, and the affirmative enactment requires the execution of a deed in fee simple, which is an expression ordinarily used by laymen and very frequently by lawyers to express the idea of the whole absolute property without reservation or exception. Having the other act, however, to look to, the ambiguity disappears and the legislative intent assumes certainty.

This kind of a question arising in this manner may always best be disposed of by reference to the general maxims for the construction of statutes. These, so far as comparison is involved, are two principal ones:

Leges posteriores priores contrarias abrogant.

The former signifies that contradictions should be reconciled so that effect may be given to all that the legislature has expressed, if possible. It is more generally used with reference to different parts of the same statute which present apparent conflict, but logically its application is just as strong to different statutes, especially when the intimate connection above referred to exists. The latter is rather of necessity a rule of logic than of positive law, or is such rule of law by reason of its logical character reduced to its ultimate essence, which means no more than what the legislature has said last is to stand against what it said formerly, and is the foundation and initial original statement of repeal by implication. It will be seen that the former maxim always prevails where its application is possible, and the latter only where there is hopeless irreconcilability. If there be such positive contradiction in the present case between the act of April 20, 1915, and the former act of July 14, 1914, then the provision of the last act is to prevail and the railroad gets the minerals.

There is no such contradiction. The provisions of both acts can stand and be given reasonable enforcement. In fact, the whole language of all parts of the act of April 20th, indicates almost with the certainty of expressed reference that it is to be read in connection with the other law. It is true these two laws were passed by different general assemblies, but the last one recognized the full force of the provision on this subject made by the first, when one-half month after the enactment of the act in question it made the slight change in section 4 quoted above. The only language in the act of April 20th, giving rise to any doubt upon the subject is the insertion of the three little words "in fee simple," and then by being too strongly attracted to that which is the ordinary every day import of those words and overlooking their technical signification, or rather their real meaning in law.

The expression "in fee simple" is not used with reference to the amount or description of all the tangible property conveyed, but with reference to the quality of the estate and its extent. Right of way and fee simple are not at all autonomous, and it would be perfectly possible to have an estate in fee simple in a right of way or an estate in fee simple in the minerals alone; a fortiori, in the land it may be subject to the reservation of the minerals.

This statute upon consideration is subject to the provision of the former statute by such necessary inference that it is almost, if not entirely, as controlling as would be a direct reference. The first recital is that the railroad is in possession of a "right of way." The second, that it seeks to have its title quieted to the entire strip of one hundred and forty feet in width. Now what title, except the title to the thing it was talking about above? The next recital is that they have agreed with the trustees that the "right of way" shall be widened to one hundred and forty feet and its title THERETO quieted by deed.

Now these are all the reasons given for the execution of the deed, and it would be strange, and even remarkable, if the legislature should solemnly set forth a series of recitals for giving a railroad company a right of way over land and then give the whole land, including valuable minerals in no sense necessary to the uses for which the corporation exists and exercises the right of eminent domain. The words "in fee simple" have no such meaning when used by lawyers to express an exact idea, and it is apparent from the whole context in this act, as well as comparison with the others, that they have no such meaning here. It follows consequently, that the deed provided for in such act should reserve to the state "all oil, gas, coal or other minerals on or under said lands, etc.," as set out in said section 4.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ORDINANCE—DETERMINING NUMBER OF POSITIONS IN DEPARTMENT AND FIXING SALARY AND BOND, IS OF A GENERAL NATURE—CANNOT BE PASSED WITH REGULAR SEMI-ANNUAL APPROPRATION ORDINANCE—SEC. 4214 G. C. CONSTRUED.

The act of council of a municipality in appropriating, in the regular semi-annual appropriation ordinance, sufficient moneys to cover the compensation of a certain position in detail, and specifying the title of the position, does not constitute a compliance with the provisions of section 4214 G. C. in creating said position and fixing the compensation thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 27, 1917, you submitted for my opinion the following question, to wit:

> "In view of the provisions of section 4214 General Code:
> "Does the act of council, in appropriating in the regular semi-annual appropriation ordinance sufficient moneys to cover the wages of a certain position, in detail and specifying the title of the position, constitute a compliance with the provisions of section 4214 General Code in creating said position and fixing the compensation?"

Section 4214 G. C. reads as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

It seems to be clear from said section that its force and effect is to require council to act by way of ordinance or resolution in exercising its power and authority, where it has the power and authority of determining the number of officers, clerks and employes in a certain department and fixing their compensation and bond, if any, and we assume such to be the facts in the particular case in question.

The following sections and parts of sections of the General Code are pertinent to a discussion of your question, to wit:

> "Sec. 3797. At the beginning of each fiscal half year, the council shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which the corporation has to provide, or from the moneys known to be in the treasury, or estimated to come into it during the six months next ensuing from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue. All expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof.
> "Sec. 5649-3a. * * * each year, * * * the council of each municipal corporation, * * * shall submit. * * *
> "Sec. 5649-3d. At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in section 5649-3a of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

The effect of these sections is to place upon the council of a municipality the duty of making appropriations semi-annually for the various municipal purposes, and to provide that all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof.

Section 5649-3d, in addition to the foregoing, requires that no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget, nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances.

The evident intent and purpose of these sections are to place the express duty upon council of handling the finances in a certain way as regards appropriations. Hence the action of council in performing this duty of making appropriations should be considered only as pertaining to the one subject of making appropriations.

The determination of the number of positions in a department of a municipality, the fixing of the compensations and bonds, if any, thereof, would be the exercise of a discretionary power vested in said body by virtue of the provisions of section 4214 G. C. and would be something altogether different from the performance of an express duty as contemplated in the passing of a semi-annual appropriation ordinance.

In consequence, to hold that council could not only appropriate money in the semi-annual appropriation ordinance, but could also determine the number of officers, clerks and employes of a certain department and fix their compensation and bonds, would be in effect to sustain the proposition that more than one subject could be contained in one ordinance.

Section 4226 G. C. provides that no ordinance, resolution or by-law shall contain more than one subject which shall be clearly expressed in its title; and hence such a holding would be contrary to the provisions of said last mentioned section.

Further, an ordinance determining the number of positions in a department and fixing the compensation and bonds thereof would be an ordinance that would be general in its scope. In effect it would operate on the public as a whole, since it would involve the expenditure of money raised by taxation and would grant powers and place duties upon the occupants of said positions that would be public in their nature.

It must necessarily follow, therefore, that an ordinance of such a character would be one of a general nature within the meaning of section 4227 G. C., which provides that ordinances of a general nature or providing for improvements shall be published as hereinafter provided, before going into operation. I am sustained in this view by an opinion rendered by Hon. U. G. Denman, attorney-general, to Hon. Van A. Snider, city solicitor, Lancaster, O., under date of January 10, 1910, found in the Annual Report of the Attorney General of Ohio, 1910-1911, page 1045, in which he held that an ordinance like the one in question was an ordinance of a general nature requiring publication.

As to the nature of a semi-annual appropriation ordinance, the following excerpt from an opinion rendered by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, to Hon. H. R. Schuler, city solicitor, Galion, O., under date of January 25, 1911, found in Vol. II of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General of Ohio, 1911-1912, page 1501, is in point:

> "I am aware it has been the ruling of this department heretofore that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance was an ordinance of a general nature which required publication in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation in the municipality. However, this identical question was decided by the circuit court of Jackson county, Ohio, in the past year, holding that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance was not an ordinance of general nature which required publication in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation in the municipality. The style of the case was The Transcript Printing Co. vs. The City of Wellston, Ohio, decided in May, 1910. The case was not taken to the supreme court. I do not think there is any other decision in Ohio upon this question.
> "I will, therefore, hold that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance is not an ordinance of general nature requiring publication in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation in the municipality."

Hence, assuming that said semi-annual appropriation ordinance had not been published for the reason that publication is not required by law, it would follow that said positions have not been legally determined, nor said compensation legally fixed therein, within the meaning of said section 4214 G. C. since when an ordinance is used as the mode of action the ordinance required by said last mentioned section contemplates an ordinance of a general nature, which to become effective must be published as required by the provisions of section 4227 G. C. as follows:

> "Sec. 4227. * * * Ordinances of a general nature, or providing for improvements shall be published as hereinafter provided before going into operation. No ordinance shall take effect until the expiration of ten days after the first publication of such notice. * * *"

Sec. 4227-2 G. C., as amended in 104 O. L. 239, reads in part as follows:

> "Sec. 4227-2. Any ordinance, or other measure passed by the council of any municipal corporation shall be subject to the referendum except as hereinafter provided. No ordinance or other measure shall go into effect until thirty days after it shall have been filed with the mayor of a city or passed by the council in a village, except as hereinafter provided. * * *"

Sec. 4227-3 G. C., as enacted in 103 O. L. 212, reads as follows:

"Sec. 4227-3. Whenever the council of any municipal corporation is by law required to pass more than one ordinance or other measure to complete the legislation necessary to make and pay for any public improvement, the provisions of this act shall apply only to the first ordinance or other measure required to be passed and not to any subsequent ordinances and other measures relating thereto. Ordinances or other measures providing for appropriations for the current expenses of any municipal corporation, or for street improvements petitioned for by the owners of a majority of the feet front of the property benefited and to be especially assessed for the cost thereof as provided by statute, and emergency ordinances or measures necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety in such municipal corporation, shall go into immediate effect. Such emergency ordinances or measures must, upon a yea and nay vote, receive the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to the council or other body corresponding to the council of such municipal corporation, and the reasons for such necessity shall be set forth in one section of the ordinance or other measure. The provisions of this act shall apply to pending legislation providing for any public improvement."

Section 4227-2, supra, provides in effect that all ordinances or measures passed by council shall be subject to the referendum, except as hereinafter provided. It also provides that no ordinance or other measure shall go into effect until thirty days after it has been filed with the mayor of the city, except as hereinafter provided.

The exceptions are set forth in section 4227-3, supra, and while an ordinance providing for appropriations for the current expenses of a municipal corporation is excepted from the referendum, nothing is said about an ordinance determining the number of officers, clerks and employes in a certain department and fixing their compensation and bond, if any. Hence, we must assume that the latter ordinance is subject to the referendum.

It would seem clear, therefore, that it was the intent and purpose of the legislature that an ordinance of such a character, being general in scope, should be subject to the referendum of electors of the municipal corporation, so that they might have a chance to either approve or disapprove of the number of officers, clerks and employes determined by council for a certain department and the amount of compensation and bond, if any, fixed therefor.

Hence, to permit these matters to be determined and fixed in the semi-annual appropriation ordinance would defeat the evident intent and purpose of the legislature to have these matters subject to the referendum of the electors of said corporation, since we have seen that the act of the council of a municipal corporation in making semi-annual appropriations for its needs and in performing this express duty placed upon it by the legislature is not subject to the referendum and goes into immediate effect.

I am, therefore, of the opinion, for the reasons given above, that the act of council in appropriating in the regular semi-annual appropriation ordinance sufficient moneys to cover the compensation of a certain position in detail and specifying the title of the position, does not constitute a legal compliance with the provisions of section 4214 G. C. in creating said position and fixing the compensation thereof.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

DIRECTOR OF REFERENCE AND RESEARCH—AS TEACHER WITHIN MEANING OF SEC. 7838—AND ELIGIBLE TO MEMBERSHIP ON CITY BOARD OF EXAMINERS.

A teacher in the city schools who is assigned to the position of director of reference and research in which capacity all the work he does is in connection with the educational department, may continue to serve as a member of the city board of examiners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1917.

HON. FRANK R. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your request of January 25, 1917, asking my opinion on the following proposition:

> "Mr. C. W. Sutton is a member of the city board of school examiners of Cleveland, Ohio. He is a regular teacher and was reappointed as teacher last June. He is assigned, however, to the position of director of reference and research, in which capacity all the work he does is in connection with the educational department. The action of the board of education in creating this place required that it be filled by a regular teacher. Until last May Mr. Sutton was supervisor of requisitions and reports. The title of his position was then changed. Is he eligible to serve as a member of the city board of examiners for the city school district?"

General Code section 7838 provides as follows:

> "There shall be a city board of school examiners for each city school district. Such board shall consist of the city superintendent of schools and two other competent teachers serving full time in the day schools of such city to be appointed by the city board of education. The term of office of such examiners shall be two years each, one to be appointed each year; and shall expire on the thirty-first day of August."

You will note from the above that the qualifications necessary to be a member of the board of examiners of a city school district are either a superintendent of schools or a competent teacher serving full time in the day schools of such city.

Teacher is defined by "Webster" as one who instructs or one whose business or occupation is to instruct others. The "Century" says:

> "To teach is to point out, to direct, or to show."

It is provided by General Code section 7881:

> "The term 'teacher' in this chapter shall include all teachers regularly employed by either of such boards in the day schools, including the superintendent of schools, all superintendents of instruction, principals, and special teachers. * * *"

While the above definition is given under the teachers' pension laws, yet it is an indication of what our legislators termed as teacher, and the above statutory definition is given verbatim in Vol. 8, Words and Phrases, page 6892, as applying to city schools.

In Venable v. Schafer, 28 O. C. C. R. 202, the following language is used:

"In construing a statute, a word should not be given a limited or specialized meaning, unless such meaning is made by legislative enactment; hence * * * the word 'teacher' not being specifically restricted in its meaning, will comprehend within its purview such instructors as shall have spent a part of the time required in teaching in schools not supported in whole or in part by public taxation."

Again,

"A statute punishing any guardian of any female under the age of eighteen years or any other person in whose care such female shall have been confided, who shall casually know her, includes a school teacher, and the relation of 'teacher' and pupil, as well after the child reaches home as it does in the school room. It exists on Sunday as well as on a school day."

State v. Hesterly, 81 S. W. 624.

You state in your letter that Mr. Sutton has been appointed to the position of director of reference and research, a position in the schools and educational in character, created to assist in the cultivation and instruction of the youth who attend such schools, and, that one of the requirements for such place is that he be a regular teacher, so that by the action of the board itself appointing Mr. Sutton to the position of director of reference and research, which position must be filled by a regular teacher, it is only fair to assume that he is not only a regular teacher, but, in the words of the statute, "a competent teacher" as well. The only other qualification found necessary by the provisions of section 7838, above quoted, is that he serve full time in the day schools of said city. There is nothing in your letter to indicate that he is serving in the night schools, and, therefore, I must assume that he is serving in the day schools.

Answering then your question specifically, I advise you that under the statement of facts given in your letter Mr. Sutton is eligible to serve as a member of the city board of examiners of the Cleveland school district.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRUSTEES OF CHILDREN'S HOME—MAY BE REMOVED FOR PROPER CAUSE—DEADLOCK IN SELECTION OF SUPERINTENDENT NOT IN ITSELF SUFFICIENT CAUSE FOR REMOVAL—REPORT TO CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION AS TO TIME OF MAKING DIRECTORY.

County commissioners may remove trustees of children's homes only for proper cause, a deadlock in the selection of a superintendent is not of itself proper cause but sufficient cause.

Report to civil service commission directory and not mandatory as to time of making.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 26, 1917.

HON. E. A. SCOTT, Prosecuting Attorney, West Union, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 25, 1917, in which you ask my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Last October, 1916, a vacancy occurred in the superintendency of the Adams county children's home by reason of death. There being no eligible list for the trustees to select from an examination was held in the month of December, and an eligible list of three persons was certified to the trustees by the civil service commission on January 5, 1917. The trustees have had two meetings to employ a superintendent and have failed to do so, being deadlocked, two for one applicant and two for another. They have allowed the time fixed by law to hire and report to the commission to pass and appear to be hopelessly divided, leaving the institution without a head. Can the county commissioners remove a part or all members of the board of trustees and appoint others to fill their places so as to relieve the situation?"

Section 3077 G. C., 103 O. L. 889, is in part as follows:

> "When in their opinion the interests of the public so demand, the commissioners of a county may, or upon the written petition of two hundred or more taxpayers, shall, provided the approval of the board of state charities has been first obtained, at the next regular election submit to the qualified electors of such county, or the counties forming a district, the question of establishing a children's home for such county or district, and the issue of county bonds or notes to provide funds therefor. * * *"

Section 3078 G. C. is as follows:

> "If at such election a majority of electors voting on the proposition are in favor of establishing such home, the commissioners of the county, or of any adjoining counties in such district, having so voted in favor thereof, shall provide for the purchase of a suitable site and the erection of the necessary buildings and provide means by taxation for such purchase and the support thereof. Such institution shall be styled the children's home for such county or district."

Section 3081 G. C. is as follows:

> "When the necessary site and buildings are provided by the county, the commissioners shall appoint a board of four trustees, as follows: One for one year, one for two years, one for three years, and one for four years, from the first Monday of March thereafter. Not more than two of such trustees shall be of the same political party. Annually thereafter on the first Monday of March, the county commissioners shall appoint one such trustee, who shall hold his office for the term of four years and until his successor is appointed and qualified."

Section 3082 G. C. is as follows:

"The commissioners shall immediately fill a vacancy caused by death, resignation or removal, by appointment for the unexpired term. They may remove any trustee appointed by such board of commissioners for cause impairing faithful, efficient and intelligent administration, or for conduct unbecoming to such office, after an opportunity is given to be heard upon written charges, but no removal shall be made for political reasons."

Section 3084 G. C. is as follows:

"The board of trustees shall designate a suitable person to act as superintendent of the home, who shall also be clerk of such board, and who shall receive for his services such compensation as the board of trustees designates at the time of his appointment. He shall perform such duties, and give security for their faithful performance, as the trustees require."

The above sections and parts of sections quoted contain the statute laws of our state in relation to the organization and management of children's homes, and as noted above, the county commissioners of the county in which the home is located are given the authority to appoint the trustees to manage said home. It is also noted in section 3082 G. C., above quoted, that they (the commissioners) may remove any trustee for certain causes set forth. The causes seem to be two in number.

First, "for cause impairing faithful, efficient and intelligent administration," and second, "for conduct unbecoming to such office." It is also to be noted from the provisions of said section that no trustee can be removed without written charges being filed, and while the section is silent, I take it, the charges must be filed before the appointing board, and that said trustee against whom said written charges are filed is given an opportunity to be heard in relation to said charges and that no removal shall be made for political reasons, but the section is plain that if the appointing board finds that a member of the board of trustees has been unfaithful, inefficient and non-intelligent in the administration of the affairs of his position, or if the appointing board finds that a member of said board of trustees is guilty of conduct unbecoming to such office, such trustee may be removed for either or both of the above causes.

It is for the board of commissioners to say, after hearing the evidence in relation to said charges and acts performed by such trustee against whom said charges are filed, whether or not such trustee is guilty of the act or acts complained of, and whether or not such acts be covered by the above mentioned grounds of removal. In your letter you mention the fact that the board is deadlocked, two voting for one person and two voting for another. This fact of itself is not cause for removal, but the facts which caused the deadlock may or may not be cause for removal, depending on said facts.

It is suggested by you that the time fixed by law to hire and report to the commission has passed. By the above, I take it you mean the report to be given to the civil service commission, but that provision, I am satisfied, is only directory and not mandatory.

So that, answering your question specifically, I advise you that the mere fact that the board is deadlocked is not cause for removal but that the facts which caused the deadlock may or may not be cause for removal, depending on whether or not the same are within the causes of removal set out in section 3082 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF THE CITY OF BARBERTOWN, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"RE:—Bonds of the city of Barberton, Ohio, in the sum of $54,443.00, issued for the purpose of paying the city's portion of the expense of abolishing certain grade crossings on Huston St., Robinson Ave., and Tuscarawas Ave., in said city, being one bond of $443.00, and 108 bonds of $500.00 each."

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the council and other officers of the city of Barberton in connection with the above bond issue, also the bond and coupon form attached, and I find the same regular and in conformity with the provisions of the General Code.

I am of the opinion that said bonds drawn in accordance with the form submitted and signed by the proper officers will, upon delivery, constitute valid and binding obligations of the city of Barberton.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 17th transmitting to me certain resolutions providing for the sale of the easement of the state of Ohio in and to a certain basin on the abandoned Hocking Canal property to The Frank E. Wilson Manufacturing Company, of Lancaster, Ohio.

I have examined carefully the different steps leading up to the sale of this property and find that all jurisdictional matters pertaining thereto are legal and regular.

I, therefore, have approved said resolutions and am this day forwarding the same to the governor for his approval.

Very truly yours,

Attorney-General.

MOTOR VEHICLES—NOT IN MOTION NOT REQUIRED TO DISPLAY LIGHTS—FINE PAID UNDER A MISTAKE OF LAW—CANNOT BE RECOVERED UNLESS PAID INVOLUNTARILY.

Section 12614 G. C. is applicable only to motor vehicles which are in motion. There can be no recovery for or restitution of a fine paid under a mistake of law unless the payment of same was made involuntarily under duress.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1917.

HON. CALVIN D. SPITLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication under date of January 15, 1917, enclosing a request from the mayor of Tiffin, Ohio, for an interpretation of section 12614 G. C. on the following point, to wit:

> "The question has been raised in Tiffin as to whether or not under section 12614 G. C. an automobile operated upon the public streets of this city may stop temporarily and have the driver of same put out its front and rear lights without being in violation of said section. It is contended by some auto drivers in the community that the aforesaid section only applies to an automobile which is actually moving, and if it stops in front of a place of business or residence, no matter for what purpose, or how short, or how long it is standing there, that the driver may extinguish his front and rear lights, and not be in conflict or violate the aforesaid section."

Section 12614 G. C., as amended in 103 O. L. 766, reads as follows:

> "Sec. 12614. Whoever operates or drives a motor vehicle upon the public roads and highways without providing it with sufficient brakes to control it at all times and a suitable and adequate bell or other device for signalling, or fails during the period from thirty minutes after sunset to thirty minutes before sunrise to display a red light on the rear thereof and three white lights, two on the front and one on the rear thereof, the rays of which rear white light shall shine upon and illumninate each and every part of the distinctive number borne upon such motor vehicle, the light of which front lamps to be visible at least two hundred feet in the direction in which such motor vehicle is proceeding, shall be fined not more than twenty-five dollars. Provided, that motor vehicles of the type commonly called motor cycles shall display one white light in front to be visible at least two hundred feet in the direction in which such motor vehicle is proceeding, and one rear combination red and white light, showing red in the direction from which such motor vehicle is proceeding, and such rear light to be so placed that it will reflect its white light upon and fully and clearly illuminate the distinctive license identification mark of such motor vehicle."

Under date of November 13, 1916, my predecessor in office, Hon. Edward C. Turner, considered the particular matter in question in an opinion to Hon. Joseph W. Horner, prosecuting attorney, Newark, Ohio, which opinion provides in part as follows:

"A motor vehicle which is not in motion could not be said to be operated or driven. It might be argued that the provision making it an offense to operate or drive a motor vehicle without sufficient brakes or without a signaling device is not related to the provision making it an offense to fail to display lights and that the latter provision applies to all motor vehicles on the public roads or highways without regard to whether they are being operated or driven. This construction of the statute is, however, rendered untenable by the provision that the light of the front lamps shall be visible at least two hundred feet in the direction in which the motor vehicle is proceeding. This latter provision is, to my mind, conclusive of the intention of the legislature to make the provisions of section 12614 G. C. applicable only to motor vehicles which are in motion."

I concur in the reasons given in this opinion and in the decision reached, and am of the opinion that section 12614 supra is applicable only to motor vehicles which are in motion.

Under date of January 29, 1917, you submitted a supplemental request with reference to the above matter, with which was enclosed a communication of the same date addressed to you by the mayor of Tiffin, Ohio, in which the following request for an opinion was made:

"On January 8 last I sent a communication to you asking you to procure an interpretation of section 12614 G. C. as to whether there was an offense under this section when autos were standing and not in motion. At that time I neglected to ask for the additional information as to whether the fines and costs so assessed in such cases could be recovered back by the offenders, some of which plead guilty and some plead not guilty and were tried and found to be guilty, and which fines have all been paid into the county treasury. All of these cases were tried before former Attorney-General Turner had rendered his opinion, which I believe was on November 13, 1916, to Hon. Joseph W. Horner, prosecuting attorney, Newark, Ohio."

As to this last mentioned request, which has reference to the recovery of fines paid under a mistake of the law, the following principles, set forth in volume 19, of Cyc., pages 558-559, are in point:

"A fine illegally imposed may be recovered back where it was paid involuntarily or under duress, for example, where it was paid to avoid or obtain release from imprisonment; but there can be no recovery where the fine, although illegally imposed, was voluntarily paid under a mistake of law, as for instance, where the payment was induced, not because of threatened imprisonment but to avoid further inconvenience and trouble. The mere fact, however, that the judgment imposing a fine is void as being in excess of the jurisdiction of the court does not, it has been held, constitute a sufficient ground for recovering back money paid without objection or protest.

"Restitution of a fine after the reversal of a judgment imposing it is not a matter of right, but it is for the court to determine whether the payment was voluntarily or involuntarily made, and therefore whether defendant is entitled to a restitution."

The above principles are sustained by numerous authorities. Their applicability to the question presented by you depends upon the particular facts in the cases tried before the mayor of Tiffin. The general principle of law, that money voluntarily paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered, is unquestioned.

The particular facts in each individual case have not been presented to me and hence it would be impossible for me to apply the principles of law to the facts. As a practical matter, the fines which have been paid under mistake of law should remain in the county treasury until some action is taken by the party who paid same. The party paying same would have no right to insist upon recovery of the amount paid unless he could show that he had been compelled, under duress of threatened imprisonment, to pay said sum.

It is my opinion that the general principles of law above stated will enable you to determine what action should be taken on the fines paid under a mistake of law in case the persons paying same should attempt to bring an action for the recovery of same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

INDIGENT POOR—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES MUST MAKE PROVISION FOR IN TOWNSHIP—WHEN CONFINES OF CITY OR VILLAGE THEREIN IS NOT CO-EXTENSIVE WITH SAID TOWNSHIP.

In township wherein either villages or cities, or both, are situated, so long as the confines of such village or city is not co-extensive with the township, the township trustees are required to provide for the indigent poor of such municipal corporations in the same manner as they provide for the indigent poor in the part of the township outside the municipal corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1917.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of January 6, 1917, you ask for an opinion on the question of whether it is the duty of the township trustees or of the municipal corporation in said township to take care of the poor who reside within the limits of a municipality, especially if such municipality is a village, the corporate lines not being co-extensive with the township," but there being both a township and municipal organization. You further inquire what the "law is in regard to a city in the township."

Section 3476 G. C. provides:

> "Subject to the conditions, provisions and limitations herein, the trustees of each township or the proper officers of each municipal corporation therein, respectively, shall afford at the expense of such township or municipal corporation public support or relief to all persons therein who are in condition requiring it."

This section was formerly section 1491 G. C., and previous to 1898 read as follows:

> (73 O. L. 233, Sec. 11.) "That the trustees of each township in this state shall afford, at the expense of their township, public support or relief to all persons therein who may be in condition requiring the same, subject to the conditions, provisions and limitations of this act."

In this act of April 12, 1876, there seems to have been attempted a revision of the statutes for the relief of the poor, and in a subheading, under the title of "city infirmaries," section 23 of the act provides certain duties of city infirmary directors of such infirmaries and makes the provisions of the section applicable only to counties in which there is a county and city infirmary. Under that section the directors of the city infirmaries furnished relief and support to persons in the city infirmary applying therefor the same as county directors are required to do and had other like powers that the county infirmary directors had under the law.

In 93 Ohio Laws, at page 261, an act was passed revising and improving the statutes of Ohio relating to the care of the poor, section 957 R. S. providing for a board of county infirmary directors, expressly stating that they are chosen by the electors of the county "unless part of the county is not taxed for the support of the county infirmary. In such case they shall be voted for by the residents of the territory so taxed." This act repealed old section 1491 and amended it so as to read as follows:

Section 1491 R. S.

> "The trustees of each township in the state or the proper officers of the corporation therein shall afford, at the expense of their township or a corporation, public support or relief to all persons therein who may be in condition requiring the same, subject to the conditions, provisions and limitations thereon."

Section 1491 R. S. was carried into the General Code as section 3476, supra, and is, with kindred sections, found in part 1, title II, division 4 "Charity," chapter 1 "Poor."

Section 3480 G. C. reads:

> "When a person in a township or municipal corporation requires public relief * * * complaint thereof shall be forthwith made by a person having knowledge of the fact to the township trustees, or proper municipal officer. * * *"

Section 3481 G. C. provides:

> "When complaint is made to the township trustees or to the proper officers of a municipal corporation that a person therein requires public relief or support * * *"

Section 3485 G. C. provides:

"The township trustees or proper officers of a municipal corporation shall keep accurate accounts of expenses so incurred. * * * The clerk of the township or municipality shall record the accounts in the proper records * * *. Such trustees or proper officers shall issue orders on the treasurer thereof for such demands when they accrue."

In sections 3486, 3487, 3490, 3492, 3493, 3494 and 3495 the same phraseology will be found and the trustees and the proper officers of the municipal corporation are coupled together and the ambiguity appearing in section 3476 continues in the sections of the chapter above quoted.

Section 4089 General Code provides:

"The management of the affairs of corporation infirmaries and the care of the inmates thereof, the erection and enlargement of infirmary buildings and additions thereto, the repair and furnishing thereof, the improvement of the grounds therewith connected, and the granting of outdoor relief to the poor, shall be vested in the director of public safety."

Section 4356 gives to councils of villages the care, supervision and management of public institutions, including infirmaries.

Section 5646 G. C. provides:

"The trustees of each township, on or before the fifteenth day of May, annually, shall determine the amount of taxes necessary for all township purposes, and certify it to the county auditor. * * *"

This section further provides:

"The county auditor shall levy, annually, for township purposes, including the relief of the poor * * * such rates and taxes as the trustees of the respective townships certify to him to be necessary, * * *."

Section 5647 G. C. provides:

"In counties where there are no county infirmaries, a township tax in addition to the tax provided in the next preceding section, and not to exceed one mill and five-tenths of a mill on each dollar of the taxable property of the township may be levied for the relief of the poor, to be applied solely to that purpose."

Section 5648 G. C. provides:

"The trustees of any township which incurs liabilities for the relief of the poor, beyond the amount raised by the levy authorized by law, may make an additional levy, for the purpose of discharging such liabilities, not exceeding six-tenths of one mill on the dollar of the taxable property of such township."

It will be noted that the township levy is on all the property of the township, including municipalities situated therein. It certainly could not have been the legislative intent to provide for a levy on the taxable property of the municipalities and then have this tax expended for a purpose limited to persons outside the municipality.

It is my opinion, in view of all the foregoing, that in townships where either cities or villages are situated, so long as the confines of the city or village are not co-extensive with the township, the township trustees are required to provide for the indigent poor of the municipal corporations in the same manner as they provide for the indigent poor who live in that part of the township outside of the municipal corporation.

Section 3512 G. C. provides:

> "When the corporate limits of a city or village become identical with those of a township, all township offices shall be abolished, and the duties thereof shall thereafter be performed by the corresponding officers of the city or village, except that justices of the peace and constables shall continue the exercise of their functions under municipal ordinances providing offices, regulating the disposition of their fees, their compensation, clerks and other officers and employes. Such justices and constables shall be elected at municipal elections. All property, moneys, credits, books, records and documents of such township shall be delivered to the council of such city or village. All rights, interests or claims in favor of or against the township may be enforced by or against the corporation."

A similar statutory provision to section 3512 G. C. was construed in McGill v. State, 34 O. S. 228, and it was held that such provision was intended to comply with the constitutional requirement that justices of the peace should be elected by townships, and that for all other purposes the township organization in municipal corporations was abolished. At that time the office of justice of the peace was a constitutional office and for that reason was excepted in the statute. So it is evident that there would not be any township trustees in cities or villages whose corporate limits become identical with those of a township.

The question you submit was passed on by former Attorney-General Timothy S. Hogan, in an opinion found in the Reports of the Attorney-General for the years 1911-1912, volume 1, page 250. In this opinion I have reached the same conclusion and concur with that opinion.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney General.

CONTRACT—BETWEEN BOARD OF EDUCATION OF THE RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT OF SCIOTO TOWNSHIP—PICKAWAY COUNTY AND DEPOSITORY—WAS MADE FOR ONE YEAR—BOARD SHOULD ENTER INTO NEW CONTRACT TO EXTEND TO CONTRACTING PERIOD.

A contract establishing a depository as provided by G. C. 7604-9 was made for one year certain on January 31, 1916.

The board of education should enter into a new contract to extend to the contracting period, i. e., within thirty days after the first Monday of January, 1918.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1917.

MR. J. L. HEISE, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 14, 1917, you request my opinion upon the following proposition:

> "The contract between the board of education of the rural school district of Scioto township, Pickaway county, Ohio, and a banking company for the deposit of school funds, was made on form 1807 published by the Ruggles-Gale Company, Columbus, Ohio, a blank form of which is enclosed herewith, and is supposed to comply with Sec. 3968 or Sec. 7604-9 G. C.
> "Said contract contains the following statement, to wit: 'It is agreed between said board of education and said Scioto bank that the funds of said school district shall be deposited in and received and safely kept by said bank, from and after the date hereof for the period of one year, and thereafter until this contract is terminated by one of the parties to it, as hereinafter provided.'
> "This contract took effect January 31, 1916, continued for one year and terminated January 31, 1917, according to its terms unless it is automatically continued in force by either or both parties neglecting to notify, in writing, the other party of its intention to terminate said contract. Neither party has so notified the other so far as I have been informed. Is this a valid contract under amended sections 7604 and 7605 G. C., on account of the two years mentioned therein?
> "Is this contract in force at the present time?
> "If the clerk of the board of education of said Scioto township issues a certificate on the county auditor to pay the February distribution of school funds over to said Scioto bank is he safe in doing so, or should he do it?"

From our conversation with you on February 23, 1917, I learn the following additional facts:

> That there is but one bank in Scioto township rural school district, and that is the bank with which the contract for the depository was made in January of 1916, and that it was the only bank located in said rural school district at that time.

Your inquiry involves the construction of those sections of the General Code which provide for the establishment of a depository for the school funds of any school district.

General Code section 7604 provides in part:

"Within thirty days after the first Monday of January, 1916, and every two years thereafter, the board of education of any school district, by resolution, shall provide for the deposit of any and all moneys coming into the hands of its treasurer. * * *"

General Code section 7605 provides in part:

"* * * but no contract for the deposit of school funds shall be made for a longer period than two years."

Section 7607 of the General Code provides:

"In all school districts containing less than two banks, after the adoption of a resolution providing for the deposit of its funds, the board of education may enter into a contract with one or more banks that are conveniently located and offer the highest rate of interest, which shall not be less than two per cent. for the full time the funds or any part thereof are on deposit. Such bank or banks shall give good and sufficient bond, or shall deposit bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or county, municipal, township or school bonds issued by the authority of the state of Ohio, at the option of the board of education, in a sum at least equal to the amount deposited. The treasurer of the school district must see that a greater sum than that contained in the bond is not deposited in such bank or banks, and he and his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned by deposits in excess of such bond."

General Code section 7609 provides in part:

"* * * upon the failure of the board of education of any school district to provide a depository according to law, the members of the board of education shall be liable for any loss occasioned by their failure to provide such depository and in addition shall pay to the treasurer of the school funds two per cent. on the average daily balance on the school funds during the time said school district shall be without a depository. Said moneys shall be recovered from the members of the board of education for the use and benefit of the school funds of the district upon the suit of any taxpayer of the school district."

General Code section 4763 provides in part:

"* * * In * * rural school districts which do not provide legal depositories, as provided in section 7604 and 7608 inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such district."

Prior to May 15, 1915, at which time section 7604 was amended to read as above, a board of education could provide for a depository for the school funds of the school district at any time during the year, but under the provisions of the section as it now stands the board of education must, within thirty days after the first Monday of January, in the even numbered years, provide for the deposit of all moneys coming into the hands of its treasurer and a failure to do so makes the members of the board of education personally liable for any loss occasioned by their failure to provide for such depository, and other penalties. The statute does not say that the contract shall be for any certain length of time, but it does designate the time when the contract for the deposit of said funds shall be made and that it shall be made for not more than two years. I do not believe, however, that the time mentioned for entering into said contracts is such a mandatory proposition as will prevent the board of education from entering into the same after the said period of thirty days, in case there should be a failure to enter into the same within that time, but I do think that the language is clear enough that the contract thus entered into should, when entered into during said period, be so entered into for the term of two years, and I am further of the opinion that said period of thirty days following the first day of January, in the even numbered years, is made a beginning and an ending time for such depository contracts. In your case, however, the contract was not entered into for two years but for one year certain, with a conditional extension, and without passing upon the question as to whether or not such conditional extension is or is not valid, I am of the opinion that under the provisions of section 7607, above quoted, there being only one bank in the district, and from my interpretation that the language is directory and will permit a board of education to enter into such depository contract outside of the thirty-day period, above mentioned, the board of education should at once adopt a resolution providing for the deposit of its funds from now until some time within the thirty-day period from and after the first Monday in January, 1918, and that then a new contract covering said period should be entered into with said bank and that the bank should give a good and sufficient bond, or deposit bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio or county, municipal, township or school bonds, as security for the safe keeping and the return of said money so deposited, and thus avoid all question as to what might or might not happen under the terms of the contract of January 31, 1916.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TAXES—BECOME LIEN ON REAL PROPERTY AS OF THE DATE PRECEDING SECOND MONDAY OF APRIL—BOARD OF EDUCATION PURCHASING SUCH PROPERTY HOLD SAME SUBJECT TO SAID LIEN—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO REFUND SAID TAXES AFTER PAYMENT.

1. Taxes lawfully assessed become a lien on real property as of the date preceding the second Monday of April, and a board of education of the school district thereafter procuring such real property for school purposes either by purchase or appropriation holds such property subject to said tax lien until the same is paid.

2. The board of county commissioners have no power either to remit said taxes or any part thereof or to refund the same to the board of education after the payment thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1917.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have at hand your letter under date of January 26, 1917, in which you say:

> "On the 20th day of May, 1916, the board of education of Columbus Grove village school district, passed a resolution appropriating lots Nos.

446 and 452 in said school district for school purposes.

"Thereafter, trial was had in the probate court in appropriate proceedings, in which a judgment for $5,000.00 was awarded in favor of property owners.

"This judgment or verdict included all of the buildings and machinery attached to same, and thereafter, on the ____day of December, 1916, the case and matter was compromised by the said village school district paying to the proprietors or owners the sum of $3,250.00, they taking from the said premises all of the buildings.

"The real estate, as placed on the tax duplicate for the lands is $365.00, and that for the buildings $845.00.

"About December, a quit claim deed was delivered from owners of land to said board of education, and the entry filed in the probate court showing and stating that the said entry acted as a conveyance of the said premises to the board of education.

"Taxes have been levied for the year 1916 against the said premises in the amount of $18.38, this including the whole property. Is the school district liable for the payment of said taxes, or any part of said taxes?

"If yes, the property being appropriated for school purposes only, have the commissioners authority to rebate the taxes if paid, or issue a refunder for the same or any part of the same."

Applicable to a consideration of the question presented by you I note the provisions of sections 7624 and 5671, General Code, which are as follows:

"Sec. 7624. When it is necessary to procure or enlarge a school site or to purchase real estate to be used for agricultural purposes, athletic field or play ground for children, and the board of education and the owner of the property needed for such purposes are unable to agree upon the sale and purchase thereof, the board shall make an accurate plat and description of the parcel of land which it desires for such purposes, and file them with the probate judge, or court of insolvency, of the proper county. Thereupon the same proceedings or appropriation shall be had which are provided for the appropriation of private property by municipal corporations.

"Sec. 5671. The lien of the state for taxes levied for all purposes, in each year, shall attach to all real property subject to such taxes on the day preceding the second Monday of April, annually, and continue until such taxes, with any penalties accruing thereon, are paid. All personal property subject to taxation shall be liable to be seized and sold for taxes. The personal property of a deceased person shall be liable, in the hands of an executor or administrator, for any tax due on it from the testator or intestate."

Inasmuch as no steps were taken by the board of education of the school district to appropriate the property in question until after the day preceding the second Monday of April, 1916, it is not necessary to discuss the question as to the particular time when title to the property passed to the board of education by virtue of the appropriation proceedings, although as to this I may say, inter alia, that it seems clear that title does not pass until full compensation has been paid or secured to be paid to the owner or owners of the property appropriated.

Although taxes on property in your county for the year 1916 were not levied until a date much later than the day preceding the second Monday of April, 1916, nevertheless said taxes when levied related back as a lien on the real property within the county as of the day preceding the second Monday of April, 1916. (State ex rel. vs. Roose, auditor, 90 O. S. 345). The lien for taxes on the property appropriated by the board of education was not divested by the condemnation proceedings, and although the amount of the tax lien could, and properly should, have been paid out of the compensation awarded the owner or owners of the property appropriated, yet the same not having been done the taxes are still a lien on the property as against the board of education, present owners, and the board is liable for the payment of such taxes. (Cincinnati v. Jones, 24 C. C., n. s. 374.)

As to your second inquiry as to whether or not the commissioners of the county have authority to rebate or refund the taxes if paid by the board of education, I am of the opinion that, under the decision of the supreme court in the case of Peter v. Parkinson, treasurer, 83 O. S. 36, the county commissioners have no power either to remit the taxes before payment or refund them afterwards.

Under section 2416 of the General Code the county commissioners have the power to release in whole or in part any debt to the county, and under section 2589 of the General Code the county commissioners have power under certain circumstances to order refunded taxes that have been erroneously charged and collected. It was held by the supreme court in the case just cited that under neither of the sections of the General Code above noted did the board of county commissioners have power to remit or release, either in whole or in part, taxes that stand charged on the duplicate and are unpaid.

As section 2589 of the General Code, relating back to section 2588, gives the county commissioners power only to refund taxes levied on exempted property or taxes which have been erroneously assessed, it is apparent that inasmuch as the taxes here in question were not exempted at the time the lien therefor became effective and it does not appear that the assessment of taxes on this property was made through error of any kind there is no power in the county commissioners to remit the taxes on this property or refund the same after payment.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATUTE—WHEN SAME IS REPEALED ALL RIGHTS, ETC., ARE LOST UNDER IT—WHERE OFFICER UNDER REPEALED STATUTE OR REAPPOINTMENT QUALIFIES UNDER NEW STATUTE HE SURRENDERS ALL RIGHTS UNDER FIRST APPOINTMENT—FIRST APPOINTMENT CEASES WHEN NEW ACT TAKES EFFECT—CLINTON COWEN.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1917.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 1, 1917, in which you ask my opinion upon matters set out in said communication, which reads as follows:

> "On May 27, 1915, under the provisions of section 1178 of the General Code, Clinton Cowen was appointed and commissioned state highway commissioner, for the term ending June 16, 1919, the appointee being confirmed by the senate the day of appointment.
> "By act of the general assembly, passed May 17, 1915, approved by the governor June 2, 1915, said section 1178 of the General Code was repealed, and a new section under the same number enacted, the new section under the constitutional provisions becoming effective on or about September 6, 1915.

"Subsequent to May 27, 1915, no highway commissioner has been appointed, Mr. Cowen still acting in that capacity.

"Under the above statement of facts, I beg to be advised as to the present status of the head of this department."

Your inquiry has to do with the construction of what is known as the Cass highway law, which was enacted by the eighty-first general assembly and is found in 106 O. L. 574. In order to understand the provisions of this act, especially the provisions relating to the repeal of former acts, it will be necessary to note briefly the recent history of laws relating to highways.

In 99 O. L. 308 a state highway department was created. In 101 O. L. 200 there is an act providing that the state highway commissioner be directed to recommend a system of highway laws for Ohio, to take the place of all existing road laws. At page 341 of said 101 O. L. there is an act which simply authorized the township trustees to expend certain moneys levied and collected under a former act.

In 102 O. L. 333 there is an act, the title of which is as follows:

"Creating a state highway department, defining the duties thereof, and providing aid in the construction and maintenance of highways, and to repeal certain sections of the General Code."

This act repeals many sections of statutes; then provided in the very last section that:

"This act shall supersede all sections and parts of sections or acts and parts of acts, not herein expressly repealed, which are inconsistent herewith."

But Governor Harmon, when the bill was presented to him, vetoed the section of said act which provided for a levy to create a fund to carry out the provisions of the act, and also vetoed the two sections which repealed all former sections and acts inconsistent with the said act.

Then the legislature, in order to provide for a fund to carry out the provisions of the act found in 102 O. L. 333, enacted the law found in 103 O. L. 155, which merely provided for a levy and did not seek to repeal any former statutes or sections thereof.

Now, with this short history of our recent legislation, in reference to highways and highway departments, in mind, let us turn to the act found in 106 O. L. 574, which is the act now in force. Let us first notice the title of the act, which provides as follows:

"To provide a system of highway laws for the state of Ohio, and to repeal all sections of the General Code, and acts inconsistent herewith."

Let us next look to the repealing clause. In the first part of the repealing section, the legislature repealed over eight hundred sections of statutes, thus endeavoring to repeal all sections of statutes inconsistent therewith, as provided for in the title of the act. But the legislature fearing that it might have omitted something, specifically repealed the entire acts as found in:

101 O. L. 200-201.
101 O. L. 341.
102 O. L. 333-349.
103 O. L. 155.

The language used in said repealing section is as follows:

"An act entitled, 'An act to provide for a new highway law for Ohio to take the place of all existing road laws.' Passed May 10, 1900 (101 O. L. pp. 200-201).

"An act entitled, 'An act to authorize the township trustees to expend certain moneys levied and collected under the authority of an act entitled, 'An act to further supplement section 4889 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, passed April, 1902,' passed May 10, 1901 (101 O. L. p. 341.)

"Sections 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 of an act entitled, 'An act providing a levy and to create a fund for the purposes provided in the act passed May 31, 1911, entitled, "An act creating a state highway department, defining the duties thereof and providing aid in the construction and maintenance of highways and to repeal certain sections of the General Code,' approved June 9, 1911 (102 O. L. pp. 333-349), and for other purposes defined herein. (103 O. L. p. 155.)

"An act entitled, 'An act creating a state highway department, defining the duties thereof, and providing aid in the construction and maintenance of highways, and to repeal certain sections of the General Code.'" (102 O. L. p. 333.)

These acts, which are repealed in whole, embody all the recent legislation had in reference to highways and highway departments, as will be noted by referring to the brief history of highway legislation set out herein.

But lest it might have still overlooked some section or provision relating to highways and highway departments, the legislature used the following strong language in the last paragraph of the repealing section:

"This act shall supersede all acts and parts of acts not herein expressly repealed, which are inconsistent herewith."

Then lest a repeal of some act might be construed to revive some law repealed by the act repealed, the legislature further provided as follows:

"And the repeal herein of any acts or sections of the General Code shall not revive a law repealed by any act or section herein repealed."

Thus the legislature swept the statutes of Ohio three times, in order to clear them of every vestige of matter that might in any way relate to highways or officers connected with highway matters. If there ever was a statute enacted by the legislature in which it was the intention of the legislature to clear away everything that ever existed upon the subject-matter with which the statute dealt, and leave itself absolutely a clear field, the statute under consideration did this.

We are safe in assuming that it was the intention of the legislature to leave unrepealed no statutes or sections thereof pertaining to highways or matters relating thereto, other than the act under consideration, commonly known as the Cass highway law.

Now, what force and effect can be given to these repealed statutes and sections thereof, in arriving at a conclusion as to any questions pertaining to the highways or the highway department? None whatever.

Judge Donahue, in rendering the opinion of the court in the late case of The State of Ohio ex rel. v. P. C. O'Brien, et al., has this to say of repealed statutes:

"The repeal of the statute is the end of that statute. To all intents and purposes it is the same as if it had never existed."

This language used by Judge Donahue, in rendering the opinion of the court, is none too strong.

The language used by Judge Donahue in said case is not new or strange. It embodies the principle which has been followed for almost one hundred years in the interpretation of the effect of repealing statutes upon the statutes repealed.

Lord Chief Justice Tindall in Key v. Goodwin, 4 Moore and Payne 341, 351 (decided in 1830), used the following language:

> "The effect of a repealing statute I take to be to obliterate the statute repealed as completely from the records of parliament as if it had never passed, and that it must be considered as a law that never existed, except for the purpose of those actions or suits which were commenced, prosecuted and concluded while it was an existing law."

This language of Chief Justice Tindall has been quoted and approved in many decisions in our own country, of which the following are a few:

133 Wis. 183.
61 Ill. 31, 34.
4 Kas. 489, 500.
35 Barb. 599, 600.
50 Miss. 677, 681.
4 Ore. 119, 122.

In approving the principle laid down by Chief Justice Tindall, the court in the case reported in 50 Miss. 677 says:

> "Sustained, as this case is, by so great a weight of authority, we accept it as an accurate statement of the general rule."

In 4 Ore. 119 the court, in approving the above language, says:

> "Such is the recognized rule in this country."

Possibly there is no case decided in our country that goes into this matter as fully as the one reported in 1 Hill (N. Y.) 324. In this case the court went to great length in discussing the following question, using the language of the court:

> "The question is thus reduced to one of mere construction on the repealing clause before us."

In the opinion Cowen, J., reviews the cases fully. He approves the finding of Lord Chief Justice Tindall. He quotes from Lord Mansfield; from Best, C. J. He investigates Bracton's and Coke's Institutes. He looks into the Roman law. He investigates the civil law and it is his conclusion that all these, without one dissenting voice, leads to this conclusion as set out by the court, namely:

> "On authority, then, at least, no rights arising under the repealed statutes can be saved, except by express reservation in the repealing statute, or when those rights have been perfected, by taking every step which depended for its force upon the former act. Dwarris expresses the result of the cases this way:

"'When an act of parliament is repealed, it must be considered, except as to those transactions passed and closed, as if it never existed.'"

But I am not unmindful of another line of decisions which have to do with statutes that merely re-enact other statutes and repeal the statutes which have theretofore existed. The principle derived from this line of cases might be stated as follows:

The simultaneous repeal and re-enactment of a statute is a mere affirmance of the original act, and not a repeal in the strict or constitutional sense of the term. But to have this effect the authorities are nearly unanimous that the following conditions must obtain:

1. The language or the provisions of the repealing statute must be identical or practically identical with the language and the provisions found in the act repealed.

2. That nothing is to be found in the repealing statute which would indicate that the legislature intended to repeal the former act.

There are a great many decisions which seem to sustain the aforesaid two propositions, but I want to quote from only a few.

In a case reported in 7 N. D. 135, the court in the syllabus found as follows:

"It is only when the provisions of a repealing statute are identical, or practically identical, with the provisions in the statute repealed, that the provisions can be considered as continuing in force without intermission."

In 45 Neb. 724, the court lays down the law in the syllabus as follows:

"It had before that time (the adoption of the constitution) been definitely settled as a rule of construction that the simultaneous repeal and re-enactment of a statute in terms, or in substance, is a mere reaffirmance of the original act, and not a repeal in the strict or constitutional sense of the term."

In 117 N. C. 753 the syllabus sets forth the finding of the court as follows:

"The re-enactment by the legislature of a law in the terms of a former law at the same time it repeals the former law is not in contemplation of law a repeal, but it is a reaffirmance of the former law, whose provisions are thus continued without intermission."

In the opinion the court says that the re-enacting statute in this case was verbatim with the statute repealed.

To support the second proposition set out above, namely, that the intention of the legislature controls, I desire also to quote from a few cases.

In 138 Ill. App. 297, the following principle was laid down in the syllabus:

"Where there is apparent no conflict or intention to supersede, a re-enactment of an earlier statute has been held a continuance, not a repeal, even though a later act expressly repeals the earlier."

In 115 Iowa 657, 665, the court lays down the following principle:

"But where the prohibitory part of the law in the revision is in substantially the same language as in the original act, and there is a manifest purpose to continue the old law, we do not think such re-enactment repeals the prior law in such sense as to annul or abrogate decrees and proceedings had thereunder."

In 48 N. Y. 540, the court discussed the proposition as to the effect of re-enacted statutes upon statutes in whose place the statutes were re-enacted. The court laid down the rule stated in many cases of this nature, but in the opinion the court gives the reasoning as follows:

> "Although the first seven sections of chapter 29 are contained in this chapter, I do not think it was the intention of the legislature to repeal them or suspend their operation until chapter 41 should go into effect, * * * or they probably would have said so in some appropriate language and would not have left it to mere inference."

In a case reported in 139 Wis. 37, the court finds as follows:

> "Provisions of a prior law retained in an amendatory act are not deemed to have been repealed and again re-enacted, but as having existed and continued from the time of their original enactment."

In the opinion the court reasons as follows:

> "This act is entitled 'An act to amend sections 1, 2, 3, 6 and 7, chapter 30, laws of 1903, etc. * * *' The petitioner avers that the effect of this amendment was to repeal all of chapter 230, laws of 1903, and to enact a new law on the subject of the sanitary regulation of bakeries, which is embraced in chapter 486, laws of 1907. To effect such a result the new legislation must show with reasonable clearness that such was the legislative intent. This we do not find from this chapter. The title declared that it is an act to amend certain provisions of the former law and to enact new sections."

Thus we see that in all these cases we are after all driven to the necessity of going to the law itself and ascertaining what really was the intention of the legislature in enacting the law.

When we look at the language of the act under consideration in order to arrive at the intention of the legislature, it seems to me that there can be no question that the legislature intended not merely to re-enact an old statute, but to enact a new one and repeal everything in conflict with it. This seems evident from the reasons heretofore given in this opinion.

In considering this matter, it must be remembered that Hon. Clinton Cowen was appointed state highway commissioner for a term of four years, under and by virtue of section 1 of the act found in 102 O. L. 333, which section reads as follows:

> "Section 1. There shall be a state highway department for the purpose of affording instruction, assistance, and co-operation in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the public roads and bridges of the state, under the provisions of this chapter. This department shall be divided into three bureaus to be known as the bureau of construction, the bureau of maintenance and repair, and the bureau of bridges. The governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, shall appoint a state highway commissioner who shall serve for the term of four years. He shall be a competent civil engineer and experienced in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of roads and bridges, and shall give his whole time and attention to the duties of his office."

This act created a highway department and placed a state highway commissioner at the head of the department, with a four-year tenure of office. As said before, Hon. Clinton Cowen was appointed as head of the department under the provisions of this act. But when the act was repealed, the department fell and necessarily the head of the department fell at the same time, and this, notwithstanding the fact that the term of office for which he had been appointed had not expired.

It is true that the language used in sections 171 and 174 of the act (106 O. L. 574, 623) creating the present state highway department is very similar to the language used in sections 1 and 4 (102 O. L. 333). The language used in the latter two sections is as follows:

"Section 1. There shall be a state highway department for the purpose of affording instruction, assistance, and co-operation in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the public roads and bridges of the state, under the provisions of this chapter. This department shall be divided into three bureaus to be known as the bureau of construction, the bureau of maintenance and repair, and the bureau of bridges. The governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, shall appoint a state highway commissioner who shall serve for the term of four years. He shall be a competent civil engineer and experienced in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of roads and bridges, and shall give his whole time and attention to the duties of his office.

"Section 4. Subject to the approval of the governor, the state highway commissioner shall appoint three deputy highway commissioners, not more than one of whom shall be of the same political party as himself, who shall be competent civil engineers, and serve during the pleasure of the commissioner. One of these deputy highway commissioners shall be experienced in road construction and improvement, and acting under the direction of the highway commissioner, shall have supervision of all matters pertaining to road construction and improvement as provided for in this chapter. Another of said deputies shall be experienced in road maintenance and repair, and acting under the direction of the highway commissioner shall have supervision of all matters pertaining to road maintenance and repair. Another of said deputies shall be experienced in the design, construction, and maintenance and repair of culverts and bridges, and acting under the direction of the state highway commissioner, shall have supervision of all matters pertaining to the design, construction, maintenance and repair of culverts and bridges. The deputy highway commissioner in addition to performing the duties above assigned to them, shall perform such other duties in connection with this department as may be designated by the state highway commissioner. The salary of each of said deputy highway commissioners shall be $3,000 per annum. In addition to their salaries, the deputy highway commissioners shall each be paid their actual traveling expenses not to exceed $1,200 in any one year. The highway commissioner shall require each deputy highway commissioner to give bond in the sum of $5,000 with such sureties as he approves."

The language used in the former is as follows:

"Section 171. There shall be a state highway department for the purpose of affording instruction, assistance and co-operation in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the public roads and bridges of the state, under the provisions of this chapter. The governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, shall appoint a state highway commissioner who shall serve for the term of four years, unless sooner removed by the governor. He shall give his whole time and attention to the duties of his office.

"Section 174. The state highway commissioner shall appoint three deputy highway commissioners, one of whom he shall designate as chief highway engineer and all of whom shall be competent civil engineers and serve during the pleasure of the commissioner. One of these deputy highway commissioners shall be experienced in road construction and improvement, and acting under the direction of the highway commissioner, shall have supervision of all matters pertaining to road construction and improvement as provided for in this chapter. Another of said deputies shall be experienced in road maintenance and repair, and acting under the direction of the state highway commissioner shall have supervision of all matters pertaining to road maintenance and repair. Another of said deputies shall be experienced in the design, construction, maintenance and repair of culverts and bridges, and acting under the direction of the state highway commissioner, shall have supervision of all matters pertaining to the design, construction, maintenance and repair of culverts and bridges. The deputy highway commissioners in addition to performing the duties above assigned to them, shall perform such other duties in connection with this department as may be designated by the state highway commissioner. The salary of each of said deputy highway commissioners shall be three thousand dollars per annum. In addition to their salaries, the deputy highway commissioners shall each be paid their actual traveling expenses not to exceed one thousand two hundred dollars in any one year. The state highway commissioner shall require each deputy highway commissioner to give bond in the sum of five thousand dollars with such sureties as he approves."

But the mere fact that the wording of the act creating the present highway department is much the same as the language used in the act creating the former highway department, and under which Hon. Clinton Cowen on May 27, 1915, was appointed state highway commissioner, has no further bearing other than to aid in arriving at the intention of the legislature in enacting the new law, which after all is what controls.

Whether the language in the two acts is similar or dissimilar, the department created under the act now in force entirely and completely replaces the department provided for in the act repealed by the act now in force. An entirely new order of business is adopted and under this new order of business the governor of the state is authorized to appoint a state highway commissioner. Not the state highway commissioner appointed under the act repealed is to perform the duties and carry out the provisions of the present act, but a state highway commissioner appointed by the governor of the state, under the authority of the act now in force, is to perform the duties and carry out the provisions of the present act.

That this was the intention of the legislature when it enacted the Cass highway law seems evident from the "saving provisions" of the act, found in sections 302 and 303 thereof (106 O. L. 663).

Section 302 reads as follows:

"This act shall not affect pending actions or proceedings, civil or criminal, pertaining to the construction, improvement, maintenance, supervision or control of highways, bridges or culverts, brought by or against the county commissioners, county surveyor, township trustees, or road superintendent under the provisions of any statute hereby repealed, but the same may be prosecuted or defended to final determination in like manner, as if such statute had not been repealed."

Section 303 reads in part as follows:

"This act shall not affect or impair any contract or any act done, or right acquired of any penalty, forfeiture or punishment incurred prior to the time when this act or any section thereof takes effect, under or by virtue of any law so repealed, but the same may be asserted, completed, enforced, prosecuted or inflicted as fully and to the same extent as if such laws had not been repealed. * * *"

By these sections the legislature aimed to save pending suits and also to save contracts already entered into, but there is no effort made on the part of the legislature to save any other provisions or parts of former acts, and it is proper to assume that the legislature did not intend to save any other parts or provisions of former acts.

Another circumstance that has a direct bearing upon the question submitted is this:

The act now in force is a complete, comprehensive and all inclusive act. It not only repeals all previous acts and sections thereof having to do with highway matters, but it provides a complete and entire scheme for road building and necessary officials for carrying out the same.

Hence, from any angle we may view the question, from any standpoint we may consider it, the conclusion is reasonably inferable that the highway department created under the act found in 102 O. L. 333 was entirely repealed and superseded by the highway department created under the act now in force (106 O. L. 574); and at the same time that the old department fell, the officer at the head of the department fell and his term of office ceased.

In 57 O. S. 415, the court lays down the law in the syllabus as follows:

"An office created by an ordinance is abolished by the repeal of the ordinance, and the incumbent thereby ceases to be an officer."

At page 423 of the opinion we have the following language:

"There is no question but that the council had the power to repeal the former ordinance; and this being so, and all the offices created by it, whatever they were, being thus abolished, the incumbents ceased to be officers, for there can be no incumbent without an office."

In rendering this opinion I am mindful of the fact that a former attorney-general of the state rendered an opinion in which he held the opposite view in reference to this act. His opinion is found in Vol. II of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1915, page 1814. While I am aware that there is some authority in law which would warrant a conclusion such as he draws, and while there might be some doubt as to the correctness of my conclusion reached herein, yet it seems to me that the weight of authority sustains the opinion herein reached. He bases his opinion upon the fact that the Cass highway law does not provide that the new department shall succeed to all the rights, powers and duties of the old department. A part of his opinion reads as follows:

"There is, however, one omission in said bill which is so potent, in my judgment, as to preclude any construction other than that the legislature intended the new department merely to succeed the old. This omission is the failure of the legislature, in said bill, to make any provisions that said new department shall succeed to all the rights, powers and duties of the old department."

But it must be remembered that the Cass highway law repeals specifically every section and every act that theretofore had anything to do with highway matters, excepting those matters set out in the saving clause of the new act. There were no rights, powers and duties of the old department left to be performed; the acts providing for the old department had all been repealed; and if the legislature had made such provisions, they would have been unconstitutional under the ruling of the supreme court in the late case of The State of Ohio ex rel v. P. C. O'Brien et al.

The opinion so rendered by the former attorney-general, was based mainly upon the opinion which he rendered, found on page 1704 of said second volume of the 1915 Opinions of the Attorney-General. The meat of this opinion is found on page 1709, in the following language:

"Upon this analysis of section 1082, therefore, it appears that though designed for the purpose of providing for the transition of activities and functions from the one state board to the other, it does not preserve the continuity of the subordinate bureaus, departments, etc., or the personnel of the departmental force as it formerly existed, in the face of the fact that the general assembly had before it, in the shape of original section 1089 as enacted in 1913, language appropriate for such a purpose.

"The conclusion irresistibly follows, then, that the general assembly did not intend that the subordinate positions in the department of the agricultural commission should continue to exist, notwithstanding the abolition of the commission itself; but that, on the contrary, the whole departmental organization should be abolished and a new one should be provided for by the board of agriculture."

His opinion holds that the act creating the agricultural board did not preserve the continuity of the subordinate bureaus, departments, etc., of the act creating the agricultural commission or the personnel of said bureaus or departments. Let us take this argument as correct. As shown in my opinion above, there is nothing whatever in the Cass highway law to preserve the continuity of the state highway department, or the personnel of said department, from the act under which the Hon. Clinton Cowen was appointed state highway commissioner and the law now in force.

Hence, I am of the opinion as above set forth, notwithstanding the opinion heretofore rendered.

Further, in arriving at the conclusion as to what was the intention of the legislature in passing the said Cass highway law and the intention of those vitally connected with the passage of the same, there is another circumstance which to me is very significant and which strengthens my opinion that it was the intention of the legislature, in enacting said law, and the intention of Hon. Frank B. Willis, governor of the state of Ohio, in signing the same and filing it with the secretary of state and thus making it a law, that said law should supersede and take the place of all former acts and parts of acts in every respect. And especially was it the intention of the legislature and those vitally connected with the passage of said law that it should supersede the act found in 102 O. L. 333, as it related to the head of the state highway department, namely, the state highway commissioner.

This circumstance is to be found in the state records. The said records show that on April 1, 1915, Hon. Clinton Cowen was appointed to the position of state highway commissioner, to take the place of Hon. James R. Marker. The said records show that on April 1, 1915, Hon. Frank B. Willis, governor, appointed Hon. Clinton Cowen to the position of state highway commissioner, to take the place of Hon. James R. Marker, resigned, said Clinton Cowen's term to begin on April 1, 1915, with no limit fixed as to when his term of appointment should expire. Under the appointment his bond was fixed at $10,000.00.

On May 27, 1915, Hon. Frank B. Willis, governor, appointed Hon. Clinton Cowen to the position of state highway commissioner, term to begin on June 17, 1915, with no limit fixed as to when his term of appointment should expire, so far as the report made to the state auditor shows. Under the appointment his bond was fixed at $10,000.00.

On August 31, 1915, Hon. Frank B. Willis, governor, appointed Hon. Clinton Cowen to the position of state highway commissioner, term to begin on September 4, 1915. Under this appointment the term of said Clinton Cowen was to end September 3, 1919, and his bond was fixed at $20,000.00.

Under each one of these appointments the records show that Hon. Clinton Cowen gave bond and took the oath as provided by law.

Let us further remember, in connection with the above facts, that Hon. James R. Marker's term as state highway commissioner would have expired on June 16, 1915, had he served until the end of the term for which he was originally appointed. This the said records show. Further, the Cass highway law was passed May 17, 1915; was approved by the governor June 2, 1915; and was filed with the secretary of state, June 5, 1915, which would make said law become effective under the constitution at the end of ninety days after filing the same with the secretary of state, or on September 4, 1915.

Now, let us recapitulate:

1. Hon. James R. Marker's term expired June 16, 1915, had he served his full term under his appointment.

2. On April 1, 1915, Hon. Clinton Cowen was appointed for a term to begin on April 1, 1915, but no time was fixed at which it should expire. Why? Because he was appointed to fill the unexpired term of Hon. James R. Marker.

3. On May 27, 1915, Hon. Clinton Cowen was appointed to the position of state highway commissioner, term to begin on June 17, 1915, and in the report to the state auditor no time limit was fixed as to the length of his term. Why was his term to begin June 17, 1915? Because Hon. James R. Marker's term would have expired June 16, 1915, which term was completed by Hon. Clinton Cowen. Why was no time fixed in the report to the state auditor at which his term of office would expire under the second appointment? Because at the time of his second appointment a new highway law had been enacted by the legislature and would, unless referred to the people, become effective in due course of time; and it was the intention of the parties interested at that time that said Clinton Cowen should merely serve up until the time that the new act would become effective.

4. On August 31, 1915, Hon. Clinton Cowen was appointed to the position of state highway commissioner, his term to begin September 4, 1915, and to end September 3, 1919. Why was he reappointed? Why was he reappointed with his term to begin on September 4, 1915? Because it was the intention of those connected with the enactment of the new highway law that the new law should supersede and replace the old, and that it was necessary, therefore, to reappoint him to take his place under the new law because he could no longer hold under the old, it expiring on September 3, 1915.

5. The bond under the first two appointments was fixed at $10,000.00, which is the bond provided for under the old act, but under his third appointment, to take effect on September 4, 1915, the bond was fixed at $20,000.00, the amount fixed under the new law.

6. Hon. Clinton Cowen under each appointment took the oath and subscribed to the affidavit as provided for by law.

The conclusion to be drawn from all the above is irresistible, and that is, that it was the intention of the legislature and those vitally concerned with the enactment of the Cass highway law, that it should supersede and take the place of all former acts in reference to all matters, except those matters provided for in the saving clause.

Some of these latter facts set out in the opinion are not embraced in your communication, but they are matters of record and are important in the matter of answering your query.

Now, what is the status of Hon. Clinton Cowen in reference to the position of state highway commissioner? He was appointed state highway commissioner by Hon. Frank B. Willis for a term of four years, with his term of office to begin on September 4, 1915, and to end on September 3, 1919. His bond was fixed at $20,000.00, which bond he gave. He also took the oath of office as provided by law under and by virtue of his appointment.

As said before, Septemebr 4, 1915, was the day upon which the Cass highway law became effective. The Cass highway law provided for a bond of $20,000.00, while the old law provided for bond of $10,000.00. Hence, on September 4, 1915, Hon. Clinton Cowen began his duties under and by virtue of the Cass highway law, and he is still serving under said appointment and under said law.

But section 171 of the Cass highway law, being section 1178 G. C., provides that the appointment must be made with the advice and consent of the senate. The records develop that the appointment of Hon. Clinton Cowen for the term beginning on September 4, 1915, has never been confirmed by the senate. Hence, his appointment must be sent to the senate for confirmation.

I am aware that the Hon. Frank B. Willis on December 29, 1916, in almost the last act he performed while governor, placed upon the records of the governor's office an order revoking his appointment of Hon. Clinton Cowen to the position of state highway commissioner, for the term beginning September 4, 1915, but this order could have no legal effect. Mr. Cowen had taken his position under the appointment, had given bond in the sum of $20,000.00 and filed the same with the secretary of state as provided by law, had taken the oath of office and had performed the duties of the office under said appointment for almost sixteen months. No mere order, placed upon the journal in the governor's office, could have any effect upon all this, in the way of revoking said appointment.

Furthermore, even though we should assume that the Cass highway law did not entirely supersede the act under which Hon. Clinton Cowen was appointed state highway commissioner to take effect on June 16, 1915, yet when he elected to take office under the appointment to become effective on September 4, 1915, he gave up the office and position he was holding under the appointment effective on June 16, 1915, and all the rights he had under and by virtue of said appointment. Hence, it is clearly evident that Hon. Clinton Cowen has no rights to the office which he now holds, excepting under the appointment which became effective on September 4, 1915. And if this appointment could be considered as revoked under the order of Hon. Frank B. Willis, governor, made on December 29, 1916, he would have no rights in the office and would simply be performing the duties of the same as a de facto officer.

That Hon. Clinton Cowen cannot hold his present position under the appointment made to become effective June 17, 1915, but only under the appointment made to become effective on September 4, 1915, is sustained by the courts, from a few of which I desire to quote. In Handy, et al., v. Hopkins, et al., 59 Md. 157, we find the following facts were before the court: Four persons were elected county commissioners in 1879, and were in office at the time of the election in 1881. Their term not having expired, these same four persons with a fifth were returned as elected and commissioned under the election of 1881. The court afterwards declared the election of 1881 null and void. The question then was as to the status of these four officials. Upon this matter the court held in the syllabus as follows:

"Four persons were elected county commissioners at the general election of 1879, and were in office at the time of the election of 1881. They were candidates for re-election, and together with a fifth person were returned as elected, at the last mentioned election; and they were thereupon duly commissioned as such newly elected commissioners. They accepted the commissions thus issued, and professed to enter upon the discharge of the duties of their office, in pursuance and by virtue of the last election and commissions. They in no manner claimed that they were in office, or were entitled to hold office, by virtue of the election of 1879, but, on the contrary, they distinctly claimed that they had been duly elected at the election of 1881, and that they were rightly holding under that election. Held:

"That under such circumstances, the court having declared the election of 1881 null and void, these parties could not be heard to claim that they were entitled to hold over by virtue of the election of 1879."

Upon page 171 of the opinion the court say:

"Four of the five appellants, were elected county commissioners at the general election of 1879, and were in office at the time of the election of 1881. They were candidates for re-election, and were returned as elected, at the last mentioned election, and they were thereupon duly commissioned as such newly elected commissioners. They accepted the commission, thus issued, and professed to enter upon the discharge of the duties of their office, in pursuance and by virtue of the last election and commission. These facts were distinctly charged by the contestants, and were as distinctly admitted by the appellants. They in no manner claimed that they were in office, or were entitled to hold office, by virtue of the election of 1879; but on the contrary, they distinctly claimed that they had been duly elected at the election of 1881, and that they were rightly holding under that election. Now, under such circumstances, how is it possible that they can be heard to claim that they are entitled to hold over by virtue of the election of 1879? Their acts and professions must be allowed their full meaning and import, and by those all claim to hold by virtue of the election of 1879, is shown to have been surrendered and given up. Good faith to the public required that there should be no doubt or equivocation as to the authority by virtue of which the parties claimed to hold their office, and having assumed and professed to hold under the election of 1881, they are not at liberty to repudiate their own acts and professions, and attempt to resume a title that they had abandoned or surrendered, if, under other circumstances, such title could be maintained. Nor is it any answer to say that because the court, after investigation, declared the election of 1881 null and void, therefore, they were remitted to their former right to hold by virtue of their election in 1879, and that they are entitled to be regarded as having continuously held office by virtue of that election. The election of 1881 was not in effect null and void, until declared so, by the judgment of a competent tribunal; it was in all respects good and valid until declared otherwise; and the appellants were fully authorized to act in the discharge of the duties of their office, and all their official acts are as valid as if the election had been declared in all respects legal. They had not only the color of a due election, but they had all the forms necessary to invest them with full authority of the office; and these they accepted and complied with, with an intention to hold under the last election and none other."

It will be noted that this case is even stronger than the case which is presented to me for an opinion because in this case the officers were elected by the people of the county while in the case before me it is merely an appointive office.

There is also a case reported in 45 Conn. 191 (Farrell v. The City of Bridgeport) which is very much in point with the case before me. In the syllabus of this case we find the following facts and conclusions of law set out:

"The charter of the city provided for the appointment of policemen to hold office until regularly removed or suspended. F had held the office of policeman for three years under the charter, when the common council, under a power given by the charter to make ordinances relative to the city police, passed an ordinance that the appointments should be for one year. F was nominated and confirmed under the ordinance for one year, and accepted and exercised the office. Held that, if the commissioners and council had no right by a mere new appointment of F for the limited term, to terminate his tenure of office under his former appointment, yet as he accepted and exercised the office under the new appointment, he could not claim that his tenure of the office was a continuance of his original tenure."

And in the opinion of the court at page 193 we find the following language:

"The council could not of itself, by the enactment of an ordinance declaring that a policeman should hold his office by virtue of an annual appointment, put an end to the right of Farrell to hold the office to which he had been duly appointed in 1869; but the commissioners accepted the ordinance as the rule of their conduct, and subsequently to the passage thereof made all nominations for policemen for the term of one year; and Farrell, in consideration of the new and limited appointment, waived all claim to hold office under the former one; he accepted in 1872 an office for one year expressly established in place of and as a substitute for one of a different tenure; he intentionally discharged the duties and received the salary belonging to it; and by his acceptance and exercise of this new and substituted office surrendered all claim to, and must be holden to have resigned, the former one. It will not, therefore, now avail him to insist that the commissioners and council were not authorized to allow him to exercise the last one."

This case also is directly in point to the effect that Hon. Clinton Cowen cannot be holding under the appointment to become effective June 17, 1915.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CITY COUNCIL—OF CITY OF SPRINGFIELD—MAY CHANGE SALARY OF POLICE JUDGE—DURING TERM OF OFFICE—ARTICLE II, SECTION 20 OF CONSTITUTION DOES NOT APPLY.

The city council of the city of Springfield may change the amount contributed by the city to the salary of the police judge of that city, so as to make such change effective during the term of the incumbent, provided that the amount of such contribution does not exceed two thousand dollars.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1917.

HON. GOLDEN C. DAVIS, Police Judge, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 3rd in which you state that you are the judge of the police court of the city of Springfield, serving by virtue of an election for a term of four years, ending December 31st, 1919; and inquiring whether if the city commission of the city of Springfield should increase the compensation paid by the city to the judge of the police court, such increase would affect the compensation to which you are entitled during your present term. You state in this connection that no change in the amount paid by the city to the judge of the Springfield police court has been made since some time prior to the year 1900.

I assume in the consideration of your question that the police court of the city of Springfield has a legal existence, although my attention has not been directed to the act under which it exists. The special compensation referred to by you is payable under the provisions of section 4568 of the General Code, which is as follows:

> "The judge of the police court shall receive no fees or perquisites, but shall receive such annual compensation, not to exceed two thousand dollars, as the council prescribes, payable quarterly, from the city treasury, and such further compensation, payable from the county treasury, as the commissioners of the county deem proper. Nothing in this section shall prohibit the police judge from receiving the fees for or taking the acknowledgment of instruments, depositions, and affidavits which are allowed to justices of the peace for like services."

If Springfield were governed by the general municipal code of the state, the question which would arise here would be whether or not in the exercise or the power and duty prescribed by the section which is quoted its council would be governed or limited by section 4213 of the General Code, which is as follows:

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

I think that there is grave doubt as to whether there is any relation between these two sections. As it originally stood in the municipal code of 1902 (96 O. L. 61), the provision now found in section 4213 G. C. was a part of section 126 thereof, which provided as follows:

> "Council shall fix the salaries of all officers, clerks and employes in the city government, except as otherwise provided in this act, and, except as otherwise provided in this act, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury. The salary of any officer, clerk or employe so fixed, shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he may have been elected or appointed. * * *"

I do not think that the judge of the police court was to be considered as an officer "in the city government" within the meaning of said original section 126. The police courts owed their existence to special acts of the legislature establishing courts. Their judges were not in every sense of the word municipal officers, certainly not officers of the municipal corporations as such. Rather, they were officers of courts established by the legislature. It is true that sections 190 to 192 of the municipal code of 1902 in a way referred to existing police courts as if the general assembly had regarded them as constituting the judicial departments of the municipalities in which they existed. However, no change whatever was made and all laws relating to police courts were expressly continued in effect by section 192.

For these reasons, I would incline strongly to the opinion that original section 126 of the municipal code did not apply to the council in fixing the contribution of a municipal corporation to the salary of the police judge.

Section 4213 G. C. is merely a revision of section 126 of the municipal code, no amendment of the section having taken place otherwise than in process of codification; it must, therefore, be given the same meaning as that of the original section.

But, whether or not section 4213 G. C. would apply were the city of Springfield governed by the general municipal code, I am satisfied that it does not apply to that city because it is part of the municipal code, whereas Springfield is governed by a charter. I find the following provision in the charter of Springfield, section 27:

"The city commission shall fix by ordinance the salary or rate of compensation of all officers and employes of the city entitled to compensation, other than their own; and may require any officer or employe to give a bond for the faithful performance of his duty, in such an amount as it may determine, and it may provide that the premium thereof shall be paid by the city."

There is no limitation here respecting a change of compensation during the term of office of the officer affected thereby. It is apparent, therefore, that the commission of the city of Springfield may change the compensation of an officer of the city and make the change effective during the term for which he was elected or appointed.

It seems clear that the city commission of the city of Springfield is the "council" referred to in section 4568 of the General Code. It has all legislative power of the city. Section 2 of the charter provides as follows

"There is hereby created a city commission to consist of five electors of the city elected at large, who shall hold office for a term of four years beginning January 1st after their election, excepting that the two members elected at the first election by the lowest vote shall hold office for the term of two years only.

"All the powers of the city, except such as are vested in the board of education and in the judge of the police court, and except as otherwise provided by this charter or by the constitution of the state, are hereby vested in the city commission; and, except as otherwise prescribed by this charter or by the constitution of the state, the city commission may by ordinance or resolution prescribe the manner in which any power of the city shall be exercised. In the absence of such provision as to any power, such power shall be exercised in the manner now or hereafter prescribed by the general laws of the state applicable to municipalities."

It is my opinion, therefore, that so far as municipal questions are concerned the city commission of Springfield, acting as the "council" for the purpose of section 4568 of the General Code, may within the limits of that section change the compensation payable by the city to the judge of the police court of Springfield at any time, making the change effective during the term of office of the judge who is in office.

Article II, section 20 of the Constitution of the state provides:

"The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished."

Clearly, the limitation in the latter part of this section is coextensive only with the duty laid down in the first part. That is to say, the provision that "no change therein" shall affect the salary during the existing term, etc., relates only to changes made by the general assembly in salaries fixed by the general assembly.

Whether or not it is competent for the general assembly in creating a court such as a police court to authorize the county commissioners and the council of a municipal corporation to fix the salary of the judge thereof, instead of fixing such salary itself is a question which might be raised and upon which authority perhaps on both sides might be found. (See State ex rel. v. Board of Education, 21 C. C. 785); to decide this question would be to pass upon the constitutionality of section 4568 G. C., which has been in force for a considerable period of time and has been acted upon during that period. I have no disposition to consider this question, but will assume that section 4568 G. C. is constitutional. If it is valid and it is competent for the council of Springfield, or any other city acting under it, to fix the salary of the police judge, payable from the city treasury, then it is clear that the last part of section 20 of article II of the Constitution does not apply to the city council and the judge for the reason that such salary is not one of those to which the section applies at all.

I may add that on the authority of State ex rel. v. Madigan, 16 C. C., n. s., 202, the municipal questions above discussed might be decided the other way and yet the same result reached because of the fact, as stated by you, that no change has been made in the city's portion of the salary of the police judge of Springfield since before the municipal code of 1902 was adopted.

It is not necessary, however, to rely upon this decision, but for the other reasons above stated, I am of the opinion that assuming the constitutionality of section 4568 of the General Code and the legality of the existence of the police court of Springfield, the city commission of that city, acting under said section, may at any time change the salary payable by the city to the judge of the court, provided that such contribution may not exceed two thousand dollars; and that such change would affect the salary of the incumbent in office at the time it was made and apply to him during the remainder of his term.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

VALENTINE ANTI-TRUST LAW—SENATE BILL No. 152 WOULD EFFECT RADICAL CHANGE THEREIN AND RENDER IT OF UNCERTAIN AND VARIABLE APPLICATION.

The operation of senate bill No. 152 upon the Valentine Anti-Trust Law would effect a radical change in the enforcement of such law and render it of uncertain and variable application by submitting to a jury or court in every case the question of what acts are violative of its provisions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 1, 1917.

HON. HUGH R. GILMORE, Ohio Senate, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication of date February 27, 1917, is received, which is an inquiry as to the effect of a bill, a copy of which is enclosed, upon existing law. The inquiry is as follows:

> "Senate bill No. 152, now pending in the senate, provides for a new or supplemental section of the General Code, relating to 'Trusts,' commonly known as the 'Valentine Law.'
> "A copy of the bill is herewith enclosed, and you will note that it does not change or amend the 'Valentine Law,' but attempts to provide that in any suit or proceedings under that chapter, a reasonable restraint of trade is a question for the jury.
> "Kindly advise me what effect senate bill No. 152 would have, if passed, on the 'Valentine Law.'

The proposed bill is as follows:

> "Section 1. That section 6401 of the General Code be supplemented by the enactment of section 6401-1 to read as follows:
> "Section 6401-1. In any suit or proceeding, civil or criminal, brought by or on behalf of the state, or by or on behalf of any person, under the provisions of this chapter, the jury shall acquit the defendants, and each and all of them, or the court or jury shall find for the defendants and each and all of them, if it appear that the combination of capital, skill, or acts complained of, was in reasonable restraint of trade; or not to acquire private monopoly, or fix a figure or standard whereby prices to the public or consumer are unreasonably controlled or established."

The Valentine anti-trust law was passed April 19th, 1898, and was in response to an urgent need and universal public demand for restraint upon the evil of constant formation and growth of combinations in restraint of trade, the tendency of which was to subject the common mass of people to economic and industrial domination of aggregations of capital.

It has remarkable clearness and perspicuity, and carries intrinsic evidence of being drawn by some person, or persons, well acquainted with the law as to transactions in restraint of trade, and also familiar with the remedial law and practice.

It commences with a succinct, though comprehensive, enumeration, or rather description, of the practices which it proposes to restrain, regulate or prevent, which it makes under the form of a definition of the much used word "trust." This is defined as follows:

"Section 6391. A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, for any or all of the following purposes."

These purposes are five and the examination of the effect of the proposed act may be made by taking them up in order with that end in view, without complete references to the other thirteen sections which further define the harmful practices set out, and, with greater particularity, fix and determine the application of the law to concrete conditions, and especially provide penalties for and consequences of its violation, and adequate remedies for its enforcement.

Reverting to the five paragraphs of definition of "trust," which are descriptive of the unlawful practices under the purview of the act, the first is generic and includes the other four, which in turn describe, define and limit it. They are as follows:

"1. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.

"2. To limit or reduce the production or increase, or reduce the price of merchandise or a commodity.

"3. To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or a commodity.

"4. To fix at a standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer is in any manner controlled or established, an article or commodity of merchandise, produce or commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state.

"5. To make, enter into, execute or carry out contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of or transport an article or commodity, or an article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure or fixed value, or by which they agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of an article, commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, so as directly or indirectly to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of such article or commodity, or by which they agree to pool, combine or directly or indirectly unite any interests which they have connected with the sale or transportation of such article or commodity that its price might in any manner be affected. Such trust as is defined herein is unlawful, against public policy and void."

Let us now take up each of these four paragraphs which embody the ultimate effect of the law, and inspect it with the purpose of determining the effect of the proposed addition to the law, as follows:

"2. To limit or reduce the production or increase, or reduce the price of merchandise or a commodity."

Is it proposed now to submit to a jury the question of whether or not a combination of capital is in reasonable restraint of trade, when that combination is formed for the purpose of "reducing the production of merchandise." Right here you encounter the very thing you are looking for. The Valentine law makes that act unlawful, so to speak, per se, or rather in all cases, but this bill proposes to change that and leave it in each case to a jury or court, or both. The one prohibits it by positive immutable law; the other tests it in each and every case by the transient and variable judgment of men. The question to each one, doubting and hesitating over a contemplated act would not be "Is it lawful or criminal?" but "What will be done about it?"

The same condition will exist as to "such combination to increase or reduce price." Also the same when the combination is to prevent competition in manufacture, transportation, and in dealing. Also when the combination is to fix a price to hold up the consumer.

Down to this point this wise, beneficial law, positively, inhibits the indicated acts as being necessarily harmful and essentially wrong. They are briefly stated and absolutely prohibited.

The fifth class of acts is enumerated and defined in detail and the legislature evidently considered that they might not all be universally baneful, for after the enumeration of certain prohibitions in the section, it fixes a qualification which is here put in italics:

> "5. To make, enter into, execute or carry out contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of or transport an article or commodity, or an article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure or fixed value, or by which they agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of an article, commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, so as directly or indirectly to preclude a free unrestricted competition among themselves, purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of such article or commodity, or by which they agree to pool, combine or directly or indirectly unite any interests which they have connected with the sale or transportation of such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected. Such trust as is defined herein is unlawful, against public policy and void."

None of the contracts specified are unlawful unless they have the effect of restricting competition. And this would be in each case a question for a jury or court.

The framers of this act, therefore, carefully determined what question should, in their judgment, be submitted to a jury, and those things which in and of themselves were considered a general public injury, were declared so and inhibited as a matter of law. The proposed supplement to the law is, therefore, not a mere change in detail as to the mode or degree of its enforcement, but an essential change in the character of the law itself, taking away from it the certainty of illegality as to every act forbidden by it, and making it in every case either a question of fact for a jury or court or of mixed law and fact for a court and jury.

There may have been decision on cases arising under the provisions of this law where its enforcement worked a hardship, but in such brief examination as I have been able to give to the subject, I have found none that seems to work injustice, by applying the hard and fast definition and prohibition of the statute, or suggests the necessity of putting an equity into it by legislation. Whether such attempts have been made heretofore in the nineteen years it has been in force I do not know, but the statute has stood for that period in its integrity and it is now proposed by this supplementary matter to modify it in its very nature and essence and take away at least some of the certainty it possesses, and remove some part of the fear that might attend its infraction.

Contracts in partial restraint of trade have always been permitted, the degree of restraint to make the contract void, as against public policy, being generally a question of law, sometimes of mixed law and fact. This privilege of partial restraint of trade is preserved in the qualification above referred to in the fifth paragraph of section 6391, and indeed no strictly common law right is taken away by it, the whole effect of the act being rather to restore what might properly be termed a case of arrested judicial development than to create new doctrines of law. All equivalent abuses had been capable of correction, in a more primitive condition of society, by punishment for the common law offenses of forestalling, engrossing and regrating, all of which became obsolete, and conspiracy. Had the three former been retained in the law, and developed along with the last, no statute would have been necessary to prevent unlawful combinations in restraint of trade.

A learned and exhaustive discussion of the subject of contracts in restraint of trade is found in the opinion of Judge Minshall in

On page 607 he says:

> "All monopolies, combinations and agreements of whatever nature, formed for the purpose of controlling the production and manufacture of commodities are generally considered against public policy, as thereby prices may be unreasonably increased to the consumer, and are almost uniformly entered into for such purpose. Heretofore the right of any trade or business to determine for itself the extent of production and the price that shall prevail, has been stoutly denied by the public. This can only be done by the government, and then only in extreme cases, amounting to a necessity. So general have these agreements become and their attendant evils, as to have arrested the attention of the legislatures of some of the states; and laws have been passed to correct, as far as possible, the evils."

The learned judge commenting on the disposition of selfishness creating the necessity for such laws, seriously remarks:

> "Certainly we are not called on to relearn how little human cupidity can be trusted when it has the opportunity to enrich itself at the expense of others."

The opportunity of human cupidity to enrich itself at the expense of others, in respect to the subject of this law, is greatly curtailed by the law itself, but will be perceptibly relieved of restraint by the enactment of this bill.

Answering the inquiry directly, the effect of this bill upon the Valentine law will be to render it less efficacious and its enforcement more difficult by removing all acts now in contravention of its terms as pure matter of law, and making them only conditionally so when found by the verdict of a jury or judgment of a court.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PAUPERS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MUST PAY BURIAL EXPENSE WHEN NOTIFIED BY TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES OR PROPER MUNICIPAL OFFICERS.

Under section 3495 G. C., providing the trustees of the township or the proper officials of the municipality notify the county commissioners, said county commissioners must pay the burial expenses of all deceased paupers required to be buried at public expense. Opinions of former attorney-generals in volume I, page 547, Attorney-General's Report for 1915, and volume II, page 1357, Attorney-General's Report for 1912 followed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 2, 1917.

HON. FRANK B. GROVE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cadiz, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of yours of January 27 in which you state:

"On April 24, 1915, ex-Attorney-General Turner, at my request, rendered an opinion as to the proper construction of section 3495 G. C. This opinion is found in volume I, page 547, Opinions of Attorney-General for 1915.

"Under this opinion and rulings of the state bureau of accounting prior thereto, the county commissioners have been paying the burial expenses of all deceased paupers required to be buried at public expense.

"Recently they have been objecting to paying these burial expenses, claiming that they have been informed by the state board of charities, indirectly, that the expenses of burial of a deceased pauper must be borne by the township in which he had a legal settlement at the time of his death.

"I am aware of no ruling on the question except that cited above. I would ask that you refer to above opinion and state whether or not you concur in the view therein expressed, and whether, in your opinion, the county or the township must pay the burial expenses of a deceased pauper having a legal settlement in a township, and who is required to be buried at public expense."

In the opinion of my predecessor he says:

"Section 3495 provides for burial at public expense of the body of a person having a legal settlement in the county or whose legal settlement is not in the state or is unknown, provided such deceased person may not have been at the time of his death an inmate of a penal, reformatory, benevolent or charitable institution, and provided said body is not claimed by any person for private interment at his own expense or delivered to a medical college.

* * * * * * * *

"To my mind, the statute is clear that it is the duty of the county commissioners, they being the successors of the county infirmary directors, to cause to be buried, not only the body of a person who has a legal settlement in the county, but also the body of a person who did not have a legal settlement in the state or who is unknown."

Section 3495 G. C. provides:

"When information is given to the trustees of a township or proper officer of a municipal corporation, that the dead body of a person, having a legal settlement in the county, or whose legal settlement is not in the state or is unknown, and not the inmate of a penal, reformatory, benevolent or charitable institution, has been found in such township or corporation and is not claimed by any person for private interment at his own expense or delivered for the purpose of medical or surgical study or dissection in accordance with law, they shall cause it to be buried at the expense of the township or corporation, but, if such trustees or officer notify the infirmary directors, such directors shall cause the body to be buried at the expense of the county."

In an opinion of Hon. T. S. Hogan, found in Vol. II of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, page 1357, construing sections 3495 and 3496 G. C., he uses this language (p. 1358):

"The fact that the county is saved the expense of providing for the indigent poor who are taken care of by private benevolent institutions, is no reason why these institutions should have the burden of burying the pauper dead. A pauper may be kept at some private residence without extra expense to the county out of the goodness of heart of the owner. On his death, he may not desire to have the expense and trouble of burial and he can notify the proper authorities and burial will be provided for by law."

It will be seen that the above ruling of Attorney-General Turner was based upon the same reasonings in a similar construction of the statute as was the opinion of 1912.

It seems to me the meaning of sections 3495 G. C. is plain, especially when reference is made to the latter part of the section which provides that if trustees or other officer notify the infirmary directors, such directors shall cause the body to be buried at the expense of the county. There may be some ambiguity, owing to the fact that the term "infirmary directors" is used and probably the legislature when it amended section 3496 G. C. would have also amended section 3495 G. C., had attention been called to the fact that the notice was to the infirmary directors.

Section 3496 G. C., prior to the last amendment, read as follows:

"In a township in which is located a state benevolent institution, the trustees of the township shall pay all expenses of the burial of a pauper that dies in such institution, and send an itemized bill of the expenses thereof to the infirmary directors of the county from which the pauper was sent to the institution. Such infirmary directors shall immediately pay the bill to such township trustees."

The above section was amended in 103 O. L. 58, and now reads:

"In a county in which is located a state benevolent institution, the board in control of said institution shall pay all expenses of the burial of a pauper that dies in such institution, except when the body is delivered in accordance with the provisions of section 9984 of the General Code, and send an itemized bill of the expenses thereof to the county commissioners of the county from which the pauper was sent to the institution. Such county commissioners shall immediately pay the bill to such board in control."

Sections 3495 and 3496 G. C. were formerly one section, namely section 1500a Revised Statutes, and the codifying commission separated them.

The amendment of section 3496 supra evidences an intention on the part of the legislature that the expense of the burial of paupers should be taken care of by the county commissioners, for it provides that the bill of a pauper dying in such institution be finally paid by the county commissioners.

In Rockel's Complete Guide, 15th Ed. 1916, compiled after the amendment in 103 O. L. supra, will be found a form of certificate to county commissioners to be signed by the trustees of the township, notifying the commissioners of the expenses incurred in the burial of the dead body of the pauper found in their township and who was not the inmate of a penal, reformatory, benevolent or charitable institution, and whose body was not claimed by any person for private interment at his own expense, or delivered for the purpose of medical or surgical study or dissection in accordance with law.

As Judge Rockel says at p. 456, immediately following section 3495 G. C.:

> "The trustees had better notify the infirmary directors before acting under this section if they expect the county to reimburse them, for if they go ahead and act without so doing, they cannot compel the infirmary directors to reimburse them for the amount expended."

This admonition applies, now that the office of infirmary directors has been abolished, and the duties formerly provided by law for infirmary directors have been by statute imposed upon county commissioners as shown in sections 2522 et seq. G. C.

In view of all the foregoing, I concur in the ruling of the opinion found in Vol. I, page 547 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MOTHER'S PENSION—WOMAN DOES NOT LOOSE LEGAL RESIDENCE BY REMOVING TO ANOTHER STATE FOR LIMITED TIME * * * UNLESS ACCOMPANIED BY INTENTION TO REMAIN IN SUCH OTHER STATE.

A mother who with her family has acquired a legal residence in a county of this state within the purview of section 1683-2 General Code, providing for mothers' pensions, does not loose such legal residence by moving with her family to another state for a limited time, in the absence of facts or circumstances showing unequivocally an intention on the part of such mother and family to make such other state their legal residence.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 2, 1917.

HON. WILBERT J. BISSMAN, Probate Judge, Mansfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 19, 1917, asking opinion, in which you say:

> "The mothers' pension act provides that the residence of the applicant must be two years; we also have an opinion as to the liberal construction that shall be given some parts of this law, but I desire your opinion and direction of an application under the following circumstances and facts, as follows:

"The applicant has been a resident of the state since last April, 1916, and for two years prior to that date because of the health of the husband they were in the south (in Florida), and prior to that time they lived in this city for a period of about 15 years. At the time of leaving the state for the two years, they left the state not knowing whether they would return and the question now is whether by their leaving they have now lost their residence so as to bar the wife from getting a pension. This is a very worthy case, the husband being sick and unable to earn anything for the support of the children.

Applicable to the consideration of the question made by you section 1683-2 General Code provides that for the partial support of women whose husbands are dead, or become permanently disabled by reason of physical or mental infirmity, or whose husbands are prisoners or whose husbands have deserted, and such desertion has continued for a period of three years, when such women are poor, and are the mothers of children not entitled to receive age and schooling certificate, and such mothers and children have a legal residence in any county of the state for two years, the juvenile court may, for the purpose of affording such partial support, make an allowance to each of such women in monthly amounts as therein specified.

This section of the General Code and those immediately following, composing the "Mothers' Pension Law" so-called, were originally enacted (103 O. L. 877) as a part of the juvenile court act, a liberal construction of the provisions of which is enjoined by the provisions of section 1683, General Code, and I doubt not that the provisions of the mother's pension law are to be so liberally construed in order to secure the ends for which the law was enacted, to wit, such support as will enable women coming within its provisions to maintain their homes and keep their children together—things which they might not be able to do without such support.

Hon. T. S. Hogan, attorney-general, in an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of June 29, 1914, held that the two years' residence qualifications mentioned in section 1683-2, General Code, bore no proper analogy to the settlement statutes in the poor laws providing for relief to paupers, but that in contradistinction to such settlement statutes the provisions of the mothers' pension law were to be liberally rather than strictly construed; and applying such principle of construction to the provisions of section 1683-2 Mr. Hogan held that the phrase "in any county of the state," as used in the first sentence of section 1683-2, is to be given its broad and primary meaning, and that as a result thereof legal residence on the part of the mother and child in any county of the state would entitle the mother to an allowance by the juvenile court in any county of the state, whether that county be the county in which the two years' residence has been established or not.

Likewise applying this principle of liberal construction to the provisions of section 1683-2 as to residence qualification, my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in an opinion to Hon. George M. Hoke, probate judge of Seneca county, under date of December 13, 1915, held that a woman who was the mother of children and who had theretofore always resided in said county was not deprived of her right to apply for a mother's pension therein by reason of the fact that she and her husband and family had moved to another county in this state, where they resided for about a year, and thereafter moved to Michigan, where they resided more than a year, but that it appearing that the husband had died while the family were living in Michigan she was entitled to make application for and receive support under this act upon her return with her family to Seneca county.

I do not find it necessary to express any opinion on the facts under consideration in the opinions of my predecessors just noted, although I may say I am convinced that their views, that the provisions of section 1683-2 G. C. under consideration are to receive a liberal rather than a strict construction, are correct and in keeping with the manifest purpose and intent of the mothers' pension act.

In the instant case, however, I have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the applicant is entitled to relief as far as the question made by you is concerned, when that question is viewed in the light of the facts stated by you.

With respect to the question under consideration the qualification named in the statute is not merely residence, but legal residence, and as here used is practically synonymous with the term "domicile," and in this view it does not appear that the applicant and her family lost their legal residence by going to Florida for the period of time mentioned by you.

In the case of Smith v. Delton, 1 Cin. Sup. Ct. Rep., page 150, it was held that mere non-residence for any length of time, unless aided by some unequivocal act showing intention not to return, will not cause the loss of domicile in the state; and on application of this principle of law it was held that where a man left Ohio with his family for New York with the intention to return if he could compromise with his creditors there, or to remain in New York if he could not do so and could there get employment, neither of which contingencies happened, he did not thereby become a non-resident of Ohio.

There is nothing in the facts stated by you to indicate any intention on the part of the applicant and her family to make the state of Florida their future legal residence or domicile. On the contrary, the very reason for which they went to that state in itself tended to make the question as to the place of their future residence uncertain, and mere uncertainty as to such future residence would not operate to defeat their legal residence in Richland county.

I am therefore of the opinion that if the applicant is otherwise qualified under the statute to apply for and receive relief under the section of the General Code above considered the same should be awarded to her.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF THE CITY OF NELSONVILLE, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 2, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"RE:—Bonds of the city of Nelsonville in the sum of $4,500.00 for waterworks improvement, being ten bonds of $450.00 each."

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of council and other officers of the city of Nelsonville relative to the above bond issue, also the bond and coupon form attached, and I find the same regular and in conformity with the provisions of the General Code.

FARM LOAN BONDS—COMMERCIAL BANKS NOT AUTHORIZED TO INVEST IN SAME—SAVINGS BANKS AND TRUST COMPANIES MAY INVEST IN SAME—STATE BANKS WHICH ARE MEMBER BANKS UNDER FEDERAL RESERVE ACT MAY INVEST—INSURANCE COMPANIES MAY INVEST UNDER SECTION 9519 G. C.

1. Farm loan bonds issued under the provisions of the "Federal Farm Loan Act," being the act of congress approved July 17, 1916, are not included in the list of securities in which commercial banks of Ohio are authorized to invest.

2. Investments in such bonds by savings banks and trust companies allowable by savings banks and trust companies.

3. Such bonds are proper investments for all state banks which are member banks under the Federal Reserve Act.

4. Such bonds are not proper investments for insurance companies, except under section 9519 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 2, 1917.

HON. PHIL. C. BERG, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of a request from you, for my opinion, under date of February 6, 1917, which is as follows:

> "Will you please give me your opinion as to whether or not the funds of commercial banks, savings banks, trust companies and insurance companies, organized under the laws of Ohio, may be loaned upon or invested in farm loan bonds to be issued under provisions of the act of congress approved July 17, 1916?"

The act of congress to which you refer, is commonly known as the "Federal Farm Loan Act." It provides, among other things, for a new kind of bank, with power to issue an entirely new kind of bonds; two classes of banks are provided for, known respectively as federal land banks and joint stock land banks, both of which have power to issue bonds. National farm loan associations are also provided for, but have not the power to issue bonds. For the purpose of your inquiry, there is no difference between the bonds issued by federal land banks and joint stock land banks. It may be said in regard to these farm loan bonds, that they are to be issued in series of $50,000.00 or more, in denominations of $25.00, $50.00, $100.00, $500.00 and $1,000.00 and to bear a maximum rate of interest of 5%. The act provides in detail for conditions which must be complied with before bonds may be issued; the essential condition being that when any federal land bank, or joint stock land bank, applies to the federal farm loan board for authority to issue farm loan bonds it must tender to the farm loan registrar (an official provided for by the Federal Farm Loan Act) first mortgages on farm lands or United States government bonds, not less in aggregate amount than the sum of the bonds proposed to be issued. The act provides conditions and restrictions as to first mortgages which can be acquired by farm loan banks and used for this purpose. If the application to issue bonds is granted, then the first mortgages or government bonds tendered to the farm loan registrar are held by him as collateral security for the farm loan bonds authorized to be issued; and the land bank which is to issue the bonds is required to transfer to the said farm loan registrar, by assignment, in trust, all such first mortgages or government bonds, as such collateral security. The farm loan bonds when issued are non-taxable. What has been stated is sufficient to show that these farm loan bonds are quite different from what are commonly known as mortgage bonds or collateral trust bonds, which are directly secured by a mortgage or deed of trust. These farm loan bonds are issued to the applicant bank upon the deposit by it of first mortgages given to secure a loan from the applicant bank. That is, the prospective borrower gives a first mortgage to a land bank to secure a loan from it; and the land bank uses that mortgage to make a deposit against which to issue bonds on its own account. The mortgages are collateral security for the farm loan bonds; United States government bonds may be used as such collateral instead of first mortgages if desired by the land bank issuing the farm loan bonds.

The fact that land banks can only make loans upon first mortgages, the careful restrictions and limitations that are made by the act in regard to such loans, as well as to the issuance of the farm loan bonds, makes it apparent that these bonds will prove a desirable and safe investment, of much higher character than some of the securities in which our state banks are now permitted to invest their funds, but an examination of our statutes shows that they are not included, specifically, in the list of securities which the legislature has designated as proper investments for the banks of this state.

Section 9758 specifies the securities in which the capital, surplus and deposits of commercial banks may be invested. This section is as follows:

> "Subject to the provisions of the preceding section commercial banks may invest their capital, surplus and deposits in, or loan them upon:
> "a. Personal or collateral securities.
> "b. Bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of the United States, or those for which the faith of the United States is pledged to provide payment of the interest and principal, including bonds of the District of Columbia; also in bonds or other interest-bearing obligations of any foreign government.
> "c. Bonds or interest-bearing obligations of this or any other state of the United States.
> "d. The legally issued bonds or interest-bearing obligations of any city, village, county, township, school district or other district, or political subdivision of this or any other state or territory of the United States and of Canada.
> "e. Mortgage bonds or collateral trust bonds or any regularly incorporated company, which has paid, for at least four years, dividends at the rate of at least four per cent. on their capital stock. Such loan shall not exceed eighty per cent. of the market or actual value of such bonds, the purchase of which first has been authorized by the directors. All such securities having a fixed maturity shall be charged and entered upon the books of the bank at their cost to the bank, or at par, when a premium is paid, and the superintendent of banks shall have the power to require any security to be charged down to such sum as in his judgment represents its value. The superintendent of banks may order that any such securities which he deems undesirable be sold within six months.

"f. Notes secured by mortgage on real estate, where the amount loaned thereon inclusive of prior incumbrances does not exceed forty per cent. of the value of the real estate if unimproved, and if improved sixty per cent. of its value, including improvements, which shall be kept adequately insured. Not more than fifty per cent. of the amount of the paid in capital, surplus and deposits of such bank at any time shall be invested in such real estate securities."

Section 9765 G. C. specifies the securities in which savings banks may invest. This section is as follows:

"A savings bank may invest the residue of its funds in, or loan money on, discount, buy, sell or assign promissory notes, drafts, bills of exchange and other evidences of debt and also invest its capital, surplus and deposits in, and buy and sell the following:

"a. The securities mentioned in section ninety-seven hundred and fifty-eight, subject to the limitations and restrictions therein contained, except that savings banks may not loan more than seventy-five per cent. of the amount of the paid-in capital, surplus and deposits on notes secured by mortgage on real estate. But all loans made upon personal security shall be upon notes with two or more signers or one or more indorsers, payable and to be paid at a time not exceeding six months from the date thereof. In the aggregate, not exceeding thirty per cent. of the capital, surplus and deposits of a savings bank shall be so invested.

"b. Stocks, which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next prior to the investment, bonds, and promissory notes of corporations, when this is authorized by an affirmative vote of a majority of the board of directors or by the executive committee of such savings bank. No purchase or investment shall be made in the stock of any other corporation organized or doing business under the provisions of this chapter. The superintendent of banks may order any such securities which he deems undesirable to be sold within six months.

"c. Promissory notes of individuals, firms, or corporations, when secured by a sufficient pledge of collateral approved by the directors, subject to the provisions of sections ninety-seven hundred and fifty-four and ninety-seven hundred and fifty-five."

Section 9813 authorizes savings banks to invest in first mortgage bonds of steamship companies, under certain conditions.

Section 9781 specifies the securities in which trust companies may invest. This section is as follows:

"Moneys or properties received on deposits or in trust by such corporations, unless by the terms of the trust some other mode of investment is prescribed, together with its capital and surplus, excepting such as is required to be kept as a reserve, shall be invested in or loaned only on the following:

"a. The securities mentioned in paragraphs b, c, d, e, f of section ninety-seven hundred and fifty-eight, subject to the limitations and restrictions contained in said paragraphs, except that trust companies shall not loan more than sixty per cent. of the amount of their paid-in capital, surplus and deposits on notes secured by mortgage on real estate;

"b. Stocks, which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next prior to the investment, and bonds of corporations when they are authorized by the affirmative vote of the majority of the board of directors or of the executive committee of such trust company; but the superintendent of banks may order that any such securities which he deems undesirable shall be sold within six months;

"c. Promissory notes of individuals, firms or corporations, when secured by a sufficient pledge of collateral, approved by the directors, subject to the provisions of sections ninety-seven hundred and fifty-four and ninety-seven hundred and fifty-five."

Trust companies may also purchase, lease, hold and convey real estate in the same manner as commercial banks.

It will be seen that the farm loan bonds provided for by the federal farm loan act do not come under any of the specifications of section 9758, and, therefore, cannot be classed as proper investment for commercial banks.

Section 9765, which details the list of securities in which savings banks may invest, gives a wider latitude to such banks as to investments than is given to commercial banks by section 9758. It will be noted, under paragraph b (9765) investment may be made in "stocks * * * bonds and promissory notes of corporations." This provision undoubtedly was intended to refer to the bonds of ordinary commercial corporations, rather than banks, for, at the time of its enactment, the only banks authorized by law in this state, were national banks, which are not actually corporations, but banking associations, and state banks, neither of which had, nor now has, the power to issue ordinary bonds, and, in addition banking corporations are covered by special provisions of our corporation code and have always been regarded as a class of corporations distinct from the corporations governed by our general laws; but, the language of the section is general, and as it stands would authorize investment in the bonds of any corporation; and so could be held to include bonds issued by federal land banks and joint stock land banks; for while neither these institutions nor their bonds were in existence or thought of at the time of the passage of section 9765, still these banks, as a matter of fact, are "corporations" and the "farm loan bonds" issued by them are "bonds."

Section 9781, above quoted, specifies the securities in which trust companies may invest, and it will be noted that paragraph (b) of this section gives the same power to invest in "bonds" of "corporations" as does paragraph (b) of section 9765, and what I have said as to that section, also applies to this.

It thus appears that while it may possibly be held that these farm loan bonds may be included as legitimate investments for savings banks and trust companies, they are prohibited as such for commercial banks. That is, to classify these farm loan bonds as investments listed by the legislature in sections 9758, 9765 and 9781, we must assume that the legislature, knowing that federal land banks and joint stock land banks were to be established with power to issue farm loan bonds, provided that savings funds and trust funds could be invested in such bonds, but that funds of the ordinary, or commercial bank, could not be so invested. This is a violent assumption, and leads me to the conclusion that the safe course to follow in determining what are proper investments for banks—as the legislature has seen fit to specify in detail the different securities in which state banks may invest their funds—is to construe the statutory provisions strictly and only allow investments which are clearly authorized: that farm loan bonds cannot be classed as authorized investments for commercial banks, and, while they may be allowed as investments for savings banks and trust companies, it would be preferable if they were specifically designated as such by law.

Section 27 of the Federal Farm Loan Act is as follows:

> "That farm loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act by federal land banks or joint stock land banks shall be a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds, and may be accepted as security for all public deposits.
> "Any member bank of the federal reserve system may buy and sell farm loan bonds issued under the authority of this act.
> "Any federal reserve bank may buy and sell farm loan bonds issued under this act to the same extent and subject to the same limitations placed upon the purchase and sale by said banks of state, county, district and municipal bonds, under subsection (b) of section 14 of the Federal Reserve Act approved December 23, 1913."

Section 9796-2 of the General Code grants the right of state banks to become a member bank under the federal reserve act. This section is as follows:

> "Every state bank, in addition to the powers, rights and privileges possessed by it under the laws of Ohio shall have the right and power to become a member bank under the federal reserve act upon the terms and conditions set forth in said federal reserve act, or hereafter provided by law, in order to become a member bank as contemplated by said federal reserve act. Every state bank which becomes a member bank shall have the right and power to do everything required of or granted by said federal reserve act to member banks which are organized under the state laws; and compliance by state banks with the requirements of said federal reserve act shall be accepted in lieu of the reserve requirements provided by the laws of Ohio. Nothing contained in this section of the act shall in any way or manner affect or have reference to state banks which do not become member banks under said federal reserve act except as provided in this act."

My opinion, therefore, upon this branch of your inquiry, is that farm loan bonds issued under the provisions of the act of congress, approved July 17, 1916, entitled "The Federal Farm Loan Act" are not included by the laws of Ohio now in force, in the list of securities or evidences of debt in which the funds of a commercial bank may be invested, nor directly included in the list of investments for savings banks or trust companies, or upon which said funds may be directly loaned. Loans made directly by such banks upon promissory notes of individuals, firms, or corporations, secured by the deposit of farm loan bonds as collateral, would probably be valid under paragraph (a) of section 9759; paragraph (c) of section 9765 and paragraph (c) of section 9780; but it would be preferable (though no question might be raised as to such loans or investments on account of the high character of farm loan bonds as security) that such bonds be specifically included in the list of lawful investments for the banks of this state.

Commercial banks, savings banks, or trust companies, which have become member banks under the federal reserve act, may invest their funds in, and buy and sell farm loan bonds, by virtue of section 9796-2 G. C. and section 27 of the Federal Farm Loan Act, above quoted.

The second part of your inquiry is whether the funds of insurance companies may be loaned upon or invested in farm loan bonds. The main provisions of the General Code governing the investment of the funds of insurance companies, life, and other than life, domestic and foreign, are 9343, 9357, 9358, 9367, 9373, 9518, 9519, 9520, 9565 and 9569. I do not deem it necessary to incorporate these sections in this opinion, for, from an examination of the same, I am convinced that only one section, viz.: 9519, relating to domestic insurance companies other than life, could be construed as authorizing an investment in farm loan bonds. This section is as follows:

> "Funds accumulated in the course of business, or surplus money over and above the capital stock of a company, may be loaned on or invested in the above named securities, or:
> "1. Bonds and mortgages on unincumbered real estate within this or any other state of the United States worth fifty per cent. more than the sum loaned thereon, exclusive of buildings, unless buildings are insured in some company authorized to do business in this state, and the policy is transferred to a company making the investment.
> "2. Bonds of any state, county, township, municipal corporation, school district, or other political subdivision in the United States, issued in conformity with law and upon which default in the payment of interest has not been made;
> "3. Stocks, bonds, or other evidences of indebtedness of any solvent, dividend-paying institution incorporated under the laws of this or any other state, or of the United States, except its own stock;
> "4. Negotiable promissory notes maturing in not more than six months from the date thereof, secured by collateral security through the transfer of any of the preceding sections, with absolute power of sale within twenty days after default in payment at maturity."

This section, by virtue of sections 9568 and 9569, also relates to the deposit required of domestic and foreign guaranty companies.

What I have said as to the propriety of farm loan bonds being specifically designated as proper investments for banks, also relates to the question as to their being proper investments for insurance companies: and, as the legislature has carefully listed the securities in which insurance companies may invest, and as these bonds cannot be included even by inference, in any of the lists except that given by section 9519, my opinion is that farm loan bonds should not be classed as authorized investments for the funds of insurance companies, except in so far as the same may be authorized by section 9519 G. C., until specifically designated as such by law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ADDENDA.

I desire to call your attention to paragraph (b) of section 9765 quoted on page five of this opinion; the first part of the first sentence of this paragraph is as follows: "Stocks, which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next prior to the investment, bonds, and promissory notes of corporations * * *." The comma which appears after the word "bonds" has evidently been inserted by mistake in codifying this section, for as originally passed, this particular provision appears as follows (99 O. L. 282): "Stocks, which have paid dividends for five consecutive years next prior to the investment, bonds and promissory notes of corporations * * *." This error should be corrected and the original provision followed: otherwise it could be contended with much force that investments could be made by savings banks in any kind of bonds.

MILK BOTTLES—ACT OF MARCH 24, 1915 (106 O. L. 108), RELATIVE TO USE OF SAME BY COMPANIES OTHER THAN OWNERS—CONSTITUTIONAL.

The act of the legislature passed March 24, 1915 (106 O. L. 108) being an amendment of section 13169 G. C. and for the registration of bottles, is a police regulation, within the power of the legislature and not unconstitutional.

Said act is free from the objections to the former law upon the same subject for which the same was found unconstitutional by the supreme court in State v. Schmuck, 77 O. S. 438.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 3, 1917.

The Board of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your inquiry to this office under date of January 22, 1917, through the chief of the dairy and food division, in reference to the validity of the bottling act, is as follows:

> "I have been receiving a great many complaints from milk companies and bottling works relative to other dealers using their bottles without their permission, and they seem to feel that this department ought to assist them in getting relief in this matter.
> "I would appreciate very much if you would give me an opinion relative to bringing cases against these violators under section 13169, 13169-1, 13169-2 and 13169-3.
> "There seems to be some question about the validity of this law and I would like to be placed right before getting into any litigation."

The statutes in question are section 13169 and sub-sections 1, 2 and 3, and are of considerable length, and it is not necessary that they be set forth herein.

The question as to the validity of this law arises from the fact that a former act on the same subject was held unconstitutional by the supreme court.

State v. Schmuck, 77 O. S. 438.

The syllabus of that case is as follows:

> "Sections 4364-42, 4364-43, 4364-44, 4364-45, Revised Statutes, making it a crime to have in possession for use or sale certain bottles or other vessels without the written consent of the owner, and providing for search warrant to seize and restore such property to the owner, are invalid, being in conflict with sections 1, 14 and 19 of article I of the constitution of Ohio."

It would seem sufficient to remark that there is nothing in the present act contrary to the letter or spirit of the sections of the constitution referred to above, but it is also true that the framer of this act has been careful to eliminate all provisions condemned or criticised by Judge Price in the opinion in the case, which were principally the following:

The search-warrant feature. The provision that buying and selling such bottles as are mentioned in the act, or possession of the same by any person without the written consent of the owner, as shown by the stamp on the bottle, should be prima-facie evidence of unlawfully receiving the same.

The provision that taking a deposit or compensation for the non-return of a bottle should not be construed as a sale.

And the omission of any exception in a case where the original owner of the bottle had parted with such ownership that it might be thereafter dealt in as other property.

All these things have been carefully avoided in the new statute, and inasmuch as it was stated in the opinion that the decision was rather out of line with the current of authority and followed the doctrine laid down by the Illinois supreme court, these modifications undoubtedly remove from the present statute all objection found by the supreme court with the former one.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO REFORMATORY FOR WOMEN—MAGISTRATES SENTENCING WOMEN THERETO MUST SPECIFY AMOUNT OF FINE AND COSTS —ALSO CREDIT PER DAY TO BE GIVEN PRISONER—MUST RELEASE PRISONER WHEN FINE AND COSTS ARE PAID—IF PRISONER IS CONFINED FOR SAID REASON.

When a woman is committed to the Ohio reformatory for women for non-payment of fine and costs, the sentencing court or magistrate must specify the amount of the fine and costs and the rate of credit per day to be given the prisoner, so that the superintendent of the reformatory can compute the number of days to be served from the commitment.

When the sentencing court or magistrate certifies to the superintendent of the Ohio reformatory for women that a woman committed to that institution for non-payment of fine and costs has fully paid the same, it is the duty of the superintendent of such reformatory to release such prisoner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 3, 1917.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Several attorneys have written this department asking how the superintendent of the Ohio reformatory for women at Marysville is to determine the length of time to be served by prisoners committed to that institution because of non-payment of fines and costs; also whether prisoners committed to the Ohio reformatory for women for non-payment of fines and costs may be discharged from such institution at any time during their imprisonment upon the payment to the proper authorities of such fines and costs. I am addressing the answer to these questions to you since your board has charge of the reformatory for women and am sending copies of the same to the parties asking the question.

Sections 1445, 4559, 12376, 12387 and 13717 G. C. provide:

"Sec. 1445. Whoever violates any provision of sections fourteen hundred and nine to fourteen hundred and forty-four, both inclusive, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than two hundred dollars, and the costs of prosecution, and upon default of payment of fine and costs shall be committed to the jail of the county or to some workhouse and there confined one day for each dollar of the fine and costs against him. He shall not be discharged or released therefrom by any board or officer except upon payment of the portion of the fine and cost remaining unserved or upon the order of the board of agriculture.

"Sec. 4559. When a fine is the whole or part of a sentence, the court or mayor may order that the person sentenced shall remain confined in the county jail, workhouse, or prison, until the fine and costs be paid, or secured to be paid, or the offender be otherwise legally discharged.

"Sec. 12376. When, under the provisions of law, a convict may be imprisoned in the county jail, the court, upon the recommendation of the prosecuting attorney, may sentence such convict to hard labor therein; and when a person may be committed to jail for the non-payment of fines and costs, the court may commit him to hard labor therein until the value of his labor at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents a day equals such fine and costs, provided that no commitment under this section shall exceed six months, and this section shall not affect the laws relating to workhouses.

"Sec. 12387. In cases where a fine may be imposed in whole or part in punishment of an offense, or for a violation of an ordinance of a municipality, and such court or magistrate could order that such person stand committed to the jail of the county or municipality until the fine and the costs of prosecution are paid, the court or magistrate may order that such person stand committed to such workhouse until such fine and costs are paid, or until he is discharged therefrom by allowing a credit of sixty cents per day on the fine and costs for each day of confinement in the workhouse, or until he is otherwise legally discharged.

"Sec. 13717. When a fine is the whole or a part of a sentence, the court or magistrate may order that the person sentenced remain imprisoned in jail until such fine and costs are paid or secured to be paid, or he is otherwise legally discharged, provided that the person so imprisoned shall receive credit upon such fine and costs at the rate of sixty cents per day for each day's imprisonment."

It is clear from a reading of these sections that different rates are provided by statute for serving out fines and costs and it is for the sentencing court to determine under what statute sentence is to be imposed and to specify in such sentence at what rate the fine and costs are to be paid.

In the case of Hamilton v. State, 78 O. S. page 76, the statute provided that in default of payment of fine and costs the defendant "shall stand committed to such workhouse until the fine and costs are paid or until he be discharged therefrom by allowing a credit of sixty cents per day on such fine and costs." The court held it was error for the sentence to simply provide and require that the accused "shall stand committed to such workhouse until the fine and costs are paid" without adding thereto the further words of the statute "or until he be discharged therefrom by allowing a credit of sixty cents per day on such fine and costs." The court said at page 85:

"The sentence of imprisonment in a criminal case, to be a valid sentence, must in and of itself be definite and complete in all its material terms, and so certain and accurate as to the time of its commencement and proper termination as that it shall not be necessary for either the prisoner, or the officers charged with its execution, to apply to a court to ascertain its meaning. Pickett v. State, 22 O. S. 405. In other words, to borrow the language of Norris J. in re Moore, 14 C. C. R. 244, 'a man who is compelled to have a law suit to get into jail ought not, by reason of the uncertainty of his sentence, be compelled to have another law suit to get out. * * *'

We are of the opinion that the sentence of imprisonment pronounced by the court in the above case is not the one provided and required by law, in that, it does not include therein all the conditions of release prescribed by the statute. Such sentence is, therefore, unauthorized and erroneous and should be reversed."

This case indicates plainly, I think, that in commitment for nonpayment of fine and costs, the sentencing court or magistrate must specify in its order the rate of credit to be allowed the prisoner and section 13716 G. C. makes it his duty to send a copy of such judgment to the jailer when committing the prisoner.

Section 13716 G. C. reads:

"When a person convicted of an offense is sentenced to imprisonment in jail, the court or magistrate shall order him into the custody of the sheriff or constable, who shall deliver him, with the record of his conviction, to the jailer, in whose custody he shall remain, in the jail of the county, until the term of his imprisonment expires or he is otherwise legally discharged."

In view of the foregoing, therefore, it is my opinion, in answer to your first question, that when a woman is committed to the Ohio reformatory for women for nonpayment of fine and costs, the sentencing court or magistrate must specify the amount of the fine and costs and the rate of credit per day to be given the prisoner, so that the superintendent of the reformatory can compute the number of days to be served from the commitment.

Answering the second question in regard to the release of such prisoners from the Ohio state reformatory for women, upon the payment of fine and costs, the common law rule is laid down in 19 Cyc., p. 555, as follows:

"At common law commitment is until the fine be paid."

In the case of Ex parte Kelly, 28 Cal. 414, it was held that where the court sentenced an offender to pay a fine of $5,000.00, and directed that he be imprisoned in the county jail at the rate of $2.00 per day until the same was paid, the prisoner was entitled to a credit of $2.00 per day for each day he remained in prison, and that he might at any time pay the sum then remaining unsatisfied and claim his discharge from custody.

The court say:

"The former (imprisonment) by way of enforcing payment or satisfaction of the fine, is no part of the punishment per se, but is merely one of the modes by which the law enforced the satisfaction of a fine which is in itself the punishment or a part of it. The punishment fixed by the statute is imprisonment in the state prison, or fine, or both; all beyond is mere mode and manner of enforcement. The first is to be satisfied by serving out the prescribed term in the state prison and in that way only; but the latter may be satisfied in either of three ways, by voluntary payment of the amount of the fine, or by its collection under execution, as in the case of a judgment in a civil action, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding one day for every two dollars of the fine. The alleged incongruity is apparent only when the mere mode and manner of enforcing the punishment is confounded with the punishment itself and regarded as part of it, but it wholly disappears when the obvious distinction between the two is kept in view.

"There is no force in the point that the defendant is bound to satisfy the whole fine by imprisonment, and cannot be allowed to pay the unsatisfied portion of his fine and be thereupon discharged from custody. For each day which he does, or may hereafter pass in prison, he is entitled to a credit of $2.00 upon his fine, and he may at any time pay the sum then remaining unsatisfied and claim his discharge from custody."

In the case of Brock v. Georgia, 22 Ga. 98, the court, speaking of a defendant imprisoned to enforce the payment of a fine, said:

"A penalty for the offense of which the defendant was convicted is pecuniary altogether. The court, on imposing the penalty, may enforce its payment by adjudging that the party convicted be committed until the fine and costs are paid. The imprisonment is no part of the penalty imposed, but is the means and the legal means of enforcing the judgment of the court. Such is the judgment in this case. The imprisonment is not ordered as penalty, and the judgment is not in the alternative, and the imprisonment, when suffered, is not a discharge of the penalty. That still remains. The judgment, as pronounced, is milder and more favorable to the prisoner than the ordinary judgment—to stand committed until the fine is paid, for under this sentence if he pays the fine and costs before the expiration of three months, he is to be discharged, and whether he pays or not, at the expiration of three months he is to be discharged."

Our statutes providing for imprisonment for any default in payment of fines, to my mind, clearly indicate that the imprisonment is simply a means of enforcing the judgment of the court, and no part of the penalty imposed. This being the case the order of commitment has accomplished its purpose whenever the defendant pays the fine and costs, and it is, therefore, my opinion that when the sentencing court or magistrate certifies to the superintendent of the Ohio reformatory for women that a woman committed to that institution for nonpayment of fine and costs, has fully paid the same, it is the duty of the superintendent of such reformatory to release such prisoner.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

JOINT BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—MUST PROVIDE SAME METHOD OF ASSESSING COSTS OF IMPROVING AND CONSTRUCTING HIGHWAY ALONG COUNTY LINE AGAINST THE DIFFERENT TOWNSHIPS.

A joint board of county commissioners in constructing or improving a highway along the county line are not authorized in law to choose different methods to provide for the proportion of the costs and expenses assessed against the different townships interested, but the same method must be pursued as to all the townships. Opinion No. 1441, Hon. Edward C. Turner, affirmed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 5, 1917.

HON. EARL K. SOLETHER, Prosecuting Attorney, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication of February 3, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to certain matters therein set out, has been received. Your communication reads as follows:

"I herewith submit to you the following facts and ask that you give me an opinion thereon:

"Proceedings for a joint county road improvement are being contemplated by the boards of county commissioners of Wood and Seneca counties. The proposed road improvement is on the county line between Wood and Seneca county for a distance of six miles, and lying between Jackson township in Seneca county and Perry township, in Wood county. This county line road runs northerly from the city of Fostoria, and if the same could be improved, would be a very important road to the citizens of northern Ohio, as the same would be a direct connection with the city of Fostoria and other roads leading to the city of Toledo and other towns in northern Ohio.

"Heretofore Jackson township, Seneca county, have improved their roads by a general levy over Jackson township, while the roads in Perry township, Wood county, have been built and constructed by a levy of two-fifths of the costs against the land owners within one mile of the improvement and three-fifths of the cost assessed against the township. Both Jackson township and Perry township have been constructing roads for some time under their respective plans of assessment.

"The joint board of county commissioners of Wood and Seneca county desire to construct this improvement by resolution, and wish to apportion the costs of constructing the same by allowing Jackson township, Seneca county, to pay their share of the cost of the improvement by a general levy over their township, and the cost assessed against Perry township, Wood county, to be paid by a levy of two-fifths against the land owners within one mile of the improvement and three-fifths of the cost against the township.

"The land owners residing in Jackson township, Seneca county, along this proposed improvement, are unwilling to pay for the cost of constructing the road other than by a general levy over Jackson township, for the reason that they have been making a general levy for a number of years to pay for the improvement of roads in Jackson township, and they think it unfair to compel them to pay special assessments for the construction of this road inasmuch as they have been paying the general assessment for a number of years to build roads in other parts of their township.

"The joint county board of commissioners of Wood and Seneca counties desire to know whether the joint board, after granting the improvement under a resolution, can, under the law, allow each county to choose its own method of assessment for the payment of the cost of constructing said improvement. If you answer this question in the affirmative, then will you advise the procedure which the joint board should take in making their respective assessments.

"The opinions above requested call for a construction of the so-called 'Cass Road Law,' and I wish to call your attention to Opinion No. 1441, dated March 30, 1916, and Opinion No. 2118, dated December 21, 1916, rendered by former Attorney-General Edward C. Turner, upon facts which are identical with the situation which I herein present to you.

"You will note from reading Opinion No. 1441 of former Attorney-General Edward C. Turner, no mention is made of sections 6921, 6927 and 6928 of the General Code, and it would seem from reading these sections that the legislature has enacted a law which is applicable to just such a case as we have here.

"If you are unable, for any reason, to give a favorable opinion upon the facts hereinbefore presented, I would further request that this matter be called to the attention of the legislature which is now in session with the idea in view that the Cass road law should be amended or new sections enacted to take care of cases of this kind.

"I am quite sure that there are a great many county line roads in the state of Ohio which are in the same situation, and in the future improvements will be desired for these roads, and some relief will be needed, either in the way of a favorable opinion under the present law, or the enacting of new sections applying to such cases."

I note that you are familiar with the opinions rendered by my predecessor in office, being Opinions Nos. 1441 and 2118, rendered in 1916. One of the questions decided in said opinions is the following:

Where the joint boards of county commissioners of two counties resolve to improve a highway upon the line of said two counties, is each county at liberty to choose its own method of assessment, or must the respective proportions of the costs and expenses payable by each county be raised by the same method of assessment in each county? That is, could a township on one side of the county line raise the full amount assessed by a levy upon the whole property of the township, and a township on the other side of the county line provide for its assessment by assessing a part of the costs and expenses against the property owners and raise the other part by a levy upon all the property of the township?

This question was answered by my predecessor in office, to the effect that the proportion of the costs and expenses of the said improvement assessed against each would have to be raised by the same method of assessment in each county.

In your communication you call attention to the fact that my predecessor in office seemed to give no force or effect to sections 6921, 6927 and 6928 G. C., which sections you feel would give authority for a different method of raising the amount proportioned to each county.

Before noticing the provisions of section 6921 G. C., I would like to call attention to section 6910 G. C. This section provides that:

"The county commissioners may, without the presentation of a petition, take the necessary steps to construct, improve or repair a public road or part thereof as hereinbefore provided upon the passage of a resolution by unanimous vote declaring the necessity therefor, and the cost and expense thereof may be paid by either of the methods hereinafter provided."

Now you will note that section 6921 in part is very similar to this section 6910, other than that it does not provide that the cost and expense under said section shall be paid by one of the methods provided for in section 6919. Section 6921 in short provides that the county commissioners, or joint board, upon a unanimous vote, may without a petition order that all the compensation and damages, costs and expenses of constructing any improvement be paid out of the proceeds of any levy or levies for road purposes on the grand duplicate of the county, that is, the county commissioners may provide that all of the cost and expense will be paid by the county. Such is the first part of section 6921. Now the latter part of this section provides that the county commissioners, or joint board, may agree with the trustees of the township or townships in which said improvement is in whole or in part situated, to the effect that said county and township, or one or more of them, may pay such proportion or amount of the damages, costs and expenses as may be agreed upon between them. In other words, in the latter part of this section the county and the township pay the total cost of the improvement, while in the first part of the section the provision is made for the county commissioners paying the total cost themselves. But there is no provision in this section whatever as to assessing a part of the costs against benefited property owners, so that I do not feel that this section warrants a conclusion that the joint board of county commissioners could proceed in the manner suggested by you in your communication.

You call attention also to section 6927 G. C. This section provides merely that the county commissioners, in order to provide by taxation a fund for the payment of the costs and expense of an improvement to be paid by the township or townships interested, are authorized to levy a tax upon all the taxable property of the township or townships, but this section has nothing to do as to the matter of assessing all or any part of the cost and expense of an improvement against benefited property owners. So that I am of the opinion that the provisions of said two sections, or the provisions of said section 6928, do not warrant the joint board of county commissioners to proceed in the manner suggested by you in your communication.

Therefore, in answering your communication directly, I am of the opinion that Hon. Edward C. Turner's opinion in reference to this matter is correct.

You suggest that it would be advisable for the general assembly to take this matter up at this session and provide a method by which highways may be constructed along the plan which your joint board of county commissioners desire to follow. I will say that such provision is made in the bill which has to do with highways and which is now before the legislature.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—MUST KEEP COURT HOUSE CLEAN INCLUDING LAW LIBRARY—JANITORS NOT ENTITLED TO EXTRA COMPENSATION.

It is the duty of the county commissioners to keep the entire court house clean, law library and all, and the court house janitor is not entitled to extra compensation for cleaning the law library.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 6, 1917.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 1, 1917, as follows:

"Putnam county has at its court house room lighted, heated and partly shelved for library purposes. There is a library association, as provided by law, librarian and assistant librarian and custodian.

"The court house is cared for by two janitors, both required to take civil service examination before entering upon their duties.

"Will the janitors be required to do the janitor work in and about the above mentioned room? If not, are they entitled to extra compensation for services if they should perform the duty of janitor of this room?"

Section 2410 General Code reads:

"The board may employ a superintendent, and such watchmen, janitors and other employes as it deems necessary for the care, and custody of the court house, jail, and other county buildings, and of bridges, and other property under its jurisdiction and control."

Section 3055 G. C. reads:

"For the use of such law library, the board of county commissioners of the county shall provide at the expense of the county, a suitable room or rooms with sufficient and suitable bookcases, in the county court house, or if there is no suitable room or rooms to be had therein, any other suitable room or rooms at the county seat, and shall heat and light them. The books and furniture of the law library association used exclusively in such library, shall be exempt from taxation."

The county commissioners are the legal custodians of the court house and it is their duty to see that the entire building, law library and all, is kept clean. The particular duties of each janitor are fixed by the commissioners. There is nothing statutory about their duties, and if in the case you refer to the commissioners order the janitors in question to keep the law library clean, it is my opinion that they must do so without any increase in compensation.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROBATE JUDGE—REQUIRED TO PROVIDE CLOTHING FOR PATIENTS COMMITTED TO INSTITUTION FOR FEEBLE MINDED—COSTS TO BE PAID FROM COUNTY TREASURY.

When a person is committed to the institution for feeble minded, the probate judge is required to furnish such patient with clothing, provided for in section 1963 G. C., when the same is not otherwise provided, and the cost of the same shall be paid on the certificate of the probate judge and the order of the county auditor from the county treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 6, 1917.

HON. MELL G. UNDERWOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, New Lexington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 14, 1917, as follows:

"It is a prerequisite condition to their admission into the institution for feeble-minded youth, that each patient be furnished with necessary and proper clothing.

"Has the probate judge the power to furnish each patient sent to that institution with proper clothing to be paid for on his certificate and the order of the county auditor on the county treasury?

"If he should not have the power to furnish the patient with the necessary clothing, how and by whom should the same be furnished?"

Sections 1902, 1962 and 1963 of the General Code read:

"Sec. 1902. Feeble minded persons of such inoffensive habits as to make them proper subjects for classification and discipline in the institution may be admitted, on pursuing the same course of legal commitment as governs admission to the state hospital for the insane.

"Sec. 1962. If not otherwise furnished, the probate judge shall supply each patient sent to a hospital for the insane with proper clothing, which shall be paid for on his certificate and the order of the county auditor from the county treasury. Such clothing shall be new or as good as new, the woolens of dark color, and with such patient be delivered in good order to the superintendent. The superintendent will not be bound to receive the patient without such clothing.

"Sec. 1963. The clothing required by the preceding section is as follows: For a male patient, a coat, vest and two pairs of pantaloons, all of woolen cloth, two pairs of woolen socks, two pocket handkerchiefs, two cravats, one hat or cap, a pair of shoes or boots, a pair of slippers, three cotton shirts, two pairs of drawers, two undershirts and an overcoat or other outside garment sufficient to protect him in severe weather;

"For a female patient, two substantial gowns or dresses, two flannel petticoats, two pairs of woolen stockings, one pair of shoes, one pair of slippers, two handkerchiefs, a good bonnet, two cotton chemises, and a large shawl or cloak."

It will be noted that section 1902, above quoted, provides for the admission of patients to the institution for feeble minded and states that they "may be admitted on pursuing the same course of legal commitment as governs admission to the state hospital for the insane." Section 1902, therefore, adopts the same method for admitting patients to the feeble minded institution as to the state hospitals of the state. It will be noted that section 1962 provides that each patient admitted to a hospital for the insane shall be supplied with certain clothing by the probate judge, not otherwise furnished, and that "the superintendent will not be bound to receive the patient without such clothing." This being a provision of law in connection with admission of patients to state hospitals, it applies with equal force by reason of section 1902 to the admission of patients to the feeble minded institution, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that when a patient is committed to the institution for the feeble minded, the probate judge is required to furnish such patient with the clothing provided in section 1963 G. C., when the same is not otherwise provided, and the cost of such clothing shall be paid on the certificate of the probate judge and the order of the county auditor from the county treasury.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HOUSE BILL NO. 386—EFFECT OF SAME AS INTRODUCED IN 82ND GENERAL ASSEMBLY.

House bill No. 386, as introduced in the 82nd general assembly, has the practical effect of creating limited partnerships with perpetual succession as corporations. Said house bill is vague in its terms and lacks provisions necessary to give certainty to its operation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 6, 1917.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR:—Under date of February 6, 1917, you submitted the following request for opinion to this office:

> "Will you please let me have your opinion on the enclosed bill to amend section 8667 of the General Code, etc.? Also have your legal survey supplemented by report from the secretary of state as to the probable effects that might come to the state from its passage. I would be glad also to have your unofficial statement as to what effect it might have on the revenues of the state."

The bill referred to is H. B. No. 386, and is as follows:

> "Section 1. That section 8667 of the General Code be amended to read as follows:
> "Section 8667. If a corporation be organized for profit, it must have a capital stock, which may consist of common and preferred, or common only; but at no time shall the amount of preferred stock at par value exceed two-thirds of the actual capital paid in cash or property.
> "Any corporation for profit, except a public utility, banking, safe deposit and trust, safe deposit or trust company, building and loan association, collateral loan company, savings and loan association, title guarantee and trust company, or insurance company, may provide in its articles of incorporation for the issuance of shares of common capital stock without any nominal or par value, each of which shares shall be equal to every other share of such stock, and without stating the amount of such capital stock. When, upon organization, ten per cent. of the capital stock without nominal or par value, of a corporation, is subscribed, the subscribers to the articles of incorporation, or a majority of them, shall at once so certify in writing to the secretary of state; and such certificate shall be in lieu of the certificate provided for by section 8633 of the General Code. The fee payable to the secretary of state for the filing of articles of incorporation, or a certificate of increase, providing for shares without nominal or par value, shall as to such shares be computed and paid at the rate of five cents for each such share, and in no event shall such fee be less than ten dollars, and the annual franchise tax provided for by section 5498 of the General Code shall, as to such shares, be computed and paid at the rate of seven and one-half cents for each such share. The number of shares of such stock may be increased or decreased in the same manner as is provided with respect to shares of stock having par value. A corporation issuing stock without par value may borrow such sums of money as its board of directors may approve, and may issue its notes or coupons or registered bonds therefor bearing any legal rate of interest and secure their payment by a mortgage upon its property, real or personal, or both. All other provisions of law relating to stock having par value, so far as applicable, shall apply to and govern stock without par value.

"Section 2. That said original section 8667 of the General Code be, and the same is hereby repealed."

The first paragraph of this bill down to and including line 7 is the existing section verbatim. All the balance of it is an addition to the law, in effect giving partnerships perpetual succession like corporations, and limiting, or rather extinguishing the liability of individual partners.

One serious objection to the form of expression of this bill appears at the very outset. It is that lines 8 to 14 contain a virtual contradiction of the first thirteen words. Those words make the express, mandatory, positive and necessary requirement of capital stock. It MUST have capital stock. The new portion of the statute excuses this requirement except so far as in the nature of the case capital stock is represented by actual assets. The corporation formed under this permission would have no stated amount of capital stock. Like an individual or firm it would have property, or possibly, very frequently, like many individuals, it would have none. The corporation would have shares, but just what these shares would be, or what they would represent is entirely indefinite. In corporations, as at present existing, the intrinsic value of shares varies possibly from hour to hour, although not absolutely capable of ascertainment. In the proposed corporation, having no nominal value, exactly the same thing would be true, but they would lack even the semblance of certainty given by this nominal value, which, under safeguarding regulations, always represents their actual original value.

The first expression upon this subject is in lines 11 and 14 providing for articles of incorporation which must provide for shares. The shares must be equal, must have no nominal value, and the articles of incorporation shall not state the amount of the capital stock. As there is no express revocation of that requirement of section 8625 which requires the articles of incorporation to state the number of shares into which the capital stock is divided, and as the new bill follows with a provision requiring a certificate when ten per cent. of the stock has been subscribed, this requirement of the articles must be construed to be still in effect, although it is only the latter part of paragraph four of section 8625, and is in and of itself an incomplete sentence, so that in construing the new law and reading it in connection with the old, you have to read into the new bill the end of paragraph 4 beginning after the comma. The probable effect of this would be immediate and continued litigation, and the law, instead of being enacted by this bill would be made hereafter by the decision of courts, until which time it was so established, it would have no certainty and could not be said to have any definite existence.

A very important provision is inserted in lines 27-31, giving the directors control of borrowing, and issuing bonds and obligations. They may have that authority at present; do have it within certain limits, but one familiar rule in the construction of statutes is that new words inserted are intended to have additional meaning. This is incontrovertible where a new provision is inserted. Just what the legislative intent will be as to the power of directors over this important branch of corporate activity is only left to conjecture, and like the other feature of the case will be moulded into law by the practice of corporations and decisions of the courts in the future.

The bill is modeled after the New York statute upon the same subject, but differs from it in some important particulars which give a degree of certainty to a portion of the New York law.

The New York law provides that every stock certificate shall have plainly written or printed upon its face "the number of shares which it represents and the number of such shares which the corporation is authorized to issue." The absence of a provision to this effect in the bill in question is very important, as lacking certainty, which the New York law has in that respect.

The New York law has a provision restricting the increase of indebtedness upon an increase of stock which is absent in the proposed bill. The New York law provides that the corporation shall have capital of not less than the amount of the preferred stock authorized to be issued, and an additional five dollars, or some multiple of five dollars, for every share of common stock.

The omission of all these requirements, and in fact of every provision or regulation requiring or producing any certainty as to the capital stock, size of share, number of stockholders, or in fact anything in reference to the actual assets of such proposed corporation, or the manner in which it is held and owned, makes the proposed act of such indefinite character as scarcely to amount to legislation at all, except to invite proceedings of every species and character of vagary, until the law take tangible shape in actual practice.

I am not called upon to advise the legislative and executive departments of the government farther than to state the nature of the apparent purposes of the proposed act and the manner in which it is proposed by it to effectuate them.

As to its effects upon the state's income from this source, it is evident that it will be reduced. An estimate of the amount of such loss can most readily and accurately be given by the auditor of state.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

TREASURER OF TOWNSHIP AND VILLAGE FUNDS—LAW PROVIDING SAID OFFICER TO BE TREASURER OF SCHOOL FUNDS REPEALED —NOT ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION AFTER DEPOSITORY HAS BEEN PROVIDED.

The treasurer of village and township funds who continues to act as treasurer of the school funds after a depository has been provided under 7604-7608 G. C. is not entitled to compensation for such services.

The law providing that the treasurer of the village or township shall be treasurer of the school funds having been repealed makes the act of such treasurer an unlawful act for which no compensation can be had.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1917.

HON. GEORGE S. MAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Napoleon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 12, 1917, you ask my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "The board of education of the Malinta village school district designated a depository for its school funds in accordance with the provisions of section 7604 of the General Code, but failed to adopt any resolution dispensing with the treasurer of the school moneys belonging to said school district, as required by section 4782 General Code.
> "The treasurer of the village and township funds continued to act as treasurer of the school funds belonging to said district after the designation of a depository, and the question arises as to whether or not he is entitled to compensation for the services rendered after the designation of such depository."

The above mentioned section 7604 G. C. provides that within thirty days after the first Monday in January, 1916, and every two years thereafter, the board of education of any school district shall provide a depository for all of the moneys coming into the hands of its treasurer and section 4782 provides:

> "When a depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members, shall dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys, belonging to such school district. In such case, the clerk of the board of education of a district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties and be subject to all the obligations required by law of the treasurer of such school district."

But I note by your letter that your board of education neglected or failed to adopt any such resolution, as is provided by section 4782, and that the treasurer of the village has been performing the duties of the treasurer of the school district.

I cannot understand, however, how the village treasurer can act as the treasurer of your school district in any event. Under the provisions of section 4747 G. C. the board of education of each village school district shall organize on the first Monday of January after the election of members of such board, and elect one member as president, one member as vice-president and a person who may or may not be a member shall be elected clerk. Now, said scheme of organization provides for no election of treasurer, and section 4763 provides that in village school districts not having a depository, as provided by section 7604, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such districts.

You say in your letter that after designating a depository for its school funds, in accordance with the provisions of section 7604 of the General Code, and as I take it, the succeeding sections thereto relating, the board of education failed to adopt the resolution provided for in section 4782, dispensing with the treasurer of the school moneys. I am satisfied that the language of section 4782 is such that an action in mandamus will not lie to compel a board of education to adopt such a resolution, for the section provides "by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members," but I do not understand that a board of education can neglect and refuse to perform an act provided for by law and thus have any greater powers by such neglect than such board would have had by acting or than is given it by law.

In 1904, what is now section 4763 G. C., then 4042 R. S., was amended to read as follows:

> "In each city, village and township school district, the treasurer of the city, village and township funds shall be respectively the treasurer of the school funds. * * *"

Said section was carried into the General Code at the time of its enactment in the above identical form, but in 1914, 104 O. L. p. 159, said section 4763 was amended to read as follows:

> "In each city school district, the treasurer of the city funds shall be the treasurer of the school funds. In all village and rural school districts which do not provide legal depositories, as provided in section 7604 to 7608, inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such districts."

Said above mentioned section became a law May 20, 1914, and has remained in its present form from that time until now. The same year and on the same day, 104 O. L. 139, section 4737 was amended to read as follows:

> "The board of education of each city, village and rural school district shall organize on the first Monday of January after the election of members of such board. One member of the board shall be elected president and one as vice-president, and a person who may or may not be a member of the board shall be elected clerk. * * *"

No provision was made for the election of a treasurer and said section remained a part of the General Code in the above form until now.

Section 4773 G. C. provides:

> "At the expiration of his term of service, each treasurer shall deliver to his successor in office all books, papers, money and other property in his hands belonging to the school district. * * *"

So that when the village and township treasurer at Malinta kept possession of the property of said school district following the establishment of the depository which was designated under the provisions of General Code Section 7604, he was then performing an unlawful act. If he was the treasurer prior to the first day of January, 1916, then under section 4773 he was bound to turn over the property in his possession belonging to the school district to his successor, which was one of two persons, either the clerk of the board of education, who was made the acting treasurer under section 4782 G. C., or the county treasurer who was made the acting treasurer under section 4763 G. C. If, on the other hand, he was elected as village and township treasurer at the regular election held in 1915, then any property which came into his hands came there wrongfully and any duties which he performed as such treasurer were unlawfully performed.

In Conner v. Board of Education, 8 Ohio Dec. Rep. 672, it is held that a person who by virtue of the office of city treasurer has possession of school moneys and who is compelled to act as such treasurer after his term of office, as city treasurer, has expired, because the treasurer elected fails to give bond as required by the board of education, he is not permitted to draw compensation for his services as such treasurer. The court said:

> "If he was city treasurer during that time the law denies compensation; if he was not, his holding the school funds was an unlawful act."

So that I advise you that the township and village treasurer cannot receive compensation for the duties performed as school treasurer since the establishment of the depository provided for in General Code section 7604 and the subsequent sections thereto related.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONTIGUOUS TERRITORY—TERRITORY WHICH SIMPLY TOUCHES AT THE EXTREME CORNERS NOT CONTIGUOUS TERRITORY WITHIN MEANING OF SECTION 4685 AND 4738 G. C.

Territory which simply touches at the extreme corners as the apex of a triangle and the corner of a rectangle is not contiguous territory as contemplated in G. C. 4685 and 4738.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1917.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 8, 1917, you request my opinion upon the following state of facts:

> "A triangular tract of land containing 80 acres touches in one point the corner of another square tract of land containing 40 acres. Said tracts of land lie in Londonderry township rural school district, Guernsey county, and touch in one point Oxford township rural school districts. Said tracts of land are owned by one man who is petitioning the county board of education of Guernsey county to transfer said land from Londonderry township rural school district to Oxford township rural school district, under the provisions of section 4692 G. C. (The enclosed diagram gives the situation of the land described above.) Under such conditions could annexation be made by the county board without conflicting with the provisions of section 4685 G. C., which reads:

"'The territory included within the boundaries of a city, village or rural school district shall be contiguous except where an island or islands form an integral part of the district.'

"The answer to this question will depend upon the definition of contiguity as used in sections 4685 and 4738 G. C. May we have your definition of the word contiguous as used in the sections noted above?"

The above inquiry and the diagram which accompanies same show that the only place the land described in said diagram touches is where the apex of the triangle touches the corner of the rectangle and the question then is, are the tracts thus described contiguous?

The whole question resolves itself into a legal definition of the word "contiguous" as applied to territory which is joined for school purposes.

General Code section 4685 provides as follows:

"The territory included within the boundaries of a city, village or rural school district shall be contiguous except where an island or islands form an integral part of the district."

The word "contiguous" is defined in Webster's dictionary as:

"Any actual or close contact."

And is defined in the Century dictionary as:

"Meeting or joining at the surface or border."

Bouvier's Law dictionary defines the same as:

"In close proximity, in actual close contact."

It cannot be said of the territory described in your diagram that it is in actual or close contact or that it joins at the border. The word "contiguous" is considered in the case of Wild v. People ex rel. Stephens, 81 N. E., 707, and in a case in which the facts are very similar to the facts stated in your request. The court uses the following language:

"Neither two tracts which merely corner on each other, nor two tracts with a strip fifty feet wide included merely for the purpose of connecting them, constitute 'contiguous' territory, * * * authorizing the incorporation into a village of contiguous territory."

It is held in Griffin v. Dennison Land Company, 119 N. W. 1041, that the word "contiguous" in the statute defining "tract" as applied to land, when used in the revenue law, as any contiguous quantity of land in the possession of, owned by, or recorded as the property of the same claimant, means land which touches on the sides; and two quarters of the same section, which only touch at the corner, do not constitute for the purposes of taxation one tract or parcel of land.

It would seem from the above that territory, in order to be contiguous, must be territory not only that is near to or in the same neighborhood, but territory which actually touches and joins and is connected as distinguished from territory which is separated by other territory. The intent of the legislature, it seems to me, was not that the territory should be separated in any manner by other territory, but that the districts for school purposes should be just what the language indicates, that is, uniting or joining at the surface or border.

Reasoning, then, from the above, I advise you that territory which simply touches at the extreme corners, as indicated in your diagram, cannot be said to be contiguous territory, as contemplated in General Code section 4685.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF COMMISSIONERS OF DARKE COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"RE:—Bonds of Darke county, Ohio, in the sum of $11,164.00, issued for the purpose of creating a fund for the payment of the compensation, damages, costs and expense of the improvement of the Grubbs-Rex and Love roads, being two bonds of $582.00 each, and twenty bonds of $500.00 each."

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers of Darke county relative to the above bond issue, also the bond and coupon form submitted to me, and I find the same regular and in conformity with the provisions of the General Code.

I am of the opinion that said bonds drawn in accordance with the form submitted and signed by the proper officers will, upon delivery, constitute valid and binding obligations of Darke county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—DISAPPROVAL THE LEONARD COMPANY—REAL ESTATE, INSURANCE AND SECURITIES BUSINESS CANNOT BE CARRIED ON BY SAME CORPORATION.

A real estate business, an insurance business and a securities business are not so related that they can be carried on by a single corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1917.

HON. W. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 9, 1917, asking opinion, in which you say:

"We are herewith enclosing articles of incorporation of The Leonard Company, with check for fifty dollars; also correspondence and waivers attached to same, and ask that you give us an opinion in regard to the purpose clause and whether the same should be accepted and filed by this office."

The articles of incorporation referred to in your communication disclose a purpose clause therein which reads as follows:

"Said corporation is formed for the purpose of carrying on, doing and conducting a general insurance, bonding, real estate, brokerage and investment business together with the doing of all lawful things in connection therewith including the soliciting and receiving of applications and premiums for all kinds of insurance and bonds and a general agency and brokerage business for itself and for others, in the buying, selling, negotiating, exchanging, dealing and trading in real estate, personal property, stocks, bonds, debentures and securities of all kinds, the negotiating of loans thereon and the managing and improving of property, renting, constructing, erecting, equipping and repairing houses and buildings and making contracts for the same and to promote, finance, develop and otherwise further the lawful enterprises of others, acting as financial agent and generally to promote the aforesaid in all lawful ways and the doing of all things necessary and/or incident thereto."

Applicable to the consideration of the question made by your communication sections 8623 and 8625, General Code, provide as follows:

"Sec. 8623. Except for carrying on professional business, a corporation may be formed for any purpose for which natural persons lawfully may associate themselves.

"Sec. 8625. Any number of persons, not less than five, a majority of whom are citizens of this state, desiring to become incorporated, shall subscribe and acknowledge articles of incorporation, which must contain:

"* * * * * * *

"3. The purpose for which it is formed.

"* * * * * * *"

The supreme court in the case of State ex rel v. Taylor, 55 O. S., 61, 67, construing the above statutory provisions, held that the use of the word "purpose" therein instead of the word "purposes" implied a limitation, and that except where specially authorized by statute a corporation can be organized for one main purpose only.

A diligent perusal of the purpose clause in the articles of incorporation tendered to you fails to disclose any one main purpose to which all the other purposes therein stated relate themselves as incidental powers. On the contrary, consideration of this purpose clause discloses at least three main business purposes, to one or other of which all the other purposes therein mentioned are related as incidents, to wit, an insurance business, a securities business and a real estate business.

Accompanying your communication and the proposed articles of incorporation I find a letter addressed to you by the attorney for the proposed corporation, which letter is in part as follows:

"As I stated to you in my former letter, we have one charter for The Leonard Agency Company which authorizes it to do a general insurance, bonding and real estate business, and we also have a charter for The Leonard Investment Company which is authorized to sell stocks, bonds and insurance of all kinds. Both companies are run from the same office with practically the same overhead expenses and by reason of there being so many reports to the county, state and federal governments, it has become somewhat confusing and annoying, and we have concluded that it was desirable to run the two companies under one charter and dissolve the other two companies. In view of the objects contained in the separate charters as we now have them, I could not quite understand why the articles which I sent a week ago should be refused unless it perhaps was because of the crude manner in which they were drawn."

I can well appreciate the advantages of having the lines of business now conducted by The Leonard Agency Company and The Leonard Investment Company, respectively, united and conducted by one corporation, but in this connection it must be observed that whatever lines of business now conducted by one of these existing corporations above named which are in legal contemplation distinct from those conducted by the other corporation will not essentially be any the less separate and distinct by having all of the business of the two existing corporations united under one charter.

With respect to the question here presented it will be noted that by the provisions of section 8648, General Code, a corporation formed to buy or sell real estate shall expire by limitation in twenty-five years from the date on which its articles of incorporation were issued by the secretary of state. The provisions of this section in themselves import a distinction between real estate business and other business purposes which, under appropriate corporate charter, may be carried on without reference to the twenty-five-year limitation.

The foregoing considerations compel the conclusion that you should not file the articles of incorporation submitted to you, for the reason, as above indicated, that the purpose clause thereof discloses a number of main business purposes which cannot legally be embodied in nor conducted under one corporate charter.

I am returning to you herewith the articles of incorporation, together with check for fifty dollars and correspondence submitted with your communication of February 9th.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

POLICE PENSION FUND—WHEN COUNCIL HAS ABOLISHED SAME—NO PERSONS DRAWING PENSIONS AND NO ONE ENTITLED TO DRAW FROM SAID FUND—SURPLUS SHOULD BE TRANSFERRED TO CREDIT OF SINKING FUND OF MUNICIPALITY.

When the council of a municipality has decided that it is no longer necessary to maintain a police relief or pension fund and has abolished the positions of trustees of the police relief fund, and said fund was created by special tax levies under section 4621 G. C., and there are no persons drawing pensions out of the police relief fund or entitled to draw same, any balance or surplus remaining in the treasury to the credit of said police relief fund should be transferred by the council to the credit of the sinking fund of said municipality, as provided in section 5654 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 8th you submitted for my opinion the following request:

> "The council of the city of Bellaire, Ohio, three-fourths of all the members elected thereto concurring, on December 12, 1916, passed ordinance No. 991, providing as follows:
> "'Section 1. That by reason of the provisions of the workmen's compensation act, of the state of Ohio, this council deems that it is no longer necessary to maintain the police relief fund for the city of Bellaire, and the same together with the trustees of the police relief fund are hereby abolished from and after January 1, 1917.'
> "In view of the provisions of said ordinance, we respectfully ask:
> "In case the balance of money at present to the credit of the police relief fund, amounting to $1,500.00, consists of tax levies made under section 4621 G. C., what disposition shall be made of such balance? Is it subject to transfer ordinance of council? Does it go to the general fund, to the sinking fund trustees, or where?"

The following sections of the General Code with reference to the police relief fund are pertinent to your question:

> "Sec. 4616. In any municipal corporation, having a police department supported in whole or in part at public expense, the council by ordinance may declare the necessity for the establishment and maintenance of a police relief fund. Thereupon a board of trustees, who shall be known as 'trustees of the police relief fund' shall be created, which in cities shall consist of the director of public safety, and in villages of the marshal, and five other persons, members of such department. But upon petition of a majority of the members of the police department, such director or marshal may designate a less number than five to be elected trustees.
> "Sec. 4619. The members so elected shall serve for one year, or until their successors are elected, and the election for such successors shall be held each year upon the second Monday of the same month in which the first election is held. In case of vacancy by death, resignation, or otherwise, among the members so elected, the remaining members shall choose a successor until the next election. Such board of trustees shall administer and distribute the police relief fund.

"Sec. 4621. In each municipality availing itself of these provisions, to maintain the police relief fund, the council thereof each year, in the manner provided by law for other municipal levies, and in addition to all other levies authorized by law, may levy a tax of not to exceed three-tenths of a mill on each dollar upon all the real and personal property as listed for taxation in the municipality. In the matter of such levy, the board of trustees of the police relief fund shall be subject to the provisions of law controlling the heads of departments in such municipality, and shall discharge all the duties required of such heads of departments.

"Sec. 4626. The treasurer of the municipality shall be the custodian of the police relief fund, and shall pay it out upon the proper order of the trustees thereof. The treasurer shall execute a bond in such sum and form as is satisfactory to the trustees, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties with respect to the fund.

"Sec. 4631. The trustees of the police relief fund shall make a report to the council of the municipality of the condition of the fund on the first day of January of each year."

Section 4616, supra, provides for the establishment of the police relief fund as a separate fund and for the official agency to have charge of the same. The term of office, the filling of vacancies and the general duties of the trustees in charge of same are set forth in section 4619. Section 4621 authorizes the levying of a special tax to provide moneys for the maintenance of a police relief fund. The treasurer of the municipality is made the custodian of the fund and authorized to pay same out upon the proper order of said trustees under the provisions of section 4626. The duty is placed on such trustees by section 4631 to make an annual report to council of the condition of said fund.

It is apparent from the provisions of the above sections that the trustees of the police relief fund or pension fund are charged with the performance of public duties, and are in effect agents of the municipality in supervising and distributing said fund.

The trustees of the police relief fund came into existence through the passage of an ordinance by the council of the municipality creating said positions, and their official powers and duties would cease upon the repeal of said ordinance. As to this, the law is clear as is apparent from the following syllabus in State ex rel. v. Jennings et al., 57 O. S. 415:

> "An office created by an ordinance is abolished by the repeal of the ordinance and the incumbent thereby ceases to be an officer."

The decision in this case is merely an illustration of the general principle that the power to enact an ordinance includes also the power to repeal it.

Where the council of a municipality has authority to create an office or a position by ordinance the right to repeal said ordinance and thereby abolish the office and position is unquestioned, unless some express duty of creating and maintaining same is placed on council by the legislature or its power in that respect is specifically limited. An examination of the General Code does not reveal any such limitation or duty in the particular case.

The question then presents itself as to whether or not any vested rights have been acquired in the pension fund. In order that this matter may be determined, it is necessary first to have in mind the general principles of law applicable to pensions. They are well stated as follows:

"Pension is not a vested right. A pension is a matter of bounty which may be given or withheld at the pleasure of the sovereign power, and is not a matter of contract or vested right."

Eddy v. Morgan, 216 Ill., 437, 75 N. E. 174.

"That a law providing pensions for officers and their dependents may be repealed or altered any time before the happening of the contingency upon which the right to the pension rests is not and cannot be denied."

Cohorn v. Henderson (Cal.) 124 Pac. 1037.

It may be well at this time to state, since the facts are not given in your request, that the conclusion reached later in this opinion is based upon the assumption that there were not any persons drawing pensions out of the police relief fund, or entitled to draw same, at the time the repealing ordinance went into effect, and hence I have not considered the matter of any vested right in a particular pension fund after the contingency, upon the happening of which said pension is based, has occurred.

As has been stated heretofore, the trustees of the police relief fund were vested with public powers and charged with public duties. The fund they were authorized to administer was created by the levy and collection of a special tax and was placed in the custody of the treasurer of the municipality, subject to distribution upon the proper order of the trustees thereof. Hence, when their official existence was at an end through the repeal of the ordinance by which their offices were created, and the purpose for which the special tax was levied ceased to exist for the reason that other means had been provided for taking care of such contingencies, any balance or surplus of the proceeds derived from such special tax should be transferred by the council to the credit of the sinking fund of said city as provided in section 5654, General Code, as amended 103 O. L. 521, which reads as follows:

"Sec. 5654. The proceeds of a special tax, loan or bond issue shall not be used for any other purpose than that for which the same was levied, issued or made, except as herein provided. When there is in the treasury of any city, village, county, township or school district a surplus of the proceeds of a special tax or of the proceeds of a loan or bond issue which cannot be used, or which is not needed for the purpose for which the tax was levied, or the loan made, or the bonds issued, all of such surplus shall be transferred immediately by the officer, board or council having charge of such surplus, to the sinking fund of such city, village, county, township or school district, and thereafter shall be subject to the uses of such sinking fund."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BONDS—SALE UNDER SECTION 6929 G. C. SHOULD BE ADVERTISED IN ACCORDANCE WITH SAID SECTION—SECTION 2294 G. C. DOES NOT APPLY.

Bonds issued under section 6929 General Code should be advertised for sale in accordance with the provisions of said section. The provisions of section 2294 General Code do not apply to such bonds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Department of Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your favor of February 13, 1917, asking opinion, in which you say:

"In view of the laws relative to the publication of bond sales as contained in section 2294 G. C., passed May 27, 1915, approved June 3, 1915, and filed in the office of the seretary of state on June 4, 1915, together with the provisions of section 6929 G. C. passed May 17, 1915, approved June 2, 1915.

"QUESTION:

"Which section should govern the procedure in publication of advertisement of bond sale by the county commissioners under authority of section 6929 G. C.?"

Sections 2294 and 6929 General Code, referred to in your communication, read as follows:

"All bonds issued by boards of county commissioners, boards of education, township trustees, or commissioners of free turnpikes, shall be sold to the highest bidder after being advertised once a week for three consecutive weeks and on the same day of the week, in a newspaper having general circulation in the county where the bonds are issued, and, if the amount of bonds to be sold exceeds twenty thousand dollars, like publications shall be made in an additional newspaper having general circulation in the state. The advertisement shall state the total amount and denomination of bonds to be sold, how long they are to run, the rate of interest to be paid thereon, whether annually or semi-annually, the law or section of law authorizing the issue, the day, hour and place in the county where they are to be sold.

"Sec. 6929. The county commissioners in anticipation of the collection of such taxes and assessments may, whenever in their judgment it is deemed necessary, sell the bonds of said county in the aggregate amount necessary to pay the estimated cost and expenses of such improvement. Such bonds shall state for what purpose they are issued and shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually and in such amounts and to mature at such times as the commissioners shall determine, subject to the provision however that said bonds shall mature in not more than ten years prior to the issuance of such bonds, the county commissioners shall provide for levying and collecting annually a tax upon all the taxable property of the county to provide a sum sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity. The sale of such bonds shall be advertised once not later than two weeks prior to the date fixed for such sale in a newspaper published and of general circulation within such county, if there be any such paper published in said county, but if there be no such paper published in said county then in a newspaper having general circulation in said county. Such bonds shall be sold to the highest responsible bidder for not less than par and accrued interest. The county commissioners may reject any or all bids. The proceeds of such bonds shall be used exclusively for the payment of the costs and expenses of the improvement for which they are issued."

It is plain from a reading of these sections that the respetive provisions are in conflict with respect to the time and manner in which bonds therein referred to are to be advertised for sale, and if there were likewise a conflict in the operation of these respective provisions a question of some perplexity would be presented as to which of these sections is the later, and, therefore, effective statute. I do not find it necessary to determine this particular question, although as both of these statutes went into effect as laws ninety days from and after the time they were respectively filed in the office of the secretary of state, the case of Ohio v. Lathrop, 93 O. S. 79, seems to me authority for the conclusion that section 6929 General Code is the later statute. However this may be, it will be noted that section 2294 General Code is a statute of general import providing in general terms as to the manner in which all bonds issued by the board of county commissioners and the other authorities therein mentioned shall be advertised for sale. Section 6929 General Code on the contrary, as enacted, is a part of chapter 6 of the Cass road law, which chapter covers the matter of road construction and improvement by the county commissioners, and section 6929 General Code makes provision for the issue by county commissioners of bonds in anticipation of taxes and assessments to cover the cost of the road improvements constructed by the county commissioners under this chapter; while the provisions of said section with reference to the time and manner in which said bonds are to be advertised for sale have reference only to the particular bonds provided for in said section:

It is an accepted rule of statutory construction that:

"If there are two acts, or two provisions of the same act, of which one is special and particular, and clearly includes the matter in controversy, whilst the other is general and would, if standing alone, include it also, and if reading the general provisions side by side with the particular one the inclusion of that matter in the former would produce a conflict between it and the special provision, it must be taken that the latter was designed as an exception to the general provision."

(Endlich on the Interpretation of Statutes, section 216, cited in Doll v. Barr, 58 O. S. 113, 120.)

"It is a settled rule of construction, that special statutory provisions for particular cases operate as exceptions to the general provision which might otherwise include the particular cases, and such cases are governed by special provisions."

(Gas Company v. Tiffin, 59 O. S. 420, 441.)

Otherwise stated, the rule of statutory construction under consideration is that where the general provisions of a statute conflict with more specific provisions of another, or are incompatible with its provisions, the latter is to be read as an exception to the former.

Cincinnati v. Holmes, 56 O. S. 104, 114;
State ex rel. v. McGregor, 44 O. S. 628, 631;
State ex rel. v. Perrysburg, 14 O. S. 472;
State v. Newton, 26 O. S. 206;
Commissioners v. Board of Public Works, 39 O. S. 632.

The application of the rules of statutory construction before noted clearly compels the conclusion that bonds issued by county commissioners under section 6929, General Code, are to be advertised for sale for the time and in the manner therein provided, and that the provisions of section 2294 General Code have no application to such bonds.

My conclusion in this matter accords with that of my predecessor, Mr. Turner, on the same question expressed by him in opinion 1575, addressed to your department on May 15, 1916.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS—BY MUNICIPALITY—JURY FEES PAID AS IN CIVIL ACTIONS—NOT TAXED AS COSTS IN CASE—BY PRIVATE CORPORATION TAXED AS COSTS IN CASE.

In an appropriation case by a municipal corporation the fees of the jury are to be paid as in civil actions and not taxed in the costs of the case, as is done in such appropriations by private corporations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 7, 1917.

HON. O. E. LYTLE, Probate Judge, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 3, 1917, you addressed the following inquiry to this office:

> "What is your construction of the statute as to jury fees in appropriation cases by municipalities?
> "In the case of Detroit Southern Railroad v. Commissioners of Lawrence, et al. (71 O. S. 454), the opinion of the court would be construed that jury fees are paid differently in such cases than they are in appropriation by private corporations. Should jury fees be taxed as part of the costs or paid out of the county fund at the time of the trial?"

The proceeding by a municipal corporation to appropriate property is entirely different from that by a private corporation. The former is under part 1, title 12, division 3, chapter 1, of the General Code, while the latter is under chapter 5, title 3, part 3.

In case of a private corporation it is what is known as a special proceeding. In the case of a municipal corporation it proceeds under the law governing municipal corporations, and section 3681 G. C. provides as to the beginning of the proceeding:

"* * * the solicitor shall make application to the court of common pleas, or to a judge in vacation, to the probate court, or to the insolvency court, in the county in which the land sought to be taken is located * * *."

Section 3683 G. C. provides that:

"* * * the jury shall be drawn and the trial proceed as in other civil actions."

So that you have here two entirely separate and distinct provisions, one by civil action, the other in a special proceeding.

Section 3693 G. C. provides:

"The costs of the inquiry and assessment shall be paid by the corporation, and all other costs taxed as the court directs. * * *"

So that you have here an ordinary civil action with a provision for payment of costs, in which case, of course, it does not include jury fees. Such fees are paid out of the county fund under the provisions of section 3008 G. C.

This then explains the discussion in the opinion of Spear J. in the case cited from 71 O. S., which discussion is on pages 458 and 459, referring to the difference between municipal and private corporations.

In a case of condemnation by a municipal corporation the jury is the same as the ordinary jury in a civil action and paid in the same way.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF NORTON TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 8, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"RE:—Bonds of Norton township rural school district, Summit county, Ohio, in the sum of $20,000.00, issued for the purpose of purchasing a site and erecting an elementary school building thereon, being twenty bonds in the sum of one thousand dollars each."

I have examined the transcript of proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Norton township rural school district in connection with the above bond issue, also the bond and coupon form attached thereto, and I find the same regular and in conformity with the provisions of the General Code.

I am of the opinion that the bonds drawn in accordance with the form submitted and executed by the proper officers will, upon delivery, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

The bond and coupon form have been returned directly to the president of the said board of education.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COMMITTEE—CREATED BY JOINT RESOLUTION—TO REPORT TO GOVERNOR AFTER ADJOURNMENT SINE DIE—NOT A LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE—GENERAL ASSEMBLY MAY NOT AUTHORIZE PAYMENT OF EXPENSES OF SUCH COMMITTEE BY JOINT RESOLUTION FROM APPROPRIATION FOR EXPENSES OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEES.

The general assembly may not by joint resolution authorize the payment of the expenses of a body, which is not a legislative committee, from the appropriation for the expenses of legislative committees.

A committee created under authority of a joint resolution to revise and codify a part of the laws of the state and to report to the governor, after the adjournment sine die, with authority to do work and incur expenses after such adjournment, is not a legislative committee.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 8, 1917.

HON. JOHN H. CHESTER, Member House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 5, 1917, in which you ask me to examine house joint resolution No. 5, as amended by the senate and at present pending in the house, on the question of concurrence in said amendments; and to advise you (1) as to whether or not it would be lawful to pay the expenses of the committee provided for by the joint resolution from the fund for the expense of legislative committees; and (2) as to whether or not the auditor of state might lawfully withhold his warrant therefor.

The joint resolution provides for the appointment of a committee to revise, consolidate and recommend changes in the ditch laws of the state. After stating the need of such revision and codification, the measure, which, as stated, is styled a "joint resolution" recites: "Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio." This form of words is not appropriate to a joint resolution, and if it stood alone great doubt would exist in my mind whether or not, though styled a joint resolution, this measure would not have to stand or fall as a bill, and if it should not be passed by both houses in the manner required by the constitution for the passage of bills, and receive the approval of the governor, or be presented to him for that purpose, it would not be effectual for any purpose; however, not only the title of the measure, but the introductions of the subsequent paragraphs or clauses thereof show it to be intended as a joint resolution and that the enacting language, above quoted, was an inadvertence. Therefore, I shall consider the measure as a joint resolution only.

The resolution goes on to authorize the governor to appoint a committee to consist of members of the house and senate, to be selected by him, whose duty it shall be to revise and consolidate the laws mentioned in the title, to complete their work not later than September 1, 1917, to serve without compensation and to file their report with the governor not later than January, 1918, the report to be transmitted by the governor to the next session of the general assembly, with such recommendations as he may desire to make. The resolution provides that a thousand copies of the report shall be printed by the supervisor of public printing and shall be transferred to the general assembly with the original report; that the committee may employ stenographers, clerks, expert advice and assistance; and that the necessary expense of its members, together with the compensation of employes or expert assistants, and the incidental expenses incurred by the committee, shall be paid upon detailed statements of such expense, duly certified by such committee by warrant of the auditor of state, as other such expenses are paid, from the fund for the expense of legislative committees.

As above pointed out, this joint resolution is not a law. It cannot, therefore, have such force and effect as to control the action of the executive branch of the government. While the general assembly, by joint resolution, may take any action that it is competent for the general assembly to take, in so far as it represents the state, without the concurrence of executive officers, it cannot affect the duties of the latter save by passing a law. This distinction creates a difference between the effect of this measure and that of the somewhat similar language respecting the payment of expenses from the fund for the expense of legislative committees, which is found, for example, in the appropriation bills which have, for the past several years, provided that the expenses of the "auditing committee" and "controlling boards" shall be paid from this source. All such provisions are laws and are binding upon the auditor of state, as such. Moreover, of their own force and effect they qualify and define the meaning of the appropriation to which they refer.

On the other hand, it is perfectly competent for the general assembly, by a resolution, to control the expenditure of one of its own appropriations for the expense of legislative committees, within the natural purview of such appropriation, as fixed by law. That is to say, the general assembly may create a special investigating committee, or a special committee, to frame legislation such as the one contemplated by the joint resolution, authorize it to employ assistants, and direct that its expenses be paid out of the appropriation for the expenses of such committees; but in order to be subject to the influence of this principle, the committee, the expenses of which are so authorized to be paid, must be a legislative committee.

In short, the General Assembly, by law, may direct that expenses not naturally within the purview of expenses of a legislative committee, be paid from an appropriation for the latter purpose, though such appropriation would otherwise not naturally apply to such expenses; but when the general assembly acts by joint resolution, it cannot thereby enlarge the natural scope of an appropriation for the expenses of legislative committees.

This brings us to the consideration of whether or not the codifying committee, provided for by the joint resolution, is a legislative committee. I think a negative answer must be given to this question for two reasons:

The governor is directed to appoint the committee. While its appointment is provided for by the resolution of the assembly, it is not made in the way in which the appointments of legislative committees ordinarily are made. It is true that the purpose for which the committee is to be appointed is essentially legislative, and for that reason, perhaps, little weight is to be given to the point just mentioned. In the second place, however, it is apparent that this committee will not, in any sense, be a committee of the present general assembly for the reason that it will, in all likelihood, and in point of fact, to a certainty, discharge its functions after the adjournment of the present general assembly sine die. While I cannot now, as a matter of law, advise that the general assembly will adjourn sine die before the first day of September, 1917, yet I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that such adjournment is almost morally certain.

In the case of State ex rel. v. Gayman, 11 C. C. (n. s.) 257, it was held that a legislative committee, as such, has no authority or legal existence after the adjournment of the general assembly sine die. The effect of this decision, which was affirmed without report by the supreme court, was not altered, in my opinion, by the amendment in 1912 of article 11, section 8, of the Constitution. This section, as amended, so enlarges the powers of each house of the general assembly as to authorize such house "to obtain, through committees, or otherwise, information affecting legislative action under consideration or in contemplation * * *." It was adopted to overthrow the restrictive rule as to the separate power of the respective houses, laid down in State ex rel. v. Gulbert, 75 O. S. 1, but it does not in any way affect the rule of the Gayman case.

It follows that inasmuch as the joint resolution clearly contemplates the doing of work by this committee, after the adjournment of the general assembly sine die, it must be held either that the committee contemplated by the legislature is not a "legislative committee" or, if it is to be regarded as a legislative committee, the object contemplated by the joint resolution cannot be achieved because beyond the power of the general assembly.

For the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that it will not be lawful to pay the expenses of the proposed committee from the fund for the expenses of the legislative committees and that the auditor of state might lawfully withhold his warrant therefor. It would be otherwise if the measure were a bill instead of a joint resolution; for in that event, as above pointed out, the authorization of the payment of expenses from this fund would rest upon the same foundation as the payment of expenses of the controlling board and special auditing committees from the same source, which is at least sanctioned by long usage.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROBATION OFFICER—CHIEF AND FIRST ASSISTANT—ARE ASSISTANTS OF JUVENILE COURT—MAY BE APPOINTED AS SUCH, AS IN UNCLASSIFIED SERVICE.

Whether the chief probation officer and first assistant probation officer of juvenile courts are in the classified or unclassified service of the state, is a question of mixed law and fact to be submitted, in the first instance, to the civil service commission.

Such officers are assistants of such courts and may be appointed as such, under favor of subsection 8 of the civil service law, as in the unclassified service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 8, 1917.

HON. BEN. A. BICKLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Hamilton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 15, 1917, you addressed the following inquiry to this office:

> "I am writing you at the request of the probate judge who took office on February 9, 1917, and who desires that I submit the following questions for your consideration and opinion:
> "The probate judge has been selected to act as judge of the juvenile court; the former judge of this court on August 13, 1914, named a chief probation officer, and thereafter named a chief assistant probation officer. The incoming judge desires to discharge said probation officer and the chief assistant probation officer and name other officials for said positions.
> "He desires to know if he has such right under section 1662 of the General Code or whether said officials come under the civil service, as provided in section 496-8 of the General Code.
> "Your early consideration of this case will be appreciated by the party who has requested this opinion."

There is no section 496-8 of the General Code. Your inquiry must intend to refer to section 486-8, either subsection 8 or 9.

Subsection 8 and 9 provide as follows:

> "Section 486-8.
> "8. Three secretaries, assistants or clerks, and one personal stenographer for each of the elective state officers; and two secretaries, assistant or clerks and one personal stenographer for other elective officers and each of the principal appointive executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such secretary, assistant or clerk and stenographer.
> "9. The deputies of elective or principal executive officers authorized by law to act for and in the place of their principals and holding a fiduciary relation to such principals."

A probation officer would not come under the description of the latter of these two provisions, as he, or she, is not a deputy and holds no fiduciary relation. It cannot be said as a matter of law that their merit or fitness cannot be determined by an examination, and, therefore, these officers would generally come under the provisions of the civil service law. This, however, does not hold if they be selected under said subsection 8, which provides some of the exceptions to the classified service.

It is admitted under said section that county officers are such "other elective officers," as may select two secretaries, assistants or clerks and one personal stenographer. In this statement the state civil service commission coincides.

A probation officer is not a secretary or a clerk, or a stenographer, but such officer is provided for in section 1662 G. C., the pertinent part of which is as follows:

> "The judge * * * may appoint one or more discreet persons * * to serve as probation officers, during the pleasure of the judge. One of such officers shall be known as chief probation officer and there may be first, second and third assistants. * * The judge may appoint other probation officers, with or without compensation. * * *"

The duties of the probation officer are provided in section 1663 G. C. as follows:

> "When a complaint is made or filed against a minor, the probation officer shall inquire into and make examination and investigation into the facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged delinquency, neglect or dependency, the parentage and surroundings of such minor, his exact age, habits, school record, and every fact that will tend to throw light upon his life and character. He shall be present in court to represent the interests of the child when the case is heard, furnish to the judge such information and assistance as he may require, and take charge of any child before and after the trial as the judge may direct. * * *"

This designation of duties seems clearly to constitute the officer performing them an assistant of the court. True, he is not called such, the word "assistant" being used only with reference to the subofficers who are designated as assistants to the probation officer himself. However, the things that the probation officer is authorized and required to do are so directly in line with that which is within the jurisdiction and power and duty of the court, that such officer is, in the general and ordinary acceptation of the word, an assistant of the court, as he performs such duties as inquiring into and making examination and investigation of facts, etc., furnishing the judge information and assistance, taking charge of the child as the judge may direct, etc.

You, are, therefore, advised that the probation officer and his first assistant, who undoubtedly takes the place of the probation officer himself in his absence, and performs the same or similar duties, may be selected by the court as assistants, as authorized by said subsection 8, whom he may select or appoint without taking their names from the eligible list furnished by the civil service commission.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION—MAY REDISTRICT DURING YEAR TO TAKE EFFECT THE FIRST OF THE FOLLOWING SEPTEMBER—DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT HAS NO VESTED RIGHT IN CONTRACT FOR MORE THAN ONE YEAR—DOES NOT HOLD OVER WHEN DISTRICT IS DIVIDED.

The county board of education has the authority to divide the county school district into supervision districts during any year, the same to take effect on the first day of the following September, and the district superintendent has no such vested right in a contract for more than one year which will prevent such redistricting or which will compel a continuation of such contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 9, 1917.

HON. CHARLES H. JONES, Prosecuting Attorney, Jackson, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication you ask my opinion upon the following facts:

> "Has a county board of education the power, legally, after dividing a county school district into three supervision districts, and district superintendents have been duly elected therefor, to redistrict the county school district into a less number of supervision districts, to take effect before the expiration of the term for which said district superintendents were elected?
> "If the county board has such power, what will be the status of the district superintendents upon such redistricting?"

The section of the General Code which provides for the county school district being divided into supervision districts is section 4738 and was amended in 106 O. L. 396 as follows:

> "The county board of education shall divide the county school district, any year, to take effect the first day of the following September, into supervision districts, each to contain one or more village or rural school districts. The territory of such supervision districts shall be contiguous and compact. In the formation of the supervision districts consideration shall be given to the number of teachers employed, the amount of consolidation and centralization, the condition of the roads and general topography. The territory in the different districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable and the number of teachers employed in any one supervision district shall not be less than thirty. The county board of education shall, upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county, redistrict the county into supervision districts. The county board of education may at their discretion require the county superintendent to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers of the village or rural schools of the county. This shall supersede the necessity of the district supervision of these schools."

The language of the above section, especially that part which reads "the county board of education shall divide" and that part which provides that the "number of teachers employed in any supervision district shall not be less than thirty," I am convinced is mandatory. If, at the time of the enactment of said section, there was any county school district that was not divided into supervision districts, the county board of education was compelled to divide the same as provided by said section, as amended, and if the county school district had theretofore been divided into supervision districts, but under the section as originally enacted, which provided that the number of teachers employed in any one district should be not less than twenty, then I am convinced, under the amendment aforesaid, that it is the duty of the county board to divide the same into supervision districts having not less than thirty teachers in each district and it is also provided that the redistricting shall take effect on the first day of September following the designation of such supervision districts. The redistricting may be performed by the county board of education any year and upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county the county board of education must redistrict the county into supervision districts; but I am convinced that the supervision districts formed by the county board of education, upon its own motion or upon the application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural boards of the county, would become effective from and after the first day of the following September.

Answering your first question, then, I am of the opinion that the county board of education has the power to divide the county school district into supervision districts after it has once been divided and under the conditions above mentioned it is their duty to do so.

Coming now to your second question as to what will be the status of the district superintendent upon such redistricting, General Code section 4739 provides that each supervision district shall be under the direction of a district superintendent, but it should be noticed here that under the provisions of section 4738 G. C. the county superintendent may be compelled by the county board of education to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers and this shall supercede the necessity of district supervision of those schools. That is to say, if territory was so located that proper supervision districts could not be formed or if, after dividing the county into districts which in the judgment of the county board of education are proper districts, there was still some territory which was left not connected with any supervision district, it is within the power of the county board to direct the county superintendent to so supervise such territory, but where supervision districts have been formed, each district, as above mentioned, shall be supervised by a district superintendent. The term of the district superintendent, under the provisions of section 4741 G. C., shall be not longer than one year at the time such district superintendent is first elected. If, however, such district superintendent be re-elected in the same district, he may be so re-elected for a term not to exceed three years and under the provision of section 4743 G. C. the compensation of the district superintendent shall be fixed at the same time that the appointment is made. So that the term of the district superintendent being for at least one year, and the time designated for the division of the county school district into supervision districts being fixed at a particular time in the year, it is fair to presume, I think, that the legislature intended such districts and such supervision to extend over each school year without change, and that being true the contracts with your superintendents who were elected for the first year in any supervision district would not be affected by any change of the district lines during said year. But, suppose the district superintendents had been re-elected in the same supervision district and for a term of more than one year, but not to exceed three years, and suppose the district lines were changed during any one year, to take effect the first of the following September, and during the term not yet completed of a district superintendent, the question then is, how would such redistricting affect the position of the district superintendent?

In the first place, the redistricting is in the nature of legislative enactment by the county board of education and the contracts entered into between the supervision district boards of education and the superintendent are contracts of employment which gives the district superintendents a vested right in the contract, which right cannot be impaired by legislation unless the principle set forth herein after applies, but before I go into that matter let me suggest that where, after the passage of legislation which would have a tendency to abolish his office, a superintendent of schools accepts another position under the school authorities, which position is created by law, he thereby voluntarily relinquishes his former position and the emoluments thereof and cannot recover for his salary under the original contract, but only under the contract entered into for the new position. That is to say, if a new district were formed and the old superintendent accepts the district superintendency of the new district, he cannot recover his salary under the contract covering the old district but only under the contract covering the new district, and an acceptance under the new relinguishes his rights under the old.

But, suppose now in the redistricting that the number of districts were reduced and some one or more district superintendents were left without employment, just what then would be their rights. This last above condition could only attach in case the district superintendent had been re-elected in the same district and for a term exceeding one year and not more than three. At the time that the district superintendent entered into such contract of more than one and not more than three years, he did so with the knowledge that a board of education, other than the boards of education with which he contracted, might in any year, redistrict the county into supervision districts and thus change supervision district lines. The question is, can such change, when actually made, affect the term for which he was elected by the local boards, or, in other words, can the local boards, by electing district superintendents, defeat that provision of law giving three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural districts of the county the right to apply to have the county redistricted or defeat the right of the county board to redistrict the same in any one year. I think not. I believe the principle laid down by my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, in the Attorney-General's Reports of 1911-1912, page 519, will apply here. In that case a township treasurer, who by law was also made the treasurer of the school funds, was elected for a term certain and qualified as such treasurer. During his term the school board established a depository, as provided by law, and the treasurer insisted that the board was without authority to dispense with the treasurer during his term. It was there held, however, that "when the township treasurer was elected, he was or should have been aware that his duties of treasurer of the school fund were of indefinite duration and that his services could be dispensed with at any time by a majority vote of the board of education upon a depository for the school moneys being provided for," and I believe in this case that when the contracts entered into with the district superintendents were made, said superintendents knew, or should have known, that the district lines of such supervision districts are liable to be changed in any one year, and when such changes occur, if their term was thereby affected, they cannot complain. So that, answering your second question, I advise you that the district superintendents would stand in the new districts as though no contract for more than one year had been entered into.

To recapitulate, then, I am of the opinion that the county board of education has power to divide the county school districts into supervision districts in any year, but the same must take effect on the first day of September in each year and that the district superintendents of such districts have no such vested right in a contract for more than one year that would defeat such redistricting legislation, or, in other words, that they cannot hold over. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—MAY EMPLOY ATTORNEY OTHER THAN PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—ORDER MUST BE ENTERED ON THEIR JOURNAL—OTHERWISE CONTRACT VOID.

An injunction suit was brought by a party assessed upon a ditch improvement, attacking the jurisdiction of township ditch supervisor to clean out a ditch. The prosecuting attorney declined to act for said ditch supervisor. The township trustees authorized him to employ other counsel, but neglected to place this order fixing the compensation upon their record. HELD: That the trustees are not compelled to pay the attorney for his services.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 10, 1917.

HON. GEORGE F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 17, 1917, as follows:

> "I should be pleased to have an opinion upon the following facts as to the right of township trustees to employ counsel for a township officer who has been sued in his official capacity, the prosecuting attorney declining to act.

"An injunction suit is brought by a party assessed upon a ditch improvement attacking the jurisdiction of township ditch supervisor to clean out a ditch. The prosecuting attorney, having only a few weeks to serve, declines to act for said ditch supervisor. The township trustees authorize him to employ other counsel and fix the fees but neglect to place the order on their record. Counsel is employed and wins in three courts. Are the trustees compelled to pay the attorney?

"The only authority I have been able to find is in Opinions of the Attorney-General, Vol. 4, page 216, and Vol. 3, page 814.

"If it is absolutely necessary that the order to employ other counsel and fix the compensation should be placed upon the journal, can the records be amended to speak the truth, if the order was actually made, by placing such order on at this time? Only two of the trustees then serving are now acting."

Section 2917 of the General Code provides:

"He (the prosecuting attorney) shall be the legal adviser for all township officers, and no such officer may employ other counsel or attorney except on the order of the township trustees duly entered upon their journal, in which the compensation to be paid for such legal services shall be fixed. Such compensation shall be paid from the township fund."

It will be noted from the above section that the law does not say "except on the order of the township trustees, which shall be duly entered, etc." If it did it might possibly be claimed that that part of the section relating to the recording of the order was merely directory. The statute, however, says that legal counsel may be employed only on the "order duly entered." The words "duly entered upon the journal" are descriptive of the order, so that the order contemplated by section 2917 G. C. is one "duly entered upon the journal," which is very similar to those provisions of law making it necessary to contract on written orders.

McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, volume 3, section 1181, page 2619, says:

"Where a contract of a municipality is not entered into in the manner and form prescribed by statute or charter, the corporation is often sought to be held liable where the other contracting party has wholly or in part performed his side of the contract and the municipality has accepted the benefits thereof without objection. The grounds for recovery relied on are either ratification, estoppel, or implied contract, and inasmuch as the three are often confused, the law applying where acceptance of benefits is urged as constituting the ratification, creating the estoppel, or authorizing a recovery on an implied contract, is practically the same without regard to whether the court refers to it as one or the other. The question has arisen in many cases, but the great majority of them fall within one of the following classes: (1) Contract not let on competitive bidding or to the lowest bidder as required by statute or charter; (2) contract not made by ordinance or resolution as required by statute or charter; (3) contracts not in writing as required by statute or charter.

"The general rule is that if a contract is within the corporate power of a municipality but the contract is entered into without observing certain mandatory legal requirements specifically regulating the mode in which it is to be exercised, there can be no recovery thereunder. If a statute or charter says that certain contracts must be let to the lowest bidder, or that they must be made by ordinance, or that they must be in writing, or the like, there is a reason therefor based on the idea of protecting the tax payers, and inhabitants, and these provisions are mandatory, and while it is undoubtedly true that mere irregularities in making the contract are not fatal to a recovery, yet if the contract is entered into or executed in a different manner, the mere fact that the municipality has received the benefits of the contract which has been performed by the other party, does not make the municipality liable, either on the theory of ratification, estoppel, or implied contract in order to do justice and pay the reasonable value of the property or services.

"The prevailing rule undoubtedly is that if the powers of a municipality or its agents are subjected by statute or charter 'to restrictions as to the form and method of contracting that are limitations upon the power itself, the corporation cannot be held liable by either an express or an implied contract in defiance of such restrictions.'

"The theory on which these cases are decided is that if any substantial or practical results are to be achieved by the restrictions upon the powers of municipal officers or boards to incur liabilities, as contained in the statutes or charter, no recovery on an implied contract can be allowed, notwithstanding that there is apparent injustice in some cases in adhering strictly to statutes or charter provisions. 'It is better that an individual should occasionally suffer from the mistakes of public officers or agents, than to adopt a rule which, through improper combination or collusion, might be turned to the detriment and injury of the public.' "

Under this section the following is stated in the notes:

"RATIFICATION. Where a contract cannot be made by the council without advertising for bids the council cannot ratify a contract not so made. La France Fire Engine Co. v. Syracuse, 68 N. Y. S. 894, 33 Misc. Rep. 516; Santa Cruz Rock Pavement Co. v. Briderick, 113 Cal. 628, 635; 45 Pac. 863; Smeltzer v. Miller, 125 Cal. 41, 57 Pac. 668.

"IF STATUTE REQUIRES CONTRACT TO BE IN WRITING, but an oral contract is made, and therefore the express contract is invalid, the question arises, if services are rendered or property delivered thereunder, whether the municipality which has received the benefits is liable for the reasonable value thereof. Most of the states hold that there is no liability."

In Basshor v. St. Paul, 26 Minn. 110, the charter provided that purchases of fire department engines and apparatus should be "made upon the written order of the committee on fire department," and it was held that the committee on fire department could make such purchases only upon a written order and that a purchase made otherwise was unauthorized and did not bind the city.

The court said:

"Such purchase is not only simply unauthorized, as made without authority, but it is void because made in direct contravention of the city charter and ordinance, and, therefore, prohibited to be made. The plaintiffs were bound to inquire for the authority of those who assumed to act for the municipal corporation in this instance, and are just as much affected by their want of authority as if it had in fact come to their knowledge."

In Savage v. Springfield, 83 Mo. App. Rept. 323, section 3157 Revised Statute of 1889 provided that:

"No county, city, town, village, school, township, school district or other municipal corporation shall make any contract * * * unless it shall be in writing and dated when made, and shall be subscribed by the parties thereto, or their agents authorized by law and duly appointed and authorized in writing."

The fire committee purchased horses without written agreement and the court said:

"This section (R. S. 3157) deprived the city of power to make a contract with the fire company for the purchase of horses for the city, in any other manner than by a contract in writing, etc. Having no power to contract in this matter otherwise than in writing, it could not create an agent to make a contract otherwise than in writing. To hold otherwise would be to say that a city can make a contract by an agent in a manner it cannot do directly. The agreement made by the fire committee with the fire company to purchase the horses, was void, not being in writing, nor authorized by a writing. Crutchfield v. Warrensburg, 30 Mo. App. 456; Inhabitants of Schell City v. Rumsey Mfg. Co., 39 Mo. App. 264; Woolfolk v. Randolph County, 83 Mo. 501. The contract being void, the city was without power to ratify it."

In the case of Woolfolk v. Randolph, 83 Mo. 501, the plaintiff was appointed by the county court of Randolph county, Mo., by proper order of record of said court, its agent for and on behalf of said county to compromise and settle the bonded indebtedness of Sugar Creek township in Randolph county, Missouri; by the terms of said order, plaintiff was to have and receive a reasonable compensation for his services. At said time Sugar Creek township had outstanding a legal bonded indebtedness to the amount of ninety-five thousand dollars, which, by said order, plaintiff was directed to proceed to compromise and take up for defendants. Plaintiff, in pursuance of said employment by defendant, and by defendant's direction, expended a vast amount of labor and time in getting the compromise bonds lithographed, registered and sold as required by defendant, all of which plaintiff did; and plaintiff alleged that he had expended time, labor and work in such service, of the reasonable value of seven thousand dollars and that the defendant accepted, received and appropriated plaintiff's said labor by order of record and then had refused to compensate him. By section 5360 R. S. it was provided that:

"No county, city, town, village, school township, school district or other municipal corporation, shall be bound or held liable upon any contract, unless the contract, including the consideration, shall be in writing, and dated when made, and subscribed by the parties thereto, or their agents, authorized by law, or duly appointed and authorized in writing."

The court said:

"The manifest purpose of this requirement is that the terms of the contract shall, in no essential particular, be left in doubt, or to be determined at some future time, but shall be fixed when the contract is entered into. This was one of the precautions taken to prevent extravagant demands, and to restrain officials from heedless and ill-considered engagements, * * * but we think this difference we have mentioned shows the wisdom of the statute, requiring the consideration to be first ascertained, agreed upon and expressed in a contract for services of this description."

The court held that the county could not be held liable.

In Peterson v. The Mayor, etc., of New York, 17 N. Y. 449, the court said at page 454:

> "No sort of ratification can make good an act without the scope of the corporate authority. So where the charter or a statute binding upon the corporation, has committed a class of acts to particular officers or agents, other than the general governing body, or where it has prescribed certain formalities as conditions to the performance of any description of corporate business, the proper functionaries must act, and the designated forms must be observed, and generally no act of recognition can supply a defect in these respects."

Similar view of the law has been taken by the supreme court of this state in the case of City of Wellston v. State, 65 O. S. 219, and cases there cited.

That this limitation upon the municipality or its officers to contract applies to contracts for legal services is evident. It is stated in McQuillin, on Municipal Corporations, Vol. 2, section 503:

> "If the law prescribes a particular method by which the employment of the person is to be made, of course such requirement should, in substance, be observed; as where it should be in writing, or, where it is made by a board the board must act as a unit when legally convened, or where the employment is to be approved or confirmed, failure renders the employment void."

And in Vol. 3, section 1173, page 2589:

> "Where the method of contracting is provided for by statute or charter, it must be substantially followed in the employment of legal services."

In view of section 2917 of the General Code, above quoted, and the authorities herein cited, I am of the opinion that the failure of the township trustees to enter the order referred to upon their journal, showing the employment of the attorney and the compensation fixed, is fatal and that said attorney cannot be paid for the services rendered out of the township funds, and that it is without the power of the trustees to now ratify the contract by nunc pro tunc entry or otherwise.

In this opinion I have not discussed sections 5660 and 5661 of the General Code for the reason that you have not stated whether or not the township clerk had filed his certificate under this section with the trustees of the township at the time they attempted to contract with the attorney referred to for his services.

Section 5660 G. C. reads in part:

> "* * * The trustees of a township * * * shall not enter into any contract, agreement, or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, respectively, certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, etc."

Section 5661 G. C. provides:

"All contracts, agreements or obligations, or orders or resolutions entered into or passed contrary to the provisions of the next preceding section, shall be void. * * *"

In Stone Company v. Trustees, 18 Ohio Dec., N. P., 136, it was held that section 5660 is a "general provision relating to townships and applies to trustees of every township in the state;"

and that

"a contract entered into with the trustees of a township, calling for the expenditure of money, is absolutely void if the clerk has not filed a certificate certifying that there are unappropriated funds in the treasury; and it is, therefore, necessary to allege in a petition, in an action on such a contract, that this certificate was made by the clerk before a recovery may be had thereon."

At page 137 the court said:

"It has been held time and again under the municipal provisions of the statute, that contracts entered into in violation of the provisions of that statute, without the certificate having been filed, are void, and the person who performs labor or work or furnishes material under such contracts cannot recover."

Buchanan Bridge Co. v. Campbell, 60 Ohio St. 406;

At page 140, in Stone Company v. Trustees, the court say:

"The question is, when are the township trustees authorized to enter into the contract? Now, if this Rev. Stat. 2834b governs, they are only authorized to enter into a contract upon being advised that that certificate is at least filed with the township trustees; and no person can make a contract with them, * * * except at his peril, without knowing that that certificate is filed. If he is making a contract with the township trustees, he can inquire if the certificate of the clerk is made, and if the fund is at hand, and if it has been filed, he can enter into a contract; and if not, he can say, I have no authority to enter into a contract with you. He can make all those inquiries and ascertain whether the trustees have a right to make a legal, binding contract with him for whatever may be under consideration."

It will be seen from the above authorities that if the certificate under section 5662 is not filed in the case you refer to, this would be additional reason for holding that the contract of employment, entered into with the attorney you refer to by the township trustees, is void.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONSERVANCY ACT—TAKES PRECEDENCE OVER ALL OTHER DRAINAGE LAWS—AUTHORITY OF COUNTY UNDER DITCH LAWS SUBORDINATE TO CONSERVANCY DIRECTORS—COMMISSIONERS HAVE POWER TO CHANGE TERMINUS OF IMPROVEMENT OF LIVING STREAM.

The conservancy act of Ohio takes precedence over all other drainage laws in conservancy districts after their establishment and if any authority be left in county commissioners under the ditch laws of the state, such authority is subordinate to that of the conservancy directors and cannot be exercised without their acquiescence.

The county commissioners have authority under section 6443 to change the terminus of the improvement of a living stream.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 10, 1917.

HON. THOMAS F. HUDSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You make inquiry of this office under date of January 27, 1917, as to whether by the organization of a conservancy district the conservancy authorities acquire exclusive jurisdiction over the territory of the district, and to the exclusion of the county commissioners, in constructing a drainage improvement which they have already located; i. e., where they have made their finding in favor of it. And in the event of a determination of the above question in the negative, whether or not the commissioners have the right to change the terminus of such improvement (being of a living stream) so as to omit that portion thereof which is in the conservancy district. And you further inquire as to the status of the real estate in the conservancy district and the necessary action of the county commissioners in reference to the same, the last question being really involved in the others and capable of being answered in the discussion of them.

Your communication is as follows:

"In 1912, a proceeding was commenced before the board of commissioners of Clark county, Ohio, for widening, deepening, straightening and removing drift, etc., from Mad river between the bridge at Snyderville in Clark county and the Green county line.

"In the same year the commissioners found in favor of the improvement and ordered the county surveyor to make the necessary surveys, which he proceeded to do and was engaged in so doing when the conservancy law of Ohio was enacted, since which time no further work has been done on the improvement.

"The Miami conservancy district has been organized so as to include a portion of Mad river and adjacent lands in Clark county, and about 1 38-100 miles of the route comtemplated in said proceedings before the commissioners of Clark county, and the question arises whether the conservancy authorities thereby acquired exclusive jurisdiction over Mad river and adjacent lands for the purpose of making any and all improvements incident to protection from floods.

"If the answer is in the affirmative, then of course, the commissioners of Clark county would be precluded from proceeding any further in the proposed improvement of that portion of Mad river included in said conservancy district.

"If in the negative, to the extent of holding that in so far as the conservancy authorities had not proceeded to improve all of Mad river in Clark county, the county commissioners might still exercise the authority they had before the enactment of the law over such part of the river as was not thus included.

"Now assuming that the commissioners still have jurisdiction over the remainder of the route, the question arises whether the commissioners now have the right to change the terminus of the proposed improvement, and proceed as to the rest of the original improvement.

"It is conceded under the law that the commissioners have power to change either terminus of a county ditch, but such concession is not made in the case of the improvement of a river, where authority to make such change is denied, in the case of Abel v. Commissioners, 6 N. P. 349; Gease v. Carlisle, 15 O. D. 435. In the case of Skillman v. State, however, 93 O. S. page 210, the supreme court announces an obiter to the contrary.

"A hearing on this matter before the county commissioners scheduled for January 26th, was postponed thirty days pending a decision from your department.

"The further question arises as to the status of the real estate, now in the conservancy district and to be appropriated for use of the reservoirs. Should these property owners be dismissed from the Mad river improvement, or will the conservancy authorities merely take their place and be subject to the assessment, etc?"

You are aware as to your first question that it is new and that there are no precedents upon it and that, therefore, the best you can get from any one outside the courts is the expression of a mere opinion. The same thing is true of your second question for a different reason, which will appear in the discussion of it.

The history of drainage legislation and of drainage itself, up to the enactment of the conservancy law, is that it has always been treated in detail and never comprehensively. That is to say, all such legislation provided for isolated improvements accommodating larger or smaller districts, but never including more than one ultimate watershed system, which was to be drained into a stream, or toward it, into a natural water course, through a single outlet. It was simply a system of emptying out higher lying lands onto or across lower, the effect of which was continually to dump water off such higher lands onto those of the next lower level without making any provision for a sufficient ultimate outlet.

The certain consequence of persistence in this course for two generations culminated in the flood of 1913.

It was this that furnished the occasion for the passage of the conservancy law, which proceeds upon directly the opposite plan to all preceding legislation. Theretofore they had begun at the head and come down stream, in the necessity of the case, the wrong way from the standpoint of general public benefit.

The conservancy act goes to the lowlands and provides essentially the means of preventing this damage, and incidentally fulfills all of the other purposes to such lands that have been supplied heretofore by drainage legislation, which is of moment in the consideration of the present question.

Among the objects for the establishment of conservancy districts are found the following:

"(b) Of regulating stream channels by changing, widening and deepening the same:

"(c) Of reclaiming or of filling wet and overflowed lands;

"(e) Of regulating the flow of streams;

"(f) Of diverting, or in whole or in part eliminating water courses."

It will be seen that these four purposes include all the possible purposes of any previous drainage legislation. Now the main provision of the act as declared in this section is the establishment of conservancy districts. These districts have as exact lines as political divisions, but they exist for this one purpose alone. After providing for the appointment of conservancy directors the act makes it their first duty, after organization, "to prepare * * * a plan for the improvements for which the district was created." This indicates still further that this district is created in pursuance of a definite plan for preventing floods and irrigating lands and doing all the other things enumerated above in it, in accordance with one connected, homogeneous plan including all the lands in the district and all the purposes in the act. (Section 6828-12).

This power is made efficient and far reaching by making the board a corporation and giving it a dominant right of eminent domain superior to the right of eminent domain of public service corporations. (Sec. 17.)

Its power is extended to advanced limits and rendered almost arbitrary and autocratic by other provisions. (Sections 15 and 19.)

Section 15 in stating the general powers of the directors mentions this specific purpose and empowers them:

> "To clean out, straighten, widen, alter, deepen or change the course or terminus of any ditch, drain, sewer, river, water course, pond, lake, creek or natural stream in or out of said district; to fill up any abandoned or altered ditch, drain, sewer, river, water course, pond, lake, creek or natural stream, and to concentrate, divert or divide the flow of water in or out of said district; * * *"

This includes all the purposes mentioned in the section giving to county commissioners such authority, and, read in connection with section 2, gives them the power for the same purpose.

The question then becomes, first, whether this power supersedes the power of the commissioners upon the same subject upon the establishment of the district, and, second, whether, if it does, it does so in a case where the commissioners have made their finding in the nature of a final judgment requiring the construction of the work. The finding of the commissioners in favor of the improvement does have the effect of creating vested rights therein and it will be out of the power of the county commissioners on their own motion to abandon a proceeding after such finding, but they might be compelled by mandamus to proceed and sell out the construction of the work. The conservancy act, however, without expressly taking away the power hitherto existing in the commissioners superimposes another and a dominant power, for by the language of the conservancy act itself as well as by necessary implication from all its terms, the conservancy directors, for the purposes of the act, control all property in the district absolutely in the manner in which it then exists, both as to its tangible condition and constructed improvements, and as to its intangible rights. Therefore, if a man has land in such district to which the right has attached to construct an improvement, he can be in no better situation than the man with an improvement already constructed. Under the provisions of section 15 it would be possible for the directors to destroy this improvement if it had already been made. Even further than that, it would be possible for them to fill up the stream as improved and locate it some place else, so that if it be determined that there are concurrent powers existing in the county commissioners and in the conservancy district, as there are to a certain extent between the county commissioners and the township trustees, yet the relation of the one power to the other is seen to be different. In one case they are on terms of equality, depending upon which is first exercised, and in the other the one power is absolutely dominant and superior over the other, and if it be determined that the commissioners still have a right to make improvements in lands included in the conservancy district, the right would always be of very precarious and doubtful value to those for whose benefit it may be exercised. As previously stated, none but the courts can declare the absolute existence of such right, or the extinguishment of it on the part of the county commissioners. Each authority is entitled to its own opinion as it is absolutely a case of first impression.

As to the second question, whether the commissioners have the power to change the terminus of a proposed improvement of a stream. Although it is not like the other, a case of first impression, it is probably involved in equal doubt. It is held in one of the cases cited in your inquiry that they have not.

Abel v. Commissioners, 6 N. P. 349.

You are mistaken, however, as to there being a statement to the contrary by the supreme court. Skillman v. State, 93 O. S. 210. The court in the latter case, referred only to ditch improvements. However, Abel v. Commissioners is of slight consequence in view of the fact that it was decided previous to an important decision of the supreme court upon the subject of improving streams.

Harbine v. Commissioners, 74 O. S. 318.

Previous to this last decision it was the common practice to consider all drainage improvements by the county commissioners in exactly the same light, making no difference whether the improvement included a stream or whether it was an entirely new channel where theretofore there had been no water course. It is true Judge Summers in the opinion states to the contrary.

Speaking of an earlier period, Judge Summers says (p. 324):

> "Then streams were not converted into ditches and such is not now the practice."

Buck creek flows through Clark and Champaign counties and on it originally was located the water power which built up the city of Springfield. The upper part of Buck creek had been made into what was known as the Buck creek ditch. It is probable there was not a stream in Clark county that in some part of its course had not been, as everybody believed at least, changed into a county ditch. There was no such stream in the county immediately north of Clark county of which the same thing is not true. That is, the county commissioners had improved them; had given them all of the tangible attributes of a ditch; had constructed canals, upon the banks of which if you stood and looked you saw nothing different from any other ditch with water flowing down it, and all county commissioners and all the land owners at all times believed that they had the legal attributes of county ditches. This was especially true of all lawyers having any connection with the proceedings in which they were constructed. For of all the injunction cases to prevent their construction and of all the litigation involved in it, no case is known where previous to the Harbine case the jurisdiction and power of the commissioners in that respect had been questioned. By this it is not meant to criticise the decision of the court in that case. The real question was whether a mill dam could be removed or destroyed by a proceeding to construct a county ditch, which with evident correctness it was decided could not be done. The decision, however, took the form of defining the term "water course" stating that it did not include streams and was synonymous with drain, and in holding that "the county commissioners are without authority to convert a living stream of water into a ditch by proceedings for the location and construction of a ditch." This phase of the decision, though it was unnecessary in the case then before the court, has produced great confusion and been the occasion of much controversy to the extent of unsettling all preconceived ideas as to the law before that time. It could not have been meant literally by the court as that would have amounted to a repeal of the plain and direct language of the statutes. It, therefore, must mean that they cannot construct a county ditch. That is to say, that their power to straighten, widen and deepen streams conferred in G. C. 6443, does not give the improvement, when constructed, the legal status and condition of a county ditch over which the right of eminent domain has been exercised by taking land and by which a continuing jurisdiction is given to the public over the improvements when made, but that when the stream has been improved in accordance with the plain statutory authority, the commissioners and other public authorities are functus officii and that you have then, what you had before, a stream, though in an improved condition.

This interpretation of this decision and this alone is possible, otherwise, as stated above, the statute is repealed or rather abrogated by the decision, for it is not contended that it is unconstitutional. No objection is urged to the statute itself and the whole opinion contains the understanding that the statute is in force and effect. However, that decision and Judge Summers' opinion have been cited by inferior courts as destroying the statute. It was so held by the common pleas court of Union county in a case now pending in the court of appeals on appeal. Broderick, J., in his opinion in a case in which it is sought to improve Little Darby, after finding that the proceedings were all regular and in accordance with the statute, says:

> "And the decision of the supreme court in the Harbine case still holds good, and to improve a living stream under the authority of said section would be to convert it into a county ditch and under the authority of said case the county commissioners have no jurisdiction to so make the improvement. * * * Since the decision in the Harbine case was made the legislature has fully provided for such improvements as this one in what is commonly known as the conservancy law of Ohio, where a full and complete method has been given to provide adequate relief in such cases, and where there are no territorial limits imposed upon the improvement. * * * The general assembly of Ohio has now made ample provision under the conservancy act of Ohio, where this improvement can be properly made, and continued for such distance down Little Darby creek as to provide a good and sufficient outlet. * * *"

It is perfectly evident from what has been stated above that this decision in this respect is wrong, but it illustrates the views and the doubts upon the subject that the courts have discovered and evinced by reason of the Harbine case.

It follows, however, from that decision that there is a sharp line of demarcation between ditch improvements and the improvement of streams; and that that which has application to one by express terms, or in the nature of the case, is not necessarily applicable to the other. One provision, however, that does equally apply to both and without which neither would have any practical effect is where the authority is originally given for both. Sec. 6443 says that it is to be done "in the manner provided in this chapter" then follows one connected plan as to the proceedings which in the nature of the case must be applied to either proceeding as far as it is applicable.

Anel v. Commissioners, as has been stated, was decided when the proceeding was considered as identical. In that case Dow, J. held that the commissioners were without authority to change the terminus of a river improvement because the express authority is only so to change the terminus of a "ditch." That provision, however, was in the law before the commissioners had power to improve streams and when it would apply to ditches alone and the provision for improving streams was afterwards inserted by way of amendment after the provision as to the terminus. It may, therefore, be presumed that the use of the word "ditch" in that instance instead of the more generic term "improvement" is purely accidental as being continued without change and that thereby an express exclusion was not intended of such power over a river improvement, but that the legislature took this view in exact accordance with ordinary common sense. That is, that the provision as to an outlet has no application whatever to the improvement of a stream. There is no such thing as a stream without an outlet. A stream without an outlet becomes a lake. The power to the commissioners to improve a stream before the last codification was to cause the channel of a river, creek or run, or any part thereof, etc., to be improved by straightening, etc. There has no change been made by substituting the word "a" for "any." Evidently no such change was intended in the general codification so that the commissioners are given the most ample authority to improve any part of the stream. If they can improve any part of the stream no reason is apparent why they are confined to the exact portion that the petitioner sees fit to ask for. He would ask for what he wanted. The commissioners would grant that which was best for the public; and if the provision were not connected with the ditch law with its express authority to change the terminus of a ditch, no one would conceive of any limitation upon their power to improve any part of the channel of a stream.

But besides this argument or indeed in further pursuance of it, ditch may very properly be regarded as a generic term, including river improvement along with "ditch" proper wherever necessary to carry out the legislative intent. It must be so in section 6451 where both "ditch" and "improvement" are found within four lines of each other and where no other interpretation is possible than to consider them synonymous as they are used interchangeably. Besides, to refuse to let "improvement" in under the name of "ditch" in this section would be necessarily to defeat the express authority to improve the channel of streams, as it must be done "in the manner provided in this chapter." and this is the only manner provided. You must, therefore, improve the stream in the same manner, so far as the form of the proceeding goes, as you locate and construct a ditch; and in doing this you make ditch include improvement. Q. E. D. Further, there would be no appeal from a finding in favor of an improvement under 6469 unless you give the word this extended meaning.

In the opinion in the Harbine case the statutes governing the subject are collated, not without some omissions, which may be partly supplied by the following references:

68 O. L. 60-67;
80 O. L. 9-10;
80 O. L. 109;
94 O. L. 163;

and possibly some others.

If this view be correct, they could still proceed with that portion of the improvement which is outside the conservancy district. But as above stated one common pleas court has found to the contrary and the matter is not decided in any court of appellate jurisdiction and nothing better than a mere opinion in the nature of the case can be given.

The conclusions above intimated, however, are reinforced by other decisions upon the subject. Judge Summers himself, who rendered the opinion in the Harbine case, in a more recent case passed by the subject in silence. That is what is known as the Bean creek case (Mason v. Commissioners, 80 O. S. 151). In this case the channel of a river was sought to be improved forty miles below its source for a distance of ten miles and the proceeding was a county ditch proceeding and the county commissioners converted it into a county ditch. The question arose on the subject of assessments and in a most interesting and very lengthy opinion in which the subject of the burdens and benefits of ditching is exhaustively and ably considered, Judge Summers never once refers to this defect in the power of the commissioners as held in the Harbine case.

You are, therefore, advised that in my opinion the county commissioners can proceed no further with that part of the improvement located within the conservancy district without the acquiescence of the conservancy directors; that they may proceed with that part of the improvement which lies outside the conservancy district; but subject to the qualification and caution in respect to the value of such opinion as is stated above.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE FAILURE—TERMINATION OF PROSECUTION BY MEANS OTHER THAN PROSECUTION CONSTITUTES SAME—FILING OF AFFIDAVIT INSTITUTES PROSECUTION FOR FELONY—COMMISSIONERS MAY MAKE ALLOWANCE TO OFFICERS IN PLACE OF FEES UNDER SECTION 3019.

The prosecution for felony is instituted as soon as the affidavit charging the crime has been presented to and filed by the magistrate, and if at any time thereafter the prosecution is terminated by any means other than conviction, the state has "failed" within the meaning of section 3019 G. C. and county commissioners may make an allowance to officers in place of fees under such section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 10, 1917.

HON. C. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 11, 1917, as follows:

> "Please refer to section 3019, General Code, which provides in part:
> "'In felonies wherein the state fails, * * the county commissioners, at any regular session, may make an allowance to any such officers in place of fees.'
> "I do not find any authority which settles definitely what is known as a 'state failure.' Suppose a warrant is issued by a magistrate and the constable arrests a man for burglary, for instance. No indictment is found and defendant is discharged. Is this considered a 'state failure,' and can the county commissioners make an allowance in lieu of fees in this case? I would like to have your opinion stating definitely just when the county commissioners may make such an allowance in place of fees. Some have held that there must be an indictment found before anything whatever can be allowed under this section, but I do not find any authority on which to base that position whatever."

Section 3019 G. C. reads:

"In felonies wherein the state fails, and in misdemeanors wherein the defendant proves insolvent, the county commissioners, at any regular session, may make an allowance to any such officers in place of fees, but in any year the aggregate allowances to such officer shall not exceed the fees legally taxed to him in such causes, nor in any year shall the aggregate amount allowed an officer exceed one hundred dollars."

The words "in felonies wherein the state fails," I think, mean when a prosecution for a felony has been begun and the state has either abandoned the same or has been defeated in its contention. In other words, I think the statute refers to all cases wherein the state has started a prosecution for a felony and has not concluded the same successfully. This being so, it is important to ascertain just when a prosecution for felony is commenced.

In Cyc., page 290, it is stated:

"MODES OF INSTITUTING PROSECUTION—a. IN GENERAL. Broadly speaking there are four modes by which an offender may be brought to justice. The accuser may give information to the public prosecuting officer, which will result in an indictment being prepared and sent to the grand jury, or he may file a written complaint on oath before the examining magistrate, obtain a warrant of arrest, followed by a preliminary examination, and the binding over of the accused; or the grand jury may act upon its own knowledge that a crime has been committed, or upon information from others, and make a presentment against the offender; or the prosecuting attorney may file an information. By statute minor offenses may be prosecuted summarily on complaint before a magistrate."

Now it seems clear to me that when an affidavit has been presented to the magistrate charging a person with a felony and the same is filed by the magistrate, the wheels of the prosecution have begun to turn and from that moment on, through all of its various phases, the prosecution of the defendant for felony continues. This was the view taken by the court in State v. Williams, 34 La. Annual, p. 1198, in which it was held:

"As soon as the affidavit or charge against an accused and other proceedings had in the case before the committing magistrate are forwarded to the proper criminal court, prosecution must be construed as having been instituted in the latter court."

In this case the court said:

"Counsel argues that the meaning attached to the word 'prosecution' in the constitution, is indicated by Art. 5, which provides that 'prosecutions shall be by indictment or information,' etc., and hence he concludes that before indictment or information, there can be no prosecution instituted for the purpose of being apportioned.'

"We think that this is too narrow a definition of the word 'prosecution,' which is defined to be 'the means adopted to bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due course of law.' Bouvier, p. 396.

"Under our system of criminal law, a prosecution has several phases or steps of proceeding; the first being usually an affidavit or charge; next a warrant of arrest, and so on through the hands of the committing magistrate, whose committal transfers the prosecution to the proper criminal court, where it undergoes the other phases of presentment, arraignment, trial and conviction or acquittal.

"If the proceedings had before the committing magistrate are not a 'prosecution' in the legal sense, where would be the authority for detaining the accused in legal custody, or what would be the legal value of the bond furnished by the accused for his appearance before the criminal court? It is elementary, in our jurisprudence, that such proceedings are the basis and primary inception of the prosecution, and that the order of the committing magistrate, accepting the bond of the accused, is a judicial act which is the basis of the judgment of the criminal court in case of a forfeiture of the bond."

Taking this view of the law, I am of the opinion that prosecution for felony has been instituted as soon as the affidavit charging the crime has been presented to and filed by the magistrate, and if any time thereafter the prosecution is terminated by any means other than conviction, the state has "failed" within the meaning of section 3019 G. C. and county commissioners may make an allowance to officers in place of fees under such section.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TREASURER—NO PROVISION OF LAW FOR SELECTION OF SCHOOL TREASURER—WHEN DEPOSITORY PROVIDED, CLERK OF BOARD OF EDUCATION BECOMES ACTING TREASURER—LANGUAGE OF SECTION 4782 G. C. DIRECTORY.

When a depository has been provided for the school moneys, the clerk of said board becomes acting treasurer, and while the language of section 4782 G. C. is directory, yet there is no provision of law for the selection of a school treasurer by a board of education.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 12, 1917.

HON. A. V. BAUMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Fremont, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 7, 1917, you request my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"When a depository has been provided for the school moneys, is it mandatory that the board of education dispense with the school treasurer?

"On the one hand it is contended that the word 'shall' must be construed as 'must.' It is claimed on the other hand that the legislature in enacting this section had no such intent, because of the clause 'By resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members.' It is claimed that had the legislature intended to make such action mandatory, it would not have included this clause and that there is no way to compel a majority of the members or any particular member of the board of education to vote for or against any proposition.

"It is further contended that the clause 'in such case' therein contained, tends to show that the legislature did not intend to make this action mandatory."

The section of the General Code pertinent to the above inquiry is section 4782, and reads as follows:

"When a depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members, shall dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys belonging to such school district. In such case the clerk of the board of education of a district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties and be subject to all the obligations required by law of the treasurer of such school district."

It would seem, from the bare reading of the sections above quoted that it was the clear intention of the legislature to give such effect to the amended section as would make it mandatory, but if that was its intention there was unfortunately used by it such language which cannot be construed as having that effect. A statute is only mandatory when its terms may be enforced by mandamus and it is perfectly clear that mandamus will not lie to enforce that provision of the above quoted section, viz., "by resolution adopted by a majority of its members," for which members would a court of equity order to act. The acts of the individual members cannot be controlled, but only the act of the board where the act to be performed is one for the board and not the individuals thereof. A board may act when a quorum only is present, but the above act, under the language quoted, can only be performed by a majority of the members of the board.

My predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in Opinion No. 656, Attorney-General's Reports for the year 1915, page 1355, uses the following language:

"It occurs to me that a statute like 4782 may logically have any one of four different effects, viz.:

"(1) It may be self-executing.

"(2) It may be mandatory.

"(3) It may be directory.

"(4) It may be permissive.

"Section 4782 was once permissive and has been amended as to make it clear that it is no longer so. * * * I think that it cannot be regarded as mandatory. Its effect, therefore, is either self-executing or directory. * * *; for if the statute is self-executing, then there must be a time certain at which, under given circumstances, it will go into execution. If the statute is to be regarded as self-executing, then the statute will go into execution, in a given case 'when a depository has been provided for the school moneys of the district.' But if this be true, then the provision of the statute to the effect 'that the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members, shall dispense with the treasurer,' etc., is of no effect whatever. It cannot be deemed the intention of the legislature to strike this language out of the statute, because the only amendment which the legislature made was inserted in this very phrase. It is manifest, therefore, that the legislature intended that the board of education should act, and did not intend the treasurer should be dispensed with and the clerk should commence to perform the services formerly devolving upon the treasurer, when and as soon as a depository has been provided. In other words, the statute is not self-executing, but must be carried into execution by the board of education, acting by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members.

"These considerations all tend to dictate the choice of that interpretation of section 4782 which regards it as directory. It is true that section 4782 does not fall within any of the well recognized classes of directory provisions. In this case, however, the conclusion that the statute is directory is enforced by the necessary consequences of attempting to hold it mandatory or self-executing. It being the intention of the legislature that the thing contemplated by section 4782 shall be done, but the legislature not having made it possible to compel that thing to be done, it necessarily follows that it could only be regarded as directory; and while it is the duty of the board of education, when it provides for a depository for the moneys of the district, to dispense with the office of treasurer, such duty is one that can be enforced by political action only and not by the courts."

I cannot see, however, how the language referred to in section 4782 is controlling at this time. Section 4782, as above noted, was enated February 6, 1914, and the day previous, that is, February 5, 1914, setion 4747 was amended to read as follows:

"The board of education of each city, village and rural school district shall organize on the first Monday in January after the election of members of such board. One member of a board shall be elected president, one as vice-president and a person who may or may not be a member of the board shall be elected clerk. The president and vice-president shall serve for a term of one year and the clerk for a term not to exceed two years * * *."

No provision is made for the election of a treasurer and section 4763, which provided that in each city, village and township school district the treasurer of the city, village and township funds should be the treasurer of the school funds, had been amended in 104 O. L., 159, to read as follows:

"In each city school district, the treasurer of the city funds shall be the treasurer of the school funds. In all village and rural school districts which do not provide legal depositories as provided in sections 7604 to 7608, inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such district."

So that we then have the scheme provided that where a depository is established, the clerk of the school district shall act as the treasurer of the school funds and where the depository is not established, the county treasurer shall act as treasurer of the school funds and no provision of law exists for the election or selection of a school treasurer. I can see how, prior to the organization of the board in January of 1916 there might have been such treasurer holding over, but following that date there was no such treasurer holding over, a new one having been elected in 1915 or a new term of an old one beginning in 1916, and no provision of law for such new treasurer or for such treasurer during a new term to have possession of the school property, and he would, therefore be, in the language of Judge Force, in Knorr v. Board of Education, 8 O. Dec. Rep. 672, "holding the school funds unlawfully," which property, under the provisions of section 4773, he is bound to deliver to his successor in office; that is, either the clerk, who is the acting treasurer, or the county treasurer, acting as such.

I reason, then, from the above, that (1) the language of said setion 4782 is directory only, and (2) there is no occasion for the board to pass any such resolution, because under the law there is no treasurer who can lawfully have possession of the school funds outside of the clerk of the school board or the county treasurer, acting as such school treasurer.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR FUND—CAN ONLY BE USED FOR UP-KEEP AND REPAIR OF INTER-COUNTY AND MAIN MARKET ROADS—NOT FOR RECONSTRUCTION OF SAME—FUND DERIVED FROM REGISTRATION OF AUTOMOBILES.

The funds derived from the registration of automobiles creating what is known as the "maintenance and repair" fund can be used only for the up-keep of the intercounty and main market roads of the state and not for the reconstruction and rebuilding of the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 12, 1917.

HON. JAMES P. WOOD, JR., Prosecuting Attorney, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 21, 1917, and also the communication of the county commissioners of Athens county to you as prosecuting attorney. In these communications you ask my opinion in reference to certain matters which are set out therein. Your communication reads as follows:

> "I shall be glad if you will furnish me an opinion as to whether our county commissioners may use brick in the repair of the Athens-Hockingport road, I. C. H. No. 156, said road to be paid for in part out of the maintenance and repair fund of the state.
> "An adverse opinion on this same subjet was rendered by the attorney-general of Ohio which appears in 'Opinions of the Attorney-General,' volume 1, page 990, 1915.
> "I enclose copy of communication addressed to me by the county commissioners together with my opinion as to this question."

The letter addressed to you by the county commissioners is as follows:

> "We have arranged with the state highway department to repair a portion of the Athens-Hockingport road, I. C. H. No. 156, a portion of the money with which this expense is to be met to come from the maintenance and repair fund of the state. The part that is to be repaired is an old macadam road, and under the existing ruling of the attorney-general, the same kind of material must be used as was used in construction of same.

"We do not think macadam is the proper kind of material for this road as it is a through road between Athens and Parkersburg, and macadam would not stand the traffic. After the road is completed, the state highway department is to maintain it, so we think it would be better for all concerned if a more substantial material were used. We think the best interests of both the county and state would be subserved by the use of brick, as the cost of future maintenance to the state would in this case be but a small fraction of what it would be in case limestone were used; and the cost of the present repairs will be only slightly more."

In the first place I know that you are familiar with the opinion of my predecessor in office in reference to this same matter, which opinion is found in volume 1, page 990, of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915. I might say that I have studied the reasoning of said opinion very carefully and will not in this opinion refer to the arguments therein used, but desire to make a few observations of my own in reference to the matter about which you inquire. I desire to say also that I have noted carefully the opinion given by you to the county commissioners and have given the arguments therein used the full weight to which they are entitled.

Before answering your question I desire further to say that I feel that you and your county commissioners are altogether right in deciding that the road suggested ought to be built of brick rather than of macadam, and that the object you are seeking to accomplish is altogether a worthy one.

Now in addition to the observations made by my predecesor in office, I desire to add a few of my own.

First, let us note the exact provisions of our statutes in reference to the question as to how the different funds credited to the highways of our state are to be used. Section 1221 G. C. provides as follows:

"The state highway improvement fund produced by the levy hereinafter provided for, shall be applied to the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the intercounty and main market road systems as follows, etc."

Section 6309 of the General Code provides as follows:

"The revenues derived by registration fees * * * shall be used for the repair, maintenance, protection, policing and patrolling of the public roads and highways of this state, under the direction, supervision and control of the state highway department."

Now let us remember in the further discussion of this question that it is the aim of your county commissioners to provide for the improvement of said highway by using the funds accumulated from the automobile license fees, viz., the maintenance and repair fund.

Further, I note that in your brief to the county commissioners you are willing to admit that there is no word found in section 6309 which could apply to your situation in Athens county other than the word "repair" so that in the further discussion of this matter I shall pay attention to no other term excepting this one term "repair." It will be noted that the word "repair" is used in section 1221 of the General Code as well as in section 6309. In section 1221 the group of terms used is as follows: "construction, improvement, maintenance and repair." In section 6309 G. C. the group used is as follows: "repair, maintenance, protection, policing and patrolling." Now, just as you can judge much of the worth of a man by the company which he keeps, so you can judge much of the meaning of a word by the company in which it is found. To my mind the word "repair" in section 1221 has a different and broader meaning than the word "repair" in section 6309. This, for the reason that all the terms used in section 1221 are much broader and fuller in meaning than the terms used in section 6309, having to do with the general subject of road building, and if we use the terms in the ascending series as to meaning we would use them in the following order: repairing, maintaining, improving and constructing, the word repairing being the weakest term in the large plan of road building. But the words in section 6309 have merely to do with the general subject of road upkeeping, and if we use the terms in the ascending series as to meaning we should use them in the following order: policing, patrolling, protection, maintenance and repair, the word "repair" being the strongest term in the general term of road upkeeping. But we must always keep in mind that the word "repair" in section 1221 has to do with the general subject of road building, while the word "repair" as used in section 6309 has to do with the general subject of road upkeeping. With this distinction in mind I feel that the word "repair" as used in section 1221 is much broader and fuller than the word "repair" used in section 6309, and I am of the opinion that your discussion of the meaning of the word "repair" is exactly correct if it were used in connection with the provisions of section 1221, but that it is giving the word too broad a meaning when used in connection with the provisions of section 6309 G. C.

I am driven the more firmly to this conclusion from the following considerations: We all know that the use of the automobile has been a powerful impetus towards a demand for better roads for the state of Ohio. It has been considered that automobile owners are the special beneficiaries of good roads; also that the traffic upon the roads by automobiles is very destructive of roads, especially certain kinds of roads; and therefore that the owners of automobiles ought to bear a special tax in the matter of providing good roads. But our state courts have very much curtailed this right to levy a special tax upon automobile owners, which tax has been levied frequently by our legislature in the past. The court has held this special tax can be assessed against automobile owners only upon the theory that it is a special privilege tax. That is, the state is permitted to levy a special tax upon automobile owners because of the fact that they have certain privileges and work certain hardships which cannot be imputed to owners of other vehicles. For example, for the reason that automobiles are very destructive to the public highways of the state and are also very dangerous to traffic in general upon said highways. Hence, on the theory that, owing to the speed at which automobiles travel, they are very dangerous to traffic in general and very destructive to roads, the legislature has seen fit to levy a special privilege tax, but at the same time made provision that the funds derived from the tax should be used "to police, patrol, protect, maintain and repair" the highways. That is, the funds derived from the license fees must be used as far as possible to remedy the very evils incident to automobile traffic, viz., the evils of "danger to traffic" and "destruction to highways." Not to be used to build roads, but to keep up the roads already built and to protect the traffic on the same. This is in harmony with the plain construction of the terms used in the two sections of statutes above referred to, in harmony with the spirit of the holding of our state courts and in harmony with the evident intention of the legislature. Hence, I am of the opinion that the funds derived from the automobile license fees cannot be used for the purposes set out in your communication. And if you desire to reconstruct said road by the use of brick it will be necessary for you to use the distributive share of funds coming to your county from the intercounty highway fund of the state.

I affirm the opinion of my predecessor rendered to Hon. Clinton Cowen on June 10, 1915, to which opinion you refer in your communication.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LICENSE—CITY OF CLEVELAND DOES NOT HAVE TO TAKE OUT SAME FOR SELLING BY-PRODUCTS OF CITY REDUCTION PLANT.

The board of agriculture cannot compel the city of Cleveland to take out a license and pay the fee therefor, for selling the by-products of the city reduction plant for fertilizing purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 12, 1917.

The Board of Agriculture, Bureau of Inspection, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter under date of February 5, 1917, in which you state:

> "The city of Cleveland maintains a municipal reduction plant. City garbage, after being cooked under live steam to remove the grease, is placed upon the market as garbage tankage and sold for fertilizing purposes. This plant shipped goods to greenhouses at Toledo, but has never taken license, and objects to doing so, believing the law exempts municipal reduction plants.
> "Our contention is that the city of Cleveland can sell garbage tankage to fertilizing companies who afterwards mix it in with their materials for sale as a fertilizer without paying the license fee, as this amount would practically be covered by the goods later placed upon the market, but when sold to firms which otherwise buy of a company having license, we feel that the city of Cleveland should also pay the $30.00.
> "A letter before us from the superintendent of the municipal reduction plant states that the question of liability was taken up last December with the attorney-general's department. Will you kindly advise if any ruling has been rendered and whether or not this department is justified in requiring the city of Cleveland to take out license when selling fertilizers? Enclosed please find copy of the law."

Section 1154 G. C., as amended 106 O. L. 143, provides:

> "Before selling or offering for sale within this state a commercial fertilizer, a person, firm or corporation shall pay each year a license fee to the board of agriculture for the sale of each brand thereof thirty dollars. Upon application and payment of such fee, the board shall issue a license for the current year. All licenses shall expire on the 31st day of December of each year. The payment of such license fee by a person, firm or corporation shall exempt an agent thereof from the requirements of this section."

Section 1163 G. C., as amended in 106 O. L. 143, provides:

"Whoever sells, offers for sale, or keeps for the purpose of selling within this state, a commercial fertilizer without complying with the provisions of this chapter relating to commercial fertilizers, or permits an analysis to be attached to any package thereof, stating that it contains a larger percentage of any constituent thereof than it does in fact contain, except as provided in section 1153 of the General Code, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than two hundred dollars for a first offense, and for a subsequent offense not less than two hundred dollars, nor more than five hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months or both. The possession of commercial fertilizers, except by a person who has the same for his private use, without complying with the provisions of this chapter relating to commercial fertilizers, in any building room, railroad car, store, storeroom, warehouse or other place within this state shall be prima facie evidence of keeping of the same for the purpose of selling. In all prosecutions under this act, a justice of the peace, police judge or mayor, shall have final jurisdiction as in cases of violation of laws relating to the adulteration of food and drink and dairy products. The board of agriculture shall rest its prosecution under this act on samples drawn, as provided in section 1156 of the General Code."

These two sections cover the matter of your inquiry, and the other sections pertaining to the manufacture, sale and analysis of fertilizers are found in section 1150 G. C. and the following sections.

Your question practically resolves itself into whether or not the city of Cleveland, making sales in the open market of its by-products from the municipal reduction plant and selling for fertilizing purposes to firms which otherwise buy of a company having a license, would be compelled to pay the license fee provided in section 1154 G. C.

I have been unable to find any adjudication on this question, in the examination I have been able to make, but it is my opinion, upon well settled principles of law, that the city would not be liable for the license fee. The board of agriculture is a state agency, acting for and in the name of the state, within the powers conferred upon it by the legislature. The political subdivision of the city of Cleveland is likewise a state agency, and while, as appears from State ex rel. v. Gilbert, 56 O. S. 575, the functions of the state and likewise its various political subdivisions, are governmental only with such proprietary rights as may become incident to the exercise of the primary functions, it is clear to my mind that if the state or any of its agencies were to be included under section 1154 G. C. and the other sections, express mention thereof would have been made. The state or any of its agencies are not bound by a statute unless named therein.

Endlich on Interpretation of Statutes, Sec. 161.

It is a well established rule that in general the acts of the legislature are meant to regulate and direct the acts and rights of citizens, and in most cases the reasoning applicable to them applies with different and frequently contrary force to the government itself.

Looking at the provisions of the fertilizer license sections with a view to discovering the mischief to be avoided and the remedy to be provided, it is apparent that the legislature only intended the sections to apply to such manufacturers and dealers who were primarily in the business sought to be regulated.

At least no legislative intent can be gleaned from a reading of the statutes that would include either the state or any of its political subdivisions.

The penal section provides a fine or imprisonment for

> "Whoever sells, offers for sale, or keeps for the purpose of selling within this state, a commercial fertilizer without complying with the provisions of this chapter relating to commercial fertilizers, etc."

All of this fertilizer act was for the purpose of preventing fraud and deceit and protecting the public therefrom. It was aimed to punish those persons who might by misrepresentation and in a fraudulent manner deceive the citizens of the state. It certainly would be a violent inference if the state thought that either itself or its agencies would have to be regulated against such fraudulent practices as called these fertilizer acts into being.

From all the foregoing, it is my opinion that your department is without authority to compel the city of Cleveland to pay the thirty dollar license fee for the sale of fertilizer under the circumstances mentioned in your request.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SHERIFF—SERVING SEPARATE AND DISTINCT WRITS ON DEFENDANT MAY CHARGE MILEAGE ON EACH.

When separate and distinct writs are served on the defendant in the same proceeding and at the same time, the sheriff may legally tax mileage on each of said writs.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of February 2, 1917, as follows:

> "Kindly let us have your written opinion upon the following proposition at your earliest convenience:
> "In an injunction proceeding wherein three separate and district writs are served on the defendant in the same case and at the same time, may the sheriff legally tax mileage on each of said writs?'"

Section 2845 of the General Code reads:

> "* * * in addition for the fee for service and return the sheriff shall be authorized to charge on each summons, writ, order or notice, except as otherwise specifically provided by law, a fee of eight cents per mile going and returning, provided that where more than one person is named in such writ, mileage shall be charged for the shortest distance necessary to be traveled; * * *"

On February 2, 1905, former Attorney-General Ellis rendered an opinion as follows:

"Your communication dated February 30, 1905, in which you request a construction of section 1230b R. S., relative to the right of the sheriff of Champaign county to charge mileage on each of two writs served on William Wooley in the Ohio state reformatory at Mansfield, when both writs were served at the same time, is received. In reply I beg leave to say that while the supreme court has held in the case of Richardson v. The State, 66 O. S., p. 111, that the 'mileage' allowed a public officer is intended to compensate him for the expense of his travel on official business and that where mileage is provided the officer is not entitled to any other compensation for personal expenses, yet there has been no decision of the court touching the question you submit. Section 1230b contains this provision:

" 'For the service of every writ or summons and return thereof * * * when only one defendant is named therein twenty-five cents; * * * and mileage as in other cases.'

"If mileage is claimed by the officer on both these writs it must be based upon this language contained in this provision, viz.: 'every writ or summons.' While it is true the officer makes but one trip for the service of both writs, yet if mileage is to be allowed on only one writ, we are met with the pertinent query upon which writ is it to be allowed?

"Take for instance where two subpoenas are issued in a criminal case and served upon the same person and at the same time, one on behalf of the state, and the other on behalf of the defendant. If mileage is to be allowed only for the one trip actually taken by the officer, upon which subpoena shall the mileage be allowed? Manifestly, under the language of the statute just quoted the claim for mileage attaches to the one as strongly as the other and were it sought to compensate for only the miles actually traveled, it could only be accomplished by reducing the mileage to one-half upon each subpoena. This, I think, the law would not permit. I am, therefore, of the opinion that the only construction to be placed upon the language of section 1230b, as above quoted, is to allow the statutory mileage upon both writs."

On October 8, 1913, former Attorney-General Hogan rendered an opinion to your bureau, expressly affirming the above opinion and holding that:

"Where an officer serves more than one writ in either civil or criminal cases on the same trip, he is entitled to receive mileage for the actual number of miles traveled and is to receive this mileage on each writ served."

In view of the above I am of the opinion that the sheriff may legally tax mileage on each of the writs served on the defendant in the injunction proceeding referred to.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BONUSES AND PENALTIES—IN CONTRACT FOR IMPROVEMENT AND REPAIR OF ROADS—CONDITIONED ON WHETHER OR NOT CONTRACT IS COMPLETED WITHIN TIME SPECIFIED THEREIN—CONTRARY TO LAW AND AGAINST PUBLIC POLICY.

1. To place a clause in a contract for the construction, improvement and repair of roads providing for giving bonuses to the contractor or imposing penalties upon him, depending upon the question as to whether he completes the work set out in the contract in a shorter or longer time than that provided for in the same, is contrary to law and against a sound public policy.

2. The legality or illegality of contracts, containing provisions that a certain sum per day for the time the work extends over the time provided in the contract shall be considered as stipulated damages but not as a penalty, is not passed upon.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1917.

HON. T. R. ROBINSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Mansfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 13, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to a certain communication which you received from your county highway superintendent, E. A. Merkel. Your communication reads as follows:

> "I enclose you a letter from our county surveyor, asking you to please give us an opinion relative to same.
> "Mr. Merkel and myself have both examined former opinions of the attorney-general, but cannot find where this question has ever been asked."

And the communication received by you from your county highway superintendent reads as follows:

> "Relative to a conversation that I had with you some time ago concerning a section that I wish to insert in my contract for road improvement for this year, I am submitting to you this section in about the form that I wish to insert the same in the contract. If you are unable to give me an opinion on this matter as to the legality of the question, I wish you would submit this to the attorney-general as soon as convenient, that I may complete my specifications for the year's work, and if possible, use this section.
> "In addition to the use and operation of this section in connection with my contract, I also wish to be informed as to how the bonus should be paid and as to the legality of assessing this bonus upon the assessed property, also the townships. Or should this be paid by the county commissioners as their share of the improvement as a public benefit by inducing the full completion of the job before the date fixed?
> "An early reply to these questions will be very much appreciated and I believe if it can be legally operated, will be a big advantage to the public in hastening the improvements. The section as I have contemplated its use reads as follows:
> "'BONUS AND PENALTY.
> "'It is hereby agreed by the party of the first part and the party of the second part, that in case this contract is not fully completed on or before the time fixed in the contract and bond for the completion of this contract, that a penalty of $50.00 per day shall be deducted from the total contract price. And it is further agreed that in case the contract is fully completed any time before the time fixed in the contract and bond for the completion of the contract, that a bonus of $50.00 per day shall be paid to the contractor by the county for the full time the contract is complete before the agreed time.'

"The question of the increased amount of the contract caused by the possibility of the bonus and how this should be taken care of, appears to be the most important, so that in submitting this question, do not overlook this matter."

The question submitted to you by the county highway superintendent is as to whether it would be lawful to include in contracts for the construction, improvement and repair of highways a clause in which it is agreed that a bonus of $50.00 per day shall be given to the contractor for the time he may be able to reduce the time fixed in the contract for the completion of the same, and to provide a penalty of $50.00 per day, to go to the county, for each day that the completion of the contract extends beyond the time set out in the contract for the completion of the work.

Let me say in the first place that the object which your county highway superintendent has in mind is a worthy one and that is to have this clause put in the contract with a view to spurring the contractor on to a speedy completion of the work provided for in the contract, but it is my opinion that such a clause ought not to be placed in said contracts for the following reasons:

1. The statutes nowhere make provision for such a clause in these contracts.
2. The general tenor and spirit of the statutes seem to be against the idea of such a clause being placed in these contracts.
3. The placing of such a clause in these contracts would be against sound public policy.

The first proposition above stated needs no argument as it is quite clear that the statutes make no provision for such a clause.

As to the second proposition, I desire to call your attention to the provisions of several sections of the General Code. Section 6911 of the General Code provides that the first step to be taken after the county commissioners decide to proceed with the matter of constructing, improving or repairing a road is to order the making of surveys, plats, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications.

Section 6912 G. C. provides that the surveyor shall transmit his estimate of the cost and expense, together with a copy of his surveys, plats, profiles, estimates and specifications, which are to be filed with the county commissioners. Notice is then given that these different items are so filed. Based upon these different items, the estimate as well as the other items, objections may be raised to the matter of the improvement.

Section 6917 G. C. provides that when the county commissioners adopt a final resolution to proceed with the improvement, they adopt the plans, profiles, specifications and estimates therefor, either as reported by the county surveyor or as modified by the county commissioners. After this the further proceedings leading up to the construction, improvement or repair of roads are based upon the estimates of the county surveyor or as they are modified by the county commissioners. The estimate as to the cost and expense must be used by the surveyor in making assessments against the benefited property owners as provided in setion 6919 and 6922 of the General Code. If bonds are issued in anticipation of tax levies, as provided in section 6929, the amount of bonds sold is based upon the estimated cost and expense.

Section 6946 of the General Code provides that:

> "No contract for any improvement shall be awarded at a greater sum than the estimated cost thereof. The bids received shall be opened at the time stated in the notice. If no bids are made within the estimate, the county commissioners may amend the estimate, and again proceed to advertise at the original estimate, for bids, but the county commissioners shall have the right to reject all bids."

From all of the above it is readily seen that the estimated cost and expense of the improvement is a very vital factor in the progress of the matters leading up to the contract for the improvement as well as the contract itself. Now the question arises, how could the county highway superintendent make an estimate of the cost and expense of the improvement that would be in any way reliable and certain, if such a bonus as suggested in your communication is to be given? In making the estimate of the cost and expense of the improvement he could not take into consideration at all the matter of the bonus to be given to the contractor in case the work were completed before the time specified in the contract. This would be a mere matter of conjecture and yet this bonus would be a part of the total cost of said improvement and ought to be included in the various steps taken as enumerated above.

Furthermore, let us consider the question of the penalty very briefly. Section 6947 of the General Code provides that the contractor shall, before entering into a contract, give a bond in a sum equal to the contract price. The conditions of said bond are fully set out in said section and said conditions are for the faithful performance of the work in accordance with the plans and specifications; that the bond shall indemnify the county against the damages that may be suffered by failure to perform such contract according to the provisions thereof and in accordance with the specifications for such improvement, and the bond shall also be conditioned for the payment of all material and labor furnished for or used in the construction of the road. But there is no condition that the bond shall be liable for any such a matter as a penalty imposed upon the contractor. It must be remembered that all the penalties imposed upon the contractor would ultimately rest upon the bond in case the contractor should default in the completion of the road according to the contract, because he would receive just so much less from the county commissioners and the bond would be liable for just so much more.

Hence, in view of all the above, I am of the opinion that the statutes do not contemplate such a clause as you suggest in these contracts, neither would they permit of the same.

Now coming to the third proposition above laid down, viz., that such a clause in the contract would be contrary to sound public policy. Such a clause would make every contract a sort of gambling proposition with all the best cards in the hands of the road contractor. It would be to his advantage to have the longest time limit possible placed in the contract for the completion of the work set out therein. While, on the other hand, it would be to the advantage of the county commissioners to have the shortest time limit possible placed in the contract for the completion of the work. In entering into every contract there would be a sort of contest between the county commissioners and the contractor as to the time limit placed in the contract within which the work should be completed. Who would be most apt to win out in such a game? Usually the contractor, because he is more familiar with all the elements that enter into the performance of the work set out in the contract than are the county commissioners

Furthermore, the amount of the bonus and the penalty provided for in the contract would be a matter of great uncertainty and variation. If such a clause were permitted to be placed in the contract, one set of county commissioners might fix the bonus and the penalty at one hundred dollars; another set at fifty dollars, and another at twenty-five dollars. Some might refuse even to place any amount within the contract as a bonus and penalty.

Hence, it is my opinion, based upon all the above, that such a provision as you suggest cannot legally be placed in a contract for the construction, improvement or repair of roads. Neither would it be conducive to a sound public policy.

In rendering an opinion upon the statement of facts set out by you, I am not unmindful of the fact that certain counties in the state, how many I do not know, include in their contracts a provision similar to the following:

> "The parties hereto, in recognition of the fact that substantial damages will accrue to the said parties of the first part and to the public in the event that the said work is not completed within the time specified, and that the exact amount of such damages is not capable of ascertainment otherwise, it is not stipulated and agreed by and between the parties hereto that the sum of ---------- dollars ($----------) per day for each and every day that may elapse between the time specified for the completion of said work and the final completion thereof, shall be stipulated damages suffered and incurred by the party of the first part by reason of the failure of the said contractors to complete the said work within the time specified and that the said contractors shall pay to said commissioners as said stipulated damages, and not as penalty, ---------- dollars, ($----------) for every day of time that may elapse between the time specified and the final completion of the said contract. Such stipulated damages may be retained by the commissioners from any moneys due the contractor on this contract after the final completion thereof."

It will be noted that in this provision it is especially specified that the amount agreed upon as liquidated damages shall not be considered as a penalty assessed against the contractor, but merely stipulated damages. I am not in this opinion passing upon the legality of such a provision, but merely upon the statement of facts as presented to me by you for consideration.

Very truly yours
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

EXPENSES—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AND ENGINEERS ARE ENTITLED TO SAME, ONLY WHEN JOINT COUNTY DITCH PROCEEDINGS ARE UNDER SECTIONS 6563-1 TO 6563-48 G. C., INCLUSIVE.

The provisions of section 6563-44 G. C. are expressly limited in effect to proceedings under sections 6563-1 to 6565-48 G. C., both inclusive, and do not apply to the entire chapter on joint county ditches, beginning with section 6536 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1917.

HON. CHESTER PENDLETON, Prosecuting Attorney, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 19, 1917, you addressed the following inquiry to this office:

> "The county commissioners of Hancock county have requested me to secure an opinion from you as to whether they are entitled to receive their actual expenses while engaged in joint county work. Also whether the payment of their actual expenses under 6563-44 G. C. is limited to operation under 6563-1 G. C. et seq. or whether it applies to the whole chapter on joint county ditches."

Under date of March 9, 1917, at the request of this department you submitted the following supplemental explanation of the original question:

> "In submitting this question I intended it to apply only to joint county ditch work. Section 6563-44 G. C. provides for the payment to the commissioners of their actual expenses. Is this section limited in its effect to proceedings under 6563-1 G. C. et seq., that is, to joint county ditch work initiated under a petition filed by fifty or more interested persons, or does said section 6563-44 apply to the entire chapter on joint county ditches, beginning with section 6536 G. C.?"

> "Said surveyors named in section 8 shall meet with the joint board of county commissioners whenever required by said board and said surveyors and auditors shall be paid their necessary expenses while employed under this act and shall be allowed the same fees as are allowed in ditch work generally and said commissioners shall receive the sum of three dollars a day and their actual expenses while employed under this bill."

Under date of March 11, 1916, my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, rendered an opinion to Hon. D. F. Mills, prosecuting attorney, Sidney, Ohio, found in the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1916, Vol. 1, page 450, in which he discussed and passed on the question which you submit for my opinion. The following from said opinion is in point:

> "An examination of the statutes governing the activities or proceedings of county commissioners, in respect to joint county ditches, in force and operation at the time of the enactment of said house bill No. 489, being sections 6536 to 6563 G. C., inclusive, fails to disclose any provision for the payment of the expenses of county commissioners, incurred in the discharge of their duties in relation to joint county ditches under said section, nor is there found any provision for payment of the expenses of commissioners in joint county ditch matters in the amendment of a number of said last mentioned sections of the General Code, enacted in 103 O. L. 836.

"It will be readily observed that the provision for the payment of the expenses of county commissioners, found in section 6563-44 G. C. quoted by you, is expressly limited by its terms to 'actual expenses while employed under this bill.' The application of this provision is specifically limited by its terms to the expenses of commissioners employed under the act of the legislature in which said section of the General Code was originally enacted. The language of this provision is too plain to require interpretation and cannot be given such construction as to render it applicable to cases clearly not within its terms. It may be difficult to assign a satisfactory reason for a provision for the payment of expenses of public officials in a given case and a failure to make such provision in another similar case. It is, however, a sufficient reason for such distinction, in the present instance, that the legislature has seen fit to make provision for the payment of expenses in the one case and omitted to do so in the other.

"It is a principle well established that public officials are entitled to receive only such compensation, fees and salaries as are authorized by law. Since, then, the legislature has chosen to make specific provision for the payment of expenses of county commissioners when employed under the provisions of sections 6563-1 to 6563-48, inclusive, of the General Code, but has not chosen to make provision for the payment of expenses when engaged in similar service under other statutory provisions, it follows from the familiar principle just referred to that in the latter case there is no authority for the payment of the expenses of county commissioners.

"I am therefore of opinion, in answer to your inquiry, that the expenses of county commissioners in proceedings under the provisions of section 6536, 6537, 6540 and 6556, as amended, 103 O. L. 836, or section 6559 G. C., are not authorized by law to be paid."

I concur in the reasoning given in said opinion and in the conclusion reached, and am of the opinion, in answer to your inquiry, that the provisions of section 6563-44 G. C. are expressly limited in effect to proceedings under sections 6563-1 to 6563-48 G. C., both inclusive, and do not apply to the entire chapter on joint county ditches, beginning with section 6536 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STENOGRAPHER—AT CORONER'S INQUEST—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS NOT LIABLE FOR SUCH SERVICES—COURT STENOGRAPHER—NOT ENTITLED TO ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR SERVICES RENDERED IN TRANSCRIBING TESTIMONY TAKEN BEFORE GRAND JURY.

The county commissioners are not authorized to pay for services rendered by a stenographer in taking testimony at a coroner's inquest.

The prosecuting attorney is not authorized to expend a part of the money drawn by him under section 3004 G. C., for the payment of extra compensation to the official stenographer for services rendered in transcribing testimony taken before the grand jury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1917.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 15, 1917, as follows:

"I desire to inquire whether or not county commissioners are authorized to pay the bill for stenographic services rendered by a stenographer in taking testimony at a coroner's inquest and whether or not the prosecuting attorney is authorized to expend a part of the money drawn by him under section 3004 of the General Code for the payment of the official stenographer for his services in transcribing testimony taken by him before a grand jury, as provided by law, and if not is there any provision of law by which such stenographer's services may be paid, or are they part of the duties of the official stenographer?"

Also your letter which reads:

"Touching the question of compensation to the stenographer in my letter referred to, I know of no other means by which the stenographer of a coroner can be paid than the allowance of the bill by the county commissioners. And in as much as the statute speaks of the taking of testimony by a stenographer, it would seem proper for the commissioners to allow such bill, even though the stenographer happened to be the official stenographer of the court of common pleas. The same reasoning would apply for the payment, under section 3004, for transcriptions of testimony taken before a grand jury."

Answering your first question, sections 2856 and 2866 of the General Code read:

"Sec. 2856. When informed that the body of a person whose death is supposed to have been caused by violence has been found within the county, the coroner shall appear forthwith at the place where the body is, issue subpoenas for such witnesses as he deems necessary, administer to them the usual oath, and proceed to inquire how the deceased came to his death, whether by violence from any other person or persons, by whom, whether as principals or accessories before or after the fact, and all circumstances relating thereto. The testimony of such witnesses shall be reduced to writing, by them respectively subscribed, except when stenographically reported by the official stenographer of the coroner, and, with the finding and recognizances hereinafter mentioned, if any, returned by the coroner to the clerk of the court of common pleas of the county. If he deems it necessary, he shall cause such witnesses to enter into recognizance, in such sum as may be proper, for their appearance at the succeeding term of the court of common pleas of the county to give testimony concerning the matter. The coroner may require any and all such witnesses to give security for their attendance, and if they or any of them neglect to comply with his requirements, he shall commit such person to the prison of the county, until discharged by due course of law.

"Sec. 2866. Coroners shall be allowed the following fees: For view of dead body, three dollars; for drawing all necessary writings, and return thereof, for every one hundred words, ten cents; for traveling, each mile, to the place of view, ten cents; when performing the duties of sheriff, the same fees as are allowed to sheriffs for similar services."

Since there is nothing in the statutes making it the duty of the official stenographer to take notes at coroner's inquests, the thing to be determined is, can the coroner employ a stenographer for that purpose.

On August 19, 1911, former Attorney-General Hogan rendered an opinion, D-326, found in volume 1 of the Attorney-General's Report for the year 1911-1912, page 320, in which it was held:

"There is no statute authorizing the coroner to engage a stenographer and when he does it must be at his own expense."

In construing section 2856, above quoted, it was said in this opinion:

"This section provides that when the testimony of a witness at an inquest is stenographically reported by the official stenographer of the coroner, the witness need not sign the same. It does not authorize the payment from the county of the compensation of the stenographer. There is no statute empowering a coroner to employ a stenographer, and if he does so it must be at his expense.

"It is a well-known principle of law that no officer, or person, can draw compensation from public funds except by authority of statute or ordinance.

"The allowance to the coroner of ten cents per one hundred words for a necessary writings is the only proper charge to be paid from the county for such writings. The amount paid to the stenographer was illegal. The allowance was made upon certificate of the coroner for work for which he drew the full pay. The payment by such certificate was unauthorized and the finding should be made against the coroner for the amount so paid."

Answering your second question, in regard to how the official stenographer should be paid for services in transcribing testimony taken by him before a grand jury, I have to call your attention to section 13561 G. C., which reads:

"The official stenographer of the county, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, shall take shorthand notes of the testimony and furnish a transcript thereof to him and to no other person, but the stenographer shall withdraw from the jury room before the jurors begin to express their views or give their votes on a matter before them. The stenographer shall take an oath, to be administered by the court after the grand jurors are sworn, imposing an obligation of secrecy to not disclose any testimony taken or heard except to such jury or prosecutor, unless called upon in a court of justice to make disclosures."

In an opinion dated April 15, 1910, Attorney-General's Reports for the year 1910-1911, page 857, it was held that an official stenographer was not entitled to additional compensation for taking notes of testimony before a grand jury. In this opinion it was said:

"Section 13561 General Code makes it the duty of the official stenographer, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, to take shorthand notes of testimony before the grand jury, and to furnish a transcript thereof to the prosecuting attorney. Both of these duties devolve upon the stenographer in his official capacity and are compensated, so far as he is concerned, by his annual salary receivable under section 1550 General Code."

I agree with both of the opinions above quoted and in direct answer to your two inquiries it is my opinion that county commissioners are not authorized to pay for services rendered by a stenographer in taking testimony at a coroner's inquest, and that the prosecuting attorney is not authorized to expend a part of the money drawn by him under section 3004 G. C. for the payment of extra compensation to the official stenographer for services rendered in transcribing testimony taken by him before the grand jury.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT AND TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT UNITING FOR HIGH SCHOOL PURPOSES UNDER SECTION 7669 G. C.—MAY ISSUE BONDS THEREFOR ON VOTE OF ELECTORS OF RESPECTIVE DISTRICTS IN MANNER PROVIDED BY SECTIONS 7625, 7626 AND 7627 G. C.

A village school district and a township rural school district uniting for high school purposes under section 7669 of the General Code may each issue bonds under said section on a vote of the electors of the respective school districts in the manner provided by sections 7625, 7626 and 7627 of the General Code for the purpose of erecting a high school building for joint high school district. Such separate issue of bonds by a vote of such school districts so uniting for high school purposes will be in compliance with the provisions of said section 7669, which reads as follows:

> "Each board also may submit the question of levying a tax on the property in their respective districts for the purpose of purchasing a site and erecting a building and issue bonds as is provided by law as in the case of erecting or repairing school houses, but such question of tax levy must carry in each district before it may become operative in either."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1917.

HON. JOHN C. D'ALTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have at hand your letter of January 2, 1917, addressed to this department and asking for an opinion, in which you say:—

> "The board of education of the village school district of Sylvania and the board of education of Sylvania township rural school district have united for high school purposes under section 7669 of the General Code. Both boards now desire to purchase a site and erect a high school thereon at a cost of $50,000.00, $35,000.00 to be paid by the township rural school district and $15,000.00 by the village school district.
> "Section 7669 provides that the question of levying a tax for the purchase of a site and erecting a building shall first be favorably voted on by each district. The rate that Sylvania village could levy so as to come within the provisions of 5649-2 and 5b—and the same is true of the township—would necessarily extend over the period of five years, as provided by section 5649-5; and for the reason that the total aggregate value of property for taxation in each district is so small, the aggregate levy that could be made within the limits of 5649-2 and 5649-5b would not be sufficient to raise the necessary $15,000.00 and $35,000.00 respectively in said five years, provided by 5649-5.
> "The question now is:
> "1. Would each district, by submitting a bond issue for the amount needed, viz.: $15,000.00 in the village school district, and $35,000.00 in the township school district, under the provisions of G. C. 7625, 6, 7 and 5649-2 and 5b, comply with the provisions of section 7669 of submitting the question of 'levying a tax.' Or, put in another way, if the village school district submitted the question of an issue of bonds in the sum of $15,000.00 for a period of 20 years, and the township school district submitted the question of an issue of bonds in the sum of $35,000.00 for a period of 20 years, would the provisions of 7669 be complied with?

"2. If question 1 is answered in the affirmative, are the provisions of 7669, 7670 and 7671 broad enough to, and do they, contemplate that the managing committee of four members could proceed to purchase a site and let a contract for the building of a high school thereon in the same manner, perhaps, as is authorized for the building of a high school by a board of education, if the respective boards of education granted, or attempted to grant, the right to the managing committee?

"3. If both questions 1 and 2 are answered in the affirmative, in whose name would the title to the real estate be taken—the real estate about to be purchased lying within the limits of the village school district?"

Section 7669 of the General Code, referred to by you, provides as follows:

"The boards of education of two or more adjoining rural school districts, or of a rural and village school district by a majority vote of the full membership of each board, may unite such districts for high school purposes. Each board also may submit the question of levying a tax on the property in their respective districts, for the purpose of purchasing a site and erecting a building, and issue bonds, as is provided by law in case of erecting or repairing school houses; but such question of tax levy must carry in each district before it shall become operative in either. If such boards have sufficient money in the treasury to purchase a site and erect such building, or if there is a suitable building in either district owned by the board of education that can be used for a high school building it will not be necessary to submit the proposition to vote, and the boards may appropriate money from their funds for this purpose."

With respect to your first enquiry it may be observed, as I view the provisions of section 7669 applicable to your enquiry, the provisions thereof authorizing each board of education of school districts united for high school purposes to "* * * submit the question of levying a tax on the property in their respective districts, for the purpose of purchasing a site and erecting a building, * * *"

has no reference to or connection with the election authorized and provided for by sections 5649-5 and 5649-5a on the question of an increased tax rate in a school district (or other political subdivision) over the maximum external and internal rates prescribed by sections 5649-2 and 5649-3a respectively.

That the provisions of section 7669 above noted have no reference to the provisions of the Smith law, so-called, is evidenced from the fact that the provisions of section 7669 above noted were a part of the statutory law of the state a number of years before the enactment of the Smith one per cent. law. (See R. S. 4009-15; 97 O. L. 359.)

As far as your question is concerned, I am inclined to view the provisions of section 7669 authorizing each board of education to submit the question of a tax levy on the property of each district for the purpose of purchasing a site for and erecting a high school building, and requiring such question to carry in both districts before becoming operative in either, expend their force on the further provisions of section 7669 authorizing the issue of bonds for such purposes. This language of section 7669 as to a tax levy and the issue of bonds for the purpose of purchasing a site for and erecting a high school building must be read together, and so read this section clearly authorizes the board of education of each school district united with another for high school purposes to submit to the electors thereof the question of an issue of bonds for the purpose of purchasing a site for and erecting a high school building for the use of the joint district, and a tax levy therefor, it being the duty of each board to determine the amount of the bond issue to be submitted to the electors of its district; and the bond issue question would have to carry in both districts before a favorable vote in either would go into effect.

In this connection it may be observed that section 7669 of the General Code, authorizing as it does the electors of each school district on the submission of the board of education thereof to vote a bond issue therein in the manner provided by law (Sec. 7625 G. C.) for the purpose of purchasing a site for and erecting a high school building for the use of joint district, section 11 of article XII of the State Constitution in itself not only authorizes but directs an annual tax levy to pay bonds issued in pursuance of such vote as they mature and interest thereon. This section of the Ohio Constitution reads as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

(See Link v. Karb, 89 O. S. 326.)

The same purpose disclosed by the section of the state constitution above quoted is also served by the provisions of section 5649-1 of the General Code, which reads as follows:

> "In any taxing district, the taxing authority shall, within the limitations now prescribed by law, levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes for all bonds issued by any political subdivision, which tax shall be placed before and in preference to all other items, and for the full amount thereof."

The annual levy necessary to pay such bonds voted by the electors of each district and the interest thereon would, as an indebtedness incurred by a vote of the people, be in addition to the maximum levy provided in section 5649-2 and 5649-3a, but subject, of course, to the limitations of the combined maximum rate prescribed by section 5649-5b.

From the provisions both constitutional and statutory above noted it is clear that the authority, and duty as well, of each board of education to levy annually taxes to meet the payment of bonds issued therein follows the issue, and in the light of said provisions it is difficult to see that the provisions of section 7669 authorizing each board to submit the question of levying a tax on the property in its district has any independent force when bonds are voted and issued therein as authorized by said section and in the manner prescribed by sections 7625, 7626 and 7627 of the General Code.

In answer to your first question, I am of the opinion that if the village school district mentioned in your communication submits the question of an issue of bonds in the sum of $15,000.00 for a period of twenty years, or other number of years, and the township school district submits the question of an issue of bonds in the sum of $35,000.00 for a period of twenty years, or other number of years, such action on the part of said board would be in compliance with the provisions of section 7669 of the General Code.

With respect to your second question it will be noted that the sole authority of the managing committee of the high school of the joint district provided for by section 7669 is that conferred by the provisions of sections 7670 and 7671 of the General Code, which are as follows:

> "Sec. 7670. Any high school, so established shall be under the management of a high school committee, consisting of two members of each of the boards creating such joint district, elected by a majority vote of such boards. Their membership of such committee shall be for the same term as their terms on the boards which they respectively represent. Such high school shall be free to all youth of school age within each district, subject to the rules and regulations adopted by the high school committee, in regard to the qualifications in scholarship requisite for admission, such rules and regulations to be of uniform operation throughout each district.
> "Sec. 7671. The funds for the maintenance and support of such high school shall be provided by appropriations from the tuition or contingent funds, or both, of each district, in proportion to the total valuation of property in the respective districts, which must be placed in a separate fund in the treasury of the board of education of the district in which the school house is located, and paid out by action of the high school committee for the maintenance of the school."

It is clear from the provisions of these sections that the only authority conferred upon the high school committee is that of managing the high school established by the boards of education, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that the high school committee of four members provided for by section 7670 of the General Code would have no authority to purchase a site for and let a contract for the erection of a high school building thereon either with or without an attempted grant of authority to do so on the part of the respective boards of education, for I see nothing in the provisions of any of the sections above considered authorizing the respective boards of education to delegate the authority imposed on them to provide for the erection of or to otherwise establish a high school.

With respect to the questions just discussed I believe that the conclusions reached by me are in substantial accord with an opinion of my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, under date of June 20, 1916, and addressed to Hon. Hugh F. Neuhart, prosecuting attorney, Caldwell, Ohio, a copy of which opinion is herewith enclosed.

As to your third question, I am of the opinion that the title to the real estate secured for a site for the high school building should be taken in the name of the boards of education of both districts for use of the joint district for high school purposes.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—MAY ISSUE BONDS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT UNDER SECTION 6929 G. C. WHEN PART OF COST OF IMPROVEMENT IS TO BE BORNE BY TOWNSHIP—WITHOUT RESOLUTION OF TRUSTEES THEREOF AUTHORIZING THE SAME.

County commissioners may, under section 6929 G. C., issue bonds covering the cost and expense of constructing a road improvement under chapter 6 of the Cass road law, a part of which cost and expense is to be borne by a township, without a prior resolution by the trustees of such township, authorizing the county commissioners to make a levy annually upon all the taxable property of the township, to pay the proportion of the cost and expense of the improvement to be paid by such township.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1917.

HON. JOHN L. HEISE, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have the honor to acknowledge your letter of February 16, 1917, asking the opinion of this department, in which you say:

> "The board of county commissioners of Pickaway county, Ohio, by unanimous vote, adopted a resolution to provide for improving the Duvall county highway in Madison township, Pickaway county. Forty per cent. to be paid by the county, thirty per cent. by the township and thirty per cent. to be assessed upon the owners of real estate lying within one mile on either side of said road according to benefits accruing to such real estate, as provided for by section 6910 General Code.
> "For the purpose of providing money with which to pay the respective shares of Pickaway county, Madison township and of the lands to be assessed, it will be necessary to issue bonds of the county in the sum of $20,000.00 as provided for by section 6929 of the General Code.
> "The auditor tells me that when he and the former prosecuting attorney submitted a transcript for a former issue of bonds to your department, which the industrial commission had agreed to purchase, that one of the attorneys in attorney-general's office told them that it was necessary that the trustees of the township adopt a resolution authorizing the county commissioners to make a levy annually upon all the taxable property of the township, to pay the portion of the bonds and interest to be paid by the township and also to provide against any default in payment by the property owners.
> "Our question therefore is, does the law require such a resolution from the trustees of Madison township, or can the commissioners issue these bonds and without such a resolution, levy on all the property of Madison township, annually a tax sufficient to pay the township's portion of this bond issue and the amount due from any of the property owners in case they fail to pay."

In answering your question, I do not deem it necessary to discuss or even note all of the sections of the General Code which were originally enacted as chapter 6 of the Cass road law, relating to road construction and improvement by county commissioners.

Section 6910 G. C. in terms provides for the initiation of road improvement by county commissioners on unanimous vote, without a petition therefor. The cost and expense of road construction or improvement projected by county commissioners under section 6910 G. C. are to be apportioned according to some one of the plans provided for by section 6919 G. C.

Plan 1, under which it is evident the cost and expense of the improvement in question was apportioned by the board of commissioners of your county, is as follows:

> "1. Not less than thirty-five per cent. nor more than fifty per cent. thereof, shall be paid out of the proceeds of any levy or levies for road purposes upon the grand duplicate of all the taxable property in the county or out of any funds available therefor. Not less than twenty-five per cent. nor more than forty per cent. thereof shall be paid out of the proceeds of any levy or levies for road purposes upon the grand duplicate of the county to be levied upon the taxable property of any township or townships in which said improvement may be in whole or part situated, and the balance thereof which shall not be less than twenty per cent. nor more than thirty-five per cent., shall be assessed upon and collected from the owners of real estate abutting upon said improvement, or within one mile of either side thereof according to benefits accruing to such real estate as may be determined upon by said commissioners."

Section 6922 to 6925 inclusive, G. C. provide for making, apportioning and certifying to the duplicate, assessments according to benefits upon property lying within the particular district adopted.

Sections 6926, 6927 and 6929 G. C. provide as follows:

> "Sec. 6926. The proportion of the costs and expenses of such improvement to be paid by the county, shall be paid out of any road improvement fund available therefor. For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the county's proportion of the costs and expenses of constructing, improving, maintaining, dragging and repairing roads under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy annually a tax not exceeding two mills upon each dollar of the taxable property of said county. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for road purposes, but subject to the limitation on the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force.
> "Sec. 6927. For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the proportion of the costs and expenses of such improvement to be paid by the township or townships interested, in which such road may be in whole or part situated, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy a tax not exceeding three mills in any one year upon all the taxable property of such township or townships. Such levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for road purposes, but subject to the limitation on the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force.
> "Sec. 6929. The county commissioners in anticipation of the collection of such taxes and assessments may, whenever in their judgment it is deemed necessary, sell the bonds of said county in the aggregate amount necessary to pay the estimated cost and expenses of such improvement. Such bonds shall state for what purpose they are issued and shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually and in such amounts and to mature at such times as the commissioners shall determine, subject to the provision however that said bonds shall mature in not more than ten years. Prior to the issuance of such bonds, the county commissioners shall provide for levying and collecting annually a tax upon all the taxable property of the county to provide a sum sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity. The sale of such bonds shall be advertised once not later than two weeks prior to the date fixed for such sale in a newspaper published and of general circulation within such county, if there be any such paper published in said county, but if there be no such paper published in said county then in a newspaper having general circulation in said county. Such bonds shall be sold to the highest responsible bidder for not less than par and accrued interest.

"The county commissioners may reject any or all bids. The proceeds of such bonds shall be used exclusively for the payment of the costs and expenses of the improvement for which they are issued."

It is apparent from the foregoing statutory provision, as well as from all others enacted as a part of chapter 6 of the Cass road law relating to the matter of road construction and improvement by county commissioners, that, save where the cost and expense of constructing or improving a road is apportioned between the county and a township therein by agreement between the county commissioners and the township trustees of such township, under section 6921 G. C., and save in cases where such road construction or improvement is projected by the county commissioners through a municipality by an agreement with the council thereof, all the proceedings relating to the construction and improvement of roads under chapter 6 of the Cass road law are within the untrammeled power and jurisdiction of the board of county commissioners.

Your specific question is, whether or not, before issuing bonds under section 6929 G. C., covering the cost and expense of constructing or improving this road, to be borne by the county, township and property assessed, it is necessary that the township trustees by resolution authorize the county commissioners to make the annual levy upon all the taxable property of the township provided for by section 6927 G. C. It is clear that there is no provision in terms making such resolution, on the part of the township trustees, a condition precedent to the right of the county commissioners either to make an annual levy upon the taxable property of the township, to pay such township's share of the improvement, or to the right of the county commissioners to issue bonds under section 6929 G. C.

It is just as clear that if these sections are to be interpreted as requiring such resolution of authority by the township trustees before the county commissioners can make the levy on township property provided for by section 6927 G. C., a veto power will be given to the township trustees as to all road improvements, the cost and expense of which, either under petition therefor or by resolution of the county commissioners under section 6910 G. C., is to be borne in part by the township.

I am of the opinion that no such power is granted to township trustees, either with respect to improvements granted by the county commissioners on petition, or projected by the county commissioners under section 6910 G. C.

The provision of section 6927 G. C., authorizing the county commissioners to make an annual levy upon the taxable property in the township, to pay the township's share of road construction or improvement, was taken from section 6956-14 G. C., which was a part of the Braun road law and which was repealed in the enactment of the Cass road law. The power of the county commissioners to make such annual levy has not to my knowledge been in any manner challenged, and answering your question categorically I am of the opinion that the board of county commissioners of your county may issue bonds in the manner provided for by section 6929 G. C., without any resolution of authority by the township trustees with respect to the annual levy to be made by the county commissioners on the property in the township, to pay the township's share of the improvement.

With respect to that part of your letter in which you say that some attorney in the attorney-general's office advised the former prosecuting attorney of your county and the county auditor that such resolution by the trustees of the township was necessary, I am informed that an attorney in this department under Attorney-General Turner advised these officers that before the county commissioners of a county could issue bonds under section 1223 G. C., covering the part of an inter-county highway improvement to be borne by the county, township and abutting property owners, the trustees of the township would have to adopt a resolution, under section 1222 G. C., providing for an annual levy upon the taxable property in the township, to pay the township's portion of such improvement.

I do not deem it necessary at this time to express any opinion with respect to this view as to the construction of sections 1223 and 1222 G. C. applying to inter-county highway improvement. It is sufficient to note that there is an obvious distinction between the provisions of section 1222 G. C. and those of section 6927 G. C. In one case the levy on the taxable property in the township for the purpose of the improvement is to be made by the township trustees; in the other the levy is made by the board of county commissioners; and, as before noted, I am clearly of the opinion that the commissioners may issue bonds under section 6929 G. C. without any resolution of authority by the township trustees with respect to the annual levy to be made by the county commissioners on taxable property in the township, under section 6927 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MEETING—HELD UNDER SECTION 4747-1 G. C.—EXPENSES THEREOF CANNOT BE PAID FROM BOARD OF EDUCATION FUND, OR ANY OTHER FUND.

No expenses, fees or salaries can be paid from the county board of education fund, or any other fund, by reason of a meeting held under the provisions of section 4747-1 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of February 28, 1917, you submit for my opinion the following statement:

> "May any payments be made from the county board of education fund, or from any other public fund, for any expenses that might have been incurred by reason of a meeting held under the provisions of section 4747-1 General Code, 104 O. L., page 139?"

Section 4747-1 G. C. provides:

> "Once each year all the members of the boards of education of the various village and rural school districts within any county school district shall hold a meeting for the purpose of discussing matters relating to the schools of such county school district. The county superintendent shall arrange for the time and place of holding such meeting and shall also act as chairman."

The above section of the General Code is a part of what is commonly called the "new school code" and its provisions relate to duties of members of boards of education of the various village and rural school districts, being additional duties to those duties theretofore devolving upon such boards.

The compensation of members of boards of education is provided for in General Code section 4715, as follows:

"Each member of the board of education of rural school districts, except such districts as contain less than sixteen square miles, shall receive as compensation two dollars for each regular meeting actually attended by such member, but for not more than five meetings in any year. The compensation allowed members of the board shall be paid from the contingent fund," and nothing therein refers to expenses either of the board or of the individual members thereof while in the performance of their several duties.

General Code section 4734, which provides that each member of the county board of education shall be paid his actual and necessary expenses incurred during his attendance upon any meeting of the board, was enacted at the same time as the above quoted section 4747-1 and it would seem to follow that the legislative intent might be drawn from the circumstances that, having provided for the expenses of one board, it intended the other boards to have no such expenses, else they would have been provided for also.

I believe it is a well settled principle of law in Ohio that where fees and compensation are provided for by law for public officials, such laws must be strictly construed and the officials are permitted no other or further remuneration except that which is especially provided. A few of the numerous decisions upon this subject might well be noted and considered:

In Richardson v. State, ex rel., etc., 66 O. S. 108, the plaintiff, the county commissioners, claims that in addition to his compensation and mileage he is entitled to be reimbursed out of the county treasury for certain expenses such as traveling expenses, livery hire, etc., but the court held that the statute must be strictly construed and that he could charge only that amount which was specifically provided for by statute.

In Debolt v. Trustees, 7 O. S. 237, the township treasurer endeavored to charge fees upon money received and disbursed and the court held that no officer, whose compensation is regulated by fees, can charge for a particular service unless the law specifically gives him fees for that service.

In Strawn v. Commissioners, 47 O. S. page 404, a county surveyor charged for making a record of a survey and the court held that no statutory provision having been shown directly authorizing payment out of the public funds of the fees of a county surveyor for recording a private survey, no fees could be charged. The fact that a duty is imposed upon a public officer will not be enough to charge the public with an obligation to pay for its performance, for the legislature may deem the duties imposed to be fully compensated by the privileges and other emoluments belonging to the office, or by fees permitted to be charged and collected for services connected with such duty and service, and hence provides no compensation therefor.

In Jones v. Commissioners, 57 O. S. 189, a county auditor endeavored to secure extra compensation for making certain statistical reports, but the court held where there is no provision of law for the auditor to charge and collect fees for services, no charge shall be made therefor and the auditor's service in making the reports for the commissioners must be deemed, if not gratuitous, at least satisfied by the salary attached to his office, and he cannot be paid extra compensation out of the county treasury.

In Anderson v. Commissioners, 25 O. S. 13, the prosecuting attorney appointed an assistant to examine into the annual report of the county commissioners. The court held the statute under which the appointment was made, and in pursuance of of which the service was rendered, makes no provision for compensation for such services. Where a service for the benefit of the public is required by law and no provision for its payment is made, it must be regarded as gratuitous and no claim for compensation can be enforced.

In Clark v. Commissioners, 58 O. S. 107, the clerk of courts endeavored to charge for indexing and other services. The court held it to be well settled that a public officer is not entitled to receive pay for services out of the public treasury unless there is some statute authorizing the same, and that services performed for the public, where no provision is made by statute for payment, are regarded as a gratuity or as being compensated by fees, privileges and emoluments accruing to such officer in the matters pertaining to his office.

I must, therefore, hold that for the duties to be performed under section 4747-1 G. C. no expenses, fees or salaries can be paid from the county board of education fund or any other fund provided by law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEE AND MEMBER OF BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The duties of a member of a township board of education and the township trustee are incompatible and the two offices cannot be held contemporaneously by the same person.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 13, 1917.

HON. PHIL H. WIELAND, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Gilead, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication February 20, 1917, as follows:

> "I desire to submit the following question to your department for an opinion:
> "Can a member of a township board of education also hold the office of township trustee or are those two offices incompatible?"

My predecessor, Edward C. Turner, on December 9, 1915, rendered an opinion to Hon. T. B. Jarvis, prosecuting attorney, Mansfield, O., found in volume 3, page 2357, Opinions of the Attorney-General, for the year 1915, wherein he held that the office of township trustee and member of the board of education, in and for the said township are incompatible for the reason, that the same may be and frequently are adverse in the matter of levying and the adjustment of tax rates as provided in section 5649-3A and 5649-3B the General Code.

Section 5649-3A provides, that on or before the first Monday in June in each year, the trustees in each township and each board of education and other taxing officials, shall submit to the county auditor an annual budget setting forth an estimate stating the amount of money needed for the ensuing year.

It further provides the matters that the budget shall specifically set forth and the limit of the rate to be fixed by each of the taxing authorities, named in said section.

Section 5649-3B provides for a budget commission composed of county auditor, prosecuting attorney and county treasurer for the purpose of adjusting the rates of taxation and the amount of taxes to be levied in each county.

Section 5649-3C provides as follows:

> "The auditor shall lay before the budget commissioners the annual budgets submitted to him by the boards and officers named in section 5649-3A of this act. * * * The budget commissioners shall examine such budgets and estimates prepared by the county auditor, and ascertain the total amount to be raised in each taxing district for state, county, township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district purpose. * * * If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount in any township, city, village school district, or other taxing district in the county, the budget commission shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or item therein. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, within the limits provided by law."

In case it becomes necessary for the budget commissioners to reverse the estimate contained in the budget, provided for in section 5649-3A, the commissioners call the members of the board of education and the township trustees before them for conference for a discussion of the merits of their respective claims, under which circumstances the members of the board of education and the township trustees necessarily represent adverse interests which is not permissible in the same individual.

I concur in the opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, and, therefore, advise you that a member of a township board of education, may not, at the same time, hold the office of township trustee.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE OWNERS MUTUAL LIVE STOCK INSURANCE COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 14, 1917.

HON. W. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am herewith returning to you the articles of incorporation of "The Owners Mutual Live Stock Insurance Company." The purpose clause in said articles of incorporation is in legal effect in substantial compliance with the third paragraph of section 9609 of the General Code. Inasmuch as said certificate is otherwise in accord with the sections of the General Code providing for live stock insurance corporations, said certificate is approved and you are advised to receive and record the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

RETIRED OFFICER—ENTITLED TO LIKE PAY AS OFFICERS ON ACTIVE LIST—WHEN ORDERED ON DUTY BY ADJUTANT GENERAL—PAID FROM APPROPRIATION FOR CAMP PAY.

A retired officer ordered on duty by the adjutant general of Ohio is entitled under section 5201 G. C. to like pay and allowance as officers on the active list and by virtue of section 5296 G. C. may be paid from appropriation for camp pay.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 14, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you wrote me to the following effect:

> "Enclosed you will find a voucher made payable to Lt. Col. Miletus Garner in the sum of $781.67, to be paid from Personal Service O. N. G.—Camp Pay.
> "There is some doubt in my mind as to whether this is a proper charge against this fund, and I, therefore, request that you advise me as to whether or not you would consider this a proper charge against the appropriation made to the Ohio National Guard for Personal Service, classification A-2, Wages—Camp Pay."

The voucher which you submitted is one made in favor of Lt. Col. Miletus Garner and has attached thereto a certified account stating as follows:

> "For services per S. O. No. 141, Par. 8 A. G. D. July 1st to Sept. 7th incl.
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | "For month of July | $350 00 |
> | "For month of August | 350 00 |
> | "7 days in September at $11.67 per day | 81 67 |
> | | "$781 67" |

The sole question presented by you is as to the fund out of which the said voucher shall be paid.

The special order referred to in the certified account is to the following effect:

"COLUMBUS, July 1st, 1916.

"Special Orders No. 141.

"Par. 8—Lieutenant Colonel Miletus Garner, Ohio National Guard, retired, is restored to the active list of officers, O. N. G., and will report to Brigadier-General Benson W. Hough, the Adjutant General, Ohio, for assignment to duty."

It appears, therefore, that Lt. Col. Garner was on the retired list of officers prior to the issuance of Special Order No. 141.

Section 5201 G. C. provides:

"Any commissioned officer who has served as a member of the national guard for a period of ten years, five of which have been as a commissioned officer, at his own request may be placed upon the retired list, which shall be kept in the office of the adjutant general. Officers so retired shall receive no compensation for their services except as hereinafter provided, but shall be permitted on all occasions of ceremony, to wear the uniform of the grade upon which retired. The commander-in-chief may detail officers so retired upon duty other than in the command of troops, and when so detailed, they shall receive like pay and allowances as officers on the active list detailed or employed under like conditions."

Section 5296 G. C. provides:

"For service and attendance upon general courts-martial, courts of inquiry, and boards appointed by the commander-in-chief, as member, judge, advocate, recorder or witness, or upon inspection or other duty when ordered by the commander-in-chief, officers shall receive as pay the amount allowed by law for duty at annual encampments, together with transportation in kind and actual expenses for each day's service and the time actually employed in going to and returning from such duty, courts or boards."

Under the provisions of section 5201 a retired officer, when detailed for duty, is entitled to receive "like pay and allowances as officers on the active list detailed or employed under like conditions" and, under section 5296, such officer is entitled to receive as pay "the amount allowed by law for duty at annual encampments," etc.

Although the appropriation made in house bill 701, 106 O. L. 666, to the Ohio National Guard, under Personal Service (709 and 790) reads as follows:

"A-2 Wages—
"Drill pay	$50,000 00
"Camp pay	60,000 00
	"$110,000 00"

Nevertheless, since under the provisions of section 5296 officers when ordered on duty are entitled to "the amount allowed by law for duty at annual encampments," it would seem to me that the appropriation made for camp pay could lawfully be used to pay for such services.

I, therefore, advise you that the appropriation for "Personal Service, O. N. G., Camp Pay" may be used in payment of services rendered by retired officers when detailed upon duty under the provisions of sections 5201 and 5296 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TERRITORY IN ONE TOWNSHIP WHICH IS A PART OF THE RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT OF AN ADJOINING TOWNSHIP DOES NOT CEASE TO BE A PART OF SAID DISTRICT BY REASON OF RESIDENTS THEREOF VOTING AT AN ELECTION CALLED BY BOARD OF EDUCATION IN THE CIVIL TOWNSHIP IN WHICH THEY ACTUALLY RESIDE.

HELD: Territory in Lenox civil township, Ashtabula county, Ohio, which territory is a part of Morgan township rural school district, adjoining, does not cease to be a part of the said school district by reason of the fact that the electors residing in such territory participated in a school election called by the board of education of Lenox township school district, and that the only way in which territory can be transferred from Morgan township school district is by some proceeding in accordance with the statutes providing for such transfer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 15, 1917.

HON. F. J. BISHOP, Prosecuting Attorney, Jefferson, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 12, 1917, asking opinion, in which you say:

> "A question as to taxation has arisen between the townships of Lenox and Morgan in this county concerning which I would be very pleased to have your opinion and the board of education of both townships also desire your opinion in the matter. Following are the facts:
> "Lenox township joins Morgan township on the east. In the year 1908 lots Nos. 79 and 80 in Lenox township were included in Morgan township school district and a school tax was of course at that time levied on that part of Lenox township for the benefit of Morgan township school district, but on the 26th day of September, 1908, the board of education of Lenox township passed a resolution, a copy of which I herewith enclose, and on the 3rd day of November, 1908, at a general election the township of Lenox voted upon the proposition set forth in the resolution and also the electors residing in that part of Morgan township school district which lay in the township of Lenox (lots 79 and 80) voted at that election and the proposition submitted at the election was carried and the bonds were duly issued and sold and a school building was erected at the center of Lenox township and the school was centralized.
> "I herewith enclose a blue print showing the township line, Morgan township school district and the disputed territory in Lenox township.
> "Now the question submitted to you for your determination is this: Has Morgan township school district any right to still levy a tax for school purposes upon that property in Lenox which was formerly included in the Morgan township school district? Or was the territory, to wit, lots 79 and 80 in Lenox township cut out of Morgan school district by virtue of the election held under the enclosed resolution, or to put in another way, which one of the two school districts, (to wit, Morgan township school district and Lenox township school district) has a right to the school tax levied upon lots 79 and 80 in Lenox township?

"I might add incidentally that no pupils in lots 79 and 80 attend Morgan township district school."

From the resolution referred to by you, a copy of which is attached to your communication, it does not appear that any question of centralization of the schools of Lenox township school district was submitted to the electors, but that the only question submitted was with respect to an issue of bonds in the sum of $8,000.00 for the purpose of erecting a school building.

You state that the electors residing within said lots 79 and 80 in Lenox civil township, voted at the election called pursuant to this resolution. This they had no right to do, for although they were legal residents and electors of Lenox civil township, they were not legal residents and electors of Lenox township school district, it being clear in legal contemplation that Lenox township and Lenox township school district were separate and distinct political subdivisions.

Further, wholly irrespective of the rights of electors residing within said lots 79 and 80 in Lenox civil township to vote at said school election, it seems clear that the fact that said electors participated in the election in Lenox township school district called by the board of education of such school district was not effective to transfer the territory included within said lots 79 and 80 to Lenox township school district, for then as now the only manner in which territory could be transferred from one school district to another was by compliance with the provisions of the statutes providing for such action. At that time and until the adoption of the General Code in 1910 the only way territory could be transferred from one school district to another was by proceedings taken in accordance with the provisions of section 3894 or 3895, Revised Statutes. These sections of the Revised Statutes were carried into the General Code as sections 4692 to 4695 thereof. In 1914 section 4736, General Code, was amended so as to make provision for the transfer by the county board of education of territory from one school district to another within the county; while at the present time section 4692, General Code, makes effectual provision for such transfers.

I am therefore of the opinion, and so advise, that unless some action has been taken since the time of said school election transferring the territory included within said lots 79 and 80 to Lenox township school district, such territory and property therein contained are still in Morgan township school district, and there taxable under levies made by the board of education of said school district, the correct designation of which, it is hardly necessary to say, is now Morgan township rural school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—THE PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS INFORMATION EXCHANGE COMPANY—PURPOSE CLAUSE DOES NOT INDICATE PURPOSE TO DO PROFESSIONAL BUSINESS.

The purpose clause of the articles of incorporation of the Physicians and Surgeons Information Exchange Company does not indicate a purpose to do professional business.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 15, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your favor of February 20, 1917, enclosing articles of incorporation of the Physicians and Surgeons Information Exchange Company, in which you ask my opinion as to whether or not the purpose clause of this company is one indicating the conduct of professional business. The purpose clause is as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of rendering service to individuals, firms and corporations, in giving assistance in the answering of telephone calls, furnishing messenger service and otherwise aiding and assisting the said individuals, firms and corporations in taking care of telephone calls, office calls and other communications or inquiries, which may come to them professionally or otherwise, furnishing servants and employes for the said parties as above, and generally assisting the public at any and all times to get into communication with their physician, surgeon, nurse, druggist, hospital or others with whom they may desire to communicate, and doing any and all things which may be necessary or incidental thereto."

Section 8623 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Except for carrying on professional business, a corporation may be formed for any purpose for which natural persons lawfully may associate themselves."

The term "professional" as used in the section above quoted means that which pertains to a profession, and Webster's New International Dictionary defines "profession" as

> "that of which one professes knowledge; the occupation if not purely commercial, mechanical, agricultural, or the like to which one devotes oneself; a calling in which one professes to have acquired some special knowledge used by way either of instructing, guiding or advising others or of serving them in some art; calling; vocation: employment; as, the profession of arms; the profession of chemist."

The Standard Dictionary defines the term "profession" as follows:—

> "An occupation that properly involves a liberal education or its equivalent and mental rather than manual labor; especially one of the three learned professions."

In the Century Dictionary the meaning of the word "profession" is given the meaning, among other things, as:

> "a vocation in which a professed knowledge of some department of science or learning is used by its practical application to the affairs of others, either in advising, guiding or teaching them, or in serving their interests or welfare in the practice of an art founded on it. Formerly theology, law and medicine were specifically known as the professions; but, as the applications of science and learning are extended to other departments of affairs, other vocations also receive the name. The word implies professed attainments in special knowledge, as distinguished from mere skill; a practical dealing with affairs, as distinguished from mere study or investigation, and an application of such knowledge to uses for others as a vocation, as distinguished from its pursuit for one's own purposes."

On consideration of the above definitions of the term by the standard authorities herein noted, the court in the case of Cummings v. Pennsylvania Fire Insurance Company, 153 Iowa, 579, in its opinion says:

> "It is apparent from these definitions that, to constitute a profession, something more than a mere employment or vocation is essential; the employment or vocation must be such as exacts the use or application of special learning or attainments of some kind, and this seems to be the conclusion of the courts."

In the case of Pennock v. Fuller, 41 Mich., 153, the court held that one who operates a real estate agency is not engaged in a professional employment. The court in its opinion in this case says:—

> "Professional employment can only relate to some of those occupations universally classed as professions, the general duties and character of which courts must be expected to understand judicially. Real estate agencies are no more professions than any other business agencies. A commission merchant, or an agent for the sale of any particular kind of personal property, acts in an analogous capacity. Any one can assume and lay down such business at pleasure, and any one can conduct it in his own way, on such terms and conditions as he sees fit to adopt. There is nothing in our laws which would enable any court to draw a line between such business agencies. They are not classed as professions by popular usage or by law."

To the same point that the term "professional" relates only to such occupations as are universally classed as professions and the duties and character of which courts take judicial notice is the case of O'Reilly v. Erlanger, 95 N. Y. Sup. 760.

In the case of State ex rel. The Physicians' Defense Company v. Laylin, 73 O. S. 90, the court held that a foreign corporation, the sole business of which was that of defending physicians and surgeons against civil suits for malpractice, was not entitled to have or receive from the secretary of state a certificate authorizing it to transact such business in this state for the reason that the general purpose was professional business and as such expressly prohibited to corporations by section 3235 of the Revised Statutes, which section is now section 8623 of the General Code. The court in its opinion noted that the services necessary to be rendered by the company in the pursuit of its proposed business was such as in this state could only be performed by a member of the legal profession—an attorney, who shall have been first duly authorized and licensed to perform such services. The court said that such services are professional services, and a business which in its conduct or transaction requires and permits only that character of service, is essentially and certainly, a professional business.

Measured by the standards above noted as to the proper meaning and application of the terms "profession" and "professional," I am wholly unable to perceive how on any view the proposed business of the Physicians and Surgeons Information Exchange Company, as indicated by the purpose clause of its articles of incorporation, as above quoted, can be classed as professional business.

The business proposed to be conducted is peculiar in its nature, and it may be quite difficult to anticipate just what the practical scope of its business is going to be, notwithstanding its purpose is set out in some detail in the articles of incorporation. In this connection it may perhaps be properly suggested that before filing these articles it might be well if you would give some consideration to section 8628 of the General Code, which provides that the secretary of state shall not file or record any articles of incorporation wherein the corporate name is likely to mislead the public as to the nature or purpose of the business its charter authorizes. Whatever may be said on this point, however, with respect to the proposed business of the company, I am clearly of the opinion that the business contemplated is not professional business within the meaning of that term as used in section 8623 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COSTS—IN PURSUIT OF PERSONS CHARGED WITH FELONY—CHARGEABLE AGAINST COUNTY—IN PURSUIT OF PERSON CHARGED WITH MISDEMEANOR—WITHIN THE STATE CHARGEABLE AGAINST COUNTY—POLICE CHIEF HAS NO AUTHORITY TO ADVANCE SUCH MONEY—WHETHER OR NOT PERSON APPREHENDED HAS NO BEARING ON PAYMENT OF COSTS—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY MIGHT ADVANCE SAID MONEY FROM FUND ALLOWED HIM UNDER SECTION 3004 G. (1) *The costs incurred in the proper pursuit of persons charged with the commission of felonies within and without the state are properly chargeable to the county and not to the city and that the costs of pursuing a person charged with a misdemeanor within the state are properly chargeable to the county. (3) The fact as to whether or not persons charged with the violation of state laws are apprehended has no bearing on who shall pay the expense.

(4) There is no authority for county officers advancing money to cover the expenses in pursuit of such persons unless it might be advanced by the prosecuting attorney from the fund allowed him under section 3004 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 15, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of January 9, 1917, as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters relative to the chief of police of the city of Lorain, Ohio.

"(1) Is the expense connected with the pursuit of criminals who have violated state laws, a legal payment from the municipal funds of the city of Lorain, or should such expense be paid from the funds of Lorain county?

"(2) Can money to cover expenses of pursuit of criminals be advanced to the chief of police by the city of Lorain, Ohio?

"(3) Does the question of whether they are able to apprehend such criminals or not have any bearing on who should pay such expense?

"(4) Can such money be advanced by the county officers, or should same only be paid after the actual expenses have been ascertained?"

It is a general rule of law that neither the state, county or municipality can be charged with the costs unless the statute so provides. In order to determine to whom the expense of pursuing criminals who violate state laws should be charged, it is necessary to examine the statutes, if any, providing for the payment of such expenses. The proper pursuit of a prisoner by an officer authorized to pursue him would be properly included in the costs and the answer to your question will be determined by what statutory provision we may find for the payment of costs in the cases referred to.

There are four different phases of your question, as follows:

(1) Expense of officer pursuing a prisoner charged with a felony within the state:

Section 13493 G. C. covers the situation as follows:

"When a felony has been committed, any person without warrant may arrest another whom he has reasonable cause to believe is guilty of the offense, and detain him until a warrant can be obtained. If such warrant directs the removal of the accused to the county in which the offense was committed, the officer holding the warrant shall deliver the accused to a magistrate of such county, to be dealt with according to law. The necessary expense of such removal, and reasonable compensation for his time and trouble, shall be paid to such officer, out of the treasury of such county, upon the allowance and order of the county auditor."

(2) In regard to the pursuit of felons without the state:

Section 13722 provides:

"Upon sentence of a person for a felony, the officers, claiming costs made in the prosecution, shall deliver to the clerk itemized bills thereof, who shall make and certify under his hand and the seal of the court, a complete bill of the costs made in such prosecution, including the sum paid by the county commissioners for the arrest and return of the convict on the requisition of the governor, or on the request of the governor to the president of the United States. Such bill of costs shall be presented by such clerk to the prosecuting attorney who shall examine each item therein charged, and certify to it if correct and legal."

Section 3015 G. C. provides:

"The county commissioners may allow and pay the necessary expense incurred by an officer in the pursuit of a person charged with felony, who has fled the country."

(3) Section 13502 G. C. provides:

"If the accused flee from justice, the officer holding the warrant may pursue and arrest him in any county of this state, and convey him before the magistrate or court issuing the warrant, or other magistrate or court of the county having cognizance of the case."

Section 3016 G. C. provides:

"In felonies, when the defendant is convicted the costs of the justice of the peace, police judge, or justice, mayor, chief of police, constable and witnesses, shall be paid from the county treasury and inserted in the judgment of conviction, so that such costs may be paid to the county from the state treasury. In all cases, when recognizances are taken, forfeited and collected and no conviction is had, such costs shall be paid from the county treasury."

Section 3019 G. C. reads:

> "In felonies wherein the state fails, and in misdemeanors wherein the defendant proves insolvent, the county commissioners, at any regular session, may make an allowance to any such officers in place of fees, but in any year the aggregate allowances to such officer shall not exceed the fees legally taxed to him in such causes, nor in any year shall the aggregate amount allowed an officer exceed one hundred dollars."

These sections authorize the officer to pursue a prisoner charged with a misdemeanor throughout the state of Ohio, and the latter two sections, I think, authorize the payment of the costs in all state misdemeanor cases, as follows: If the state wins and the defendant proves insolvent, the costs are paid by the county under section 3019 G. C. If the state loses and recognizance has been taken, the cost can be paid under section 3016. If no recognizance has been taken and the court has required no security, I know of no way to collect.

(4) There is no authority in law, that I am aware of, for the payment of costs incurred in the pursuit of persons charged with misdemeanors outside of the state of Ohio.

It is therefore my opinion, in answer to your first question, that the costs incurred in the proper pursuit of persons charged with the commission of felonies within and without the state, are properly chargeable to the county and not to the city, and that the costs of pursuing a person charged with a misdemeanor within the state are properly chargeable to the county.

In answer to your second question, I know of no authority in law for the city to advance money to the chief of police to cover expenses in pursuing criminals in the above cases.

In answer to your third question, I am of the opinion that the fact as to whether or not persons charged with the violation of state laws are apprehended has no bearing on who should pay the expenses. If the effort made is in good faith, whether successful or not, I think it is properly chargeable to the cost in the case and paid as above outlined.

In answer to your fourth question, I am not aware of any statute authorizing any advance of money to county officers for the pursuit of persons charged with the violation of state laws, unless it might be advanced by the prosecuting attorney from the fund allowed him under section 3004 General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WIDOW OF UNNATURALIZED PERSON—ENTITLED TO MOTHER'S PENSION.

Under the provisions of the law relating to mothers' pensions, the widow of an unnaturalized person is entitled to a pension under the same conditions as is the widow of a naturalized citizen.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 15, 1917.

HON. BERNARD M. FOCKE, Prosecuting Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have a communication signed by the assistant prosecuting attorney of your county, dated February 13th, in which you ask an opinion in reference to certain questions therein set out. Said communication reads as follows:

> "I would like for your department to give a ruling on the following questions:
> "1st. Can a widow of an unnaturalized citizen receive a mother's pension?
> "2nd. If a man takes out his first papers before his death, can his widow receive a mother's pension?
> "3rd. Can a widow whose husband was never naturalized receive a pension by accepting the oath of allegiance?"

The law which controls in the matter of the questions suggested in your communication is to be found in sections 1683-2 and 1683-3 of the General Code.

Section 1683-2 reads in part as follows:

> "For the partial support of women whose husbands are dead, or become permanently disabled by reason of physical or mental infirmity, or whose husbands are prisoners or whose husbands have deserted, and such desertion has continued for a period of three years, when such women are poor, and are the mothers of children not entitled to receive age and schooling certificate, and such mothers and children have a legal residence in any county of the state for two years, the juvenile court may make an allowance to each of such women as follows:"

Section 1683-3 sets out the conditions which must obtain before a mother's pension can be allowed to any mother. They are as follows:

> "First, the child or children for whose benefit the allowance is made must be living with the mother of such child or children; second, the allowance shall be made only when in the absence of such allowance, the mother would be required to work regularly away from her home and children, and when by means of such allowance she will be able to remain at home with her children, except that she may be absent for work for such time as the court deems advisable; third, the mother must in the judgment of the juvenile court be a proper person, morally, physically and mentally for the bringing up of her children; fourth, such allowance shall in the judgment of the court be necessary to save the child or children from neglect and to avoid the breaking up of the home of such woman; fifth, it must appear to be for the benefit of the child to remain with such mother;"

Now it will be noted that in section 1683-2 the object and purpose of the enactment of this statute is set out, while in section 1683-3 the conditions under which the pension may be granted are set out. Neither in the object or purpose as set out nor in the conditions named in said section does there seem to be any distinction whatever in reference to the homes and children of unnaturalized persons as distinguished from naturalized persons. The broad term "mother" is used in these statutes, and the "children of the mother" is used in its broadest sense, and when the term "home" is used there seems to be no aim whatever in distinguishing between the homes of different classes of citizens. So that so far as the statutes themselves are concerned it seems that there should be no distinction made between the mother, the home, the children of naturalized persons and unnaturalized persons.

Furthermore, when we consider these statutes in reference to their spirit rather than in reference to their letter, we must conclude that it is just as important that the homes of the unnaturalized persons be maintained in all their fullness and integrity as it is for the homes of the citizens of our state to be so maintained. It is just as important that the children of the unnaturalized persons be reared with every advantage the state can afford and with all the care and nurture that the mother in the home can give, as it is that the children of naturalized citizens be given these advantages. To a great extent, I believe that the children of immigrant parentage are even more in need of all these advantages than are the children of our citizens, whether by birth or by naturalization. To them and their mother this is a strange country. The customs and institutions are foreign to them. The habits and customs of the people are not understood. Hence, every advantage possible must be given to the mother and her children that they may become a part of our own state and country, not alone in body but also in spirit.

Furthermore, it would be contrary to a sound public policy to differentiate between the homes of the unnaturalized and the homes of the naturalized. What this state and nation must do is to make these people feel that this is their home; that all the advantages this state affords are theirs; that they are on an equality with every other citizen of the state; that in this state and nation all men are created free and equal. This principle cannot be implanted in the minds and hearts of our foreign born citizens if we make a distinction between the most vital element that enters into the life of all of our citizens, viz., the homes of the state.

Furthermore, it would be contrary to the spirit and teachings of our state and nation as founded upon the principles and truths of the Bible. To a christian people all men are brothers. There is no distinction between the Jew and the Gentile, the educated and the ignorant, the bond and the free. Without distinction as to color, race or birth, those who are strong must bear the infirmities of those who are weak.

All these things must have been in the minds of the legislators when the mothers' pension law was enacted and it must have been their intention that this law was enacted to aid those homes that may be needy no difference whether it should be the homes of the naturalized or the homes of the unnaturalized.

Therefore, answering your first question specifically, I am of the opinion that a widow of an unnaturalized person is entitled to a mother's pension, if all the conditions set out in the law obtain.

Having answered your first question in the affirmative, your second and third questions need no answer.

Respectfully,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—HAS AUTHORITY TO EMPLOY COUNSEL UNDER SECTION 2918 G. C. WHEN PROSECUTOR REFUSES TO ACT—PAID FROM CONTINGENT FUND PROVIDED BY SECTION 4744-3 G. C.

Section 2918 of the General Code authorizes county boards of education to employ counsel when the prosecuting attorney refuses to act under the provisions of section 4761 G. C.

Such counsel so employed by county boards of education are paid from the contingent fund provided by section 4744-3 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1917.

HON. S. E. WALTERS, Prosecuting Attorney, Van Wert, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 3, 1917, you ask my opinion on the following statement of facts:

"Venedocia village school district, in this county, embraces territory of York township and Jennings township. The county board of education some time ago enlarged the Venedocia village school district by adding to it more territory taken from both York and Jennings townships.

"A taxpayer brought suit and procured temporary injunction restraining the county board of education, the Venedocia village board of education, the York township board of education and the Jennings township board of education from making the enlargement of the Venedocia village school district.

"The case has not been heard on its merits but among the answers filed by the defendant boards are the answers of the York township board and the Jennings township board, in which they ask that the temporary injunction be made perpetual; in other words, in this action, the plaintiff, a taxpayer, defendant York township board and the defendant Jennings township board, are asking perpetual injunction, and the defendant, the county board, and the defendant, Venedocia village board, are wanting the change of district made by the county board to be sustained.

As prosecuting attorney of the county, I have declined to act as attorney for any of these boards, their interests in this case being antagonistic, because section 4761 G. C. defining the duties of prosecuting attorney with respect to being counsel for boards of education, says:

" 'When a civil action is between two or more boards of education in the same county, the prosecuting attorney shall not be required to act for either of them.'

"The county board of education, under section 4744-3 G. C., have set apart for contingent fund this year, the sum of $300, which sum has already been partly spent and there are no other funds out of which they can pay counsel for looking after their interests in this case and the amount on hand at the present time is insufficient to pay for employment of counsel.

"The attorney-general's opinion, No. 336, under date of May 6, 1915, says:

" 'The board of education of a county school district has no authority in law to employ counsel other than the prosecuting attorney of the county.'

"With this situation in mind, I would like to have your answer to the following questions:

"(1) Does section 2918 or any other section of the Code authorize these boards of education, including the county board, to employ counsel?

"(2) If there is any authority for the county board to employ counsel, from what fund and in what manner can they make payment for such services?"

General Code section 2918 provides in part:

"Nothing in the preceding two sections shall prevent a school board from employing counsel to represent it, but such counsel, when so employed, shall be paid by such school board from the school fund. * * *"

The "two preceding sections" in the above section mean, I take it, sections 2916 and 2917 of the General Code. Section 2916 G. C. sets forth the powers and duties of the prosecuting attorneys and section 2917 provides that the prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county and township officers, except that township officers may employ other counsel "on the order of the township trustees, fully entered upon their journal," and this section was supplemented by adding section 2917-1 G. C., which simply provides that the prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of certain election officials. The language of the above portion of section 2918 G. C., above quoted, permits any board of education to employ counsel to represent it, provided such counsel so employed is paid by such board of education from the school fund. The above language is made an exception to the rule laid down that the prosecuting attorney should represent all officials.

General Code section 4761 provides in part:

"Except in city school districts, the prosecuting attorney of the county shall be the legal adviser of all boards of education of the county in which he is serving. He shall prosecute all actions against a member or officer of a board of education for malfeasance or misfeasance in office, and he shall be the legal counsel of such boards or the officers thereof in all civil actions brought by or against them, and shall conduct such actions in his official capacity. Where such civil action is between two or more boards of education in the same county, the prosecuting attorney shall not be required to act for either of them. * * *"

In your case, while the action was not originally commenced by one board against another, the issues are so framed that there is a contest between two or more of the boards and you have a proper right to refuse to represent any one or more or all of said boards, and upon such refusal it is perfectly proper that the language of section 2918 G. C. should apply, for it is held in Caldwell v. Marvin, 8 Ohio N. P. (n. s.) 390:

"The ordinary and necessary method of conducting a legal proceeding is with the assistance of legal counsel. If the right of a board of education to exercise some single power was challenged in a quo warranto proceeding, there would be no question of the implied right to employ counsel in the absence of legally constituted counsel, or upon the failure or refusal of such counsel to act."

If, then, there should be any question about a board of education having authority to employ counsel, under the provisions of General Code section 2918, above quoted, and I think there is not, the board, under the reasoning of Caldwell v. Marvin would, and should have the implied power to employ such counsel.

You call my attention to opinion 336, rendered by my predecessor, and quote therefrom. That opinion was rendered on May 5, 1915, and held in part as follows:

> "The authority of the local board * * * to employ counsel other than the prosecuting attorney to represent it, provided it has sufficient funds in its treasury for such purpose, is clear, but the county school district has no school fund within the meaning of section 2918 G. C. out of which counsel, other than the prosecuting attorney, might be paid by the county board of education for services rendered to said board, and there is no authority in law to create such fund."

On May 27, 1915, General Code section 4744-3 was amended to read in part as follows:

> "The county auditor, when making his semi-annual apportionment of the school funds of the various village and rural school districts, shall retain the amount necessary to pay such portion of the salaries of the county and district superintendents and for contingent expenses as may be certified by the county board. Such money shall be placed in a separate fund to be known as the 'county board of education fund.' * * *"

I have no doubt but that the language "county board of education fund," used in section 4744-3, and the language "school fund" used in section 2918, as far as the county board of education is concerned, mean one and the same thing. So that, when the board of education certified to your county auditor that the sum of $300.00 was needed for contingent expenses, and a portion of that fund is yet unexpended, the county board of education has a perfect right to spend the remainder of said fund. The county board of education also has a right to certify to the county auditor the amount which will be required for contingent expenses for the following year, which amount should include the probable amount of the balance of attorney fees needed by the said board in the proper prosecution or defense of said actions mentioned.

In the case in question we have a school board with a lawsuit on its hands. The legal adviser provided for it by statute refuses to act. The rights of the people whom the school board represent are affected. The board has authority to contract with counsel to legally represent it and the county board should pay the counsel hired by it from the contingent fund provided for in G. C. section 4744-3.

In answer to your first question, then, I advise you that section 2819 does authorize your boards of education to employ counsel and, in answer to your second question, the same shall be paid from the contingent fund of said board

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

SHERIFF—HAS NO AUTHORITY TO SERVE SUBPOENAS IN ADJOINING COUNTY.

When a common pleas court issues a subpoena in a civil case for a witness in an adjoining county, the sheriff of the county in which such court is sitting has no authority to serve the writ in such adjoining county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 17, 1917.

HON. E. E. LINDSAY, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in which you ask my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "I would like to have an opinion as to whether a sheriff has jurisdiction or is required to serve subpoenas in a civil action pending in the court of common pleas of his county, on witnesses or persons residing in an adjoining county.
> "The statute or the decisions seem to be plain enough in reference to his jurisdiction in regard to serving summons in an adjoining county, but I am unable to find anything definite in regard to his serving subpoenas in adjoining counties. My opinion is that he is not required so to do but will be pleased to have your opinion on this subject."

Section 11504 General Code reads:

> "A subpoena may be served by the sheriff, coroner, or any constable of the county, by the party, or other person; but if service is not made by a sheriff, coroner or constable, proof of it shall be shown by affidavit, and no costs shall be taxed."

Section 11506 General Code reads:

> "A witness shall not be compelled to go out of the county where he resides, or is subpoenaed, except to an adjoining county, to testify in a civil action, except where the case has been removed from the county in which such witness resides by change of venue. But no witness shall be required to go out of the county in which he resides or is subpoenaed to so testify, in the trial of a civil action, unless the party subpoenaing him, upon demand, shall pay him at the time he is subpoenaed, his legal mileage and per diem fees. When such witness is the official custodian of a paper or document necessary to be produced in the trial as evidence in any cause, which paper or document can not lawfully be attached as an exhibit to a deposition, the judge of the court in which such cause is pending, upon being satisfied of the necessity thereof, by his order to that effect, may compel a witness from another county to bring such paper or document into his court to be used as evidence in such case. A person subpoenaed to any other county as such official custodian, may demand the legal fees for attendance and mileage as in other cases, and need not attend unless such fees are paid."

Under authority of section 11506 G. C. the common pleas court of a county may compel the attendance of witnesses from an adjoining county, but no statutory authority is given to the sheriff of the county in which the court is sitting to serve subpoenas in an adjoining county.

In the case of Washoe County v. Humboldt County, 14 Nevada 123, the court held that "the sheriff is not authorized by the statute to serve a subpoena on witnesses residing in any other county except it is within the same judicial district." In that case the court said at page 131:

> "The statute only provides for the service of process by the sheriff within his county, except where another county is attached to the same judicial district. It provides that 'a peace officer must serve within his county or district any subpoena delivered to him for service.' The district court had no authority to order the sheriff of Washoe county to serve a subpoena in the county of Humboldt, that county not being within his judicial district. The statute compels witnesses from other counties to attend the place of trial whenever the judge of the court where the cause is to be tried, or the justice of the supreme court, shall endorse on the subpoena an order for the attendance of witnesses; but in such cases the service must be made in the manner pointed out by the other provisions of the statute which I have cited."

In Morrell v. Ingle, 23 Kansas, 32, it was held:

> "In the absence of express provisions to the contrary, the powers of an officer are limited to the territory to which he is an officer."

In that case the court said at page 35:

> "We therefore think it may be considered as established by the testimony that this judgment remained, at the dates of the execution and sale, a valid judgment of the district court of Shawnee county, with power in that court to enforce it by execution to any county in the state; and also, that the county of Osage was an organized county. Under those circumstances, had the sheriff of Shawnee county power to execute the process issued to him by a levy and sale of the real estate situated in the county of Osage? We think not. A sheriff is an officer of the county, and in the absence of express provision his powers do not go beyond the territorial limits of his county. It is not necessary to rest this lack of power in the sheriff of Shawnee county upon the language of section 10 just quoted. It grows out of the general doctrine that the powers of any officer are limited to the territory of which he is an officer. He who affirms the existence of powers beyond such limits must show a grant of such powers; it is not enough to show that there is no express denial of them."

From a consideration of these authorities, it is my opinion that when a common pleas court issues a subpoena for a witness in an adjoining county, the sheriff of the county in which such court is sitting has no authority to serve the writ in such adjoining county.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COMMON CARRIERS—MAY CARRY PERSONS EMPLOYED, EXHIBITS AND EQUIPMENT USED IN AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK FREE OR AT REDUCED RATES—SECTION 7974 G. C. NOT REPEALED BY IMPLICATION BY SECTION 516 G. C.

The provision of section 7974 G. C. permitting common carriers to carry persons employed, and exhibits and equipment used, in agricultural extension work, free, is not repealed by implication by section 516 G. C.

A railroad company may carry such persons, exhibits or equipment free or at reduced rates.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 17, 1917.

HON. CLARK S. WHEELER, Director of Extension Service, College of Agriculture, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 9th you addressed the following inquiry to this department:

> "Enclosed I hand you a copy of letter sent to the public utilities commission of Ohio and a copy of the reply received from Mr. Freeman T. Eagleson, attorney for the commission.
> "In his letter Mr. Eagleson suggests that this matter should be taken up with your office. Your opinion is therefore respectfully requested on the following points:
> "(1) Whether a railroad company may transport free or at reduced rates persons engaged in agricultural extension work;
> "(2) Whether a railroad company may transport free or at reduced rates a car or cars containing demonstration matter to be used in agricultural extension work;
> "(3) Whether, if agricultural extension workers were paid by the railroad company a nominal salary they might be transported free or at reduced rates, and in such cases whether the equipment used by such workers could be transported free or at reduced rates."

The copy of the letter sent to the public utilities commission, referred to, is as follows:

> "December 14, 1916.
> "Mr. A. W. Waltermire, Chairman Public Utilities Commission of Ohio. New First National Bank Building, Columbus, Ohio.
> "Dear Sir:—Your attention is directed to the following extract from the General Code:
> "'Section 7973. The college of agriculture and domestic science of the university shall arrange for the extension of its teachings throughout the state, and hold schools in which instruction shall be given in soil fertility, stock raising, crop production, dairying, horticulture, domestic science and kindred subjects.
> "'Section 7974. In addition to the holding of such schools, such college shall give instruction and demonstration in various lines of agriculture, * * *. Any common carrier is authorized and empowered to carry the persons employed and the equipment and exhibits used in such instruction and demonstrations, free or at reduced rates.'

"The Cincinnati, Cleveland, Chicago and St. Louis Railroad Company desires to co-operate with the university in demonstrations of improved methods of poultry husbandry by means of exhibit and lecture cars. These cars would contain only matter used in educational demonstrations. The railroad company desires to haul such cars and convey free of charge employes of the university actually engaged in furthering the demonstrations.

"We desire to inquire whether the railroad company may furnish such free transportation without violating any laws now in force.

"Very sincerely yours,
"(Signed) C. S. Wheeler, Director."

The following reply is made to the above letter by the attorney of the public utilities commission:

"January 15, 1917.

"Mr. Clark S. Wheeler, College of Agriculture, Ohio State University.

"Dear Sir:—Your letter of December 14, 1916, to Mr. Waltermire, in which you asked for the construction of sections 7973 and 7974, with reference to free transportation, was referred to me for answer, but owing to the press of matters I have been unable to give it the attention necessary to the question before now. My opinion is that because of the fact that section 516 of the General Code expressly provides that no railroad company shall issue free transportation except as therein specifically designated and having been enacted subsequently to the enactment of said sections 7973 and 7974, that the provisions for free transportation as found in said sections 7973 and 7974 are thereby repealed. The legislature seems to have paid no attention to said sections 7973 and 7974 in its re-enactment of its said section 516 and the question you ask is, therefore, one open to difference of opinion.

"I might suggest that you send your inquiry direct to the attorney-general with the request that he give you an official opinion from his department, as to which of the provisions controls with reference to free transportation.

"Yours very truly,
"(Signed) Freeman T. Eagleson,
"Attorney for the Public Utilities Commission of Ohio."

The statutory provision, General Code section 516, governing the subject is:

"No railroad company, owning or operating a railroad wholly or partly within this state, shall directly or indirectly, issue or give a free ticket, free pass, or free transportation for passengers except,----------

"(here we will tabulate the exceptions)

"to its employes and their families, its officers, agents, surgeons, physicians, and attorneys at law;

"to ministers of religion, traveling secretaries of railroad young men's christian associations, inmates of hospitals and charitable and eleemosynary institutions, and persons exclusively engaged in charitable and eleemosynary work; to indigent, destitute and homeless persons, and to such persons when transported by charitable societies or hospitals, and the necessary agents employed in such transportation;

"to inmates of the national homes or state homes for disabled volunteer soldiers, and soldiers' and sailors' homes, including those about to enter and those returning home after discharge, and boards of managers of such homes;

"to necessary caretakers of live stock, poultry and fruit;
"to employes on sleeping cars, express cars, and to linemen of telegraph and telephone companies;
"to railway mail service employes, postoffice inspectors, custom inspectors and immigration inspectors;
"to newsboys on trains, baggage agents, witnesses attending any legal investigation in which the railroad is interested, persons injured in wrecks and physicians and nurses attending such persons."

The above general provision purports on its face to give a complete list of all classes of persons whom the railroads may allow to ride free. This law is found in the chapter on the "Public Service Commission" (now the public utilities commission.) Title 5 of the General Code provides for "Public Schools," and chapter 2 of said title has the heading "Colleges and Universities" under which the subheading, beginning with section 7942, is "The Ohio State University."

Section 7973 and 7974 under said heading provide for the college of agriculture and domestic science and for the extension of its teachings throughout the state, authorizing it to hold schools in which instructions in agriculture, etc., are given: and section 7974 provides for giving instructions and demonstrations in various lines of agriculture at fairs, granges, etc., for the purpose of extending agricultural knowledge, and concludes as follows:

"Any common carrier is authorized and empowered to carry the persons employed by, and the equipment and exhibits used in such instruction and demonstrations, free, or at reduced rates."

Both sections 7974 and 516 are given in the General Code as statutes still in force. As stated in the communication from the attorney for the public utilities commission, section 516 G. C. was enacted after the other and, if there is any necessary conflict between the two, takes precedence. The universal rule, however, is that repeals by implication are not favored, and if it be possible, or at least fairly practicable, to give effect to both of two provisions apparently in conflict, such construction will be adopted as will do so.

"Ut res magis valeat quam pereat."

It is first important to determine whether they are really in conflict, or whether any of the exceptions contained in section 516, above, may be construed to include the persons engaged in this agricultural extension work. Such persons should clearly not be included unless they come under the designation "engaged in charitable and eleemosynary work." The words "charitable" and "eleemosynary" are frequently, if not generally, used in law as synonymous or interchangeable, and have a broader signification than is implied in the general use of the word "charity," which is commonly employed to indicate assistance to the needy. Eleemosynary and charitable institutions, or eleemosynary and charitable statutes or provisions in wills are held to include, generally speaking, all those things that are for public benefit as contra-distinguished from private or public gain.

A discussion of this meaning is found in People ex rel. Ellert v. Cogswell, 113 Cal. 149. See opinion of Henshaw, J.

In this sense it is commonly held to include institutions of learning and would undoubtedly include the persons and agencies engaged in this agricultural extension work if used in such sense. It is rendered doubtful, however, from the connection in which it is here found whether it has this extended meaning or not. It is found in direct connection with terms applying to charity in its more restricted signification. It is, however, of some consequence as indicating to some extent the scope of the legislative intention in connection with the other statute this is to be construed with this. This section being for the purpose of securing equality of all persons in the use of railroads or conducing thereto is shown by the particular exception under discussion not to be framed on such narrow lines as to be unmindful of other public interests and aims.

Section 7974, if affected at all by the enactment of section 516, is not entirely repealed; passengers only are included, and the permission to carry equipment and exhibits is left unrevoked, leaving only the question whether the provision for carrying such passengers is repealed by implication. As indicated above, it seems not to be so repealed.

Many pertinent statements in reference to the subject of repeal by implication and the giving of force and effect to different statutes upon the same subject are to be found in all the states. We will quote from the syllabus of one of these cases, viz.: City of Birmingham v. Express Company, 164 Ala. 529:

> "7. It is only where two statutes are so repugnant to each other that it must be presumed that the legislature intended that the latter should repeal the former, that a repeal by implication exists, and where there is a reasonable field of operation for both under a just construction, both will be given effect.
> "8. Special provisions relating to specific subjects control general provisions relating to general subjects, and things especially treated are considered as exceptions to the general provisions.
> "9. Where a specific subject has been explicitly provided for by law, it is not considered repealed by a subsequent law dealing with a general subject in a general way, though the specific subject may be included in the general subject."

The question of interpretation of statutes is simply a question of arriving at the legislative intent. The legislature in the enactment of section 7974 expressed a very strong intent toward furthering this agricultural extension work. There is no reason to suppose that in the subsequent enactment of section 516 they had at all in mind this subject and sought to withdraw the privilege given for its advancement, but, on the contrary, were dealing with railroads exclusively as such. There has been no revulsion of opinion upon the subject of advancement of agriculture. On the contrary, it is something which has had a gradual and steady growth, and continually found more favor in legislation. There is no difficulty in giving effect to both these statutes by leaving section 7954 stand as an additional exception to the general provision of section 516. Since there is no entire repeal by implication, the carrying of accessories not being prohibited, it comes within the letter and also the reason of section 9 of the syllabus in Birmingham v. Express Company, supra.

It is, therefore, unnecessary to advert to the third expedient suggested in your inquiry, and unnecessary that any indirection be resorted to, and you are advised that a railroad company may, if it be willing, transport free, or at such reduced rates as it sees fit, the persons engaged and equipment used in such agricultural extension work.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TAX LEVIES—UNDER SECTION 7419 G. C. CAN ONLY BE MADE IN EXCESS OF THE LIMITATIONS OF THE SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW IN CASES OF EMERGENCIES—A REFUNDER OF ILLEGAL TAXES CANNOT BE MADE BY AUDITOR WHEN SAME ARE VOLUNTARILY PAID—MAY BE MADE WHEN A JUDGMENT OR FINAL ORDER HAS BEEN MADE BY A COURT OF COMPETENT JURISDICTION ADJUDGING THE PARTICULAR LEVY ILLEGAL.

Taxes levied by the commissioners of a county under section 7419 of the General Code for the construction and repair of certain principal highways therein, which taxes are illegal because made in excess of the limitations of the Smith one per cent. law and not made for the emergencies mentioned in said section as the same are defined by the supreme court in the case of State ex rel. Menning v. Zangerle, No. 15351, may not be remitted, nor when paid refunded, under the provisions of sections 2588, 2588-1 and 2589 of the General Code; nor as to such taxes paid voluntarily is there any authority given to refund by the provisions of sections 12075, 12076 and 12077 of the General Code.

Under sections 5624-10 and 5624-11 of the General Code the tax commission of Ohio is authorized to remit illegal taxes as have been extended on the duplicate for collection, but not yet paid; but this section does not authorize the tax commission or any other authority to refund such illegal taxes as have been paid.

Under section 12078-1 of the General Code a refunder of such illegal taxes may be made when a judgment or final order has been made by a court of competent jurisdiction adjudging the particular levy of such taxes to be illegal when such judgment is made in an action to which appeal or error has not been prosecuted, or, if prosecuted, such proceedings on appeal or error are no longer pending, and such judgment is not made in time to prevent the collection of such illegal taxes.

HELD: That the judgment of the supreme court in the case of Staley, Auditor, v. State ex rel. Hunt, et al., No. 15327, adjudging a levy made by the commissioners of Miami county under section 7419 of the General Code for the construction and repair of certain principal highways in said county to be illegal because made in excess of the limitations of the Smith one per cent. law and not made for the emergencies mentioned in said section authorizes a refunder of taxes paid under said levy.

HELD, further, that neither the judgment of the supreme court in the case of State ex rel. Menning v. Zangerle, nor the judgment of the said court in the case of Staley, Auditor, v. State ex rel. Hunt, et al. is a judgment or final order within the meaning of section 12078-1 authorizing a refunder of taxes paid in other counties under levies made by the county commissioners of said county under section 7419 of the General Code even though such levies may be illegal for the reasons noted by the supreme court in the decision of the above cited cases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 17, 1917.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your favor of January 31, 1917, asking opinion, in which you say:

> "Your attention is respectfully directed to the following cases in the supreme court:

"State ex rel. Joseph Menning v. John A. Zangerle, County Auditor, No. 15,361.

"Mahlon P. Staley, Auditor, v. The State, ex rel., No. 15,327.

"Copy of the first named decision is enclosed for your convenience.

"After the court of appeals of Miami county held the levy for road repairs under section 7419 G. C. to be a legal emergency levy outside of all limitations of the one per cent. law, the auditor of said county, pursuant to a resolution of the board of county commissioners, levied a tax of 1.4 mills for the year 1916 on all the taxable property of said county as an emergency levy under said section, and outside of the limitations of the one per cent. law.

"The December collection of taxes is about finished; most of the tax payers of said county have paid the first half of their taxes, and some, no doubt, have paid both halves thereof, including this illegal rate, and the county auditor asks instructions as to remitting and refunding the illegal taxes so assessed and collected.

"Please give the commission your opinion as to his powers and duties in the matter."

In the supreme court decisions above referred to the court had under immediate consideration the provisions of section 5649-4, General Code, a part of the Smith one per cent. law, and section 7419 General Code, which read as follows:

"Sec. 5649-4. For the emergencies mentioned in sections forty-four hundred and fifty, forty-four hundred and fifty-one, fifty-six hundred and twenty-nine, seventy-four hundred and nineteen and 7630-1 of the General Code, the taxing authorities of any district may levy a tax sufficient to provide therefor irrespective of any of the limitations of this act.

"Sec. 7419. When one or more of the principal highways of a county, or part thereof, have been destroyed or damaged by freshet, landslide, wear of watercourses, or other casualty, or, by reason of the large amount of traffic thereon or from neglect or inattention to the repair thereof, have become unfit for travel or cause difficulty, danger or delay to teams passing thereon, and the commissioners of such county are satisfied that the ordinary levies authorized by law for such purposes will be inadequate to provide money necessary to repair such damages, or to remove obstructions from, or to make the changes or repairs in, such road or roads as are rendered necessary from the causes herein enumerated, they may annually thereafter levy a tax at their June session, not exceeding five mills upon the dollar upon all taxable property of the county, to be expended under their direction or by the employment of labor and the purchase of materials in such manner as may seem to them most advantageous to the interest of the county, for the construction, reconstruction or repair and maintenance of such road or roads or part thereof."

The supreme court in these decisions held that county commissioners were without authority to make a tax levy under sections 7419 General Code, in excess of the limitations prescribed in the Smith one per cent law for the purpose of constructing or repairing principal highways of the county, when the conditions calling for the construction or repair of such highways arose merely from neglect or inattention in the repair thereof or by reason of the large amount of traffic thereon, and did not arise by reason of freshet, landslide or other casualty.

The second, third and fourth syllabi of the opinion of the court in the first case noted by you read as follows:

"2. Section 5649-4, General Code, is not a legislative declaration that all the conditions enumerated in section 7419 General Code, are emergencies for which taxes may be levied in excess of the limitation prescribed.

"3. Exemption from the restriction fixed by such law applies only in favor of levies required to meet extraordinary conditions resulting from some unexpected or unforseen occurrence or circumstances, such as the destruction of or damage to a principal highway by freshet, landslide, wear of watercourses or other casualty.

"4. Neglect or inattention of public officers to repair highways does not constitute an emergency, and a levy of taxes for the purpose of meeting the expense of reconstruction, repair and maintenance of roads which, by reason of such neglect and inattention, or by reason of a large amount of traffic thereon, have become gradually worn out and unfit for travel, even though they cause difficulty, danger or delay, is not exempt as an emergency levy. Writ refused."

Tax levies having been made by the county commissioners in a number of counties of the state as emergency levies under section 7419 General Code, under circumstances considered and held by the supreme court in the above cases not to justify such tax levies as levies in excess of the limitations prescribed by the Smith one per cent. law, the question made by you, I take it, is one of legal ways and means to effect a correction of the tax duplicates and to provide for a refund with respect to such taxes so levied, or portions thereof, which under the decision of the supreme court above referred to are illegal. For it is to be noted that the supreme court in these cases did not hold that the county commissioners of a county could not legally make a levy under section 7419 General Code, to construct or repair highways which were out of repair by reason of neglect, inattention or excessive traffic, but the court did hold that the county commissioners could not make such levies in excess of the limitations prescribed by sections 5649-3a and 5649-2 General Code, which, with respect to the question at hand, provide, respectively, that levies on the taxable property in the county, for county purposes, shall not in any one year exceed three mills, and that the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county, township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district therein, shall not in any one year exceed ten mills. And only to the extent that the levies here in question are in excess of either or both of the tax limitations prescribed by sections 5649-3a and 5649-2 General Code were they illegal.

To illustrate: If in any particular county the levy made by the county commissioners for highway construction or repair under section 7419 General Code, though declared by them to be in excess of all limitations of the Smith one per cent. law, was together with all other levies for county purposes properly within the purview of section 5649-3a—in fact within the three mill limitation prescribed by that section—such levy would be illegal in any particular taxing district within the county only to the extent that it was in excess of the limitation prescribed by section 5649-2. On the other hand, if in any particular taxing district in the county this levy, together with all other levies within the purview of section 5649-2, was not in excess of the ten mill limitation prescribed by this section, it would be illegal only to the extent that it, together with all other levies for county purposes properly within the compass of section 5649-3a, was in excess of the three mill limitation of that section.

The foregoing discussion is only for the purpose of defining the question presented, for the fact that the levies in question were expressly declared by the county commissioners to be in excess of the limitations of the Smith one per cent law makes it altogether probable that such levies were in fact in excess at least of the three mill limitation for county purposes prescribed by section 5649-3a, General Code.

In the consideration of the precise question made by you, in which you ask the opinion of this department with respect to the power and authority of the county auditor or other county officers to remit taxes illegally levied by the county commissioners. for the construction and improvement of highways under the presumed authority of section 7419 General Code, and to refund such thereof as has been paid, it seems clear that no such authority can be found in the more or less familiar provisions of sections 2588, 2588-1 and 2589 General Code.

Section 2588-1 General Code which was enacted as a part of the Parrett-Whittemore tax law (106 O. L. 246), in terms provides that the county auditor shall, from time to time, correct any clerical errors which he discovers in the tax list, in the name of the person charged with taxes, the valuation, description or quantity of any tract, lot or parcel of land or improvements thereon, or minerals or mineral rights therein, or in the valuation of any personal property, or when property exempt from taxation has been listed therein, and that he shall enter such corrections upon the tax list and duplicate.

Sections 2588 and 2589 General Code, which were formerly a part of section 1038 Revised Statutes, have by a uniform line of decisions been held to authorize corrections of the tax duplicate and, when paid, a refunder thereof only as to taxes assessed on exempt property or extended on the duplicate by reason of clerical errors, as distinguished from fundamental errors, in the levy and assessment of taxes.

State ex rel. v. Commissioners, 31 O. S. 271, 273;
Insurance Co. v. Capellar, 38 O. S. 560, 574;
Butler v. Commissioners, 39 O. S. 168;
State v. Raine, 47 O. S. 447, 456;
Commissioners v. Rosche, 50 O. S. 103, 112;
Christ v. Commissioners, 13 N. P., n. s., 457.

As observed by the court in the case of State v. Raine, supra, an error does not have to be merely one occurring in copy or in computation to be a "clerical error" within the meaning of these sections, and it was there held that reductions made in the value of real property by a board of equalization, without a corresponding increase made by such board in other property, were errors which the county auditor could correct under the provisions of what is now section 2588 General Code.

On the authority of the decision of the supreme court in the case of State v. Raine, supra, the circuit court of Cuyahoga county, in the case of Brooks v. Lander, 14 C. C. n. s., 481, held that a decision of the supreme court which ousted the board of equalization and assessment in the city of Cleveland authorized the county auditor to thenceforth treat as clerical errors the changes which had been made in the tax duplicate pursuant to the order of said board, and to correct them in accordance with the current duplicate.

I am unable to hold that the decisions just noted support the conclusion that the taxes here in question were assessed and collected by reason of any clerical error on the part of any officer or officers within the meaning of sections 2588 and 2589 General Code. The levy of these taxes in excess of the limitations prescribed by law was erroneous, but the error was one of law and fundamental inuring in the levy itself.

See Commissioners v. Rosche, supra.

The question presented by you further suggests the consideration of sections 12075, 12076 and 12077 of the General Code. Taxes paid on the levies here in question, to the extent that such levies exceeded the limitations of sections 5649-3a and 5649-2 General Code, were, I assume, illegal within the meaning of these sections. These sections, however, do not afford any authority to the auditor or other county officers either to correct the duplicate with respect to such illegal levies or to remit taxes on such levies remaining unpaid. Neither do they seem to afford any right by action to recover back against the county, or any officers thereof in their official capacity, taxes that have been paid on such levies. The right of action afforded for the recovery of illegal taxes paid by a tax payer seems to be solely a personal action against the treasurer individually. Even if, however, on any view, these sections could be construed as affording a right of action against the county, or officers thereof in their official capacity, for the recovery back of illegal taxes paid by a tax payer, I apprehend with respect to the situation here presented that practically all the taxes paid on the levies here in question were paid voluntarily, and that such payments do not, therefore, furnish a legal ground of recovery against any one.

May v. Cincinnati, 1 O. S. 268;
Marietta v. Slocumb, 6 O. S. 471;
Wilson v. Pelton, 40 O. S. 306;
Whitbeck v. Minsch, 48 O. S. 210;
Commissioners v. Rosche, supra;
Railway Co. v. Martin, 53 O. S. 386.

As the payment of taxes on these illegal levies does not constitute a legal claim against the county for the repayment thereof, I do not know of any authority following the consideration of these sections by which the officers of the county, or any of them, can refund the taxes so paid. It has been held in this state that county commissioners—and I apprehend the same is true of other officers of the county—represent the county in respect to its financial affairs only so far as authority is given to them by statute, and that they may pass upon and adjudicate only such claims which, under the statutes, may be the subject of a legal claim against the county, and that they are without jurisdiction to entertain or adjudicate claims which are either wholly illegal or of such a nature as not to form the subject of a valid claim for any amount.

Jones, Auditor, v. Commissioners, 57 O. S. 189;
Peter v. Parkinson, 83 O. S. 36;
State v. Lewis, 20 C. C. 319.

Sections 5624-10 and 5624-11 of the General Code, enacted as a part of the Parrett-Whittemore bill, are identical in their provisions with those of sections 5617-4 and 5617-5 of the General Code which were repealed in the enactment of the Warnes tax law. Said sections 5624-10 and 5624-11 of the General Code read as follows:

"Sec. 5624-10. The tax commission of Ohio may remit taxes and penalties thereon, found by it to have been illegally assessed, and such penalties as have accrued or may accrue, in consequence of the negligence or error of an officer required to perform a duty relating to the assessment of property for taxation, or the levy or collection of taxes. It may correct an error in an assessment of property for taxation or in the tax list or duplicate of taxes in a county, but its power under this section shall not extend to taxes levied under the provisions of subdivision 2 of chapter 15 of title 2, part second of the General Code.

"Sec. 5624-11. No such taxes, assessments or penalties in excess of one hundred dollars, shall, in any case, be remitted until after ten days' notice in writing of the application to have same remitted has been served upon the prosecuting attorney and the county auditor of the county where such taxes or assessments were levied and proof of such service has been filed with the commission. When any taxes or penalties have been remitted as provided in this and the next preceding section, the commission shall make a report thereof to the auditor of state."

The provisions of these sections do not call for an extended discussion. It is plain from these provisions that, except as to taxes assessed on the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors, authority is granted to the tax commission to remit taxes illegally assessed, and in their application to the question at hand, these provisions authorize the tax commission to remit unpaid taxes extended and now standing on the county tax duplicate by reason of illegal levies made by the county commissioners of said county under section 7419 of the General Code.

There is nothing, however, in the provisions of the sections under consideration authorizing a refunder of the taxes paid on such illegal levy. The question presented by you requires a consideration of the provisions of section 12078-1 of the General Code, which reads as follows:

"That if, by judgment or final order of any court of competent jurisdiction in this state, in an action not pending on appeal or error it has been or shall be adjudged and determined that any taxes or assessments or part thereof levied after January 1, 1910, was illegal and such judgment or order has not been made or shall not be made in time to prevent the collection or payment of such tax or assessment, then such tax or assessment or such part thereof as shall at the time of such judgment or order be then unexpended and in the possession of the officer collecting the same, shall be repaid and refunded to the person paying such tax or assessment by the officer having the same in his possession."

The proper construction of the provisions of these sections in their application to the situation of facts presented by your inquiries is a matter of some difficulty. It will be observed, however, from the provisions of these sections that before a tax payer can have a refunder of taxes paid by him, there must be a judgment or final order of a court of competent jurisdiction in this state in an action not pending on appeal or error adjudging and determining said taxes so paid by him to be illegal, which judgment or final order shall not have been made in time to prevent the collection of such illegal taxes.

In the case of Menning v. Zangerle, above noted, which was an original action in mandamus in the supreme court, the court had before it for consideration only the levy made by the county commissioners of Cuyahoga county under the assumed authority of section 7419 of the General Code, which levy the county commissioners of said county in said action sought to compel the county auditor to extend for collection on the tax duplicate of the county. The court in this case denied the petition for a writ of mandamus on the ground that the said levy was illegal and the same was not, therefore, placed on the tax duplicate. The supreme court in this case did not decide that the board of county commissioners of a county may not in any event make a levy for taxes under section 7419 of the General Code in excess of the limitations of the Smith law, but did decide that such levy could be made in excess of the limitations of the Smith law only when the conditions calling for such levy for the purpose of constructing or repairing principal highways in a county were caused by some one or more of the things mentioned in said section 7419 of the General Code, which were the occasions of real emergencies.

The decision of the supreme court in this case, therefore, although affording a binding rule as to the construction of the statutes therein involved and considered, was not itself an adjudication with respect to the levy made by the commissioners of the other counties under section 7419 General Code, though made in excess of the limitations of the Smith law. The question with respect to the legality or illegality of such levy in other counties obviously depends in each case upon the facts with respect to the conditions calling for and actuating the county commissioners in making such levy. It follows, therefore, that the judgment of the supreme court in the case of State ex rel. Menning vs. Zangerle, though made by a court of competent jurisdiction in this state in an action not pending on appeal or error is not a judgment or final order which, under the provisions of section 12078-1, affords to the tax payers in other counties of the state a right to a refunder for taxes paid by them under illegal levies made by the county commissioners of such county under section 7419.

The case of Staley, Auditor, v. State ex rel. Hunt et al., referred to by you, was an action wherein the supreme court on petition in error reversed a judgment of the court of appeals of Miami county which affirmed a judgment of the common pleas court of said county, sustaining the petition of the commissioners for a writ of mandamus against Staley, the county auditor, requiring him to extend on the tax duplicate for collection a levy made by said county commissioners under section 7419 in excess of the limitations of the Smith law. Although the condition calling for the levy made by the commissioners of Miami county was not occasioned by a freshet, landslide or other casualty, said levy was held by the common pleas court to be legal, and entertaining the same view with respect to the legality of this levy the court of appeals on April 18, 1916, affirmed the judgment of the common pleas court. On January 30, 1917, the supreme court, on authority of the case of State ex rel. Menning v. Zangerle, reversed the judgment of the court of appeals of Miami county and thereby held the levy made by the county commissioners of said county to be illegal. It, therefore, appears that within the purview of section 12078-1 the judgment of the supreme court in the case of Staley, Auditor, v. State ex rel. Zangerle, was a judgment or final order of a court of competent jurisdiction in this state adjudging and determining the levy made by the commissioners of Miami county to be illegal, which judgment and final order was not in time to prevent the collection of such illegal taxes, and the only question with respect to the right of tax payers in Miami county to a refunder of such illegal taxes paid by them depends upon the question of whether or not the judgment and final order of the supreme court was a judgment within the meaning of said language as used in section 12078-1.

> "in an action not pending on appeal or error,"

This language as used in section 12078-1 seems to be open to two possible interpretations:

1. That the action in which the judgment or final order is made shall not be an action pending on appeal or error in the court rendering such judgment; and

2. That such judgment or final order shall be made by a court in an action to which appeal or error has not been prosecuted; or if prosecuted is no longer pending.

Looking to the purpose of the statute as a whole it seems to me that the intent of the legislature in using the language above quoted was to require a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction before the right of a tax payer to a refunder of such illegal taxes by him paid has accrued, and consistent with the purpose of this section, and giving effect to the language used by the court in its enactment, I cannot believe that it was the intent of the legislature to limit such right of refunder on the payment of illegal taxes to judgments or final orders made and entered by a court in the exercise of original jurisdiction only.

Giving effect to the manifest purpose of these provisions, before noted, it seems clear that a judgment of the supreme court in the exercise of its appellate jurisdiction adjudging and determining a tax to be illegal is just as effective when made after such illegal tax is collected to afford a right of refunder to a tax payer paying such illegal tax as would be a judgment or final order of the court of common pleas of a county in the exercise of its original jurisdiction.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the judgment of the supreme court in the case of Staley, Auditor, v. State ex rel. Hunt et al., above noted, is a judgment or final order which, under the provisions of section 12078-1 affords to a tax payer of Miami county paying illegal taxes on said levy made by the commissioners of the county under the provisions of section 7419 a right to a refund of such illegal taxes paid by him if such illegal taxes so paid have not been expended. These taxes were collected for county purposes only, and though they have probably been distributed to the proper funds they may be refunded if they have not been expended and are in the possession of the county treasurer.

I hardly need to say that as in the case of State ex rel Menning v. Zangerle, before discussed, the court in the case of Staley, Auditor, v. State ex rel. Hunt et al., had before it for consideration only the particular levy there involved, and the judgment of the court affords no right to a refunder of illegal taxes of the same kind in other counties.

In conclusion I note that section 301 of the Cass road law, one of the curative sections of the said act, has been carried into the Page and Adams supplement to the General Code as section 12078-1. This section, among other things, provides for a right of refunder for taxes or assessments paid for particular roads theretofore constructed or improved or ordered to be constructed or improved. Without discussing the provisions of this section of the Cass road law it is sufficient to note that it was not intended to cover a case of the kind presented by your inquiry.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—MAY COMPROMISE CLAIM DUE IT.

A board of education may compromise a claim justly and legally due it.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 17, 1917.

HON. CHARLES G. WHITE, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of March 14, 1917, you ask my opinion on the following proposition:

> "The bank at New Richmond, Ohio, through its cashier, was forced to go in the hands of a receiver and at the time it was the depository of New Richmond school district. The bank gave a bond as is required by law, but gave personal security with seven men on the bond, all but two of whom were considered to be worth the full amount of the same, but since the crash came three of the signers have gone into bankruptcy, the cashier has died without a cent, one of the others has been entirely broken up and the other two could not, if pushed, pay very much. By arranging a compromise with their creditors, two of the securities can and will pay more than could be collected from them by a suit, and the board of education are more than willing to accept this settlement if they have the legal right so to do. Therefore, my specific question is, can the board of education under the powers conferred upon them by section 4749 of the General Code, or otherwise, compromise this matter with these two men without bringing a suit, which at this time would jeopardize their chances of recovering anything like they will get under this settlement?"

General Code section 4749 provides in part as follows:

"The board of education of each school district * * * shall be a body politic and corporate, and, as such, capable of suing and being sued, contracting and being contracted with, inquiring, holding, possessing and disposing of real and personal property. * * *"

A board of education is made by law the governing power of a school district and all the financial transactions thereof. It is clothed with authority to do whatever is necessary in its corporate capacity to carry out the intention of those in authority in the management and control of the public schools. It is permitted to make all necessary and proper arrangements for conducting the schools and for the raising of money with which to conduct the same, to build buildings, furnish and equip same and in fact to do generally those things necessary that the public schools might be the necessary and useful institutions which they are claimed to be. The power to sue and be sued ordinarily carries with it the power to compromise and be compromised with, but it might be well to determine just what the word "compromise" means, implies or includes.

Bouvier says:

"A compromise is an agreement made between two or more parties as a settlement of a matter in dispute."

Cyc., page 505 (Vol. 8), says:

"A valid compromise may be made by any parties between whom a controversy as to their respective rights exist and who are not under any disability to contract."

The American and English Encyclopedia of Law, Vol. 6, page 418, perhaps uses language a little more applicable here than either of the above definitions, to wit:

"Compromise has been defined as an agreement between two or more persons, who, to avoid a law suit, amicably settle their differences on such terms as they can agree upon."

In all the above definitions the principle of entering into a contract or an agreement is manifest, and in section 4749 G. C. the especial power to contract and be contracted with is given to a board of education. There is some law, however, in Ohio which tends toward a solution of this matter.

In Board of Education v. Milligan, 51 O. S. 115, the treasurer of a school district defaulted and instead of the board of education bringing suit upon the bond, the board brought suit directly against the treasurer on account. On page 116 the court uses the following language:

> "The board of education is by statute made a legal entity, empowered to sue and be sued. The money detained belonged to it and it had the right to recover same. The remedy is not limited to an action on the bond. It may sue a defaulting treasurer for money had and received, as was done in this case."

In Ohio ex rel., etc., v. Treasurer, etc., 22 O. S. 144, the court, on page 147, uses the following language:

> "The township board of education is by statute constituted a body politic and corporate, and as such is authorized to contract and be contracted with, to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded with, in any of the courts of the state. They are invested, in their corporate capacity, with the title, care, and custody of all school houses, school house sites, school libraries, apparatus, or other property belonging to the school district within the limits of their jurisdiction, with full power to control the same in such manner as they may think will best subserve the interests of common schools and the cause of education."

There is some similarity between the language of the General Code, which confers powers upon boards of education, and the language of the General Code which confers powers upon boards of county commissioners. By General Code section 2408 a board of county commissioners may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, maintain and defend all suits in law and in equity, and do generally those things which are necessary to preserve and protect the property of the county.

In construing the language of said section the court held in Shanklin, et al. v. Commissioners, 21 O. S. 583:

> "It may be laid down as a general rule that the board of county commissioners is clothed with authority to do whatever the corporate or political entity, the county, might, if capable of rational action, except in respect to matters the cognizance of which is exclusively vested in some other officer or person. Only what the county might not do, it may not, except as aforesaid. It is, in an enlarged sense, the representative and guardian of the county, having the management and control of its financial interests.
> "It cannot be contended that the county, if capable to act, might not, in any lawful way, adjust and accept satisfaction of a liability justly and legally due to it."

With same force, then, it seems to me it should be argued that the board of education can, under the powers granted it, adjust and accept satisfaction of a liability justly and legally due it—and why should this not be so? The property from which recovery is to be had might be of such a nature that without prompt acting, serious loss and injury would result. If such were the case, is it to be presumed that the legislature, using language of the strength of that used, in that part of section 4749 above quoted, intended to limit the authority of the board to certain classes of contracts and simply because power was not specifically granted to compromise that the board would be seriously injured financially? We think not.

I prefer to believe that the legislature intended, when it used the language "to sue and be sued" and "to contract and be contracted with," to convey upon the board of education full and complete power to do whatever was necessary to be done to best subserve the interests of the common schools, and as you state in your letter that money can be saved by compromising, I can see no reason why the board of education, even though it is a body of limited powers, cannot compromise said claim and thus save money for the tax payers of the district.

Holding the above views, then, I advise you that the board of education can, under the powers conferred upon it by section 4749 G. C., compromise a claim which, but for such compromise, jeopardizes its chance of recovering thereon.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS DAY—HOLIDAY ONLY FOR PURPOSE OF COMPUTING TIME IN REFERENCE TO PAYMENT AND PROTESTING COMMERCIAL PAPER.

Held: Columbus day is not a holiday for all purposes, but is only a holiday for the purpose of computing time in reference to payment and protesting of commercial paper.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1917.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication February 26, 1917, as follows:

> "I have been asked as to whether or not October 12, popularly known as Columbus day, is a legal holiday.
> "An investigation of the statutes in referance to legal holidays indicates that section 8301 is the principal section on that subject. That section provides that New Year's day, Washington's birthday, Memorial day, Independence day, Labor day, Columbus day, Christmas day and Thanksgiving day are holidays 'for the purpose of this division.' The division referred to is the one dealing with negotiable instruments.
> "This would seem to indicate that these days were made holidays merely for the purpose of computing time in reference to payment and protesting of commercial paper.
> "The only other sections creating legal holidays are sections 5976, 5977 and 5978 which makes election day a part holiday, Labor day a full holiday and Saturday afternoons a holiday.
> "It is generally believed that New Year's day, Christmas day, Memorial day and the other days are by statute made full and complete holidays, but unless there are other provisions of the statute which make them so, it would seem that this is an erroneous notion.
> "Since this is a matter of state-wide interest, I call it to your attention so that I may have the benefit of your opinion."

Section 8301 provides as follows:

"Section 8301. The following days, viz.:
"1. The first day of January, known as New Year's day;
"2. The twenty-second day of February, known as Washington's birthday;
"3. The thirtieth day of May, known as Decoration or Memorial day;
"4. The fourth day of July, known as Independence day;
"5. The first Monday of September known as Labor day;
"6. The twelfth day of October, known as Columbus Discovery day;
"7. The twenty-fifth day of December, known as Christmas day;
"8. Any day appointed and recommended by the governor of this state or the president of the United States as a day of fast or thanksgiving and
"9. Any day which may hereafter be made a legal holiday, shall for the purpose of this division, be holidays. But if the first day of January, the twenty-second day of February, the thirtieth day of May, the fourth day of July, or the twenty-fifth day of December be the first day of the week, known as Sunday the next succeeding secular or business day shall be a holiday."

The above quoted section provides that the days enumerated therein "shall for the purposes of this division, be holidays." The only thing to determine then in answering your question is, what is meant by the phrase "for the purpose of this division."

This section of the statute, since its enactment, has always been connected with the act dealing with negotiable instruments. It might be well in this connection to trace the history of the act creating negotiable instruments. The first act on this subject was passed Nov. 15, 1799, found in volume 2, Laws of the North Western Territory and entitled an act, making promissory notes and inland bills of exchange negotiable. After this original act had been amended several times an act was passed March 26, 1861, 58 O. L. 41 entitled an act supplementary to "an act making certain instruments of writing negotiable, passed February 25, 1820."

This act after setting forth a certain number of days therein, provided they shall, for all purposes whatsoever as regards the presentment for payment or acceptance and the protesting or giving notice of nonacceptance, etc., of negotiable paper, be holidays. This act was later amended by the passage of the so-called uniform negotiable instruments act, passed April 17, 1902, 95 O. L. 197. The section providing for holidays was carried into said act as subdivision 5.

The history of the law showing, as it does, the connection of the provision relative to holidays and the act making certain instruments negotiable, I think it was the intention of the framers of this law that the holiday provision should be read only in connection with the act relating to negotiable instrument, and that the only construction that can be placed upon the phrase "for the purpose of this division" is, that the holidays enumerated in section 8301 are holidays merely for the purpose of computing time in reference to payment and protesting of commercial paper.

Section 5977 G. C. provides as follows:

"Section 5977. The first Monday in September of each year shall be known as 'Labor day,' and for all purposes, shall be considered as the first day of the week."

You will note that in section 8301 the first Monday in September, commonly known as Labor day, is mentioned with the other days as a holiday for the purpose of that division and it is specifically provided in section 5977 as a holiday "for all purposes." It is my opinion, therefore, had it been the intention of the legislature that Columbus day and the other days mentioned in section 8301 should be holidays for all purposes they would have been specifically provided for in the same manner as Labor day.

Therefore, I advise you that Columbus day is not a holiday for all purposes, but is only a holiday for the purpose of computing time in reference to payment and protesting of commercial paper.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

THE QUESTION OF WHETHER OR NOT A COUNTY WILL BE ABLE TO PAY ITS SHARE FOR A PROPOSED ROAD IMPROVEMENT DEPENDS ON WHETHER THE LEVY FOR SAID IMPROVEMENT, TOGETHER WITH THE OTHER LEVIES, CAN BE KEPT WITHIN FIFTEEN MILLS LIMITATION.

Whether a county will be in position to assume its portion of the cost and expense of improving a highway, depends upon the question whether the levy necessary to be made to provide the portion of the cost and expense of the townships through which the highway passes and the county, together with other levies provided by law, can be kept within the statutory limitation of 15 mills, not considering emergency levies.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 9, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to a certain matter set out therein. Your communication reads as follows:

> "I am attaching hereto copy of a resolution dated February 8, 1917, signed by two of the members of the board of commissioners of Muskingum county, making application for state aid and federal aid in the improvement of main market road No. IV, intercounty highway No. 1, in Muskingum county, and agreeing on behalf of the county that if the sum of $140,000.00 be secured from the state or federal government for the above improvement 'to meet the above amount of $140,000.00 or as much more as will be necessary for the improvement and construction of the above mentioned road between the corporation line of Zanesville and the west corporation line of New Concord.'
> "It has been and is my intention to expend a sum not to exceed $10,000 per mile in the improvement of the road requested by the commissioners, which improvement would approximate 14 miles, and I have contemplated that the funds to be expended on this improvement shall be the funds secured from the federal government under the federal aid road act and appropriated to the state of Ohio for the fiscal year 1917.
> "At a conference in my office at a recent date with two of the members of the board of commissioners of Muskingum county and the prosecuting attorney of that county, the question arose as to the ability of Muskingum county to take care or provide the necessary means of financing their share of the cost of this improvement. The state director of the Ohio good roads federation was called into the conference and stated to the commissioners, the prosecutor and myself that after a thorough investigation of the situation in Muskingum county and Washington, Perry and Union townships, through which the above improvement lies, the county would be unable this year to live up to any such agreement as is contained in the attached resolution.

"Before we proceed further with the preliminary steps necessary or leading up to final agreement with the commissioners of Muskingum county, and the assurance to the federal government that the necessary funds have been arranged for, and will be available to pay obligations, if incurred, it is necessary to know positively whether or not Muskingum county is in position and is able to place a levy that will come within the fifteen mill limitation to create a fund sufficiently large to meet its share of the obligation for the above mentioned improvement, which may be considered as anywhere from $140,000.00 to $200,000.00.

"Inasmuch as the matter is urgent and in doubt, I, therefore, request you to investigate the situation in Muskingum county and advise me accordingly."

To your communication is attached a resolution upon which the opinion asked in your communication is based. I will not set out in full the resolution, but simply note the parts of it that are vital in the consideration of the question proposed.

In the beginning I desire to say that the information you seek is based more upon fact than upon law, but I may be able to so quote the law in connection with the facts that it will assist you in arriving at a conclusion as to what you had best do under all of the circumstances.

Your question is as to whether Muskingum county is able to carry out the agreement set forth in the copy of the resolution attached to your communication. One clause of said resolution reads as follows:

"BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED, That upon the receipt of the letter or communication from the state highway commissioner of January 18, 1917, stating the state and federal government will furnish the sum of one hundred forty thousand ($140,000) dollars that the board of county commissioners for and upon behalf of Muskingum county hereby agrees for and upon behalf of said county to meet the above amount of $140,000.00 or as much more as will be necessary for the improvement and construction of the above mentioned road between the corporation line of Zanesville and the west corporation line of New Concord, Ohio, upon the following conditions:"

In this section the county commissioners of Muskingum county agree, for and on behalf of said county, to meet the above amount of $140,000.00, or as much more as will be necessary for the improvement and construction of the road mentioned therein, and in your letter you state that the amount to be borne by Muskingum county, if said road is constructed, would be somewhere between $140,000.00 and $200,000.00. Now, your question is as to whether, when we take into consideration the condition of the tax duplicates of the different taxing subdivisions, Muskingum county is in position to carry out its part of its agreement.

First, I will give you some information as to the facts in this matter. You state that this improvement passes through Perry township, Washington township and Union township of Muskingum county. This is an important fact inasmuch as the township through which the improvement passes will have the greater burden to bear for they will have to bear their share of the county's portion as well as their own portion of the cost and expense of the improvement.

The records for the year 1916 show that the tax rate in Union township proper is 14.8 mills; in New Concord village, which is within Union township, the tax rate for 1916 was 16.2 mills; in Norwich village the tax rate for 1916 was 13.2 mills; in Perry township in 1916 the tax rate was only 10.2 mills and in Washington township for the same year the tax rate was 10 mills, while Pleasant Grove school district, located within Washington township, had a rate of 11.04 mills for 1916. So that Washington township and Perry township could undoubtedly bear the extra burden incident to the construction of said proposed highway. But how Union township and its villages could assume the extra burden incident to said improvement I do not know. The records show that the tax rate of New Concord village has been uniformly high—in 1913, 15.6 mills; in 1914, 14 mills; in 1915, 14.4 mills, and in 1916, as stated above, 16.2 mills. Now this is the condition of the tax levies in the townships through which the improvement would pass.

It is important also to note the condition of the tax levies in other taxing subdivisions of the county because all of the property of the county will have to share in the county's portion of the expense and cost incident to said improvement. In 1916 Taylorsville village had a tax rate of 16.6 mills; Duncan Falls school district, 16.4 mills; Frazeysburg village, 15.2 mills; Zanesville city, 16 mills. It is true the subdivisions given have the highest rate of any taxing subdivisions in the county, but as we often say a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, so the county in this case is no stronger financially than its weakest subdivision.

To be sure I do not know what the financial situation of the different taxing subdivisions of Muskingum county will be for the year 1917, but their tax levies for the year 1916 would indicate that it would be almost impossible for the county and the different taxing subdivisions of the county to bear their share of the cost and expense incident to said improvement.

With the facts as set out above, and you can judge of the facts as well as I can and possibly better, let us note briefly the law that would apply in this case, in the event that you go ahead with said proposed improvement.

Section 5649-3a of the General Code provides that:

> "On or before the first Monday in June, each year, the county commissioners of each county, the council of each municipal corporation, the trustees of each township, each board of education * * * shall submit or cause to be submitted to the county auditor an annual budget, setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year."

Section 5649-3c G. C. provides that:

> "The budget commissioners shall examine such budgets and estimates prepared by the county auditor, and ascertain the total amount proposed to be raised in each taxing district for state, county, township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district purposes. If the budget commissioners find that the total amount of taxes to be raised therein does not exceed the amount authorized to be raised in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district in the county, the fact shall be certified to the county auditor. If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district in the county, the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, within the limits provided by law."

Now let us note in connection with the above two sections, the provisions that would have to be made by the county commissioners and township trustees to meet their respective portions of the cost and expense of the improvement.

Section 1222 of the General Code provides that the county commissioners, for the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the county's proportion of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter, are authorized to levy a tax, not exceeding one mill, upon all taxable property of the county.

In the same section it is provided that the township trustees are authorized to levy a tax, not exceeding two mills, upon all taxable property of the township in which such road improvement or some part thereof is situated, this for the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the proportion of the cost and expense to be paid by the township trustees.

Now it will be readily seen that the levies made by the different townships upon the property of the townships and the levy made by the county commissioners upon all of the property of the county, will come before the budget commissioners for an adjustment and that adjustment will have to bring the total levy within the 15 mill limitation, other than a few emergency levies, and from section 5649-3c G. C. the budget commission is given authority to reduce in amount any levy or levies so made by the trustees or commissioners or school board as to them may seem best. There seems to be no preference in law given to any particular levy.

Now you can see the difficulties with which the budget commissioners of Muskingum county will be confronted when we note that many of their subdivisions are already above the maximum limit, at least they were in 1916. Of course, as I said before, what their condition will be in 1917 I have no means of knowing.

But let us go one step further. Suppose that the county commissioners, under section 1223 of the General Code in anticipation of the collection of such taxes or the assessments to be made against the property owners, should decide to issue bonds. If this is done the county commissioners must, prior to the issuance of such bonds, provide for levying and collecting annually a tax upon all taxable property of the county to provide a sum sufficient to pay the interest on such bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity. Now suppose any one of the townships interested in this matter should fail to meet the levy necessary to meet their proportion of the cost and expense. Then, under the provision for levying and collecting annually a tax upon all taxable property of the county, the county commissioners would be compelled to raise a sum sufficient to take care of the interest on such bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity. In such a case the levy for the taking care of the bonds would necessarily take precedence over the levies for other purposes. So that the budget commissioners in making reductions of the different items submitted to them by any taxing subdivision would virtually be compelled to give precedence to the levy made for road purposes because if this is not taken care of under the regular levies made it will have to be taken care of under the agreement made by the county commissioners that they would levy a tax sufficient to take care of the bonds.

Now the above is about all the information I can give you both as to the facts and as to the law and you will have to be the judge in view of the condition of the tax duplicate of said county for 1916 and in view of the law as applied to said facts, as to whether the budget commissioners of Muskingum county could so reduce the different items as to bring the total tax levy for the different subdivisions of the county within the 15 mill limitation, this limitation not including of course a few levies for emergency purposes which may be outside of the 15 mill limitation.

While this opinion is not as definite as I should like to make it, yet it is as definite as I can make it due to the fact that your question embodies not only law, but facts as well.

Let me suggest also that the county auditor, before the final agreement is entered into between your department and the county, must certify that the moneys necessary for said improvement are in the treasury or are in process of collection.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—BY ACQUIRING PRIVATE RIGHT OF WAY MAKING DISTANCE FOR PUPILS TO TRAVEL LESS THAN TWO MILES—DOES NOT RELIEVE ITSELF FROM LIABILITY FOR TRANSPORTATION.

A board of education cannot exempt itself from liability for transportation of pupils by obtaining a right of way across private property which, if traveled by the pupils, would be less than two miles.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1917.

HON. E. E. LINDSAY, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 5, 1917, in which you ask my opinion on the following:

> "Section 7731 of the General Code and the opinions of your office relating thereto are to the effect that boards of education must provide transportation for pupils who reside more than two miles from the school house to which they are assigned, measured along the most direct public highway.
> "We have several instances in our county, where, by reason thereof, boards of education are required to transport pupils, yet such pupils live much less than two miles from such schools by crossing private premises.
> "Has a board of education the power to obtain a private right of way across private premises for such pupils where it can be done at a cost less than the costs of transportation, and thus avoid the costs of transportation or save money by so doing?"

In your inquiry you refer to section 7731 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "In all rural and village school districts where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school, the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such school. The transportation for pupils living less than two miles from the school house, by the most direct public highway shall be optional with the board of education. * * *"

The language used in that portion of the above section quoted, and particularly that part "by the most direct public highway" seems to eliminate any other route or course than by following the public highway and the construction placed upon the above section, and the other sections of the General Code which relate to the subject, convinces me that our courts take only this view of the matter.

In Board of Education v. Board of Education, 58 O. S. 390, the Coblentz children resided more than one and one-half miles (the distance mentioned by the statute then) from the school in the district of their residence, but said children lived less than that distance if measured in a direct line, and it was averred that the land owners along such direct line always permitted the children to follow it in attending school and that it was a convenient and practical route for them to travel. The court held:

> "Counsel for the plaintiff in error contend that the distance from residence to school is to be taken 'as the crow flies.' The courts below properly rejected this aerial view of the subject. The legislation provides for the convenience of children in attending school, and the distance is to be taken as they travel along the most direct public highway from the schoolhouse to the nearest portion of the curtilage of their residence."

In Board of Education v. Board of Education, 23 O. B. Rep. 698, the plaintiff seeks to recover from the defendant tuition for three pupils who resided less than one and one-half miles "as the crow flies," but the court held that whether the children go by public or private conveyance, or whether they walk to and from school, they are expected to go by the most direct and convenient highway, and the length of that course determines the distance from home to school; and following the ruling of the court, the distance from the home to the school was measured from the exit of the curtilage, along the most direct established route by lane or path to the nearest highway and then following the center line of the highway to the door of the schoolhouse.

The same view as above was taken by the court in Board of Education v. Board of Education, 15 O. N. P. (n. s.) 521, which last mentioned case was affirmed without opinion in 88 O. S.

I must therefore hold that the distance being measured by the most direct public highway route, the board of education has no power to deprive pupils of the means of conveyance if a private way could be obtained across private premises.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MEASUREMENT—OF DISTANCE FROM PUPIL'S HOME TO SCHOOL—MUST BE MADE ALONG HIGHWAY OPENED TO PUBLIC AND NOT SIMPLY DEDICATED AND PLATTED.

A public highway along which the measurement is made to calculate the distance from a pupil's home to school must be one opened to the public and not simply dedicated and platted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1917.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your inquiry of recent date you ask my opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "We should like to have your definition of a public highway which must be used in the interpretation of sections 7731 and 7735 G. C. The following facts have been certified to us by Henry C. Moffitt, of Cincinnati:
> "'There are a number of children living on Rhode Island Ave. and Ross Ave., East Bond Hill, who have been attending the Bond Hill school while bus transportation was provided for them by the board of education, but now that the bus line has been discontinued because of the advent of the street car, these children are left without transportation facilities. They want to go to the Norwood school which is much nearer for them and can be reached by made sidewalks, but according to the measurement of the distance from the Bond Hill school to the farthest point on the platted streets in the office of the county auditor, all of these children live within a mile and a half of the Bond Hill school. By a cut across the fields they are within possibly less than a mile from the school.'
> "Apparently the children mentioned above are within a mile and a half of the Bond Hill school by the public highway if by public highway is meant streets that are platted, but if by public highway is meant a passable road authorized for the use of the public, these children are not within a mile and a half of the Bond Hill school."

From my conservation with the assistant city solicitor of Cincinnati I learn that these platted streets are not "opened" to the public or improved and are impassable for public travel.

Several sections of the General Code pertinent to the above should be noted:

Section 7731 G. C. provides:

> "In all rural and village school districts where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such school. The transportation for pupils living less than two miles from the school house, by the most direct public highway shall be optional with the board of education. When transportation of pupils is provided, the conveyance must pass within one-half mile of the respective residences of all pupils, except when such residences are situated more than one-half mile from the public road. When local boards of education neglect or refuse to provide transportation for pupils the county board of education shall provide such transportation and the cost thereof shall be charged against the local school district."

Section 7733 G. C. provides:

> "At its option, the board of education in any village school district may provide for the conveyance of the pupils of the district or any adjoining district, to the school or schools of the district, the expense of conveyance to be paid from the school funds of the district in which such pupils reside. But such boards as so provide transportation, shall not be required to transport pupils living less than one mile from the school house or houses."

Section 7735 G. C. reads:

> "When pupils live more than one and one-half miles from the school to which they are assigned in the district where they reside, they may attend a nearer school in the same district, or if there be none nearer therein, then the nearest school in another school district, in all grades below the high school. In such cases the board of education of the district in which they reside must pay the tuition of such pupils without an agreement to that effect. But a board of education shall not collect tuition for such attendance until after notice thereof has been given to the board of education of the district where the pupils reside. Nothing herein shall require the consent of the board of education of the district where the pupils reside, to such attendance."

Your inquiry seeks a definition of a public highway as used in the interpretation of the above quoted sections of the General Code.

A public highway is defined by Webster's dictionary as follows:

> "A public road; a way open to all passengers."

and is defined in Sullivan v. Columbus, 12 Dec. Rep. 652;

> "The term highway is the generic term for all kinds of public ways, streets, alleys, etc."

A public highway, as referred to in the last mentioned case, is a public way which has been dedicated to public use, but a highway may be dedicated to public use and yet not be "opened" to the public and improved for public travel.

Section 7735 G. C. was formerly section 4022-a Revised Statutes and construction of the language thereof, and applicable to your question, was made by the court in Board of Education v. Board of Education, 58 O. S. 390. On page 394 of said decision the following language is used:

> "Counsel for the plaintiff in error contend that the distance from residence to school is to be taken 'as the crow flies.' The court below properly rejected this aerial view of the subject. The legislation provides for the convenience of children in attending school, and the distance is to be taken as they travel along the most direct public highway from the schoolhouse to the nearest portion of the curtilage of their residence."

It cannot be said that the children could conveniently travel along streets and alleys which are not opened and in public use. That would be exactly the same as traveling across fields and it is held in Board of Education v. Board of Education,

34 Cir. Ct. Rep. 698, that:

> "It would not be proper to measure the distance on a straight line 'as the crow flies,' across the fields, as the children, without the consent of the owners of the fields would thereby become trespassers, besides, under the provisions of the statutes of Ohio, children who reside in school districts in the country, living more than one and a half miles from school (now two miles) and residing at not a greater distance than one-half mile from a public highway, are entitled to be carried to school in a public conveyance at the expense of the school fund in the district. Necessarily, they would be carried thus along the highway. And, whether the children go by public or private conveyance or whether they walk to and from school, they are expected to go by the most direct and convenient highway, and the length of that course determines the distance from home to school."

It is noted from both of the above cited cases that the convenience of the children is the paramount consideration. In the first case, their convenience is looked to "as they travel" along the public highway and in the second case their convenience is looked to in the measurement of the route from their home to the school, along the most direct and "convenient" highway.

It is only proper, then, it seems to me, to hold, that a platted highway which has not been opened to public travel cannot be taken as the highway mentioned in the above quoted sections over which measurements are taken to ascertain the distance from which pupils reside from schools. It might even be noted that a public highway, in General Code section 1226, as used in the chapter of which said section is a part, includes any causeway, bridge, drain or watercourse which forms a part of a road authorized by law, but it cannot surely be urged that the right of road officials to open and improve a dedicated highway across watercourses and unimproved territory, would mean the same as the convenient use of such highway by pupils, after the same has been opened and placed in condition for such convenient use.

I am led to the conclusion, then, that the streets which are simply platted, but not opened to the public, are not to be considered as public highways along which the distance from a pupil's home to his school is measured, within the meaning of General Code section 7735.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SKUNK—GREEN PELT MEANS ONE NOT CURED—THAT SKUNKS WERE KILLED DURING LAWFUL PERIOD IS DEFENSE AGAINST CHARGE OF HAVING IN POSSESSION BETWEEN FEBRUARY 1ST AND NOVEMBER 15TH.

The term "green pelt of a skunk" in section 13413 G. C. means one that has not been dried or treated, and where a bona fide dealer is charged with having same in his possession, between the first day of February and the 15*th day of november, the fact that the skunks were killed within the lawful period is a matter of defense.*

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1917.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 17, 1917, which reads as follows:

"I wish to submit for your opinion a question involving the interpretation of section 13413 of the General Code of Ohio:

"In your opinion, is it possible that a person who purchases, within the state, a green skunk pelt on January 31st is a violator of section 13413 of the General Code of Ohio, if he retains in his possession this same pelt on February 2nd of the same year?

"Kindly define what is meant by a 'green pelt' under this section. A literal interpretation of this section would, to my notion, make every dealer in Ohio a violator of the same unless he had disposed of any pelts that he might have purchased prior to the 1st day of February immediately upon or after the 1st day of February."

Section 13413 G. C. reads:

"Whosoever shall catch, kill or injure a skunk, or pursue it with such intent, except from the 15th day of November to the first day of February both inclusive, or whoever shall at any time or place dig out, or smoke out with fumes or gases, any skunk or in any manner destroy the den or burrow of any skunk, or whoever during the period when it shall be unlawful to kill such animal shall have in his possession the green pelt of a skunk unless such person can show by the original invoice signed by the shipper that such pelts were shipped from without the state shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than twenty-five dollars.

"This section shall not prevent the owner of a farm or anyone authorized by him in writing from killing a skunk when doing an injury upon his premises. The provisions of this section shall be enforced by the commissioners of fish and game."

I am informed by the fish and game department that a "green pelt of a skunk" is one that has not been dried or treated.

It is true that a literal interpretation of this section would seem to make it unlawful for a dealer to have the "green pelt of a skunk" in his possession from the first day of February to the 15th day of November, inclusive. It seems clear to me, however, that the section above quoted was not aimed at such dealers, but was enacted to prevent the unlawful killing by making the mere possession unlawful.

When it is taken into consideration that a "green pelt of a skunk" is one that has not been dried or treated, it is clear that very few dealers would long have them on hand, and while a literal interpretation might cause the legitimate dealer some embarrassment immediately after February 1st, yet this situation is taken care of by a ruling of the fish and game department that they will not prosecute cases against such bona fide dealers.

The circumstances to which you refer are all matters of defense and though under the wording of the statute an affidavit might be filed against a dealer for having "the green pelt of a skunk in his possession" between February 1st and November 15th, yet I am sure when the circumstances were disclosed no conviction could be had.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CEMETERY TRUSTEES—CREATED UNDER SECTIONS 4183 TO 4201 G. C. INCLUSIVE—SECTIONS 4183 AND 4193-1 G. C. NOT INCONSISTENT—TRUSTEES APPOINTED UNDER SECTION 4193-1 G. C. RECEIVE NO COMPENSATION.

1. Sections 4183 to 4201 inclusive G. C. apply to procedure in creating a board of joint township cemetery trustees, subject to provisions of section 4193-1 G. C. when advantage is taken thereof.

2. Sections 4183 and 4193-1 G. C. are not inconsistent. The former is the general law, subject to the later optional provisions of the latter.

3. The board of cemetery trustees appointed under provisions of section 4193-1 G. C. cannot receive any compensation for their services as such.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1917.

HON. EARL K. SOLETHER, Prosecuting Attorney, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 26, 1917, in which you state:

> "A number of years ago the trustees of Perrysburg and Middleton townships, Wood county, Ohio, secured land near the township line of these townships for cemetery purposes, as provided in section 3456 G. C. The control of the cemetery has been in the hands of cemetery trustees elected by the electors residing within the limits of the territory, comprising the joint cemetery district, as provided in section 4184 G. C., and the cemetery maintained, etc., as provided in section 4185 et seq. G. C.
> "Just recently I have been consulted by the board of trustees of this Joint Cemetery Association, and I find upon investigation that sections 4184, 4185 and 4189 of the General Code were repealed by the legislature on the 18th day of April, 1913. The legislature by repealing section 4184 has done away with the election of cemetery trustees, and provided in section 4189, 103 O. L. 272, 'the cemetery so owned in common shall be under the control and management of the trustees of the township or townships and the council of the municipal corporation or corporations, and their authority over it and their duties in relation thereto, shall be the same as where the cemetery is the exclusive property of a single corporation.'

"It appears that the trustees of this joint cemetery association were unaware of the fact that these sections had been repealed, and I have, therefore, advised them that they have no longer any authority to act as joint cemetery trustees.

"Section 3456 provides: 'Two or more townships may join in establishing and maintaining a cemetery, and for such purpose, the trustees shall have the same powers, be governed by the same rules, and proceed in the same manner, as provided for municipal corporations and townships uniting for that purpose.'

"The latter part of this section, I take it, refers to sections 4183 et seq. of the General Code. As above quoted, sections 4184, 4185 and 4189 were repealed by the legislature, and section 4189 was amended, which is found in 103 O. L. 172, and later, the legislature enacted a supplemental section in 105 O. L. at page 345 known as section 4193-1.

"According to section 4193-1, a board of cemetery trustees, consisting of three members, shall be elected by a joint meeting of the trustees of the townships uniting for the purpose of maintaining a joint cemetery, and such board of cemetery trustees shall have all the powers, perform all the duties, exercised and performed by directors of public service in municipalities under section 4161 to 4168 inclusive of the General Code.

"I wish you would inform me if sections 4183 to 4201 inclusive of the General Code will apply to the procedure in creating a joint board of trustees to maintain this cemetery. After having created the board of trustees of the cemetery, who shall be the president, clerk and treasurer of such board?

"Sections 4189 and 4193-1 seem to be inconsistent, and I wish you would inform me as to the exact sections which would apply and the procedure to be followed after the board of trustees has been created. I wish you would also inform me if the board of trustees provided under section 4193-1 are entitled to compensation."

As stated in your question, section 3456 G. C. is the authority for township trustees establishing a joint cemetery.

Section 3456 G. C. provides:

"When a public burial ground located on or near a township line, is used by the people of two or more townships for burying purposes, the trustees of such townships shall jointly take possession thereof, and take care of and keep it in repair, as in case of burial grounds belonging to a township. The trustees of each township shall levy needful taxes therefor, not to exceed in any year more than one-fourth of one per cent. Two or more townships may join in establishing and maintaining a cemetery, and for such purpose the trustees shall have the same powers, be governed by the same rules, and proceed in the same manner, as provided for municipal corporations and townships uniting for that purpose."

The powers, procedure and governing rules for the joint cemetery are to be found in sections 4183 et seq. G. C.

In an opinion of my predecessor, found in Report of Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. II, page 1507, prior to the enactment of the supplemental section 4193-1

G. C. (103 O. L. 345), and which showed the situation of such a union cemetery prior to said enactment, is the following language:

"The ownership, management and control of cemeteries owned in common by two or more municipal corporations, by two or more townships, or by a municipal corporation or corporations and a township or townships are governed by the provisions of sections 4183 to 4201 G. C. inclusive, as amended and repealed by the act of April 18, 1913, 103 O. L. 272.

"Prior to said last mentioned act the management and control of cemeteries so owned in common was under the provisions of sections 4184, 4185 and 4189 G. C., imposed upon a board of cemetery trustees therein authorized to be elected.

"Upon the repeal of sections 4184 and 4185 G. C., 103 O. L. 272-3 supra, section 4189 G. C. was amended to read as follows:

" 'The cemetery so owned in common, shall be under the control and management of the trustees of the township or townships and the council of the municipal corporation or corporations and their authority over it and their duties in relation thereto shall be the same as where the cemetery is the exclusive property of a single corporation.'

"Thus the control and management of such cemeteries was transferred from the board of trustees above mentioned to the trustees of the township or townships and the council of the municipal corporation or corporations jointly, provision for their joint action in relation thereto being found in sections 4192, 4193 and 4194 G. C.

"It will be further observed that under section 4189 as amended, the trustees and council so acting jointly have conferred upon them all the authority and duties in relation to such cemetery as are conferred and imposed upon a municipal corporation relative to a cemetery of which it is sole owner.

"Thus by reference the authority of the director of public service, as found in section 4162 G. C. is conferred upon the trustees and council in respect to cemeteries owned by them in common. Said section is as follows:

" 'The director shall direct all the improvements and embellishments of the grounds and lots, protect and preserve them, and, subject to the approval of the council, appoint necessary superintendents, employes, and agents, determine their term of office and the amount of their compensation.' "

Section 4189 G. C. still reads as above quoted in Mr. Turner's opinion and is the general section providing for the control and management of a cemetery such as you speak of in your request, subject, however, to the optional provisions of the section enacted in 106 O. L. 345, to wit, section 4193-1 G. C., which reads as follows:

"At any such joint meeting or at the joint meeting provided for by section 4192 of the General Code, by a majority vote of all present counting council members and trustees, such meeting may elect a board of cemetery trustees consisting of three members, of which one or more must be a member of each of the separate boards of township trustees and municipal councils comprised in the union cemetery association represented by such joint meeting. Such board of cemetery trustees so elected, shall have all the powers and perform all the duties exercised and performed by directors of public service of municipalities under sections 4161 and 4168 inclusive of the General Code. At the first election of such board of cemetery trustees, one shall be chosen for one year, one for two years and one for three years, together with such part of a year as may intervene between the time of such election and the first day of January next thereafter. Yearly thereafter at the joint meeting held in May one trustee shall be chosen for three years commencing on the first day of January next thereafter. Any regular or regularly called joint meeting of the township trustees and municipal council may fill vacancies occurring on the board of cemetery trustees by a majority vote of the members present, such election to be for the unexpired term.

"Any member of such board of county trustees may be removed by such joint meeting on a two-thirds vote of all members entitled to sit in such joint meeting, for misfeasance or malfeasance in office, any gross neglect of duty or gross immorality, but no member shall be so removed until he shall have had at least ten days' notice in writing, together with a copy of the charges against him and shall have had opportunity to appear and defend himself either in person or by counsel."

There is no inconsistency in these sections. Under well known principles of law our supreme court has time after time iterated the proposition that two statutes on the same subject, which are not directly inconsistent, should be read together. A reading of section 4193-1 G. C. shows that if the trustees of the townships do not desire personal control and management of the cemetery under the provisions of section 4189 G. C., then they "may elect a board of cemetery trustees, etc.," as provided in section 4193-1 G. C.

So answering your specific questions, the first of which is:

I would say that these sections inclusive, as amended and repealed by the act of April 18, 1913 (103 O. L. 272), do apply, and that is evidenced by the reading of section 4189 G. C. The union cemetery is under the control and management of the trustees of the townships, and their authority over it and their duties and relation thereto are the same as where the cemetery is the exclusive property of a single corporation. Of course when this joint board desires to take advantage of the option given under section 4193-1 G. C. and select a board of trustees in the manner therein provided, the powers and duties of the new board under that section are as prescribed in said section.

In what might be termed your second question you desire to be informed as to the exact sections which would apply—that is, whether section 4189 or section 4193-1 does, which you say seem to be inconsistent.

As I have pointed out, there is no inconsistency, as section 4189 G. C. is the general statute which gives the trustees the control and management of the cemetery, while section 4193-1 G. C. gives them the opportunity, if they so desire, to appoint a sort of sub-board. So in certain union cemeteries the trustees may proceed under section 4189 G. C., while in others they would proceed under the optional statute, section 4193-1 G. C. In the event the trustees in the instant case proceed under said sections 4189 et seq., these statutes point out the procedure to be followed.

As to the election of a president, clerk and treasury of such board, the statute being silent on the subject, the board would proceed to organize as any other board might do, being a body to themselves and subject to organize under such rules and regulations as they themselves adopt.

What might be termed your third question is as to whether or not the board of trustees provided under said section 4193-1 are entitled to compensation.

Without citation of authorities, suffice it to say that it has been repeatedly held by our supreme court that no public officer can receive any fees or compensation unless by express provision of law. The duties imposed upon the subboard are practically the same duties that would have been performed by the entire membership of the united boards of trustees. When a statute imposes added duties in the manner that this statute does, the officer is considered as performing them gratuitously, or that his compensation before provided for included pay for whatever additional services were imposed upon him.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—CENTRALIZATION UNDER SECTION 4726 G. C. APPLIES TO ENTIRE DISTRICT—ALL ELECTORS THEREIN PERMITTED TO VOTE—TWO OR MORE SCHOOLS MAY BE CONSOLIDATED UNDER SECTION 7730 G. C. WITHOUT VOTE BY BOARD OF EDUCATION.

When centralization is had as provided by General Code section 4726, it applies to the entire school district affected and the electors of the entire district shall be permitted to vote.

Two or more schools are consolidated or united under the provisions of section 7730 G. C. by the board of education without vote.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 20, 1917.

HON. ROY R. CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of February 24, 1917, you ask my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Smithfield rural school district, situated in Smithfield township, Jefferson county, contains nineteen schools, among which are three known as 'Pine Grove,' or 'No. 5;' 'Jackson,' or 'No. 7,' and 'Piney Fork,' or 'No. 13.' Pine Grove is a country school of one room; Jackson is a country school of one room; and Piney Fork is in a mining settlement and consists of two buildings, one of one room and one of two rooms.
> "An inspection has been made of the various schools in this rural district and recommendations made that certain improvements be made on one of the Piney Fork school buildings, with a further recommendation, though, that the three districts above mentioned, Nos. 13, 5 and 7, be consolidated, centralized or whatever term you may wish to use. It is true that section 4726 provides that a rural board of education may submit the question of centralization, etc. Does this statute require that centralization must be applied to the entire district, or can vote be had for centralization of two or more, as for instance, three schools in a district? Or what law provides that two or more schools in a rural district can be united, consolidated or centralized?

"This is a very hilly community, with poor roads. The question of centralization of the township, as a whole, is impractiable. These three schools are in the same valley, which makes it possible for them to be consolidated so far as making one building readily accessible to the pupils of the three districts, Nos. 5, 7 and 13.

"If there is a provision whereby such consolidation or centralization may be had, can the voters of the rural district, as a whole, vote for it, or must the vote be confined to the electors in the particular subdistricts concerned in the consolidation?"

Pertinent to the above request I desire to quote first from General Code section 7730, which provides in part as follows:

"The board of education of any rural * * * school district may suspend any or all schools in such * * * rural school district. Upon such suspension the board * * * in such rural school district shall provide for the conveyance of pupils attending such schools in the rural * * * district, or to the public school in another district. When the average daily attendance of any school for any preceding year has been below ten, such school shall be suspended and the pupils transferred to another school or schools when directed to do so by the county board of education. No school of any rural district shall be suspended until ten days' notice has been given by the board of education of such district. Such notice shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district; provided, however, that any suspended school as herein provided may be re-established by the suspending authority upon its own initiative or upon a petition asking for re-establishment, signed by a majority of the voters of the suspended district, at any time the school enrollment of the said suspended district shows twelve or more pupils of lawful age."

The above provision of the General Code suggests a plan of centralization of schools in addition to General Code section 4726, which last mentioned section provides for the submission of the question of centralization to the qualified electors of a rural school district, and it may or may not be as complete and effective as though centralization were had under section 4726. When centralization is had under section 7730, a majority of the voters in such suspended district may cause the schools to be re-established, in which case the plan suggested by said last mentioned section would not be as complete and as effective as under the said section 4726. When the board of education of a rural district determines to suspend a school or schools in any such district and posts notices of such suspension, it is then their duty to assign the youth of such suspended district or districts to schools in another district, as provided by section 7684 G. C., which reads as follows:

"Boards of education may make such an assignment of the youth of their respective districts to the schools established by them as in their opinion will best promote the interests of education in their districts."

When such assignment is made, as above pointed out, the pupils so assigned shall attend the schools in said districts to which they have been assigned. If, however, a pupil lives more than one and a half miles from the schools to which he has been assigned, he may attend a nearer school in the same district or, if there is none nearer in the same district, he may attend the nearest school in another school district in all grades below the high school, and in such case the board of education of the district in which they reside must pay the tuition of such pupils to the school board of the district where such pupils attend. The above provision shall not apply, however, if the schools are centralized or if transportation is furnished.

If, however, it is your desire to make the centralization complete, I do not understand that the same can be done unless the question is submitted to the entire school district, as provided by section 4726, above mentioned, which reads as follows:

> "A rural board of education may submit the question of centralization, and, upon the petition of not less than one-fourth of the qualified electors of such rural district, or upon the order of the county board of education, must submit such question to the vote of the qualified electors of such rural district at a general election or a special election called for that purpose. If more votes are cast in favor of centralization than against it, at such election, such rural board of education shall proceed at once to the centralization of the schools of the rural district, and, if necessary, purchase a site or sites and erect a suitable building or buildings thereon. If, at such election, more votes are cast against the proposition of centralization than for it, the question shall not again be submitted to the electors of such rural district for a period of two years, except upon the petition of at least forty per cent. of the electors of such district."

Under the provisions of the above section the electors of the district are entitled to vote upon said question, and if the vote carries it is the duty of the board of education to proceed to centralize the schools of such entire district.

In your letter you say that the above is impracticable, so that I take it the plan provided for under said section 7730, and other sections thereto relating, is the plan you should advise the school board to follow.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL LIGHT PLANT—COUNCIL MAY REQUIRE EXPENSES OF SAID PLANT TO BE PAID FROM REVENUE DERIVED FROM PRIVATE CONSUMERS — DISCRETIONARY WITH COUNCIL WHETHER OR NOT VILLAGE SHALL PAY FOR CURRENT USED FOR MUNICIPAL PURPOSES FROM FUNDS RAISED BY TAXATION.

The council of a village owning, maintaining and operating a municipal lighting plant may require all the expenses of the plant, both for service furnished the municipality itself and private consumers therein, to be paid out of the funds received as electric light rentals from private consumers.

It is discretionary with the council of a village having a municipal light plant to determine whether the village will pay any, all or none of the cost of furnishing electric current to the village itself for municipal purposes out of funds raised by taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 20, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of February 12, 1917, you submitted for my opinion the following proposition:

> "In view of the provisions of section 4362 G. C. should the board of trustees of public affairs of villages, which own and operate a municipal lighting plant, furnish current for street lighting without charge?"

Section 4362, General Code, reads as follows:

> "When waterworks and electric light plants or either of them are owned and operated by a village which receives its street lighting and fire protection therefrom and the proceeds from the operation of such plant or plants is insufficient to pay the expenses of operating such plants or either of them, the council may levy a tax not to exceed five mills on each dollar valuation of the taxable property listed for taxation in such village, real and personal, to pay the running expenses and extensions made thereto after applying the proceeds therefrom, which tax shall be in addition to all other taxes authorized by law."

The following sections and part of section of the General Code refer to the general powers of a municipality with respect to the establishment of an electric light plant:

> "Sec. 3616. All municipal corporations shall have the general powers mentioned in this chapter, and council may provide by ordinance or resolution for the exercise and enforcement of them.
> "Sec. 3618. To establish, maintain and operate municipal lighting, power and heating plants, and to furnish the municipality and the inhabitants thereof with light, power and heat, to procure everything necessary therefor, and to acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise, the necessary lands for such purposes, within and without the municipality.
> "Sec. 3990. The council of a municipality may, when it is deemed expedient and for the public good, erect gas works or electric works at the expense of the corporation, or purchase any gas or electric works already erected therein, * * *"

Section 3618, supra, seems to be the only section of the General Code that contains any reference to the right of a municipality to establish and maintain a municipal lighting plant for the purpose of furnishing electricity to the municipality itself. In this section is found the general grant of power by the legislature to a municipality to establish, maintain and operate a municipal lighting plant to furnish both the municipality itself and the inhabitants thereof with electricity. An examination of the General Code does not disclose any special limitation on this general grant of power.

Provision for the management, conduct and control of a village electric light plant is contained in section 4361, General Code, as amended 103 O. L. 561, which reads as follows:

> "Sec. 4361. The board of trustees of public affairs shall manage, conduct and control the water works, electric light plants, artificial or natural gas plants, or other similar public utilities, furnish supplies of water, electricity or gas, collect all water, electrical and gas rents, and appoint necessary officers, employes and agents. The board of trustees of public affairs may make such by-laws and regulations as it may deem necessary for the safe, economical and efficient management and protection of such works, plants and public utilities. Such by-laws and regulations when not repugnant to the ordinances, to the constitution or to the laws of the state, shall have the same validity as ordinances. For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing such waterworks, plants and public utilities, of making necessary additions thereto and extensions thereof, and of making necessary repairs thereon, such trustees may assess a water, light, power, gas or utility rent, of sufficient amount, in such manner as they deem most equitable, upon all tenements and premises supplied with water, light, power, or gas, and, when such rents are not paid, such trustees may certify the same over to the auditor of the county in which such village is located to be placed on the duplicate and collect as other village taxes or may collect the same by actions at law in the name of the village. The board of trustees of public affairs shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as are possessed by, and are incumbent upon, the director of public service as provided in sections 3955, 3959, 3960, 3961, 3964, 3965, 3974, 3981, 4328, 4329, 4330, 4331, 4332, 4333, and 4334 of the General Code, and all powers and duties relating to waterworks in any of these sections shall extend to and include electric light, power and gas plants and such other similar public utilities, and such boards shall have such other duties as may be prescribed by law or ordinance not inconsistent herewith."

The last mentioned section gives ample authority for the assessment of a light rent and vests the board of trustees of public affairs with the power of fixing the rent, of sufficient amount, upon all tenements and premises supplied with light to pay the expense of conducting and managing such electric light plant, of making necessary additions thereto and extensions thereof and of making necessary repairs thereon, and of assessing such light rent in such manner as they deem most equitable.

Section 3960 General Code is incorporated in section 4361, supra, by reference, and the provisions of said first mentioned section concerning water works plants are extended to and include electric light plants of villages as well.

Section 3960 reads as follows:

> "Money collected for waterworks purposes shall be deposited weekly with the treasurer of the corporation. Money so deposited shall be kept as a separate and distinct fund. When appropriated by council, it shall be subject to the order of the director of public service. Such director shall sign all orders drawn on the treasurer of the corporation against such fund."

The effect of section 3960, supra, taken in connection with section 4361 is to require all moneys collected by the board of trustees of public affairs as electric light rentals to be deposited weekly in the public treasury, to the credit of the electric light plant fund. When placed therein said money cannot be used until council has appropriated it specifically for the use of said board, as is further provided by said sections.

Section 4240, General Code, reads as follows:

"The council shall have the management and control of the finances and property of the corporation, except as may be otherwise provided, and have such other powers and perform such other duties as may be conferred by law."

A consideration of the three last mentioned sections of the General Code makes it apparent that the general supervision of a village electric light plant, as far as the finances of the same are concerned, is placed in the village council. The control of same in this respect by said body consists in the right to exercise discretion, and it would be for the council to determine whether the amount of money appropriated for the use of said plant would be large or small.

An examination of the General Code relative to municipalities does not disclose any provision which places the duty or requirement upon the village council —which represents the village, of course—to make any payment for current used by the village itself. The only section that seems to have any bearing at all is section 4362, supra, which in part provides in effect that when the proceeds from the operation of a village light plant furnishing street lighting to the village are insufficient to pay expenses, the council may levy a special tax to take care of the deficiency. However, this section merely amounts to an authorization for a levy of taxes for said purpose, and does not make the levying of said tax mandatory; and while it might be inferred from said section that the reason for said levy was the furnishing of said street lighting, still at no place in the Code do we find a provision that a village light plant may or may not furnish current free to said village for its own use.

The fact that the legislature has vested the general power of handling the finances of a village light plant in the village council, as is noted above, and has failed to place any special limitation on the exercise of same leads me to the conclusion that it is a matter of discretion for the village council to determine whether it will or will not pay any or all of the cost of furnishing electric current to the village itself for municipal purposes out of funds raised by taxation, or whether it will require all of the expenses of said plant, both for service furnished to the municipality and to private consumers, to be paid out of the funds received by way of light rentals from said private consumers.

As will be noted by reference to section 4361, supra, provision is made that the board of trustees of public affairs may make by-laws and regulations for the safe, economical and efficient management and protection of said electric light plant, but they shall not be repugnant to the ordinances of said village.

Sections 3616 and 3618, supra, in effect provide that council may provide by ordinance or resolution for the establishment, maintenance and operation of a municipal lighting plant to furnish the municipality with light. It would seem that these two sections would grant sufficient power to said council to require the board of trustees of public affairs to furnish current free to said village for its own use, unless there was some limitation upon the right to do so, which is not apparent either expressly or impliedly.

The right of a municipality to receive electric current from its own plant free of charge was considered by Attorney-General U. G. Denman in an opinion to Hon. M. R. Smith, city solicitor, Conneaut, Ohio, under date of September 22, 1910, and found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General of Ohio, 1910-1911, page 1015, and the following quotation from said opinion bears on the point in question:

> "It matters not, therefore, which, as between council and the director, has technically the rate-making power. Council has the undoubted and exclusive power to determine how much money the city will pay for the support of the electric light plant from its general revenues. Such a payment, of course, can only be made from an appropriation made in accordance with law by council.
> "The mayor suggests that it is not fair to private consumers that the city should pay less for the current consumed by it than such consumers are obliged to pay. However, this action is within the powers of council and council may, if it sees fit, refuse to apply any moneys raised by taxation to the support of the municipal plant, and thus require that the rates charged against private consumers shall pay for the light furnished the city."

Ricker v. Lancaster, 7 Pa. Sup. Ct., 149.
Preston v. Water Comrs., 117 Mich., 589.
Gallipolis v. Waterworks Trustees, 2 N. P. 161.

When engaged in furnishing electricity to private consumers the municipality is not acting in its governmental capacity, but is acting in a private or proprietary capacity.

Section 1303, Dillon on Municipal Corporations, 5th Ed.

Electric rates or rents are in no sense taxes, but are nothing more than the price paid for electric current as a commodity by the consumer.

Gallipolis v. Waterworks Trustees, 2 N. P. 161;
Twitchell v. City of Spokane (Wash.), 104 Pac. 150; 44 L. R. A. (n. s.) 290.

The principle seems to be well sustained that a municipality owning a waterworks system may furnish water for municipal purposes free of charge.

Gallipolis v. Waterworks Trustees, 2 N. P. 161;
Twitchell v. City of Spokane, supra;
30 Am. and Eng. Enc. Law, 2d Ed., page 435;
Sweickley, Waterworks Com'r v. Sweickley, 159 Pa. 194.

There would not seem to be any reason why the same rule should not apply to municipal light plants.

In view of the foregoing statutory provisions and of the general principles of law applicable to the furnishing of free service by a municipal utility to the municipality itself, I am of the opinion that the board of trustees of public affairs of villages which own and operate municipal lighting plants should frunish current for street lighting without charge, if the council of said village requires the same to be done, and that the village council in the exercise of its discretion may require all the expenses of the municipal lighting plant, both for service furnished the municipality itself and private consumers therein, to be paid out of funds received as electric light rentals from private consumers.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FUNDS—RAISED UNDER SEC. 6956-1 G. C. CAN BE USED FOR REPAIR OF COUNTY ROADS AND BRIDGES GENERALLY—REGARDLESS OF AMOUNTS CONTRIBUTED BY DIFFERENT TOWNSHIPS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS CANNOT CO-OPERATE WITH TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES FOR IMPROVEMENT OF A ROAD ENTIRELY WITHIN LIMITS OF MUNICIPALITY.

The fund provided by section 6956-1 G. C. is to be used for the repair and maintenance of bridges and county highways over the county generally irrespective of the amounts contributed by the different townships thereof.

The county commissioners and the council of a municipality are not authorized to co-operate in the improvement of a part of the intercounty highway system of the state, where the part to be improved lies entirely within the limits of the municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 21, 1917.

HON. A. B. UNDERWOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication dated February 28, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to two different propositions. Your communication in full reads as follows:

> "I am submitting herewith two propositions upon which the county commissioners desire your opinion.
> "(1) The distinction between county roads and township roads being somewhat vague, a repair and maintenance levy was made last year under 6956-1 G. C. of $20.00 per mile on all roads in the county other than state roads. Question: Must this money be spent in the township where it was raised or can it be shifted to the place needed and spent anywhere in the county?
> "(2) Ashland-Medina I. C. H. 139 and Barberton-Greenwich I. C. H. 97 have been built and constructed up to the corporation line of the village of Lodi, Medina county, Ohio. It is the desire of the village council at Lodi, and of the Medina county board of commissioners to co-operate under sections 6949 to 6954 G. C., inclusive, and extend a stone road from the corporation line into said village to meet the brick pavements. Question: Are the aforesaid sections broad enough to permit such co-operation in view of the fact that the roads outside of the corporation line have all been built? Or is co-operation by the commissioners limited solely to the case where the municipality extension is a part of and made at the same time as the road outside of and leading up to the corporation line?
> "I have submitted my own views to the county commissioners, but would like a written opinion from your office."

Your first question has to do with the proposition as to whether the repair and maintenance levy made under section 6956-1 G. C. must be applied to the roads in each township of the county in proportion to the amount of money paid, or can the money be used for the repair and maintenance of the roads in any part of the county without respect to the proportion that is furnished by each township?

You state in said proposition that the distinction between county roads and township roads is somewhat vague. In answering this question intelligently it will be necessary for me to cite and construe a number of statutes which have to do with the classification of highways and the method by which each class is to be repaired and maintained.

Section 7464 of the General Code classifies the highways of the state as follows:

"The public highways of the state shall be divided into three classes, namely: State roads, county roads and township roads."

Subdivision (a) of said section defines state roads as follows:

"State roads shall include such part or parts of the intercounty highways and main market roads as have been or may hereafter be constructed by the state, or which have been or may hereafter be taken over by the state as provided in this act, and such roads shall be maintained by the state highway department."

Subdivision (b) of said section defines county roads as follows:

"County roads shall include all roads which have been or may be improved by the county by placing brick, stone, gravel or other road building material thereon, or heretofore built by the state and not a part of the intercounty or main market system of roads, together with such roads as have been or may be constructed by the township trustees to conform to the standards for county roads as fixed by the county commissioners, and all such roads shall be maintained by the county commissioners."

Subdivision (c) of said section defines township roads as follows:

"Township roads shall include all public highways of the state other than state or county roads as hereinbefore defined, and the trustees of each township shall maintain all such roads within their respective townships; and provided further, that the county commissioners shall have full power and authority to assist the township trustees in maintaining all such roads, but nothing herein shall prevent the township trustees from improving any road within their respective townships, except as otherwise provided in this act."

Now the next important question is as to how these different classes of roads are to be maintained and repaired.

Section 7467 of the General Code provides as follows:

"The state, county and township shall each maintain their respective roads as designated in the classification hereinabove set forth;" (that is, the classification set forth in section 7464 G. C.)

You will note that this provision of section 7467 does not prevent the county or township from entering into an agreement by which the respective classes of roads may be repaired and maintained in a different method than that set out in the statute.

Now, if the state, the county and the township is each to maintain its respective roads as set out in section 7464, the next question is as to how these different classes of roads are to be maintained.

Section 3298-1 of the General Code provides that:

> "The board of trustees of any township may levy and assess upon the taxable property of such township a tax not exceeding three mills in any one year upon each dollar of taxable property therein for the purpose of improving, dragging, repairing or maintaining any public road or roads or part thereof."

Now, it must be remembered that this levy is made to take care of township roads only.

Section 6956-1 G. C., which is the section to which you refer in your communication, provides as follows:

> "The board of county commissioners shall provide annually a fund for the repair and maintenance of bridges and county highways. The repair and maintenance fund so provided shall not be less than twenty dollars for each mile of county highways in said county."

In the first place this levy is based upon the number of miles of county highways as described in section 7464 of the General Code and the fund derived from said levy shall be used for the repair and maintenance of bridges and county highways only. This being a fund for the repair and maintenance of bridges and county highways it may be used for the repair and maintenance of bridges and county highways in general, wheresoever they may need repair and maintenance irrespective of what sum or sums of money each township may furnish for the said fund under said levy. This is the answer, in my opinion, in reference to your first question.

In passing I might say that section 1221 of the General Code provides means of repairing and maintaining the state roads.

Now as to your second question: As I understand the facts to be, the intercounty highway passing through the village of Lodi in your county has been built and constructed up to the corporation line on each side of the village of Lodi, but the part of said intercounty highway that lies within the village of Lodi is not improved and that the county commissioners of your county desire to co-operate with the said village of Lodi in constructing a stone road within the corporation limits of said village, the part to be improved lying entirely within the village. As you suggest, the sections which control in this matter are 6949 to 6954 of the General Code.

Section 6949 provides that:

Before attempting to construe the said statutes, let us place an interpretation upon "into or through." The Standard Dictionary defines the word "into" as follows:

> "Expressing entrance, or a passing from the outside of a thing to its interior parts, and following verbs expressing motion."

This preposition "into" follows the verb "extend." That is, it follows a verb expressing motion and seems to indicate that the improvement is to pass from a point outside of the municipality either into the municipality or clear through the municipality. It seems to mean the same as if it read that the board of county commissioners may project a proposed road improvement into or through a municipality. That is, they may literally project something into the municipality, which would necessitate that the point from which the thing was projected is outside of the limits of the municipality.

In placing the above interpretation upon these words used in section 6949, I am aware that this is not an absolutely necessary construction. But let us use in connection with the interpretation of the words so used the construction of the statutes which have to do with this matter. In section 6950 of the General Code we find this provision:

> "Whenever any portion of a road to be improved under the provisions of this act lies within the corporation limits of a municipality. * * *"

Section 6954 of the General Code, which provides for the letting of the contract for the improvement of the road, provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners shall thereupon receive bids and let the contract for improving such portion of said road as lies within the municipality either in connection with the remainder of said improvement or separately, as such board of commissioners may determine."

Now when we consider together the plain interpretation of the words "extend," "into" and "through" as found in section 6949, together with the plain construction of the sections which have to do with the improvement provided for in said sections, the only conclusion that seems to be warranted is that a road lying entirely within the confines of a municipality, even though it joins with other parts of the highways already improved, cannot be constructed jointly by the board of county commissioners and the village council.

This seems to have been the construction placed upon these statutes by the legislature itself because we find in the new highway bill, which is now on its passage through the general assembly, a clause making provision for just the situation which you present in your communication. So that I answer your second question in the negative and hold that such a road as you suggest cannot be constructed by the co-operation of the county commissioners and the village council.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CHILDREN'S HOMES—DEFICIENCY IN FUND PROVIDED FOR MAINTAINING SCHOOLS THEREIN—SHOULD BE PAID BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

County commissioners are required to pay any deficiency left in the cost of maintaining schools in children's homes not provided for by the distributive share of the school funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 21, 1917.

HON. JAMES P. WOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of January 15, 1917, you ask my opinion on the following statement of facts, to wit:

> "The Athens county children's home is located in Athens township rural school district. For many years under the provisions of 7676 a separate school has been maintained in the children's home. The board of education of the Athens rural school district now refuses to pay the salary of teachers employed for the school maintained at the children's home except to the extent of the funds received from the school enumeration.
> "Section 7677, as amended 103 O. L. 896, provides that such schools 'shall be under the control and management of the respective boards of education of the school district in which such homes and institutions are located, etc.'
> "Section 7878, as amended 103 O. L. 896, provides for the expense of maintenance of such schools and enumerates the different items of expenditures which do not include the salary of teachers. The question then, I think, resolves itself into an interpretation of the latter part of section 7676 as amended, which is as follows:
> "'If the distributive share of school funds to which the school at such home or asylum is entitled by the enumeration of children in the institution is not sufficient to continue the schools for that length of time, the deficiency shall be paid out of the funds of the institution or by the county commissioners.'
> "The funds received for school enumeration are wholly inadequate to pay the salaries of teachers employed at the children's home in this county. No provision was made for the payment of these salaries in the budget for the children's home. Under these circumstances are the county commissioners required to pay the balance of the salaries to the teachers employed at the children's home and is there no obligation on the part of the board of education of the Athens township rural school district to pay any part of these salaries except from those funds received from the school enumeration?"

There seems to be two methods provided by our laws for the establishment and maintenance of schools in a county children's home. By the provisions of the children's home statutes, that is, General Code sections 3085 and 3088, it is provided that schools may be established and maintained by the trustees of such institutions.

General Code section 3085 provides as follows:

"Subject to such rules and regulations as the trustees prescribe, the superintendent shall have entire charge and control of such home and the inmates therein. Upon the recommenation of the superintendent, the trustees may appoint a matron, assistant matron, teacher or teachers whose duties shall be the care of the inmates of the home, and to direct their employment, giving suitable physical, mental and moral training to them. Under the direction of the superintendent, the matron shall have the control, general management and supervision of the household duties of the home, and the matron, assistant matron, teacher or teachers, shall perform such other duties, and receive for their services such compensation as the trustees may by by-laws from time to time direct. They may be removed by the superintendent or at the pleasure of the trustees, or a majority of them. A licensed physician may be employed, who shall at least quarterly make a physical and mental examination of all the inmates of such home, and a record of such examination shall be kept. When necessary, experts may be employed to give the proper treatment, or a child may be sent to a suitable institution for treatment at the expense of the county."

General Code section 3088 provides:

"During the two weeks ending on the fourth Saturday in July, the clerk of the board of trustees shall take and return to the county auditor the names and ages of all youth of school age in such home. The state common school fund, not otherwise appropriated by law, shall be apportioned in proportion to the enumeration of youth, to such home and other districts, subdistricts and joint subdistricts within the county. The amount of money due such home under such apportionment shall be set apart by the auditor of the county, and shall become a part of the children's home fund and used to maintain a common school in such home, and shall be paid out on certificate of the trustees, stating in the certificate, the amount and the purposes thereof. Thereupon the county auditor shall issue his warrant on the treasurer for the amount so certified. This section shall not apply to children's homes in counties where such children attend the public schools. When in their judgment advisable, the trustees may employ a teacher to teach in any such home, as provided by law, but such teacher must have a 'teacher's elementary school certificate' as provided for by section seven thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine of the General Code."

So that from the above two sections it is not only provided that the trustees of the institution may make such rules and regulations as the superintendent shall follow in establishing such means of instruction as is proper, but by the provisions of section 3088 a method is outlined for the raising of funds for the support of such schools in such county children's home. It is quite clear, from the above sections, that if the schools are provided by the above sections the county commissioners must make provision for the entire expense in connection with said schools. But, another class of statutes must be looked to, viz., a portion of the school laws, found in General Code sections 7676 to 7678, inclusive.

Sections 7676, 7677 and 7678 provide:

"Section 7676. The board of education in any district in which a children's home or orphans' asylum is established by law, when requested by the board of trustees of such children's home or orphans' asylum when no public school is situated reasonably near such home or asylum, shall establish a separate school in such home or asylum, so as to afford to the children therein, as far as practicable, the advantages and privileges of a common school education. Such school must be continued in operation for such period as is provided by law for public schools. If the distributive share of school funds to which the school at such home or asylum is entitled by the enumeration of children in the institution is not sufficient to continue the schools for that length of time, the deficiency shall be paid out of the funds of the institution or by the county commissioners.

"Section 7677. All schools so established in any such home or asylum shall be under the control and management of the respective boards of education of the school districts in which such homes and institutions are located, and courses of study, length of school term, and all other school matters shall be uniform in the respective school districts. Teachers employed in such homes or institutions must have a teacher's elementary school certificate as provided by section seven thousand eight hundred and twenty-nine of the General Code.

"Section 7678. In the establishment of such schools the commissioners of the county in which such children's home or orphans' asylum is established, shall provide the necessary school room or rooms, furniture, fuel, apparatus and books, the cost of which for such schools must be paid out of the funds provided for such institution. The board of education shall incur no expense in supporting such schools."

Thus by the above sections it will be noted that when requested by the trustees of such children's home and when no public school is situated reasonably near such home, the board of education of the district in which the children's home is located shall establish a separate school in such home, and a school which is sufficient to afford the children therein the advantages and privileges of a common school education; that the school shall be operated during the full school year and if there are not sufficient funds from the distributive share of the school fund or from the funds of the institution otherwise provided therefor, then the deficiency shall be paid by the county commissioners.

I am convinced that the above quoted sections mean exactly what they say, that is, that it is the purpose of the law to provide schools and the means of education for the children in such homes, and just as a school board can be compelled to levy and collect taxes for the maintenance of schools within their several jurisdictions, I am convinced the board of county commissioners may be compelled to levy and collect taxes to provide for the expense of conducting said schools in said children's homes and to provide for any deficiency which may occur over and above the amount received from the state or from any other source.

Holding this view, then, I advise you that the board of education of Athens township rural school district should provide for the payment of the salaries of teachers employed in the schools maintained at the children's home, and that the expense over and above the amount received from the state common school fund, or from any fund in the children's home which might be used for said purpose, must be paid by the board of county commissioners of the county in which such homes are located.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—SURVEYING TRACT OF LAND SOLD AT FORFEITED LAND SALE—PAID OUT OF PROCEEDS OF SALE—WHEN LAND SOLD AT FORFEITED LAND SALE DOES NOT EXIST AUDITOR MAY REFUND PURCHASE PRICE AND TAKE SAME OFF TAX DUPLICATE.

1. A county surveyor is to be paid out of the proceeds of the sale for surveying a tract of land sold at forfeited land sale when required to survey the same by the county auditor under section 5762 G. C.

2. When the county auditor has sold lands at forfeited land sales and then it is found that these lands in fact do not exist, the purchase price thereof may be refunded to the purchaser.

3. When the auditor's attention is called to the fact that lands sold at forfeited land sale do not in fact exist, it is his duty to take the same off the tax duplicate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 21, 1917.

HON. C. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 11, 1917, as follows:

"The General Code seems to be silent as to how the county surveyor is to be paid for the work required under the provisions of section 5762, and I would like to know whether the surveyor's bill is to be paid from the county treasury and out of the general county fund, or could it be charged against the land so sold. My investigation leads me to believe that the county surveyor would simply have a claim against the county for which he should present his bill to the county auditor and have it allowed in the regular way, but I had no authority to back up this opinion; and, therefore, ask your direction in the matter.

"Again, I have found a number of instances where the auditor has sold forfeited lands and the land so sold is found not to exist; that is, it has been included in other lands and is actually owned by other parties who are paying the taxes on it, but has never been taken off the duplicate.

"As an illustration, take the following: A tract of land was run on the duplicate here for a number of years as 300 acres. A deed was presented to the auditor for 250 acres. The auditor transferred the 250 acres out of the 300, leaving the extra 50 acres still in the name of the former owner on the tax duplicate. The 50 acres were sold at forfeited land sale, and I was called upon to locate the boundaries of the same. Upon investigation, I found that the original owners had had the 300 acres surveyed, and that it only measured out 250 acres; that they sold the entire tract by metes and bounds, but stating in the deed that it contained 250 acres.

"Hence, you will see how the auditor was led into error thinking that there were 50 acres still left to the original owner when in fact there was none. Now, the auditor wants some way for his records to show that this land does not exist. There are other instances in which land has been sold at forfeited land sale and the purchaser cannot locate same, and I am satisfied that it is included in other lands on which the owners are paying taxes just as mentioned in the aforesaid illustration.

"Now, can the county auditor direct the county surveyor to go out and ascertain the location of such lands, and if he finds that the lands sold at forfeited land sale are included in other lands, can he make such report to the county auditor and the county auditor correct his duplicates by taking off these tracts of land which are included in the lands of other owners, and refund to the purchasers at the forfeited land sales the amounts paid by them, and how is the county surveyor to be paid for this work?

"These questions have been mooted for a long time, and it seems to me steps should be taken so that they can be adjusted with some certainty."

Section 5762 G. C. reads:

"The county auditor on making a sale of a tract of land to any person, under this chapter, shall give to such purchaser a certificate thereof. If the land so sold is not an entire original tract, and the auditor deems it necessary, such certificate shall be directed to the county surveyor of the county, requiring him to proceed at the request of the purchaser, his heirs, or assigns, to ascertain the boundaries of the tract of land so purchased, unless it is held in common with some other person. On producing or returning to the county auditor the certificate of sale when the tract sold is an entire original tract, or when the tract of land so sold is held in common with another person, or on producing the plat and certificate of the county surveyor attached to a copy of the certificate of sale, the county auditor, on payment to him by the purchaser, his heirs, or assigns, of the sum of one dollar and twenty-five cents shall execute and deliver to such purchaser, his heirs, or assigns, a deed therefor, in due form, which deed shall be prima facie evidence of title in the purchaser, his heirs, or assigns."

Answering your first question as to how the surveyor is to be paid for surveying a tract of land sold at forfeited land sale, I beg to call your attention to the following sections:

"Sec. 5756 G. C. When a tract or parcel of land is sold, under the provisions of this chapter, at forfeited sale, any person, desiring to do so, may redeem it, at any time within six months from the sale thereof, by depositing with the county treasurer, as provided in the next preceding chapter of this title, the amount of such sale with fifty per cent. penalty thereon, and paying all other expenses incidental to, and arising from the sale.

"Sec. 5757 G. C. If any of such forfeited lands are sold for a greater sum than the amount of such tax, interest, penalty, and costs, the county auditor shall charge the county treasurer separately in each case, in the name of the supposed owner, with the excess above such amount. The treasurer shall retain such excess in the treasury for the proper owner of the forfeited lands, and upon demand by such owner, within six years from the day of sale, shall pay the excess to him.

"Sec. 5758 G. C. If the county treasurer, upon such demand, is not fully satisfied as to the right of the person demanding, to receive it, if there are several different claimants, he shall commence a civil action by filing a petition of interpleader, in the court of common pleas of the county where the land was sold, wherein he shall make the person or persons claiming the excess, and the state, defendants, and the action shall proceed as other civil actions. The costs of the proceedings shall be paid by the person or persons claiming the excess, as the court shall order. The prosecuting attorney of the county shall attend to the action, in behalf of the treasurer.

"Sec. 2822 G. C. When employed by the day, the surveyor shall receive five dollars for each day and his necessary actual expenses. When not so employed, he shall be entitled to charge and receive the following fees; for each rod run, not exceeding one mile, three-fourths of one cent, and for each rod over one mile, one-half of one cent; for making out or recording a plat not exceeding six lines, seventy-five cents, and for each line in addition, five cents; for each one hundred words or figures therein, six cents; for calculating the contents of a tract not exceeding four sides, six cents, and for each additional line ten cents; for mileage, going and returning, five cents per mile; and for all other services, the same fees as those of other officers for like services. Chain carriers and markers are entitled, each, to two dollars."

It will be noted that section 5757 G. C. provides that if any of such forfeited lands are sold for a greater sum than the amount of such tax, interest, penalty and costs, the county auditor shall charge the county treasurer separately in each case, in the name of the supposed owner, with the excess above such amount. Nowhere in the statute is there any definite recital of just what "costs" are to be allowed. Sections 5756, 5757 and 5758 of the General Code, above quoted, were originally sections 102 and 103 of an act passed April 5, 1889, and entitled "An act for the assessment and taxation of all property in this state and for levying taxes thereon according to its true value in money." (56 O. L. 175.)

Section 103 of this act reads:

"Whenever any tract or parcel of land shall be hereafter sold, under the provisions of this act, at forfeited sale, any person desiring to do so, may redeem the same, at any time within six months from the sale thereof, by depositing with the county treasurer, as is provided in section ninety-third (93) of this act, the amount of said sale, together with fifty per centum thereon, and by paying all other expenses incidental to, and arising from said sale: Provided, however, that if any of said forfeited lands shall be sold for a greater sum than the tax, interest, penalty and costs, it shall be the duty of the auditor to charge said treasurer separately in each case, in the name of the supposed owner, with the excess above said tax, interest, penalty and costs; and such treasurer shall retain in the treasury of his county the said excess, for the proper owner of said forfeited lands, and upon demand by such former owner, within six (6) years from the day of such sale, pay such excess to said former owner; and in case said treasurer, upon such demand, shall not be fully satisfied as to the right of the person demanding the same to receive it, or in case of different claimants, it shall be the duty of said treasurer to file his bill of interpleader, in the court of common pleas of the county where such land was sold, wherein he shall make the person or persons claiming such excess, and the state of Ohio, defendants, and such suits shall be proceeded in according to the usages of courts of chancery upon bills of interpleader; and, in all cases, the costs of such proceeding shall be paid by the person or persons claiming said excess, as the court shall order; and it shall be the duty of the prosecuting attorney of the county to attend to the same, in behalf of the treasury."

I think it is clear from a reading of this section that the word "costs," as used in section 5757 G. C., meant and referred to "all other expenses incidental to and arising from the sale." It would seem, therefore, to be the policy of the statute to pay all expenses arising out of the sale from the proceeds of the same.

This view is strengthened by the fact that it is the general policy of the law, as declared in 37 Cyc., 1363, that:

> "The costs and expenses of a tax sale are payable out of the proceeds of the sale and the county or city is not to be held liable for them."

Under section 5762 G. C., when the county auditor "deems it necessary," he directs the county surveyor to "ascertain the boundaries of the tract of land so purchased." Section 2822 of the General Code, above quoted, provides for a fee charged by the county surveyor "for calculating the contents of a tract not exceeding four sides, six cents, and for each additional line ten cents."

From a consideration of these sections, and the authorities above quoted, I am of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that the county surveyor may charge a fee for ascertaining the boundaries of land sold at a forfeited land sale, when requested so to do by the county auditor, under section 2822 G. C., and that this fee should be paid from the amount received for the lands at the sale.

Now the two remaining questions are, may the auditor, if he finds such lands do not exist, refund the money to the purchaser, and may he, in such cases, correct his duplicate "by taking off the tracts of lands which are included in the lands of other owners."

The first of these questions is answered in the affirmative by an opinion of this department rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, on May 4, 1916, in which he held such money could be refunded by the auditor under sections 2589-90. I agree with this opinion and am enclosing you a copy of same.

The remaining question, then, is, can the auditor correct his duplicate.

Section 2588 G. C. reads:

> "From time to time the county auditor shall correct all errors which he discovers in the tax list and duplicate, either in the name of the person charged with taxes or assessments, the description of lands or other property or when property exempt from taxation has been charged with tax, or in the amount of such taxes or assessment. If the correction is made after the duplicate is delivered to the treasurer, it shall be made on the margin of such list and duplicate without changing any name, description or figure in the duplicate as delivered, or in the original tax list, which shall always correspond exactly with each other."

In the case of Commissioners of Hamilton County v. Brasgears et al., 9 American Law Record, 626 (6 Dec. Rep. 1027), it is held:

> "Where through a clerical error of the county auditor in transcribing the number of acres of land to be valued by the decennial appraiser, and the appraiser values land that has no existence in fact, by reason of such mistake the auditor is authorized by 1038 R. S. to correct the valuation as well as description, and the commissioners are authorized to instruct the auditor to refund taxes paid upon such erroneous valuation, as provided in said section." (Section 1038 R. S. referred to above is now known as Section 2588 G. C.)

In this case the court say at page 627:

> "In this case by a clerical error of the auditor, the appraiser was led to assess real estate having in fact no existence whatever, giving it a valuation which would not have occurred but for the error of the auditor. The auditor in discovering his error corrected it, that is, as to the number of acres, but the valuation remains the same. The owner paid on an incorrect valuation. We think the error was not a fundamental error, but an error wholly clerical. An error of the hand, not of judgment and discretion, and the assessor having fixed a valuation of $2,500.00 to something that had no existence, it became the plain duty of the auditor, upon the request of the property holder to certify the fact to the commissioners, and for them to instruct him to draw his warrant for the amount of taxes so overpaid, and it became the duty of the auditor to correct the error in the valuation as well."

In the case of Christ v. Eihrich, 13 N. P. (n. s.) 457:

"One Harms had conveyed certain property in 1875, but in 1883 such property still apparently listed for taxation in the name of Harms, became delinquent and the same was sold at delinquent sale in January, 1883, to one Kelly, who paid the taxes then appearing due thereon as of record in the auditor's office, and received from the auditor the usual certificate of purchase, which certificate Kelly assigned, about a month later, to one Hill. In December, 1883, the auditor discovered that an error had been made, and refunded to Hill the money paid for the certificate of purchase at said tax sale. The auditor, then, as appears by the agreed statement of facts, upon which this case is submitted, made an entry 'on the tax sale records of his office on the same lines where said tax sales are recorded' in the following words: 'Double entry; money refunded December 5, 1883.' The auditor, however, did not take this parcel of land from the tax duplicate, but the same was still carried in and remained listed in the name of said Hill."

Concerning this situation the court said at page 465:

"Evidently the attention of the auditor, however, was called to the mistake in December, 1883, by Hill, who then owned or held the certificate of purchase given Kelly, and the money paid therefor was refunded to Hill. It appears that the auditor at the time, upon the discovery of this mistake, made an entry on the tax records of his office on the same lines where said tax sales are recorded, to the effect that it was a double entry, and the money was refunded December, 1883. The auditor at this time had knowledge of the mistake, and it was his plain duty to take this parcel of land from the tax duplicate; this he failed to do."

In answer, therefore, to your last question, I am of the opinion that the auditor has authority to and should correct his tax duplicate in these cases as soon as the error is apparent from the surveyor's report, noting in the margin thereof his reasons therefor.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FRANCHISE—WHEN GRANTED BY MUNICIPALITY AND SAME IS SILENT AS TO DURATION—IT IS SIMPLY INDETERMINATE AND NOT PERPETUAL—COUNCIL HAS NO AUTHORITY TO GRANT EXCLUSIVE FRANCHISE TO LIGHTING COMPANY IN PUBLIC HIGHWAYS—MAY GRANT FRANCHISE TO SECOND COMPANY AND FIX MAXIMUM RATE FOR CURRENT AT A LESS RATE THAN FIRST COMPANY.

Where a contract between a municipal corporation and an incorporated company is silent as to the duration of the franchise, such franchise is not perpetual but the duration thereof is simply indeterminate existing only so long as the parties mutually agree thereto.

A city council has no authority, under the powers granted and conferred upon it by the legislature as they now exist, to grant an exclusive franchise to an electric lighting company in the public highways of said city.

Where an electric lighting company has a franchise to use the public highways of a city for the purpose of furnishing electricity to the city and its citizens and the maximum rate to be charged by said company was mutually fixed by the city council and the company for a definite period of time, the city council may grant a franchise to a competing electric company and may fix by mutual agreement with said company the maximum rate to be charged by it for electric current at a less rate than that provided in the agreement in force with the other company.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 21, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 9, 1917, you submitted to me for an opinion the following request:

> "The Circleville Light and Power Company, of Circleville, Ohio, has been granted the right by the city council to use the public highways of said city for the purpose of erecting and maintaining poles and wires for the purpose of furnishing electricity for light, heat and power to the city and its citizens, but no provision was made in the ordinance for the duration of the franchise or right to use the public highways, and the maximum rate to be charged by said company was mutually fixed for a period of ten years in a separate ordinance from the franchise ordinance and said period has not yet expired.
> "In view of the foregoing statement of facts:
> "1. Is said franchise perpetual?
> "2. Is said franchise exclusive?
> "3. If said franchise is not exclusive may the council of said city grant a franchise to a competing electric company and fix by mutual agreement with said company the maximum rate to be charged by it for electric current at a less rate than that provided in the agreement in force with the other company."

The first question that you present for solution was considered by the supreme court of Ohio in the case of East Ohio Gas Co. v. City of Akron, 81 O. S. 33. The phraseology of the franchise granted the East Ohio Gas Co. by the council of the city of Akron was practically identical with that of the franchise granted to the Circleville Light and Power Co. except that the first one related to a gas company while the one in question here is an electric company, but the principles of law involved are the same. The fourth syllabus in said case reads as follows:

> "Where the contract between a municipal corporation and an incorporated company is silent as to the duration of the franchise, such franchise is not perpetual but the duration thereof is simply indeterminate, existing only so long as the parties mutually agree thereto. The incorporated company may therefore voluntarily forfeit its right to exercise its privileges within the municipality and wholly withdraw therefrom; but in such case the municipality has no right to prevent the incorporated company from removing its property, nor to take possession of and make use of the same, nor to grant the right to use the same to another company, without due process of law."

It is apparent, therefore, that the doctrine laid down as aforesaid is applicable to the particular case presented by you in that the franchise in question is indeterminate as to the extent in point of time as a general proposition, but inasmuch as the council and the company have mutually agreed upon the furnishing of electricity by said company to the city and its citizens at not exceeding a certain rate for a certain definite period of time, that the franchise is determined as to that period and amounts to a contract that is binding upon both parties and enforcible by either. When the period mutually agreed upon for the exercise of the franchise by the furnishing of current by said company at a certain rate has expired, the franchise then assumes again its character of being indeterminate and may be terminated by either party at will.

Answering your first question specifically, I am of the opinion that the franchise in question is not perpetual, but the duration thereof is simply indeterminate, existing only so long as the parties mutually agree thereto.

Your second question is whether or not the franchise is exclusive in its scope. It is my understanding that the franchise proper contains no provision stating that the rights of the grantee in the public highways of said city are exclusive. The only right given is that, as stated above, to use the public highways for the purposes mentioned; but regardless of that the supreme court of Ohio has held in the leading case of State ex rel. v. Cincinnati Gas, Light and Coke Co., 18 O. S. 262, that in the absence of an express grant by the legislature or an implication from the powers expressly granted so strong as to make its existence free from doubt, that a city council has no authority to grant an exclusive right to use the streets and alleys of a city for public utility purposes. No such express grant of power or implication of such strong character as required was found in the powers given a city council by the legislature and the court held that the franchise right was not exclusive.

This case has been cited time after time by the supreme court and the rule of law as to exclusiveness of a franchise has been sustained by the supreme court repeatedly; and there is no question but what the doctrine as set forth therein is the law of the state today, the theory being that to hold a franchise exclusive in this respect would amount to the creation of a monopoly and it is contrary to public policy and the best interests of the public to grant exclusive privileges. The power of municipalities with respect to granting exclusive franchises has not been changed in substance since the decision was made in the leading case hereinbefore mentioned, and, hence, a city council has no right to grant a monopoly and thereby place restraint upon the right of competition at a future date when some other city council might feel that it would be better to have competition in the furnishing of some certain public commodity.

Hence, for the reasons given above, I am of the opinion that the franchise granted the electric company in question is not exclusive and that under the powers granted and conferred upon a municipality by the legislature as they now exist no right is given a city council to grant an exclusive franchise to an electric lighting company in the public highways of such city.

Your third question is, if council has fixed a maximum price for one company does that fact prevent council within ten years from fixing a lower maximum price for another company.

Sections 3982 and 3983 of the General Code read as follows:

> "The council of a municipality in which electric lighting companies, natural or artificial gas companies, gas light or coke companies, or companies for supplying water for public or private consumption, are established, or into which their wires, mains or pipes are conducted, may regulate from time to time the price which such companies may charge for electric light, or for gas for lighting or fuel purposes, or for water for public or private consumption, furnished by such companies to the citizens, public grounds, and buildings, streets, lanes, alleys, avenues, wharves and landing places, or for fire protection. Such companies shall in no event charge more for electric light, natural or artificial gas, or water, furnished to such corporation or individuals, than the price specified by ordinance of council. The council may regulate and fix the price which such companies shall charge for the rent of their meters, and such ordinance may provide that such price shall include the use of meters to be furnished by such companies, and in such case meters shall be furnished and kept in repair by such companies and no separate charge shall be made, either directly or indirectly, for the use or repair of them.
> "Sec. 3983. If council fixes the price at which it shall require a company to furnish electricity or either natural or artificial gas to the citizens, or public buildings or for the purpose of lighting the streets, alleys, avenues, wharves, landing places, public grounds or other places or for other purposes, for a period not exceeding ten years, and the company or person so to furnish such electricity or gas assents thereto, by written acceptance, filed in the office of the auditor or clerk of the corporation, the council shall not require such company to furnish electricity or either natural or artificial gas, as the case may be, at a less price during the period of time agreed on, not exceeding such ten years."

It is clear from the provisions of the two foregoing sections of the General Code that the right is vested in the city council to determine the maximum rate that may be charged by an electric light company for current furnished to the city and its citizens. If said company agrees to and assents to such rates fixed by council and files its written consent in the office of the city auditor, then the relationship between the city council and the company is a contractual one and is binding for and during the period for which such rates are fixed, not exceeding ten years. (Gas & Fuel Co. v. City of Chillicothe, 65 O. S. 186.) This relationship, however, goes only to the extent that the city council has no right during the time fixed to require the light company to furnish current at a less rate than the maximum amount determined upon and on the part of the light company that it has no right during the same period to demand in excess of that amount.

The contract does not vest in the light company the right to have no competitors who might furnish electricity at a less rate for, as has been considered heretofore, the franchise right that the company acquires is not exclusive in its nature.

The case of Gas & Fuel Co. v. Columbus, 16 O. D., N. P., 359, is in point on the particular question and seems to be the only case in Ohio as far as I have been able to find that has passed on the exact question. The opinion is a well considered one and syllabi 2, 3 and 4 contain the principles of law applicable to this question and are as follows:

> "2. Monopolies are odious, and it is contrary to public policy and the best interests of municipalities to grant exclusive privileges which will in effect create them; hence, if a municipal corporation has fixed the maximum price of natural gas under favor of Rev. Stat. 2478, 2479, and a company has accepted the provisions of the ordinance and engaged in supplying gas thereunder, injunction will not lie to restrain such municipality from fixing a lower maximum price for a competing company.
> "3. An ordinance fixing the price which may be charged for natural gas by a competing company does not, as a matter of law, operate as a requirement that the company engaged in selling gas under a prior ordinance fixing a higher maximum rate shall furnish gas at the reduced price fixed by such latter ordinance, and does not, therefore, impair the obligation of the contract of the old company.
> "4. A gas company will not be heard to attack an ordinance fixing the price at which gas may be sold by a new competing company on the ground that, being general in its nature, it lacks uniform operation, where it appears that the complaining company is allowed under the terms of a prior ordinance to sell gas at a higher price than its competitor will be, under the new ordinance."

The following excerpt from the opinion of the supreme court in the case of City of Columbus v. The Columbus Gas Co., 76 O. S. 339, also sets forth some general principles that are applicable to the particular situation:

> "The defendant and its assignor, the Columbus Gas Light and Coke Company, under prior ordinances and the one under consideration have occupied and used many of the city streets and grounds for the transaction of its business for over half a century, and when the last ordinance was passed and accepted, both the city and the company were facing the future, not knowing what it might unfold as to new means of furnishing light. The company was content with past profits, and would venture upon the unknown future. If its profits are now behind it, the city should not be tied to the destiny of the company and be obliged to exclude other gas and electric companies, to the great detriment of its inhabitants. What time has developed, the company must be held to have contemplated.
> "In respect to the gas company, the contract may now be a hard one to comply with, but there are innumerable instances in business life where contracts of parties have become hard and unprofitable, yet the courts cannot discharge from liability on that ground, for such risks were assumed when the contracts were made."

In view of the foregoing, therefore, I am of the opinion, answering your question specifically, that the council of the said city of Circleville may grant a franchise to a competing electric company and fix by mutual agreement with said company the maximum rate to be charged by it for electricity at a less rate than that provided in the agreement in force with the other company.

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY INFIRMARY—SUPERINTENDENT NOT PUBLIC OFFICER—NOT REQUIRED TO HAVE QUALIFICATIONS OF ELECTOR.

The superintendent of a county infirmary is not a public officer and therefore not required to have the qualifications of an elector.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 22, 1917.

HON. J. H. FULTZ, Prosecuting Attorney, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 3rd you addressed the following inquiry to this office:

> "In the examination under the civil service laws of our state an elector and citizen of the United States and having a residence in the state of Ohio of six months wishes to take the competitive examination by appointment under the civil service laws of Ohio for superintendent of the county infirmary. Would he be eligible to appointment provided he obtained a passing grade?"

The ultimate question involved is as to whether or not the superintendent of the infirmary is an officer. If he is, then under article XVI, section 4, of the Constitution, he must have the qualifications of an elector. Otherwise this is unnecessary.

His duties are defined by G. C. section 2523.

The supreme court has decided that he is not an officer. (Palmer v. Zeigler, 76 O. S., 210.)

Your inquiry, of course, is answered in the affirmative.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TEXT BOOKS—PUBLISHERS SHOULD FILE SAME TOGETHER WITH PRICE LIST WITH SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION EACH FIVE YEARS—THE FIVE-YEAR PERIOD IN SECTION 7710 APPLIES ONLY TO THE FILING OF SAID LIST.

Under G. C. 7710 providing a school book commission and for filing text books with the superintendent of public instruction, it is necessary to file a given text book with the published list wholesale price each five years.

The five-year period mentioned in said section applies to such filing, and does not refer to the five-year period provided in section 7713, during which a board of education may not make a change of text books.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 22, 1917.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of January 22, 1917, requests my opinion as follows:

"Please give us your construction on these parts of sections 7709, 7710, 7711, 7712 and 7713 G. C., which apply to the following:

"(1) How often should publishers file their books and prices in order to do business continuously in Ohio?

"(2) To what does the five year period of time mentioned in General Code section 7710 apply, the filing period or the furnishing period?"

Your inquiry involves the consideration and construction of the sections of the General Code which provide for the filing of text books and the prices thereon by the publishers, with the superintendent of public instruction of Ohio, the fixing of maximum prices thereon by the commission designated for that purpose and the adoption of such text books by boards of education.

General Code section 7709 provides as follows:

"Any publisher or publishers of school books in the United States desiring to offer school books for use by pupils in the common schools of Ohio as hereinafter provided, before such books may be lawfully adopted and purchased by any school board, must file in the office of the superintendent of public instruction, a copy of each book proposed to be so offered, together with the published list wholesale price thereof. No revised edition of any such book shall be used in common schools until a copy of such edition has been filed in the office of the superintendent together with the published list wholesale price thereof. The superintendent must carefully preserve in his office all such copies of books and the price thereof."

General Code section 7710 provides:

"When and so often as any book and the price thereof is filed in the office of the superintendent of public instruction as provided in section 7709, a commission consisting of the governor, secretary of state and superintendent of public instruction, immediately shall fix the maximum price at which such books may be sold to or purchased by boards of education, as hereinafter provided, which price must not exceed seventy-five per cent. of the published list wholesale price thereof. The superintendent of public instruction immediately shall notify the publisher of such book so filed, of the maximum price fixed. If the publisher so notified, notifies the superintendent in writing that he accepts the price fixed, and agrees in writing to furnish such book during a period of five years at that price, such written acceptance and agreement shall entitle the publisher to offer the book so filed for sale to such boards of education."

The answer to your first question is found, if not expressly, by absolutely necessary implication, in section 7710 G. C.

If the publisher in the manner therein provided agrees to furnish the book for five years at the price fixed by the commission provided in such section, there is no occasion for filing the book again within that period, as the agreement to furnish it for that time at that price obviates any further necessity for filing again during that period.

To be exact about it, the five-year period would commence at the beginning of the contract period, which in the nature of the case is very shortly after the filing of the book. The compliance with this section, so to speak, fixes a modus vivendi for this period and establishes a contract relation between the publisher on one side and the superintendent on behalf of the schools of the state on the other side. There would appear no doubt of this construction if the attention be confined to this section alone, as there is only one five-year period mentioned. Some doubt seems to be cast on it, however, by the provisions of section 7713 forbidding the change of text books for the period of five years after the date of the adoption thereof. Inasmuch as a text book might be adopted at any time during the five years of the contract relation above provided, leaving a period of less than five years at which it could be obtained for that price, it might be argued that the five-year period was variable, and that it meant five years in each case from the adoption of the book by the local board. Such construction, however, does violence to the language of section 7710, and is unnecessary in order to reconcile the two sections. The provision against a change for five years is simply for the prevention of frequent and unreasonable changes. The price might be changed during the five years that a book was adopted and used by a local board, but this could work no injury or injustice to the local board, as the changed price would be fixed by the commission above provided and in contemplation of the trend of events at the time of the enactment of these statutes the expectation would have been that the price would be reduced as during a long period the production of books, as all other articles depending upon constantly improving methods of manufacture was cheapening, but whether the changed price be lower or higher can work no mischief or at least no injustice to the ultimate purchaser of the text book, the period of five years being fixed by the legislature as a reasonable time during which the price might remain unchanged.

This discussion necessarily disposes of the second question along with the first, and your two questions are, therefore, answered. First, the publisher should file his books and list prices thereon every five years; second, the five-year period of time mentioned in section 7710 applies to the filing of the copy in the office of the superintendent of public instruction and the fixing of the price as provided in that section.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General

ASSESSORS AND ASSISTANT ASSESSORS—FORM OF BOND NOT REQUIRED TO BE CHANGED BY AMENDMENT TO SECTION 3350—FORM OF OATH TAKEN BY ASSISTANT ASSESSOR CHANGED.

Amendment of section 3350 of the General Code by senate bill 177 does not require a change in the form of bond to be furnished by assessors and assistant assessors, but necessitates a change in the form of oath taken by the latter.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 23, 1917.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have at hand your letter of March 10, 1917, in which you say:

> "The commission is enclosing herewith blank forms of bond of assessor and bond of assistant assessor, the form for which was prescribed by your predecessor. The form for bond of assessor was used in the case of assessors elected in November, 1915, and the same were executed for a term of two years commencing on the first day of January, 1916.
> "The commission presumes that it will not be necessary for assessors who have already executed this bond to execute another bond, unless a change in the form of the bond is necessitated by the passage of the new tax law. There will no doubt be a number of vacancies, however, which will have to be filled by appointment, and such assessors will be required to execute bonds.
> "The commission desires to know whether you approve of the form herewith enclosed for use in such cases, and, if you do not, requests that you prescribe a form as required by section 3351 of the General Code as re-enacted in senate bill No. 177. You are also requested to prescribe a form of bond of assistant assessor if any change in the form herewith enclosed is necessary by the passage of senate bill No. 177. While this bill has not yet become a law, the commission is anticipating its passage so that it may be prepared to furnish the bonds promptly."

By way of answer to the inquiry made by you I beg to say that I see nothing in the provisions of senate bill No. 177 which makes necessary any change in the form of the bond of an elected assessor or in the form of the oath of office made by him. Neither do I see anything in the provisions of senate bill 177 which necessitates any change in the form of the bond to be given by an assistant assessor.

Section 3349 of the General Code is neither repealed nor amended by the proposed new law, and hereafter, as before, assessments of property will be made territorially by the cities, wards or districts and by villages and townships.

The various acts and defaults which, under section 3351 as amended in senate bill No. 177, make the assessor and the assistant assessor liable on their respective bonds are the same as those mentioned in section 3351 as amended in the Parrett-Whittemore bill. Neither has there been any change in the amounts named as the penalty in the bond to be given by the assessor and assistant assessor respectively.

Under section 3350 of the General Code, as amended by the new law, the assistant assessor of any ward, district, village or township is appointed by the elected assessor instead of by the county auditor as now provided in section 3350 of the General Code. However, as to this the recital in the bond of an assistant assessor need only be that:

"he has been duly appointed assistant assessor," and therefore no change in the form of such bond in this respect is made necessary by the change in the provisions of section 3350 of the General Code with respect to the manner of appointing such assistant assessor.

Under the provisions of section 3350 of the General Code, as amended, it may be doubted whether the orders, rules and regulations of the county auditor with respect to the assessment of property operate directly on an assistant assessor inasmuch as under the provisions of said section, as amended, such assistant assessor performs his duties under the immediate direction of the assessor.

Section 5367 of the General Code, requiring the county auditor to instruct assessors as to their duties, has not been changed in any manner by the new law, except as to the time of meeting, and in as much as it will clearly be the duty of an assistant assessor appointed under the provisions of section 3350 of the General Code, as amended, to conform in the performance of his duties with all competent and lawful orders and instructions of which he is advised by the assessor, I see no substantial reason for making any change in the conditions prescribed in the form of the bond of an assistant assessor in this respect. The same can be said of the conditions in said bond requiring an assistant assessor to observe the orders, rules and regulations of the tax commission of Ohio. In any event, the conditions in said bond form with respect to the observance of orders, rules and regulations of the county auditor and the tax commission of Ohio can only refer to such orders, rules and regulations as may be completely and lawfully made, and I see no substantial reason why the bond form should be changed in this respect.

The provisions of section 3350, as amended, do not provide for the term or period of time for which the assistant assessor is to be appointed, but neither, for that matter, do the present provisions of section 3350, so this matter can be left in blank the same as is provided for in the form of an assistant assessor's bond prepared by my predecessor.

It is obvious, however, that change must be made in the form of the oath taken by an assistant assessor appointed under the provisions of section 3350 of the General Code, as amended. Such oath, to comply with the provisions of section 3352 should be in the following form:

"OATH OF OFFICE

"State of Ohio, _____ county, ss:

"I, _____do hereby solemnly swear (or affirm) that I will support the Constitution of the United States, the Constitution of the State of Ohio, and that in the capacity of assistant assessor for_____ (Here insert the name of ward or district of the city, or of the village or township for which said assistant assessor has been appointed.)

"_____County, Ohio, to which office I have been appointed, I will faithfully and impartially perform the duties imposed upon me by law.

WIDOWED MOTHER—WHO HAS RECEIVED COMPENSATION FROM INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION NOT BARRED FROM RECEIVING ALLOWANCE UNDER MOTHER'S PENSION ACT.

The mere fact that a widowed mother has been allowed compensation by the industrial commission of Ohio will not, standing alone, prevent her from receiving an allowance under the mother's pension act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 23, 1917.

HON. HOMER L. BOSTWICK, Probate Judge, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 27, 1917, as follows:

> "Will you kindly give us an opinion on the following questions which have come up in regard to a mother's pension allowance?
> "(a) Would a mother be entitled to a pension whose husband is dead but had not taken out naturalization papers in this country?
> "(b) Would a mother be entitled to a pension who has been allowed compensation through the industrial commission of the state?"

Your first question is answered in the affirmative in an opinion of this department rendered March 5, 1917, to Bernard M. Focke, prosecuting attorney, Dayton, Ohio, in which it was held:

> "Under the provisions of the law relating to mothers' pensions, the widow of an unnaturalized person is entitled to a pension under the same conditions as if the widow of a naturalized citizen."

For your information I am enclosing a copy of this opinion.

Answering your second question, section 1683-2 reads in part as follows:

> "For the partial support of women whose husbands are dead, or become permanently disabled by reason of physical or mental infirmity, or whose husbands are prisoners or whose husbands have deserted, and such desertion has continued for a period of three years, when such women are poor, and are the mothers of children not entitled to receive age and schooling certificate, and such mothers and children have a legal residence in any county of the state for two years, the juvenile court may make an allowance to each of such women as follows: * * *"

Section 1683-3 sets out the conditions which must obtain before a mother's pension can be allowed to any mother. They are as follows:

> "First, the child or children for whose benefit the allowance is made, must be living with the mother of such child or children; second, the allowance shall be made only when in the absence of such allowance, the mother would be required to work regularly away from her home and children, and when by means of such allowance she will be able to remain at home with her children, except that she may be absent for work for such time as the court deems advisable; third, the mother must in the judgment of the juvenile court be a proper person, morally, physically and mentally for the bringing up of her children; fourth, such allowance shall in the judgment of the court be necessary to save the child or children from neglect and to avoid the breaking up of the home of such woman; fifth, it must appear to be for the benefit of the child to remain with such mother;"

It will be noted that section 1683-2 G. C. provides that these mothers may be entitled to pensions "when such women are poor," and section 1683-3 provides that "the allowance shall be made only when in the absence of such allowance the mother would be required to work regularly away from her home and children." A mother may be receiving an award from the industrial commission of Ohio and still be "poor" within the meaning of section 1683-2. It may be too that the allowance allowed by the industrial commission is insufficient to allow the mother to refrain from working "regularly away from her home and children." These are questions of fact to be decided by the court, but, in answer to your second question, it is my opinion that the mere fact that a widowed mother has been allowed compensation by the industrial commission of Ohio will not, standing alone, prevent her from receiving an allowance under the mother's pension act.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—WHEN NO BIDS ARE RECEIVED WITHIN ESTIMATE UNDER 6946—MAY AMEND ESTIMATE—READVERTISE, AND ACCEPT BID IF WITHIN AMENDED ESTIMATE.

Under section 6946 G. C. the county commissioners may, if they receive no bids within the estimate, amend the estimate and proceed to advertise again under the provisions of section 6945 G. C., and under said second advertisement let the contract, provided there are bids within the amended estimate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 23, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your communication of March 19, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to a certain matter set out therein, was received. Your communication reads as follows:

> "In a certain county of the state, the commissioners recently asked for bids for the construction of a road, but received no bids at the engineer's estimate of the cost.
> "May the commissioners now order a re-estimate and sell same under the provisions of section 6946 of the General Code, 106 O. L. 607, without readvertising at the original estimate?"

The question you have in mind arises from the fact that the language used in section 6946 G. C. is not altogether consistent. Undoubtedly the language used in this section is not the exact language that the legislature intended to use to express ideas it had in mind, but it remains for us to place a construction upon the language used, in order to arrive at the course which ought to be pursued thereunder, and not to construe the language that might have been used by the legislature in giving expression to its views.

The difficulty arising under the provisions of this section is due to the fact that it provides:

> "Sec. 6946. * * * If no bids are made within the estimate, the county commissioners may amend the estimate, and again proceed to advertise at the original estimate, for bids. * * *"

That is, the section provides that the county commissioners may amend the estimate, but further provides that if they proceed to advertise further for bids, they shall advertise at the original estimate, thus apparently rendering the amended estimate of no force or effect.

Now, the question is as to whether such a construction can fairly be placed upon this statute, as to render said provisions harmonious. It is my opinion that the phrase "at the original estimate" is mere surplusage, as used in said section, and has no force or effect whatever. To establish this assumption, I desire to call attention to the provisions of several other sections of the same act.

Section 6911 G. C. provides:

> "When the board of commissioners have determined that any road shall be constructed, improved or repaired, as herein provided for, such board * * * shall order the county surveyor to make such surveys, plats, profiles, cross-sections, estimates, and specifications as may be required for such improvement. * * *"

For what purposes and with what object in view is the county surveyor ordered to make such surveys, plats, profiles, etc., and how are they to be used in reference to the question of advertising for bids and the letting of the contract under such advertising?

Section 6945 G. C. provides for advertising for bids, which section reads in part as follows:

"After the commissioners have decided to proceed with said improvement, they shall advertise for bids. * * * Such notice shall state that plans and specifications for such improvement are on file in the office of the county commissioners, and the time within which bids will be received. * * *"

Now, it will be noticed that under the provisions of this section, in reference to advertising, no part of the above information is used with the exception of the "plans and specifications." The estimate of the cost and expense of such improvement is not required to be set out in the advertisement at all under the provisions of said section. The estimate has nothing to do with the matter of advertising. In fact, it is doubtful whether it is for the best interests of the county that the bidder should be informed as to the estimate of the cost and expense of the proposed improvement.

If one were to build a house and decided that he had five thousand dollars to invest, and no more, in a certain kind of a property, the last thing he would do would be to give this information to those who were about to bid for the construction of the house, he well knowing that if the bidders knew the amount of money he had to invest, no bidders would fall very far below the amount fixed by the one who had the building of the house in mind; and it undoubtedly works out along the same line when persons bid for the construction of a public work. If they know that the estimated cost and expense of said improvement is fixed at a certain amount and that the contract cannot be let at a figure above the estimate, but can be let at any figure within the estimate, the general inclination will be to make the bids at a figure not very much below the estimate.

So that while the law does not forbid the setting out of the estimate in the advertisement for bids, yet it can fairly be stated that the estimate does not form any material part of the advertisement for bids, and that the law possibly does not contemplate that the estimate should be set out in the advertisement for bids.

That the law does not contemplate the setting out of the estimate in the advertisement for bids would seem evident from this provision of section 6946 G. C.:

"No contract for any improvement shall be awarded at a greater sum than the estimated cost thereof. * * *"

To be sure, if the bidders know what the estimated cost of the improvement is, they will make no bid above the estimated cost and hence this provision of the law is rendered almost nugatory.

Now, if the conclusion is correct that the estimate has no place whatever in the advertisement for bids, what is the force and effect of the phrase "at the original estimate," found in section 6946 G. C.? None whatever. And the section as it is written means nothing more than it would mean if said phrase "at the original estimate" were omitted from the section.

Hence, it is my opinion that said section should be construed as if it read as follows:

> "No contract for any improvement shall be awarded at a greater sum than the estimated cost thereof. The bids received shall be opened at the time stated in the notice. If no bids are made within the estimate, the county commissioners may amend the estimate, and again proceed to advertise for bids, but the county commissioners shall have the right to reject all bids."

Therefore, it is my opinion that the county commissioners in the case suggested by you may, if they so desire, amend the estimate of the cost and expense of the proposed improvement, and again proceed to advertise for bids under the provisions of section 6945 G. C., and let the contract to the lowest and best bidder thereunder, provided the bid is within the amended estimate.

There is another construction which can be placed upon section 6946 G. C., which would lead to exactly the same conclusion and which in my opinion is possibly what the legislature intended to do, and that is to read said section, substituting the word "or" in the place of the word "and," which is always allowable in the construction of statutes. The section would then read:

> "Sec. 6946. No contract for any improvement shall be awarded at a greater sum than the estimated cost thereof. The bids received shall be opened at the time stated in the notice. If no bids are made within the estimate, the county commissioners may amend the estimate, or again proceed to advertise at the original estimate, for bids, but the county commissioners shall have the right to reject all bids."

If this construction is placed upon the statute, the county commissioners in the case suggested by you would have one of two courses open for them to follow. The one would be that they might amend the estimate and proceed to advertise under section 6945 G. C. for bids, or they might proceed to advertise for bids a second time under section 6945 G. C., and not amend the original estimate. As I said before, I am rather of the opinion that this was the intention of the legislature.

In section 1207 G. C. we find the following provision made in reference to advertising for bids for intercounty highways or main market roads:

> "* * * If no acceptable bid is made within the estimate, the state highway commissioner may either readvertise the work or amend the estimate * * * and * * * again proceed to advertise for bids. * *"

Thus in this section we find that the state highway commissioner has one of two courses open to him, which he may pursue. And when we remember that this statute is one complete scheme for road building, not only as it applies to the state, but to the counties and townships as well, it is my opinion that the same provision was meant to be included in section 6946 G. C. as is found in section 1207 G. C.

But even though we assume the latter construction of this section to be the correct one, yet the county commissioners in the case suggested by you may, if they desire, proceed to amend the estimate and then advertise for bids under section 6945 G. C., and let the contract to the lowest and best bidder, provided any of said bids be within the amended estimate.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICERS COMPATIBLE—COUNTY CORONER AND MAYOR OF VILLAGE.

The offices of county coroner and mayor of a village are not incompatible and may be held by one and the same person.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 23, 1917.

HON. C. C. CRABBE, Prosecuting Attorney, London, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 20, 1917, as follows:

> "There is a vacancy in the office of county coroner, and the commissioners are about to appoint Dr. A. F. Green, who is mayor of the village of West Jefferson, this county.
> "As to many county offices the statute designates who cannot be elected to such office, but is silent as to county coroner.
> "In your opinion will the duties of county coroner and mayor of a village be incompatible.
> "The commissioners would like to make this appointment on next Monday, and I will be pleased if you can give me your opinion on this matter in the meantime."

The rule of common law incompatibility is stated by the court in the case of State ex rel. v. Gebert, 12 C. C. (n. s.) 274, as follows:

> "Offices are incompatible when one is subordinate to or in any way a check upon the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

I have carefully examined the statutes relating to the duties of a county coroner and mayor of a village and have been unable to find anything that prohibits one person from holding both of these offices under the foregoing rule.

I am, therefore, of the opinion, in direct answer to your question, that a village mayor may also serve as coroner of the county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

IN DETERMINING WHETHER OR NOT FIFTY-ONE PER CENT. OF THE LAND OWNERS HAVE SIGNED PETITION FOR CONSTRUCTION OR REPAIR OF HIGHWAY—ONLY RESIDENT LAND OWNERS ARE TO BE FIGURED AS A BASIS OF COMPUTATION.

In arriving at a conclusion as to whether fifty-one per cent. of the land or lot owners have signed a petition asking for the construction, reconstruction or repair of a public road under Sec. 6907 G. C., none but resident lot or land owners are to be included in the number to be used as a basis of computation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 24, 1917.

HON. CHARLES L. BERMONT, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 14, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to a certain proposition therein set out. Your communication reads as follows:

> "I desire to submit the following for an opinion:
> "A petition has been filed with the commissioners of this county, asking for the improvement of a road under the provisions of section 6906 and following of the General Code. There are seventy-seven land or lot owners who will be specially taxed for this improvement, seven of whom are non-residents of Knox county, leaving seventy resident land owners, thirty-six of whom have signed the petition.
> "The question now arises, have the petitioners the required 51 per cent. of the land or lot owners.
> "I have advised the commissioners that the required 51 per cent. have not signed the petition and base my opinion on a comment upon sections 6907, 6908 and 6909, given by Judge Wm. M. Rockel, in his work on Ohio Roads and Bridges, in which he gives as his opinion that non-resident land or lot owners are to be counted against the petition.
> "The parties petitioning for this improvement are not content with my ruling on the subject and I, therefore, desire a ruling from your department as to whether non-resident land or lot owners are to be counted against the improvement or not. In other words would it take 51 per cent. of all the lot or land owners or just 51 per cent. of the resident land owners?"

Your question briefly stated is as to whether non-resident property owners, who are to be benefited in the construction, reconstruction or repair of any public road, are to be counted in the total number of property owners so to be benefited by an improvement. This especially when said total number of property owners so benefited is to be used as a basis of computation in arriving at a conclusion as to whether fifty-one per cent. of the property owners who are to be especially taxed or assessed for said improvement have signed the petition.

I note in your communication that you have rendered an opinion to your board of county commissioners to the effect that non-resident property owners are to be included in the total number of property owners in arriving at a conclusion as to whether fifty-one per cent. of the total have so signed the petition asking for the improvement.

You state that there are seventy-seven land or lot owners who will be especially taxed for the particular improvement now under consideration by your county commissioners. Seven of these land or lot owners are non-residents of Knox county, leaving seventy who are resident land owners, and that thirty-six of these land or lot owners have signed the petition asking for the improvement. Of course it is evident that, if the non-resident lot owners are to be included in the total number, fifty-one per cent. of the total number have not signed the petition, but if the non-resident land or lot owners are not included in the total number, then fifty-one per cent. of said owners have signed the petition asking for the improvement, inasmuch as thirty-six is more than fifty-one per cent. of seventy, but on the other hand it is less than fifty-one per cent. of seventy-seven.

While the construction of sections 6907, 6908 and 6909 of the General Code and the language used by Rockel in his work on Roads and Bridges might warrant the construction you have placed upon these statutes and the conclusion you have drawn therefrom, yet in my opinion your conclusion is not correct.

In the first place I am assuming that the petition filed with the county commissioners sets out the method of paying the compensation, damages, costs and expense thereof under section 6919 of the General Code and whichever one of these different methods has been selected under the petition will control as to the number of lot or land owners who are to be benefited under and by virtue of said improvement. This is evident from the fact that you set out in your communication that there are seventy-seven different land or lot owners included under the terms and conditions set out in the petition.

Section 6907 G. C. reads as follows:

> "When a petition is presented to the board of commissioners of any county asking for the construction, reconstruction or repair of any public road or part theref, as hereinafter provided for, signed by at least fifty-one per cent. of the land or lot owners, residents of such county, who are to be specially taxed or assessed for said improvement as hereinafter provided, the county commissioners shall go upon the line of said proposed improvement within sixty days after such petition is presented and, after viewing the proposed improvement, shall determine whether the public convenience and welfare require that such improvement be made."

The question immediately arises under the above section as to the effect the words "residents of such county" have upon the remaining part of the section. In my opinion "residents of such county" modifies "of the land or lot owners." That is, the number of land or lot owners upon which the fifty-one per cent. is based, is land or lot owners residents of such county. The only other construction that could be placed upon these words would be that they modify fifty-one per cent. instead of land or lot owners, which words they immediately follow. But it is my opinion that said words "residents of such county" do not modify fifty-one per cent. but modify "land or lot owners." So that if the construction placed upon this section by me is correct wherever "land or lot owners" is used in the following sections of this statute it always refers to resident land or lot owners.

I am the more firmly convinced that the construction placed upon this section is correct by the provisions of section 6909 G. C. It will be noted in this section that "in determining whether the required number of persons have signed the petition asking for said improvement, necessary to give the county commissioners jurisdiction thereof, the following persons shall not be counted: Resident land owners whose only real estate within the territorial bounds of such road is located in a municipality." There are three other exceptions in said section, viz.: Owners of life and leasehold estates; minors and tenants in common, unless all the tenants in common unite as one person.

Now let us notice carefully the reading of this section. It says that "resident land owners whose real estate is located in a municipality." If it were intended that non-resident land owners should be used in connection with resident land owners in arriving at the conclusion as to whether fifty-one per cent. of the total number of land owners had signed the petition, there would have been no reason or occasion for using resident land owners because the same rule that applies to resident land owners would apply to non-resident land owners, providing they were both to be used together as a basis for determining the question as to whether fifty-one per cent. had signed the petition or not.

There is another provision in this section to which I desire to call your attention and that is the following:

> "All tenants in common of any undivided estate, resident within the county shall be counted as a unit, and if all are not united either for or against the improvement, none of such tenants in common shall be counted in determining whether the requisite number of persons have signed such petition."

Now why use the words "resident within the county?" Because it was evidently the intention of the legislature to include none but resident land owners in the matters above set forth, even in the case of tenants in common. If one tenant in common resided out of the county and all the other tenants in common resided within the county, and the tenants in common residing within the county would agree one way or the other, they would count as a single unit either for or against the improvement. Hence, it is my conclusion that it is evident that it was the intention of the legislature not to include non-resident land owners in the matter of arriving at the conclusion as to whether fifty-one per cent. of the land or lot owners to be benefited by the improvement had signed the petition asking for the improvement.

Further, I believe this construction of the statute would be borne out by the practical side of the question. It might be very difficult and inconvenient for those interested in the construction, reconstruction or repair of any public road to get into communication with the land owners who are non-residents of the county. They might not only be non-residents of the county, but they might be non-residents of the state. Further, those land owners who reside outside of the county might not be much interested in having the road constructed, reconstructed or repaired for the reason that they would not possibly be in position to use the same after it would be so improved. Hence, it seems to have been the intention of the legislature, from the construction that can readily be placed upon the said statutes and from looking at the practical and reasonable side of the proposition, that non-resident land owners should not be included as a basis upon which to determine whether fifty-one per cent. of the owners of land to be benefited have signed a petition asking for the improvement.

Answering your question directly it is my opinion that, under the facts set out in your communication, fifty-one per cent. of the land or lot owners have signed the petition.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ABUTTING PROPERTY OWNERS—CANNOT BE RELIEVED OF THE PAYMENT OF 10 PER CENT. OF COST OF IMPROVEMENT OF INTERCOUNTY HIGHWAYS AND MAIN MARKET ROADS.

There is no provision of law relating to the construction of intercounty highways and main market roads by which the abutting property owners may be relieved of all or any part of the ten per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement as provided for by statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 24, 1917.

HON. ROY R. CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 7, 1917, in which you ask my opinion with reference to a matter therein set out. Your communication reads as follows:

> "The state highway commissioner and the county commissioners of Jefferson county have entered into an arrangement for the improvement of about three miles of an intercounty highway, the improvement to start at the boundary line between Jefferson county and Harrison county, beginning near Hopedale and extending eastwardly towards Steubenville. The improvement is along a free turnpike, the road bed of which is ten feet wide. The improvement will consist of widening this road bed to a width of sixteen feet, and the construction of a ten foot dirt road alongside; the old pike to be scarified; the surface of the road, as improved to sixteen feet in width, to be Tarva bond. Of course you will see that this is not repair work, but it is an improvement amounting to almost reconstruction.
> "The property owners on either side are still paying between five and six mills on a bond issue for the payment of this original pike, and will continue to pay probably until about 1925. Referring to section 1217 G. C., that is Sec. 210 of the Cass road law, the latter part thereof reads:
> "'In no case shall the property owners abutting upon said improvement be relieved by the state, county or township, from the payment of ten per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement, excepting therefrom the cost and expense of bridges and culverts, provided the total amount assessed against any abutting property does not exceed thirty-three per cent. of the valuation of such abutting property for the purposes of taxation.'
> "The question that confronts our county commissioners is must the said abutting property owners pay ten per cent. of this improvement irrespective of the fact that they are still assessed for the original bond issue for the original pike. Neither the commissioners nor the trustees of the township through which the improvement extends contemplate that the abutting property owners should pay any of this improvement."

Your query briefly stated is as to whether the state highway department, the commissioners of your county and the township through which a certain highway passes could make such arrangements as to relieve the abutting property owners entirely from paying any part of the cost and expense of the improvement. In your communication you make reference to section 1217 of the General Code and rather infer that there is doubt as to whether such a result could be obtained as you suggest.

It seems to be the policy of the statutes having to do with the construction of intercounty highways or main market roads that the abutting property owners shall in all cases pay ten per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement, less the cost of the construction of bridges and culverts.

In noticing this matter I desire to call your attention to a number of sections of the statutes which seem to indicate the above policy.

First, let us note the provisions of section 1191 of the General Code. In this section provisions are made for the state highway commissioner to construct highways in any county of the state, either by contract or by force account, or in such manner as he may deem for the best interests of the public, wherein neither the county commissioners nor the township trustees of any township in the county make application for state aid. It is to be noted that in this section provision is made that ten per cent. of the cost of said construction or improvement shall be assessed against the land abutting thereon according to the benefits.

Section 1194 G. C. provides that the county commissioners or township trustees may expend any amount available by law for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of intercounty highways or main market roads within the county, providing the county commissioners or township trustees by resolution agree to pay the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount received from the state, and the amount assessed against the abutting property owners.

Section 1214 G. C. provides how the cost and expense of the improvement of intercounty highways and main market roads shall be apportioned among the county, the township or townships, and the abutting property owners, which is as follows: "The county shall pay twenty-five per cent. of all cost and expense of the improvement. Fifteen per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement, except the cost and expenses of bridges and culverts, shall be apportioned to the township or townships in which such road is located. Ten per cent. of the cost and expense of improvement, excepting therefrom the cost and expense of bridges and culverts shall be a charge upon the property abutting on the improvement."

Section 1217 G. C. to which you make reference in your communication, provides that the county commissioners of any county may agree to relieve the township trustees of any part or all of the apportionment of the cost and expense of the improvement which would under the statutes be assessed against said township or townships, and the county assume that part of which the township or townships is relieved. Or on the other hand, the township trustees may in like manner relieve the county of any part or all of the share which would be assessed against the county under and by virtue of the provisions set out in section 1214. It further provides that if the application for the improvement is made by the township trustees that the state may assume all or any part of the county's proportion of the cost of said improvement. Thus it is seen that provision is made by which the state, county and township may assume a greater or a lesser portion of the cost and expense than is provided for by statute. But there is no provision made whereby the abutting property owners may be relieved of any portion of the cost and expense of the improvement as set out in the statute. On the other hand it is provided, as you suggest, in section 1217 G. C. that "in no case shall the property owners abutting upon said improvement be relieved by the state, county or township, from the payment of ten per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement, excepting therefrom the cost and expense of bridges and culverts." Of course, it is to be noted that this assessment can in no case be greater than thirty-three per cent. of the valuation of such abutting property for the purposes of taxation.

Now, in view of all the above, it is my opinion that there is no provision of law which would warrant or authorize your county and the township through which the contemplated improvement passes to relieve the abutting property owners of any part or all of said ten per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement, other than the cost and expense of the construction of bridges and culverts, for which construction it is provided that the county and the state must each pay half, thus relieving the townships and abutting property owners of any part of this cost and expense.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNCIL—MAY ISSUE BONDS TO IMPROVE WATERWORKS SYSTEM THAT HAS BECOME INADEQUATE BECAUSE OF SUDDEN GROWTH OF COMMUNITY—LEGISLATION IMMEDIATELY EFFECTIVE—EMERGENCY WITHIN MEANING OF MUNICIPAL REFERENDUM LAW.

The inadequacy of a village water plant resulting solely from the remarkable and sudden growth of the community and creating a dangerous situation with respect to domestic water supply, sanitation and fire protection, is an "emergency" within the meaning of the municipal referendum law, section 4227-3 G. C., and the council, in issuing bonds to improve and extend the system, may lawfully declare it such and make its legislation immediately effective.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 26, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a request for opinion from Hon. L. M. Keyes, city solicitor of East Palestine, Ohio, which I deem of sufficient state-wide importance to merit an opinion and am therefore sending an opinion to you thereon. The question involved is as follows:

The present water supply of the village of East Palestine is greatly inadequate for the needs of the village. The residents of certain districts have found themselves without water on repeated occasions, and the situation as regards fire protection is thought to be alarming.

There has been no breakdown in the village plant, nor on the other hand has there been any neglect or inattention to the maintenance of the plant. The situation results solely from the remarkable and sudden growth of the community, which, extending through a period of some months, at first exhausted, then surpassed the capacity of the plant.

May the council issue bonds for the purpose of improving and extending the plant and system, without waiting for the prescribed referendum period to elapse, by declaring that an emergency exists under the above circumstances?

At the outset I may say that there is in my own mind some question as to whether or not an issue of bonds under the Longworth act is subject to a referendum at all, except as therein provided, i. e., when the amount of the bonds to be issued, or that will be outstanding when the issue is made, exceeds certain specified percentages. I assume, of course, that in this case such necessity does not exist; but if it does exist by reason of the fact that the amount of the bonds which it is necessary to issue will cause the limitations of sections 3939 et seq. of the General Code to be exceeded, then I am of the opinion that the popular vote, required to be taken in the manner provided by sections 3943 to 3947 inclusive G. C., is a complete substitute for the referendum. That is to say, if it is necessary to submit the issue to a popular vote anyhow, by reason of the debt limits, it would seem ridiculous to require an additional vote on the same question, especially since the Longworth law referendum must carry by the votes of two-thirds of the electors voting thereon, while that provided by the general law requires the affirmative concurrence of a majority only.

See on this point the reasoning in Drum v. Cleveland, 13 N. P. (N. S.) 281, which, however, was unfortunately reversed by upper courts without report, and is therefore not a clear authority for the proposition submitted. (See 88 O. S. 619.)

Considerations of the kind just referred to do, as I have said, raise some doubt in my mind as to whether the action of the council of a municipal corporation, in issuing bonds under sections 3939 et seq. G. C., is ever subject to a referendum under sections 4227-1 et seq. G. C., even when the action of council under the former sections would otherwise be final.

This question, however, is involved in so much doubt that I make no holding thereon, but assume that in your case the council desires to proceed, and, so far as the Longworth act limitations are concerned, can proceed, without a vote of the people, to issue bonds, which action it is desired to make effective as quickly as possible, without waiting for the referendum period to elapse; and it will be likewise assumed, without argument, that the referendum provisions of the General Code do apply to the council under such circumstances.

It will not be necessary to quote extensively from the sections last mentioned.

Section 4227-3 G. C. provides, by way of exception to all the remaining provisions of the several sections in the series, that

> "emergency ordinances or measures necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety in such municipal corporation, shall go into immediate effect. Such emergency ordinances or measures must, upon a yea and nay vote, receive the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to the council or other body corresponding to the council of such municipal corporation, and the reasons for such necessity shall be set forth in one section of the ordinance or other measure. * * *"

A question which immediately arises is as to whether, when council has declared that an ordinance or measure is of an emergency character necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, etc., and shall go into immediate effect, and has properly set forth in a section of the measure the reasons for such necessity, the existence of the emergency, or the sufficiency or truth of the reasons set forth therein are open to collateral attack.

Decisions of other states, where the initiative and referendum is in force by constitutional provisions of this same general character, are not in strict accord with respect to this general question.

However, the supreme court of this state in Miami Co. v. Dayton, 92 O. S. 215, seems to have settled this question so far as the constitutional referendum is concerned, by the following paragraph of the syllabus:

> "11. The judgment of the general assembly as to the emergency character of an act, under the constitutional amendment of 1912, is not conclusive, but its judgment in that behalf may be challenged in a proper proceeding at any time within the ninety-day period, either as to the constitutional vote or the emergency character of the act."

The reasoning here would seem to apply as well to the municipal referendum as to that which is a part of the legislative machinery of the state as a whole, especially in view of the reservation in article II, section 1f of the Constitution, to the people of the municipality of "the initiative and referendum powers."

It will therefore be assumed that council cannot, by the fiat of its own legislation, create an emergency, but that the condition, upon which an ordinance or other measure may go into immediate effect, must have actual objective existence, open to ascertainment by the courts in a proper proceeding for that purpose.

That the principles governing the state referendum apply substantially to the municipal referendum is well established by the decision in Shryock v. Zanesville, 92 O. S. 375. The last cited decision presents a state of facts somewhat like that which has been submitted, but the legal questions which are raised are not answered therein.

In my opinion the facts as they are stated do constitute an emergency. The fiscal affairs of a municipal corporation, like those of other taxing districts, are put by the laws upon an annual basis. That is to say, the municipal officers are required to anticipate, far in advance, the needs of a given fiscal year. While they may, and in the exercise of reasonable discretion are required to set aside a proper amount for unforeseen contingencies in the several funds, yet they can not be expected, even in this way, to anticipate the excessively abnormal. The taxing authorities of a growing community should of course foresee a normal growth. But if, as stated, there has been an immense and unprecedented growth, entirely unforeseen at the time the annual estimates were made, such growth, though in the nature of the case not instantaneous, must be regarded as an emergency.

In other words, an emergency implies the idea of an unexpected event or series of events occurring with suddenness and which could not reasonably be foreseen. What amounts to a sudden occurrence may be influenced, I think, by the rapidity of action which may be possible under the law to meet its consequences. The springing up of a large addition to a municipal corporation through a course of several months is a sudden occurrence, as compared with the promptitude with which the taxing authorities may in the usual mode acquire additional revenue to care for the newly created need.

It might be answered that while all these considerations are true, yet if the council of the village had undertaken the initial legislation now contemplated, several months ago, while the remarkable growth of the community was in progress, the referendum period could have been awaited and the municipality would have been in no worse situation than it now is. The conclusiveness of such an answer, however, depends upon the reasonableness of official action or non-action; that is to say, where there has been no actual neglect of existing facilities and no actual failure to appreciate the reasonably anticipated future needs of a community, the mere fact that the council did not awake to the rapidly changing situation at an earlier date will not of itself defeat the existence of the emergency.

Weighing all the considerations in the light of such incomplete facts as I have before me, I conclude that if there has been a sudden and abnormal acceleration in the growth of the population of the community, which could not, in the exercise of reasonable official discretion, be foreseen, and if, the officials of the village being reasonably diligent, they have nevertheless failed to appreciate the significance and ultimate effect of such abnormal growth until it has progressed to the point where the public health and safety is immediately in danger, an emergency exists.

Of course, under the section above quoted, two things must unite in order to enable the council to put its measure into immediate effect, viz., the occurrence of an emergency, and, as a result thereof, a necessity for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety. I have no difficulty on the second of these two requisites. It is so clear as not to require argument, that a condition of inadequacy of water supply, such as that which you describe, does greatly and immediately endanger both the public health and public safety.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—NO AUTHORITY TO ISSUE BONDS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT UNDER SECTIONS 7033 TO 7052 G. C. INCLUSIVE—REPEALED BY CASS HIGHWAY LAW.

The township trustees have no authority or power to proceed to improve highways and issue bonds to take care of the expense and cost of the same under sections 7033 to 7052 inclusive G. C., for the reason that said statute was repealed by the Cass highway act and a different plan of road building adopted therein.

Opinion No. 978 of my predecessor distinguished.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 26, 1917.

HON. SUMNER E. WALTERS, Prosecuting Attorney, Van Wert, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 6, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to the matter set out therein. Your communication reads as follows:

> "Under and by virtue of an act of the general assembly of Ohio, passed April 12, 1900, entitled 'An act to authorize township trustees to create road districts and improve the roads therein,' the township trustees of Harrison township, Van Wert county, Ohio, created the whole of said township into a road district by resolution passed March 17, 1903; and by resolution on the same date declared the necessity for borrowing $100,000 to improve the roads therein, and also by resolution on the same date, provided for submitting the question of improvement and issuing of $100,000 worth of bonds to a vote of the electors at an election to be held April 6, 1903.
> "The vote at said election was 174 for improvement and bond issue and 86 against it.
> "All of this $100,000 authorized to be issued was issued and sold and again, on May 5, 1911, the trustees determined by resolution to submit to the electors the question of further improving the roads and issuing the further sum of $100,000 to be submitted at an election held on May 31, 1911. The vote at said election was 115 for further improvement and issue of $100,000 and 93 against.
> "Of this authorization $25,000 of the bonds were issued June 5, 1911, and sold June 12, 1911; $10,000 of the bonds were issued April 30, 1913, and sold June 7, 1913, and $10,000 of the bonds were issued April 17, 1915, and sold May 29, 1915, and there now remains unsold of the last $100,000 authorization $55,000.
> "They would like to make further sale of bonds up to the limit of this last authorization but hesitate on account of the provisions of the Cass road law which repealed the law under which these bonds were authorized. It seems to me that under the provisions of section 303 of the Cass road law, these trustees have proceeded far enough under the act of April 12, 1900, so that they now ought to be able to complete the sale of bonds authorized, especially as fast as they would be permitted under the $100,000 outstanding limitation of the law of April 12, 1900.

"I am familiar with the opinion numbered 978 of the former attorney-general, given October 27, 1915, under which he held the trustees of Washington township, Belmont county, Ohio, could issue bonds authorized under this repealed law if they did so within a reasonable time, provided, of course, that the proceedings under the law of April 12, 1900, had been regular and in conformity to said law.

"I would like to have your opinion as to whether or not these trustees can proceed to issue and sell the remaining authorization of bonds at times and in amounts so as not to have outstanding and unpaid more than $100,000 as provided in the law under which the authority to issue was granted. There are three or four townships in this county in the same position that Harrison township is now, and they are awaiting with interest your opinion in this matter, which I hope you will not delay."

The answer to the question set out in your communication is to be found in sections 7033 to 7052 inclusive G. C. Let us note briefly the provisions of said statutes, first leaving out of consideration the question of election provided for therein.

Section 7033 G. C. provides that:

"The board of trustees of a township, when in their opinion, it is expedient and necessary, and for the public convenience and welfare, to improve the public ways of the township, * * * may create the township into a road district for the purpose of improving the public ways therein, or any number of them. * * *"

Section 7035 G. C. provides:

"In order to provide means for improving public ways in such road district, the trustees, if in their judgment it is expedient and necessary to do so, may borrow money and issue bonds of the road district for the payment thereof. * * *"

Let us now consider the question of the election provided for in said statutes. It is provided that before the improvement of any of the public ways shall be undertaken and

"before bonds shall be issued to pay for such improvements, the question of improving the public ways and of issuing bonds shall be submitted to the qualified electors of the road district, at a general or special election."

This provision is found in section 7037 G. C.
Then in section 7042 G. C. we have the following:

"* * * If a majority of the votes cast upon such question, at such election, are in favor of the proposition, the trustees shall improve the public ways of such road district and issue bonds to provide means therefor."

Now, let us notice what provisions are made in said statutes for proceeding after the result of the election is shown to be in favor of the improvement and of issuing bonds.

Section 7045 G. C. provides that:

"Thereupon the trustees shall determine the order and manner in which the public ways shall be improved, beginning, so far as practicable, with the main roads. * * *"

Section 7049 G. C. provides as follows:

"The bonds so provided to be issued shall be sold at not less than par and accrued interest, in such quantities as is deemed expedient by the trustees, * * *."

Section 7036 G. C. provides as follows:

"The trustees shall not cause to be outstanding more than one hundred thousand dollars par value of such bonds of such road district, at any one time; nor issue, under any single vote, more than the aggregate amount stated in the notice of the election therefor."

Section 7035 G. C. also provides that:

"The bonds may be issued at such times, and in such amounts, as the work progresses, as, in their judgment, may be necessary."

It is plainly evident from the foregoing that everything in connection with the question of improving the roads of the said road district is placed within the discretion of the trustees of the township. They decide as to the roads to be improved, the order in which they are to be improved, the times at which bonds are to be issued and the amount of bonds to be issued up to the amount authorized by the election. It will be noticed that the statute does not provide that the full amount of bonds authorized shall be sold, but merely that the trustees shall not exceed the amount provided for.

The election settles nothing other than to get the consent of the voters of the road district to proceed with the improvement and to issue bonds for the improvement. After the consent is given, the whole matter of proceeding with the improvement is set out in the statutes and is up to the sound discretion of the trustees.

I know that section 7042 G. C. says that "if a majority of the votes cast upon such question, at such election, are in favor of the proposition, the trusteees shall improve the public ways of such road district and issue bonds to provide means therefor," but when read in connection with the other sections of the statute I am of the opinion that this means no more than that the board of township trustees has authority to proceed under the provisions of the statute.

Hence, when the entire statute is repealed, in which are set out the terms and conditions under which the trustees of any road district may proceed, the trustees no longer have power to act. So far as the election is concerned, the trustees have permission to act, but in so far as the legislature is concerned they have no authority to act. And as the latter body sets forth all the terms and conditions under which the trustees should proceed, the authority to proceed ceases when the statute containing said terms and conditions is repealed.

Supposing the legislature, without the intervention of an election, had conferred upon the board of trustees of any township the same powers and the same authority as set out in the statute under consideration, that is, gave the township trustees the authority to create a road district, and gave them power to borrow money and to issue and sell bonds up to a limit of $100,000; and supposing the trustees had proceeded to issue and sell bonds up to the amount of $45,000 as your trustees have done, during the time that said law was in force and effect; then, as in this case, the law be repealed under which the trustees were acting; what then would have been the powers and authority of the trustees to have issued bonds after the repeal of the statutes?

Their authority would cease with the repeal of the statutes. Their power would have been at an end. We would all agree as to that proposition. We would agree to the above proposition, notwithstanding the fact that the law which repealed the statute under which said trustees had been acting contained a saving clause, saving certain rights which had arisen during the existence of the former statute.

If such a conclusion is warranted where no election intervenes, it is my opinion that the same conclusion must be drawn where an election intervenes, as is provided under said statute. The said board of trustees certainly received no additional powers, no more extended authority, by virtue of the election, than they would have had under the provisions of the statute without the intervention of an election. As was said before, the results of the election simply gave the trustees permission to proceed with the improvement and with the issuing of bonds under and by virtue of the terms and conditions of the statute. And when these terms and conditions were no longer in force and effect because of the repeal of the statute, the power and authority to proceed with road improvements and the issuing of bonds therefor ceased.

Futhermore, the legislature at the same time that it repealed said statute, under which you ask whether your township trustees could proceed, provided another and different plan by which the highways of a township shall be repaired and built and a different method by which the township trustees shall proceed in said matter. This plan is found in sections 3298-1 et seq. G. C., and in many respects differs in terms and conditions from the statute under consideration. So that I am of the opinion that it was not the intention of the legislature that the township trustees should proceed further under the statute repealed, but that they should proceed under the provisions of the new law.

You suggest in your communication that you are of the opinion that the saving clause found in the act known as the Cass highway act would warrant your township trustees in proceeding to further improve the highways of your township and to issue bonds to take care of the cost and expense of the same, up to the limit of $100,000.

Let us note the reading of section 303 of said Cass highway act, which contains the saving provisions referred to by you:

> "This act shall not affect or impair any contract or any act done, * * * prior to the time when this act or any section thereof takes effect, under or by virtue of any law so repealed, but the same may be asserted, completed, enforced, * * * as fully and to the same extent as if such laws had not been repealed. The provisions of this act shall not affect or impair any act done or right acquired under or in pursuance of any resolution adopted by the board of commissioners of any county, the trustees of any township, or the commissioners of any road district prior to the time of the taking effect of this act, * * *."

There are two parts to this saving clause, first, in reference to contracts and acts done. The statute provides that the provisions of this act shall not affect or impair any contract or any act done. But there is no contract or act done in the case presented to me which would be impaired by holding that the township trustees can proceed no further under the said statute.

The saving clause further provides that this act shall not affect or impair any act done or right acquired under or in pursuance of any resolution adopted by the trustees of any township, but there is no act done or right acquired which would be affected by holding that your township trustees can proceed no further. It is true they had permission to proceed further, under and by virtue of the results of the election, but they performed no act and entered into no contract which would be impaired by holding that their authority under the statutes is at an end.

Further, you suggest that you are familiar with opinion No. 978, rendered by my predecessor in office. I feel that this opinion ought not to be extended beyond the facts as they existed in that case. You will note in that case that the township trustees had proceeded under the old act to advertise the sale of ten thousand dollars worth of bonds, the sale to be made September 8, 1915, just a few days after the Cass highway act took effect. Thus, certain acts had been done and certain rights had been acquired which would be protected under and by virtue of the saving clause of the Cass highway act.

And it is further to be noted that said opinion, in holding that the balance of the fifty thousand dollars' worth of bonds, namely, forty thousand dollars' worth of bonds, might be sold, specifically provided that this must be done in a reasonable time, that is, must be done in such a time that the issuing of the fifty thousand dollars' worth of bonds might be considered almost as one act.

The facts in your case are different. Nothing has been done by your trustees for almost two years. Hence I think your case is readily distinguished from the case in which my predecessor rendered opinion No. 978.

Therefore, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the board of trustees of your township has no authority to proceed further to improve the highways of said road district and to issue bonds to take care of the cost and expense of said improvement.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

RURAL BOARD OF EDUCATION—MUST PROVIDE TRANSPORTATION FOR PUPIL MORE THAN TWO MILES DISTANT FROM SCHOOL—FUNDS MAY BE RAISED UNDER SECTION 5656 G. C.

It is the duty of a rural board of education to provide transportation for pupils as provided by General Code section 7731. If sufficient funds are not available for that purpose, relief may be had in General Code section 5656.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 27, 1917.

HON. D. F. MILLS, Prosecuting Attorney, Sidney, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of March 12, 1917, you ask my opinion upon the following facts:

"The board of education of one of the rural school districts in this county has neglected and refused to provide transportation for certain pupils living in said district, and who reside more than two miles from any school, on the ground that they have not sufficient funds with which to provide for such transportation. The parents of the pupils have taken the matter up with the state superintendent of public instruction and he has written several letters to the county board of education insisting that they provide transportation for such pupils, as provided in section 7731 G. C.

"The county board of education has submitted the matter to me, and in view of the claim of the local board they want to know as to whether or not they are compelled to furnish such transportation.

"I have in my possession a copy of the court's decision in the case of the State of Ohio ex rel. Charles P. Stringer, plaintiff, v. W. A. Zellars et al., defendants, in the court of appeals of Harrison county, Ohio. It seems to me that this case clearly holds that while the statutes specifically say that the county boards of education shall furnish transportation in such cases, and may charge it back to the board of education of the local school district, yet there is no authority or power given the county board of education to compel such payment. As the county board of education has no funds under their control from which to pay for such transportation, in view of the decision of the court above referred to, I have advised them that they are without authority to proceed in the matter.

"I enclose herewith a copy of the decision above referred to for your consideration. I have been unable to find any other authorities or decisions in connection with this matter.

"I would be pleased to have your opinion as to the powers and duties of the county boards of education, in cases such as I have outlined above under the law as it now exists."

General Code section 7731 provides in part:

"In all rural * * * school districts where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school, the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such school. * * * When local boards of education neglect or refuse to provide transportation for pupils, the county board of education shall provide such transportation and the cost thereof shall be charged against the local school district."

I anticipate that you would have little trouble in applying the above quoted section of the General Code as the law governing the facts related in your letter if it were not for the decision in the case of State ex rel. Stringer v. Zellers et al., in the court of appeals of Harrison county, unreported. I have given said case careful consideration and I cannot see how the court, under the circumstances and state of pleadings in that case, could have decided differently, but the state of facts in that case should carefully be distinguished from the facts in your case, and that same may be done I desire first to quote from said opinion.

"It is contended in this case on the part of counsel for relator that there is a duty imposed first upon the local board to furnish transportation to scholars living more than two miles from school and if the local board fails or neglects to furnish transportation, then it is the duty of the county board of education to furnish transportation and to charge the cost of this transportation up to the local school district. It is ordinarily true, as argued by counsel for relator, where there is a clear right on the part of the relator to the remedy asked, then it is the duty of the court to issue the writ. Many authorities are cited, and the rule, as we understand it, is well established that it is ordinarily the duty of the court, where there is no question as to the right of the relator to the remedy, to issue the writ of mandamus. The situation in this case, however, is somewhat different. The only defendants before this court are the members of the board of education of Harrison county. Those representing the Hopedale school district are not before this court.

"The statute provides, first, as I have said, that the members of the board of education of the local school district shall furnish transportation for scholars living more than two miles from the school that in case this board fails or neglects to perform this duty then there is a duty imposed upon the board of education of the county to furnish transportation to such scholars. While this statute provides that the board of education of the county, in case the local board fails, shall furnish transportation for the scholars living more than two miles from the school, yet it makes no provision by which the board of education of the county may pay or provide pay for this transportation. All that it does is to provide that the board of education of the county may charge it back to the board of education of the local school district. Suppose that the board of education of the local school district (refuse to pay), there is no authority given to the members of the board of education of the county to compel payment, and as I said, while there is a duty imposed upon the board of education of the county by this statute, there is no means given to the board of education of the county to carry out the provisions of that statute, and that being true, if this court shall issue the writ, as prayed for in this case, and the board of education should fail to carry out the orders of this court, the members of the board undoubtedly would be in contempt of court. Now, should this court issue an order knowing that the members of the board have no means to comply with that order, which might place the members of that board in contempt of court if they failed to do a vain or impossible thing. * * * We feel that these questions can only be determined by bringing the Hopedale school board before the court and allowing all the questions to be determined; that it would not be fair to that board, nor fair to the Hopedale school district, for this court to undertake to determine many of the questions which have been suggested here, in the absence of the local board.

"In the present condition of this case the writ of mandamus will have to be refused."

In your case, as in the case above quoted, the local board and the county board have both refused to provide transportation and the opinion of the court, above quoted, instead of preventing the enforcing of the provisions of General Code 7731, simply maps out the correct course to follow in the enforcement of said provisions. That is to say, instead of endeavoring to compel a supervisory board, one which has not the power to levy taxes or has not at its disposal funds for other than special limited purposes, and one which cannot establish and maintain schools, to furnish transportation, you would bring your action, if action is necessary, against the board which has the power and is compelled to furnish and maintain the schools for the pupils and is given authority to pay for all things necessary and incidental to the carrying out of those purposes.

It was held by my predecessor in opinion 612, in which he followed his predecessor in an opinion dated November 5, 1914, that rural boards of education may borrow money under the provisions of General Code section 5656 to pay for the transportation of pupils to the public schools, where transportation is required. I concur in the conclusion reached in both of said opinions and advise you that if your rural board of education is without funds to pay for the transportation of said pupils and there is no means of establishing a school within the limits where transportation is not required, it is their duty to furnish said transportation and to borrow money as aforesaid to pay for same.

In case said transportation is furnished and said money is borrowed, it is clearly the duty of the board to levy a tax to raise sufficient funds for the proper redemption of notes or bonds issued on account of said indebtedness. An action in mandamus will lie to compel the board of education to levy such tax if there is not sufficient funds in the treasury otherwise.

7 Ohio State, 327;
6 Ohio State, 280;
27 Ohio State, 102.

I am also of the opinion that an action in mandamus will lie against the board of education of a rural district compelling it to furnish such transportation.

General Code section 12283 provides:

"Mandamus is a writ issued, in the name of the state, to an inferior tribunal, a corporation, board or person commanding the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins from a duty resulting from an office, trust or station."

What could be clearer than the language of General Code section 7731 in relation to the transportation of pupils, when means are provided to carry out the act to be performed.

It was held in State ex rel. Board of Education, 35 O. S., 383, that the relator, a resident taxpayer of the city of Cincinnati, and the father of a child of school age, who was attending the city schools, and for whose use in school he had purchased certain books, had, therefore, a pecuniary and also a parental interest in having the public schools of the district controlled and conducted in the manner prescribed by statute and that these interests are sufficient to enable him to maintain a proceeding in mandamus to compel the board to perform its legal duty toward him and his child.

Also in Board of Education v. State, 45 O. S. 555, it is held that an action in mandamus is a proper procedure to compel the admittance of colored children to the public schools of the state.

It was also held to be the proper remedy to compel a board of education to fix a teacher's salary in State ex rel. Board of Education, 4 O. C. C., 93, and a long list of other cases in this state bearing indirectly upon the above proposition.

Holding these views, then, I advise you that the decision referred to by you in State ex rel., etc., v. Zellers, does not control the course of rural boards of education; that it is the duty of your rural board of education to provide transportation for pupils living more than two miles from school; and that where sufficient funds are not available for that purpose money may be raised therefor under the provisions of section 5656 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF CONTINENTAL VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 27, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"RE:—Bonds of the Continental village school district in the sum of $2,300.00, issued for the purpose of improving the school buildings, being one bond of $300.00 and four bonds of $500.00 each.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Continental village school district in reference to the above bond issue, and I find the same regular and in conformity to the provisions of the General Code.

I am of the opinion that said bonds drawn in accordance with the form submitted and executed by the proper officers will, upon delivery, constitute valid and binding obligations of the said district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF HIGGINSPORT VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT—VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT WITH TAX VALUATION OF LESS THAN $500,000 CANNOT EXIST UNLESS CARRIED BY VOTE OF ELECTORS OF PROPOSED DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 27, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"RE:—Bonds of Higginsport village school district, Brown county, Ohio, $1,200.00 being six bonds of two hundred dollars each."

The transcript of proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Higginsport village school district submitted to me for examination discloses that said district has total tax valuation of only $300,090.

Section 4681 of the General Code provides that:

"Each village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed, a total tax valuation of not less than $500,000 shall constitute a village school district."

Section 4682 of the General Code provides that:

"A village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, with a tax valuation of less than $500,000 shall not constitute a village school district, but the proposition of organizing the territory so formed into a village school district may be submitted by the board of education, and shall be submitted by the board of education, upon the presentation to it of a written petition for such purpose signed by 25 per cent of the electors of the territory thus formed, to a vote of the electors of the territory thus formed, at any general or special election called for that purpose and be so determined by a majority vote of such electors."

The transcript fails to show that the proposition to organize the village of Higginsport into a village school district has been submitted to and carried by a vote of the electors of said territory, and I am informed by Hon. John M. Markley, prosecuting attorney of Brown county, that no such vote was in fact ever taken.

Under the provisions of the General Code above quoted it is clear that a village school district cannot exist in Ohio unless the question of organizing the territory of the village into a school district has been submitted to and carried by a vote of the electors of the proposed district. There being then no village school district, it follows that the issuance of the bonds under consideration was unauthorized and the bonds themselves invalid.

Section 4682-1, General Code, as originally enacted in 103 Ohio Laws, at page 546, provided as follows:

"A village school district organized as a village school district at the time of the passage of this act, or that may be hereafter organized, which has a total tax valuation of less than $500,000 shall continue as a village school district, but the proposition to dissolve such village school district may be submitted by the board of education, and shall be submitted by the board of education upon the presentation to it of a written petition for such purpose signed by 25 per cent. of such village school district, to a vote of the electors of such village school district at any general or special election called for that purpose, and be so determined by a majority vote of such electors."

By virtue of this section a village school district organized as a village school district at the time of the passage of the act which had a total tax duplicate of less than $500,000 continued as a village school district until dissolved by a vote of the electors. This provision was, however, stricken out of the law by amendment of the section as it appears in 104 Ohio Laws, at page 546. It is clearly the legislative intent, therefore, that a village school district having a total tax valuation of less than $500,000 can no longer exist in Ohio unless its organization into such a village school district is submitted to and carried by the electors of such district. This conclusion is in accord with opinion No. 1847 rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, to Hon. S. W. Ennis, prosecuting attorney of Paulding county, August 12, 1916.

I therefore advise you that the bonds in question are invalid and that you should not purchase the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

INDEBTEDNESS—OF A SCHOOL DISTRICT THAT HAS BEEN TRANSFERRED UNDER SECTION 4692 G. C. TO ANOTHER DISTRICT—BECOMES CHARGE AGAINST NEW DISTRICT—MUST BE PAID BY TAX LEVY ON PROPERTY OF NEW DISTRICT—DIVISION OF FUNDS AND INDEBTEDNESS NOT JURISDICTIONAL TO POWER OF COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION TO MAKE TRANSFER—MAY BE MADE AT A LATER MEETING THAN ONE AT WHICH TRANSFER IS MADE—NO RIGHT OF APPEAL FROM ORDER OF COUNTY BOARD MAKING DIVISION—ORDER MAY BE REVIEWED BY ORIGINAL ACTION IN COMMON PLEAS COURT.

When a county board of education, acting under the provisions of Sec. 4692 G. C., abolishes a village school district by transferring the same to another village school district bonded or other indebtedness of such abolished school district become a charge on the school district to which it is transferred and may be paid by a levy of taxes on all the taxable property of the latter district as enlarged by the transfer.

The equitable division of the school funds and of the indebtedness which the county board of education under section 4692 G. C. is authorized to make on the transfer of the territory from one school district to another is not a matter jurisdictional to the power of the county board of education to make such transfer of territory; and such equitable division of the fund and the indebtedness may be made at a meeting later than the one at which the transfer of the territory is made.

There is no right of appeal from an order of the county board of education making such division of school funds and of the indebtedness, but such order may be reviewed by original action in the court of common pleas on the petition of the board of education of either school district affected by such order if the county board of education has been guilty of fraud or gross and intentional abuse of discretion in making such order.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 27, 1917.

HON. F. B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 5, 1917, asking for my opinion on the facts stated and questions raised by you as follows:

> "Malta and McConnelsville are adjoining villages situated in Morgan county, and under the jurisdiction of the county board of education of that county. The county board attached the entire territory embraced in the Malta school district to the McConnelsville village district and named the same, 'The McConnelsville-Malta school district.' At the time of the joining of the districts, Malta had certain bonded indebtedness and also something over $2,000.00 indebtedness under section 5656 of the General Code. It was borrowed without a vote and was secured by notes of the board and was incurred for the purpose of paying teachers and the janitor, the ordinary revenue not being sufficient.
> "There is no board of commissioners of the sinking fund or board of any kind for the purpose of providing for the payment of the debts above mentioned.
> "1. Is the board of education of the district as now constituted authorized to pay any or all of the indebtedness above mentioned?
> "2. In case the first question is answered affirmatively, must the levy for the payment of this debt be made on the appropriation of the entire enlarged school district or must a special levy be made upon that part of the newly created district which formerly constituted the Malta school district?

"3. As no adjustment was made of funds at the time of this transfer, will the county board have power to make an adjustment of the debt at a future meeting?

"4. Is there no appeal from the adjustment of debt or equitable division of funds made by county boards of education in such transfers of territory?"

I am further informed by your department that the action of the county board of education referred to in your communication was taken pursuant to the provisions of section 4692 of the General Code. By such action the whole of Malta village school district was transferred and attached to McConnelsville village school district. Section 4692 of the General Code is as follows:

"The county board of education may transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining district or districts of the county school district. Such transfer shall not take effect until a map is filed with the auditor of the county in which the transferred territory is situated, showing the boundaries of the territory transferred, and a notice of such proposed transfer has been posted in three conspicuous places in the district or districts proposed to be transferred, or printed in a paper of general circulation in said county, for ten days; nor shall such transfer take effect if a majority of the qualified electors residing in the territory to be transferred, shall, within thirty days after the filing of such map, file with the county board of education a written remonstrance against such proposed transfer. If an entire district be transferred the board of education of such district is thereby abolished or if a member of the board of education lives in a part of a school district transferred the member becomes a non-resident of the school district from which he was transferred and ceases to be a member of such board of education. The legal title of the property of the board of education shall become vested in the board of education of the school district to which such territory is transferred. The county board of education is authorized to make an equitable division of the school funds of the transferred territory either in the treasury or in the course of collection. And also an equitable division of the indebtedness of the transferred territory."

School districts, as other like subdivisions, are mere agencies of the state for governmental purposes and subject only to the restraint of constitutional provisions; the legislature has plenary power which provides for the change, transfer or dissolution as it sees fit.

Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, pages 266, 267 and 268;
State v. Powers, 38 O. S. 54, 61;
Maumee School Township v. School Town of Shirley City, 159 Ind. 423, 426; Merriweather v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 472, 511.

A constitutional provision having obvious application to state legislation providing for the change, transfer or abolishment of state subdivisions is that one of the federal constitution inhibiting to states the power to enact laws impairing the obligation of contracts.

Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith, 100 U. S. 514, 533.
Graham, etc., v. Folsom, 200 U. S. 248.

Consistent with the above noted principles it may be said that in the absence of statutory provision to the contrary, when one school district or other political subdivision is abolished by its transfer to another, the latter as the new or enlarged subdivision becomes entitled to all the property of the transferred or abolished subdivision and liable for all the existing legal debts and liabilities of such abolished district whether such indebtedness be bonded or otherwise.

Dillon on Municipal Corporations (5th Ed.), Vol. 1, page 624.
Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith, supra.

As often as the question has been made it has been held that when contiguous territory, whether incorporated as a municipality or otherwise, is annexed to a municipal corporation pursuant to statutory authority such annexed territory and the residents thereof may be taxed to pay pre-existing indebtedness of the municipal corporation to which such territory is annexed.

Powers v. County Commissioners, 8 O. S. 285.
Blanchard v. Bissell, 11 O. S. 96.

In the case of State ex rel. v. Cincinnati, 52 O. S. 419, it was held that an act of the legislature authorizing the city of Cincinnati as a city of the first grade of the first class to annex contiguous municipalities of other grades and classes was a subsisting and constitutional law and that it was not a valid objection to the statute or to the annexation under it that a municipal corporation might be so annexed without the consent of its constitutional authority or of its inhabitants. It was further held that it was no valid objection to the statute or to the annexation proceedings under it that the taxable property within such annexed municipality would become subject to taxation for the payment of previously incurred indebtedness of the city to which the annexation was made.

As a corollary to the proposition just noted it follows that taxable property in annexing municipalities may be taxed to pay existing indebtedness of the corporation annexed. Speaking to this point the court in the case of State ex rel. vs. Cincinnati, supra, at page 455, said:

> "Persons thus brought into the annexing corporation, and their property, like all its other inhabitants, and their property, receive and enjoy the benefits of all local improvements, and should share the burdens existing when the enjoyment commences; and, in like manner the inhabitants of the annexing corporation enjoy the benefits and share the burdens arising from the local improvements of the municipalities annexed. * * *"

In the case of Mt. Pleasant v. Beckwith, supra, it appears that the town of Racine in the state of Wisconsin issued bonds in the sum of $50,000.00 in payment of stock of a railroad company subscribed by it under legislative authority. Afterward the town of Racine was vacated or abolished by legislative enactment and its territory attached to the towns of Caledonia and Mt. Pleasant. Subsequently a part of the territory of the town of Racine attached to the town of Mt. Pleasant was detached by legislative enactment from the last named town and annexed to the city of Racine, a separate and distinct corporation from the town of the same name. An action was instituted by Beckwith, as the owner and holder of a number of said bonds, in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Wisconsin against said towns of Caledonia and Mt. Pleasant and the city of Racine. The case was referred to a master. The circuit court confirmed the report of the master and entered judgment against the defendants in the full amount of the bonds owned and held by plaintiff, with interest, and ordered that the defendants severally pay the same in proportion that the amount of taxable property of the town of Racine annexed to them respectively bore to the total value of the taxable property of said town. In reaching its judgment or decree said circuit court held that the property of individuals within the jurisdiction of the town of Racine constituted the primary fund to which the complainant had the right to look for the payment of his debts and that the transfer of the property to the jurisdiction of the towns of Caledonia and Mt. Pleasant and the city of Racine rendered them liable to pay the debt due to the creditors of the town whose powers and jurisdiction terminated by the transfer. The circuit court further held that the power of taxation previously vested in the town of Racine, which issued the bonds in question, was by the act annexing its territory to the defendant municipalities transferred to them to be severally exercised by them upon all the taxable property within their respective jurisdictions. These findings and conclusions of law made by the circuit court were assigned for error in the supreme court of the United States. That court, affirming the decree of the circuit court, in its opinion says:

> "Neither argument nor authority is necessary to prove that a state legislature cannot pass a valid law impairing the obligations of a contract, as that general proposition is universally admitted. Contracts under the constitution are as sacred as the constitution that protects them from infraction, and yet the defence in this case, if sustained, will establish the proposition that the effect of state legislation may be such as to deprive a party of all means of sustaining an action of any kind for their enforcement. Cases, doubtless, may arise when the party cannot collect what is due under the contract; but he ought always to be able by some proper action to reduce his contract to judgment.
> "Suppose it be admitted that the act of the state legislature annulling the charter of the municipality indebted to the complainant, without making any provision for the payment of outstanding indebtedness, was unconstitutional and void, still it must be admitted that the very act which annulled that charter annexed all the territory and property of the municipality to the two appellant towns, and that they acquired with that the same power of taxation over the residents and their estates that they previously possessed over the estates of the inhabitants resident within their limits before their boundaries were enlarged.
> "Extinguished municipal corporations neither own property, nor have they any power to levy taxes to pay debts. Whatever power the extinguished municipality had to levy taxes when the act passed annulling her charter terminated, and from the moment the annexation of her territory was made to the appellant towns, the power to tax the property transferred, and the inhabitants residing on it, became vested in the proper authorities of the towns to which the territory and jurisdistion were by that act transferred; from which it follows that for all practical purposes the complainant was left without judicial remedy to enforce the collection of the bonds or to recover judgment for the amounts they represent.

"When the appellant towns accepted the annexation, their authorities knew, or ought to have known, that the extinguished municipality owed debts, and that the act effecting the annexation made no provision for their payment. They had no right to assume that the annulment of the charter of the old town would have the effect to discharge its indebtedness, or to impair the obligation of the contract held by its creditors to enforce the same against those holding the territory and jurisdiction by the authority from the legislature and the public property and the power of taxation previously held and enjoyed by the extinguished municipality."

In the case of Clother v. Maher 15 Neb. 1, it was held that where one of several school districts consolidated under legislative authority was indebted on bonds previously issued for school purposes, upon such consolidation being effected the new district not only became invested with all property rights of the former, but also became answerable for its debts, and that a tax for their payment was properly levied on all the taxable property within the new district. The court in its opinion in this case says:

"It is not questioned by counsel for the plaintiff, nor could it be successfully, that the legislature had the power to make this consolidation and invest the new district with the property of the other two. Nor does it seem to be doubted that, in such case, in the absence of some different direction by the legislature, consistent with the rights of creditors, the new district is legally and equitably liable for the debts of the other two; that, succeeding as to their property, they succeed to their liabilities also. Such is the rule."

In the case of Thompson v. Abbott, 61 Mo. 176, it was held that where under statutory authority a township subdistrict became merged in an adjoining town or city for school purposes and the board of education of the municipality takes possession and control of the school property of the annexed subdistrict the municipal board will thereby assume an obligation previously incurred by the subdistrict and that to have that effect no direct promise or agreement of the municipal board was necessary. The court in its opinion in this case says:

"By the statute * * * it is provided that adjoining territory may be annexed to any city, town or village for school purposes, by the mutual agreement of the respective boards of education of such city, town or village, and of the township interested. Under the provisions of this law it seems that the annexation was made, and thereafter the subdistrict had no distinct organization. It was merged in the city corporation under the direction and control of its board of education. This latter body succeeded to all the rights and immunities previously enjoyed by the district board and was the only body in existence that possessed the power to adjust, settle and pay off its liabilities. Now, where one corporation goes entirely out of existence by being annexed to or merged in another corporation, if no arrangements are made respecting the property and liabilities of the corporation that ceases to exist, the subsisting corporation will be entitled to all the property, and be answerable for all the liabilities. After subdistrict No. 3 had ceased to exist, there was then no power remaining as an independent organization in its behalf to control its funds or pay off its indebtedness. Its property passed into the hands of the defendant, and when the benefits were taken, the burdens were assumed. The pleadings admit that plaintiff's claim is a just and honest debt, and that the annexation took place, and that defendant obtained possession of and control over the property of the subdistrict which owed the debt. Then, manifestly, it became liable for its obligations."

Other cases supporting the proposition above discussed are:

McDonald v. School District No. 1, 10 Iowa 469.
Hoffield v. Board of Education, 33 Kan. 644.
Goulding et al. v. Inhabitants of Peabody et al., 170 Mass. 483.

On the considerations above noted it follows that unless statutory provision can be found affecting the first and second questions made by you the answer to the same is that the board of education of the school district as now constituted should pay the indebtedness of the Malta school district referred to in your communication, and that to pay the same it is the duty of the board to make a levy for such purpose on all the taxable property of McConnelsville-Malta village school district and not to make such levy only upon the taxable property in the territory which formerly constituted the Malta village school district. If the statutory provision so directs, it is probable that the board of education of the McConnelsville-Malta village school district may levy such tax only on the taxable property in the territory formerly composing the Malta village school district without a violation of section 2 of article 12 of the state constitution, which requires taxes to be levied by a uniform rule upon all taxable property.

City of Cleveland v. Heisley, 41 O. S. 670.

It remains to be determined, therefore, whether or not there is any statutory provision which expressly, or by necessary inference, authorizes the board of education of the school district as now constituted to make a levy only upon the taxable property within the former limits of Malta village school district or whether there be any statutory provision requiring the integrity of Malta village school district or the board of education thereof to be preserved for the purpose of making the necessary levy on the taxable property of such school district for the purpose of paying its indebtedness.

In this connection I note that section 4692 of the General Code under which, as above noted, the action of the county board of education, referred to in your communication, was taken provides inter alia as follows:

"The county board of education is authorized to make an equitable division of the school funds of the transferred territory either in the treasury or in the course of collection. And also an equitable division of the indebtedness of the transferred territory."

In the nature of things this provision of section 4692, just quoted, can have application only to a case where territory less than the whole of a school district is transferred to another school district leaving the corporate identity of the school district from which said territory is transferred unaffected. In such a case by reason of the transfer of the territory and the equities between the two school districts arising by reason thereof, it is appropriate and proper that the county board of education as authorized by this provision should, as between said school districts on the one hand, make an equitable division of the school funds attributable to the territory transferred, and also on the other hand to make an equitable division as between the school districts of the indebtedness which may be attributed to such transferred territory.

The adjustment of the funds and indebtedness with respect to such transferred territory is made as between the school districts affected by and interested in such transfer and can have no application where an entire district is abrogated and the board of education thereof is abolished.

Section 4689 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "The provisions of law relating to the power to settle claims, dispose of property or levy and collect taxes to pay existing obligations of a village that has surrendered its corporate powers, shall also apply to such village school district and the board of education thereof."

The provision of law relating to the power of a village that has surrendered its corporate powers to settle claims, dispose of property or levy and collect taxes are those of section 3514 of the General Code, which reads as follows:

> "Such surrender of corporate powers shall not affect vested rights or accrued liabilities of such village, or the power to settle claims, dispose of property, or levy and collect taxes to pay existing obligations, but after the presentation of such petition, council shall not create any new liability until the result of the election is declared, nor thereafter, if such result is in favor of the surrender of corporate powers. Due and unpaid taxes may thereafter be collected, and all moneys or property remaining after such surrender shall belong to the school district embracing such village."

The language of section 4689 of the General Code, above quoted, is identically the same as found in the provisions of this section as carried into the General Code on the adoption of the same by legislative enactment in 1910. In order to ascertain the meaning and application of section 4689 it should be read in connection with the provisions of sections 4682 and 4688 as they stood when carried into the General Code in 1910. Said sections 4682 and 4688 then read as follows:

> "Sec. 4682. A village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, with a tax valuation of less than one hundred thousand dollars, shall not constitute a village school district, but the proposition to dissolve or organize such village school district shall be submitted by the board of education to the electors of such village at any general or special election called for that purpose, and be so determined by a majority vote of such electors.
> "Sec. 4688. When a village surrenders its corporate powers or dissolves a village school district, as herein provided, the village school district shall be thereby abolished and the territory formerly constituting such village district shall become a part of the township school district or districts of the civil township or townships in which it is situated, and all school property shall pass to and become vested in the township board of education of the civil township in which it is situated."

In 1913 (103 O. L. 545 and 103 O. L. 257), sections 4682 and 4688 of the General Code were amended, and section 4682 was supplemented by the provisions of section 4682-1, which is as follows:

"A village school district containing a population of less than fifteen hundred may vote at any general or special election to dissolve and join any contiguous rural district. After approval by the county board such proposition shall be submitted to the electors by the village board of education on the petition of one-fourth of the electors of such village school district or the village board may submit the proposition on its own motion and the result shall be determined by a majority vote of such electors."

In Opinion No. 287, under date of April 26, 1915, addressed to Hon. F. C. Goodrich, prosecuting attorney of Miami county, my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, held that where a village school district coming within the qualifications of section 4682-1 voted to dissolve and attach itself to a contiguous rural school district under the authority of said section, said village school district as a separate taxing district and its board of education as its taxing authority were continued in existence for the purpose of paying existing bonded indebtedness of such school district. This conclusion was reached by reason of the provisions of said sections 4689 and those of 3514 of the General Code therein referred to.

In consideration of the immediate questions here presented I note further that in 1914, section 4735-1 and 4735-2 were enacted providing authority in a rural school district to dissolve and to annex itself to a contiguous rural or village school district on a majority vote of the electors of such rural school district in favor of such proposition.

With respect to the action thus taken by a rural school district on a majority vote of its electors said section 4735-2 provided that the legal title of the property of the rural school district, in case such rural school district dissolves and joins to a rural school or village school district, shall become vested in the board of education of the rural or village school district to which such district is joined. This section further provides that the school funds of such dissolved rural school district shall become a part of the funds of the rural or village school district which it votes to join, and further provides as follows:

"The dissolution of such district shall not be complete until the board of education of the district has provided for the payment of any indebtedness that may exist."

Construing the provisions of sections 4735-1 and 4735-2 of the General Code, my predecessor, Mr. Turner, in Opinion No. 53, under date of February 2, 1915, directed to Hon. Frank W. Miller, superintendent of public instruction, held that prior existing indebtedness of a rural school district voting to dissolve and annex itself to another rural school district was a charge only upon the property of the school district creating such indebtedness, and that such indebtedness was not a charge on the taxable property of the school district formed by union of the two school districts under the provisions of sections 4735-1 and 4735-2 of the general Code.

It is thus seen that in both instances where the legislature has provided for voluntary dissolution of a school district it has provided that existing indebtedness of such school district whether bonded or otherwise should remain a charge only upon the taxable property in the district creating such indebtedness, and that the same does not become a charge upon the taxable property of the school district to which such dissolving district is annexed.

Looking to the provisions of section 4692 of the General Code authorizing the county board of education to abolish a school district by its transfer to another school district it will be noted that no statutory provision is made making existing indebtedness of such abolished district a charge only upon the taxable property of such district, and it is plain that to read any such provision into section 4692 of the General Code would be legislation by construction, which is not permitted on any view.

In the absence of statutory provision touching this matter we are remitted to the general principles of law applying in such cases, which principles of law, as before noted, compel the conclusion that the debt of a school district abolished by the action of the county board transferring it to another school district becomes a charge upon all the taxable property of the subsisting and enlarged school district, and that to pay such indebtedness the board of education of such district should levy taxes on all such taxable property.

The conclusion here reached with respect to your first and second questions makes it clear that your third and fourth questions have no application to the facts presented in your communication.

By way of answer to your third question, however, it may be observed that the adjustment of school funds and indebtedness by a county board of education is not jurisdictional to the power of such county board of education to transfer territory from the one school district to another, and such adjustment may be made at a meeting later than the one at which the transfer of territory is made.

As to your fourth question it may be said that the right of appeal from the action of an administrative board or other tribunal does not exist unless such appeal is provided by statute, and inasmuch as there is no statutory provision providing for an appeal from the action of the county board making an adjustment of the funds and indebtedness on a transfer of territory from one school district to another, it must be answered that there is no such right of appeal.

The order of the county board making such adjustment or division of school funds and of the indebtedness on a transfer of territory from one school district to another may be reviewed by original action in the court of common pleas on the petition of the board of education of said school district affected by such order if the county board of education has been guilty of fraud or gross and intentional abuse of discretion in making such order.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—CONTROL OVER COUNTY ROADS NOT ABROGATED BY CASS HIGHWAY LAW—IS LIMITED—STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER HAS SUPERVISION—CONTRACTS WITH REFERENCE TO CHANGE OF GRADE OF ROAD SHOULD HAVE APPROVAL OF STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER.

1. The authority of the county commissioners over intercounty and main market roads is not taken away by the Cass highway law, but is limited to the extent that supervision over such roads is given to the state highway commissioner.

2. Contracts between the county commissioners and the conservancy directors with reference to changes in the grade of such roads should have the approval of the state highway commissioner to the extent that the supervision thereof is committed to him.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 27, 1917.

HON. DEAN M. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney Warren County, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Referring to the answer of your inquiry of February 15th, asking the opinion of this department in reference to the contract with the directors of the Miami conservancy district, a further supplemental question is asked on your behalf by the attorney of the said conservancy district, which inquiry is as follows:

> "In regard to the opinion asked for by Mr. Stanley, prosecuting attorney of Warren county, would say, that the only question that is worrying him is, whether county commissioners have power and authority to grant rights over and upon those parts of highways, which are under the control of the state highway commissioner. We did not know what his question was until today. We have already submitted our plans to the state highway commissioner, and he has approved them up to date. We will submit all contracts with the county commissioners, who without doubt hold the ownership and have control of county roads, the same as they had before, subject to the supervision as to construction and maintenance of the state highway commissioner, to him. It will, therefore, be unnecessary for you to advise Mr. Stanley any more than that this be complied with under the law, which may shorten your labors in regard to the opinion. I hope this will be of assistance to you."

This inquiry involves the distribution of power as between the state highway commissioner and the county commissioners with reference to those roads which are improved by state aid. The office of the state highway commissioner is created by section 1178 G. C., which is as follows:

> "There shall be a state highway department for the purpose of affording instruction, assistance and co-operation in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the public roads and bridges of the state, under the provisions of this chapter. The governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, shall appoint a state highway commissioner who shall serve for the term of four years, unless sooner removed by the governor. He shall give his whole time and attention to the duties of his office."

His powers and duties are prescribed by section 1184 G. C., which is as follows:

> "The state highway commissioner shall have general supervision of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all intercounty highways, and main market roads, and the bridges and culverts thereon. He shall aid the county commissioners in establishing, creating and preparing suitable systems of drainage for highways, and advise with them as to the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of highways; and he shall approve the design, construction, maintenance and repair of all bridges, including superstructure and substructure, and culverts or other improvements on intercounty or main market roads; and in the case of bridges and culverts on other roads, when the estimated cost thereof exceeds ten thousand dollars, the plans therefor shall be submitted to and approved by him, before contracts are let therefor. He shall cause plans, specifications and estimates to be prepared for the construction, maintenance or repair of bridges and culverts when so requested by the authorities having charge thereof, and he shall cause to be made surveys, plats, profiles, specifications and estimates for improvements whether upon state, county or township roads. He shall make inquiry in regard to systems of road and bridge construction and maintenance wherever he may deem it advisable and conduct investigations and experiments with reference thereto, and make all examinations, in his opinion, advisable, as to materials for road construction or improvement. * * *"

The nature of the authority given him by this section is largely, though not entirely, advisory. The department is said to be "for the purpose of affording instruction, assistance and co-operation in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of public roads," and he has, under the provisions of section 1184 G. C., "general supervision of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all intercounty highways and main market roads."

This in nowise excludes the authority of the county commissioners over the roads, who represent the county in its proprietary character, and though not owning the fee simple of the land within the boundary of such roads, nevertheless they do own the easement therein for highway purposes. Their control over the same is not abrogated by the Cass highway law, although the authority of the commissioners is restricted to the extent that the state highway commissioner takes precedence over them. Therefore, any contract made by them would not abridge this supervisory power of the state highway commissioner, and as suggested in your inquiry, it would be necessary, or at least highly desirable, to have his approval of contracts with reference to the extent, dimensions, slope, construction and surfacing of approaches to crossings of the proposed levees constructed by the conservancy district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MONEY RAISED UNDER SECTION 9887 G. C. MUST BE USED FOR IMPROVING AN EXISTING FAIR GROUND SITE AND NOT FOR THE PURCHASE OF A NEW SITE—THE FACT THAT THE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY HAS RECEIVED ASSISTANCE UNDER SECTION 9887 G. C. DOES NOT PRECLUDE FURTHER AID UNDER SECTION 9894 G. C.

Money raised by taxation under favor of section 9887 G. C. must be applied to the purchase and improvement of the original fair ground site and cannot be applied to the purchase of a new site.

The tax levy under section 9887 G. C. by the commissioners to assist the agricultural society in the purchase and improvement of a fair ground site does not preclude further aid to the agricultural society under section 9894.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 29, 1917.

HON. CHESTER PENDLETON, Prosecuting Attorney, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 2, 1917, as follows:

"For a number of years Hancock county has been divided against itself upon the question of whether or not its county fair grounds shall be moved to a new location. For about twenty-five years the Hancock county agricultural society has owned the fair grounds located two and one-half miles south of Findlay and in approximately the geographical center of the county. Because of lack of transportation facilities and difficulty of access, dissatisfaction arose over the location of the grounds, and in about the year 1908 an independent organization was formed, and established what is known as the Driving Club, which immediately adjoins the city on the northeast and is readily accessible, both by street cars and boats, from the center of the city. This venture did not prove to be as profitable as its promoters had hoped, and for seven or eight years they have been making a continuous effort to induce the agricultural society to relinquish the old fair grounds and buy the new site from the Driving Club.

"In its present location the Hancock county fair has never been a success, and the county commissioners have frequently had to extend financial aid to the society. Meanwhile the buildings and grounds have fallen into a state of decay and dilapidation, so that the agricultural society has declared that necessary repairs will have to be made before the grounds will be in shape for the fair in September. They estimate that it will take $15,000 for this purpose.

"It is the judgment of the three county commissioners and of five out of the eight members of the agricultural board that it is not good business to spend so much money upon the old grounds and so perpetuate a source of expense upon the county. Three members of the agricultural board live in the south part of the county, which is almost solidly opposed to the change of location, and so oppose the move.

"In the recent November election the proposition was submitted to the people of Hancock county as to whether or not $25,000 in bonds should be issued by the county to purchase the Driving Club grounds. The bond issue was defeated by a narrow margin, largely because of organized opposition, and partly because of other local political conditions.

"Since this election the officials of the Driving Club, the county commissioners and the agricultural board have held a number of conferences. The Driving Club has reduced its price on the new grounds, and the commissioners and agricultural board have decided that it is better business for the county to buy the new grounds, rather than to repair the old.

"The question now arises as to their power to do this without another vote of the people on the matter of bond issue. If this can be done without a vote of the people, the officials of the Driving Club are willing to take the purchase price in payments as same can be made by the county.

"The agricultural board is considering a purchase of the new grounds if possible, or, failing in that, a short term lease of the new grounds until such a time as a purchase can be made. In the light of the above facts, I would like to secure your opinion on the following questions:

"First. Can money raised by taxation, under favor of 9887-1 of the General Code, or any part of it, be used for the purchase price of a new site, or must it be used only for the purpose of improving an existing ground?

"Second. Can this money realized from the sale of the old grounds and applied on the purchase price of a new site according to 9902 G. C. be considered as money furnished by the society for that purpose, so as to empower the county commissioners to pay out of the county treasury the money as provided for in 9887 G. C.? The legal title to the old grounds is vested in the Hancock county agricultural society.

"Third. Is the tax levy authorized in 9894 G. C. to be considered as an addition to other county aid furnished by the commissioners or would the tax levy under 9887-1, for instance, preclude further aid under section 9894 G. C.?"

Answering your first question. Section 9887-1 G. C. reads:

"In counties wherein there is a county agricultural society which has purchased a site whereon to hold fairs and the title to such grounds is vested in fee in the county, but the society has the control and management of the lands and buildings, if they think it for the interest of the county and society, the county commissioners may levy a tax upon all the taxable property of the county for the purpose of improving such grounds not to exceed one-twentieth of one mill in any one year and not for a period of more than five years; and in anticipation of the collection of this tax the commissioners may issue and sell the bonds of the county, bearing interest not to exceed six per cent. per annum payable annually."

It is my opinion that money raised under this section must be used for improving an existing fair ground site and not for purchasing a new one. However, this is not important here, for the reason that section 9887-1 G. C. refers only to sites, the titles of which are vested in fee in the county, and can have no application to your situation, since you advise "the legal title to the old grounds is vested in the Hancock county agricultural society."

In reply to your second question, section 9887 G. C. reads:

"When a county society has purchased, or leased real estate whereon to hold fairs for a term of not less than twenty years, or the title to the grounds is vested in fee in the county, but the society has the control and management of the lands and buildings; if they think it for the interests of the county, and society, the county commissioners may pay out of the county treasury the same amount of money for the purchase or lease and improvement of such site as is paid by such society or individuals for that purpose, and may levy a tax upon all the taxable property of the county sufficient to meet such payment."

Section 9902 G. C. reads:

"Payment for the purchase or lease of the land included in such site, and the improvements thereon, may be made by the county commissioners from any unappropriated funds in the county treasury at the time it is to be made. If no such funds are then in the treasury the commissioners may issue the bonds of the county for such amounts as are necessary for the purchase or lease of the land and the improvements thereon. But if such old site is sold or leased before the new site is purchased or leased, in making the payment such society first shall apply the moneys realized from the sale or lease to the purchase or lease of the new site. If the old site is sold or leased after the purchase or lease of the new site, the amounts realized from such sale or lease shall be placed to the credit of the sinking fund for the redemption of bonds issued as hereinafter provided. Such bonds shall bear not more than five per cent. interest per annum, payable semi-annually, not to be sold at less than their par value, and shall be payable at such place, times, and in such denominations as the commissioners determine."

It will be noted that section 9902, above quoted, provides:

"If such old site is sold or leased before the new site is purchased or leased, in making the payment such society first shall apply the moneys realized from the sale or lease to the purchase or lease of the new site."

I take it what you desire to know is whether or not, after money arising from the sale of the old site has been applied to the purchase of a new one, as provided in this section, the county commissioners may step in and, under the provisions of section 9887 G. C., pay out of the county treasury a like sum of money, to be applied upon the purchase of this new site.

The legislature has, in sections 9900 to 9905 G. C., both inclusive, provided a complete scheme for meeting a situation such as yours "when a county desires to sell its site in order to purchase another, or if for any reason such site is unfit or insufficient for the purposes for which it is used."

In view of this fact I am of the opinion that section 9887 G. C. authorizes the county commissioners to assist the agricultural society in purchasing and improving the original site only, and that money raised by taxation under this section must be applied to the purchase and improvement of the original site and cannot be applied to the purchase of a new site.

In answer to your third question it will be noted that section 9887 G. C. provides for the payment of one-half the purchase price or cost of improvement "for the purchase or lease and improvement of such site." This money is not paid over to the agricultural society to be used as they think best, but is paid out for the purchase or improvement referred to. Money under section 9894, referred to, is raised for "the purpose of encouraging agricultural fairs" and is paid to the treasurer of the agricultural society. Levies provided for in these two sections are for two separate and distinct purposes and it is my opinion that the tax levy under section 9887 would not preclude further aid under section 9894, though in view of my answer to your first two questions I doubt whether the answer to the third one is material.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SPENCERVILLE ARMORY CONTRACT—BALANCE DUE ON SAME SHOULD BE PAID TO RECEIVER OF CONTRACTORS.

Proper method of paying balance due on Spencerville armory contract, contractor being in the hands of a receiver.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 29, 1917.

HON. B. L. BARGER, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 9, 1917, you wrote me as follows:

"At armory board meeting of March 6, 1917, the following resolution was passed:

"SPENCERVILLE ARMORY. RESOLVED, That WHEREAS: After completion of Spencerville armory according to drawings and specifications made part of original contract with Sereff Bros., and after paying the secondary contractor, who completed the contract of said Sereff Bros., there remains the sum of $3,188.25, due the estate of Sereff Bros., now in hands of receiver in cause of Carl F. Steck et al. v. John Sereff & Peter Sereff, being of the court of common pleas of Allen county, Ohio, it is therefore

"RESOLVED, That the board request the attorney-general to cause such entry to be made in such case as will best protect the interest of the state and authorize the adjutant general to approve a voucher for said sum of $3,188.25 payable to said receivers in said cause to be distributed as approved by attorney-general and as ordered by the court.

"Pursuant to said resolution I herewith transmit a copy of petition and one journal entry in said action, which seem to be all of the court papers in our possession relative to said case. (This is same case in which you rendered opinion dated February 5, 1916.)"

The petition enclosed with your letter is a petition filed in the court of common pleas of Allen county wherein Carl F. Steck and P. P. Baker are plaintiffs, and John Sereff and Peter Sereff are defendants. The petition discloses that the defendants were partners engaged in the general contracting business and as such obtained a contract for the construction of an armory building at Spencerville, Ohio, and proceeded with the construction thereof; that in the month of January, 1916, defendants ceased to work on the building, leaving the armory uncompleted. Plaintiffs bring the suit on behalf of themselves and others engaged as laborers in the construction of said building, who had not received pay for their labor, and pray for the appointment of a receiver "to take charge of said business and to have full jurisdiction over said contract; for the construction thereof, for an accounting of the amounts due to the plaintiffs and said other laborers, the winding up of the business of said partnership so far as it related to said building and said contract and the distribution of the funds arising therefrom, and for all other and further relief in equity just and proper."

The journal entry which you submitted in the same case shows the appointment of C. J. McCune as receiver and he is ordered to give bond, and it is further ordered that "he shall proceed to take possession of the property described in this petition, first, all choses in action, moneys due and rights accruing to said defendant under and by virtue of their contract for the construction of the armory building in Spencerville, Ohio, and the said defendant, and all other parties having any of such property in their possession or under their control, are ordered to deliver the same to said receiver on his demand."

Upon examination of the files in the office of the auditor of state I find that on the 14th day of April, 1915, the state armory board entered into a contract with J. W. Sereff and P. H. Sereff, of Lima, Ohio, for the construction of the armory at Spencerville, Ohio, for the sum of $16,950.00. Article V of said contract provides as follows:

"Should the contractors at any time refuse or neglect to supply a sufficiency of properly skilled workmen, of materials of the proper quality, or fail in any respect to prosecute the work with promptness and diligence, or fail in the performance of any agreement herein contained, such refusal, neglect or failure being certified by the architect, the owner shall be at liberty, after three days' written notice to the contractors to provide any such labor or materials, and to deduct the cost thereof from any moneys then due or thereafter to become due to the contractors under this contract and if the architect shall certify that such refusal, neglect or failure is sufficient ground for such action, the owner shall also be at liberty to terminate the employment of the contractors for the said work and to enter upon the premises and take possession, for the purpose of completing the work included under this contract, of all materials, tools and appliances thereon, and to employ any other person, or persons, to finish the work, and to provide the material therefor; and in case of such discontinuance of employment of the contractors he shall not be entitled to receive any further payment under this contract until the said work shall be wholly finished, at which time, if the unpaid balance of the amount to be paid under this contract shall exceed the expenses incurred by the owner in finishing the work, such excess shall be paid by the owner to the contractors, but if such expense shall exceed such unpaid balance, the contractors shall pay the difference to the owner. The expense incurred by the owner, herein provided, either for furnishing materials or for finishing the work, and any damage incurred through such default shall be audited and certified by the architect, whose certificate thereof shall be conclusive upon the parties."

It appears that subsequent to the entering in of such contract the said Sereff Bros. failed to carry out the provisions thereof and upon certification of the architect the armory board proceeded to let a contract for the completion of said building. It now appears that after the second contractor has fully completed the building there remains the sum of $3,188.25 due on the contract made with Sereff Bros.

You request me to cause an entry to be made in the case in question as will best protect the interests of the state and authorize the adjutant general to approve a voucher in the sum of $3,188.25, payable to the receiver.

In accordance with your request I have prepared an application on behalf of the state of Ohio in the case referred to reciting the fact that a contract was entered into between the state, through the Ohio State armory board, and the defendants in said action for the construction and completion of an armory at Spencerville, Ohio, for $16,950.00; that after entering into the contract there were additions made thereto in the sum of $542.75 and a deduction in the sum of $135.00, making the complete contract price $17,357.75 upon which was paid $9,424.00; that the subsequent contract entered into upon default of the defendants in the performance of the contract, was for $4,705.50 to which there was an addition of $40.00, making the sum total $4,745.50 paid out to the second contractor, leaving a balance of $3,188.25 still due to the defendants and have prayed for instructions of the court as to the disposition to be made of said sum of $3,188.25. I have also prepared an entry as follows:

"This day this cause came on to be heard upon the application of the state of Ohio for instructions as to the payment of $3,188.25, being the balance due on contract entered into with the defendants herein for the construction and completion of an armory at Spencerville, Ohio, and was submitted to the court.

"The court upon careful consideration thereof directs that the said money be paid to C. J. McCune, the receiver heretofore appointed herein, in accordance with an order of court heretofore entered herein on the ----------day of ----------, 191---, wherein he was ordered to take possession of all choses in action, moneys due and rights accruing to said defendants in and by virtue of their contract for the construction of the armory building at Spencerville, Ohio, and upon receipt of the said sum of $3,188.25, the receiver herein is hereby authorized and directed to receipt to the state of Ohio in full for all moneys due to the defendants under said contract."

Upon receipt of a certified copy of the entry herein referred to the same should be attached to the certified account and voucher drawn on the auditor of state, whereupon the auditor of state would be authorized to draw his warrant for the said amount in favor of the receiver.

After the warrant has been sent to you by the auditor of state it would also be well to obtain from the receiver a receipt in full for the amount due under the contract before turning over the warrant to the receiver. This receipt in full should be filed with the other papers attached to the voucher in the office of the auditor of state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FLAVORING EXTRACTS—FOR WHICH NO STANDARD EXISTS—MUST BE LABELED AS PROVIDED FOR IN SECTION 5785 G. C.—WHEN SOLD DIRECTLY TO BAKERIES, ETC.

A manufacturer selling directly to bakeries, confectioners, etc., flavoring extracts for which no standard exists, must comply with the provisions of section 5785 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 29, 1917.

The Board of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of February 13, 1917, in which you state:

> "Section 5785, subdivision 4, provides that flavoring extracts shall be misbranded for which no standard exists if they are not labeled as imitation, or artificial and the formula printed in the manner hereinafter provided for the labeling of compounds.
> "It seems to be the impression of some wholesale dealers where they are selling to bakeries, confectioners, etc., that it is not required for them to label their packages as provided under this section.
> "I would be very glad to have you give me your interpretation of this section relative to the requirements of goods sold by wholesale as to whether they should be so labeled."

Section 5774 G. C. provides:

> "No person, within this state, shall manufacture for sale, offer for sale, sell or deliver, or have in his possession with intent to sell or deliver, a drug or article of food which is adulterated within the meaning of this chapter, or offer for sale, sell or deliver, or have in his possession with intent to sell or deliver, a drug or article of food which is misbranded within the meaning of this chapter."

Section 5785 G. C. provides in part:

> "Food, drink, flavoring extracts, confectionery or condiment shall be misbranded within the meaning of this chapter:
> "* * * * * * * *
> "4. In case of a flavoring extract, for which no standard exists, if it is not labeled 'artificial' or 'imitation' and the formula printed in the manner hereinafter provided for the labeling of 'compounds' or 'mixtures' and their formulae;

"5. If the package containing it or a label thereon bears a statement, design or device regarding it or the ingredients or substances contained therein, which is false or misleading in any particular; provided, that this section shall not apply to mixtures or compounds recognized as ordinary articles or ingredients of articles of food or drink, if each package sold or offered for sale is distinctly labeled in words of the English language as mixtures or compounds, with the name and percentage, in terms of one hundred per cent. of each ingredient therein. The word 'compound' or 'mixture' shall be printed in letters and figures not smaller in height or width than one-half the largest letter upon which any label on the package and the formula shall be printed in letters and figures not smaller in height or width than one-fourth the largest upon any label on the package, and such compound or mixture must not contain an ingredient that is poisonous or injurious to health."

Section 12758 G. C. provides:

"Whoever manufactures for sale, offers for sale or sells a drug, article of food, or flavoring extract which is adulterated or misbranded as the terms 'drugs,' 'food,' 'flavoring extract,' 'adulterated' and 'misbranded' are defined and described by law, or manufactures, offers or exposes for sale or delivers a drug or article of food and fails, upon demand and tender of its value, to furnish a sample thereof for analysis, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, and, for each subsequent offense, shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than two hundred dollars or imprisoned in the county jail not less than thirty days nor more than one hundred days, or both."

Section 12371 G. C. reads as follows:

"In the interpretation of part fourth the word 'whoever' includes all persons, natural and artificial, partners, principals, agents, employes, and all officials, public or private."

An examination of the different sections of the statutes relating to the subject matter inquired of does not disclose that there is any exception to wholesale dealers.

Perhaps these gentlemen have confused the state with the federal law. I understand there are some exceptions in the federal law and they may have given grounds for the impression you say the wholesalers have. But so far as the Ohio statutes on the subject are concerned, I find no exception in favor of the manufacturer selling such extracts, etc., in the manner you state. Under penalty they are obliged to conform to the provisions of the law as above set forth.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENT—QUALIFIED TO ACT AS JUROR —ENTITLED TO JURY FEES IN ADDITION TO REGULAR COMPENSATION.

A county superintendent of schools may sit as a juryman in the common pleas court and is entitled to his jury fees in addition to his compensation as such county superintendent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 29, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of January 26, 1917, you submit for my opinion the following proposition:

> "May the county superintendent of schools sit as a juryman in the common pleas court, he having been drawn in the regular panel. If so, is he legally entitled to compensation as a juror?"

General Code section 11423, in providing who shall be selected as jurors and how they shall be selected, provides in part as follows:

> "* * * the jury commissioners shall * * * select such number of judicious and discreet persons, having the qualifications of electors of such county, as the court may direct, to be selected as nearly as may be from the several wards and townships in proportion to their respective population. No person shall be so selected who shall not, in the judgment of such commissioners, be competent in every respect to serve as a juror. * * *"

Section 11444 G. C. provides who may be exempt from jury service as follows:

> "Public officers, clergymen, priests, physicians, attorneys-at-law, members of a police force, firemen employed by a municipal authority, acting volunteer members of companies to extinguish fires, organized in and under the control of a municipality, and all persons serving as active members thereof for five consecutive years, officers, enlisted men and contributing members of the national guard whose names are contained in certified lists filed in the office of the clerk of the common pleas court in accordance with law, the latter only during the period specified by law, and every person over seventy years old, are exempt from jury service."

But the fact that a person may be exempt from jury service does not mean that the person may not be qualified for jury service. It is held in In Re Heekin, 14 O. C. C. (n. s.) 329, that the legislature may exempt any class of persons it deems proper from jury service and it is held in Glassinger v. State, 24 O. S. 206, that the provisions of law exempting public officers and others from jury service does not have the effect of disqualifying such persons so exempted, but merely extends to him a privilege which he may exercise or which he may waive, and in Roth v. State, 3 O. C. C. 59, it is held that a person who by law is exempted from jury service is not one subject to be challenged for that purpose; that is to say, exemption from jury service is not a ground for challenge. So that a person may be perfectly qualified to sit as a juror and may do so and yet come within those classes of persons who are exempt under our laws. I find nothing in the statute which bars a county superintendent of schools from sitting as a juror. Of course he would be subject to the same grounds for challenge as any other person, but the fact that he is county superintendent of schools is no bar to his so acting as a juror.

If, then, such superintendent of schools acts as a juror, is he entitled to compensation as such juror?

General Code section 4744-1 provides that the salary of the county superintendent shall be fixed by the county board of education at not less than twelve hundred dollars per year, one-half of the same, not to exceed the sum of one thousand dollars, to be paid by the state and the other half by the districts over which such superintendent has jurisdiction. Other sections in said chapter prescribe his duties, all of them, however, along educational lines, and section 7837 G. C. provides:

> "The county superintendent shall receive no additional compensation for his services as clerk of the county board of school examiners."

Section 7834 provides the compensation for such school examiners but makes an exception of the clerk of said board.

The compensation for jurors is provided for in General Code section 3008, as follows:

> "Each grand or petit juror drawn from the jury box pursuant to law, each juror selected by the court as talesman as provided by law, and each talesman shall receive two dollars for each day of service, and if not a talesman, five cents each mile from his place of residence to the county seat. Such compensation shall be certified by the clerk of the court and paid by the county treasurer on the warrant of the county auditor."

No exception is made of any person or classes of persons in the above section. Each juror drawn, whether accepted as a juror or not, shall receive said pay.

Your inquiry, I am advised, was prompted by an opinion of my predecessor, which held that witness fees in criminal cases could not be received by assistant state fire marshals. The facts upon which that opinion was rendered and the facts stated in your request should be distinguished. In that case it was held that assistant state fire marshals, being representatives of the state in the gathering and giving of evidence, where matters were being investigated and prosecutions were being made, were performing their official duties for which duties they were receiving their salary and expenses; that the testimony they were giving as witnesses was a part of their official duties and they were being paid as such officers. Should they be also paid as witnesses, it would amount to double pay for the same service. In this case, however, the superintendent of schools, sitting as a juror, is not performing official duties. Jury service is not along the line of his school work and I find nothing in the law requiring him to give his entire time and attention to his work. I do not mean by this that a county superintendent of schools should accept other employment outside of his employment as such superintendent, and thus neglect his duties as such superintendent, but the duty of every person drawn on a jury to serve as such juror is so essential to good government that it would seem to me a county superintendent of schools might easily serve as such juror and also perform all the duties as such county superintendent.

My attention is also called to General Code section 11445, which provides as follows:

"No officer shall be allowed compensation for services under this chapter other than were allowed by law."

The chapter referred to is chapter 2, division 3, title 4 of the General Code, and refers to "conduct of the trial," but the following section which, until divided by our codifying commission, was formerly a portion of said last quoted section, reads as follows:

"Sec. 11446. Any officer named in this chapter, who refuses or neglects to perform any duty therein required, shall forfeit and pay not exceeding one hundred dollars."

I am convinced that the term "officer" used in said section 11445 refers to the same officer mentioned in section 11446 G. C., which refers only to the officers named in the chapter and not to any other officer or employe.

Holding the above views, then, I advise you that the county superintendent of schools may sit as a juror in the common pleas court and that he is entitled to his jury fees in addition to whatever salary he may receive as county superintendent of schools.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

EIGHT-HOUR LAW—DOES NOT APPLY TO EMPLOYES OF STATE HOSPITAL—WORKMEN WORKING FOR THE PUBLIC AND WORKMEN ENGAGED ON A PUBLIC WORK DISTINGUISHED.

The constitutional provision and the law providing for an eight-hour day on public works does not apply to employes in the state hospital. Said employes are workmen working for the public but not workmen engaged on a public work.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 29, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a request from the state hospital employes' union, in which they request an opinion as to the construction that ought to be placed upon sections 17-1 and 17-2 G. C. I deem this question submitted to me to be of sufficient general interest that I am taking the liberty of addressing an opinion thereon to you.

The communication addressed to me by said employes' union reads as follows:

"Will you kindly render an opinion on a statute enacted May 23, 1913, 103 O. L. 854, which provides in part as follows:

"Section 17-1 G. C.: 'Except in cases of extraordinary emergency, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work * * * for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state * * *.'

"Former Attorney-General Turner rendered an opinion on this statute and reached the conclusion that the term 'public work' as used therein applied to the maintenance of public institutions operated by the state, and not simply to construction work.

"This law contains a clause which specifies that it shall not be so construed as to include policemen or firemen, which would seem to indicate that other employes of the state are not excluded in its provisions or such exceptions would have been expressly mentioned.

"We are very anxious to learn whether this law can be interpreted so as to include state hospital employes, and if so the proper course to pursue to gain its enforcement.

"At present we are serving from fourteen to sixteen hours per day, and consequently are trying to find relief, in some way, from these long, tedious hours of employment that are beyond all reason, in view of the insignificant wages we are receiving."

The question has to do with the matter as to whether the employes in the state hospital would come under the eight-hour provision found in section 17-1 G. C. This section of the statute, together with the constitutional provision found in section 37 of article II of the Constitution, has been construed a number of times by former attorneys-general, in applying said statutes to the question of different kinds of employes.

These statutes and said constitutional provision have been discussed so fully and so ably by my predecessors in office that I feel I can do no better than to review a number of these opinions and then apply the law to the facts set out in the communication received by me.

First, let me suggest that section 37 of article II of the Constitution reads as follows:

"Except in cases of extraordinary emergencies, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political subdivision thereof, whether done by contract, or otherwise."

and that said section 17-1 G. C. was enacted to enforce the provisions of said section 37, by providing for a penalty to be imposed upon those employers who violated the constitutional provision.

Said section 17-1 G. C. reads as follows:

"Except in cases of extraordinary emergency, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political subdivision thereof, whether done by contract or otherwise; and it shall be unlawful for any person, corporation or association, whose duty it shall be to employ or to direct and control the services of such workmen to require or permit any of them to labor more than eight hours in any calendar day or more than forty-eight hours in any week, except in cases of extraordinary emergency. This section shall not be construed to include policemen or firemen."

Hence, when we interpret section 17-1 G. C., we are practically interpreting said constitutional provision.

Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, former attorney-general, rendered an opinion on February 13, 1914, found in Vol. 1 of Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, page 283, upon the following statement of facts:

"I have been interested to learn whether or not the law calling for an eight-hour day on public works would apply to Miami university at Oxford, Ohio.

"We employ engineers, janitors and laborers in addition to those who have charge of the domestic work in the boarding department."

Upon this request Mr. Hogan rendered the following opinion:

"The law calling for an eight-hour day on public works does not apply to educational institutions such as Miami university. Such an institution is not a public work in the sense intended by the statute."

In this opinion Mr. Hogan calls particular attention to the clause which is suggested in the communication addressed to me, and that is the fact that—

"This section shall not be construed to include policemen or firemen."

He says:

"Whatever of strength might be added by the last sentence of this statute, in construing the statute as if it stood alone, it is of no avail to vary or change the plain import of the language used in the amendment, and we are relegated to a determination of what is included in the language 'workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state.'"

That is, Mr. Hogan held that the exemption of firemen and policemen from the provisions of the statute could have no effect upon the interpretation to be placed upon "workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state," for the reason that this statute was enacted to provide a penalty for the violation of the constitutional provision, and hence it is the constitutional provision that must be construed, rather than the said section of the statute, and it will be noted that the constitutional provision does not contain the clause in reference to policemen or firemen.

In this conclusion of Mr. Hogan I concur, and hence the only question we have to consider is as to whether employes of the state hospital could come under the terms "workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state." In reference to this matter Mr. Hogan held:

"As the state and various political subdivisions thereof are engaged nearly and probably all of the time in erecting public buildings, bridges and roads, and the state is aiding the divisions in many respects in construction and maintaining roads and highways and maintaining and operating the same such language finds plain and easy application, and it is only necessary to give it its plain and every-day meaning and apply it to workmen engaged on public work as distinguished from workmen for the public, and thereby confining it to constructive work, betterment, building and improvement carried on and aided by the state."

In this it will be noted that he draws a distinction between men who are working for the public and men who are engaged upon public works.

In another opinion Mr. Hogan rendered on April 29, 1914, found in Vol. I of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, page 595, he passed upon the following question, as to whether said section 17-1 G. C. would pertain to engineers, firemen and other employes of the waterworks department of a city. Upon this question he rendered the following opinion:

"The words 'public work carried on or aided by the state, etc.,' refer solely to construction work, making a distinction between workmen engaged in public work and workmen working for the public."

In the body of the opinion we find the following statement (p. 596):

"To my mind there is a broad distinction between 'workmen engaged on public work' and 'workmen working for the public,' and this distinction must be kept in view all of the time.

"The state house and buildings occupied by the various state departments are full of workmen 'working for the public,' yet very few, if any of them, are engaged on a public work carried on by the state, as I construe the term."

I also desire to note an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, on April 30, 1915, found in Vol. I of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, page 598, which opinion was based upon the request made by Hon. Charles E. Thorne, director of Ohio agricultural experiment station at Wooster, Ohio. In the request of Mr. Thorne he asks whether experiment work on the farm would be considered as "public work" under the said statute, and whether said section would apply to that portion of the station's work which has to do with live stock and field operations and with the dairy feeding and care of live stock, including the milking of dairy cows, etc.

Mr. Turner rendered the following opinion upon said facts:

"General experiment station work is not public work within the meaning of sections 17-1 and 17-2 G. C., 103 O. L. 854, or of sections 37 of article II of the Ohio Constitution."

In his opinion we find the following statement (p. 599):

"Without going into or repeating the process of reasoning and argument contained in these two opinions, suffice it to say that I agree with the conclusions reached by Attorney-General Hogan, and I am of the opinion that the language referred to in section 37 of article II of the Constitution, and in section 17-1 of the General Code, applies only to public work of a constructive, improvement or betterment character, and not to the general routine work performed under or in various departments of the state. As stated in the opinion of April 29, 1914, above referred to, there is a wide distinction between 'workmen engaged in public work' and 'workmen working for the public.'"

Thus we find that Mr. Turner agrees with the former opinions rendered by Mr. Hogan, and so far as I am able to construe said statute and said constitutional provision, I am convinced that the finding of my predecessors, upon the facts presented to them, is correct.

Now, let us apply the law as laid down in said former opinions to the facts as presented to me in said communication. In the first place we must eliminate the language found in section 17-1 G. C., namely,

"This section shall not be construed to include policemen or firemen."

As said above, we must exclude this because it is not found in the constitutional provision, and hence can have no effect in construing the said section of the statute or of the constitutional provision.

Let us further consider the distinction made between "workmen engaged in public work" and "workmen working for the public."

With these things in mind, in what class would the employes of the state hospital fall? I believe there can be but one answer to this, and that is that they are among those "workmen working for the public" and not among the "workmen engaged in public work." This being the case, the provisions of the statute and the constitutional provision in reference to an eight-hour day would not apply to said employes.

The communication states that Hon. Edward C. Turner rendered an opinion that the term "public work," as used in said section, applied to the maintenance of public institutions operated by the state and not simply to construction work. This language is found in opinion rendered by Hon. Edward C. Turner on September 10, 1915, Vol. II of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, page 1713. In the body of the opinion the following language is used (p. 1717):

> "It then having been determined that the term 'public work' as used in the constitutional provision and statute under consideration comprehends the maintenance, repair, construction, alteration and operation of all public undertakings of a structural nature of substantial permanence and of general public utility, whether fixed or otherwise, it follows that all persons employed in the work of such construction, maintenance, alteration, repair and operation are engaged on a public work and if the same is aided or carried on by the state or any political subdivision thereof, such persons and their employers are subject to the penalties, possess the rights and are entitled to the remedies therein set forth."

But in noting said language it will readily be observed that it would not in any way bring under the provisions of said section of the General Code and the constitutional provision the employes of state hospitals.

Hence, in answering the question directly, I find that the employes of the state hospital would not come within the provisions of section 17-1 G. C., and I affirm the opinions rendered by my predecessors in office.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE LAW—SUBJECT TO REFERENDUM—LEGISLATURE AS USED IN ARTICLE II, SECTION 1 OF UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION DEFINED.

The act of the general assembly extending suffrage to women in the election of presidential electors is subject to the referendum.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 31, 1917.

HON. JAMES A. REYNOLDS, Member of the House of Representatives, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 17, wherein you request my opinion on the following question:

> "The senate and the house of representatives of the general assembly of Ohio have passed a bill conferring upon adult women the privilege of voting for presidential electors. The bill has been treated thus far as an ordinary act of legislation, all the constitutional formalities respecting its passage and authentication in the respective houses having been complied with and it having been presented to the governor for his approval. The governor has approved the bill and it has become a law.
> "It is understood that there is on foot a movement to circulate referendum petitions against the above described law.
> "Is the law subject to the referendum?"

I shall not quote the operative provisions of the state constitution, requiring in effect that every "law" (with certain express exceptions which do not include a law of this character), shall not go into effect until ninety days after it is filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, within which period referendum petitions signed by a certain proportion of the electors of the state may be filed with the secretary of state, in which event the effectiveness of the law is further postponed until the question of its approval or rejection shall be submitted at the succeeding general election to the electors of the state.

Insofar as the effect of such provisions upon an act of the assembly, of this general character, is concerned, and insofar as the same may be regarded as a state question, the recent decision of the supreme court of this state in the case State ex rel. Davis v. Hildebrant, 94 O. S. —, reported in O. L. Rep. Supp., Vol. XIV, No. 32, November 6, 1916, page 118, is conclusive—that is to say, that case is authority for the proposition that with respect to such actions as the legislature of the state may be authorized or required to take as a part of the framework or machinery of the federal government, the referendum provisions of the state constitution are applicable to such actions in the form of legislation, if their application is permitted by the federal constitution. In short, if the subject matter is one within the jurisdiction of the state to control by its constitution, the referendum provisions of the Ohio constitution go to the full extent of that jurisdiction.

I pass, therefore, from any consideration of the question of the interpretation of the state constitution to what I regard as the controlling phase of the general question, viz.: whether or not under the federal constitution it is competent for a state to limit or qualify the action of its representative legislative body in directing the manner of the "appointment" of presidential electors.

Before stating the conditions of this problem, I may be permitted to point out that the question which has been raised undoubtedly goes to the exercise of the governor s veto power as well as to the subjection of the measure to a popular referendum.

The latter may be looked upon, I think, as but an extension of the former—a popular veto superimposed upon an executive veto. So that to hold that the measure under consideration is not subject to the referendum would be equivalent to holding that it was improperly presented to the governor for his approval. Inasmuch as the governor has approved the bill, however, this point is doubtless academic.

The question which now arises exists under article II, section 1 of the Constitution of the United States, which provides as follows:

> "* * * Each state shall appoint, in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the state may be entitled in the congress * * *."

The initial approach to the solution of the question which you submit lies, I think, through the ascertainment of the meaning of "legislature" as used in the clause last above quoted.

In many instances in which this term is used in the federal Constitution, with reference to the states, it means a representative body, and of course does not include the whole body of the electors of the state.

See article I, section 2.
See article I, section 3 (as originally adopted).
See article IV, section 3.
See article IV, section 4.
See article V.
See article VI.
Fourteenth amendment, section 2.
Fourteenth amendemnt, section 3.
Seventeenth amendment.

I think a careful examination of the above cited provisions of the federal constitution will show that in the great majority of these instances it is very clear that the word "legislature" means a representative body. This is true in the case of article I, section 2; original article I, section 3; article IV, section 4; article V; article VI; the fourteenth amendment, sections 2 and 3; and the first paragraph of the seventeenth amendment.

In spite of this fact, it does not necessarily follow that the word or phrase in question is used throughout the federal Constitution in this ascertained sense. There are instances of its use, with respect to which the intent to employ it as meaning the law-making body, or the repository of legislative power, may fairly be inferred. Repeatedly, in the same instrument, "the Congress" is referred to and granted powers, but by force of article I, section 7, no concurrent action of the two houses can be taken without executive approval, or by passing the measure over the president's veto.

It is reasonable to assume, therefore, that the framers of the Constitution may have used the term "legislature" as referring to a state agency, in the same sense in which the word "Congress" is used as descriptive of the body to which federal legislative powers are committed, and with the same latent idea respecting the possibility of limitations on the law-making authority.

This thought suggests a principle which, it is believed, will serve as a guide in the interpretation of the word "legislature" wherever it may be found in the federal Constitution, viz.: wherever a power, which in its essential character is or may be legislative, is committed to a "state legislature" by the federal Constitution, the state agency which is the recipient of such a power so granted is that agency which is competent to receive and to exercise legislative power. But wherever a "state legislature" is referred to in the federal Constitution merely as descriptive of a body of public officers, or wherever powers or privileges not essentially legislative are conferred in terms upon a "state legislature," the presumption does not apply.

Let this principle be applied to Article I, section 4 of the federal Constitution, which was the provision the effect of which was called in question in State ex rel. Davis v. Hildebrant, supra. It provides as follows:

> "The times, places and manners of holding elections for senators and representatives, shall be prescribed in each state by the legislature thereof; but the congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing senators."

Here two legislative bodies are referred to, the state legislature and the congress. No one would argue that congress, in "making or altering such regulations," could act without the interposition of the executive approval, which clearly applies to such action by virtue of article I, section 7 of the feredal Constitution. But the nature of the power conferred upon the state legislatures by this section is the same as that vested in congress; both relate to the same subject matter and the power in both instances is essentially legislative. It seems reasonably certain that in this instance, at least, the framers of the Constitution did not intend to confer the power upon the state legislature as a selected body of officers, without such further checks as might be imposed upon the action of the legislative assembly in the enactment of legislation by the state constitutions, any more than they intended to confer the similar power to make or alter the regulations in question upon the congress without the approval of the president.

Indeed, there is direct authority for the conclusion that the word "legislature" in article I, section 4, means the law-making power of the state, and therefore includes the notion of the approval of the executive and that of the electors under a referendum provision of the state constitution.

> State ex rel. v. Polley, 26 S. D. 5.
> State ex rel. v. Hildebrant, supra.

The weight of these decisions is somewhat minimized by the fact that they are decisions of state courts merely. Nevertheless, the first of them is strictly in point on the proposition on which it is cited, and the second of them lays down the proposition, citing the South Dakota case with approval, although, as will be pointed out, the decision itself might have been exclusively rested upon another ground.

In the opinion in State ex rel. v. Polley, supra, the following language is found:

> "We are also of the opinion that the word 'legislature,' as used in section 4, article I, of the federal Constitution, does not mean simply the members who compose the legislature, acting in some ministerial capacity, but refers to and means the lawmaking body or power of the state, as established by the state constitution, and which includes the whole constitutional lawmaking machinery of the state. State governments are divided into executive, legislative, and judicial departments, and the federal Constitution refers to the 'legislature' in the sense of its being the legislative department of the state, whether it is denominated a legislature, general assembly, or by some other name. Under section I, article 3, of the state constitution, it will be observed, the people of this state have reserved to themselves, as a part of the lawmaking power, the right to vote by referendum, upon any law passed by the legislature, with certain specified exceptions, prior to the going into effect of such law. That the exceptions mentioned are 'such laws as may be necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, support of the state government or its existing state institutions.' It is clear that said chapter 223 is not within any of these exceptions. Under the constitution of this state, the people, by means of the initiative and referendum, are a part and parcel of the lawmaking power of this state, and the legislature is only empowered to act, in accordance with the will of the people as expressed by the vote, when the referendum is properly put in operation. The term 'legislature' has a restricted meaning which only applies to the membership thereof, and it also has a general meaning which applies to that body of persons within a state clothed with authority to make the laws (Bouvier's Law Dic.; Webster's Dic.; Am. and Eng. Ency. 822; 25 Cyc. 182), and which in this state, under section 1, article 3, Const. S. D., includes the people. Therefore we are of the opinion that in the passage of this act dividing the state into two congressional districts, by the lawmaking power of this state, it was necessary that such law be passed according to the constitutional provisions of this state, and that the referendum was applicable thereto."

It is true that the authority of this decision is somewhat weakened by the inclusion in the opinion of certain dicta respecting the "reserved powers" of the state, found at page 8 et seq. of the report. However, these remarks, which are obviously ill-considered, have no relation to the above quoted portion of the opinion.

Judge Jones, of our own supreme court, employs the following language in his opinion in State ex rel. v. Hildebrant, supra:

"Does the term 'legislature,' as used in article I, section 4 of the federal Constitution, comprehend simply the representative agencies of the state, composed of the members of the bicameral body, or does it comprehend the various agencies in which is lodged the legislative power to make, amend and repeal the laws of the state, including the power reserved to the people empowering them to 'adopt or reject any law' passed by the general assembly under the provisions of section 1, article II of the constitution of Ohio.

* * * * * * * * * * *

"While article I, section 4, of the United States Constitution is controlling upon the states in so far as it grants the legislature of the state authority to prescribe times, places and manner of holding elections, this is the quantum of the federal grant. The character of the legislature, its composition and its potency as a legislative body are among the powers which are, by article X of said Constitution, 'expressly reserved to the states respectively, or to the people.'

"Webster's New International Dictionary defines 'legislature' as follows:

" 'The body of persons in a state, or politically organized body of people, invested with power to make, alter and repeal laws.'

"The Century dictionary defines the same term as follows:

" 'Any body of persons authorized to make laws or rules for the community represented by them.'

"Under the reserved power committed to the people of the states by the federal constitution, the people, by their state organic law, unhindered by federal check of requirement, may create any agency as its lawmaking body, or impose on such agency any checks or conditions under which a law may be enacted and become operative. Acting under this recognized authority, the Ohio Constitution, prior to the adoption of the amendment of 1912, provided that the 'legislative power' of the state should be vested in the general assembly, consisting of a senate and house of representatives. The same provision now exists, but by the adoption of the amendment of 1912 the people expressly limited this legislative power by reserving to themselves the power to reject any law by means of a popular referendum. * *

"The constitutional provision relating to the election of congressmen, conferring the power therein defined upon the various state legislatures, should be construed as conferring it upon such bodies as may from time to time assume to exercise legislative power, whether that power is lodged in a single or two-chambered body, or whether the functions of the latter be curbed by a popular vote or its enactments approved by a referendum vote. This view was sustained in State ex rel. Schrader v. Polley, 26 S. Dak. 5, a case similar to this."

The last quoted case was taken on error to the supreme court of the United States and there affirmed (241 U. S. 565). In the opinion of that court (by Mr. Chief Justice White), however, there is nothing as to the meaning of the word "legislature," as used in Art. I, Sec. 4 of the federal constitution, but the decision is expressly put upon the ground also asserted in the opinion of Jones, J., of the state court, but absent from the facts of the South Dakota case, that congress, in the exercise of its express power to "make * * * such regulations," had, in 1911, so amended its acts providing for redistricting a state for the purpose of electing members of the federal house of representatives as to provide that such redistricting should be made "in the manner provided by the laws thereof," thus shifting the inquiry from one as to whether or not the particular measure of this character was an act of the "legislature," in the strict sense, to that as to whether or not it was a "law of the state."

The South Dakota case is thus seen to be the only one strictly in point as to the interpretation of the word 'legislature,' in Art. I, Sec. 4.

Coming now to article II, section 1, and considering the meaning of the word "legislature" as therein used, I find certain intimations in McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, which require examination in this connection. The case itself is not in point on the facts, as it concerned merely the validity of an act of the Michigan legislature, providing that presidential electors should be chosen by popular vote in congressional districts. The opinion, however, contains the following statements (quoted with approval by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller from a report made by Senator Morton as Chairman of the senate committee on privileges and elections, recommending a constitutional amendment (1874) Senate Rep. 1st session 43d congress. No. 395):

"The appointment of these electors is thus placed absolutely and wholly with the legislatures of the several states. They may be chosen by the legislature, or the legislature may provide that they shall be elected by the people of the state at large, or in districts, as are members of congress, which was the case formerly in many states; and it is no doubt competent for the legislature to authorize the governor, or the supreme court of the state, or any other agent of its will, to appoint these electors. This power is conferred upon the legislatures of the states by the constitution of the United States, and can not be taken from them or modified by their state constitutions any more than can their power to elect senators of the United States. Whatever provisions may be made by statute, or by the state constitution, to choose electors by the people, there is no doubt of the right of the legislature to resume the power at any time, for it can neither be taken away nor abdicated."

In the same context Mr. Chief Justice Fuller summarizing an elaborate historical review of the practical operation and contemporaneous construction of the section of the constitution now under consideration, states the following conclusion:

"From this review * * * it is seen that from the formation of the government until now the practical construction of the clause has conceded plenary power to the state legislatures in the matter of the appointment of electors."

Again, earlier in the opinion, the Chief Justice had said:

"The state does not act by its people in their collective capacity, but through such political agencies as are duly constituted and established. The legislative power is the supreme authority except as limited by the constitution of the state, and the sovereignty of the people is exercised through their representatives in the legislature, unless by the fundamental law power is elsewhere reposed. The constitution of the United States frequently refers to the state as a political community, and also in terms to the people of the several states and the citizens of each state. What is forbidden or required to be done by a state is forbidden or required of the legislative power under state constitutions as they exist. The clause under consideration does not read that the people or the citizens shall appoint, but that 'each state shall;' and if the words 'in such manner as the legislature thereof may direct' had been omitted, it would seem that the legislative power of appointment could not have been successfully questioned in the absence of any provision in the state constitution in that regard. Hence the insertion of those words, while operating as a limitation upon the state in respect of any attempt to circumscribe the legislative power, cannot be held to operate as a limitation on that power itself.

* * * * * * * * * * *

"The constitution does not provide that the appointment of electors shall be by popular vote, nor that the electors shall be voted for upon a general ticket, nor that the majority of those who exercise the elective franchise can alone choose the electors. It recognizes that the people act through their representatives in the legislature, and leaves it to the legislature exclusively to define the method of effecting the object."

It is true that the above quoted excerpts fron the opinion in McPherson v. Blacker, supra, would seem to contain intimations in both directions on the question now under consideration. Yet when they are critically analyzed, they will, it is believed, be found to point in but one direction, on the exact question before me. Thus when Senator Morton said, of the power of the state legislature in the passage above quoted, that the context shows that he was thinking about a possible attempt of a state constitution to limit the subject matter of the provision which might be made by a state legislature in directing the manner of the appointment of the electors, rather than the effect of framework provisions of a state constitution in the delegation of legislative powers. That is to say, he was thinking about what the state might attempt to forbid or compel its "legislature" to do in the exercise of this plenary power, rather than about what a state might do in defining what should be its "legislature" for general purposes.

"This power is conferred upon the legislatures of the states by the constitution of the United States, and can not be taken from them or modified by their state constitutions any more than can their power to elect senators of the United States."

It must be admitted that the reference to the election of senators by the state legislatures does not tend to support this interpretation of the passage; for it would hardly be contended that under article I, section 3 of the constitution the "legislature" of a state, for the purpose of the election of United States senators, could be otherwise than the representative body, even where the state constitution might provide for the initiative or the referendum, or both.

If a certain discrimination is made, however, the difficulty, which seems to arise by reason of the supreme court's approving quotation of Senator Morton's report, will, it is believed diappear.

A perusal of the entire opinion in McPherson v. Blacker and a regard to the historical facts therein recited will show that the practical and contemporaneous construction of article II, section 1 of the constitution is such as not to limit the power of the state legislature thereunder to the mere directing of the manner in which the state shall appoint its electors, but to extend it also to the appointment of the electors itself. That is to say, for a considerable period of time and in many states of the Union it was custompary in the early days of the Republic for the presidential electors to be appointed by the state legislatures.

The act of appointment is clearly not legislative; neither does it in and of itself amount to a direction as to the manner in which the state shall appoint—rather, it is an appointment without any direction as to manner. In short, it is the exercise of a quasi-corporate function, in which the legislature appears as a body corporate. Such action by the state legislatures is of the same kind and character as the action which they were authorized and required to take in the election of senators under the original constitution.

But when a state legislature, instead of appointing the electors itself, might choose to direct the manner in which the state should appoint them, it is submitted that such direction partakes of the character of legislation. Indeed, the proper meaning of the clause, were we able to shut our eyes to the contemporaneous construction of it, would seem to require some legislative action on the part of the state as underlying the particular form of "appointment" which might be decided upon. That is to say, granted that it is competent for the legislative power of the state to authorize the appointment of presidential electors in any manner which it may see fit, without any limitation in that respect, and granted that it may be deemed expedient by the legislative power of the state to provide that such electors shall be appointed by the general assembly or other representtive body, yet, strictly speaking, it would not be technically proper for the respresentative body to exercise the power of appointment until it had authorized itself to do so by first exercising the legislative power.

This may seem like a quibble, and yet it is believed that there is discernible in this section two distinct ideas, viz., the appointment and the legislative direction as to the manner of appointment. The one is executive or quasi-ccorporate in character. The other is distinctly legislative. The one is imposed upon the "state"; the other upon its legislature.

Some such idea must have been in Mr. Chief Justice Fuller's mind when he spoke, in another one of the passages above quoted, of the "legislative power" of the state, and referred to it as being exercised on behalf of the people of the state "through their representatives in the legislature, unless by the fundamental law power is elsewhere reposed."

At any rate, the decision in McPherson v. Blacker, supra, can not be taken as conclusive of the question either way, first, because its facts did not call for the determination of the precise question now under discussion, and second, because the reasoning which has been quoted, besides being applicable to the question then before the court, is after all reconcilable in a way with either view of the question now under consideration.

I know of no other decision which might be regarded as even remotely in point. In the absence of such decision, your question requires me to answer the question upon what appear to me to be the sounder reasons.

It is well known that the electoral college, as incorporated in the constitution of the United States, was a compromise between the ideas of those in the constitutional convention who favored direct or indirect election of the chief executive by the people, and the ideas of those who favored election by the state legislatures in the manner in which senators were formerly elected. This conflict of ideas is well summed up in the opinion of McPherson v. Blacker, pp. 28 et seq. of the official report. The underlying thought embodied in the compromise was that each state should be allowed to determine for itself the precise manner in which its presidential electors should be chosen, being at liberty to employ the method of election by the members of the representative legislative body or the method of election by the people either in districts or in the state at large, the decision being left to the legislature of the state as a legislative body.

Indeed, the nature of the compromise was so well understood that some legislatures, without thought of taking formal action "directing the manner" of appointment, merely chose the presidential electors to which the state was entitled, at the appropriate times, knowing that it was the intention of the constitution to give them that option if they desired to exercise it. This explains, of course, the contemporaneous construction of the section to which reference has been made.

But while the state legislatures, under actual or implied self-direction, might exercise the appointing power in an executive capacity as a representative body acting like a quasi corporation, yet that was done after all only in pursuance of an actual or implied expression of will respecting the manner of election, which was in its nature legislative.

In short, having regard to the history of the section under consideration and to its language, in which the idea of appointment and the idea of prescribing the manner of appointment are so clearly distinguished, I am of the opinion that article I, section 4 of the federal constitution authorizes and requires an expression of the will of the legislative power of the state upon the question as to the manner in which the electors, representing the state in the choice of the president, shall be appointed. This is the primary power. The power to appoint, if exercised by the legislature as a representative body, is not a primary power emanating directly from the grant embodied in the federal constitution, but in the strict sense is a derivative authority created by the act of state legislation just referred to.

Putting it in another way, the state legislatures, which for a time exercised the power of appointment, did not get that power directly from the federal constitution. What they got from the federal constitution was the power to determine the manner in which presidential electors should be chosen for the state. Then having determined that that manner should be that the legislatures themselves should appoint the electors, they proceeded in effect to exercise the power of appointment under and by virtue of their own previous legislative determination that they should exercise such power.

No one pretends that any such elaborate proceeding was in point of fact followed in the early history of the country; but at that time it was not necessary that such distinction should be taken, because the legislative assemblies in the early days were identical in personnel with the repositories of legislative power.

At the present time, however, the introduction of the veto power and of the initiative and referendum has made a distinction between the legislative assembly as such and the "legislature" in the sense of the repository of legislative power. This distinction makes the discrimination above suggested necessary. At the present time, in accordance with the reasoning which appeals to me as correct, I do not believe that the state representative body, called the "General Assembly" or "Legislature," in a state where the legislative power is shared or checked by the people acting under the referendum, could appoint presidential electors, as in the old days, without the authority of a state law subject to such referendum. This is because, to retrace the steps of reasoning by which this conclusion has been reached, the power to appoint is lodged in a given place only by virtue of a "direction" as to "manner" on the part of the state legislature, viz., the law-making power of the state.

While the above reasoning is not based upon the authority of any opinion or decision of the supreme court of the United States, yet it is believed that after all it results from the reasoning of Mr. Chief Justice Fuller in McPherson v. Blacker, supra. He speaks in the opinion in that case repeatedly of a "plenary power" to be exercised by the state legislature; but the "power" which he characterizes as "plenary" is not the power to appoint, but the power to direct the manner of appointment. He says in a passage not yet quoted:

> "If the legislature possesses plenary authority to direct the manner of appointment * * * it is difficult to perceive why, if the legislature prescribes as a method of appointment choice by vote, it must necessarily be by general ticket and not by the districts."

Again, in a passage previously quoted, he says that the constitution "leaves it to the legislature exclusively to define the method of effecting the object."

To be fair, another passage also above quoted should be mentioned, in which Mr. Chief Justice Fuller, after reviewing the history of the practical operation of the electoral college, says:

> "From the formation of the government until now the practical construction of the clause has conceded plenary power to the state legislatures in the matter of appointment of electors."

Yet it is believed that on the whole the reasoning of the Chief Justice supports the view that the "plenary power" of the state legislature is not the power to appoint, but the power to direct the manner of appointment. If the plenary and original power is that of direction, which is essentially legislative, then the executive or quasi-corporate power of appointment, which was exercised for so long, must necessarily be secondary or derivative.

This process of reasoning demonstrates the fallacy of an argument which I find incorporated in a memorandum attached to your letter. The author of the memorandum, whose name is not given, starts out correctly when in citing McPherson v. Blacker, supra, he says:

> "It is absolutely established that the power of the state legislature to designate the manner of appointing the presidential electors is unlimited and plenary;"

but from this point he makes a false step in his logic, by assuming that the power which he has himself described is of the same character as the power possessed by the state legislatures, under the original constitution, to elect United States senators. In short, he changes the nature of the plenary power from that to direct the manner of appointment to that of appointment itself. He then argues—correctly enough from the erroneous minor premise which he has adopted—that the act of a state legislature, in directing the manner of appointment, is in effect a delegation of the original plenary power to appoint.

As suggested, the argument is faulty in the second branch of the syllogism therein embodied. The power of the state legislatures to elect United States senators under section 3 of article I is a directly conferred power; whereas the power of a state legislature to "appoint" presidential electors is not directly conferred upon it by the federal constitution, but becomes reposed in the representative legislative body as a distinct appointing authority only by virtue of an actual or hypothetical "direction" as to the "manner" of appointment previously made by the legislative power of the state. In other words, the writer of the memorandum has confused an original power with a derivative power.

To suggest parallels, let me suppose that a state statute should provide that the president and secretary of every private corporation should be elected by the board of directors and that all other officers of the corporation should be appointed in such manner as the board of directors might prescribe. Here the board of directors has plenary power in both instances, but the power to elect the president and secretary is derived originally from the state law; while the power to elect other officers, if assumed by the directors, is conferred upon them not directly by the state law, but indirectly through their own determination that such other officers shall be so elected.

When, then, the directors might choose, instead of appointing the other officers themselves, to provide that certain of them should be elected by the stockholders at the annual meeting, such determination on their part would not be, it is submitted, a delegation of an originally conferred power to appoint, but an exercise of the originally conferred power to direct the manner of appointment, viz., intra-corporate legislation, instead of direct executive action.

To recapitulate, in the view which I take of the question, the power possessed by the state legislature under article II, section 1 of the constitution of the United States, without any actual or assumed state action—that which is plenary in its character and originally conferred—is not the power to appoint, but the power to direct the manner of appointment. Such power is legislative power and upon the principle first above suggested the body upon which it is conferred must be understood to be that body which under the constitution of the state possesses the general legislative power—the power to make laws.

In other words, the word "legislature," as used in the section under consideration, means the repository of legislative power and not the representative body. The act which this body may or must perform is legislation directing the manner of appointing presidential electors. By such legislation, and not otherwise, in the strictly technical view of the case, the legislative assembly itself might acquire the power of appointment, which is secondary, in the manner in which that power was acquired and exercised in the early history of the country.

Of course the more recent history of the country in this respect shows that the view which I have taken has been accepted in practice. Sufficient time has not been available to conduct an exhaustive research into the practices of the several states, but it is believed that in all cases in which the legislatures of the several states have undertaken to provide for the choice of presidential electors otherwise than by themselves, they have acted through the forms of legislation. This was the case with the Michigan law, involved in McPherson v. Blacker, supra. It has always been the practice in Ohio, and I venture to say that it has been the practice everywhere and amounts to a practical interpretation of the meaning of the constitution and entitled to just as much weight as that commented upon in the opinion in McPherson v. Blacker, supra. In short, it has always been understood that the direction as to the manner of appointing presidential electors in the state constitutes a legislative act.

Summarizing my conclusions, I am of the opinion that where the federal constitution delegates to a "state legislature" a power, whether "plenary" or not, which is in its essential character legislative as opposed to executive or quasi corporate, the provision of the federal constitution conferring such power must be interpreted as pointing out and delegating the power conferred to that body, which within the state possesses the power to make laws, whether that body be a representative assembly, or a representative assembly checked by the executive veto or by initiative and referendum, or both. The power granted by article II, section 1, is legislative and not executive or quasi corporate. It is the power to direct the manner of appointment and not the power to appoint. Therefore, the word "legislature," as used in the section under consideration, has a meaning which in Ohio signifies the law-making power as including the people acting through the initiative and referendum.

For these reasons I am of the opinion that the law referred to in your letter is subject to the referendum.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PHYSICIAN—EMPLOYED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR INFIRMARY, ETC.—NOT UNDER CIVIL SERVICE—INTERPRETER—FEES—BEFORE MAYOR OR JUSTICE OF THE PEACE NOT SUCH COSTS AS MAY BE PAID BY COUNTY.

1. A physician employed by the county commissioners under section 2546 of the General Code is not under the civil service laws.

2. The fees of an interpreter before a justice of the peace or mayor is not such cost as may be lawfully taxed and paid by the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 31, 1917.

HON. HECTOR S. YOUNG, Prosecuting Attorney, Marion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of February 22, 1915, wherein you inquire relative to the statue of a physician for children's home and also as to the fees of an interpreter in a hearing before a justice of the peace.

Your first question is as follows:

> "1. (a) Is a physician employed by the county commissioners under section 2546 of the General Code of Ohio, to look after the inmates of the infirmary, such an employment as would come under the civil service? (b) If such employment is under civil service, what is the tenure of office?"

Section 2546 of the General Code, to which you refer, provides in part as follows:

> "County commissioners may contract with one or more competent physicians, to furnish medical relief and medicines necessary for the persons of their respective townships to come under their charge, but no contract shall extend beyond one year. Such contract shall be given to the lowest competent bidder, the county commissioners reserving the right to reject any or all bids. * * *"

The above section requires that the contract shall be given "to the lowest competent bidder." The entire scheme of civil service is founded on the employment of persons under competitive examination, unless the civil service commission shall deem it impracticable to determine the merit and fitness of the person by such competitive examination. This seems wholly inconsistent with the provisions of the section above referred to, for instead of taking the man with the highest grade it provides that the county commissioners shall take the one who is the lowest competent bidder.

Therefore I advise you, in answer to your first question, that the employment of a physician under the provisions of section 2546 of the General Code is not such an employment as would come under the civil service.

Your second question is as follows:

> "Is the fee of an interpreter in a hearing before a justice of the peace or a mayor such costs as may legally be paid by the county?"

There seems to be no statute authorizing the appointment or employment of, or payment to, an interpreter in hearings before justices of the peace or mayors, though certain cities having municipal courts may have such interpreters. The provision for the appointment of an interpreter for the court of common pleas is found in General Code section 1541, which does not seem to permit the selection of different persons casually to interpret testimony in different cases, but the appointment of a regular employe for that purpose. The section is as follows:

> "The judge of the court of common pleas of a county, or the judges of such court in a county in joint session, if they deem it advisable, may appoint either or all of the following:
> "First: A court interpreter, who shall take an oath of office, hold his position at the will of such judge or judges, and under the direction of the court, or any judge thereof, shall interpret the testimony of witnesses, translate any writing necessary to be translated in court, or in a cause therein, and perform such other services as are required by the court or a judge thereof. The interpreter shall, without extra compensation render such service also in the court of appeals, superior court, probate court, and court of insolvency, as the judge or judges of those courts may require. He shall receive for his services a compensation fixed by the judge or judges appointing him, not to exceed twelve hundred dollars in any year, or such sum in each particular case, as the court deems just. If a stipulated salary, such compensation shall be paid monthly from the county treasury, upon the warrant of the county auditor, and in other cases, at the conclusion of his services, upon the certificate of the judge or judges of the court in which they are rendered. * * *"

Section 4589 of the General Code provides that in cities where there is more than one police judge the judges of the police court may appoint an interpreter for the term of two years and fixes his salary at $1,500.00 per year.

These two sections include all the power there is for said appointment or employment of an interpreter.

Section 10490 of the General Code makes the provisions of civil courts applicable to proceedings before a justice of the peace so far as in their nature they may be so. This, however, could not extend to the appointment of an officer or employe which by these two sections is fixed and limited to courts named in them and they specify in just what court such interpreter shall appear.

Strictly speaking, such interpreter could not be subpoenaed as a witness before a justice of the peace because such subpoena is for testifying to matters of which he has knowledge, which does not mean knowledge that he has gained during a trial.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

Proper method of paying balance due on Covington Armory Contract, said balance having been assigned to various creditors.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 31, 1917.

HON. BYRON L. BARGAR, Secretary Ohio State Armory Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of March 9, 1917, to the following effect:

"On March 7, 1916, the Armory Board took action with relation to Covington Armory matter as follows:

"Pursuant to said resolution we have drawn the twenty-two certified accounts mentioned, and contractor has assigned same respectively to creditors as per list. In this way he has made them each a payment of 26 per cent. of what he owes them.

"If this procedure is the correct one, please indicate your approval as requested by resolution."

While it is true that the procedure which you outline in your communication results in the splitting of the cause of action and the creation of twenty-two debts where one had previously existed and it has generally been held that such assignments are unenforceable at law unless assented to by the debtor, yet I can see no objection, the contractor having assigned all his claims to the various creditors as per the list, in your recognizing such assignment and in the auditor of state drawing warrants as per the assignment.

In submitting the certified accounts mentioned and in the drawing of the vouchers the assignment should be attached to the vouchers in order that the transaction may fully appear by examination of the vouchers on file in the office of the auditor of state. Since the transaction is somewhat unusual I would further suggest that when you receive the warrants from the auditor of state's department, made out in the names of the various assignees, a receipt be taken by you from said assignees to be sent to the office of the auditor of state to be attached to the vouchers on file therein.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

VILLAGE COUNCIL—HAS AUTHORITY TO ABOLISH BOARD OF HEALTH PREVIOUSLY ESTABLISHED AND SUBSTITUTE HEALTH OFFICER.

Under section 4404 G. C. the council of a village has the right to determine whether the health affairs of the village shall be in charge of a board of health or a health officer, and may elect to abolish a board of health previously established, and substitute therefor a health officer to be approved by the state board of health.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1917.

HON. FRED W. MCCOY, Prosecuting Attorney, Carrollton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 24, 1917, you submitted for an opinion from this department the following request:

"The council of the village of Carrollton, Ohio, on October 22, 1915, passed an ordinance and abolished the board of health of said village, and appointed a health officer for said village, and said appointment was approved by the state board of health; said officer was appointed until the second Monday, 1917.

"In your opinion has the council of a village authority to abolish a board of health once established and appoint a health officer who shall act instead of a board of health?"

Section 4404 General Code reads as follows:

> "The council of each municipality shall establish a board of health, composed of five members to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council who shall serve without compensation and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. The mayor shall be president by virtue of his office. But in villages the counel, if it deems advisable, may appoint a health officer, to be approved by the state board of health, who shall act instead of a board of health, and fix his salary and term of office. Such appointee shall have the powers and perform the duties granted to or imposed upon boards of health, except that rules, regulations or orders of a general character and required to be published, made by such health officer, shall be approved by the state board of health."

The provisions of the foregoing section charge the council of a village with the duty of either establishing a board of health composed of five members, to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council, or of appointing a health officer to be aproved by the state board of health. It is clear, therefore, that the village council has authority to determine, at its option, whether the health affairs of the village shall be conducted by a board or by a health officer.

Section 4224 G. C. provides that "an action of council shall be by ordinance or resolution." So the act of council in establishing a board of health should be by way of ordinance or resolution.

It is a general rule of law, well established, that the power to enact an ordinance or resolution includes also the power to repeal it, and that an office or position created by an ordinance or resolution may be abolished by the repeal of the same, and the incumbent thereby ceases to have any right to hold such office or position.

State ex rel. v. Jennings et al., 57 O. S. 415.

Where the council of a municipality has authority to create an office or position, the right to repeal the measure creating said office or position, and thereby abolish the office and position, is unquestioned, unless some express duty of creating and maintaining same is placed on the council by the legislature or its power in that respect is specifically limited.

An examination of the provisions of the General Code relating to village councils and village boards of health does not reveal any limitation or duty, except the one heretofore noted that the council must provide either a board or a health officer to have charge of the health affairs of the village. It would seem, therefore, that the mere substitution of one method for the other, both being permitted under the Code, would not constitute an act on the part of said council in excess of the powers granted it.

For the reasons given above, I am of the opinion that the council of a village has authority to abolish a board of health once established, and to appoint a health officer who shall act instead of the board of health.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY TREASURER—UNDER CONSTITUTION CANNOT HOLD OFFICE MORE THAN FOUR YEARS IN PERIOD OF SIX YEARS—INELIGIBLE TO BE ELECTED IF TERM WILL EXTEND BEYOND FOUR YEARS—IF SO ELECTED TO OFFICE, THERE IS A VACANCY IN SAID OFFICE FROM BEGINNING OF SUCH TERM.

The constitutional prohibition against holding the office of county treasurer by one person, for more than four years in a period of six years, renders a person ineligible to be elected to said office for a term which will extend beyond such four-year limitation, and such person so elected for a term, before the conclusion of which he will have served in such office for a longer period than four years consecutively, is ineligible to hold said office, and there is, at the beginning of such term, a vacancy in the office, which should be filled according to law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1917.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On February 15, 1917, you addressed the following inquiry to this office:

> "I desire to inquire further concerning the status of the treasurer of your county. Mr. B. C. Howell was elected treasurer of Warren county in 1910 and re-elected in 1912. Before the expiration of his first term, to wit: on June 25, 1913, he died. On that date the board of county commissioners passed a resolution appointing Frank D. Miller to be treasurer for the unexpired term. It will be seen that at the expiration of that term the office would become vacant for a term of two years. On August 26, 1913, the board of county commissioners, for the purpose of providing a treasurer for the two year term passed a resolution substantially as follows: 'On motion of Mr. Irons, seconded by Mr. Simpson, Frank D. Miller was appointed to succeed himself as treasurer of Warren county, Ohio, for the term beginning the first day of September, 1913, and his bond be fixed at the sum of $40,000.00. Passed on August 26, 1913.' In 1914, Mr. Frank D. Miller was elected as treasurer at the election held in that year and was commissioned by the governor to be treasurer of Warren county for two years from the first Monday of September, 1915. It will be seen that if Mr. Miller occupies the treasurer's office to the end of his present term, that he will have served more than four years continuously. Does this violate the restriction as to one person holding the office of treasurer not more than four years in six, Mr. Miller having been appointed and elected as above set forth?"

This inquiry evidently has reference to the constitutional provision governing the office of county treasurer, which is as follows:—

> "Article X, Section 3: No person shall be eligible to the office of sheriff or county treasurer, for more than four years, in any period of six years."

There have been two decisions of the supreme court since this provision was put into effect, permitting an incumbent to hold the office of county treasurer for more than four years.

State v. Harris, 77 O. S. 481.
State v. Pontius, 78 O. S. 353.

In both these cases, however, the warrant for that which otherwise would have been a violation of the constitution is found in the constitution itself by reason of an amendment adopted in 1905 providing for the election of county treasurers in even years, and to that end extending the term for one year in those cases in which it happened to expire in the odd numbered year. In both cases the extension was placed entirely upon the constitution, the legislation extending the term being in pursuance of the amendment and to carry it into effect.

In a case in the supreme court of Kansas, Demaree v. Scates, 20 L. R. A. 97, the word "eligible" is very fully considered, and all definitions collated in the opinion. The following excerpt from the opinion gives the different terms in which the word is defined:

> "The contention is over the meaning that should be given to the word 'eligible' in the statute. This word is determined by law and other standard lexicographers thus:
> "Black: 'Capable of being chosen;' 'competency to hold office.'
> "Bouvier and Anderson: 'This term relates to the capacity of holding, as well as that of being elected to, an office.'
> "Abbott: 'The term "eligible to office" relates to the capacity of holding, as well as the capacity of being elected.'
> "19 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law 397: 'Capable of being chosen;' 'implying competency to hold office, if chosen.'
> "Worcester: 'Legally qualified;' 'capable of being legally chosen.'
> "Webster: 'That may be selected;' 'legally qualified to be elected and to hold office.'
> "Some law writers define the word as 'legally qualified; as, eligible to office;' 'legally qualified to hold office;' 'electible;' 'proper to be chosen;' 'qualified to be elected.' Plaintiff contends that 'legally qualified' is the proper definition of the word 'eligible,' as used in this statute. On the other hand, it is contended by the defendant that 'eligible' means 'proper to be chosen;' 'qualified to be elected;' 'that may be elected'—that is, the candidate for county commissioner must be eligible to the office at the time of the election."

Judge Shauck expresses the same definition of the word and applies it directly to the case in hand:

> "The word 'eligible' in the third section of the 10th article refers as well to qualification to continue in office as to qualification to take office. By its terms the test of eligibility relates to continuance in, or occupancy of, office. It prescribes no qualification peculiar to the taking of office but as to the two offices of sheriff and treasurer, with respect to which there are peculiar reasons for limiting the duration of incumbency, it prescribes such limitation. The term has been usually so interpreted in similar connections."
> "(State ex rel. Kelly v. Thrall, 59 O. S. 400).
> "See State ex rel. v. Murray, 28 Wis. 96; Carson v. McPhetridge, 15 Ind. 326; Smith v. Moore, 90 Ind. 204; Gossman v. State ex rel., 106 Ind. 203; State ex rel. Perine v. Van Beck, 87 Iowa 569, 19 L. R. A. 622."

No ground can be found for the distinction between cases where the treasurer is appointed and where elected, or where the tenure is partly under each.

DeTurk v. Commonwealth, 129 Pa., 151.

The mere etymology of the word "eligible," indicating capable of selection, might be supposed to apply to the time of choosing by election or appointment. That, however, is contrary to the meaning defined by any of the authorities above cited, and is also an impossible meaning under this constitutional provision in which it is used—"eligible for more than four years."

This case differentiates from any of those above cited. They all go upon the subject of the qualification of the candidate at the time of the election and of the officer at the beginning of the term. This is the case where a man has the qualification necessary for election to the office and assuming the office under the election, but possesses a disqualification that is bound to render him ineligible before the expiration of the term.

There can be no kind of doubt that he has no right to hold this office after the expiration of the four years, which was the question you asked. The question, however, of his right to this office is more far-reaching than your inquiry assumes. It is doubtful whether he was qualified to be elected to the office at all, and even more than doubtful, for it is scarcely doubtful on the other hand.

When a person is elected to an office he is elected for the lawful term of that office, and the question of his eligibility must be whether he is qualified to hold that office for the whole of that term, for the law could not contemplate an election to a part of a term. The law could not countenance the election of a man to enter into an office who should be compelled immediately to leave it in order that it might be filled by appointment, and yet there could be no difference whether this man's eligibility was to continue one day or one year and three hundred and sixty-four days. The principle is the same. When he procured himself to be voted for at this election he knew he could not run for a full term, and that he could not lawfully serve out the term he was seeking. It was then known that before the beginning of this term he would have served more than two years, and that in order to serve out the term he would have been in office more than four years, which violates the law and the constitution. He was not a candidate for that office until June, but until the expiration of the term. He was not eligible for that office, not eligible to be elected to it. He, therefore, has not been the legal incumbent of the office but a mere intruder therein, a de facto officer only, and is entitled to serve only until the vacancy now existing in the office may be filled according to law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFENSES—CLASSIFICATION—WHETHER STATE OR MUNICIPAL—IN CERTAIN CASES IN WHICH MITTIMI ARE SUBMITTED.

Different cases, in which mittimi are submitted, classified as to which are convictions under state law or ordinance of a municipal corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1917.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On March 21, 1917, you addressed to this department the following inquiry:

> "In conformity with your opinion No. 49, rendered February 23, 1917, and letter of March 9th, in which you state that 'a woman convicted of a violation of an ordinance cannot be sentenced to the Ohio reformatory for women at Marysville,' we have examined the list of charges against the women now confined at the reformatory and find a number that seem to be, in all probability, violations against ordinances rather than state laws.

"In order to definitely determine whether or not these women should remain in custody at the reformatory for women, and whether women should in the future be received under such charges, we submit herewith for your consideration and opinion the certificates of sentence in the following named cases. * * *"

An examination of the commitments has been made as requested and it appears that in each case there is a brief reference to the offense for which each defendant was committed, which indicates the nature thereof, and from which it may be determined with reasonable certainty whether it be a violation of a statute, and if so what statute, or whether it be for violation of an ordinance. You have not left these certificates but you have left a list of the names, with the offense briefly indicated opposite each name, which list with the indication of offense is here copied and, for the sake of brevity, opposite each name is carried out either the word "State" or "City," indicating in this manner whether the prosecution is under the state law or the ordinance of a municipal corporation:

Bridget Fitzsimmons,	Cincinnati,	Drunkenness	City
Alice Weber,	Cincinnati,	Disorderly conduct	City
Mamie Henderson,	Cincinnati,	Drunkenness	City
Margaret Gardner,	Cincinnati,	Adultery	State
Nellie Bauman,	Cincinnati,	Unlawfully having morphine	State

Luella Shank,	Dayton,	Petit larceny	State
Vera Smith,	Toledo,	Petit larceny	State
Lillian Wilson,	Toledo,	Petit larceny	State
Hilda Tidball,	Coshocton,	Petit larceny	State

It cannot be said beyond any doubt that none of the above are incorrectly stated, by reason of the very brief statement in each mittimus, but it is highly probable that all are correctly indicated.

PROBATION OFFICERS—WHEN TWO OR MORE ARE APPOINTED—ONE MUST BE DESIGNATED CHIEF PROBATION OFFICER.

When two or more probation officers are appointed by the court under the provisions of section 1662 G. C., one of them must be known as chief probation officer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1917.

HON. THOMAS M. WALTER, Probate Judge, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 24, 1917, as follows:

"I am writing you for a little point of information and your opinion on the matter of appointment of probation officer as provided under section 1662 General Code.

"Question. Can I appoint a second probation officer of my county without designation as to which shall be the chief probation officer? That is, that each be appointed under the general name of probation officer clothed with the same powers and authority without giving any preference as to title.

"The circumstances are such here, that I would much prefer to do this, if under the particular section above, I can do so and it will be legally done.

"About a year ago we had a chief probation officer, who resigned, and the assistant, who is under civil service, was permitted by my predecessor to go on with the work single handed. It has now become necessary by reason of the large volume of juvenile work and that of mother's pension, that another probation officer be appointed.

"Both the present incumbent and the party seeking the appointment, desire that if it becomes absolutely necessary that I must style one as chief probation officer, that he be given this title. Both would be satisfied, however, if I can appoint them in a general way without designating any title preference.

"The old probation officer who had resigned had been chief probation officer without compensation (as he was also humane officer). When the new humane officer was appointed, he thought he should also receive the appointment as chief probation officer, same as his predecessor.

"The assistant claims the right to this title by reason of her seniority in the work. Hence the difficulty."

Section 1662 General Code reads:

"The judge designated to exercise jurisdiction may appoint one or more discreet persons of good moral character, one or more of whom shall be women, to serve as probation officer, during the pleasure of the judge. One of such officers shall be known as chief probation officer and there may be first, second and third assistants. Such chief probation officer and the first, second and third assistants, shall receive such compensation as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of the appointment, but the compensation of the chief probation officer shall not exceed twenty-five hundred dollars per annum, that of the first assistant shall not exceed twelve hundred dollars per annum, and of the second and third shall not exceed one thousand dollars per annum, each payable monthly. The judge may appoint other probation officers, with or without compensation, but the entire compensation of all probation officers in any county shall not exceed the sum of forty dollars for each full thousand inhabitants of the county at the last preceding federal census. The compensation of the probation officers shall be paid by the county treasurer from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall be issued upon itemized vouchers sworn to by the probation officers and certified to by the judge of the juvenile court. The county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the treasury and the treasurer shall honor and pay the same, for all salaries, compensation and expenses provided for in this act, in the order in which proper vouchers therefor are presented to him."

It seems that the provision of the section just quoted, to the effect that "one of such officers shall be known as chief probation officer," answers your question, and it is my opinion that the two persons referred to cannot be appointed as probation officers without designating one of them as chief probation officer.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT AND DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT—ARE EACH ALLOWED THE SUM OF THREE DOLLARS PER DAY—FOR SERVICES RENDERED WHILE CONDUCTING INVESTIGATIONS UNDER SECTION 7827 G. C.—"OTHER EXPENSES" MEAN EXPENSES OTHER THAN FEES AND EXPENSES OF SUCH SUPERINTENDENTS.

The county superintendent and the district superintendent, as members of the county board of school examiners, are each allowed the sum of $3.00 per day for services performed while conducting investigation required by section 7827 G. C., and the words "other expenses of such trial" mean the expenses of the trial other than said per diem fees and expenses of such superintendents.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Complying with your request of January 26, 1917, I beg to submit my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"When charges are preferred against a teacher as provided in section 7827 G. C. and the county examining board, two members of the board by law being the county superintendent and a district superintendent, and the latter by ruling of the attorney-general is not permitted any expense reimbursement, may these two members of the examining board draw the $3.00 per diem and expenses, as provided in section 7828 G. C.?"

The board of county school examiners for each county consists of the county superintendent, one district superintendent and one other competent teacher, the latter two to be appointed by the county board of education, and among their other duties they are empowered to investigate the conduct of persons holding teacher's certificates, as provided by General Code section 7827, which reads in part as follows:

"* * * If at any time the recipient of a certificate be found intemperate immoral, incompetent or negligent, the examiners, or any two of them, may revoke the certificate; * * * Before any hearing is had by a board of examiners on the question of the revocation of a teacher's certificate, the charges against the teacher must be reduced to writing and placed upon the records of the board. He shall be notified in writing as to the nature of the charges and the time set for the hearing, such notice to be served personally or at his residence; and be entitled to produce witnesses and defend himself. The examining board may send for witnesses and examine them on oath or affirmation which may be administered by any member of the board touching the matter under investigation."

The fees and expenses of such hearing are provided for by section 7828 G. C., which reads as follows:

"The fees and per diem of examiners for conducting such investigation at three dollars a day each and other expenses of such trial shall be certified to the county auditor by the clerk and president of the examining board and be paid out of the county treasury upon the order of the auditor."

Your inquiry then is as to whether or not two of the members of said board of examiners may draw said $3.00 per day each for their services performed while holding an investigation, as provided by said section 7827, above quoted.

The salary of the county superintendent is provided for in section 4744-1, which reads as follows:

"The salary of the county superintendent shall be fixed by the county board of education, to be not less than twelve hundred dollars per year, and shall be paid out of the county board of education fund on vouchers signed by the president of the county board. Half of such salary shall be paid by the state and the balance by the county school district. In no case shall the amount paid by the state be more than one thousand dollars. The county board may also allow the county superintendent a sum not to exceed three hundred dollars per annum for traveling expenses and clerical help. The half paid by the county school district shall be pro-rated among the village and rural school districts in the county in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district."

The salary of the district superintendent is provided for in section 4743, which reads as follows:

"The compensation of the district superintendent shall be fixed at the same time that the appointment is made, and by the same authority which appoints him; such compensation shall be paid out of the county board of education fund on vouchers signed by the president of the county board. The salary of any district superintendent shall in no case be less than one thousand dollars per annum, half of which salary not to exceed seven hundred and fifty dollars shall be paid by the state and half by the supervision district, except where the number of teachers in any supervision district is less than forty, in which case the amounts paid by the state shall be such proportion of half the salary as the ratio of the number of teachers employed is to forty. The half paid by the supervision district shall be pro-rated among the village and rural school districts in such district in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district."

It will be noted that in neither of said sections is there contained language which might be considered as restricting either of said superintendents from accepting other fees or salaries for other work or employment not incompatible with their regular duties as such superintendents. In fact, section 7834 specifically provides that each member of the county board of school examiners, except the clerk, who by law is the county superintendent, shall receive ten dollars for each examination of fifty applicants or less, fourteen dollars for each examination of more than fifty applicants and less than one hundred, eighteen dollars for each examination of one hundred applicants and less than one hundred and fifty, twenty-two dollars for each examination of one hundred and fifty applicants and less than two hundred, and four dollars for each additional fifty applicants, or fraction thereof, and the same to be paid out of the county treasury on the order of the county auditor.

My attention, however, has been called to certain decisions which prohibit members of boards of county commissioners from receiving compensation other than their regular salaries. The answer to that is that the compensation of county commissioners is provided for in General Code, section 3001, and said section contains the following sentence.

> "Such compensation shall be in full payment of all services rendered as such commissioner."

No such language is contained, as above noted, in the sections which provide for the compensation of either the district or the county superintendent.

My predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in opinion No. 1748, and found in the attorney-general's opinions for 1916, page 1129, held that the county superintendent is entitled to the compensation of three dollars per day, provided for in section 7828 G. C., for conducting investigations required by section 7827 G. C., and I concur in said opinion, and hold that the same also applies to the district superintendent. Your inquiry, however, goes a little further and mentions the matter of expenses. I do not understand that the term "expenses" as used in the phrase "at three dollars a day each and other expenses of such trial" refers to the expenses of the members of the examining board, but I do believe that the words "other expenses of such trial" mean whatever expenses are necessary in securing witnesses, a place to hold said investigation, and any and all other legitimate expenses made necessary on account of said investigation. If the expenses of the district superintendent are allowable, authority for such allowance must be secured from sections other than said section 7828, above quoted.

Answering then your inquiry, I advise you that the county superintendent and a district superintendent are allowed the sum of three dollars per day for services performed while conducting investigations under section 7827 G. C., and that the words "other expenses of such trial" mean the expenses of such trial other than the said per diem fees and personal expenses of such members of the examining board.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

THE SPECIAL LEVY OF TWO TENTHS OF A MILL TO REPAIR BRIDGES CONDEMNED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—PROVIDED FOR IN SECTION 5643 G. C.—IS LIMITED TO A SINGLE LEVY—BONDS ISSUED IN ANTICIPATION OF COLLECTION SHOULD BE MADE PAYABLE WHEN TAX IS COLLECTED—THE LIMITATION IN SECTION 5643 DOES NOT APPLY TO LEVY FOR PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON AND PROVIDING A SINKING FUND FOR PAYMENT OF BONDS ISSUED UNDER SECTION 5644. THE FISCAL YEAR OF THE COUNTY WITH RESPECT TO TAXATION AND EXPENDITURE OF COUNTY FUNDS THUS RAISED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS COMMENCES ON MARCH 1st.

The special levy of two-tenths of a mill on each dollar of taxable property in the county for the purpose of rebuilding or repairing a bridge which has been condemned by the county commissioners by reason of same becoming dangerous to public travel, is limited by the provisions of section 5643 G. C. to a single levy on one duplicate, and bonds or notes issued in anticipation of the collection of this special tax must be made payable when such special tax is collected.

This limitation as to special tax authorized by section 5643 of the General Code does not apply to the levy made by the county commissioners for the purpose of paying interest on and providing a sinking fund for the payment of bonds issued under the latter part of section 5644 G. C., and such levy may be made annually in such amount as may be necessary to pay the interest on said bonds and to create a sufficient sinking fund to pay the bonds as they mature.

Sections 5649-3a and 5649-3d G. C., the same being a part of the Smith one per cent law, considered in connection with sections 2569 and 2596 G. C. and together held to compel the conclusion that the fiscal year of the county with respect to the taxation and expenditure for county purposes of money thus raised commences on March 1st, at which time the commissioners make their first semi-annual appropriation authorized and required by said provisions of 5649-3d.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 3, 1917.

HON. HARRY D. SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your letter of March 12, 1917, asking for my opinion, in which you say:

"The board of commissioners of Greene county, Ohio, desire an opinion from your department on the following:

"Section 5643 of the General Code, provides for the rebuilding of an 'important bridge,' which is 'condemned for public travel by the commissioners,' and 'without first submitting the question to the voters,' may levy a tax for such purpose 'in an amount not to exceed in any one year two-tenths of one mill for every dollar of taxable property upon the tax duplicate of said county.'

"Such a bridge has been so condemned by the local commissioners. It will cost approximately $20,000.00 to rebuild this bridge, including approaches. A tax levy of two-tenths of a mill on the tax duplicate of this county will raise between $9,000.00 and $10,000.00.

"QUESTION 1. Is the amount that may be raised by two-tenths of a mill levy, the total amount that may be so expended in any one year, or might fifty thousand or one hundred thousand dollars be expended in any one year, provided bonds were issued and the maturities of the same were such that an annual levy of two-tenths of a mill would meet all interest and maturities? In other words, does two-tenths of a mill fix the limit of the amount of the expenditure in any one year, or is that the limit of an annual levy to meet indebtedness incurred for that purpose?

"QUESTION 2. What is the year contemplated by the statute? If the limit provided is on the expenditure that may be made in any one year, is that year from January 1st to January 1st, or from September 1st to September 1st?"

With respect to your first question, I am clearly of the opinion that the special levy of two-tenths of one mill authorized by the provisions of section 5643 of the General Code for the purpose of rebuilding or repairing an important county bridge which has been condemned by the county commissioners for the reason that the same has become dangerous to public travel, is limited to a single levy on the one duplicate and that if bonds or notes are issued in anticipation of the collection of such special tax under the authority of the first paragraph of section 5644 of the General Code they must be made payable when such tax is fully collected.

My conclusion as to this question is in accord with that of my predecessor, Honorable E. C. Turner, as expressed by him in opinion No. 1837 addressed to Honorable Don C. Porter, prosecuting attorney of Coshocton under date of August 9, 1916. A copy of said opinion is herewith enclosed, and with respect to this opinion I desire to say that it fully meets my approval both as to the reasoning and conclusion.

In the opinion referred to Mr. Turner discusses the power of the county commissioners to borrow money for the purpose of rebuilding or repairing a county bridge which has been condemned under the authority given them by the latter part of section 5644 of the General Code, and in this opinion I do not deem it necessary, in view of the very full discussion of the question made in the opinion by Mr. Turner, above referred to, to do more than to state briefly my views with respect to the proper construction of said section 5643, 5644, and of sections 2434 and 5638 of the General Code, all of which have application to the matter of providing money for bridge construction and repair.

The general authority of the county commissioners to provide for the construction, improvement and repair of bridges is provided in section 2434 of the General Code. With respect to the question at hand this section provides in general terms for the purpose of erecting, repairing, improving or rebuilding necessary bridges the county commissioners "may borrow such sum or sums of money as they deem necessary at a rate of interest not to exceed six per cent per annum and issue the bonds of the county to secure such the payment of the principal and interest thereof."

With respect to the matter of bridge construction generally, the provisions of sections 2434 of the General Code are undoubtedly limited by the provisions of section 5638 of the General Code, which, together with sections 5643 and 5644 of the General Code formerly constituted section 2825 of the Revised Statutes. Section 5638 of the General Code provides that except in case of casualty the county commissioners shall not levy a tax appropriating money or issue bonds for the purpose of building a county bridge, the expense of which will exceed $18,000.00 without first submitting the question to the voters of the county.

"and as hereinafter provided"

It is clear from the provisions of sections 5643 and 5644 of the General Code, when read in connection with those of section 5638 of the General Code, that the provisions of the last named section have no application to the matter of rebuilding or repairing an important county bridge which has been condemned by the county commissioners by reason of having become dangerous to public travel. For the purpose of rebuilding or repairing such bridge the county commissioners may make the special tax levy of two-tenths of one mill for every dollar of taxable property upon the tax duplicate of the county authorized by section 5643, and in anticipation of the collection of such special tax may issue bonds or notes of the county payable when said special tax is collected or the county commissioners for the purpose of rebuilding or repairing a county bridge which has been so condemned may proceed under the authority granted them by the latter part of section 5644 and borrow by the issue of bonds such sums of money as may be necessary for the purpose. For the purpose of paying the interest on such bonds and creating a sinking or debt fund for the payment of bonds as they mature the commissioners will be required to make an annual levy sufficient for the purpose.

As to your second question, section 5643 of the General Code should be read in connection with the provisions of the Smith One Percent Law, particularly sections 5649-3a and 5649-3d, General Code, and with sections 2569 and 2596 of the General Code.

Section 5649-3a of the General Code provides, in part, as follows:

> "On or before the first Monday in June, each year, the county commissioners of each county * * * shall submit or cause to be submitted to the county auditor an annual budget setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for the wants for the incoming year and for each month thereof."

Section 5649-3d of the General Code provides as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in section 5649-3a of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has been provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from within such appropriations and balances thereof but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

Section 2596 of the General Code provides in part:

> "On or before the 15th day of February, and on or before the 10th day of August, of each year, the county auditor shall attend at his office to make settlement with the treasurer of the county and ascertain the amount of taxes with which such treasurer is to stand charged. * * * "

Section 2569 of the General Code provides:

> "On the first business day of each month, the county auditor shall prepare in duplicate a statement of the finances of the county for the preceding month * * * and * * * submit such statement to the county commissioners, * * * "

Looking to the provisions of section 5649-3a it is manifest that it is thereby intended that the county commissioners in preparing the budget should have in mind the needs of every department of the county government for some certain year designated in the section as "the incoming year."

It is likewise clear that the proceeds of the several levies made by the county commissioners in the submission of the budget to the county auditor cannot be available for expenditures until the first half of said levy is collected at the December tax collection, the February settlement by the county auditor with the county treasurer is made, and appropriations have been made by the county commissioners, as provided by section 5649-3d of the General Code. It is apparent that such appropriation should be made as of the date of the first monthly balancing of accounts after the first semi-annual tax settlement between the county auditor and the county treasurer, which date would be March 1st, which is the beginning of the counties' fiscal year, and appropriations made at that time by the provisions of section 5649-3d cover a period of six months. Atlhough the fiscal year of the board of county commissioners may be for some purposes from September to September, the fiscal year of the county as such is, as above indicated, from March 1st to March 1st.

By way of application to the situation disclosed in your communication it may be noted that no authority is given the county commissioners to effectuate a tax levy of any kind except in and by the budget to be submitted by them under section 5649-3a of the General Code, and if the county commissioners of your county choose to levy a special tax provided in section 5643 of the General Code, such levy must be carried into the budget provided for in said section. If the county commissioners, on the other hand, desire to proceed under the authority given by the latter part of section 5644 of the General Code they may now borrow money in an amount sufficient to rebuild or repair the bridge, as may be desired, by an issue of bonds, and in such case the annual levy of the county commissioners for interest and sinking fund purposes will be carried into the annual budget provided for by said section 5649-3a.

In conclusion I may be allowed to suggest that the resolution of the county commissioners providing for an issue of bonds to cover the cost and expense of rebuilding or replacing this bridge, as may be decided, should clearly recite the fact that this bridge has been condemned by reason of having become dangerous to public travel, otherwise such resolution may be construed only as an exercise of the general authority given them by section 2434 of the General Code to provide money for bridge purposes, which authority, as we have seen, is subject to the provision of section 5638, which requires a favorable vote of the electors of the county before the bridge can be constructed costing more than $18,000.00.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HABITUAL CRIMINAL ACT—REPEAL OF SAME DEPRIVED BOARD OF MANAGERS OF THE OHIO PENITENTIARY OF AUTHORITY TO PAROLE PRISONER SENTENCED UNDER SAID ACT—VIOLATION OF SUCH PAROLE DOES NOT FORFEIT GOOD TIME.

A prisoner was sentenced April, 1894, to the Ohio penitentiary to serve three years and life, being an habitual criminal. On May 6, 1902, the habitual criminal act was expressly repealed, and on December 15, 1905, the governor commuted the prisoner's term to twenty years. On February 20, 1906, the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary paroled him. This parole they revoked on November 11th of the same year, and declared forfeited 7 years and 4 months "good time" for such violation.

After the repeal of the habitual criminal act the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary had no power to parole the prisoner, and therefore no authority to charge him with the loss of "good time" for violation of the parole.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 4, 1917.

HON. P. E. THOMAS, Warden Ohio State Penitentiary, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 5, 1917, as follows:

"I respectfully request your opinion based upon the following facts, as to the status of the case of Addison Lewis, serial No. 42929, and advice as to whether or not Lewis should be released at once.

"Lewis was tried at the April, 1894, term of court of Licking county on an indictment charging him with grand larceny and being an habitual criminal. He was received at this institution on May 31, 1894, to serve a term of three years and life—the 'Life' part of the sentence being for the fact that Lewis was proven to be an habitual criminal under the law in force at that time, and which has since been repealed.

"On December 15, 1905, Governor Herrick commuted the sentence of Addison Lewis to a term of twenty years, which with good time allowance would have expired on January 30, 1907. His maximum term under the commutation of twenty years would have expired on May 30, 1914.

"On February 20, 1906, the then board of managers of the penitentiary released Lewis on parole.

"While on parole Lewis committed the crime of 'forgery' in Pickaway county, and, being advised of the fact, the then board of managers revoked the parole of Lewis and ordered his return to the penitentiary, and all good time taken. This was done on November 11, 1906.

"Lewis was convicted of the crime of forgery and sentenced to the penitentiary to serve a term of ten years to take effect immediately after the expiration of the sentence he was serving at that time, and returned to the Ohio penitentiary on December 6, 1906.

"Section 2169 reads: 'The board of managers shall establish rules and regulations by which a prisoner under sentence other than for murder in the first or second degree, having served the minimum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted, and not previously convicted of felony, or having served a term in a penal institution, or a prisoner under sentence for murder in the first or second degree, having served under such sentence twenty-five full years, may be allowed to go upon parole outside the buildings and enclosures of the penitentiary. Full powers to enforce such rules and regulations is hereby conferred upon the board, but the concurrence of every member shall be necessary for the parole of a prisoner.'

"I wish, therefore, that you would advise me, if the opinion you rendered in the case of Harry Mapleson, serial No. 35623 (No. 50, Feb. 23, 1917), insofar as to whether the then board of managers had any power to grant this man Lewis a parole, as he had served previously for a felony, and in fact had been sentenced as a habitual criminal under the law then in force, is applicable in this case.

"Lewis was discharged from his sentence commuted to twenty years on July 25, 1914, and commenced his term of ten years on July 26, 1914, which will expire November 25, 1920.

"If, however, the board of managers had no power to grant Lewis a parole, and therefore no power to take away 'good time allowance' for a violation of same, his 20-years sentence (with good time allowance) would have expired on January 30, 1907, but having lost 45 days for a violation of prison rules his actual release date should have been March 15, 1907.

"His present term of ten years would then have started on March 16, 1907, and with good time allowance his present sentence would have expired on July 14, 1913, and his full maximum term will expire on March 15, 1917."

The habitual criminal act was passed May 4, 1885, 82 O. L., p. 237, and provided:

"Every person who, after having been twice convicted, sentenced and imprisoned in some penal institution for felony, whether committed heretofore or hereafter, and whether committed in this state or elsewhere within the limits of the United States of America, shall be convicted, sentenced and imprisoned in the Ohio penitentiary for felony hereafter committed, shall be deemed and taken to be an habitual criminal, and on the expiration of the term for which he shall be so sentenced he shall not be discharged from imprisonment in the penitentiary, but shall be detained therein for and during his natural life, unless pardoned by the governor, and the liability to be so detained shall be and constitute a part of every sentence to imprisonment in the penitentiary; provided, however, that after the expiration of the term for which he was so sentenced, he may, in the discretion of the board of managers, be allowed to go upon parole outside of the buildings and enclosures, but to remain while on parole in the legal custody and under the control of said board, and subject at any time to be taken back within the inclosure of said institution; and power is hereby conferred upon said board to establish rules and regulations under which such habitual criminals who are prisoners may so go out upon parole, and full power to enforce such rules and regulations, and to retake and reimprison any such convict so going out on parole, is hereby conferred upon said board, whose written order, certified by its secretary, shall be sufficient warrant to authorize any police officer to return to actual custody any such conditionally released or paroled prisoner; and it is hereby made the duty of all chiefs of police and marshals of cities and villages and the sheriffs of counties, and of all police officers and constables, to execute any such order in like manner as ordinary criminal process, and for the performance of such duty the officer performing the same shall be paid by said managers for his services, such reasonable compensation as is provided by law for similar services in other like cases."

I note that the prisoner referred to in your letter was sentenced to the Ohio penitentiary in April, 1894, to serve a term of three years and life under this act. On May 6, 1902, the habitual criminal act was expressly repealed (95 O. L., p. 410). On December 15, 1905, Governor Herrick commuted Lewis' term to twenty years, and on February 20, 1906, the board of managers paroled him. This parole they revoked on November 11th of the same year.

The authority to parole prisoners in the Ohio penitentiary is found in section 2169 G. C., which was originally part of an act passed March 24, 1884 (81 O. L., 72), and amended May 4, 1885 (82 O. L., 236). The provision of section 2169 General Code to the effect that a prisoner to be eligible to parole must have "served the minimum term provided by law for the crime of which he was convicted, and not previously convicted of a felony, or having served a term in a penal institution," was in the original act, and has continued in the parole law to date. It is therefore clear that the prisoner Lewis, serving his third term, could not have been paroled by the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary under authority of this section. If there was any authority to parole Lewis it was under the habitual criminal act itself, which granted the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary authority to make rules and regulations for the parole of prisoners serving life terms as habitual criminals. The question, however, arising in this case is, could the board of managers lawfully parole Lewis under the parole provision of the habitual criminal act on February 20, 1906, four years after the habitual criminal act had been repealed?

On August 11, 1913, this department rendered an opinion on this very case, in which it was said:

> "By the terms of the habitual criminal act an habitual criminal was subject to parole. Lewis' sentence was for life, subject to such right of parole. The commutation by the governor could not place him in the category of a prisoner to whom a parole might be granted after serving the minimum term, consequently the question is whether the repeal of the habitual criminal act deprived Lewis of his right to a parole.
> "This raises a question of far-reaching effect and of the greatest importance, and while there is no saving clause in the repealing act, and there is no doubt of the power of the legislature to make the repeal, yet there is grave doubt as to its being effective to deprive Lewis of a right which was his under his sentence."

However, in that opinion no reference was made to the case of In re Kline, 70 O. S., page 25, the second branch of the syllabus of which reads:

> "A conviction and sentence under section 7388-11 Revised Statutes, commonly known as the 'habitual criminal act,' does not confer upon the prisoner a right to be paroled at the discretion of the board of managers which remains to him after the repeal of said act."

In this case the court said at page 28:

> "In State v. Peters, 43 Ohio St., 629, this court held that this statute (section 7388-11 Revised Statutes) was constitutional, and that it did not interfere with the executive or judicial departments of the state government, and the court so held for the reason that, the statute did not undertake to confer upon a prisoner the right to a pardon, absolute or conditional, nor to commute the sentence, nor to modify the sentence by shortening the term or by discharging the prisoner. The court construed this statute as being merely a 'disciplinary regulation,' which was clearly within the power and discretion of the legislature to make or not to make. As a disciplinary regulation it would no more confer a vested right upon the prisoner than would any other rule or regulation which may be promulgated from time to time for the regulation of prisons and prisoners. It is not an essential part of the prisoner's sentence, and in its very nature and object it is subject to modification or repeal. And for the reason that it is not a part of the sentence, but extraneous to it, because it is only a tentative rule for prison government, a repeal of such legislation neither takes away any right of the prisoner nor in any manner affects his sentence theretofore made and put into execution. The prisoner still has the right to appeal to executive clemency for a pardon, and until a pardon shall be granted a sentence lawfully made and carried into effect under a valid statute must be enforced, although the statute has been repealed."

This is the only expression of the supreme court of this state on this question and it is clear that under this decision the board of managers had no authority to grant Lewis the parole referred to, and they could not, therefore, take any "good time" from him for violation of parole, as was decided in an opinion to you under date of February 23, 1917, in the case of Harry Mapleson.

It might be argued, however, that inasmuch as Lewis was originally sentenced by the court to a life term, he could not gain the "good time" allowed him on his commuted term of twenty years, since he could not be said to be a prisoner sentenced to twenty years within the meaning of section 2163 G. C., allowing diminution of sentence to prisoners sentenced for definite terms.

Section 2163 G. C. reads:

"A prisoner confined in the penitentiary, or hereafter sentenced thereto for a definite term other than life, having passed the entire period of his imprisonment without violation of the rules and discipline, except such as the board of managers shall excuse, will be entitled to the following diminution of his sentence:

"(a) A prisoner sentenced for a term of one year shall be allowed a deduction of five days from each of the twelve months of his sentence.

"(b) A prisoner sentenced for a term of two years shall be allowed a deduction of six days from each of the twenty-four months of his sentence.

"(c) A prisoner sentenced for a term of three years shall be allowed a deduction of eight days from each of the thirty-six months of his sentence.

"(d) A prisoner sentenced for a term of four years shall be allowed a deduction of nine days from each of the forty-eight months of his sentence.

"(e) A prisoner sentenced for a term of five years shall be allowed a deduction of ten days from each of the sixty months of his sentence.

"(f) A prisoner sentenced for a term of six or more years, shall be allowed a deduction of eleven days from each of the months of his full sentence.

"(g) A prisoner sentenced for a number of months or fraction of years shall be allowed the same time per month as is provided for the year next higher than maximum sentence."

The question then is, is the prisoner who was originally sentenced to a life term in the penitentiary and then commuted by the governor to a term of twenty years entitled to "good time" under the foregoing section, the same as if he (the prisoner) had been originally sentenced by the trial court to a term of twenty years?

In 29 Cyc., page 1561, it is said:

"Commutation of sentence or punishment is the change of the punishment to which a person has been condemned to a less severe one."

Commutation has also been defined as:

"Substitution of a less for a greater penalty or punishment. Anderson Law Dictionary.

"Substitution of a less for a greater punishment by authority of law. Lee v. Murphy, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 789."

In re Victor, 31 O. S., 206, the court held:

"Commutation is not a conditional pardon, but the substitution of a lower for a higher grade of punishment."

In this case the court said, at page 208:

"Where the punishment of a lunatic is commuted under this statute, the substituted punishment is a punishment prescribed by law, equally as if it had been the only punishment provided for the offense, or the punishment inflicted by the sentence of the court."

This decision was affirmed in State v. Peters, 43 O. S., 629.

In the case of ex parte Collins, 94 Mo., 22, the statute provided that one who was "under the sentence of imprisonment for life" was entitled to a recommendation for pardon after having served fifteen years. The prisoner in that case was convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced to death in the St. Louis circuit court. The governor commuted his punishment to imprisonment in the penitentiary for life. Thereupon that court, by an order to that effect, entered of record, sentenced the prisoner to imprisonment in the penitentiary for life. The question was then later raised as to whether the prisoner was "under sentence of imprisonment for life" since he had been originally sentenced to death and then commuted. The court said, at page 24:

"I do not regard the situation of the petitioner as at all affected, one way or the other, so far as the present question is concerned; whether he was originally sentenced to imprisonment for life or not, or whether his death sentence was commuted, as heretofore stated. He is now in the penitentiary by virtue of the sentence of the court; and he would have been thus in the penitentiary by virtue of such sentence, even if the court had made no subsequent order in the premises * * * . By the terms of the second section of the act, on which the petitioner relied when he was 'under sentence of imprisonment for life' was entitled to the benefits of that section by observing the conditions mentioned in the first. The words 'under sentence of imprisonment for life' are broad enough, however, to cover and include in the sentence, whether it be considered as resulting from the act of the court or that of the executive. The words employed certainly make no distinction; and that if less plain than they are, the presumption in favor of liberty would authorize such construction."

In Am. and Eng. Ency. of Law, Vol. 24, page 597, it is said:

"The exercise of the power of commutation limits or modifies the original sentence of the court. It does not, however, annul the sentence, but, subject to the modifications, it makes it pro tanto an affirmance. Thus where a person sentenced to death has had his sentence commuted to life imprisonment, the status is the same as if his original sentence had been life imprisonment."

Reference is there made to an opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States, 5 Opinions of the Attorneys-General, page 370. This opinion related to the case of an Indian who had been sentenced to death and whose punishment was by the president commuted to life imprisonment. The statutes construed in that case are found in 4 Statutes at Large, U. S., 118, and page 739, and read as follows:

> "Section 15. And be it further enacted that in every case where any criminal convicted of an offense against the United States shall be sentenced to imprisonment and confinement to hard labor, it shall be lawful for the court, by which the sentence is passed, to order the same to be executed in any state prison, or penitentiary, within the district where such court is holden; the use of which prison or penitentiary may be allowed or granted by the legislature of such state for such purposes."
> "That whenever any criminal convicted of any offense against the United States shall be imprisoned, in pursuance of such conviction, and of the sentence thereupon, in the prison or penitentiary of any state or territory, such criminal shall in all respects be subject to the same discipline and treatment, as convicts sentenced by the courts of the state or territory."

In this case the question evidently was, whether or not it was proper to confine the Indian prisoner in the state pemitentiary under these statutes, because of the fact that he had not been sentenced by the court itself to imprisonment in the penitentiary within the meaning of the sections above quoted, but had been sentenced to death and this sentence later commuted by the president to a life term imprisonment. The Attorney-General said:

> "I have examined the letter which you were pleased to refer to me by the governor of Missouri, relative to the case of the Indian, Lee-Lee-Sah-Ma, who was sentenced to death and whose punishment was by your pardon commuted to 'imprisonment for life to the penitentiary of the state.'
> "In my opinion this Indian, under the operation of the conditional pardon which has been granted to him, stands in precisely the same legal condition as if he had been sentenced by the court 'to imprisonment for life in the penitentiary' in the state of Missouri. This is my construction of the acts of Congress (4 Statutes at Large 118, 739) and the law of Missouri, allowing to the United States the use of her penitentiary."

In consideration of these authorities, it seems clear to me that a prisoner whose life term has been commuted to twenty years by the governor of Ohio stands in precisely the same legal condition as if he had been originally sentenced to a term of twenty years and is therefore entitled to diminution of sentence for good behavior under section 2163 G. C.

It might, perhaps, be argued too that while the board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary had no authority to deduct the "good time" earned on this twenty year sentence from Lewis, because of violation of parole, they nevertheless had the authority to deduct it for violation of the prison rules and that their act in taking his time might be considered lawful in this way for this reason.

Section 2164 G. C. reads:

> "The board of managers may deduct from a prisoner a part or all of the good time gained, for a violation of the rules of discipline, or a want of fidelity and care in the performance of work, according to the aggravated nature or the frequency of the offense. The board may review the conduct record of a prisoner.

If a violation of the rules and discipline was committed through ignorance or circumstances beyond his control or abuse by an officer, the managers may restore to the prisoner the time lost by such violations."

This section was in force in 1906 when the board of managers released Lewis from the institution. The journal of the proceedings of the board of managers of the penitentiary clearly show that the time taken was for violation of parole and the record of revocation of parole reads as follows:

"The parole of Addison Lewis, Parole 1681, Serial No. 25584, was revoked, all good time declared forfeited, and return to prison ordered for leaving his place of employment and remaining idle and the fact that he is now in jail for forgery."

Now section 2164 gives the board of managers power to deduct "good time" which has been gained, "for a violation of the rules of discipline or want of fidelity and care in the performance of work." But since the board had no authority to parole Lewis, it could not be said that in his case the bounds of the penitentiary were extended to the state line and misbehavior anywhere within the state would constitute misbehavior in prison.

It is therefore clear that in the Lewis case, section 2164 could not possibly authorize the board to take any time for any misconduct of Lewis while outside the penitentiary walls. These things being true, Lewis should have commenced his ten year term on March 16, 1907, instead of July 26, 1914, and with the "good time" allowance under this ten year term, the same would have expired July 14, 1913, instead of November 25, 1920, and the prisoner's imprisonment should have been terminated on July 14, 1913.

I am therefore of opinion, in direct answer to your question, that Addison Lewis, No. 42929, should be released from the Ohio penitentiary immediately.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ANSWER TO NINE QUESTIONS RELATIVE TO THE DUTY OF THE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE IN REGARD TO EXAMINING, DESTROYING AND PLACING UNDER QUARANTINE ANIMALS AFFECTED WITH DANGEROUSLY CONTAGIOUS AND INFECTIOUS DISEASES.

1. (a) When notice comes to the board of agriculture that cattle are affected with a dangerously contagious disease and they are placed under quarantine, the board not having made or caused to be made an examination of such cattle, then it is the duty of the board to have a proper examination made at the earliest moment, to determine whether or not the quarantine should be continued.

(b) When notice comes to the board of agriculture that cattle are affected with a dangerously contagious disease, said notice being brought to the attention of the board by an examination made by a veterinarian on the approved list of said board, the board may approve and adopt such examination and there would be no duty to make a further test at that time. If the quarantine is continued for a considerable length of time, then the board should determine whether they deem it necessary to destroy any animals and in that event a further test would be necessary.

(c) If the notice comes to the board from a person who owns or has in charge an animal which he knows or has reason to believe is affected with a dangerously contagious disease then the board should cause the proper examination to be made before quarantine, unless it is a case of absolute necessity, when quarantine could be laid at once and then it would become necessary for the board to have a proper examination made as soon thereafter as practicable.

2. Infected cattle need not be appraised unless the board determines it is necessary to destroy them under section 1114 G. C., in order to prevent the spread of the disease.

3. It is the duty of the board to cause an examination to be made of all cattle reported to them to be affected with a dangerously contagious disease, notwithstanding that prior examination had been made by a local veterinarian.

4. The board can not refuse approval of claims for compensation of destroyed animals merely because the owner has had his cattle tested by a local or private veterinarian prior to the official examination caused to be made by the board.

5. The board can adopt any reasonable rule or regulation it deems necessary to carry out the purposes of the law. So called form 7 is not authorized in its entirety.

6. Mere refusal to sign form 7 is not sufficient cause for the board to refuse to approve claims for compensation for cattle destroyed by its order.

7. The board is authorized to appoint, in such manner as they deem proper, appraisers to fix the value of animals reported to be destroyed, and such appraisers must be disinterested citizens.

8. The board, under section 1114 G. C. is authorized to appraise animals about to be destroyed.

9. The board should keep a record containing the history of all its proceedings, including orders appraising, quarantining or ordering slaughtered infected animals.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1917.

The Board of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your inquiry under date of February 8, 1917, wherein you submit nine questions for opinion. I will attempt to answer them seriatim.

Your first question is:

"1. If it comes to the attention of the board of agriculture that cattle are infected with tuberculosis and are placed under quarantine, is the board in duty bound under the statute to make a test or examination to ascertain whether they are tubercular?"

Your question asks whether the board of agriculture is in duty bound under the law to make a test or examination to ascertain whether cattle are tubercular or not, when "it comes to the attention of the board that such cattle are infected with tuberculosis and are placed under quarantine."

To intelligently answer your inquiry, it becomes necessary to consider how cattle are placed under quarantine. Section 1112 G. C. is the only section that expressly points out the manner of and provides for quarantine, but I am inclined to believe that under section 1108 the board of agriculture possesses such plenary powers that they could lay a quarantine other than under the provisions of section 1112 G. C.

Section 1108 G. C. (106 O. L. 149) provides as follows:

"The board of agriculture shall promote and protect the live stock interests of the state, prevent the spread of dangerously infectious and contagious diseases and co-operate with the bureau of animal industry of the United States department of agriculture in such work. The board of agriculture may use all proper means in the prevention of the spread of infectious and contagious diseases among domestic animals and in providing for the extermination of such diseases."

This section, a legitimate exercise by the legislature of the police power of the state, sets forth the broad and general powers and duties with which the board of agriculture is invested. Provision is made that they shall promote and protect the live stock interests of the state, prevent the spread of dangerously infectious and contagious diseases, and the section further provides for harmonious action on the part of the state with the federal officers. They are invested with all proper means necessary to prevent the spread of infectious and contagious diseases among domestic animals and are authorized, if possible in every conceivable, proper way, to stamp out communicable diseases to which stock are subject.

The board of agriculture was called into existence in pursuance of a policy which the legislature deemed calculated to promote the interests of an important industry of the state, and the legislative intent is clear that it sought to endow that board with certain powers which it deemed necessary for the maintenance of the health of live stock and the prevention of contagious diseases with which the stock are liable to be affected.

Assuming, then, that it has come to the attention of your board in some other manner than by notice from the owner or from some person in charge of the cattle, that he has reason to believe that they are infected with a dangerously contagious and infectious disease, and assuming further that there has been no examinatio of such cattle, but that the board, in the exercise of the broad powers that the law and the very nature of their duty gives them, orders a quarantine of said stock, then it is my opinion that the board is in duty bound, at the earliest possible moment, to cause a test or examination of the stock, in order to determine whether or not they are tubercular to the extent that a quarantine should be continued. This would only be fair to the owner of such stock and also protection to the board, as they would not be warranted in continuing the quarantine unless the animals were so contagiously infected as would necessitate such isolation.

It has been brought to my attention that the board of agriculture under their rules has a list of veterinarians of the state that they have designated an "approved list." I am further advised that the board has approved the names of the persons on this list, because they deem them qualified and competent to practice veterinary medicine and surgery, and that in carrying out the inspection laws among the states it has been the rule and custom of the board to in some manner adopt and approve tests and examinations of the veterinarians on such approved list.

Assuming a case of a veterinarian on the approved list having made an examination of the animals and reported same to the state board, and that the board, approving and acting upon such examination, orders a quarantine, then, for the purposes of the quarantine alone, I am inclined to the view that the board, having officially recognized and approved the examination, and the notice not having come in the manner stated in section 1112 G. C., would have no duty placed upon it to make a further test at that time; but if the quarantine were continued any length of time, then the board in their judgment should determine whether or not, in order to protect the live stock interests of the state, it is necessary to destroy any of these animals. In the latter event another situation would arise and it would become necessary, under section 1114 G. C., to have a test or examination made by a veterinarian in the employ of the board. If the quarantine were laid by virtue of section 1114 G. C., that is, if the notice were given by the person owning or who was in charge of the animals, then the proper examination, as disclosed by that section, should have been made prior to the order of quarantine.

Section 1112 G. C. (106 O. L. 149) provides:

> "If a person owns or has in charge an animal which he knows or has reason to believe is affected with a dangerously contagious or infectious disease, he shall give notice of such fact immediately to the board of agriculture, a member thereof, or the sheriff or constable of the proper county. Thereupon, the board of agriculture shall at once cause a proper examination to be made by competent veterinarians of the diseased or infected animals, and, if the disease affecting such animals is found to be dangerously contagious or infectious the board shall order the diseased animals or those which have been exposed to the contagion be strictly quarantined, in charge of such person as the board shall designate, and order any premises or farms where diseased animals are found or have been recently kept to be put in quarantine. No domestic animals shall be brought to or removed from the premises or places so quarantined."

This section, imposing in the first part the duty upon the owner of any animal which he knows or has reason to believe is affected with a contagious malady, of giving notice of that fact to the proper officers therein named, describes what the board of agriculture must do upon receipt of said notice.

This section and section 1108 G. C. should be read and construed together. While I am of the opinion that ample power is given under section 1108 G. C. for the board to do all reasonable things found practically necessary to carry out the duty of protecting the live stock interests of the state, preventing the spread of dangerously infectious and contagious diseases and stamping out such diseases, and that this section alone would authorize them, either on their own initiative or upon notice coming to them from the owner of the animals or in any other manner, to order a quarantine of such animals, still, since the legislature has seen fit to prescribe a specific procedure when the notice is given by the owner or one in charge of such animals, it is my view that the provisions of section 1112 G. C. in those cases should be carried out.

I am further of the opinion that the proper examination provided in section 1112 G. C. should also always be made or caused to be made by the board before an order of quarantine is issued, except in the most urgent cases, when necessity demands that, owing to the highly dangerous contagiousness of the disease, immediate action be taken.

I desire to call your attention, however, to what might be deemed a "proper examination" and I am now speaking of the examination under section 1112 G. C. which precedes the order of quarantine. As I construe the law, when notice of the fact that an animal is affected with a dangerously contagious or infectious disease comes to the board, either from information furnished by the owner or in any other manner, a duty forthwith devolves upon the board to cause an examination to be made to determine whether or not the animals are infected. The statute says that this examination must be caused to be made by the board "by competent veterinarians."

As was said by Burch, J., in Cory v. Graybill, 149 Pac. 419:

> "There are veterinarians and veterinarians. As in other professions, some members are competent and reliable, and some are not; and it is not inconceivable that an unscrupulous dealer in Illinois might be able to secure, without difficulty, certificates of health for a herd of diseased cattle which he desired to dispose of."

Now, this statute provides for an examination by a competent veterinarian, and since the board causes the examination to be made, they are to be the judge and their selection should be a person whom they deem to be competent. If this examination is made by a veterinarian in the employ of the board, one who is an appointee and holding an official position in the state's service, his examination would be effectual for not only the purposes of section 1112 G. C., but also for the purposes of section 1114 G. C., of which I will speak later in answer to another of your questions. But it is my view that the competent veterinarian spoken of in section 1112 need not necessarily be an appointee of the board, but may be any veterinarian whose competency is recognized by the board. The veterinarians on the approved list would of course be deemed competent by the board, or they would not be on such list.

If such unofficial veterinarian makes the examination and the board receives and approves the result of that examination, then it is my view that if the board determines that the malady is dangerous or infectious, the board shall order the diseased animals, as well as those which have been exposed to the contagion, to be quarantined.

Now, if the board in its wisdom decides that nothing further is to be done than merely to quarantine the animals so that they might be treated and the disease cured, even though the examination is made by an unofficial veterinarian, no further step is required.

But if the board, in carrying out its duty under the statute to exterminate the disease, deems it necessary to destroy any of the animals thus quarantined, the fact that an unofficial or local veterinarian has made the examination, upon which the order of quarantine issued, is not sufficient. That would require, as provided by section 1114 G. C., before an animal could be killed, that an examination be made "by a competent veterinarian in the employ of the board, and the disease, with which it is affected or to which it has been exposed, adjudged a dangerous and contagious malady."

It might be well to say at this point that the idea of "quarantine" imports merely a temporary isolation. "Quarantine," as its name indicates, was originally for a forty day period, although it is frequently used for terms of variable length.

The Standard dictionary defines "quarantine:"

> "1. The interdiction for a fixed period of time (originally forty days) of all communication with persons, ships, or goods arriving from ports or places infected with contagious disease, or having or being supposed to have infectious disease on board.
> "2. * * *
> "3. The enforced isolation of any person or place infected with contagious disease; loosely, any enforced isolation, or restraint within limits, as for punishment.

"4. * * *."

It is my opinion that if a quarantine be laid, such quarantine should only continue for such reasonable period as is necessary to conserve the live stock interests of the state and prevent the spread of the infection which necessitated the quarantine. If the report upon which the board acted in ordering the quarantine is of a character to evidence a necessity for destroying some of the animals in order to prevent the further spread of the disease or to provide for its extermination, then there is a duty upon the board, acting with a sound discretion, to proceed, under the provisions of section 1114 G. C., in the destruction of such animals. This, as I have already said, would necessitate an examination of such quarantined animals by a competent veterinarian in the employ of the board, even if therefore an unofficial or local veterinarian had made the test which resulted in the order of quarantine.

Therefore it is my opinion that if the board, without any examination, owing to the absolute necessity of the case, orders a quarantine as soon as they know the cattle are infected, then it is their duty at once to make the test or examination, to determine whether the cattle are tubercular or not. If the order of quarantine is placed owing to knowledge that comes to the board by reason of some examination that has been made by some unofficial veterinarian without having been ordered to do so by the board, then it is their duty as soon as possible to verify the reasons that caused the quarantine to be ordered, by making or causing to be made a proper examination of such cattle, in order to determine whether this quarantine should continue.

If the order of quarantine has been regularly placed under the provisions of section 1112 G. C., that is, if on notice from the owner or the person in charge of the cattle the board caused an examination to be made by a competent veterinarian, then they are not required to make a further test unless the cattle were so dangerously infected that it would become the board's duty to destroy them or some of them.

As stated before, if it become necessary to destroy any of the cattle, then an examination would have to be made by a veterinarian in the employ of the board, unless such examination had been made contemporaneously with the order of quarantine by such veterinarian and so recently that it would satisfy the board of the facts necessary to be found under the provisions of section 1114 G. C.

I desire to call attention to the fact that the statute is silent as to raising a quarantine once laid. This does not seem right and I would suggest that it would be good policy for the board, after a reasonable time, to make tests to determine whether or not the quarantine should continue.

Your second question is:

"2. If they are found to be infected with tuberculosis, is the board by law compelled to appraise those cattle?"

I take it from this inquiry that you desire to know whether or not, if the cattle are found to be infected with tuberculosis, from the examination made under the provisions of section 1112 G. C., it would be the imperative duty of the board to appraise the cattle. In my discussion of the first question I have practically answered the question in the negative, if the board after having quarantined the cattle decide that they are not so dangerously contagious or infected that they might not be taken care of and possibly cured, or in any event that it is not necessary to destroy any of them. But if it is determined by the board, in order to prevent the spread of the disease, that it is necessary to destroy the animals, then it becomes necessary to appraise the animals to be killed; and further, if an examination has not been made by a competent veterinarian in the employ of the board, such examination must be first made before the animals can be destroyed.

Section 1114 G. C. (106 O. L. 150), provides:

> "If, in order to prevent the spread of any dangerously contagious and infectious disease among the live stock of the state, the board of agriculture deems it necessary to destroy animals affected with or which have been exposed to dangerously contagious or infectious disease it shall determine, through its secretary, what animals shall be killed and appraise or cause them to be appraised by disinterested citizens as provided by law. After being appraised, the board, shall in like manner, cause such animals to be killed and their carcasses disposed of in such manner as it directs, but no animal shall be killed under the provisions of this section until it has been examined by a competent veterinarian in the employ of the board, and the disease with which it is affected or to which it has been exposed adjudged a dangerous and contagious malady."

A reading of section 1114 G. C. discloses that after animals are quarantined, the duty is imposed upon the board to first determine whether or not, in order to prevent the spread of the disease, the board deems it necessary to destroy any animals affected with or which have been exposed to the disease.

Next, having determined that it is necessary to destroy some of the animals, it is made the duty, under this section, of the board through its secretary to determine what animals shall be killed.

Then the next step, and before such animals could be killed, is, it must appear that these animals to be killed have been examined by a competent veterinarian in the employ of the board, and the disease with which they are affected or to which they have been exposed must be adjudged to be a dangerous and contagious malady.

The statute makes it necessary also, before the animals can be destroyed, that the board shall "appraise or cause them to be appraised by disinterested citizens as provided by law." The language of the section in reference to the appraisal by disinterested citizens is certainly ambiguous, but I think a fair implication warrants the holding that appraisal can be made in two ways, either by the board itself or by disinterested citizens appointed by the board for that purpose.

Your board asked an opinion of my predecessor, who advised you in opinion No. 1166, under date of January 12, 1916, that you were without authority to pay the salaries and expenses of a board of appraisers that you had attempted to appoint to determine the value of cattle which had been tested and condemned on account of being infected with tuberculosis. I think his opinion only went to the question asked and that his holding was that a permanent board of appraisers could not be appointed, nor could they be paid, owing to the fact there was no appropriation or fund for that purpose. I concur in his conclusion. But while the board could not appoint a standing board of appraisers and unfortunately there has been no provision made for the payment of any appraisers, and, owing to the ambiguity of the statute, it is somewhat difficult to determine exactly what is intended by the legislature, still it is my opinion that if the board can obtain the services of disinterested citizens without cost, they would be authorized to do so, as this would give the board an idea of the value of the cattle and afford them at least that much light when the matter came before the board of approving the claims which would be made subsequently under the statute for the purpose of having the state compensate the owners for the destruction of such diseased cattle.

Your third question is:

> "3. If a man has had his cattle tested by a local veterinarian and finds from said test that his cattle have tuberculosis, and then asks the state to make a further examination, can the state refuse to make such an examination?"

This question involves an examination of section 1112 G. C. supra, which has been discussed in answer to the previous questions. Under its provisions it is the duty of the owner or a person in charge of an animal which he knows or has reason to believe is affected with a dangerously contagious or infectious disease, to give immediate notice of that fact to the board of agriculture or member thereof, or to the sheriff or constable of the proper county. When this notice comes to the board in this manner it is the bounden duty of the board of agriculture to have a proper examination made of these infected animals by a competent veterinarian.

It might be that the only manner in which the person owning the animals or having them in charge could determine whether or not they were infected would be to call in some local veterinarian. He might be a competent or incompetent veterinarian. The owner would probably be taking advantage of such means and employ such persons as were at hand. There is no inhibition in the law against him so doing, nor is there any provision of statute compelling him to discover the disease in any particular manner.

I am of the opinion that if a man has had his cattle tested or examined by a local veterinarian, and that test or examination discloses that the stock is tubercular, and he reports that fact to the state board, it is the duty of such board, under section 1112 G. C. to have an examination made by a competent veterinarian under their supervision, to determine whether or not the disease exists. The mere fact that the stock has been theretofore inspected, examined or tested by some one called by the owner, does not relieve them of this statutory duty. The law imposes the duty of causing the proper examination to be made, and no matter what has preceded the obtaining of the notice, when the notice comes to the board it is their statutory duty to cause an examination to be made in the manner provided by section 1112.

Your fourth question is:

"4. If the state should make a further examination and quarantines his cattle, can the board refuse to recommend payment for the cattle that were tested by the local veterinarian and found to be tubercular?"

For the purposes of answering this question, I will assume that you mean the state board has been notified by the owner, or some person in charge of an animal, that such animal is believed to be affected with a dangerously contagious or infectious disease, and that the question of the destruction of the animal, and whether or not compensation could be made for same is presented, and the fact appears that the owner has had the animal tested by a local veterinarian, who found same to be tubercular, and that said test was not caused to be made by the board.

Section 1116 G. C. provides (106 O. L. 150):

"When approved by the board of agriculture all claims of owners of animals killed under the provisions herein relating to the board shall be paid from funds appropriated by the general assembly for that purpose."

This is the section that provides for the manner of payment for animals killed, upon approval of the claim by the board of agriculture. It is to be assumed that the board would exercise a sound discretion in their approval, and that they would not act unreasonably, capriciously or arbitrarily. They would be acting wholly without authority to refuse to approve a just claim merely because the owner had had a local veterinarian make an examination for his benefit, and advise said owner whether or not the stock is infected. The fact that the prior test or examination was made or caused to be made not by the board, but by the owner, would have absolutely nothing to do with the matter.

The only thing the board of agriculture should and would be interested in, when passing upon the claim, was whether or not the animals were killed under the provisions of the statute, whether or not the amount claimed was just, and whether or not the case was within the inhibitions of section 1115 G. C., which provides that no compensation shall be made to a person who has brought animals affected with such contagious disease into this state or from a district in which contagious disease existed, or who has wilfully concealed the existence of such disease among his stock or on his premises or who, by wilful neglect or purposely has contributed to the spread of such contagion. This section further provides that no compensation shall be paid for certain animals that are destroyed because they are affected with glanders or farcy, if they were so diseased when they passed into the possession of their owner.

Your fifth question is:

"5. Has the board of agriculture the right to adopt a rule or form such as is herewith enclosed, commonly known as form 7?"

Form 7 provides:

"Form No. 7. Revised July, 1910. Revised Dec. 23, 1912. Revised 1915.

"RULES AND REGULATIONS

"Of the State Board of Agriculture of Ohio,

"For inspecting and testing cattle with tuberculin, and measures recommended to prevent the reintroduction and redevelopment of tuberculosis."

"(a) The owner of the cattle to be tested must agree to furnish all necessary assistance. One or more careful men employed on the farm, the number depending on the size of the herd, will be needed.

"(b) All reacting (diseased) animals must be killed and burned or buried, except animals in good flesh, which may be disposed of by slaughter where federal, state or municipal inspection is maintained; or may be disposed of locally by a state inspector or a specially approved veterinatian.

"(c) After all diseased cattle have been removed the stable or stables must be disinfected according to the directions given below. Such changes in the construction of the stables as may be necessary to insure better sanitary conditions, will be indicated by a veterinarian in the employ of the state board of agriculture, and must be made at the expense of the owner of the herd or premises.

"INSTRUCTIONS FOR DISINFECTION.

"Remove all litter, manure, fodder, etc., scrape floors and walls with a sharp hoe and thus remove every particle of dried manure, dirt, etc. (this cannot be done too thoroughly). Remove all rotten and loose woodwork, boards, etc., from the sides and floors. Sweep the mangers thoroughly and remove all accumulations of food and waste in and about them. Scrub the mangers and feed boxes with hot water and soap or with a solution of lye. Then thoroughly apply any of the following disinfectants:

"No. 1. One to five hundred per cent. solution of bichloride of mercury. (Two ounces of the drug to eight gallons of water.)

"N. 2. A five per cent. solution of cresolis compositus U. S. P.

"No. 3. A five per cent. solution of crystal carbolic acid.

"Every particle of exposed surface, every crack, crevice, nail hole, etc., of the walls, ceilings, floors, mangers and feed boxes, must be soaked with this solution. Poor or careless disinfection is no disinfection at all. After everything is thoroughly dry the entire interior of the stable may be whitewashed. If the bichloride of mercury is used the mangers and feed boxes should be washed with hot water to remove the drug which otherwise might poison the animals.

"After this the stable should, if possible, remain perfectly empty for a few weeks, and during this time and ever after should be exposed to as much air and sunshine as possible; both of these are enemies of disease germs and conducive to good health in animals. All litter, rotten wood, etc., removed previous to disinfection, should be burned or removed to a safe place. Manure would best be spread in a thin layer on a large, flat field and thus exposed to the disinfecting action of the sun's rays. If there is a dirt floor in the stable several inches of the top layers should be removed with the manure. The dirt thus removed may be replaced with fresh earth, but the better method is to put in a good cement or concrete floor.

"New animals must not be introduced into the herd unless they have been tested with tuberculin and found free from tuberculosis. If such animals react, no compensation will be allowed. Such tests may be made only by veterinarians in the employ of the state board of agriculture or by private veterinarians approved by said board for such work.

"The herd originally tested as well as all newly introduced tested animals will be retested after six months or one year by a veterinarian in the employ of the state board of agriculture at dates determined by the board, and until the herd is found free from disease. Thereafter the herd must be kept free from disease at the expense of the owner.

"AS TO COMPENSATION.

"When reactors are found after testing as provided by the laws of Ohio and the rules of this board, two men from the board of appraisers will be sent to make the official appraisal of the condemned animals. Compensation for animals condemned and destroyed according to the laws of the state and the rules of the board of agriculture is to be allowed as provided in sections 1114, 1115, and 1116 of the General Code.

"No claims for compensation will be approved unless all the conditions herein stated are met. Compensation will not be allowed for animals introduced into a herd subsequent to the first state test nor for animals added after a herd is declared free from tuberculosis. The owner of such herd in making application for a first test, agrees to permit official retests and to continue to comply with the regulations herein contained in order to prevent the reintroduction of tuberculosis into the herd. Reacting cattle must be disposed of within one year from the time they are condemned unless permission is given to keep such animals under the Bang system.

"To obtain compensation under the law and rules of the state board of agriculture for any animal hereafter brought into the state of Ohio from any other state, Canada, or any foreign country, such animal must be reported to the state veterinarian of Ohio at the time the animal is brought into the state. Further, said animal shall have been tested by a veterinarian approved by the state board of agriculture, and said test approved as free from tuberculosis by the state veterinarian of Ohio within six months from the time the animal is brought into this state. Should said animal be condemned under a subsequent test after one year from time of entry into this state, then these rules for compensation shall apply.

"AFFIDAVIT.

"I,----------, of----------,
Ohio, hereby certify that I have read the conditions as outlined above and fully understand that I must comply with all of said conditions before any claim for animals destroyed by order of the state board of agriculture on acoount of tuberculosis will be approved for payment by said board. I also agree to accept the compensation fixed by the board of appraisers on any animals that may be slaughteted as directed by the board of agriculture.

Section 1098 G. C. provides:

"The board of agriculture shall adopt reasonable and proper rules and regulations to govern its proceedings and to regulate the mode and manner of all investigations, inspections and hearings not otherwise specifically provided for."

This section empowers the board of agriculture to make and adopt all reasonable and proper rules and regulations and use all proper means in the prevention of the spread of dangerously contagious or infectious diseases and such as they properly deem necessary for the extermination of such diseases.

In the giving of the power to the board to adopt rules the legislature recognized the patent fact that, in view of the very nature of the subject, it was impossible to prescribe rules which could apply to all sections, cover all contingencies and relate to all the multitudinous, administrative details of the system which had been enacted. Both principle and authority abundantly sustain the propriety and necessity of such legislation.

While it is true that a legislative body may not delegate to an administrative board the power to legislate, it usually, in the act of creating the board, endows it with power to make such rules or regulations as are necessary to carry into effect the provisions contained in the statutes relating to the subject.

The rules promulgated by the board must conform strictly to the power granted in the statute; otherwise they are void and of no effect.

Railway Co. v. Masterson, 95 Tex. 262.
Roberson v. State, 43 S. W. 989.

A statute establishing a state live stock sanitary board, empowering it to make rules and regulations for the effective enforcement of the law and providing a penalty for the violation of its rules, is not unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative authority.

State v. McCarty, 59 So. Rep. 543.

In Ingram v. State, 39 Ala. 247, an act had been attacked which prohibited the distillation of grain in the state of Alabama, except under the direction of the authority of the governor. One of the sections of that act provided that it should be the duty of the governor

"under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe to cause such an amount of grain to be distilled or converted into alcohol or spirituous liquors, as in his judgment is consistent with the common defense and general welfare."

In that case the supreme court said:

"The objection that the act is invalid, because it transfers legislative power to the governor, is not well taken. The governor is simply the agent, > appointed by the legislature, to carry out the provisions of the law. He, it is true, is intrusted with a large discretion in the exercise of the powers conferred upon him; but we are unable to see upon what principle this feature of the law can be held to invalidate it."

This but follows the well established doctrine that while the legislature can not delegate its power to make laws, it can make a law to delegate a power to determine some fact or state of things upon which the law makes or intends to make its own action depend.

In considering an act authorizing the state board of health to make rules and regulations concerning the pure food and drug law of the state of Indiana, the supreme court of that state, in Isenhour v. State, 157 Ind., 517, says:

> "This class of legislation emanates from an exercise of the police power of the state for the protection of the public health. The power of the legislature, and its right to determine for itself when an emergency for such legislation exists, and the means and instrumentalities necessary to accomplish the end in view, is no longer a doubtful question. The particular character of the subject, embodying, as it does, considerations of sanitary science, is such as to require for just legal control something more than legislative wisdom to accurately designate the subjects and instances intended to be affected. The classification of these subjects and the prescribing of rules by which they may be determined by a qualified agent, is not legislation, but merely the exercise of administrative power. The law itself is perfect and effective in all its parts. In respect to the matters to be determined by the state board of health in its execution, it awaits the performance of those duties. When performed, the law operates upon the things done by the board. While unperformed, the law remains ready to be applied whenever the preliminary condition exists."

The same court, in Blue v. Beach, 155 Ind. 121, says:

> "In order to secure and promote the public health, the state creates boards of health as an instrumentality or agency for that purpose, and invests them with the power to adopt ordinances, by-laws, rules and regulations necessary to secure the objects of their organization. While it is true that the character or nature of such boards is administrative only, still the powers conferred upon them by the legislature, in view of the great public interest confided to them, have always received from the courts a liberal construction; and the right of the legislature to confer upon them the power to make reasonable rules, by-laws, and regulations is generally recognized by the authorities."

Our own supreme court, in Cincinnati, Wilmington & Zanesville R. R. Co. v. Commissioners, 1 O. S. 77, at page 88, Judge Ranney speaking, says:

> "The true distinction is between a delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first can not be done. To the latter no valid objection can be made."

In Theobald v. State, 10 C. C. (N. S.) 536, Marvin, J., states that the provisions for the adoption of rules and regulations by the chief examiner of steam engineers clearly makes him not a legislative, but an administrative officer, with power to execute the statutes enacted by the general assembly.

In Board of Education v. Sawyer, 7 N. P. (N. S.) 401, Doyle, J., at page 405, used the following language:

> "The Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States was not designed to interfere with the power of the state to exercise its police powers to prescribe regulations to promote the health, peace, morals, education and good order of the peolpe, and to legislate so as to increase the industries of the state, develop its resources and add to its wealth and prosperity. Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623; Kemmler, in re, 136 U. S. 436"; and at page 411 the court uses this significant language:

> "In the exercise of its right the state in many instances must vest authority in the authorities of some of the political subdivisions of the state, or in state officers, the power to make such necessary and reasonable regulations as are necessary to secure the health, safety and well-being of the community in respect to the matters legislated upon, and also in other instances to pass upon the things necessary to be done in order to carry out the provisions made in the state statutes.
> "There are some dangerous things to be regulated, concerning the treatment of which the legislature can not anticipate. It can make general requirements, but the detalis must be worked out by some administrative officer. See Ozan Lumber Co. v. Bank, 207 U. S. 251, and cases cited on page 253."

So I think it will be conceded that there is ample precedent and authority for the board of agriculture to make and adopt rules and regulations, and the only question presented is whether or not this rule, commonly known as "Form 7," is reasonable and proper.

A reading of the first page of said form 7 discloses that it is an application on behalf of an owner to have an entire herd inspected and tested with tuberculin, and that the diseased animals, if any, be disposed of according to the rules of the board. This test is to be made at the expense of the state, and the owner agrees to observe and comply with the precautions and rules recommended by the board to prevent the reintroduction and redevelopment of tuberculosis in the herd. There is a certificate that this request is made voluntarily, and the time when the cattle came into the owner's possession is stated. This portion of form 7 is to be signed with the name and address of the applicant.

It is stated by Timlin, J., in Adams v. Milwaukee, 144 Wis. 371:

> "Considerable difference of opinion appears to exist among those having a reputation for learning, with respect to the efficacy of the tuberculin test for ascertaining the presence of tuberculosis in cattle. This test is made by a hypodermic injection of a toxic product of the tubercule bacilli, which causes a described and recognized rise of temperature in the animal afflicted with tuberculosis, but has no effect, or a different effect, upon cattle not so afflicted. It seems to be agreed, at least in this case, that the bovine type of tubercule bacillus is in form and otherwise distinguishable from the human type, by miscroscopic examination. It is claimed by some that the bovine type of tuberculosis is not ordinarily communicable to the human system, in the absence of abrasion, through the alimentary canal. There is also a lack of evidence to establish that tuberculosis of the human lungs, or consumption as it is commonly called, in its ordinary form, is caused by the bovine type of bacillus. Nevertheless the prevention of this common and > usually fatal disease is by some of the experts put forward as a ground of support for the ordinance in question. There is evidence, and also findings, to the effect that tuberculosis generally is a disease caused by micro-organisms known as 'tubercule bacilli;' that there is a mammalian type of this bacteria subdivided into bovine and human bacilli, and that human beings are susceptible to infection from the bovine tubercule bacilli by ingestion, inhalation, or inoculation. This bovine tuberculosis is communicable to the human being through the medium of milk or its products taken as food. Bovine tuberculosis prevails among cattle in the country adjacent to Milwaukee. The tuberculin test, while not infallible, is the only reliable and useful means for testing cattle for tuberculosis."

Indiana, Delaware, Maine, Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota, New York, North Dakota, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Vermont and Virginia have by statute recognized the efficacy of the tuberculin test for ascertaining the presence of tuberculosis in cattle, and this legislation, with many decisions of states where the test is not made a statutory one, but recognized as authoritative, manifests a widespread recognition, both of danger of infection from bovine tuberculosis and of the efficacy of the tuberculin test.

Even though there are conflicting scientific beliefs and theories in such matters, it is for the board of agriculture to determine upon which theory it will base its police regulations, and unless this is clearly and manifestly wrong courts would not interfere on the ground that the theory was incorrect. This application, and I now speak of that portion of form 7 referred to immediately preceding, seems to contemplate that an owner who neither has possession of the knowledge, nor has reason to believe that his herd is affected with a dangerously contagious or infectious disease, desires the board of agriculture to make an inspection. He may have a suspicion of some malady or not. He may merely seek, out of an abundance of precaution, a determination of his own belief that his herd is in an entirely healthy condition.

Since there is a duty imposed upon the board of agriculture to provide by all proper means for the extermination of these diseases, I conclude that in their discretion they can make such tests and examination for that purpose as they deem proper, and since there is not as to this particular herd a mandatory duty like there would be if notice was brought home to them that the herd was infected, to cause an examination to be made, it is entirely reasonable that they should prescribe a written form of application to be signed by the owner, asking for the character of examination that it appears to me the part of the form on the first page of form 7 prescribes. I am therefore of the opinion that so much of said form as appears on pages 1 and 2 of the paper called form 7, down to and including the words: "I desire to have my herd tested for the following reasons—(stating the reasons)," is a reasonable regulation for the purposes intended.

Now, coming to the remaining part of said form 7, headed "Rules and Regulations," and ending with the affidavit, to my mind even if the matters preceding the affidavit contained only such things as the law prescribes, there would be no power in the board of agriculture to compel any person to subscribe to and make said affidavit. The affidavit itself certifies that the affiant has read the conditions contained in the form preceding the affidavit, and that he understands that he must comply with all of the conditions before any claim for animals tested by order of the board will be approved for payment. It further states that affiant agrees to accept the compensation fixed by the board of appraisers on any animals that may be slaughtered as directed by the board.

In concurring as I do with the opinion of my predecessor, No. 1166 supra, of course any agreement to accept the compensation fixed by a board of appraisers would be unavailing because under that opinion the state board has no right to constitute or have such a board of appraisers.

But aside from that, I would deem it an unreasonable regulation to attempt to compel an owner to make an affidavit of the character as appears in form 7, which possibly would be in conflict with the provisions of the law as to compensation. This would appear to be an attempt on the part of the board to prescribe a rule which would penalize a person who might subsequently ask for compensation for cattle destroyed.

The statute provides for the compensation to be made for animals slaughtered by the board under the law. The statute further, in section 1115 G. C. provides on what basis the value shall be determined. The same section contains this provision:

> "Section 1115. * * * No compensation, however, shall be made to a person who has brought into this state animals affected with such contagious disease, or from a district in which such contagious disease existed, or who has wilfully concealed the existence of such disease among his stock or on his premises, or who, by wilful neglect or purposely has contributed to the spread of such contagion. In case the destruction of a horse, mule, or ass affected with glanders or farcy, no compensation for it shall be made, if it were so diseased when it passed into possession of its owner. In appraising animals to be killed as hereinbefore provided, the board shall make such additional allowance as it shall deem proper because said animals are pure bred or pedigreed."

These express provisions, declaring when compensation shall not be given under familiar principles seem to me to exclude any other provisions such as by regulation or rule of the board to prevent or forfeit compensation.

I do not deem it necessary to specifically take up the rules and regulations found in this form, preceding the affidavit spoken of and following the prior application blank which is to be signed by the owner and which I have held under the interpretation I have given that application is a reasonable regulation for that purpose.

I take it that your board has other rules and regulations than the ones contained in form 7. Any rule and regulation adopted by the state board of agriculture which is reasonable and which is effective in carrying the law into execution can be adopted, and it is only proper and right that a copy or notice of these regulations be given or sent to all persons for whose guidance these rules are intended. It does not seem reasonable to me, nor can I see the utility of prescribing a rule that all persons coming under a specific regulation should have to sign up a copy of same. In the case of prosecution for violation, all that would be necessary to show would be the proper adoption of the rule and that the party had notice of same.

It is therefore my opinion that the board is without authority to compel an owner to sign up any form containing the rules and regulations of the board pertaining to quarantine or destruction of his animals and obtaining compensation therefor, and that so much of form 7 as prescribes same is unauthorized.

I further hold that the board has no authority to prescribe that any person should make affidavit to any form or sign any form, and on his failure so to do that they penalize a person in any manner.

Your sixth question is:

> "6. If a man has his cattle tested by the state and the state finds them to be infected with tuberculosis and appraises them, but the owner of the cattle refuses to sign form 7, is the owner of the cattle entitled to be reimbursed by the state under the statutes, notwithstanding that he refuses to sign form 7?"

Section 1116 supra provides that when claims of owners of animals killed under provisions of law are approved by the board of agriculture, they shall be paid from funds appropriated by the general assembly for that purpose.

As you have seen in my discussion of your question 5, it is my opinion that failure to sign form 7 or any other prescribed form should not, and could not in law, militate against the rights of the owner of destroyed cattle for compensation. So if the board, proceeding under section 1114 G. C., destroys animals, and, considering the the owner's claim, finds that the owner would be entitled to compensation in the amount determined, but for the fact that he had refused to sign form 7, they would be acting entirely without the law and exceeding their authority to disapprove said claim on that ground alone. As I said before, the law provides when compensation shall not be made. I take it that the provisions of the statute are exclusive. The board can neither add to nor subtract from the provisions found in the statute.

My answer to your question therefore is that such owner would be entitled to the approval of his claim, notwithstanding that he had refused to sign form 7.

Your seventh question is:

> "7. Has the board of agriculture the right to employ appraisers, or should the appraisers be chosen as follows: One by the board, another by the owner of the cattle, and the two so chosen to select the third?"

It is unfortunate that the legislature, in the language used in section 1114 G. C. supra was not more specific on the question of appraisal. This section provides that the board > "* * * shall determine through its secretary, what animals shall be killed and appraise or cause them to be appraised by disinterested citizens as provided by law. * * *"

This language fully empowers the board of agriculture to make the appraisement themselves, and just as specifically authorizes the board to "cause them to be appraised by disinterested citizens as provided by law."

While some question may be raised as to the lack of provision of law on the subject, it is my view that reading the act as an entirety and keeping in mind the purposes for which the legislature enacted it, and the broad, plenary powers given the board, it scarcely requires inference to hold that the board is authorized to make the selection, in the event they do not appraise, of disinterested citizens to make the appraisal.

These cattle are not taken for public use after the analogy of eminent domain, but they are destroyed for the public good, under the police power. They are not destroyed until a scientific test, recognized as proper and reliable and applied by a "competent veterinarian in the employ of the board" had shown and it had been adjudged that they were either affected or had been exposed to a dangerous and contagious malady, and it would be absolutely unreasonable, merely because the board of agriculture could not make the appraisement, that the owner should lose his property.

Of course there is no duty to make reparation to the owner, and Ohio, like many of her sister states could have legally prescribed the destruction of such cattle without recompense, and compel the owner to stand the loss for the public good. The books are full of cases upholding such procedure. But in her well known liberality the state has by statute authorized such compensation to be made for such destroyed animals as is approved by the board of agriculture.

Sitting, then, in a quasi judicial capacity, the board is interested, among other things, in determining what would be a just recompense under the law to the owner for the property so destroyed. The appraisal of this property is for the purpose of affording light to the board. It is my view that the statute intended, and I hold that the statute should be construed to mean, that in the event the board does not make the appraisement they select such number of appraisers as they deem proper, so long as they are in the opinion of the board "disinterested citizens," and that the appraisers so appointed by the board should make the appraisement under section 1114 G. C.

Your question is whether or not one appraiser could be selected by the board, another by the owner, and the two so chosen to select the third. The statute provides that the board shall determine, through its secretary, what animals shall be killed, and appraise or cause them to be appraised, &c. There would be no authority for the owner of cattle selecting one of the appraisers nor for the appraiser so selected, with one chosen by the board, to select the third appraiser.

The statute does not fix the number of appraisers, but it is my opinion that the board may do so and that the board of agriculture alone can appoint or select the appraisers. This would not preclude the suggestion of names to the board for the purpose of appointment or selection, but the appointment or selection would have to be made by the board itself.

Your eighth question is:

> "8. Is it legal for the members of the board of agriculture to appraise cattle or animals infected with a dangerous or contagious disease?"

As stated in answer to the question immediately preceding, I think that section 1114 G. C. is full authority to the board of agriculture to appraise the infected stock that they have determined to destroy.

Section 1085 G. C. provides:

> "Any investigation, inquiry or hearing, which the board of agriculture is empowered by law to hold or undertake may be held or undertaken by or before any one member of the board of agriculture or before any member or members of the board of agriculture. All investigations, inquiries, hearings, decisions and orders made by any one or any two members of the board shall when approved and confirmed by the board of agriculture be deemed to be the order of the board of agriculture. All matters of general policy shall be decided by a majority of the board."

I think that the above section fully authorizes two or more members to constitute an appraising board to appraise infected stock, and that it then would be their duty to report their action, for approval, to the board. The mere fact that subsequently under section 1116 G. C. the board would be called upon to approve the claims of the owners who seek to obtain compensation from the state for animals destroyed, would not in any way affect the right and authority of the board to make the appraisement under the other provision of the statute. This approval of the claim under section 1116 G. C. is a condition precedent before the fund appropriated by the legislature is available for the payment of such claims. And sitting, then, in a semi-judicial capacity, the board passes upon the entire matter, and I do not believe that the mere fact that the appraisement was made by the same board which approves the claim, would make the slightest difference one way or the other.

Your ninth question is:

> "9. When the board has been informed, or when it comes to the attention of the board that animals are infected with a dangerous or contagious disease, and the veterinary department makes an examination and finds that said animals are so infected, should the board by resolution declare those animals infected with a dangerous or contagious disease and order them appraised, quarantined or slaughtered, and should such proceedings be made a matter of record in the minutes of the board?"

Section 1088 supra provides:

"The secretary of the board shall take and subscribe to an oath similar to that of the members of the board, keep full and correct records of all transactions and proceedings of the board of agriculture and perform such other duties as may be required by the board."

Section 1099 G. C. provides:

"Sessions of the board of agriculture shall stand and be adjourned without further notice thereof on its records. All the proceedings of the board shall be shown on its record of proceedings, which shall be a public record, and all voting shall be by calling each member's name by the secretary and each member's vote as cast shall be included in the record of proceedings."

From a reading of these sections in conjunction with section 1085 supra, which certainly implies that when action is taken by one or more members of the board such action must be approved and confirmed by the board, which would necessitate a meeting of which a record would be kept, it is apparent to my mind that all of the official acts of the board, including the matters specifically inquired about in question 9, should be made a matter of record, and I am of the opinion that the record of proceedings spoken of in section 1099 G. C. would be the minutes of the board.

Whether these matters should be acted upon and thus get into the minutes by motion, resolution or some other parliamentary form, would be immaterial, as the statute does not prescribe the manner in which the orders of the board should be adopted. Any manner, so that there should be a record of the proceedings of the board, would be all that the law would require. Since sections 1112, 1119, 1120 and 1121 G. C. prescribe penalties for violations of the provisions relating to the board of agriculture, the necessity for a record of all their acts is readily apparent.

In a Kansas case, found in 66 Pac. Rep. 641, under the title Asbell v. Edwards, the second paragraph of the syllabus reads as follows:

"2. The live stock sanitary commission is a body of special and limited jurisdiction, and, in the quarantining of cattle to prevent the spread of disease, is authorized to proceed in a summary manner, and not according to the ordinary course of judicial procedure. Its acts, therefore, are to be confined strictly within the limits of the jurisdiction conferred; and, when the record of its proceedings ordering the quarantining of cattle fails to show the existence of the facts which alone will authorize the making of the order, such order does not constitute a justification for any action taken under it."

The court at page 643 says:

"The live stock sanitary commission, although not a court, is nevertheless invested with powers judicial in character. The duty of determining by investigation of the facts whether a man's property shall be seized and withheld from him is essentially judicial. The power to make this determination is conferred on an inferior tribunal, one proceeding in a most summary manner, and not according to the course of the common law. The unquestioned rule in such cases is that rightfulness or regularity of action in acquiring jurisdiction will not be presumed, but all such must affirmatively appear on the face of the proceedings, else the record of such proceedings will not constitute a defense against collateral attack. 1 Bailey, Jur. Sec. 129 et seq In Rex v. Croke, 1 Cowp. 26, it was ruled by Lord Mansfield that 'where by statute a specific authority is delegated to particular persons, affecting the property of individuals, it must be strictly pursued, and appear to be so upon the face of their proceedings.' "

When it is considered that section 1089 G. C. grants the board of agriculture of Ohio power and authority to establish some eight or ten bureaus and other like subdepartments, the necessity for a record of their proceedings in their different activities at once appears.

I do not know what has been the practice of your board, but since, like a court, the board only speaks by its record, I take it that all its acts, as required by section 1099 G. C., are duly spread upon and shown by "its record of proceedings." The existence of facts that call the law into operation in the particular instance should always be made a matter of record both for the sake of perpetuating the transactions of your board and as evidence of what orders and regulations the board has made.

Under section 1088 G. C. it is made the duty of the secretary of the board to "keep full and correct records of all transactions and proceedings of the board of agriculture," and under section 1099 G. C. the record "shall be a public record."

The reasons for these statutory provisions are readily apparent. The citizen who is interested is entitled to know exactly what the board has done. The person whose property was taken or whose property rights are invaded, under the authority of the law "controlling necessity," is not legally bound, nor can the board depend upon an ephemeral order by word of mouth or a mere memorandum that may have but a fleeting existence. A permanent, accessible record is required by the statute. And in event that the different bureaus established by the board keep separate minutes, such records must each and all be approved by the board of agriculture, duly attested by the secretary to authenticate them, in order that the matters and things done and performed may constitute the acts of the board of agriculture.

Answering your specific question, it is my opinion that the various proceedings on the part of the board, as stated in said question, should be made a matter of record in the minutes of the board.

Before concluding it might be well to state that the foregoing opinion is based entirely on the sections of the law now in force, namely, the act passed by the legislature under date of April 21, 1915, approved April 21, 1915, and found in 106 O. L. 143, and further to call attention to the fact that since this opinion has been in the course of preparation sections 1085, 1088, 1099, 1108, 1112, 1114 and 1115 G. C., which are the sections construed herein, with other sections pertaining to the board of agriculture, have been amended by the present legislature in the act known as amended house bill No. 115, Mr. Bragg, passed March 21, 1917, signed by the governor March 29, 1917, and filed with the secretary of state March 31, 1917, and which, unless a referendum is filed, will become a law ninety days after said last mentioned date. If there is no referendum and the act becomes a law at the end of the referendum period, then at that time the amendment of section 1114 G. C. in said amended house bill No. 115, will furnish a complete answer to your questions 2 and 7, and the answers to the other questions will, when the new act becomes effective, have to be read in the light of the changes made by the amendments to the several sections amended.

The present opinion, I repeat, is a construction of the sections referred to as they now stand under the act of 1915, and, as they will stand until the new act goes into effect, if it does go into effect, at the end of the referendum period.

I may have been somewhat prolix in my discussion of the questions asked, and perhaps have been guilty of repetition in formulating the different answers, but, as will be seen, the questions are so interrelated that this was a natural consequence, almost a necessary result. It has been my object to give as concisely as the question would permit what I consider to be the legal construction of the sections of the Code involved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SUPPLEMENT TO OPINION No. 119. TAX LEVIES—UNDER SECTION 7419 G. C. CAN ONLY BE MADE IN EXCESS OF THE LIMITATIONS OF THE SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW IN CASES OF EMERGENCIES —A REFUNDER OF ILLEGAL TAXES CANNOT BE MADE BY AUDITOR WHEN SAME ARE VOLUNTARILY PAID—MAY BE MADE WHEN A JUDGMENT OR FINAL ORDER HAS BEEN MADE BY A COURT OF COMPETENT JURISDICTION ADJUDGING THE PARTICULAR LEVY ILLEGAL.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1917.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your favor of March 24, 1917, referring to opinion No. 119, addressed by this department to you under date of March 17, 1917.

In your communication referring to the former opinion you call my attention to certain local conditions as to existing aggregate and combined tax rates in some of the taxing districts in Miami county. This condition disclosed in your communication raised a question as to the correctness of certain general observations made by me with respect to the proper construction of section 7419 of the General Code in the light of the supreme court cases discussed in the former opinion. These observations, which strictly speaking, were not essential to the determination of any question made by you, are found on pages 4 and 5 of said opinion No. 119.

Though I am not convinced that these observations in the abstract are incorrect as a construction of section 7419 of the General Code, further consideration as to the application of the provisions of section 2 of article XII of the state constitution convinces me that the same are incorrect in their application to the local conditions disclosed in your communication of March 24, 1917.

The levy made by the county commissioners of Miami county, under section 7419 was made as an emergency levy outside of all limitations of the Smith one per cent. law, notwithstanding the fact that this levy was so made, I am inclined to the view that the budget commission of Miami county could have legally effectuated a small part of the levy made by the county commissioners by reducing under the provisions of section 5649-3c the estimate of the county commissioners, so that the same, together with the aggregate of all other taxes to be levied by the local taxing districts would have come within the exterior limitations of the Snith one per cent. law applicable to such local taxing districts.

The budget commissioners, however, did not do this, but allowed the levy made by the county commissioners under section 7419 to stand as a whole, and in as much as the supreme court in the case of Staley, auditor, v. State ex rel. Hunt, et al., has by its judgment in this case reversing the lower court, which upheld the legality of the tax, in effect determined the whole of said tax to be illegal, I am of the opinion that provision should be made for refunding and remitting the whole of said illegal tax to full amount of the levy, which I am advised was a levy of 1.4 mills upon all the taxable property in the county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISCHARGED SOLDIER—NOT EXEMPT FROM PAYMENT OF FEE FOR OPERATING SHOOTING GALLERY.

There is no statutory authority in Ohio exempting a discharged soldier from the payment of whatever license fee may be imposed upon the business of operating a shooting gallery.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1917.

HON. ROGER D. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 13, 1917, as follows:

"I am writing you in reference to an inquiry which came to my office but as I could not find any law covering the same I thought it would be best to get an opinion from your office.

"There is a section of the General Code which provides as follows: That an honorably discharged soldier who had served as a private or other officer in the service of the United States during the late rebellion is entitled to a pedler's license.

"There is an honorably discharged soldier in the county of Defiance, state of Ohio, who wants to place a shooting gallery in operation in the city of Defiance and be exempt from any municipal tax license or county tax. Kindly advise me if this can be done?"

Sections 6347, 6349 and 6351 of the General Code read:

"Section 6347. When a person files with the auditor of a county, under oath, which may be administered by such auditor, a statement of his stock in trade in conformity with law requiring the listing of such stock for taxation by merchants or others, and pays to the treasurer of such county the proportionate amount of taxes on such stock in trade in conformity with law, and complies with the terms set forth in section sixty-three hundred and forty-nine, such auditor shall issue to him a license to peddle such stock anywhere in this state.

"Section 6349. Before receiving such license the applicant, if intending to travel on foot, shall file with the county auditor the county treasurer's receipt for twelve dollars; if intending to travel on horseback or in a one-horse vehicle, he shall file such receipt for twenty dollars; if intending to travel in a two-horse vehicle, he shall file the receipt for twenty-eight dollars; or, if intending to travel in a boat, watercraft or on a railroad car, he shall file it for sixty dollars. He shall also pay to the auditor the sum of fifty cents as the auditor's fee for granting the license.

"Section 6351. An applicant for the license, provided in section sixty-three hundred and forty-seven, proving to the auditor to whom such application is made that he has served as a soldier or sailor in the service of the United States during the late rebellion of the Spanish-American war, and has been honorably discharged therefrom, shall pay to such auditor as his fee for such license the sum of fifty cents, and shall not be required to make any other or further payment. He shall be exempted from paying any fee for a municipal or other license, as required by law or ordinance, during the period covered by the license issued to him by such auditor."

It will be noted from the above that an honorably discharged soldier can secure a license to peddle stock on the payment of the sum of fifty cents. This, of course, has no bearing upon the operation of a shooting gallery and I know of no other statute exempting a discharged soldier from the payment of whatever license fee may be imposed upon that occupation by the proper authority.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONVICT LABOR—CANNOT BE USED TO MANUFACTURE BRICK—FOR SALE IN OPEN MARKET.

The board of administration is not authorized to use convict labor to manufacture brick for sale in the open market.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1917.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 31, 1917, you addressed the following inquiry to this department:

"Referring to the question of prison-made brick: Will you please render us an opinion as to whether or not we are at liberty to sell these brick in the open market provided the same are conspicuously marked 'Prison-Made' in accordance with the Constitution of the State of Ohio."

In considering this matter let us reverse the usual order of proceeding and look first at the statutes and afterwards at the constitution, for the reason that in this instance the natural order is reversed and the constitution made from the statutes instead of the latter being made to conform to the requirements of the former.

When the sentiment of organized labor first revolted against competition of convict labor it found expression in an act of the legislature, now General Code section 6213 to section 6218, having reference to a restriction to such competition and providing regulations and restrictions of the sale of convict-made products, the principal feature of which was to give notoriety or publicity in each case that the products offered for sale were produced by such labor, and required that where articles were the product of such labor, whether local or imported from another state, they should be branded, labeled or marked "Convict-Made." This act is found in 90 O. L. 319, 320.

A few years later, when this sentiment became more pronounced, or when its influence on legislation became stronger, much more sweeping provision was enacted, which is found in 98 O. L. 177, and is now found in sections 2228 et seq. of the General Code, which entirely prohibit such competition, with a certain exception hereinafter noted.

Section 2228 of the General Code is as follows:

> "The board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary, the board of managers of the Ohio State reformatory, or other authority, shall make no contract by which the labor or time of a prisoner in the penitentiary or reformatory, or the product or profit of his work, shall be let, farmed out, given or sold to any person, firm, association or corporation. Convicts in such institution may work for, and the products of their labor may be disposed of, to the state or a political division thereof, or for or to a public institution owned or managed and under the control of the state or a political division thereof, for the purposes and according to the provisions of this chapter."

The germ of exception alluded to in the original act was found in section 2230, to which certain sub-sections have been added by way of amplification, which appears in 102 O. L. 418, and again as sub-sections to section 2227, an act of six sections which is found in 103 O. L. 725.

This last scheme of legislation centered upon section 2228, above quoted, effects a repeal of section 6213 of the General Code by implication, or if not it restricts its operation to a few rare and limited cases.

Two purposes are apparent and prominent in this legislation: First, to prevent the competition between free labor and convict labor; second, to use convict labor freely in the service of the departments of state and its political divisions in the construction or repair of all kinds of buildings and public works. This brings us to the constitutional provision on the subject in which these two purposes find expression in the fundamental law—article II, section 41 of the Constitution. The different provisions of this section will here be separated and so stated for the sake of clearness. First, no person under sentence in a penal institution shall "be required * * * to work at any trade, industry or occupation, wherein or whereby his work, or the product or profit of his work, shall be sold, farmed out, contracted or given away; * * *" This standing alone would be clear, unambiguous and peremptory. It is followed, however, with the statutory provision which, as above stated, is practically repealed by implication:

> "and goods made by persons under sentence to any penal institution or reformatory, without the state of Ohio, and such goods made within the state of Ohio, excepting those disposed of to the state or any political subdivision thereof, or to any public institution owned, managed or controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof, shall not be sold within this state unless the same are conspicuously marked 'prison made'."

These two provisions are contradictory. The last of the three provisions found in this section accomplishes the other purpose mentioned above:

> "Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the passage of laws providing that convicts may work for, and that the products of their labor may be disposed of to, the state or any political sub-division thereof, or for or to any public institution owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political sub-division thereof."

It should have been stated that section 6213 and its kindred provisions found their way into that chapter of the General Code under the head of "labels and marks," while the other sections are under provisions for penal institutions. The constitutional convention, however, saw fit to construct this section by putting together the different statutory provisions quoted above.

The conflict between the different provisions in the same section is there, arising in the manner above described. Between these conflicting provisions there can be no doubt as to which is to prevail. The intent of the legislature in reference to the subject of convict labor and its competition with free labor of the state is of general importance. Its adoption marks an epoch in legislative history. The demand for it was unquestionable and insistent. The other was comparatively unimportant. Without this consideration, however, the ordinary rules of construction compel the enforcement of the first proposition; it is a peremptory requirement, the second proposition is not, except upon a condition there be such article to sell. If by such provision you provide that such article cannot be sold without being branded, but by another provision you provide that they cannot be sold at all, you enforce both by enforcing the main one. If you do not allow them to be sold at all they certainly will never be sold without branding. The conflict, therefore, must be settled by permitting this great intention to prevail. The will of the people being the fundamental law in this respect.

Recognizing the dignity and independence of labor is of the essence of democratic institutions of our state. This recognition of it has been placed in the constitution in order to insure that such free labor shall not be debased by competition with convict labor. It is wisely provided, however, that recognition and enforcement of this great principle shall not interfere with that other practical and proper economical consideration whereby the product of this labor is preserved to the advantage of the people of the state in the construction of its public works. The two present no conflict of principle, though the one is as high above the other as humanity is above the mere things that men use.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—MAY PERMIT USE OF SCHOOL PROPERTY FOR GRANGE MEETINGS—SUCH MEETINGS SHALL NOT INTERFERE WITH USE OF PROPERTY FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES.

The board of education may permit the use of a school house and rooms therein, and the grounds and other property under their control, for holding grange meetings. The boards may regulate such use, but the same shall in no manner interfere with the use of such property for school purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1917.

HON. D. M. CUPP, Prosecuting Attorney, Delaware, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of March 22, 1917, you request my opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "I have been appealed to by the board of education of Brown township rural school district to advise them whether or not the board of education had authority to permit meetings of the grange to be held in the centralized school building of such district. As I am informed, these meetings are held for the benefit of and are open only to the membership of the grange, which I am informed is also a secret organization in which membership can be obtained only by the candidates being elected thereto by the member of the local organization.

"I desire to call your attention to section 7622-3 General Code, paragraph four thereof."

Your inquiry involves a consideration of section 7622-3 G. C. and the other sections in the chapter in which said section is contained and which relate to the same subject. Section 7622-3 G. C. provides as follows:

"The board of education of any school district may, subject to such regulation as may be adopted by such board, permit the use of any school house and rooms therein, and the grounds and other property under its control, when not in actual use for school purposes, for any of the following purposes:

"1. For giving instructions in any branch of education, learning or the arts.

"2. For holding educational, civil, social or recreational meetings and entertainments, and for such other purposes as may make for the welfare of the community. Such meetings and entertainments shall be non-exclusive and open to the general public.

"3. For public library purposes, as a station for a public library, or as reading rooms.

"4. For polling places, for holding elections and for the registration of voters, for holding grange or similar meetings."

Said section was enacted May 27, 1915. Prior to that time the sections of the General Code, referring to the matters mentioned in the above section, were much more general in their nature. To illustrate: General Code section 7722 provided:

"When in the judgment of a board of education, it will be for the advantage of the children residing in any school district to hold literary societies, school exhibitions, singing schools, religious exercises, select or normal schools, the board of education shall authorize the opening of the school houses for such purposes. The board of education of a school district in its discretion may authorize the opening of such school houses for any other lawful purposes. But nothing herein shall authorize a board of education to rent or lease a school house when such rental or lease in any wise interferes with the public schools in such district, or for any purpose other than is authorized by this chapter."

In construing the above section my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner rendered an opinion on April 3, 1915, No. 197, in which he held:

"The board of education has no authority in law to rent a school building, or part thereof, to a secret society for the purpose of holding lodge sessions and such social functions and entertainments of such society as are not open to all persons in the community on equal terms or which will not, in the judgment of the board of education, benefit the people of the community."

So that it was following the time of the rendition of the above mentioned opinion that the legislature supplemented said section 7622 by house bill No. 549, which included the above section 7622-3, and was entitled:

"An act to repeal sections 2457-1 and 2457-2 of the General Code and to supplement section 7622 by sections 7622-1 to 7622-7, inclusive, providing for the use of school buildings and other public buildings and grounds for educational and recreational purposes."

In the act which contained sections 2457-1 and 2457-2, when originally enacted, and being H. B. No. 41, entitled "An act to provide for, aid and encourage the civic, social and moral development of the local communities throughout the state," passed April 17, 1913, there was also contained section 2457-3 which provided that boards of county commissioners be authorized to provide for the organization and maintenance of civil and social centers throughout the country, to employ an expert director to superintend and administer the same and to levy a tax and create a fund for the payment of all the expenses involved in the social and educational work contemplated in this act.

In construing said last mentioned section my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, held that the county commissioners had no power to expend money in the public treasury for the purpose of establishing social centers, that such objects were foreign to the usual county expenditures as provided by law and that they had no authority to pay the salary of a social service director and other necessary expenses connected with social centers.

So that it seems to me the legislature expressed a clear intention when it enacted General Code section 7622-3, which permitted the use of school houses for the purposes mentioned thereon, subject, however, to such regulations as may be adopted by the board of education, which body has general control of school houses.

It will be noted that section 7622-3, above quoted, is divided into paragraphs or numerical subdivisions. For instance, subdivision 2 provides for the holding of educational, civic, social or recreational meetings and entertainments, and for such other purposes as may make for the welfare of the community, and then provides:

> "Such meetings and entertainments shall be non-exclusive and open to the general public."

The next numerical subdivision refers to public libraries and reading rooms and then subdivision 4 provides for holding elections and "for holding grange or similar meetings." I can gather but one intention from the said language and that is, that it was the intention of the legislature to permit the board of education of any school district, subject to such regulations as might be adopted by the board, to permit the use of any school house and rooms therein and the grounds and property under its control, when not used for school purposes, to be used for holding grange meetings.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

P. S.—I am not passing on constitutionality of the act, in its entirety.

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ANSWER TO NINE QUESTIONS RELATIVE TO CONTRACT BETWEEN COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF MIAMI COUNTY AND THE DIRECTORS OF THE MIAMI CONSERVANCY DISTRICT.

1. The contract attached is not void, neither is it entirely good and enforcible. Its provisions are severable and in the main not illegal.

2. The provision in said contract of an intention to co-operate with the conservancy directors of the Miami conservancy district so far as the commissioners may do so according to law, is not illegal.

3. The county commissioners have the power to grant to said conservancy directors the right to maintain levees across the county highways.

4. The county commissioners may contract with the conservancy directors as to the grade of the road in crossing.

5. The commissioners have the right and duty of maintaining roads and streets after such grade has been changed for the purpose of crossing such levees.

6. The county commissioners cannot contract with regard to paving of county highways and thereby bind their successors in office indefinitely.

7. The county commissioners by contracting with the conservancy directors as to a release of damages or protection against damages to abutting property cannot bind the owners of such property. The provision of the contract in that respect is binding on the conservancy directors so far as they can be bound by law.

8. This department will not undertake to decide what acts might be in contempt of court in the absence of a complete record of the case in which the order of injunction in question is made, and all additional facts in reference thereto.

9. There is no objection to a provision in a contract of this character to expressly limit all stipulations to be performed by the commissioners by such language as "insofar as said board of county commissioners may legally and properly do so," or similar language. The provision, however, is unnecessary, as such limitation exists in the nature of the case without it.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1917.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 15th, 1917, which includes a contract between the commissioners of your county and the directors of the Miami conservancy district and consists of nine inquiries in reference thereto, which are as follows:

> "1. Whether or not the county commissioners have power to enter into such a contract.
> "2. On the second page of said proposed contract the first paragraph declares the intention to co-operate and assist on the part of the commissioners. Is this within their legal authority?
> "3. Have they the right to grant to the district the right to maintain the levees, mentioned on said second, third, fourth and fifth pages, where same are upon county property or across public highways?
> "4. Have the commissioners the right to contract as to what the grade of the road should be which must go over said levees, as specified on the sixth and seventh pages of said proposed contract?
> "5. Have the commissioners the right to contract to maintain such roads, streets and avenues in the manner prescribed in the fifth, sixth and seventh lines on page seven of the proposed contract?

"6. Have the commissioners the right to contract with regard to the paving as provided under the head of paving on page seven in said proposed contract (particularly have they the right to agree that no paving shall be done except in a manner to be approved by the chief engineer of said district)?

"7. Does section four appearing on pages seven and eight of said proposed contract provide and effectually release from damage on abutting property in favor of the county?

"8. In the year 1914, the county commissioners of Warren county attempted to build a retaining wall on the west side of the Great Miami river and extending northward from the suspension bridge mentioned in the contract above referred to, and attempted to let a contract for such purpose. The performance of that contract was enjoined by the courts (not, as I understand, because the county commissioners did not have the power to build such wall, but on account, I think, of questions arising on the specifications and form of contract and form of execution thereof) and the commissioners were enjoined from paying anything to the contractor for the work which he had performed thereon, he having constructed, or partially constructed, from 100 to 200 feet of said wall at the northern end thereof (the total wall intended to be about 1,350 feet long). Subsequently it appeared that the county did not own the land upon which this partial construction had taken place. After the injunction above referred to was granted, I understand it was held by the court of common pleas that the county commissioners had jurisdiction to build a wall on the west side of this river, and in still another proceeding I understand that the court of common pleas in this county held that for the county to purchase the land upon which the partially completed wall stood at a price which would enable the owner thereof to compensate the contractor who had commenced constructing the wall would be a violation of the original injunction. All of these proceedings took place before I was in office and I am not very familiar with exactly what occurred. After the proceedings above referred to, a contract, in an independent proceeding of the county commissioners, was awarded to another party for approximately 700 feet of wall running northward from the suspension bridge, this 700 feet of wall being necessary in the restoration and replacement of one of the county roads which was damaged by the 1913 flood. This latter wall was located on land which belonged to the county. It will thus appear that there is now a 700 foot wall belonging to the county extending from the suspension bridge northward, that there is then a gap of from 400 to 600 feet and then the original piece of wall which was partially constructed under the contract was enjoined — the land on which the 700 foot wall was constructed being the land mentioned in section one on page two of the proposed contract as lying between the Miami river and the street or highway in the village of Franklin, known as Miami Ave., and the wall being referred to at the bottom of said page of said contract. Under this set of facts, would the proposed contract in any way violate the injunction granted against the performance of the first contract of the building of the wall which I mentioned above, and would it in any way render the county or the county commissioners liable to the contractor the performance of whose contract was enjoined as above set forth?

"9. Would it not be proper in a contract of this character to insert in all cases where the commissioners are extending any right the limitation, 'Insofar as said board of county commissioners may legally and properly do so,' or language to that effect?"

The contract is as follows:

"CONTRACT

"between

"THE BOARD OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF WARREN COUNTY, OHIO,

"and

"THE MIAMI CONSERVANCY DISTRICT.

"This instrument of writing made between The Board of County Commissioners of Warren County, Ohio, hereinafter designated the 'commissioners,' and The Miami Conservancy District, a body corporate and a political subdivision of said state duly established and organized under the provisions of the statute known as the 'Conservancy Act of Ohio,' having its office at the city of Dayton, Ohio, and hereinafter designated the 'district',

"Witnesseth: That whereas the board of directors of said district has, pursuant to the provisions of said conservancy act, and for the purpose of protecting life and property against floods in the valley of the Miami river in said state, duly adopted an official plan for said district, which said official plan has been duly approved by the court as in said act provided, and which plan is subject to immaterial modifications in order to adapt it to local conditions throughout said district as provided therein and in said conservancy act, and which said official plan thus adopted and approved is of record in the office of said district, at Dayton, Ohio, to which record thereof reference is here made;

"And, Whereas it is necessary for said district, in order to execute said official plan, and in order to accomplish the objects and purposes thereof, to construct and to perpetually maintain and operate certain parts of the levees and other works and structures provided for therein, over and upon certain lands belonging to said county of Warren located in the village of Franklin in said county, and also over and upon certain parts of certain streets, avenues, alleys and roads located in Franklin township in said county, which said lands and said parts of streets, avenues, alleys and roads are within said district and are hereinafter particularly described;

"And, Whereas said commissioners intend hereby to co-operate with and assist said district in constructing, maintaining, using and operating the works provided for in said official plan, to the extent which it may do so under the provisions of said conservancy act and the other laws of said state:

"Now, Therefore, in consideration of the sum of One Dollar ($1.00), paid by said district and received by said county of Warren, and for and in consideration of the advantages which will accrue to said county and its inhabitants, and to said district, by reason thereof, and of the promises and covenants on the part of each said commissioners and said district, as hereinafter set forth, the said commissioners and said district do hereby mutually agree as follows, to wit:

"LEVEE, ETC., ON COUNTY PROPERTY.

"Section I. The said commissioners do hereby give and grant to said district, its successors and assigns forever, the right to construct and to perpetually maintain the levee, or part of levee, and such other structures as are or may be provided for in said official plan, over and upon that parcel or tract of land belonging to said county of Warren and situate in the village of Franklin, being all of those parcels of land lying between the Miami river and the street or highway in said village known as Miami avenue, and being those certain parcels of land conveyed to said county by Philip Nickel and the heirs of Joseph D. Reed, deceased, and also the right to construct and to perpetually maintain upon and over and along said Miami avenue, which is now and always has been a county road, such parts of said works which are now or may be provided for by said official plan, and also the right to perpetually control and maintain the said tracts or parcels of land above described in so far as may be necessary for the execution of said official plan and to accomplish the objects and purposes thereof; provided, however, that no structure of any kind shall be erected or permanently maintained by said district upon said Miami avenue which will at any point be located less than 30 feet from the westerly line of said avenue, and provided further, that nothing shall be done by said district which will impair the stability of the concrete retaining wall heretofore erected on said land by said county, or which shall endanger the present security of the suspension bridge across the river.

"LEVEES UPON AND ACROSS STREETS AND ROADS.

"(Here follows a detailed description of such roads.)

"APPROACHES AT LEVEE CROSSINGS.

"And it being intended that the construction and maintenance of said levees, or parts of levees, upon and across certain parts of those of the aforesaid streets, avenues and roads which are next hereinafter mentioned shall not, except during the work of construction, interfere with or obstruct the same for the purposes of public travel, the said district hereby agrees, at the time of constructing said levees, to construct in connection therewith approaches having uniform slopes, not exceeding five (5) per cent., and not less than seventeen feet in width, for the following distances from the center lines of said levees across the same, to wit:

"(Here follow specifications for five such crossings.)

"And said district also hereby agrees to surface all of the traveled parts of the top of said levees at each and all of said five crossing points last above mentioned, and also the said approaches thereto, for a width of not less than 17 feet, with a coating of good gravel sufficient to make the same suitable for public travel, except where the same may, as is hereinafter provided, require paving with brick or other material; and said district also hereby agrees to construct on either side of each and all of said approaches where the same are more than five feet high, a good substantial guard rail; but it is agreed that after said approaches shall have been thus constructed and protected the said commissioners or other authorities who may be required by law to maintain said roads, streets and avenues, of which they will be a part, shall maintain said approaches and said guard rails.

"PAVING.

"Section III. Nothing in this instrument contained shall be construed to prevent said commissioners, or any other lawful authority, from paving the top surface of any of said parts of levees at said five crossing points aforesaid, or the approaches thereto, with brick or other material, but no such paving shall be done except in the manner approved by the chief engineer of said district, and this to the end that said parts of said levees shall not thereby be rendered ineffectual for the purposes intended by said official plan; and in the event any of said streets, avenues or roads shall have been paved prior to the construction of said levees and approaches by said district, then, and in any such case, the said district hereby agrees to pave the top surfaces of said parts of levees and the said approaches, and in so doing to use material of equal quality and to conform to the same plans and specifications, so far as applicable, as may have been used in said prior paving, it being agreed and understood, however, that said district may, in such repaving use such part of the brick and other material, if any, used in the original paving as may be available; and provided further, that said district shall have the right, if the same be demanded and provided for at a suitable time during the progress of the work of such prior paving, by paying, or obligating itself for the payment of, the additional cost thereof, to have said parts of levees and said approaches constructed and paved in connection with said work.

"DAMAGES TO ABUTTING PROPERTY.

"Section IV. The said district hereby agrees, before commencing the construction of any of said work herein provided for, by settlement, or by proper legal proceedings, to compensate the owners of all property abutting upon those parts of said streets, avenues, alleys and roads above described where said levees and the approaches thereto are to be constructed, for all damages which will result to such property by reason of such construction and the maintenance thereof, and to hold said commissioners and said county of Warren free and harmless by reason of any and all such damages.

"Section V. And it is hereby further agreed that nothing herein contained shall be construed as, or shall constitute, a waiver of the legal right on the proper authorities of said district to assess the said county of Warren for benefits which may accrue to it by reason of the execution of said official plan as provided in said conservancy act, and also that none of the rights herein given and granted to said district shall be a credit upon, or an offset against, any such assessed benefits.

"IN WITNESS WHEREOF, etc., etc.

"(Duly executed and acknowledged.)"

1. Your first question is whether or not the county commissioners have power to enter into such contract. If you mean to inquire whether the whole contract is absolutely void, the answer is —no. The different provisions of the contract are severable, and in the main are within the power of the commissioners, although as to some of them it is doubtful whether they be so. It follows, however, from this capability of separation that those which are valid are in no manner affected by any that might be void, and the answer as to its different provisions and detail will necessarily appear in discussing the other inquiries.

2. This question, likewise, as separated from those that follow, is not of much consequence, as it consists simply of a declaration of intention, and of course they have the power to declare their intention whether that intention be to act in accordance with law or otherwise. There can be no objection, however, as it is merely a preamble and is expressly confined by the phrase to the extent which it may do so under the provisions of said conservancy act and the other laws of said state.

3. The answer to this inquiry relates back to the first, as here is the real test of the power of the commissioners. The county commissioners are the general representatives of the county, and have a great deal of authority, the extent and limits of which are to be found scattered through a great number of sections of the General Code. They have not only these express powers given in all these sections, but such incidental powers as are necessary to carry the principal ones into effect.

There are two lines of authorities upon the subject of the power of county commissioners, seemingly contradictory. One set of cases seems to give them most extensive and plenary capacity as the general representatives of the county, the other class seems to restrict them to the letter of the various statutes dealing with their duties in detail, only allowing enough implied power to carry the express into effect.

These two series of precedents, upon analysis, are found to be not so conflicting but that a harmonious system of law may be evolved out of all of them. This reconciliation comes from observing that the restricted class consists of cases involving statutes dealing with details which they regulate while the more liberal ones deal with the board in its general representative capacity.

Section 2408 G. C., purporting to define their general authority, is very meagre and restricted, and in examining this, and all the sections, it should be in reference to the political history of the state and the decisions of the courts in reference thereto. This will not be attempted either with any comprehension or any especial detail, but only by reference to a few cases where the subject is conspicuous and pronounced. The subject gets into the very early reports, and the supreme court expresses a very expansive theory on their authority in an early case, viz.:

Carder v. Commissioners, 16 O. S. 354 in which they declare:

> "The county commissioners is the body—the quasi-corporation—in whom is vested by law the title to all the property of the county. In one sense they are the agents of the county; in another sense they are the county itself. It is in this latter sense that they acquire and hold in perpetuity the title to its property. In this capacity they not only act for the county, but also act as the county."

This extended interpretation of their authority still prevails and is cited with approval in a recent case.

State v. Allen, 86 O. S. 244.

The above is cited by reason of its general application to the authority of the commissioners. A much earlier case declared the same doctrine with nearer reference to the present inquiry.

Widow, etc. of Reynolds, deceased v. Commissioners, 5 Ohio 204.

The syllabus says with the greatest possible brevity:

> "Where real estate is vested absolutely in the county commissioners for public purposes, they may dispose of it in the same manner as individuals."

The facts and opinion in the case bear out this broad statement to the fullest extent.

A long time after this decision the legislature enacted what is now G. C. 2447 granting authority to the commissioners to sell real estate.

From the above case it is apparent that this section was merely declaratory of power they already possessed. The last legislature added a supplemental section in the nature of a restriction, requiring such sale to be by resolution adopted by a majority of the commissioners. There is probably no doubt (considering this provision of the contract for that purpose as a sale) that the commissioners have passed such resolution in the present case either definitely or by the resolution authorizing the execution of the contract. The interest in real estate granted by that provision of the contract is the equivalent of a perpetual lease. This was held in Widow v. Commissioners, supra, to be a conveyance of a chattel interest. Later decisions, however, and the weight of authority establish it as an interest in land. The distinction is not important, as the authorities granting power to sell are broad enough to include leases, if indeed the latter are not more plainly than the former within the power.

The right to sell land, if given by the statute above mentioned, might exclude the idea of giving it away, as is done in the present instance, which makes the above consideration of the authorities important. But it is safe to assume in a case like the present, where the transfer of an interest in real estate is in co-operation with another public body, and for a distinctly public purpose, that the commissioners have the right to make the grant.

4. The answer to your fourth inquiry largely involves the same general considerations discussed in the third above, to which attention is again called.

The authority of the commissioners in reference to roads is statutory, but always with the concomitant that such statutes are to be construed with the above general extensive authority of the commissioners. These statutes have many times been modified, and are now found in what is commonly known as the "Cass" law. It is a common practice for county commissioners to change the grade of county roads, slight or moderate changes being made as a matter of common practice without any proceedings for that purpose.

It has also been considered that they have not the right to make radical and entire changes without statutory authority, as in such cases as where they change the road at a grade crossing of a railroad, either to place it above or below the latter, for which purpose they have authority in section 6956-1 and 6956-2 G. C. The contemplated changes of grade in this instance are probably equally as great or greater than that involved in the case of the railroad crossings. However, the commissioners have no choice about the matter, as the authority is given the conservancy directors to change the grade ad libitum. Among a long list of acts which the latter may do as provided in section 6828-15 G. C., we find "to construct or elevate roadways and streets." Such directors have, however, a dominant power or eminent domain (section 6828-17), which is expressly given them over all townships, villages, counties and cities. The powers of the conservancy commission are plenary and autocratic. It is not too much to say they supersede all other powers, both of individuals and the public, in reference to the real property of the district, as applied to the purpose of their office and duties. So that if the elevation of the roads inquired about can be made without the authority and against the will of the county commissioners, it would seem that they should have power to contract as to proper approaches for such higher grades to pass over such levees.

The proposed changes can be made, and will be if the conservancy directors so determine. The county commissioners are not compelled to make ineffectual resistance, neither do they have to sit idly by and permit that which is inevitable to take its random course. They have jurisdiction and power to act for the interest of their constituents in an intelligent and business-like manner. Instead of compelling a condemnation proceeding by their inaction, they may save the expense and delay thereof by a reasonable agreement. And this may consist in an arrangement whereby the status quo may be preserved as far as the nature of the improvement permits, and saving the county present and future expense in making the changes that are unavoidable.

5. There can be no doubt, after these roads are changed, of the duty of the commissioners to maintain them in the same manner that they do other roads, as after such change they will have no different legal character from what they did before. This, of course, bears no reference to the distribution of powers and duties between county commissioners and township trustees.

6. I know of no authority, and can conceive of no theory, upon which the county commissioners would have the right to delegate to the engineer of the conservancy district the power to decide the manner, terms, or specifications of future paving. The purpose of the approval of the engineer, however, is stated as follows: "and this to the end that said parts of said levees shall not thereby be rendered ineffectual for the purposes intended by said official plan." This restricts the interference with paving to the actual necessity of the case, and as the conservancy authorities have complete power over the district in that respect, the question of the power of the commissioners to contract for it is not very important. It is also true that it is not a matter of consequence to the county whether this provision be binding, and the conservancy commission, being sure of its own powers, and having good counsel at command, is asking no opinion.

It may, at least, be said of this provision of the contract, from the standpoint of either party to it, that there is nothing in it that can be injurious.

7. If the commissioners are liable, or become liable to any one in damages, they can not answer such person by sending him to the directors of the conservancy district. "A" may contract with "B" that "B" will pay damages caused by "A" to "C." This can not compel "C" to look to "B" but may enable "A" to call on "B" to be made whole should "A" be mulcted in damages.

There is some provision in the conservancy law for the conservancy district to become liable for such damages. They have, as we have seen, authority to condemn; and section 6828-17 provides that in the exercise of that right > "care shall be taken to do no unnecessary damage to other public utilities, and, in case of failure to agree upon the mode and terms of interference, not to interfere with their operation or usefulness beyond the actual necessities of the case, etc."

And it is provided that upon a change of plan, if the change does not > "actually increase resulting damages for which the board is not compelled to make amicable settlement. (Section 6828-37.)" no action other than a resolution shall be necessary.

Without pursuing the subject further it may be stated that while it is not now possible to forecast all that may be hereafter held by the courts upon various phases of the conservancy act, including this under consideration, yet this provision is as well worded to fix the obligation as could well be done.

8. It would not be proper to submit a direct answer to your eighth question. No one should undertake to say what act would be contempt of court by way of violation of injunction, without having the order of injunction before him, and having that, it might be necessary to have the whole record of the case, and then with the whole record before you it might still be necessary to have additional extrinsic facts applying it to the question in hand. All these sources of information are at your command, and by an examination of them you can readily determine whether the case you partly describe would be, or not, a violation of such order. It is impossible to state, by a study of the facts as stated in your inquiry, just exactly whether or not any suggested action would violate this order.

9. There would be no impropriety in the insertion of the matter set out in this inquiry in the contract. However, the limitation is there as a matter of law without being expressed, and it would hardly be necessary to reform and re-execute the contract for the mere purpose of including it.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTION FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN WASHINGTON COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1917.

State Highway Department, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of March 23, 1917, in which you ask my approval of supplemental final resolution made in reference to the following improvement:

> "Washington county—Section 'H', Hockingport-Powhatan road, Pet. No. 1351, I. C. H. No. 7."

I have carefully examined this resolution and find the same correct in form and legal.

There is one suggestion, however, that I desire to make, and that is the fact that it sets out in the resolution the following:

> "In all a distance of about 53.8 miles."

It occurs to me that this must be an error, and I call it to your attention so that if it is it can be corrected.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of April 3, 1917, in which you ask my approval of a final resolution made in reference to the following described highway:

> "Mahoning county—Section 'b', Youngstown-Lowellville road, Pet. No. 3132, I. C. H. No. 14."

I have examined the said final resolution carefully and find the same correct in form and legal.

Very truly yours,

GIRLS' INDUSTRIAL HOME—CLOTHING FURNISHED INMATES THEREOF—NOT CHARGE AGAINST COUNTIES—SECTIONS 1815 AND 1816 G. C. APPLY ONLY TO BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

Sections 1815 and 1816 of the General Code apply only to benevolent institutions, therefore do not apply to the Girls' Industrial Home at Delaware. For this reason the counties of the state cannot be compelled to reimburse the state for the expense of clothing inmates of such institutions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 6, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 27, 1917, as follows:

> "We have a claim certified under section 20 of the General Code for clothing furnished for inmates of the girl's industrial school. It appears that items therein as to two inmates are in dispute, as follows:
> "Two girls were committed by the proper court in Hardin county to an institution of Delaware county, and by arrangement were taken into such Delaware county institution. Thereafter, the juvenile court of the city of Delaware committed the girls to the girls' industrial school.
> "Proof of these facts have been furnished. The question is whether, upon such proof being supplied to the matron of the girls' industrial school, the bill of account should be made against Hardin county, or whether we shall compel Delaware county to pay the bill."

Your question raises the inquiry, first of all, as to whether or not the counties of the state are to be charged with the expense of clothing furnished by the girls' industrial school to its inmates.

General Code sections 1815 and 1816 read:

> "Section 1815. All persons now inmates of, or hereafter admitted into, a benevolent institution, except as otherwise provided in this chapter, and except as otherwise provided in chapters relating to particular institutions, shall be maintained at the expense of the state. They shall be neatly and comfortably clothed and their traveling and incidental expenses paid by themselves or those having them in charge.
> "Section 1816. In case of failure to pay incidental expenses or furnish necessary clothing, the steward or other financial officer of the institution may pay such expenses, and furnish the requisite clothing, and pay therefor from the appropriation for the current expenses of the institution, keeping and reporting a separate account thereof. The account so drawn, signed by such officer, countersigned by the superintendent shall be forwarded by such officer to the auditor of the county, from which the person came; and such auditor shall issue his warrant, payable to the treasurer of state for the amount of such bill and charge the amount to the current expense fund. The county auditor shall then collect the account in the name of the state as other debts are collected."

It has been suggested that although the reading of these sections would not indicate that they referred to the girls' industrial school at Delaware, nevertheless a review of the history of them might lead to the opposite conclusion. These sections were originally sections 631 and 632 of the Revised Statutes of 1880. They were placed in chapter I of Title 5. Title 5 consisted of twelve chapters and was entitled "Benevolent Institutions." Chapter 1 related to the general provisions; chapter 2, trustees; chapter 3, officers; chapter 4, board of state charities; chapter 5, institution for the deaf and dumb; chapter 6, institution for the blind; chapter 7, institution for the feeble minded youth; chapter 8, Ohio soldiers' and sailors' orphans' home; chapter 9, asylum for the insane; chapter 10, Longview asylum; chapter 11, Reform school; chapter 12, girls' industrial home.

The sections relating to the girls' industrial home remained in this position in the Revised Statutes until the formation of the General Code. At this time the girls' industrial home was placed with the boys' industrial school under the chapter entitled correctional institutions. Section 631 Revised Statutes became section 1815 of the General Code. Section 631 R. S. reads:

> "All persons admitted into any institution, except as otherwise provided in chapters relating to particular institutions, shall be maintained at the expense of the state, subject only to the requirement that they shall be neatly and comfortably clothed, and their traveling incidental expenses paid by themselves, or those having them in charge."

In adopting section 1815 of the General Code, supra, the legislature substituted for the phrase "all persons admitted into any institution" the phrase "all persons admitted into a benevolent institution." Section 1815 G. C. was then later amended in 101 O. L., page 157, to read as it does at the present time.

The statutes do not at any place say just what institutions are to be classed as benevolent, correctional or penal, and the only indication we have of what the legislature intended in this respect is the classification in the Revised Statutes and the Code. In the Revised Statutes the Girls' Industrial Home was classified as a benevolent institution, and later, in the formation of the General Code, taken out of that class and placed in the class of correctional institutions, and then when doing this the legislature saw fit to adopt section 1815 in place of section 632 R. S. and make it apply only to benevolent institutions.

It is my opinion that after the adoption of the General Code section 1815 G. C. applied only to such institutions as were classed in the General Code as benevolent institutions, and it has not, since that time, applied to the Girls' Industrial Home.

This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that it is easily seen, from a study of the purpose and character of the Girls' Industrial Home, that it is a correctional institution and not a benevolent one. I am therefore of the opinion that sections 1815 and 1816 of the General Code do not apply to the Girls' Industrial School at Delaware, and for that reason the counties of the state cannot be compelled to reimburse the state for the expense of clothing the inmates of such institution.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

VICE-PRESIDENT OF SCHOOL BOARD—IN ABSENCE OR INABILITY OF PRESIDENT TO ACT—MAY ATTEND MEETING TO SELECT MEMBER OF COUNTY BOARD OR DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT.

The vice-president of a school board acts in the place of the president in the absence or inability of the president to act.

Where the president is unable to attend the meeting to select a member of the county school board, or the meeting to select the district superintendent, the vice-president may attend and perform the duties of president.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 6, 1917.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your inquiry of March 12, 1917, you submit for my opinion the following:

> "Section 4728 G. C. provides that the members of a county board of education shall be elected by the presidents of the various village and rural boards of education in such county school district.
> "Section 4739 G. C. provides: 'Such district superintendent shall be elected by the presidents of the village and rural boards of education within such district * * *.'
> "In case that the president of a local board of education is prevented from attending either of the above meetings, has the vice-president of such board of education power to vote in the election of a county board member or that of a district superintendent? In case the vice-president should not have this power ex-officio, would the board have the right to empower the vice-president to cast a vote in such meetings?"

General Code section 4747, which provides for the election of the president of a school board, also provides for the election of a vice-president, which two officials, together with a clerk of the board, are the only officers of boards of education provided for in the organization of such boards. It has only been of recent years that a vice-president for said board was provided for—to be exact, in the year 1910. Prior to that time the only officers of the board mentioned were the president and the clerk. The law, as it then read, specified that the treasurer of a city, village or township district should be treasurer of the school board, which latter law has been amended to provide that the duties of treasurer should be performed by the clerk. At the time the law only provided for the president and clerk of a school board there also existed a statute which has remained unrepealed, and is numbered 4753, which provides that if the president or clerk is absent at any meeting of the board of education, the members present shall choose one of their number to serve in his place for the time being, and the latter section is in contradiction to section 4747, above mentioned, as far as the vice-president is concerned, if the vice-president has any duties to perform. It must be presumed, I think, that the legislature, when it provided for a vice-president without prescribing the duties of the office, meant that that official should perform his usual and ordinary duties, and it is therefore necessary to determine just what duties generally devolve upon a vice-president.

The word "vice" as a preposition means "in the place of or instead;" that is, a vice-president, following the definition in the Standard dictionary, is > "One who is to act, on occasion, in the place of a president."

and, as defined by Webster,

> "An officer next in rank below a president,"

thus making that official an officer of the next lower rank than the president. The president, as the term implies, is the head or chief officer of the board, one who presides at the meetings of the board and performs all proper and necessary duties, whether designated or not, which are required to be performed by such officer in the proper transaction of the business of the board. He may be and often is given special duties and in the sections of the General Code mentioned in your inquiry is designated as the person to represent the board in the selection of members of the county school board and in the selection of district superintendents. But it seems to me that the language of those sections means more than simply the designation of a person to perform a duty.

General Code section 4728 provides in part:

> "Each county school district shall be under the supervision and control of a county board of education composed of five members who shall be elected by the presidents of the various village and rural boards of education in such county school district. Each district shall have one vote in the election of members of the board of education, except as is provided in section 4728-1 G. C. * * *."

Sections 4728-1 G. C. provides:

> "All school districts other than the village and city school district within a civil township shall be jointly entitled to one vote in the election of members of the county board of education. The presidents of the board of education of all such districts in a civil township shall meet for the purpose of choosing one from their number to cast the vote for members of the county board of education. If no such meeting is held in any year for the purpose of choosing one from their number to cast the vote of such boards, the president of the board having the largest tax valuation shall represent all such districts of the civil township at the election of the county board members. A board of education of a rural district having territory in two or more civil townships shall vote with the boards of education of the district of the civil township in which the greater part of its taxable property is located."

It seems to me it was not the intention of the legislature to designate a particular person to act upon a particular matter, but rather, using the language of section 4728 G. C., that "each district shall have one vote;" that is, provided the district composed approximately an entire civil township, and if there was more than one board of education in a civil township, then the word "district" seems to have included not only the individual school district, but the entire township, as a district entitled to one vote. It is true by the provisions of General Code 4729

> "the presidents of the boards of education of the various village and rural school districts in each county school district shall meet and elect five members of the county board of education," and in General Code section 4739.

> "such district superintendents shall be elected by the presidents of the village and rural boards of education within such district."

except, as said last mentioned section also provides,

> "that where such supervision district contains two or less rural or village school districts the boards of education of such school districts in joint session shall elect such superintendent."

So that it is not the designation of any particular individuals to act, but the individuals who represent the districts.

Now it is clear to me if the president of a school board were absent from a meeting, the vice-president would be in duty bound to perform the duties which devolve upon the president.

It was held by my predecessor in opinion No. 553, and found in opinions of the attorney-general for 1915, page 1089, that when the office of the president of a school board became vacated by resignation, it was the duty of the vice-president to perform the duties of that office and that no provision is made for filling a vacancy in the office of president which may occur during the term of one year for which he is elected. I concur in the conclusion reached in that opinion.

It is also held in Pond v. National Mortgage Debenture Company, 50 Pac. 973, that:

> "The vice-president is an officer nearest in rank below the president and in the absence of the president of a corporation it is the duty of the vice-president to act as president and at such times he is the chief officer of the corporation."

I am free to admit that there seems to be a dearth of decisions on this proposition and I conclude it is only so because the rule is so generally accepted as the proper one that where there is a vice-president, he, by the very nature of his office, must perform the duties of president on the occasions that the same are not performed by the president on account of absence, inability, or other proper reasons.

It does not seem to me that a school district or school districts, which are under the control of school boards, should go unrepresented at such important meetings as those at which members of county boards of education are chosen or those at which district superintendents are chosen, simply because a particular individual might be incapacitated or unable to attend when there seems to be no way to fill the vacancy. I must rather take the view that it is the district which is to be represented and if the person designated, to wit, the president, is not able to represent same, then the person who acts in the place of or in his stead, viz., the vice-president, is the proper person to attend and perform the duties of president.

I therefore advise you that in case the president of a local board of education is prevented from attending either the meeting at which the county school board members are elected, or the meeting at which the district superintendent is chosen, the vice-president of the board of education has power to attend and participate in said meeting.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—CANNOT BY ORDINANCE BE MADE EX-OFFICIO CLERK OF DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SERVICE.

A city can not by ordinance make the director of public service ex-officio clerk of the department of public service.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 6, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a communication from C. C. McCormick, city solicitor of Wellston, Ohio, dated March 16, 1917, asking for an opinion upon a question which is of such state-wide importance that I am directing an opinion thereon to you. The following was submitted:

> "I desire to submit formally the following question: Can a city such as Wellston by ordinance make the director of public service ex-officio clerk of the department of public service?
> "In explanation I may call your attention to the fact that in this city the municipality practically owns and operates all of its utilities, and it would be considerable saving in efficiency if these two offices could be combined."

Section 4323 G. C. provides:

> "In each city there shall be a department of public service which shall be administered by a director of public service. The director of public service shall be an elector of the city, shall be appointed by the mayor and shall serve until his successor is appointed and qualified. He shall make rules and regulations for the administration of the affairs under his supervision."

Section 4324 G. C. provides:

> "The director of public service shall manage and supervise all public works and undertakings of the city, except as otherwise provided by law, and shall have all powers and perform all duties conferred upon him by law. He shall keep a record of his proceedings, a copy of which, certified by him, shall be competent evidence in all courts."

Section 4326 G. C. provides:

> "The director of public service shall manage municipal water, lighting, heating, power, garbage and other undertakings of the city, parks, baths, play grounds, market houses, cemeteries, crematories, sewage disposal plants and farms, and shall make and preserve surveys, maps, plans, drawings and estimates. He shall supervise the construction and have charge of the maintenance of public buildings and other property of the corporation not otherwise provided for in this title. He shall have the management of all other matters provided by the council in connection with the public service of the city."

Section 4327 G. C. provides:

> "The director of public service may establish such sub-department as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers and other persons, necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

From the foregoing sections, particularly section 4324, it is evident that the director of public service in the city of Wellston is authorized to manage and supervise all the public works of the city, including the municipally owned public utilities. There is a duty imposed upon him by statute of keeping "a record of his proceedings," and the question of establishing such sub-departments as may be necessary and determining the number of employes of various kinds are left to his discretion.

It is for the director of public service to determine when he needs a clerk or clerks and in the event in his discretion he decides that there is no necessity for a clerk and that the duties of the office are such that he can perform all the duties that a clerk might perform, he can abolish the position.

The director of public service would not become ex-officio clerk of the department of public service; neither is it necessary that there should be an ordinance making him such clerk ex-officio, or that the offices be combined. The director of public service having created the place, merely does away with it, and the fact that the statute makes it his duty to keep the records of his department, renders the clerical duties as much a part of his duties as any other.

Therefore, in direct answer to your question I would say that a city can not by ordinance make the director of public service ex-officio clerk of the department of public service.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR OF THIS STATE—EMPLOYED BY JOINT BOARDS —ON CONSTRUCTION OF INTER-STATE COUNTY DITCHES— MAY BE PAID COMPENSATION FROM TIME TO TIME—REGARDLESS OF CUSTOMS AND LAWS OF OTHER STATE.

In a proceeding for the construction of an improvement under the chapter "Interstate County Ditches," an engineer appointed or employed by the joint boards is not compelled to wait for his compensation until the completion of the work, but the same may be allowed and paid from time to time in accordance with section 6535 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 6, 1917.

HON. C. A. STUBBS, Prosecuting Attorney, Celina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On February 26, 1917, there was received at this department an inquiry from you which is as follows:—

"Under the inter-state ditch law, our county surveyor, as one of the appointed engineers, is working on an inter-state ditch located wholly in the state of Indiana.

"As I understand it, according to the laws of Indiana, engineers are not permitted to draw their fees until the work is wholly completed.

"I will thank you for an opinion as to whether or not the engineer from Ohio must wait until such completion before he can draw his fees, or whether he can draw them from time to time during the progress of the work."

The provision of the inter-state ditch law providing for the compensation of the engineer is found in section 6588 G. C., which is as follows:

> "The fees of all officials and assistants in the improvement and construction of such ditches, shall be as for like services in county ditch work."

The provision in the county ditch law governing the same is in section 6529 G. C., which is as follows:

> "A surveyor or engineer shall receive five dollars per day for the time actually employed on the work designated for him to do, and the necessary and actual expenses for the time so employed."

These two sections fix his right to compensation and the amount thereof. Your inquiry is as to when he is entitled to receive the same. Although the work done by this officer is done in the state of Indiana, it is done for the authorities in Ohio, and the Indiana laws in no manner govern the same.

The provisions of our own statutes as to the time of payment are found in section 6535 G. C., which is as follows:

> "Fees under this chapter shall be paid out of the county treasury as soon as the bill of items thereof is examined and allowed by the county commissioners, and the auditor shall issue orders therefor on such allowance. For the amounts, so paid, except to the commissioners, auditor and probate judge, the commissioners shall order the general county fund to be reimbursed for the money raised for the respective improvements."

You are, therefore, advised that the engineer may be paid in accordance with the provisions of this section and without regard to the law or customs in the state of Indiana.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WHEN COUNTY COMMISSIONER WHO HAS BEEN ELECTED TO SUCCEED HIMSELF—DIES DURING FIRST TERM—VACANCY CREATED —APPOINTMENT SHOULD BE MADE TO FILL VACANCY GENERALLY —WITHOUT REGARD TO TENURE—SUCCESSOR SHOULD BE ELECTED TO FILL UNEXPIRED TERM AT NEXT GENERAL ELECTION.

When a county commissioner elected to succeed himself dies after the election, and before commencing the term for which he was elected, a vacancy is thereby created which may and should be immediately filled by the probate judge, the auditor and recorder of the county.

The appointment should be made to fill the vacancy generally without express limitation in the order of appointment respecting the tenure of the appointee; but the person so appointed will be entitled to hold his office not only for the remainder of the term during which the vacancy occurred, but also thereafter, and until at the next regular election for county officers a successor for the remainder of the then unexpired term is elected and has qualified. At such next regular election there should be an election to fill out the unexpired term and one for the regular term commencing on the third Monday of September, 1918.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 6, 1917.

HON. HARRY D. SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 22, 1917, requesting my opinion as follows:

> "Mr. J. C. Conwell, a member of our board of county commissioners died March 21, 1917. His present term of office expires the third Monday in September, 1917. At the regular election in November, 1916, he was elected to succeed himself as a member of the board of commissioners, the term for which he was elected commencing the third Monday in September, 1917, and terminating the third Monday in September, 1919.
> "FIRST. There seems to be no question as to the authority of the officers named, to appoint at this time, a commissioner to serve until the third Monday in September, 1917, the expiration of Mr. Conwell's present term of office, particularly in view of the fact that the term expires more than a year previous to the next election for state and county officers in November, 1918.
> "SECOND. It seems equally clear, that at this time, the appointment should be for the present unexpired term only, as the appointing power can not anticipate the vacancy which will also occur on the third Monday in September, 1917, the beginning of Mr. Conwell's new term of office.
> "THIRD. It is not so clear, as for what length of time the appointment shall be made to fill the vacancy beginning the third Monday in September, 1917, when the time comes to make the appointment.
> "I. Shall the appointment be for the full term commencing the third Monday in September, 1917, and terminating the third Monday in September, 1919?
> "II. Shall the appointment be from Monday in September, 1917, until the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1918, the date of the next election for state and county officers, and at that election, a commissioner elected to serve from the day of election until the third Monday in September, 1919?"

The situation which you describe and the questions which you present require consideration of the following sections of the General Code:

> "Section 2396. When a commissioner is elected to fill a vacancy occasioned by death, resignation or removal, he shall hold his office for the unexpired term for which his predecessor was elected.
> "Section 2397. If a vacancy in the office of commissioner occurs more than thirty days before the next election for state and county officers, a successor shall be elected thereat. If a vacancy occurs more than thirty days before such election, or within that time, and the interest of the county requires that the vacancy be filled before the election, the probate judge, auditor, and recorder of the county, or a majority of them, shall appoint a commissioner, who shall hold his office until his successor is elected and qualified."

The second of the above two sections makes it very clear that the authority to appoint to fill the vacancy created by the death of one of the commissioners now exists and may be exercised by the probate judge, the auditor and the recorder of the county, or a majority of them at any time. Nevertheless, I do not agree with you that the tenure of the appointee will be terminated on the third Monday in September, 1917, for reasons which I will point out in discussing the second question as submitted by you. Otherwise, I agree with you on the first point.

On the second point it is my opinion that the appointment now to be made will vest in the appointee authority to hold until his successor is elected and qualified. Such tenure is not, in my opinion, limited to the remainder of the unexpired term. Section 2396 G. C. does limit the tenure of a person elected to fill a vacancy in the office to the unexpired term of his predecessor; but section 2397 contains no similar limitation upon the tenure of a person appointed.

The two sections which have been quoted are not materially different from section 10 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "When an elective office becomes vacant, and is filled by appointment such appointee shall hold the office until his successor is elected and qualified. Unless otherwise provided by law, such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term at the first general election for the office which is vacant that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have occurred. This section shall not be construed to postpone the time for such election beyond that at which it would have been held had no such vacancy occurred, nor to affect the official term, or the time for the commencement thereof, of any person elected to such office before the occurrence of such vacancy."

In this section we see that the person elected holds for the unexpired term, but the person appointed holds until there is an election.

Under this section, questions like that which you submit, have arisen more than once, i. e. a vacancy in an existing term has occurred in the interval between the election and the commencement of the term for which the election was held, by the death of an incumbent who had been elected to succeed himself. The holding has uniformly been that the appointment necessarily made under such circumstances authorizes the appointee to hold, not merely until the expiration of the term, but on into the next term and until his successor is elected and qualified. This was the exact situation in State ex rel. v. Speidel 62 O. S. 156.

Other decisions which may be cited are:

State ex rel. v. Dahl, 55 O. S. 195.
State ex rel. v. Metcalfe, 80 O. S. 244.

The principle which you mention to the effect that the appointing power cannot anticipate a vacancy has no application here. It was properly enunciated in the case cited by you under entirely different facts. In that case the appointment which was declared invalid had been made at a time when there was actually an incumbent in possession of the office. Of course, the court properly held that the power to appoint to a vacancy could not be exercised until a vacancy actually existed, even though the certainty of a vacancy might be foreseen. Such would be the case, for example, if a sheriff-elect should die between the date of election and the time of the commencement of the term for which he was elected, and the incumbent should be then serving his second term, without capacity by virtue of the constitutional provision to continue to hold the office after the expiration of that term. The occurrence of a vacancy in such an office could be plainly foreseen, but such vacancy would not exist until the expiration of the term, and the official action required to fill the vacancy could not be taken until it actually existed.

As stated, this principle has no application here. A vacancy does exist, and the power to fill it may now be exercised. There is no such thing as a vacancy in a term—the vacancy exists in the office. This is clearly pointed out in State v. Metcalfe, supra, wherein the court makes use of the following language:

> "This view is strengthened and we think made conclusive by a consideration of the policy respecting vacancies in office, and the filling of the same, manifested by legislation and the trend of judicial decision since the adoption of the present constitution. The policy has been to secure continuity of service and avoid unnecessary vacancies. It has never been the policy of the state to create vacancies in office for the mere purpose of giving somebody an opportunity to fill them."

Similar expressions of even more direct application to the case in hand will be found in the opinion in State ex rel. v. Speidel, supra.

In short, under the statutes as they stand, the question can very briefly be disposed of by the statement that the duration of the tenure of the appointee is a matter with which the appointing power has nothing whatever to do. That power is exhausted when an appointment to fill a vacancy is made; the law then determines the question of tenure. Even if the appointing board should attempt to limit the tenure of the appointee to a period of time ending on the third Monday of September, 1917, such limitation would be regarded as mere surplusage. State ex rel. v. Darby, 12 C. C. 235.

It is my opinion, therefore, on the second point suggested by you that the appointing power should merely fill the vacancy without attempting to stipulate the period of the appointee's tenure, and that, as a matter of law, the person appointed would be entitled to remain in the office until such convenient date after the first Monday in November, 1918, on which a successor should then be elected to fill out the unexpired term may qualify. At the election in 1918, of course, there should be two elections for the particular membership in the board of county commissioners, one to fill out the unexpired term, and the other for the regular term commencing on the third Monday in September, 1919.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary for me to consider the third question which you state in the form in which you have submitted it.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TREASURER—ENTITLED TO TWO PER CENT. OF ALL MONEYS RECEIVED AND PAID OUT ON ORDER OF TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—IN REDEMPTION OF BONDS ISSUED UNDER SECTION 6976 TO 7018, INCLUSIVE, NOW REPEALED.

In the redemption of bonds issued under and by virtue of sections 6976 to 7018, inclusive, G. C., now repealed, the township treasurer is entitled to receive two per cent. of all moneys received by him and paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees in the redemption of such bonds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 6, 1917.

HON. O. W. KENNEDY, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 10, 1917, in which you ask my opinion about certain matters therein set out. Your communication reads as follows:

> "I desire your opinion on the following matter:
> "Bonds were issued under section 6976 to 7018, inclusive, of the General Code, as these sections read prior to the enactment of the Cass law. The township makes a levy for the redemption of these bonds at maturity, and the payment of interest thereon. The money is then disbursed or paid out by the treasurer in the usual manner in payment of these bonds and the interest. What compensation is the treasurer entitled to?
> "Section 7015, as it read at that time, made special provision concerning the compensation of the treasurer for money paid out by him under and pursuant to the above mentioned sections. The question is: Do the provisions of section 7015, as it formerly existed, have reference to the money paid out by the treasurer in the retiring of the bonds and the payment of the interest, or did it have reference only to his compensation on the money paid out to the contractor and the like in the performance of the work?
> "Section 3318 of the General Code provides for the compensation of the treasurer. However, section 7015, as it formerly read, being part of a special act, had preference, and on moneys paid out under sections 6976-7018, the treasurer received the compensation prescribed by 7015, but I have not seen any opinion from your department as to whether or not the treasurer is compensated as prescribed by 7015 or 3318 on money paid out in the retirement of the bonds issued thereunder, as well as the interest thereon."

In arriving at the conclusion as to what is the correct answer to the question proposed in your communication, I desire first to note the general provisions of law which control in the matter of the compensation to which a township treasurer is entitled for services rendered.

Section 3318 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The treasurer shall be allowed and may retain as his fees for receiving, safe keeping and paying out moneys belonging to the township treasury, two per cent. of all moneys paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees."

It will be noted in this section that the township treasurer is entitled to two per cent. of all moneys paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees. The question then arises as to what moneys would be paid out by the township treasurer under the order of the township trustees. We find this question answered in section 3316 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "Section 3316. No money belonging to the township shall be paid out by the treasurer, except upon an order signed personally by at least two of the township trustees and countersigned personally by the township clerk."

From this section it is evident that no money can be paid out by the township treasurer except upon an order signed by at least two of the township trustees. Hence we are safe in assuming that the township treasurer would be entitled to two per cent. of the moneys received by him from any source whatsoever and paid out for the redemption of bonds which were issued under and by virtue of sections 6976 to 7018 inclusive, G. C., and which are still outstanding. That is, he would be entitled to this amount unless there is some provision specifying a different compensation for the township treasurer in the matter of paying out money for the redemption of said bonds.

Now, let us turn to the sections which control in the issuing of the bonds in reference to which your question arises.

Section 7015 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The treasurer of such township shall receive and disburse all money arising from the provisions of this subdivision of this chapter. He shall receive as compensation therefor one-half of one per cent. of the first ten thousand dollars, or less, distributed in any one year, and one-fourth of one per cent. of any amount in excess of ten thousand dollars, to be paid out of the township funds, and he shall not receive other compensation for services rendered under such subdivision."

From this section it is seen that the township treasurer is to receive a different compensation than that set out in section 3318 G. C., for services which he may render under and by virtue of the subdivision of which section 7015 G. C. is a part, namely, he is to receive one-half of one per cent. of the first ten thousand dollars distributed in any one year, and one-fourth of one per cent. of any amount in excess of ten thousand dollars, and he shall not receive other compensation for services rendered under such subdivision.

At this point I desire to call attemtion to an opinion rendered by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, found in Vol. II of Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1911-1912, at p. 1426. The request made of the department at that time was as follows:

> "Request has been made of me for an opinion by the trustees, clerk and treasurer of Sharon township, this county, whether the township treasurer is entitled to a per cent. on money raised by taxation for the purpose of paying interest and redeeming bonds issued in previous years for road improvement under the provisions of General Code, sections 6976 to 7018, inclusive.
> "The treasurer in office at the time the proceeds of the particular bond issue were received took his commission of one-half of one per cent. (½ of 1%), etc., as provided by section 7015."

The syllabus of the finding of the department reads as follows:

> "For the distribution of all moneys, raised by virtue of the provisions of sections 6976-7018 General Code, providing for taxation and bond issues for road improvements, whether it be of the moneys received by the sale of bonds and distributed to the contractor, or whether it be funds raised by taxation and distributed to bond holders, the treasurer is entitled to the payment provided for by section 7015, General Code, and no other compensation for such service can be allowed him."

In the body of the opinion, at p. 1428, we find the following line of argument:

"Section 7015 General Code makes it the duty of the township treasurer to receive and disburse all moneys arising from the provisions of this subdivision, whether secured by the issue of bonds or by taxation. The money raised on the sale of bonds and distributed to the contractors, as well as the money raised by taxation and distributed to the bondholders is money received and distributed by virtue of that subdivision.

"The compensation of the treasurer is based upon the amount distributed by him. It might occur that the same treasurer would receive and distribute the money secured upon the sale of bonds and also the money raised by taxation to redeem the bonds.

"The bonds, however, may run as long as thirty years and different treasurers be required to handle the money. If compensation were allowed upon the money raised by the sale of the bonds and not upon the money secured by taxation to meet such bonds, the first treasurer would receive compensation for work which was to be partly performed by his successor, or successors.

"The compensation of the treasurer of the township is based upon the amount distributed by him. The moneys raised upon the bonds and the money secured by taxation are each distributed, there are two separate distributions.

"Section 7015 General Code provides that the treasurer shall receive no other compensation for such services than therein provided. This provision of the statute prevents him from drawing the compensation provided in section 3318 General Code.

"It is my conclusion that the township treasurer is entitled to compensation upon all moneys raised by virtue of the provisions of sections 6976 to 7018, inclusive, of the General Code, and distributed by such township treasurer, whether said money is raised by the sale of bonds or by taxation. His rate of compensation for such services is fixed by section 7015, General Code, and is based upon the amount actually distributed by him. Money placed in a bank or depository and money paid to a successor in office would not be money distributed by him."

I quote from this opinion at considerable length because I believe the law of the case is set out correctly therein. From the above we see that the conclusion of Mr. Hogan is as follows:

That the township treasurer is entitled to compensation upon all moneys raised by virtue of the provisions of sections 6976 to 7018, inclusive, G. C., and distributed by such township treasurer, whether said money is raised by the sale of bonds or by taxation, but that the rate is fixed by section 7015 G. C.

Now, the next question is, to what compensation is the township treasurer entitled, in view of the fact that said sections 6976 to 7018, inclusive, G. C., are repealed?

Mr. Hogan in his opinion states the following:

"Section 7015 G. C. provides that the treasurer shall receive no other compensation for such services than therein provided. This provision of the statute prevents him from drawing the compensation provided in section 3318 G. C."

Since the repeal of this section, of course your township treasurer cannot look to the same in order to ascertain what his compensation is for services rendered. So it is my opinion that he must now look to the general provisions of the statutes in reference to compensation for services rendered by township treasurers. As said before, these sections are 3316 and 3318 G. C.

Therefore, it is my opinion that the township treasurer is entitled to two per cent. of all moneys belonging to the township treasury, which he receives, safely keeps and pays out upon the order of the township trustees. To be sure, it is evident, if he does not receive the money and does not pay the same out, he is not entitled to such compensation. It must be received by him and actually distributed by him in order to entitle him to the two per cent. as compensation.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LIQUOR LICENSE INSPECTORS—WHETHER OR NOT THEY ARE IN CLASSIFIED CIVIL SERVICE—QUESTION OF MIXED LAW AND FACT TO BE DETERMINED IN FIRST INSTANCE BY STATE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—SUBJECT TO REVIEW BY THE COURTS.

Whether or not the inspectors in the state liquor licensing department are in the classified civil service of the state is a question of mixed law and fact which, in the first instance, is to be determined by the state civil service commission, subject to review by the courts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 10, 1917.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication in which you make the following inquiry of this department:

> "The inspectors of this department are detectives of the department. Their work is in the highest degree confidential and requires that kind of ability which seems to be borne in some men and is entirely lacking in others. Best results are obtained with the greatest degree of secrecy of operation and on that account there should be as little publicity connected with the appointment and personnel of the inspectors as possible.
> "This department has demonstrated in an experience of over three years that good inspectors cannot be secured as a result of an examination. We have had men of ability and of sufficient qualifications to secure for them a percentage of 99.44 in an examination and yet were absolutely worthless in active work. On the other hand, some of the most successful inspectors we have used do not possess educational qualifications sufficient to pass an examination for janitor. If we are required to select these men as a result of a civil service examination, there is no way in which we can drop a man who is of no value to us except at the expense of much red tape and a final discharge for incompetency, whereas, although a man may be of no service in our particular work, yet he might be of great service to the state in some other position where his qualifications would be of value. In order to secure a proper force of good inspectors it should be possible for us to appoint them temporarily, trying them out in the particular work for which we require them and if they fail to be of benefit, no matter how well qualified they might be for other service, we should have the right to drop them when fairly tested and appoint others and in that way secure a proper working force of inspectors through whom this department can render and receive the greatest degree of efficiency and obtain the best results.
> "Under these circumstances we believe that the inspectors or detectives of this department should not come under the provisions of the civil service classification, and we therefore request your opinion as to whether or not the civil service classification may be dispensed with so far as concerns them."

The reasons set out in your communication why these positions should be held as unclassified should receive careful consideration at the hands of the civil service commission, and no doubt will be given due weight and influence by them.

The duties of these inspectors as set forth by you are very similar to those of deputy fire marshals of whom it is said by former Attorney-General Turner in volume II of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1915, page 1478, under date of August 7, 1915:

"That the position of assistant fire marshal is a confidential one abundantly appears. They are to make investigations which are to be secret. They are to co-operate with prosecuting attorneys and assist them in the preparation of the trial of criminal cases. Like every investigation which precedes an indictment, their investigations partake of the character of secret service. As the state fire marshal points out in his letter, incendiarism is one of the most difficult crimes to detect. It is difficult not only to determine who has committed the crime, but even to determine whether or not a crime has been committed. It is necessary, therefore, that the proceedings of the assistant fire marshals, as well as the deputy fire marshals, be surrounded by absolute secrecy. The information which they acquire is absolutely confidential, to be imparted only to their superior officer, the state fire marshal, or to the prosecuting attorney. It would be difficult to imagine a plainer instance of a confidential position than the one now under consideration.

"For the sake of clearness I may say that the fire marshal is correct in his contention that there is no practical distinction between the position of assistant fire marshal and deputy state fire marshal, except with respect to the first deputy. I should have to advise that 'deputy fire marshals' are not within the description of paragraph 8 of section 8 of the present civil service law (except as to the first deputy) any more than are the assistant fire marshals, but such deputy fire marshals are the incumbents of confidential positions, just as are the assistant fire marshals, and the civil service commission may determine whether it is practicable to ascertain the merit and fitness of applicants therefor by competitive examinations."

The above excerpt is from an opinion given to the civil service commission itself, and it will be observed that after stating by very necessary inference that such deputy fire marshals are in the unclassified service, the quotation above concludes by submitting to the commission the function of deciding whether they be so.

And there are opinions by both of the last two incumbents of this office as to positions that are in the unclassified service to the effect that even though they be so in the unclassified service as a matter of law, yet the decision is in the first instance for the civil service commission, subject to the supervision of the courts.

In an opinion from the Attorney-General on December 27, 1913, Reports of Attorney-General for 1913, page 722, it is held:

"A secret service officer appointed by the prosecuting attorney is not in the classified service under the civil service law."

In the opinion proper is found the following:

"Is it practicable to hold examinations for this position? The determination of this question is left, in the first instance to the civil service commission, subject to review by the courts, as is held in the opinion as to assistant city solicitors and assistant prosecuting attorneys."

An equivalent decision in the following administration was in an opinion given the civil service commission January 16, 1915, Vol. I of the Opinions of the Attorney-General, page 3, the syllabus of which is as follows:

"Whether it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of officers and employes by competitive examination is a question in the first instance for the civil service commission, but subject to review by the courts. In determining this practicability, the commission should look to the nature of the duties and the relation of the employes to the head of the offices as well and particularly to the nature of the duties of the office of the appointing power.

"The secretary to the governor, the stenographer to the governor, and all other employes in the governor's office, who from the nature of the service rendered, or by reason of their location in the governor's office, are in position to observe the transactions or obtain information relative to matters that may legally come before the governor, are not within the classified service for reason that, as a matter of law, it is impracticable to determine their merit and fitness by competitive examination."

The opinion begins as follows:

"The answer to your question rests solely upon the correct decision as to whether it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of officers and employes in the governor's office by competitive examination. This is a question in the first instance for your commission, but subject to review by the court.

"In determining this practicability you will look to the nature of the duties and the relation of the employes in his office to the governor, as well as, and particularly, to the nature and duties of the office of governor."

The whole opinion, which is very apropos and interesting, proceeds upon the same theory.

I cannot agree with the theory embodied in these quotations. If, as a matter of law, the positions are excluded from the classified sercice, then it follows as a matter as certain as demonstration can be of anything that the civil service commission can take but one course. You have then a vain thing, submission of a matter to a tribunal for decision that can only be decided one way. It would follow, with what appears to be equal certainty, that the appointing power, when it comes to make an appointment in the unclassified service, is like anyone else about to take any other action; that is to say, he must not violate the law; and every man in all the undertakings of life acts at his peril and takes the responsibility of deciding for himself whether his proposed conduct be lawful or unlawful, and otherwise could not act at all, which is getting back to first principles and is purely elemental and absolutely of the first essence of all law. It seems strange for instance that anybody should have had any question about the private secretary to the governor. The civil service commission is not a court. If it were it would be absolutely bound by its own decisions. The present or future commission may conclude that the governor's secretary should be in the classified service. At least they were close enough at one time to ask the question, Would the governor, therefore, be called upon to submit to them, in the first instance, whether he should select his man from their eligible list, or would he totally disregard their idle claims and proceed to make his own selection? The answer to the present question is that it should be submitted, in the first instance, to the civil service commission. This is distinctly upon the ground that it is not here found as a matter of law that the merit and fitness of these inspectors cannot be determined by competitive examinations.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF THE PLYMOUTH SPECIAL SCHOOL DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 13, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"RE:—Bond issue of Plymouth special school district in the sum of $35,000.00 for the purpose of enlarging, furnishing and equipping school buildings in said district."

I am herewith forwarding to you, without approval, transcript relating to the above bond issue.

The resolution providing for said issue of bonds was adopted by the board of education of said school district pursuant to a vote of the electors of said school district, a majority of whom voted in favor of the said bond issue, so it appears. The election at which the question of this bond issue was submitted was one authorized by the provisions of section 7625 General Code, but before the board was authorized to submit said question to a vote of the electors of the school district, it was required by the provisions of said section 7625 General Code to find affirmatively that the funds at its disposal or that could be raised by a bond issue by the board of education without a vote of the people under the provisions of section 7629 was not sufficient for the purpose. This finding, which should properly have been made in the resolution submitting the question to a vote of the electors, was jurisdictional to the right of the board to submit the question to a vote of the electors, and in as much as no finding was made by the board the election was unauthorized and the bond issue was likewise unauthorized.

In addition to the foregoing defect in the proceedings indicated by the transcript, which in itself is fatal to the validity of the bond issue, the transcript fails to show what, if any, notice was given by the clerk of the election; and moreover, fails to show that the result of the election was canvassed by the board of education, as required by the provisions of section 5120 General Code, which provides that in school elections the returns shall be made by the judges and clerks of each precinct to the clerk of the board of education of the district not less than five days after the election, and that the board of education of the district shall canvass such returns at a meeting to be held on the second Monday after the election, and that the result thereof shall be entered on the record of the board. The transcript shows that returns of this election were canvassed by the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of Richland county, and that a majority of the electors voting on the proposition of said bond issue voted in favor thereof. A board of education, however, is not authorized to issue bonds pursuant to an election held under the provisions of section 7625 General Code without itself canvassing the returns of the said election and certifying the result thereon on its record.

The resolution of the board of education following the election and providing for the issue of these bonds is defective in the following particulars:

1st. The interest said bonds are to bear is made payable annually instead of semi-annually as required by the provisions of section 7627 General Code, and

2nd. Said resolution does not contain any provision providing for an annual levy on all the taxable property of the district for the purpose of paying interest on said bonds and providing a sinking fund to pay the same at maturity, as required by the provisions of section 11, article XII of the state constitution.

The transcript on this bond issue is further defective in not setting out a large number of the items of information necessary in the consideration of bond issues of this kind, but in as much as the above mentioned defects in the proceedings relating to this bond issue in themselves require me to hold this issue of bonds to be invalid, other defects in the proceedings or in the transcript relating to the same need not be here specifically mentioned.

For the reasons above set forth I am of the opinion that said bond issue should be rejected, and I enclose the transcript herewith.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TREASURER OF STATE—HAS NO AUTHORITY TO FURNISH BOND TO CITY OF PORTLAND—TO INDEMNIFY SAID CITY AGAINST LOSS BY REASON OF LOSS OF INTEREST COUPONS BY PREDECESSOR IN OFFICE.

There is no authority of law for the treasurer of state to furnish a security bond for the purpose of indemnifying the city of Portland against any loss which said city might suffer by reason of its payment of interest on certain of its bonds, the interest coupons of which bonds, while on deposit with the state treasurer, under the state deposit law, were clipped and lost or destroyed by one of his predecessors in office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 13, 1917.

HON. CHESTER E. BRYAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 17, 1917, in which you state that your office is in receipt of communication relative to the loss of three hundred dollars' worth of coupons under former treasurer of state, R. W. Archer, which communication you refer to this department for advice as to what to do under the circumstances. With your letter are the following enclosures:

"(1) Affidavit of R. W. Archer, former treasurer of state, averring that certain coupons, numbered 373 to 392, both inclusive, had been clipped from certain bonds, to wit, bonds of the state of Oregon, county of Multnomat, city of St. Johns improvement bonds, by said state treasurer, who held said bonds for the City Savings Bank and Trust Company of the city of Alliance, Ohio, under the depository law, and that each of said coupons, while in the office of the treasurer of state, were by accident lost or destroyed and can not be found nor produced nor delivered to the owners. This affidavit was sworn to by said R. W. Archer on the 9th day of December, 1916.

"(2) Bond sought to be given by the City Savings Bank and Trust Company of Alliance, Ohio, to the city of Portland, which it seems is successor by merger to all the rights and obligations of the city of St. Johns, Oregon, for the purpose of indemnifying said city of Portland against any loss which it might sustain in paying the amount called for by said lost or destroyed coupons.

"(3) Copy of letter from the department of finance of the city of Portland, Oregon, under date of February 5, 1917, refusing to accept any bond of a corporation without the state, and not licensed to do business in the state of Oregon.

"(4) Copy of another letter from said department of finance under date of March 6, 1917, in which the city treasurer advises that the commissioner of finance insists that the City Savings Bank & Trust Company of Alliance furnish a surety bond, executed by a bonding company licensed to do business in the state of Ohio, and approved by him.

"(5) Letter from the City Savings Bank & Trust Company of Alliance, Ohio, under date of March 16, 1917, addressed to 'Mr. Chester E. Bryan, treasurer, state of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio,' calling attention to the various documents heretofore mentioned, relating to the $300.00 in coupons which were lost by his predecessor in office, and stating that Mr. Archer, the former treasurer, had advised said City Savings Bank & Trust Company that a bond would be furnished, if necessary, by his department, to cover the amount of the lost coupons. The bank asks the present treasurer to furnish a surety bond to the city of Oregon for the purposes of the indemnity required."

Without citing the various statutes on the matter of the duties of the treasurer of state, and particularly those statutes referring to the state board of deposit, which are found at sections 321 et seq. G. C. I will state that from a complete examination of all the statutes that might possibly bear on the question submitted, I am unable to find any provision which authorizes you to furnish the bond requested. Neither is there any provision of law for your furnishing a bond indemnifying a person who has suffered from loss owing to some action of one of your predecessors in office. Neither is there any fund out of which you could pay for such or similar bond.

Therefore, it is my opinion that there is no duty or liability on your part, and that you have no authority to comply with the request of the City Savings Bank & Trust Company of Alliance, Ohio, to furnish a bond for the purpose of indemnifying the city of Portland against any loss resulting from injury suffered by loss or destruction of certain interest coupons clipped from bonds on deposit with the treasurer of state under the depository act by your predecessor in office.

I am returning to you all the papers submitted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEES—ALLOWED SHERIFF FOR TRANSPORTATION OF PRISONERS —NOT COSTS IN CASE—MUST BE PAID BY COUNTY REGARDLESS OF SOLVENCY OF DEFENDANT—MUST BE PAID BY SHERIFF INTO FEE FUND.

Cost of transportation of prisoners to the workhouse under section 12385 General Code is not a part of the costs of the case. In state cases these costs are paid out of the county, treasury, and when allowed the sheriff they stand upon the same basis as other fees earned by him in his official capacity, and must be paid into the sheriff's fee fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 13, 1917.

HON. GEORGE C. VONBESELER, Prosecuting Attorney, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 5, 1917, as follows:

"Are the fees of the sheriff, or other officer, transporting a person to the workhouse, a part of the costs in the case? May the allowance to the sheriff in addition to his salary as provided for in section 2846 be made up in part of his fees under section 12385, as well as fees in criminal matters, provided for under section 2846, provided these fees are for services in misdemeanors upon conviction where the defendant proves insolvent, or must his fees under the provisions of section 2846 be limited only to the costs in the case created up to the time of his leaving for the workhouse?

"Sometimes section 2846 has been called the 'lost cost section.' It seems to us that if that designation is correct at all, it should be the 'lost fee section.' We cannot see why the fees under section 12385 are not a part of the sheriff's legal fees as well as those created in a criminal case prior to the time of conviction.

"Our question then finally is whether the sheriff may retain his fees under section 12385 in misdemeanors, where the defendant proves insolvent, as a part of his legal fees in addition to his salary under the provisions of section 2846, allowed by the county commissioners upon the certificate of the clerk."

Section 12385 G. C. reads:

"The sheriff, or other officer, transporting a person to such workhouse shall have the following fees therefor; six cents per mile for himself, going and returning, and five cents per mile for transporting each convict, and five cents per mile going and coming for the services of each guard, to be allowed as in penitentiary cases, the number of miles to be computed by the usual routes of travel, to be paid in state cases out of the general revenue fund of the county on the allowance of the county commissioners, and, in cases for the violation of the ordinances of a municipality on the order of the council thereof."

Section 2846 G. C. reads:

"Upon the certificate of the clerk and the allowance of the county commissioners the sheriff shall receive from the county treasury in addition to his salary his legal fees for services in criminal case wherein the state fails to convict and in misdemeanors upon conviction where the defendant proves insolvent, but not more than three hundred dollars shall be allowed for the services rendered in any one year of his term. The fees of the sheriff in cases of lunacy, epilepsy, feeble-minded, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, school for blind, school for deaf, and for serving subpoenas for grand jury witnesses, and summoning jurors, except in appropriation cases, shall be paid out of the county treasury upon certificate of the proper officer of the court in which the services were rendered."

It is clear that section 2846 G. C. refers only to such fees in criminal cases as may be included in the cost bill. This is evident from the provision that the county commissioners may allow such fees "in misdemeanors upon conviction where the defendant proves insolvent," for the clear inference is that if the defendant does not prove insolvent he is to pay these fees himself, and since he could not be made to pay any fees in the case not included in the costs, the statute must refer only to those fees included in the costs. Otherwise the phrase "where the defendant proves insolvent" would be meaningless.

The next question is, can the fees allowed the sheriff under section 12385 G. C. be included in the costs and can they therefore be allowed the sheriff by the commissioners when the defendant proves insolvent under section 2846?

In Encyc. on Pleading and Practice, Vol. 8, page 979, it is said:

"Costs to be taxed and included in a judgment in a criminal proceeding consists of those items incurred in the prosecution for services rendered therein, which are made taxable by law, as distinguished from general expenditures necessary to the administration of criminal law, and fixed as definite public charges."

In the case of State ex rel. v. Commissioners, 6 Ohio Dec. page 240, it was held:

"The word 'cost' is of frequent occurrence in the statutes of Ohio but is not synonymous with 'expense.' Expense is costs when made so by statute.

"The word 'costs' has a legal signification. It includes only those expenditures which are by law taxable and to be included in the judgment, and which denotes the expense which a person is entitled to recover by reason of him being a party to legal proceedings.

"Jury fees are not costs, and shall not be taxed as part of the costs in any legal proceeding, civil or criminal."

The same view is taken by the court in the case of State ex rel. v. Gilbert, 77 O. S. 333.

I can find no Ohio statute providing that fees of the sheriff, for transporting prisoners to the work house under section 12385, should be taxed as costs and therefore under authority of the above case they are not to be included in the cost bill. This being so, section 2846 General Code has no reference to it.

This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that section 12385 General Code makes the sheriff's fees, in transporting prisoners in state cases, a charge upon the county fund.

It is therefore my opinion that the fees allowed the sheriff for transporting prisoners under section 12385 of the General Code are no part of the costs in the case and must be paid, regardless of the question of the defendants' solvency in said case, by the county and that when these fees are allowed the sheriff they stand upon the same basis as other fees earned by him in his official capacity and must be paid into the sheriff's fee fund.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 13, 1917.

HON. CHARLES M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of March 21, 1917, as follows:

"I would like to have your instructions as to the provisions of section 3004 of the General Code of Ohio.

"1. This section provides that 'upon the order of the prosecuting attorney the county auditor shall draw his warrant, etc., but further on provides that the prosecuting attorney shall give bond in a sum not less than his official salary to be fixed by the court of common pleas or probate court. Do I understand that it is necessary to make a formal application to one of these courts to fix the bond?

"2. I take it that it is not necessary to make an application to the court to fix the amount to be drawn by the prosecuting attorney under this section, as said amount is fixed, being an amount equal to one-half of the official salary.

"3. This section further provides that this allowance is made to provide for expenses which may be incurred in the performance of official duties and in the furtherance of justice. Would you kindly indicate what of the following expenses are legitimate expenses under this section?

"(a) If the county commissioners fail to provide a suitable office for the prosecuting attorney, can he rent an office and

"(b) If the prosecuting attorney needs an assistant to assist him in investigating matters appertaining to the business of the county, can he pay such assistant out of the funds provided by this section?

"(c) Under this section is he permitted to pay all legitimate expenses such as railroad fare, automobile hire, the services of a detective if necessary in looking up evidence, or in attending to the business of the county, or in the prosecution of criminal cases?

"(d) You will note that section 2914 of the General Code provides the judge of the court of common pleas to fix an aggregate sum to be expended for the compensation of assistants, clerks and stenographers. In the event this has not been done, can such assistants be paid out of the funds provided by 3004?

"(e) Also note section 2915-1 G. C. Is this section exclusive or would the compensation of a detective be a proper expense under section 3004? This section provides that the compensation of a secret service officer shall be so much per year, payable monthly. In the small counties it is not desirable to appoint such officer for more than a few days at a time, hence it would seem to be a better plan if it were in the power of the prosecuting attorney to pay him for the services performed, and I am therefore asking if same can be done under section 3004."

Section 3004 General Code reads:

"There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney in addition to his salary and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary, to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for. Upon the order of the prosecuting attorney the county auditor shall draw his warrant on the county treasurer payable to the prosecuting attorney or such other person as the order designates, for such amount as the order requires, not exceeding the amount provided for herein, and to be paid out of the general fund of the county.

"Provided that nothing shall be paid under this section until the prosecuting attorney shall have given bond to the state in a sum not less than his official salary to be fixed by the court of common pleas or probate court with sureties to be approved by either of said courts, conditioned that he will faithfully discharge all the duties enjoined upon him, by law, and pay over, according to law, all moneys by him, received in his official capacity. Such bond with the approval of such court of the amount thereof and sureties thereon and his oath of office inclosed therein shall be deposited with the county treasurer.

"The prosecuting attorney shall annually before the first Monday of January, file with the county auditor an itemized statement, duly verified by him, as to the manner in which fund has been expended during the current year, and shall if any part of such fund remains in his hands unexpended, forthwith pay the same into the county treasury. Provided, that as to the year 1911, such fund shall be proportioned to the part of the year remaining after this act shall have become a law."

(1) Inasmuch as it is the duty of the probate or common pleas court to fix the amount of the bond to be given by the prosecuting attorney under section 3004, which shall be a sum not less than his official salary, and since nothing can be paid under this section until the bond is furnished, it would seem necessary for the prosecuting attorney to call the attention of the probate or common pleas court to the necessity for such bond and make application to such court to fix the amount of the same.

(2) I agree with your opinion that the amount to be allowed the prosecuting attorney under section 3004 of the General Code is fixed by law, viz., "an amount equal to one-half the official salary," and the court is without authority to change that amount. Therefore, of course, it is not necessary to make an application to the court to fix the amount to be drawn by the prosecuting attorney under this section.

(3) (a) Section 2419 G. C. provides as follows:

> "A court house, jail, offices for county officers, and an infirmary, shall be provided by the commissioners when, in their judgment, they, or any of them, are needed. Such buildings and offices shall be of such style, dimensions and expense, as the commissioners determine. They shall provide all rooms, fire and burglar proof vaults and safes, and other means of security in the office of the county treasurer, necessary for the protection of public moneys and property therein."

Under this section it is the duty of the county commissioners to furnish an office "of such style, dimensions and expense, as the commissioners determine" for the prosecuting attorney, and there being, therefore, express and ample provision for this expense, I am of the opinion that the same may not be paid under section 3004 G. C.

(b) Your question 3(b) is not quite clear to me. If you mean by "an assistant to assist him in investigating matters" an assistant attorney, this question is answered by the answer to your question 3(d). If you mean an assistant who acts in the nature of a detective or secret service official, this is answered by the answer to your question 3(e).

(c) I know of no express provision of law allowing the prosecuting attorney railroad fare, automobile hire and such expenses incurred in the discharge of his duties, and I am of the opinion that inasmuch as they are "incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice" and are "not otherwise provided for," they may be paid by the prosecuting attorney under section 3004 G. C.

(d) Section 2914 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "On or before the first Monday in January of each year in each county, the judge of the court of common pleas, or if there be more than one judge, the judges of such court in joint session, may fix an aggregate sum to be expended for the incoming year, for the compensation of assistants, clerks and stenographers of the prosecuting attorney's office."

Section 2915 G. C. reads:

> "The prosecuting attorney may appoint such assistants, clerks and stenographers as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, and fix their compensation, not to exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed by the judge or judges of the court of common pleas. Such compensation after being so fixed shall be paid to such assistants, clerks and stenographers monthly from the general fund of the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

In an opinion rendered August 26, 1914, found on page 1160 of the Attorney-General's reports for that year, former Attorney-General Hogan held:

> "Sections 2914 and 2915 G. C. provide for the appointment by the prosecuting attorney for such assistants as he deems necessary for the proper performance of his duties, and for a fund out of which such assistants are to be compensated.
> "Where it is necessary for some other attorney to perform duties connected with the prosecuting attorney's office, such assistants should be provided and paid under sections 2914 and 2915; the fund provided by section 3004, General Code, cannot be used for this purpose."

Attorney-General Hogan said:

"A reading of these sections (sections 2914 and 2915) will show that it is not necessary that the assistant devote all his time to county work and that any situation that may arise can be met under these sections.

"Section 3004 provides for expenditures 'not otherwise provided for.' As I have just stated that the situation you mention (employment of an attorney to assist the prosecutor) is provided for by sections 2914 and 2915, I do not believe that the fund mentioned in section 3004 can be expended for such services."

This same ruling was made in an opinion rendered under date of January 22, 1916, by former attorney-general Turner, and found on page 118 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, in which he held:

"Prosecuting attorneys may not use moneys drawn under section 3004 G. C. to pay assistants, clerks or stenographers who are appointed under and by virtue of section 2915 G. C."

I agree with the opinions of my predecessors and am therefore of the opinion, in answer to your question, that assistants, clerks and stenographers for prosecuting attorneys cannot be paid out of the funds provided by section 3004 of the General Code.

"(e) Section 2915-1 General Code reads:

"The prosecuting attorney may appoint a secret service officer whose duty it shall be to aid him in the collection and discovery of evidence to be used in the trial of criminal cases and matters of a criminal nature. Such appointment shall be made for such term as the prosecuting attorney may deem advisable, and subject to termination at any time, by such prosecuting attorney. The compensation of said officer shall be fixed by the judge of the court of common pleas of the county in which the appointment is made, or if there be more than one judge, by the judges of such court in such county in joint session, and shall not be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month for the time actually occupied in such service nor more than one-half of the official salary of the prosecuting attorney for a year, payable monthly, out of the county fund, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

Section 2915-1 G. C., above quoted, makes provision for the appointment of a secret service officer to be regularly employed, as such. I note from your question that what you desire is to appoint a secret service officer for "a few days at a time." There is no provision in law for the appointment of such a secret service officer and the appointment of such a temporary officer being clearly "in the furtherance of justice," it is my opinion that you may appoint a secret service officer temporarily to serve for a few days at a time and pay him out of the fund allowed you under section 3004 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICTS—REDISTRICTING THEREOF UPON APPLICATION OF THREE-FOURTHS OF RESIDENTS OF VILLAGE AND RURAL DISTRICT BOARDS—TERMINATES CONTRACTS OF DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENTS EXTENDING BEYOND SCHOOL YEAR—SUPERVISION DISTRICT CANNOT BE CREATED WITH FEWER THAN THIRTY TEACHERS—REDISTRICTING OF COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICT TAKES EFFECT FIRST MONDAY IN SEPTEMBER FOLLOWING REDISTRICTING.

Redistricting of the county school district into supervision districts upon the application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards has the effect of terminating contracts of district superintendents which extend beyond the school year. Such district superintendents have no vested rights in such contracts which will defeat redistricting legislation.

No supervision district can be created with fewer than thirty teachers, but the county superintendent may be compelled to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers which shall supersede the necessity of district supervision of those schools.

Redistricting of the county school district takes effect September first following such redistricting act, and affects the term of employment of a district superintendent only if in conflict therewith.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 14, 1917.

HON. CHARLES M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your inquiry of April 6, 1917, my opinion is requested on the following statement of facts:

> "Our county school board divided Pike county into three supervision districts, and the presidents of the boards of education within each district elected a district superintendent for each district for the term of one year. Prior to the expiration of the first year, two of these district superintendents were re-elected for a term of three years, and have now served two of the said three-year terms.
> "Now, three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county have made application to the county board to redistrict the county and it seems to be the general desire that there should be one supervision district. Under section 4738 the county board shall redistrict the county. The following questions arise:
> "1. Two of the three district superintendents having been employed for a term of three years, and only having served two years thereof, if the county is made a single supervision district, does that terminate the employment of the two district superintendents who were employed for three years? There was no written contract, but the president of the boards of education met and by a vote employed the district superintendents and gave notice of such employment to the county superintendent.
> "2. If the county is redistricted so that the districts of these two district superintendents should have less than thirty teachers in each, then under section 4738 is such district done away with? And would that fact terminate the employment of the district superintendents who were employed for three years?
> "3. Suppose the county board of education, upon the application aforesaid, should make Pike county one supervision district (there now being three), will the redistricting not take effect until the expiration of the present employment of these district superintendents? Or will the term of the aforesaid district superintendents be discontinued when their districts are abolished?"

General Code section 4738 provides as follows:

> "The county board of education shall divide the county school district, any year, to take effect the first day of the following September, into supervision districts, each to contain one or more village or rural school districts. The territory of such supervision districts shall be contiguous and compact. In the formation of the supervision districts consideration shall be given to the number of teachers employed, the amount of consolidation and centralization, the condition of the roads and general topography. The territory in the different districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable and the number of teachers employed in any one supervision district shall not be less than thirty. The county board of education shall, upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county, redistrict the county into supervision districts. The county board of education may at their discretion require the county superintendent to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers of the village or rural schools of the county. This shall supersede the necessity of the district supervision of these schools."

General Code section 4739 provides for the election of district superintendents. General Code section 4741 provides for the term of such district superintendents and General Code section 4742 provides for the re-election of district superintendents. In your inquiry you state that your county school district was divided under section 4738 G. C. into three supervision districts and three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural districts boards of education of the county have made application to the county board of education under and by authority of the provisions of section 4738 to have said county school district redistricted. This, under the terms of the above quoted section, said boards of education had a right to do and there is no escape therefrom by the county board of education provided said application is made in good faith.

In opinion No. 49, dated March 9, 1917, this department held that the language of that part of section 4738 which says the county board of education shall divide and that part which provides that the number of teachers employed shall not be less than thirty, is mandatory, so that when three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards petition the county board to redistrict, the county board must accordingly act.

But you further state that in two of said supervision districts the district superintendent has been hired for a term which extends beyond the school year, that is, beyond August 31, 1917. In the same opinion referred to above this department held that district superintendents of such districts have no vested right in their contracts for more than one year, which would defeat any such redistricting legislation, and that they cannot hold over. I am enclosing you herewith a copy of said opinion.

Answering your first question, then, I advise you that the redistricting has the effect to terminate said contracts at the end of the school year.

In answer to your second question, I advise you that if the county school district is redistricted so that the number of teachers in any district is less then thirty, then under section 4738 such district is not entitled to a district superintendent, for section 4738 provides that no district shall have less than thirty teachers. Said section, however, provides that the county superintendent may be required to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers which shall supersede the necessity of the district supervision of those schools and under the reasoning in answer to your first question the employment of the district superintendent who has served only two years of the three would be terminated.

In answer to your third question, if the county board of education should make only one district instead of the three which now exist, such redistricting shall take effect the first day of September following the redistricting act.

The latter part of said third question is answered in my answer to your first question.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—IN DISSOLVED SCHOOL DISTRICT—MAY COLLECT MONEY DUE FOR TUITION AND PAY DEBTS.

When a school district is dissolved under provisions of section 4682-1 G. C., the board of education of such district may collect money due said district for tuition and pay or arrange to pay the debts thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 14, 1917.

HON. S. W. ENNIS, Prosecuting Attorney, Paulding, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of March 3, 1917, you request my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "In August of 1916 the Grover Hill village school district of Paulding county, Ohio, legally dissolved in accordance with the provision of section 4682-1 of the General Code of Ohio, and became a part of Latty township rural school district.
> "At the time of said dissolution there was owing by said rural school district to said village school district the sum of about $600.00 for tuition, which was then unpaid.
> "The village board of education had debts and obligations owing by it in excess of said amount and no money in the treasury of said village district to meet the same. Can the village school district under such circumstances collect this money from the rural district of which it has become a part?"

General Code section 4682-1 provides:

> "A village school district containing a population of less than fifteen hundred may vote at any general or special election to dissolve and join any contiguous rural district. After approval by the county board such proposition shall be submitted to the electors by the village board of education on the petition of one-fourth of the electors of such village school district or the village board may submit the proposition on its own motion and the result shall be determined by a majority vote of such electors."

When such district, then, has voted to dissolve, that is, when the proposition submitted by authority of the above mentioned section carries by a majority vote of the electors therein, it is necessary for the business of the district to be finished or closed up. Disposition of the property of such school district is provided for by General Code section 4683 as follows:

> "When a village school district is dissolved, the territory formerly constituting such village district shall become a part of the contiguous rural district which it votes to join in accordance with section 4682-1, and all school property shall pass to and become vested in the board of education of such rural school district."

While the above section provides what shall become of the property, it does not provide the method of disposing of the indebtedness, but section 4689 G. C. provides:

> "The provisions of law relating to the power to settle claims, dispose of property or levy and collect taxes to pay existing obligations of a village that has surrendered its corporate powers, shall also apply to such village school district and the board of education thereof."

It is unnecessary, then, to look to the provisions of law which authorize the officers of villages which surrender their charters to settle the claims against such villages and pay the existing obligations.

General Code section 3514 provides:

> "Such surrender of corporate powers shall not affect vested rights or accrued liabilities of such village, or the power to settle claims, dispose of property, or levy and collect taxes to pay existing obligations, but after the presentation of such petition, council shall not create any new liability until the result of the election is declared, nor thereafter, if such result is in favor of the surrender of corporate powers. Due and unpaid taxes may thereafter be collected, and all moneys or property remaining after such surrender shall belong to the school district embracing such village."

Applying the provisions of the above section to a school district, it is ascertained that no such surrender of the corporate powers of the school board shall affect vested rights or accrued liabilities of such school board and that the school board has power to settle claims, dispose of property or levy and collect taxes to pay existing obligations, keeping in mind, however, that after the presentation of the petition provided for in section 4682-1 the school board shall not create any new liability until the result of the election is declared, nor thereafter if said election carries. In your case the indebtedness of the district, then, must be provided for by your board of education before the dissolution is complete, and in order to pay said indebtedness it is necessary for the board to collect whatever money there is due to said village school district. Among the amounts due is the amount of six hundred dollars, due from the rural school district for tuition and it is proper for your school board to collect said $600.00 and apply same on the indebtedness of the district. In case sufficient funds cannot be raised other than by levy, it is perfectly proper for your board, even since said vote was taken to dissolve, to levy and collect whatever taxes are necessary in order that the existing indebtedness shall be paid.

There is one thing for your board to keep in mind. You have no right to create any new obligations.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that the Grover Hill village school district may collect from the Latty township rural school district said sum of $600.00 for tuition and apply same on the indebtedness of said Grover Hill village district.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

After a certain form has been used for a number of years and the public, as well as the department become accustomed to the same, I am not in favor of making changes in the same unless said changes are very important.

I have looked over said contract and bond very carefully and in the main have no suggestions to make in reference to the same.

However, this contract and bond is drawn in reference to a line of conduct which the department has followed for quite a long time, which line of conduct I do not feel is exactly in accordance with statutory provisions. Your department has adopted the rule that when a bidder sends in his bid he must at the same time send in a contract duly signed upon his part and dated as of the same day as the bids are to be opened. Also a bond must accompany the contract. Then after the bids are opened and your department ascertains who is the lowest and best bidder, you sign the contract for the state and return the same to the successful bidder, and the proposed contracts and bonds of the unsuccessful bidders are also returned to them. This is not in exact conformity to law. The provisions of the statutes seem to infer the following course:

First: Advertisement;

Second: The reception of bids;

Third: The opening of bids and the selection of the lowest and best bidder;

Fourth: Notifying the successful bidder;

Fifth: A filing of a bond by the successful bidder and the entering into a contract.

I am aware that this course is a little more uncertain than the course you follow, and would take a little more time, and I might say that I am not sure either that any harm can come to the state through the course your department has adopted. The only difficulty is this; the statutes provide that you can not enter into a contract until you have received the final resolutions from the county commissioners in which they agree to assume their part of the cost and expense of the improvement. (Section 1218 G. C.)

These final resolutions can not be entered into until the auditor of the county files a certificate that the moneys necessary to carry out the resolutions are in the treasury or are in process of collection. Now supposing the contract is dated as of the date upon which the bids are opened, and you do not get the final resolutions of the county commissioners and the certificate of the auditor until some time thereafter, and then your department, after receiving the final resolutions and the certificate signs the contract.

Now the question is when is this contract entered into. Is it the date upon which it is dated or the date upon which your department signs it. If the court should construe the date of the contract to be the date on which it is dated, then your department would be entering into a contract before you received the final resolutions, which would be contrary to the provisions of section 1218 G. C. But if the court should construe the execution of the contract to be as of the date your department signs it, then everything would be regular because the contract would be executed after the receiving of the final resolutions and certificate.

Other than this question I see no objection whatever to the form of your bond and contract, and I am offering this more in the way of suggestion than advice.

If you desire to proceed as you have been you cannot better the form of the bond or the contract. If you desire to proceed strictly according to the provisions of the statute you would be compelled to modify the form of the bond to a slight extent.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN ADAMS AND CLINTON COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 14, 1917.

State Highway Department, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of April 7, 1917, in which you ask my approval of certain final resolutions therein set out, as follows:

> "Adams county—Section 'C,' West Union-Sinking Springs road. Pet. No. 2009-T, I. C. H. No. 124.
> "Clinton county—Section 'g,' Cincinnati-Chillicothe road, Pet. No. 2189-T, I. C. H. No. 8."

I have examined these final resolutions entered into by the township trustees and find them regular in form and legal.

I might suggest that in the resolution signed by the trustees of Meigs township, Adams county, the certificate signed by the township clerk does not contain the name of the township in the body of said certificate, but I do not feel that this is at all vital and do not consider that any action thereon is necessary unless you care to return it to the clerk for this insertion. Otherwise the resolutions are regular in form as well as legal.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MEMBER OF BOARD OF EDUCATION—IN TERRITORY WHICH WAS TRANSFERRED FROM ONE RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT TO ANOTHER —PRIOR TO TAKING EFFECT OF SECTION 4692 G. C.—HOLDS OFFICE TO END OF TERM FOR WHICH HE WAS ELECTED.

Where territory, in which a member of a board of education lives, was transferred from one rural school district to another, prior to the taking effect of General Code section 4692, as now amended, such member will, under the decision of Thompson ex rel. v. Clemens, 92 O. S. 284, hold said office to the end of the term to which he was elected as a member of such board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 14, 1917.

HON. HARRY M. RANKIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Washington C. H., Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your communication in which you ask my opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "Mr. Horace Wilson, in November, 1913, was elected a member of the board of education in what was known as Oswald school district in Marion township, Fayette county, Ohio, and qualified for said office and entered upon his duties on January 1, 1914. He was elected for a term of four years, which term would expire on December 31, 1917, unless his term was sooner terminated by the facts herein stated.
> "On October 15, 1914, the county board of education passed a resolution transferring the territory in what was known as Oswald school district in Marion township to the Bloomingburg school district. It was provided in said resolution that the transfer should take effect and be in force on and after June 1, 1915.
> "The question arises whether or not Mr. Wilson is still a member of the board to which he was elected."

When Mr. Wilson, your board member, was elected in 1913, the General Code providing for the length of the term of a member of a board of education read as follows:

> "Section 4745. The terms of office of members of each board of education shall begin on the first Monday in January after their election, and each such officer shall hold his office four years and until his successor is elected and qualified."

and the term of Mr. Wilson would, therefore, expire, according to law, on the 31st day of December, 1917.

In 1914 the school laws were amended and codified and among the new sections which were at that time added was one which affected all officers and members of boards of education, and reads as follows:

> "Section 4735. The present existing township and special school districts shall constitute rural school districts until changed by the county board of education, and all officers and members of boards of education of such existing districts shall continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and powers until their terms expire and until their successors are elected and qualified."

Construction was given by our supreme court to said section in the case of Thompson ex rel v. Clemens, 92 O. S., 284, and in a matter very similar to the case under consideration here and which last mentioned case arose in Fayette county. The following language is used by the court in said decision on page 286:

> "It was undoubtedly the purpose of the general assembly by the adoption of this section, in order to continue the existing school machinery, to provide that all members of the boards of education then in office should continue until the expiration of their terms and until the election and qualification of their successors. It means exactly what it says and Clemens, being a member of the board of education of Jasper township at the time when the law took effect, was entitled to hold the same until the expiration of his term."

The above case was decided June 4, 1915, and seven days after General Code section 4692 was amended to read in part as follows:

> "The county board of education may transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining district * * * of the county school district. * * * if a member of the board of education lives in a part of a school district transferred the member becomes a non-resident of the school district from which he was transferred and ceases to be a member of such board of education. * * *"

The language of the above part section 4692 is plainly in contradiction to the language of section 4735, but section 4692, as amended on May 27, 1915, did not take effect until August 25, 1915, and the transfer of the territory in which Mr. Wilson lived became effective June 1, 1915, so that in order for section 4692 to apply to his case it must necessarily be given a retrospective effect. This, I am of the opinion, should not occur. Both sections 4692 and 4735 can be given effect. Section 4735 shall apply to all members of boards of education where the district lines remain unchanged or which district lines were changed before section 4692 became effective, and section 4692 shall apply to only those districts where the boundary lines have been changed since section 4692 became effective.

Answering your question, then, I advise you that, following the decision of Thompson v. State ex rel. Clemens, Mr. Wilson will serve as a member of said school board until the end of his term, to wit: December 31, 1917.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

THE STATE CANNOT PAY MORE THAN FIFTY PER CENT OF THE COST OF CONSTRUCTION, ETC., OF INTER-COUNTY HIGHWAYS—IN CASE OF TWO OR MORE IMPROVEMENTS STATE NOT AUTHORIZED TO PAY MORE THAN FIFTY PER CENT OF ONE ALTHOUGH THE TOTAL DOES NOT AVERAGE MORE THAN FIFTY PER CENT.

In the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of inter-county highways, the state, under the provisions of section 1213 G. C., cannot pay more than fifty per cent of the cost and expense of one improvement, even though the amount expended by the state on the other improvement, or improvements, is enough less than the half of the cost and expense thereof, to reduce the total amount expended in the county to fifty per cent of the cost and expense of all the improvements.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 16, 1917.

State Highway Department, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of April 9th, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to a certain matter set out therein.

Your communication reads as follows:

"I respectfully direct your attention to the following portion of section 1213 G. C., 105-106 O. L. page 637, which reads as follows:

" 'Whenever there are one or more improvements to be made in a county and the cost and expense thereof does not exceed twice the amount apportioned by the state to a county, then the state shall pay fifty per cent of such cost and expense.'

"I respectfully request an opinion from you as follows:

"When a county wishes to co-operate against inter-county highway funds on two separate contracts, may the state pay more than one-half the cost of one and less than one-half the cost of the other if the total of the two falls within the amount of inter-county money allotted to that county for one year?"

The section from which you quote reads in full as follows:

"Whenever there are one or more improvements to be made in a county, and the cost and expense thereof does not exceed twice the amount apportioned by the state to a county, then the state shall pay fifty per cent of such cost and expense.

"Whenever there are one or more improvements to be made in a county, and the cost and expense thereof exceeds twice the amount apportioned by the state to a county, then the state shall pay such proportion of the cost of said improvement or improvements as may be agreed upon by the state highway commissioner and the county commissioners or township trustees."

The first part of this section provides that whenever the cost and expense of the improvement to be made in a county, whether it be one or more than one, does not exceed twice the amount apportioned by the state to a county, then the state shall pay fifty per cent. of such cost and expense.

The second part of said section provides that when the cost and expense of the improvement made in a county, whether it be one improvement or more than one, exceeds twice the amount apportioned by the state to a county, then the state shall pay such proportion of the cost of such improvement or improvements, as may be agreed upon by the state highway commissioner and the county commissioners or township trustees.

Now your question is as to whether in the event that there are two improvements made in a county the state could pay more than fifty per cent. of the cost and expense of one improvement provided it would pay enough less than fifty per cent. of the cost and expense of the other improvement, so as to bring the amount paid by the state upon both improvements within the amount apportioned by the state to the county.

In order to answer this question we will have to look further than merely to section 1213 G. C. In studying the provisions of this chapter (G. C. 1178 to 1231-3) it seems to have been the policy of the legislature to limit the state to fifty per cent. of the cost and expense of any one improvement, that is, while the state may by agreement pay less than fifty per cent. of the cost and expense of an improvement, yet they cannot pay more than fifty per cent.

Section 1214 G. C., which immediately follows upon section 1213 G. C., provides:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the county shall pay twenty-five per cent. of all cost and expense of the improvement. Fifteen per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement * * * shall be apportioned to the township or townships in which such road is located. Ten per cent. of the cost and expense of improvement, * * * shall be a charge upon the property abutting on the improvement."

From this section it is evident that it was the intention of the legislature that the state should bear but fifty per cent. of the cost and expense of any improvements. It is provided in other sections of the statute that the county and township may pay more or less than the amount set out in this section; but nowhere in the statutes can I find a provision that would seem to indicate that the state is to pay more than fifty per cent., with two exceptions which I shall note later on.

Section 1194 G. C. provides:

> "The county commissioners or township trustees may expend any amount available by law for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of inter-county highways or main market roads within the county, providing the county commissioners or township trustees by resolution agree to pay the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount received from the state, and the amount assessed against abutting property owners, and the amount so contributed by the county or township shall be expended in the same manner as state aid money."

From the provisions of this section it is seen that the county commissioners or township trustees may expend any amount that they may have on hand which is available under the law for the improvement, provided they enter into an agreement to pay all over and above the amount received from the state; but there is no provision herein that the state shall pay more than one-half of the cost and expense.

Section 1197 reads in part as follows:

> "The cost of the construction or improvement of such bridge or culvert shall be apportioned equally between the state and county unless the county has by resolution agreed to pay more than one-half of the cost of said improvement."

Thus indicating that the county may pay more than one half of the cost of said improvement, but there is no indication whatever that the state may pay more than one-half of the improvement.

Section 1207 G. C. provides that the county commissioners of a county may relieve the township or townships of any part their apportionment up to the entire cost and expense of such improvement without any assessment or charge whatever upon the township or townships. It further provides that the township trustees may by resolution assume any part or all of the cost and expense of such highway improvement which would otherwise have been paid by the county, but there is no indication whatever in these provisions that the state may assume any part of the amount which the county and township is to pay under the provisions of section 1214, G. C.

From all this it seems to have been the intention of the legislature that the state in any improvement shall pay no more than one-half of the cost and expense thereof.

There are a few exceptions to this, but I do not believe they modify the general rule in its application to the proposition submitted by you.

Section 1191 G. C. provides that the state may, if neither the county nor any township in the county makes application for state aid, pay the full cost and expense of an improvement less the ten per cent. to be assessed against the abutting property owners, and section 1217 G. C. provides that

> "Where the application for said improvement is made by the township trustees, the state may assume all or any part of the county's proportion of the cost of said improvement."

It might be inferred from this reading that the state may assume, in addition to one-half of the cost and expense, also the cost and expense which would otherwise be borne by the county under the provisions of section 1214 G. C., but as I said, neither of these sections would modify the general rule in its application to the question asked by you.

Hence, answering your question specifically, I am of the opinion that the state can not pay more than fifty per cent. of the cost and expense of any improvement made within a county, and therefore the state could not pay more than fifty per cent. in one improvement and less than fifty per cent. in another, even though the sum of the two would not exceed the amount apportioned by the state to any county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE BOARD OF HEALTH—WHEN WATER SUPPLY OF VILLAGE IS FOUND TO BE IMPURE—AND NOT PRACTICAL TO REMOVE SOURCE OF POLLUTION—MAY ORDER INSTALLATION OF PURIFICATION PLANT—WHETHER OR NOT REVENUES WILL COMPENSATE COMPANY NOT TO BE TAKEN INTO CONSIDERATION IN DETERMINING WHETHER OR NOT SAID ORDER IS REASONABLE.

Where the state board of health has found the public water supply of a village impure and dangerous to health and that it is not practicable to sufficiently improve the character of such supply by removing the sources of pollution affecting it, and such board has ordered the installation of a purification plant to remedy the situation, the fact that the revenue received by the water company may be insufficient to compensate the company for the expense of this improvement may not be taken into consideration in determining whether or not the order of the board of health is a reasonable one under section 1257, when it does not appear that any less expensive remedy can be had to relieve the situation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 16, 1917.

The State Board of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of March 3, 1917, as follows:

"Under date of August 20, 1914, the state board of health adopted the following order, addressed to the City Water Works Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., owning and operating the water works at Sebring, Ohio:

" 'BE IT ORDERED by the state board of health of Ohio, that the City Water Works Company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., owning and operating the water works at Sebring, Ohio, shall install and have in operation prior to January 1, 1916, a water purification plant of a design satisfactory to the state board of health to purify the public water supply of Sebring.'

"This order was duly signed by the governor and attorney-general and forwarded to the City Water Works Company. Under date of February 25, 1916, the state board of health was notified by the attorney for this company that the order was protested and that J. M. Chester, of Pittsburgh, Pa., had been named as the referee in behalf of the water works company. Pursuant to action by the state board of health, Philip Burgess, of Columbus, Ohio, was named as referee in behalf of the state board of health. The conditions of the order are still under consideration by these referees.

"Under date of January 22, 1917, and again under date of March 1, 1917, the state board of health was notified by its referee that a matter of difference existed as to the interpretation of the phrase: 'The necessity and reasonableness of such order may be submitted to two reputable and experienced sanitary engineers, etc.' I have been requested by Mr. Burgess to obtain from you your opinion as to the interpretation to be placed upon the words 'necessity' and 'reasonableness.'

"For your information, I enclose a copy of the order and the letters from Mr. Burgess under date of January 22, and March 1, with my replies thereto. Your early consideration of this request will be appreciated."

Sections 1252, 1253, 1254 and 1257 read:

"Section 1252. Whenever the board of health or health officer of a city or village, or ten per cent. of the electors thereof file with the state board of health a complaint in writing, setting forth that it is believed that the public water supply of such city or village is impure and dangerous to health, the state board of health shall forthwith inquire into and investigate the conditions complained of.

"Section 1253. If a state board of health finds that the public water supply of a city or village is impure and dangerous to health and that it is not practicable to sufficiently improve the character of such supply by removing the source or sources of pollution affecting it, or if the board finds that such water supply is being rendered impure by reason of improper construction or inadequate size of existing water purification works, it shall notify such city, village, corporation or person owning or operating such water supply of its findings and give them an opportunity to be heard."

"Section 1254. After such hearing, if the state board of health determines that improvements or changes are necessary and should be made, it shall report its findings to the governor and attorney-general, and upon their approval, the board shall notify such city, village, corporation or person owning or operating such water supply to change the source of supply or to install and place in operation water purification works or device satisfactory to the board, or to change or enlarge existing water purification works in a manner satisfactory to the board within a time to be fixed by the board, which time shall be subject to the approval of the governor and attorney-general.

"Section 1257. If an order of the state board of health, when approved by the governor and attorney-general, and made in pursuance of the provisions of this chapter relating to public water supply, is not acceptable to any city, village, corporation or owner affected thereby, such city, village, corporation or owner shall have the right of appeal, as follows: The necessity and reasonableness of such order may be submitted to two reputable and experienced sanitary engineers, one to be chosen by such city, village, corporation or owner, and the other by the board who shall not be a regular employe. Such examiners shall act as referees. If the engineers so chosen are unable to agree, they shall choose a third engineer of like standing, and the vote of the majority shall be final."

I note from the correspondence attached that it is the claim of the water company that the order referred to is not a reasonable one within the meaning of section 1257 General Code unless "the revenues received by the company are sufficient to compensate the company for additional expense incurred by the construction, maintenance and operation of the purification devices that may be required under the order of the board."

In the case referred to the board of health found that "the public water supply of the village of Sebring is impure and dangerous to health and that it is not practicable to sufficiently improve the character of such supply by removing the sources of pollution affecting it." This finding gave them authority to order changes under section 1254 G. C., which they did in the following language:

"BE IT ORDERED by the state board of health of Ohio, that the city water works company, of Pittsburgh, Pa., owning and operating the water works at Sebring, Ohio, shall install and have in operation prior to January 1, 1916, a water purification plant of a design satisfactory to the state board of health to purify the public water supply of Sebring."

Section 1257 G. C. provides that if this order was not acceptable to the city, village, corporation or owner affected thereby, such city, village, corporation or owner shall have the right of appeal to two referees who shall be reputable and experienced sanitary engineers and if these referees cannot agree they shall choose a third engineer of like standing and the vote of the majority shall be final. My view of this section leads me to believe that it is the duty of the referees mentioned to determine two things in connection with this order: (1) Is it practicable to sufficiently improve the character of the present water supply by removing the source of pollution affecting it, and (2) if not, is the remedy ordered (a water purification plant of a design satisfactory to the state board of health) a reasonable one?

It will be noted that the statute provides:

> "The necessity and reasonableness of such order may be submitted to two reputable and experienced sanitary engineers, one to be chosen by such city, village, corporation or owner, and the other by the board who shall not be a regular employe. Such examiners shall act as referees. If the engineers so chosen are unable to agree, they shall choose a third engineer of like standing and the vote of the majority shall be final."

From this provision and a careful perusal of the above sections I am inclined to the view that the reasonableness of the order is to be determined by these engineers by the application of scientific principles to the situation before them, with due regard to a proper economy. In other words, they must, after determining that a remedy is necessary in a given instance, ask themselves if the remedy ordered by the board of health is a reasonable one from a scientific and economic standpoint, but they may, I think, give consideration to the cost of the remedy only when it is possible to make a choice of one from two or more remedies, either or any of which would bring about a proper result. In the case you refer to it does not appear that any suggestion has been made by any of the parties that some other less expensive but effective remedy can be found to correct the situation at Sebring other than the installation of a water purification plant.

This being so and it apparently being agreed that the board of health was right in finding "that the public water supply of the village of Sebring is impure and dangerous to health and that it is not practicable to sufficiently improve the character of such supply by removing the sources of pollution affecting it," I am of the opinion that the fact that the revenues received by the company may be insufficient to compensate the company for the expense of this improvement may not be taken into consideration in determining whether or not the order of the board of health is a reasonable one under section 1257 General Code. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LOCAL REGISTRAR OF VITAL STATISTICS—AUTHORIZED TO ISSUE BURIAL PERMITS ONLY FOR DEATHS OCCURRING WITHIN HIS OWN DISTRICT.

A local registrar appointed by the state registrar of vital statistics is only authorized to issue permits for burial for deaths occurring within the territory for which he has been appointed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 16, 1917.

HON. J. E. MONGER, State Registrar, Department of State Bureau of Vital Statistics, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of March 19, 1917, in which you state:

"We are enclosing letter from Delmer Logue of Atwater township, Portage county.

"Will you kindly give us your interpretation of the law upon this matter? This is a question which is frequently asked us, and in the past it has been the custom to allow such procedure.

"We are in doubt about the legality of the matter, and would thank you for an opinion."

The communication from the local registrar of Atwater township, Portage county, Ohio, asks if it would be legal for a local registrar to issue burial permits for another township, when the death occurred in the other township and the undertaker lives in the township of the registrar. The reason assigned for the desire to issue the permit is that it would be a convenience to the undertaker, who would be saved many miles drive over bad roads to the office of the registrar of the township in which the death occured.

The statutes providing for the bureau of vital statistics will be found in sections 197 et seq. G. C.

Section 197 G. C. provides, among other things, that:

"Each city, village and township shall constitute a primary registration district."

Section 198 G. C. provides, among other things, that the secretary of state "shall enforce the provisions of this chapter thoroughly and uniformly throughout the state."

Section 201 G. C. provides that in villages the village clerk, and in townships the township clerk, shall be the local registrar, and that with the approval of the state registrar each local registrar shall appoint a deputy who in case of absence, illness or disability of the local registrar shall act in his stead.

Section 202 G. C. authorizes the township registrar, with the approval of the state registrar, when it is necessary for the convenience of the people in a township, to appoint one or more sub-registrars within portions of the township designated by the state registrar.

Section 204 G. C. provides:

"The body of a person whose death occurs in the state shall not be interred, deposited in a vault or tomb, cremated, or otherwise disposed of, or removed from or into a registration district, until a permit for burial, removal or other disposition shall have been properly issued by the local registrar of the registration district in which the death occurs. No such burial or removal permit shall be issued by any registrar until a complete and satisfactory certificate of death has been filed with him, as hereinafter provided."

Section 214 G. C. provides:

"Prior to any disposition of the body, the undertaker, or person acting as undertaker, shall obtain and file a certificate of death with the local registrar of the district in which the death occurred, and secure a burial or removal permit. He shall obtain the personal and statistical particulars required from the person best qualified to supply them and the signature thereto and address of his informant. He shall present the certificate to the attending physician, if any, or to the health officer or coroner, as directed by the local registrar, for the medical certificate of the cause of death, and other particulars necessary to complete the record, as specified in the preceding two sections. He shall state the facts required relative to the date and place of burial, sign his name thereto with his address, and present the completed certificate to the local registrar, who shall then issue a permit for burial, removal, or other disposition of the body."

Section 217 G. C. provides:

"No sexton or person in charge of any premises in which interments are made shall inter, or permit the interment or other disposition of a body, unless it is accompanied by a burial, removal or transit permit, as herein provided. Each sexton, or person in charge of a burial ground, shall indorse upon the permit the date of interment and sign his name thereto.

"All permits so indorsed shall be returned to the local registrar of the district within ten days from the date of interment, or within the time fixed by the local board of health. He shall keep a record of all interments made in the premises under his charge, stating the name of the deceased person, place of death, date of burial, and name and address of the undertaker. Such record shall at all times be open to public inspection."

Section 222 G. C. provides among other things that each undertaker shall, without delay, register his or her name, address and occupation with the local registrar of the district in which he or she resides or may hereafter establish a residence.

Section 233 G. C. provides that local registrars shall strictly and thoroughly enforce the provisions of preceding sections in their districts.

Without any detailed discussion, it is apparent, from a mere reading of the sections constituting the scheme of the vital statistics law, especially section 204 G. C. supra, that the local registrars are empowered and authorized to perform their duties only in the districts for which they are appointed. Their jurisdiction, it is plainly evident, is limited by the confines of the particular territory for which they have been selected. It would cause interminable confusion if, merely to afford convenience for undertakers, permits might be issued indiscriminately without the district for which the local registrar was appointed. If the local registrar could issue a burial permit to an undertaker who had his place of business in the township of the local registrar, for the burial of a person who had died in one township, there would be nothing to prevent him issuing burial permits to the same undertaker and for the same reason of convenience, to any township that this particular undertaker might happen to be called to conduct funerals. The statutes themselves limit his jurisdiction to his own territory, and any other provision of the statutes, much less a strained construction of them, would cause confusion and probably break down the very system that was sought to be put in force.

It is therefore my opinion that the local registrar is limited in the granting of permits for burial to deaths occuring within the territory for which he has been appointed and in this particular case that the local registrar of Atwater township is without authority to issue a permit for burial in another township when the death occurred in the other township.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

THE PLAN OF THE YOUNG MEN'S BUSINESS CLUB OF SPRINGFIELD FOR EMPLOYEES SAVING CLUB—DOES NOT REQUIRE SUPERVISION OF BANKING DEPARTMENT.

The plan set out in the attached inquiry does not show anything demanding or authorizing any supervision or interposition by the Banking Department.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 16, 1917.

HON. PHILLIP C. BERG, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 15th, you addressed to this department the following request for an opinion:

> "A representative of the Young Business Men's Club of Springfield, Ohio, has made a request for a ruling by this department on the proposition of an Employees' Savings Club Plan which the club is desirous of inaugurating among the various factories in Springfield.
> "Data bearing on the organization and operation of the proposed plan are herewith enclosed.
> "Will you please render an opinion on the question as to whether or not there is any thing in the plan that this department could not approve under the banking laws.
> "We will thank you for a return of the enclosures with your opinion."

The proposed plan attached to your inquiry is as follows:

"EMPLOYEES SAVING CLUB PLAN.

"ORGANIZATION:—

"The name of the club should be the same as the factory in which it is organized. Its purpose is the systematic saving of a specified amount out of each pay envelope. Any officers may be elected by the members, but the one necessary officer is the club representative or cashier. It is his duty to receive the deposits of the members and act as their banker.

"OPERATION:—

"Each member of the club signs an order as follows:

"I hereby authorize the cashier of_____
to deduct_____
from my pay envelope each pay and to deposit the same to my credit in the savings department of the_____Bank.

"It is understood that I may change or cancel this agreement at any time.
Number_____Name_____

"The club representative receives from the company's cashier on each pay day a check covering the amount withheld from the pay envelopes, together with a list of the depositors and the amount to be credited to each member. Three copies are made of this list, one for the company's cashier, one for the club representative, and one for the bank. The club representative takes the money, the list and the members' pass books to the bank where the entries are properly made. The pass books are made out in the name of the individual club members, and are kept under the joint care of the cashier and the club representative. The bank pays the regular rate of interest direct to the depositor, crediting it on the pass book in the usual way.

"The following memorandum is inserted in each pay envelope of the club members:

"There has been deposited in_____Bank $_____to your credit making your balance on account $_____

"Signed_____

"A depositor may withdraw his money or any part thereof at any time by getting his bank book from the cashier and presenting it at the bank. On the other hand, the member may increase or decrease the amount withheld each pay day upon a written order at any time or at such times as the club by-laws designate."

The above plan might properly be described as a scheme for a voluntary association among employes of a business institution for the mutual encouragement of thrift among its members. It contains no element of compulsion, and no element of contract liability among the members in respect to entering into the organization, or continuing therein, or in withdrawing therefrom. Every act of every member is done upon the exercise of his own will, with no compulsion and no influence but the gentle influence and example of his fellow members. While a member has authorized his employer to make a deduction from his wages, that authority is entirely in his own control and may be withdrawn at any time without ceremony and without excuse. No penalty is attached to any act or any failure by any member; neither does any officer, agent or employe receive any compensation. Every cent of wages withdrawn from a member's pay check remains his own money, and while temporarily out of his control, yet with a string attached by which he pulls it back to himself whenever he cares to, and along with it its earnings.

The general authority of the superintendent of banks is indicative of the general jurisdiction of the banking department. It is found in section 711 G. C., which is as follows:

"The superintendent of banks shall execute the laws in relation to banking companies, savings banks, savings societies, societies for savings, savings and loan associations, savings and trust companies, safe deposit companies and trust companies, and every other corporation or association having the power to receive, and receiving money on deposit, chartered or incorporated under the laws of this state. Nothing in this chapter contained shall apply to building and loan associations."

We go, then, to the list of subjects control of which is provided for in said section to ascertain which, if any, includes the subject in hand. Those subjects are:

"banking companies, savings banks, savings societies, societies for savings, savings and loan associations, savings and trust companies, safe deposit companies and trust companies, and every other corporation or association having the power to receive, and receiving money on deposit, chartered or incorporated under the laws of this state. * * *"

The scheme in hand, if included in any of the above, would have to be designated as a "savings society" or a "society for savings," if these titles were used in a general descriptive sense. They are, however, used in the section to designate certain existing corporations. This association might with propriety be styled such "society for savings." Some of the sections of the chapter are acts and parts of acts passed subsequently to the above, and provide for such control when it is a person, who engages in the business contemplated in the law, but nowhere is there any provision which reaches such a loose, voluntary and innocent association as this. It receives no money on deposit itself, but only encourages and assists its members to make such deposits in a bank already under the regulation of the department. It neither receives nor needs any authority from the laws to do any of the things projected. The only person or organization coming within the purview of the chapter is already under the control of the law. That is to say, the bank which is to receive the deposits is already under the control of your department. The employer of the members does nothing in the nature of financial transactions, except in co-operating to have each member pay in according to a direction of the member himself. The club representative, so-called, does no more than act as a messenger to carry the member's money to the bank. The bank in receiving it does nothing but what it does for every other depositor—takes his money and makes an entry in the passbook. The only circumstance that is different from that of an ordinary depositor in any sense is that a passbook is not handed back to the actual depositor and not kept in his possession. It is, however, in possession of his agent, and therefore constructively in his own.

Of course it would be possible for the employer and the club representative to combine and cheat the depositor. The latter, however, in this respect, is no worse off than any other person who commits the custody of his passbook to an agent. In fact he has protection which the ordinary person under such circumstances does not have, for the reason that it requires such combination with his employer, who is almost certain to be a responsible business person or company, and he has a check on the club representative in that every pay check which he receives notifies him of the amount deducted.

You are, therefore, advised that this proposition is entirely out of the contemplation of the statutes creating and controlling your department, that no necessity for such control exists, and that there is no reason, either substantial or technical, requiring any supervision by the banking department.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SECTION 2571 G. C.—AUTHORIZING TRANSFER OF MONEY FROM UNDIVIDED TAX FUND TO AN EXHAUSTED COUNTY FUND—NOT REPEALED BY SECTION 5649-3d—MAY NOT BE EXPENDED UNTIL APPROPRIATED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS UNDER SECTION 5649-3d—SECTION 2296 NOT APPLICABLE TO SUCH TRANSFER—AND SAME MAY BE MADE WITHOUT FILING PETITION IN COMMON PLEAS COURT.

1. Though the provisions of section 2571 G. C., authorizing the county auditor and county treasurer, on direction of the county commissioners, to transfer moneys from the undivided tax fund to an exhausted county fund, are not repealed by implication, by the provisions of section 5649-3d G. C., moneys transferred to an exhausted county fund under the provisions of section 2571 G. C. are not available for expenditure until such moneys shall have been appropriated by the county commissioners in the manner provided by section 5649-3d G. C.

2. The provisions of sections 2296 et seq. G. C. do not apply to the particular transfer of funds authorized and provided for by section 2571 G. C., and the transfer of funds authorized by section 2571 G. C. may be effected without filing a petition in the court of common pleas for authority to make such transfer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 16, 1917.

HON. JAMES F. FLYNN, Prosecuting Attorney, Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your favor of March 12, 1917, asking opinion of this department, in which you say:

> "On June 20, 1916, an opinion was rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, being No. 1714, which recites as follows:
> " 'Generally speaking, the effect of the provision of section 5649-3d G. C. is to render the provisions of section 2571 G. C. inoperative.'
>
> "Does the above mean that when a fund is exhausted the commissioners cannot make an order authorizing the auditor and treasurer to transfer from undivided tax funds, to the fund so exhausted, the amount of money as provided in section 2571?
> "If you say that, according to the opinion above referred to, the commissioners still may transfer from the undivided tax funds, to, say, the general county road fund, is it necessary to file a petition in the common pleas court under section 2296, before the commissioners can authorize the auditor and treasurer to transfer such fund?"

The language quoted in your communication is found in opinion No. 1714, of my predecessor, Hon. E. C. Turner, addressed to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices under date of June 20, 1916.

In answering your first question it may be well to note briefly and in a general way the effect of various statutory provisions with respect to the distribution and expenditure of county moneys, prior to the enactment of section 5649-3d G. C., as a part of the Smith one per cent. law, so called. County moneys were then, as now, divided into particular "funds," said funds representing the various particular purposes for which county tax levies were authorized to be made.

Section 5699 G. C., as it then read, provided in this respect as follows:

> "The county auditor shall carefully ascertain the net amount of taxes collected for each particular purpose. A specific fund shall not be used for > any other purpose than that for which it was levied until such purpose has been satisfied. The amount collected from the tax on dogs shall be applied to indemnify loss by injury to sheep, so far as needed for that purpose."

All orders and warrants drawn pursuant to the same, calling for the payment out of county moneys, were likewise drawn against some particular county fund, and if there was money in the county treasury to the credit of the fund on which a warrant was drawn, such warrant was required to be paid; otherwise the county treasurer was required to endorse the same as not paid, for want of funds (Secs. 2675-2676 G. C.).

Section 2571 G. C., referred to in your communication, furnished a means of replenishing an exhausted county "fund," by empowering the county commissioners by order entered on their journal, to authorize the county auditor and treasurer to transfer undivided tax moneys to such exhausted fund, in an amount not to exceed three-fourths of the amount estimated by the auditor and treasurer to belong to such fund. This section further provides that at the next semi-annual distribution of taxes the amount so transferred shall be deducted from the total amount found to be due such fund.

Section 2571 G. C. is still a part of the statutory law of this state and section 5649-3d G. C. does not, as I see it, affect an implied repeal of the provisions of this section, and when moneys are transferred to an exhausted county fund, under the provisions of section 2571 G. C., there would be money in the treasury to the credit of such fund, within the provisions of section 2675 G. C., as to a warrant drawn against such fund.

Section 5649-3d G. C., however, applied in its entirety, adds another requisite to that imposed by sections 2675 and 2676 G. C., and requires that county moneys to be available for expenditure should not only be in the county treasury to the credit of the proper fund, but should also be appropriated by the county commissioners to the objects for which the money in such fund is provided.

Said section 5649-3d G. C. provides as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in section 5649-3a of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

From the plain terms of this section, all expenditures shall be made from and within the appropriation made by the county commissioners at the beginning of the fiscal half year, and even though moneys are transferred to an exhausted county fund by proceedings under section 2571 G. C., such moneys would not legally thereby become available for expenditures; for though this money so transferred would then be in the treasury to the credit of such fund, such money would not stand to the credit of the appropriation account until thereafter appropriated at the beginning of the next fiscal half year, and until so appropriated, a warrant drawn against the moneys in such funds could not be legally honored for payment, even if such warrant could be legally issued at all by the county auditor, which to my mind is a proposition more than doubtful.

Though not clearly so stated in the opinion of my predecessor, above referred to, it was doubtless in the sense indicated and required by the considerations herein noted that he used the language quoted in your communication.

In answering your second question, I do not deem it necessary to set out or to discuss at length the provisions of sections 2296 et seq. G. C., which empower the commissioners of a county or the corresponding officers of other political subdivisions to transfer moneys from one fund to another, or to a new fund created under the respective supervision of such officers, on authority first had from the court of common pleas on an application or petition to be filed in such court for the purpose.

It is sufficient, for the purpose of this opinion, to note that the scheme or plan with respect to the transfer of moneys from one legal fund to another, authorized and provided for by the provisions of sections 2296 et seq. G. C., is general in its scope, applying to all political subdivisions and to the moneys had by them in fund, while section 2571 G. C. is special in its nature, applying only to counties and to the particular situation therein provided for.

Under familiar rules of statutory construction applicable to the question at hand, I am of the opinion that the provisions of section 2571 G. C. are in nowise limited by the provisions of sections 2296 et seq., and that in effecting a transfer of funds under the provisions of section 2571 G. C. it is not necessary for the county commissioners to file a petition in the court of common pleas for authority to make the transfer therein provided for.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—STATE ROADS MUST BE MAINTAINED BY STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—COUNTY ROADS BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—TOWNSHIP ROADS BY TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—COUNTY HIGHWAY SUPERINTENDENT HAS CHARGE AND SUPERVISION OF CONSTRUCTION, ETC., OF BRIDGES, HIGHWAYS AND CULVERTS—FOREGOING INCLUDES DRAINAGE.

State roads must be maintained by the state highway commissioner, county roads by the county commissioners, and township roads by the township trustees (Section 7464 G. C.) This includes the matter of drainage.

But the county highway superintendent has general charge and supervision of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all bridges, highways and culverts, whether known as township, county or state highways (Section 7184 G. C.) This includes the matter of drainage.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 16, 1917.

HON. J. L. HEISE, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication of March 20, 1917, in which you ask for certain information, was duly received. Said communication reads as follows:

> "I have the honor of calling upon you for information in regard to the drainage connected with a county road. Said road was built in Pickaway county in 1873. The plans and specifications called for drainage by the use of side ditches five feet in width on each side of said road.
> "All the drainage in question lies wholly in Monroe township and on the east side of said road. At the time this road was built the land on the east side and all along the drainage now in question was owned by one man, the father of the two men now owning this land and questioning the rights of each other in said drainage. The father, while living, in connection with the road authorities, kept an open ditch along the east side of the road, which served as the drainage of his own land as well as that of the road.

"At the death of the father, this land was divided between these two sons, and the line dividing this land between them gave to each one a part of this drainage; hence, each owner knew at this time the relation that this drainage bore to his part of the land. This open ditch remained as the drainage for this land some time after it was divided. Then both of these owners entered into an agreement with the township trustees to put in tile in this ditch and close it. The cost of the tile and labor of putting them in was borne by these two owners and the township trustees jointly. The tile started near the residence of the upper tenant and carried the water along the land of both tenants and the road, until it emptied into a natural watercourse on the land of the lower tenant. The lower tenant put a culvert over this tile ditch for access to his land and to protect the tile ditch. In a few years the tile was found to be too small for the water it had to carry, became choked and filled, and refused to work. The culvert of the servient tenant broke down and was not rebuilt but he continued to cross over it in that condition and thus broke the tile beneath it, which helped to block the working of the tile. This lack of drainage by the tile caused a pond of water to form between the residence of the upper tenant and this road. The water remains in this pond for a long period at a time, covering a part of the house yard of the upper tenant, also soaks the road bed, but does not cross it. The lower tenant has completely filled up the open ditch and has built a wire fence crossing the east line of the road and enclosing a part of the land of this county road, but no part of the elevated road bed.

"The dominant tenant has applied to the county commissioners to have this ditch or drainage opened. The servient tenant threatens injunction and suit for damages if this drainage be opened. The dominant tenant also threatens the commissioners with suit for damages if the ditch be not opened.

"Whose official duty is it to open this ditch and what is the procedure —all the steps to be taken?

"As the dominant tenant is pressing this matter very hard, I should thank you very much for an early reply."

After studying your communication carefully, I am of the opinion that the matter in dispute has more to do with the private rights than it has to do with the rights of the public; that it has more to do with the property abutting upon the highway than with the highway itself, and that the answer to the matter therein set out would be more for the benefit of the owners of the abutting property than for the benefit of public officials. Of course this department has no jurisdiction whatever over private rights or private property.

You suggest that one party interested threatens an injunction proceeding, and the other threatens a suit for damages. As to which course is pursued, if either, this department has no interest or concern.

There is no statement made in your communication as to whether the public is suffering through an injury to the highway, due to the conditions existing as therein set out. But inasmuch as the public may owe the abutting property owners certain rights and duties in reference to the repair and maintenance of this drain, the question as to what public official has charge of the matter suggested by you is a proper one for this department to consider. In answering this question, it must be remembered that the public highway includes not only the portion traveled, but also all that portion not traveled but lying within the bounds of the highway as originally laid out. With this in mind, let us consider the matter as to who has charge of the public roads of the state.

Section 7184 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The county highway superintendent shall have general charge, subject to the rules and regulations of the state highway department, of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all bridges and highways within his county, whether known as township, county or state highways, and such county highway superintendent shall see that the same are constructed, improved, maintained, dragged and repaired as provided by law, and shall have general supervision of the work of constructing, improving, maintaining and repairing the highways, bridges and culverts in his county, subject, however, to the provision hereinafter made for the designation, by the state highway commissioner, of an engineer, other than the county surveyor, to have charge of state work in such county."

The provisions of this section apply not only to the traveled portion of the highways, but any portion of the highways as originally laid out. And if it is found necessary, for the preservation or maintenance of the highways for public travel, that drains be constructed, repaired and maintained, this also would come under the jurisdiction of the county highway superintendent.

Of course, in quoting section 7184 G. C., it is necessary also for us to have in mind the provisions of section 7464 G. C. In this section we find that the public highways of the state are divided into three classes, namely, state roads, county roads and township roads. The section further provides that the state roads shall be maintained by the state highway department, the county roads shall be maintained by the county commissioners, and the township roads shall be maintained by the township trustees. That is, the state highway department has general jurisdiction over the state roads, the county commissioners general jurisdiction over the county roads and the township trustees general jurisdiction over the township roads. But the general charge and supervision of the work of constructing, improving, maintaining and repairing the highways, bridges and culverts, whether known as township, county or state highways, are lodged in the county highway superintendent by the provisions of section 7184 G. C.

On the matter of drainage, I desire to call your attention to the provisions of section 7207 G. C., which in part provides as follows:

> "The county highway superintendent or any one acting under his authority, when authorized by the county commissioners or township trustees, may enter immediately:
> "1. Upon any lands adjacent to any of the highways in the county for the purpose of opening an existing ditch or drain, or for digging a new ditch or drain for the free passage of water for the drainage of highways. * * *."

This provision plainly evinces an intention upon the part of the legislature to place the question of drainage in the control of the county highway superintendent. But it will be noticed that this right given under said section is limited to this matter "for the free passage of water for the drainage of highways."

You suggest that the servient tenement is not properly maintaining the driveway or approach leading from the public road to his premises. On this question I desire to call your attention to section 7212 G. C. This section reads in part as follows:

> "The owners or occupants of land shall construct and keep in repair all approaches or driveways from the public roads under the direction of the county highway department. * * *."

So that the county highway superintendent has charge and oversight of this matter of seeing that all approaches or driveways from the public roads to the premises of abutting property owners are so constructed and kept in repair as not to interfere with the rights of the public and also with any rights which the public might owe the abutting property owners.

Answering your question specifically, as to what public official has charge of the rights of the public in the matters set out in your communication, it is my opinion that the county highway superintendent has direct charge and oversight over the said matters.

In giving this opinion, however, I am not in any way attempting to settle the difficulties which have arisen between the adjoining abutting property owners, but merely the question as to what public official has direct charge and oversight of the matters in question, so far as they affect the public, or in so far as the public owes duties to the abutting property owners.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

EXPENSES—INCURRED BY HEALTH OFFICER—IN SUPPLYING NURSE AND NECESSARY ARTICLES TO RESIDENT OF TOWNSHIP OUTSIDE OF VILLAGE WHEN QUARANTINED IN VILLAGE—MUST BE PAID BY VILLAGE.

When a resident of a township outside of a village is taken sick with a contagious disease while in said village and is duly quarantined, and the health officer furnishes nursing and necessary articles for such quarantined person, the bills for said nursing and other necessary articles, when properly certified by the health officer, and when such quarantined person is unable to make payment, by force of section 4436 G. C. must be paid by the village.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 16, 1917.

HON. C. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of March 6, 1917, you ask for an opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Sometime ago a resident of Newton township, Pike county, was taken sick in the village of Piketon. The case was pronounced scarlet fever and quarantined by the health officer of the village of Piketon, who furnished medical assistance, nurse and certain necessary articles. The bills for nursing and for certain articles furnished were presented to the county commissioners, who asked my advice concerning payment of same, and I advised them to reject the bills for the reason that same were payable by the municipality of Piketon under the provisions of section 4436 of the General Code.

The parties interested asked me to write the attorney general's office and ask if there is not some way by which the county commissioners could legally pay these bills, their reason being that the village has no funds with which to pay."

Section 4436 G. C. provides:

"When a house or other place is quarantined on account of contagious diseases, the board of health having jurisdiction shall provide for all persons confined in such house or place, food, fuel, and all other necessaries of life, including medical attendance, medicine and nurses, when necessary. The expenses so incurred, except those for disinfection, quarantine, or other measures strictly for the protection of the public, when properly certified by the president and clerk of the board of health, or health officer where there is no board of health, shall be paid by the person or persons quarantined, when able to make such payment, and when not by the municipality in which quarantined."

This section makes it the duty of the board of health to provide the matters and things set forth in the section for all persons confined in the quarantined house, and makes the expense of furnishing the supplies, etc., referred to in your question, chargeable against the person or persons quarantined, when they are able to make such payment; but further provides that in the event they are unable to make such payment, such expenses must be a charge against the municipality.

Section 4451 G. C. provides:

"When expenses are incurred by the board of health under the provisions of this chapter, upon application and certificate from such board, the council shall pass the necessary appropriation ordinances to pay the expenses so incurred and certified. The council may levy and set apart the necessary sum to pay such expenses and to carry into effect the provisions of this chapter. Such levy shall, however, be subject to the restrictions contained in this title."

This section is full authority for council to provide for the payment of all proper expenses incurred and certified under the board of health chapter.

Dustin, J., in Meily v. City of Columbus, 6 O. C. C. (N. S.) 398, construing section 2128 of the Revised Statutes, which is section 4436 General Code, now under consideration, uses the following language:

"If dealers were required to wait for a written contract and the passage of an ordinance appropriating the money before furnishing supplies under such circumstances with any assurance of payment, the quarantined family might die of starvation or of cold.

"If food and fuel were not forthcoming as needed, the family would be justified in breaking the quarantine in order to solicit or earn a living, thus spreading infection throughout the city.

"The very emergencies of the case demand prompt and effective action upon the part of the board of health, without awaiting the slow processes of the law required in other matters."

While this case has no direct bearing upon the question under discussion, since the question raised there was whether a petition which pleads an oral contract with the board of health, for the furnishing of necessaries to a family quarantined, was good as against a general demurrer, still it does show the necessities of cases arising under these statutes.

If the resident of Newton township, spoken of in your inquiry, was furnished the supplies and things stated, and the bill for same was properly certified to by the health officer, then whenever the quarantined person is not able to pay said bill it must be paid by the municipality in which the quarantine is maintained.

There is no provision for charging such payment back to the township or municipality in which the quarantined person might reside. The only time there can be such a charge back is when a person with a contagious disease is quarantined and is a legal resident of another county of the state and is unable to pay such expense. Then, under the provisions of section 4438 G. C., such expense shall be paid by the county in which he has a legal residence, if notice and a sworn statement of the amount of such expense are sent to the infirmary directors, now the county commissioners, of such county, within thirty days after the quarantine in such case is discharged. There is no such provision for a resident of a township outside of a municipality having his bill, incurred in quarantine in the municipality, charged back against the township.

In 18 O. C. C. (N. S.) at p. 196, there will be found a case decided by the circuit court of Summit county, to wit, Village of Barberton v. Frederick Lohmers, indicative of how the courts looked upon the provisions of section 2128, R. S., which is now section 4436 G. C. This was an action to recover compensation for medical services to quarantine smallpox patients alleged to be unable to pay therefor themselves, within the meaning of section 2128 R. S.

The board of health of the village was properly apprised of the situation, but failed to take any action, and a physician rendered medical aid to the quarantined smallpox patient. The court held that he was entitled to recover compensation from the municipal corporation.

Judge Henry, at p. 197, indicates that he believes that the statute of its own force imposes a legal obligation underlying the prescribed duties of boards of health in such cases, and that no affirmative action of the board of health was a condition precedent to the bringing of an action by the physician. He quotes from Trustees, etc., v. Ogden, 6 Ohio 23, in which it was held that:

> "Overseers of the poor of the proper township are bound to support a casual pauper, if found within the limits of the township, and requiring support";

and that:

> "Where, after notice the overseers of the poor refuse to provide for a pauper, an individual furnishing a necessary supply, may recover the amount in an action against the township."

Judge Henry further says:

> "In that case the underlying legal obligation of the township rested on a meager footing of express statutory provision, reinforced, however, by the inherent urgency of the cases provided for."

Here we have a statute which needs no construction, but plainly provides that when the quarantined person is unable to pay for certain supplies, they shall be a charge against the municipality.

I can find nothing in the statutes which would in any way authorize this bill to be a proper or legal charge against the county commissioners or the county. The village must take some steps to pay this claim, just the same as they would be compelled to take steps to provide for the payment of any other legal demand against said village.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SENATE—WITHOUT POWER TO ALLOW OFFICERS OR EMPLOYES—ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR EXTRA SERVICES GENERALLY—NOR FOR EXTRA SERVICES WITHIN THE SCOPE OF THEIR DUTIES—SENATE BILL No. 56 A NULLITY.

The senate is without power to allow to any of its officers or employes compensation additional to that initially fixed for "extra services" generally, nor even for specific extra services within the scope of their several official duties or employments.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 17, 1917.

HON. W. S. PEALER, Clerk of Ohio Senate, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of April 4, 1917, enclosing copy of senate resolution No. 56, passed by the senate of the eighty-second general assembly, which is as follows:

"S. R. No. 56.

"Mr. Kennedy offered the following resolution:

"Relative to compensation of employees of the senate.

"RESOLVED, That the custodians of cloak room, doorkeepers, committee room attendants, and porters be allowed an additional sum of $1.50 each per day, the assistant postmaster and pages an additional sum of $1.00 each per day, with the exception of Fay Scobey, who shall receive $1.50 per day for each day during the session of the 82nd general assembly, as payment for additional services rendered during the session, and be it further

"RESOLVED, That the clerks, sergeant-at-arms, telephone attendants, assistant bill clerk and stenographers shall be paid the sum of $50.00 each for extra services rendered the senate of the 82nd general assembly.

"Said sum of $50.00 not to be paid to any clerk or sergeant-at-arms retained permanently in the employ of the senate of the 82nd general assembly, to be paid on voucher signed by the clerk of the senate."

Concerning this resolution, you request my opinion as follows:

"The auditor of state has raised the question of the legality of the resolution and has not issued warrants therefor although I have certified the pay roll covered by said resolution to said auditor's office.

"Will you kindly give me a ruling as to the legal status of said resolution?"

The question which you submit can not be answered without additional information which I have obtained from the journals of the senate.

On Monday, January 1, 1917, the first day of the session of the 82nd general assembly, senate resolution No. 9 was adopted. It provided in substance as follows:

"Resolved, that the following named persons be appointed by the senate to the places designated:

"Stenographers (Here follow the names of nine persons).

"Doorkeepers (Here follow the names of six persons).

"Custodians of cloak room (Here follow the names of three persons).

"Telephone attendants (Here follow the names of two persons).

"Assistant Postmaster (Here follows the name of one person).

"Bill service (Here follows the name of one person).

"Committee room attendants (Here follow the names of four persons).

"Pages (Here follow the names of four persons).

"Said stenographers to be paid for their services $5.00 a day each, telephone attendants $5.00 a day each, custodian of the cloak room, doorkeepers, committee room attendants and bill service $3.50 a day each, assistant postmaster $4.00 a day and pages $2.50 a day each."

On the same day senate resolution No. 8 was passed, providing for the appointment of two additional sergeant-at-arms.

On the same day senate resolution No. 6 was passed, authorizing the lieutenant governor to appoint one stenographer and one page, their compensation to be the same as that of the stenographers and pages of the senate, and on the same day the president of the senate appointed two persons, one as stenographer and the other as page, in compliance with the resolution.

On Tuesday, January 9, 1917, another page was appointed by the senate, his compensation to be the same as that paid to other pages of the senate (senate resolution No. 20).

On Monday, January 15, 1917, the resignation of one of the custodians of the cloak room was noted, and by senate resolution No. 25 his successor was appointed and the compensation of such successor fixed the "same as that of the other custodians of cloak room."

On Thursday, January 18, 1917, by senate resolution No. 27, a person was appointed as assistant bill clerk, and his compensation was fixed at "the same as that fixed by law for other clerks of the senate."

On Thursday, January 25, 1917, a person was appointed as porter in the senate and his compensation fixed at the rate of $3.50 per day (senate resolution No. 31).

I have not traced the matter further as I assume that other porters were subsequently employed and that possibly there were other changes in the official force of the senate; nor have I noted the initial election of the regular force of clerks and statutory sergeants-at-arms, which occurred of course on the first day of the session.

It is sufficient to note, as the result of the transactions above described, that the various employes referred to in senate resolution No. 56 were all appointed or elected early in the session.

The printed copies of the daily senate journal, which have been furnished me, stop with that of Saturday, March 10, 1917, on which date an adjournment was taken to Tuesday, March 20, 1917. At that time senate resolution No. 56 had not been adopted. I assume, therefore, that senate resolution No. 56 was adopted not earlier than Tuesday, March 20, 1917, which was substantially at the close of the session of the eighty-second general assembly.

According to its express terms, senate resolution No. 56 allows pay for additional services "for each day during the session of the eighty-second general assembly" to certain employes, and to others allows the payment of "$50.00 each for extra services rendered;" from all of which the inference clearly follows that the senate has in this resolution made an effort to allow compensation to certain of its officers and employes for past services, in addition to the compensation which officers and employes were entitled to receive according to the terms of the resolutions and provisions of law applicable thereto at the time of their appointment. This the senate cannot lawfully do.

Insofar as clerks and sergeant-at-arms and their assistants are concerned, the compensation of such officers of the senate is regulated by section 51 G. C., as amended 106 O. L. 14. This section provides in part that:

> "The clerks, assistant clerks, sergeant-at-arms and the first, second and third assistant sergeant-at-arms of the senate and house of representatives shall each be paid five dollars for each day's attendance during the session. * * *."

By virtue of this section the senate is without power to determine the compensation of clerks, assistant clerks and sergeants-at-arms named in this section. It may create and fill the positions, but the compensation attaching to the positions is provided by law and is a matter over which the senate has no control.

As to other employes, the matter is regulated by section 56 G. C. as amended 106 O. L. 13, as follows:

> "The compensation of assistant sergeant-at-arms, other than those mentioned in section 51, and the employees of either house, shall be fixed by resolution of such house and not changed during the term for which fixed."

The meaning and effect of this section are so plain as to require no comment on my part.

I presume that said resolution No. 56 must have been adopted in the belief that, notwithstanding the statutes above referred to, the senate had the power to make additional allowances for "extra services," by which I presume is meant services in addition to what the senate considered a reasonable and ordinary amount of service from each employe. In my opinion, however, the senate has no authority to evade the statutes in this way. The resolution shows on its face that the senate did not contemplate particular extra services, for it allows additional compensation to certain of its employes for each day during the session of the assembly.

No more palpable violation of section 56 G. C. could be imagined than this, even if the senate actually had the power to pay for specific extra services. But in my opinion the senate is without power to allow pay for extra services to its officers and employes. The compensation fixed by statute or by the initial resolution is deemed to be in full of all services which the senate may exact of them within the scope of their respective employments. There is nothing on the face of the resolution to show that the extra services therein referred to are not services within the scope of the employments of the various officers and employes therein referred to.

My opinion is, therefore, that senate resolution No. 56 is a nullity.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CITY COUNCIL—POWERS LEGISLATIVE ONLY, IN REGARD TO LITIGATION—MUNICIPALITY MAY COMPROMISE CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES—AUTHORITY VESTED IN SERVICE DIRECTOR AND CITY SOLICITOR TO USE CERTAIN FUND TO COMPROMISE CLAIMS FOR DAMAGES—NOT DELEGATION OF LEGISLATIVE POWER.

1. The powers of the city council with respect to municipal litigation are legislative only in character.

2. A municipality has the right to compromise or settle disputes or damage claims, which is inferred or implied from the right to sue or be sued or to contract and be contracted with.

3. The vesting of authority in the director of public service with the approval of the city solicitor to use a certain definite fund for the purpose of settling or compromising any and all claims against the city arising out of a certain street improvement is not a delegation of legislative power but amounts merely to the authorization of the performance of purely administrative functions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 19, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 6, 1917, you submitted for my opinion the following request:

> "The electors voted for the issuing of bonds for the improvement of certain streets. The council passed an ordinance for the issue of said bonds, section 4 of which reads as follows:
> " 'Ordinance 287-1916. Section 4. The proceeds from the sale of said bonds, except the premium and accrued interest thereon, shall be credited to a fund for the improvement aforesaid and shall be paid out and expended upon the order of the director of public service, and shall be expended by said director of public service for the purpose specified in section 1 of this ordinance, which purposes shall be deemed to include the purchase of the necessary material and equipment to properly carry on said work and to include the purchase of said property without condemnation proceedings filed in court.' (Passed June 27, 1916.)
> "The city council proposes to enact an ordinance, section 2 of which reads as follows:
> " 'Section 2. That all claims for damages resulting therefrom shall be judicially inquired into after the completion of the proposed improvement; and that the city solicitor be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to institute proceedings in a court of competent jurisdiction to inquire into such claims, after the completion of the proposed improvement; provided, however, that at any time prior to the institution of the proceedings hereinabove authorized, the director of public service, with the approval of the city solicitor may, and said director, with such approval hereby is authorized to settle or compromise any and all claims against the city directly or indirectly arising because of said improvement, and the said director is authorized and directed to pay the amount of such settlements or compromises, including judgments in the proceedings above authorized, and all the expenses incident thereto, out of the funds provided for said improvement by ordinance 287-1916, passed June 27, 1916; and provided further that the authority herein conferred shall be construed as additional to and not as limiting that heretofore conferred on the said director of public service by said ordinance 287-1916.'

"The question arises, whether the city council may delegate to the director of public service, with the approval of the city solicitor, the authority to settle or compromise any and all claims against the city directly or indirectly arising because of said improvement."

The request that you submit makes necessary a discussion and determination of the character and extent of the powers and duties of the council, director of public service and solicitor of a municipality.

The following sections and parts of sections of the General Code contain the provisions of law relating to the powers and duties of the council of a city which are applicable to the particular question.

"Section 4206. The legislative power of each city shall be vested in, and exercised by a council, * * *"

"Section 4211. The powers of council shall be legislative only, and it shall perform no administrative duties whatever and it shall neither appoint nor confirm any officer or employe in the city government except those of its own body, except as is otherwise provided in this title. All contracts requiring the authority of council for their execution shall be entered into and conducted to performance by the board of officers having charge of the matters to which they relate, and after authority to make such contracts has been given and the necessary appropriation made, council shall take no further action thereon.

"Section 4224. The action of council shall be by ordinance or resolution, * * *"

"Section 4240. The council shall have the management and control of the finances and property of the corporation, except as may be otherwise provided, and have such other powers and perform such other duties as may be conferred by law."

It is clear from a perusal of the provisions of the foregoing sections that as a general proposition it was the intention of the legislature to vest city councils with legislative power only. As will be noted, provision is made that they shall perform no administrative duties whatever, except when the law provides so specifically. Hence, in ascertaining the bounds within which a city council may act it is essential that we bear in mind two propositions, viz.:

1. Does the particular act involve the exercise of legislative power or executive power.

2. If the act in question is executive in character, has the council been vested with authority to do that particular thing?

The following part of section and sections of the General Code provide as follows:

"Section 3615 G. C. Each municipal corporation shall be a body politic and corporate, which shall have perpetual succession, may use a common seal, sue and be sued, * * *"

"Section 3616 G. C. All municipal corporations shall have the general powers mentioned in this chapter, and council may provide by ordinance or resolution for the exercise and enforcement of them."

"Section 4308 G. C. When required so to do by resolution of the council, the solicitor shall prosecute or defend, as the case may be, for and in behalf of the corporation, all complaints, suits and controversies in which the corporation is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he shall, by resolution or ordinance, be directed to prosecute, but shall not be required to prosecute any action before the mayor for the violation of an ordinance without first advising such action."

The preceding sections in effect authorize the council of a city to provide by ordinance or resolution for the exercise and enforcement of the power to sue and be sued and to provide by resolution or ordinance that the city solicitor shall appear on behalf of a municipality in municipal suits, matters and controversies. These powers are certainly legislative in character as they refer to the making of laws in the form of ordinances and resolutions that are to govern the matter of municipal litigation. An investigation of the Code generally does not reveal any provision that authorizes a city council to exercise administrative functions in litigation matters nor can that right be inferred from any express provision.

The power of a municipality to compromise or settle disputes or damage claims is inferred or implied from the right to sue or be sued or to contract or be contracted with and the authorities seem to be practically in unison on this point.

> "Unless forbidden by charter or general law applicable a municipal or other public corporation has power to settle and compromise disputed claims in its favor or against it before or after suit has been begun thereon. The capacity to contract and be contracted with or to sue and be sued gives the implied power to settle disputed claims, controversies and matters in litigation."
> McQuillin on municipal corporations, section 2479.
> Quinby v. Cleveland, 16 O. F. D. 583, 9 O. L. R. 313.
> Dillon on municipal corporations, 5th edition, section 821-822.

Pertinent sections of the General Code are as follows:

> "Section 4246. The executive power and authority of cities shall be vested in a * * * solicitor, director of public service, * * *"
> "Section 4324. The director of public service shall manage and supervise all public works and undertakings of the city, except as otherwise provided by law, and shall have all powers and perform all duties conferred upon him by law. He shall keep a record of his proceedings, a copy of which, certified by him, shall be competent evidence in all courts.
> "Section 4325. The director of public service shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets, avenues, alleys, lands, lanes, squares, wharves, docks, landings, market houses, bridges, viaducts, aqueducts, sidewalks, play grounds, sewers, drains, ditches, culverts, ship channels, streams and water courses, the lighting, sprinkling and cleaning of public places, the construction of public improvements and public works, except those having reference to the department of public safety, or as otherwise provided in this title.
> "Section 4326. The director of public service shall manage municipal water, lighting, heating, power, garbage and other undertakings of the city, parks, baths, play grounds, market houses, cemeteries, crematories, sewage disposal plants and farms, and shall make and preserve surveys, maps, plans, drawings and estimates. He shall supervise the construction and have charge of the maintenance of public buildings and other property of the corporation not otherwise provided for in this title. He shall have the management of all other matters provided by the council in connection with the public service of the city."

It is apparent that under section 4246 supra that the solicitor and director of public service are vested with the executive power and authority of the city in so far as their particular powers and duties extend. Section 4308 supra charges the solicitor with the duty and vests him with the power of representing the corporation in all suits, matters and controversies when required so to do by the council. He is, in other words, the legal officer of the corporation and is the proper party to represent it in all legal matters. Sections 4324, 4325 and 4326, supra, set forth the powers and duties of the director of public service that are applicable to the matter here in question. The provisions of the last mentioned sections indicate clearly that the director of public service performs the executive or administrative functions of the city in regard to those matters which refer to what is known as the public service of the city and under this head is classed a street improvement.

In view of the foregoing, the conclusion necessarily follows that the exercise of the power of a municipality to sue and be sued and the corollary right to compromise and settle disputes or damage claims involves the exercise of both legislative and executive authority. The rule is general that legislative power cannot be delegated by a legislative body to any other body or authority. Hence, it is essential to determine what acts or what procedure with respect to the settlement of damage claims are legislative and what are administrative or executive. It is often difficult to define the line which separates legislative power to make laws from the executive power which administers or executes the laws. Difficulty arises especially in determining what authority or discretion may be conferred upon a body other than the legislative without contravening the principle stated above that legislative power cannot be delegated.

The general principle governing the question of delegation of legislative power has been well stated by Ranney, Judge, in C. W. & Z. R. R. Co. v. County Commissioners, 1 O. S. 88, in the following language, which has been often cited in many jurisdictions:

> "The true distinction, therefore is, between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring an authority or discretion as to its execution, to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made."

Applying the rule of law as laid down by Judge Ranney to the fact of the particular case, we find that the council acting in its legislative capacity has passed an ordinance authorizing the issue of bonds to provide funds to be used in paying the cost and expense of making a certain improvement; that the amount of money received from the sale of said bonds is the extent to which the officers authorized to have said improvement made may go. We further find that the director of public service and the city solicitor are authorized to settle or compromise any and all claims against said city arising out of said improvement; that said director is authorized and directed to pay the amount determined upon out of the fund which has been appropriated for said improvement. We take it then that the council has vested in the director of public service, who represents the city in an administrative capacity in the exercise of its functions in the way of improving streets, and in the city solicitor, who represents it at all times in legal matters, the authority to exercise discretion in the compromise or settlement of damage claims arising out of a certain improvement, but limited, however, to the extent of the amount of money appropriated for that purpose. It seems clear therefore that the authority vested in these last two mentioned officials does not amount to a delegation of legislative power for they are not authorized to make any laws but are merely authorized to exercise discretion in the execution of the law which the legislative body has made.

In the case of City of Akron v. Dobson, 81 O. S., 66, at pages 76 and 77 the court uses language which is illustrative of the provisions of law above stated and which is as follows:

> "Prior to the adoption of the municipal code of 1902, the city council was an administrative, as well as a legislative body, and one of the reforms contemplated by the adoption of the new code was to make its powers legislative only. * * * The council provides the money for carrying on the government, either by a levy of taxes, or an issue of bonds, and it is proper that it should have some control over the expenditures, but considering these sections in the light of the purpose of the code we think their requirements are met by an ordinance making an appropriation and stating generally the purpose for which it is made, and authorizing the directors to enter into contracts to effect that purpose. If the directors do not have or retain the confidence of the council, it is in the power of the council to be more specific."

I am therefore of the opinion that the vesting of authority in the director of public service with the approval of the city solicitor to use a certain definite fund for the purpose of settling or compromising any and all claims against the city arising out of a certain street improvement, is not a delegation of legislative power but amounts merely to the authorization of the performance of purely administrative functions.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 19, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of March 22, 1917, in which you ask for certain information therein set out. Your communication reads as follows:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following questions:
> (1) Should the approval mentioned in section 7198 General Code (Supplement) precede or follow the purchase of material, or the employment of labor made by the county highway superintendent under the provisions of said section?
> (2) Where a purchase of material is made by the county highway superintendent under the provisions of section 7198 General Code, is the certificate of the county auditor, under the provisions of section 5660 General Code, necessary?
> (3) May the county highway superintendent under section 7198 General Code purchase material for general road repairs, or is he limited to the purchase of material for a given improvement?

The section about which you make inquiry is section 7198 G. C., which section reads as follows:

"Section 7198. The county highway superintendent may, with the approval of the county commissioners or township trustees, employ such laborers, teams, implements and tools, and purchase such material as may be necessary in the performance of his duties."

I will first attempt to answer the question which is contained in the first proposition set out in your communication, which question reads as follows:

"1. Should the approval mentioned in section 7198 General Code (supplement), precede or follow the purchase of material, or the employment of labor made by the county highway superintendent under the provisions of said section?"

In order to arrive at the answer to your first question, we must consider the accepted meaning of the term "approval." The dictionaries define "approve" as follows:

"To pronounce good, proper or legal; give sanction to, as by official act; ratify, confirm; form or express a favorable judgment concerning."

It will be noted that section 7198 G. C. reads:

"The county highway superintendent may, with the approval of the county commissioners or township trustees, employ, etc."

It does not say that:

"The county highway superintendent may employ such laborers, teams, implements and tools * * * as may be necessary in the performance of his duties," which action of the county highway superintendent shall afterwards be approved by the county commissioners; but he may, "with the approval of the county commissioners * * * employ." Thus the approval of the county commissioners is, to say the least, concurrent with the act of employment or purchase by the county highway superintendent.

In other words, the county highway superintendent initiates plans, measures and programs which he desires to follow. Then the county commissioners approve them, if they so see fit to do; after which the county highway superintendent executes the said plans or measures.

Hence, answering your inquiry specifically, it is my opinion that the approval mentioned in section 7198 G. C. precedes the purchase of material and the employment of labor by the county highway superintendent. This is in harmony with the finding of my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in opinion No. 1361, found in vol. 1, p. 458, opinions of the attorney-general for 1916.

But I might say in passing that if the county highway superintendent employed labor, etc., and purchased material without the approval of the county commissioners, and the county commissioners afterwards should see fit to place their O. K. upon the acts of the county highway superintendent and allow the bills so made by him, the acts of the county highway superintendent could be considered as having the approval of the county commissioners from the beginning.

This order of the county commissioners made after the acts of the county highway superintendent would be what is called in legal phrase a nunc pro tunc order, that is, it would be an order made after the acts done, which would have the force and effect of an order made before. But the statute contemplates in my opinion that the approval should be given before the employment of labor and the purchase of material, and county commissioners should not adopt the course of giving their approval and consent after the county highway superintendent has acted. And what is said of the county commissioners of course also applies to the township trustees.

The second question contained in your communication is as follows:

> "2. Where a purchase of material is made by the county highway superintendent under the provisions of section 7198 General Code is the certificate of the county auditor, under the provisions of section 5660 General Code, necessary?"

It will be noted that this question has to do with not only the provisions of section 7198 G. C., but also with the provisions of section 5660 G. C. Section 5660 G. C. in part reads as follows:

> "The commissioners of a county, the trustees of a township and the board of education of a school district, shall not enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, respectively, first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, etc."

It will be noted that this section naturally divides itself into two parts:

1. The commissioners of a county, the trustees of a township and the board of education of a school district, shall not enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, unless the auditor or clerk thereof first certifies that the money is in the treasury, etc.

2. The commissioners of a county, the trustees of a township and the board of education of a school district, shall not pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money, unless the auditor or clerk thereof certifies that the money is in the treasury, etc.

Your question has to do with this: Is it necessary for the county auditor to file his certificate to the effect that the money is in the treasury, before the county highway superintendent may enter into a contract for the employment of labor or the purchase of material?

It will be noted that section 5660 G. C. makes no provision for any other officials than county commissioners, township trustees and boards of education. So that it is my opinion that it is not necessary that the auditor or clerk certify that money is in the treasury to the credit of the proper fund, before the county highway superintendent can enter into the contracts provided for in section 7198 G. C.

But it will be noted that section 5660 G. C. provides also that the commissioners of the county shall not make an order for the expenditure of money unless the auditor certifies that the same is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn.

Hence, when the bills which are made, due to the contracts of the county highway superintendent, are presented to the county commissioners for payment, said county commissioners could not order said bills paid until the auditor certifies that the money is in the treasury.

Therefore, answering your second question specifically, it is my opinion that the county highway superintendent can enter into contracts provided for in section 7198, without the certificate of the county auditor, but the county commissioners can not make the order for the payment of these bills so made by the county highway superintendent, until the county auditor certifies that the money is in the treasury to the credit of the proper fund.

The third question in your communication reads as follows:

> "(3) May the county highway superintendent under section 7198 General Code, purchase material for general road repairs, or is he limited to the purchase of material for a given improvement?"

It seems that the provisions of section 7198 G. C. refer in general to the duties of the county highway superintendent. These duties are set out in part in sections 7192, 7193, 7196 and 7197 G. C. It will be seen that under the provisions of these sections no particular work or improvement is contemplated. For instance, in section 7192 G. C.:

> "The county highway superintendent shall keep the highways of the county at all times in good and suitable conditions for public travel. He shall generally supervise the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the bridges and culverts on the highways of the county, the cost of which shall be borne by the county, unless otherwise provided by law."

Section 7193 G. C. provides in part:

> "The county highway superintendent shall cause such highways, bridges and culverts to be kept free from obstructions by snow or otherwise," etc.

Section 7196 G. C. provides that he shall erect suitable sign-posts and erect substantial fences along winding grades.

From all these provisions I am of the opinion that section 7198 G. C. does not contemplate any particular improvement or any particular work, but contemplates generally the work that the county highway superintendent has to do.

So that answering your third question specifically, I would say that the county highway superintendent is not limited to the purchase of material for any given improvement, but that he can, with the approval of the county commissioners, employ labor and teams and purchase material he may need from time to time to enable him to perform the duties which are set out in the above named sections, as well as in other sections of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROACHES AND DRIVEWAYS—COST OF CONSTRUCTING SAME NOT TO BE INCLUDED IN ESTIMATE OF COST OF CONSTRUCTING AND REPAIRING THE HIGHWAYS—COST THEREOF TO BE PAID FROM GENERAL COUNTY FUND. APPROACH OR DRIVEWAY—MEANS ALL DRIVEWAYS WHICH LEAD FROM PUBLIC ROAD TO PREMISES OF ABUTTING PROPERTY OWNER. COMPENSATION FOR DESTRUCTION OR RECONSTRUCTION OF APPROACH DEPENDS ON WHETHER COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OR TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES HAVE JURISDICTION AND SUPERVISION OF CONSTRUCTION, ETC., OF PUBLIC ROAD.

1. Under the provisions of section 7212 G. C., the cost of the construction of approaches and driveways, or compensation to the abutting property owner for the destruction of approaches and driveways, is not to be included in the estimate of the cost and expense of constructing or repairing the highway and paid from the fund created for the construction or repairing of the highway, but same must be taken from the general fund of the county or township.

2. The words "approach or driveway," as used in said section 7212 G. C., apply to all approaches or driveways which lead from the public road to the premises of an abutting property owner, or to any part of the premises, and which the property owner maintains and uses in the full enjoyment of his rights and privileges as a property owner.

3. If the township trustees had jurisdiction and supervision of the construction or repair of the public road, then in that event they are the persons either to compensate the owner or occupant for the destruction of the approach or driveway, or to reconstruct said approach or driveway. If, on the other hand, the county commissioners or the state highway commissioner had jurisdiction and supervision over the construction or repair of the public road, then the county commissioners are the persons either to compensate the owner or occupant or to reconstruct the approach or driveway.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 19, 1917.

HON. S. L. GREGORY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wilmington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 15, 1917, in which you ask me for certain information in reference to matters therein set out. Your communication reads as follows:

> "I write you for an opinion at request of the county commissioners of this, Clinton county, in a matter in which both state and county are interested. On August 19, 1915, a contract was let to improve an inter-county road. No mention was made in the specifications as to farm approaches (old section 1192-1, new section 7212 G. C.). Now is there any legal obligation on the county or the state to build the farm approaches in this case under either of the sections mentioned or under any other sections of the statute?
> "Also please define farm approaches as to kind and number."

While you mention in your communication section 1192-1 G. C., yet, inasmuch as this section has been repealed, and inasmuch as the provisions of said section, in my opinion, have nothing to do with the construction to be placed upon section 7212 G. C., which you also mention in your communication, I shall not quote nor comment upon said section 1192-1 G. C., now repealed.

But as you suggest, section 7212 G. C. is the one that controls in the matters about which you ask in your communication. Said section reads as follows:

> "Section 7212. The owners or occupants of land shall construct and keep in repair all approaches or driveways from the public roads under the direction of the county highway superintendent, provided, however, that if, in the construction or improvement, maintenance and repair of any road, the approach or driveway of an abutting property owner is destroyed, the county commissioners or township trustees, shall compensate such abutting property owner or occupant of said lands for the destruction of such approach or driveway, or in lieu thereof, authorize the county highway superintendent to reconstruct the same."

It will be noted that this section naturally divides itself into three subdivisions, namely:

> "(1) The owners or occupants of land shall construct and keep in repair all approaches or driveways from the public roads under the direction of the county highway superintendent.
> "(2) If, in the construction or improvement, maintenance and repair of any road, the approach or driveway of an abutting property owner is destroyed, the county commissioners or township trustees, shall compensate such abutting property owner or occupant of said lands for the destruction of such approach or driveway."
> "(3) 'Or in lieu thereof,' they may 'authorize the county highway superintendent to reconstruct the same.' "

Now, with the above analysis of section 7212 G. C. let us proceed with the consideration of the matters suggested in your communication. First, you suggest that in a certain contract entered into on August 19, 1915, to improve an inter-county road, no mention was made in the specifications as to farm approaches. In my opinion there was no necessity that such a mention should be made in the plans and specifications prepared by the proper official. If this matter were suggested in the plans and specifications for the said improvement, the same matter would also have to be considered in making an estimate of the cost and expense of such improvement, but in my opinion the cost and expense of reconstructing or repairing an approach or driveway should not be included in the estimate of the cost and expense of the construction or improvement of the highway. This answers, as I take it, the one suggestion made in your communication.

Secondly, let us notice what interpretation should be placed upon the words "approach or driveway" as used in section 7212 G. C. You ask in your communication as to whether said words should be interpreted to mean just one approach or driveway or whether they should be interpreted to mean more than one.

The practical side of this question has to do with the fact that many land owners have not only a way or drive which leads naturally and directly to the farm buildings located upon the farm, but they have ways or drives leading from the public highway into different fields upon the farm. These ways or drives are used for hauling grain from the fields onto the public highway, and thence to the farm buildings, and in hauling manure, etc. from the farm buildings onto the public highway, and thence into the field or fields. That is, instead of the farmer driving over his own land to where a certain field is, he will drive out onto the highway from his barn or house and then back into a field, over a drive from the public road which he maintains. Or he may maintain driveways or approaches over which he drives in leaving one field of his farm to go on the public road and then from the public road back into another field of his farm.

Now, the question is as to whether the words "approach or driveway," as used in section 7212 G. C., apply merely to the approaches or driveways which lead naturally and directly to the premises as a whole of the abutting property owner, or whether they apply to all the approaches and driveways which he maintains and uses in order that he may have the full enjoyment of his rights and privileges as a property owner.

It must be remembered that the abutting property owner has title to the land to the center of the public road, subject, however, to the easement of the public to use the same for travel and matters incident thereto. He has a right to plant trees and use the sides of the public road so long as he does nothing to interfere with the easement which the public has in the public highway. He has the right to use and maintain driveways and approaches from the public road to his premises or any part of his premises, so long as he does nothing to interfere with the rights of the public in and to said public road. All these rights he enjoys as a property owner.

If the public, in the construction or repair of the traveled portion of the public road, destroys any of these approaches and driveways so maintained and used by an abutting property owner in the enjoyment of his rights and privileges as an abutting property owner, why should not the public either replace them in such a manner as to enable the property owner to use them to the same extent and in the same manner as he enjoyed them before their destruction? Or if the public does not care to reconstruct them, then compensate the owner so that he may reconstruct them? This would seem to be right. It would seem to be just; and it is my opinion that such was the intention of the legislature in enacting this section; that the legislature intended that all abutting property owners should be protected in the rights and privileges which they enjoyed as property owners before the construction or improvement, maintenance or repair of any public road.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the words "approach or driveway," as used in said section, apply to all approaches or driveways which lead from the public road to the premises of an abutting property owner, or to any part of the premises, and which the property owner maintains and uses in the full enjoyment of his rights and privileges as a property owner. The same principle would control in the matter, whether the county commissioners or township trustees reconstruct the approaches or driveways so described, or whether they compensate the abutting property owner for such destruction.

In passing, however, let me say that under the provisions of said section 7212, abutting property owners or occupants must keep in repair all approaches or driveways under the direction of the county highway superintendent. This is provided for under the first part of said section. And all said approaches or driveways constructed by occupants or owners since the taking effect of the provisions of said section 7212 must be constructed under the direction of the county highway superintendent.

Now, the next question that naturally arises is this: Said section 7212 G. C. provides that the county commissioners or township trustees shall either compensate the abutting property owner or occupant, or shall authorize the county highway superintendent to reconstruct the same. When will the county commissioners act and when will the township trustees act under and by virtue of the provisions of said section 7212 G. C.?

It is my opinion that the township trustees would act under and by virtue of the provisions of this section whenever the improvement, construction, maintenance or repair had been done under their authority and supervision, and that the county commissioners would act under and by virtue of the provisions of said section whenever the said improvement, construction, maintenance or repair had been made either under the authority and supervision of the county commissioners or under the authority and supervision of the state highway commissioner.

As I view it, this answers the questions in your communication.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ANNEXATION OF TOWNSHIP TO ADJOINING CITY—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES RESIDING WITHIN CITY AND OUTSIDE OF TOWNSHIP FORFEIT OFFICE——FUNDS AND INDEBTEDNESS OF TOWNSHIP AND CITY SHOULD BE DIVIDED UNDER SECTION 3544—AFTER DIVISION GENERAL ROAD FUND OF TOWNSHIP CANNOT BE USED TO REPAIR ROAD NOW WITHIN CITY.

A portion of a township was annexed to an adjoining city and two of the township trustees live within the annexed portion of the township. Held,

1. Trustees residing within the city of Akron and without the township forfeit their offices.

2. Equitable division of the funds and indebtedness of the township and city should be made under authority of and in the manner provided by section 3544 General Code, read in connection with the provisions of the statutes governing the annexation of said territory to said city.

3. After such division no part of the general road repair fund of the township may be used for the repair of roads formerly within the township, but now lying within the city of Akron.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 20, 1917.

HON. C. G. ROETZEL, Prosecuting Attorney, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 5, 1917, as follows:

> "Will you kindly render this office an opinion upon the following questions:

"In May, 1916, a large part of Portage township, in Summit county, was annexed to the city of Akron. Two of the trustees, the treasurer and the clerk, duly elected, qualified and acting officers of Portage township, are now, on account of the annexation, residents of the city of Akron.

"1. Do said officials retain their office and can they perform the duties connected with the said offices?

"2. If they do retain office, do they hold their office until their successors are duly elected and qualified at the next general election of township officers?

"3. Is the city of Akron entitled to any portion of the funds now in the hands of the township treasurer and which were collected from the residents of Portage township prior to the annexation and who are now residents of Akron?

"4. Can the funds now in the hands of the township treasurer and collected prior to the annexation, be used by the township trustees for repair of roads formerly in Portage township but now in the city of Akron?"

Your supplementary letter of February 21, 1917, is as follows:

"Replying to your letter of the 20th inst., in reference to the funds now in the hands of the treasurer of Portage township, Summit county, Ohio, would say that the funds referred to were raised by a general levy for general road improvements throughout the township, and not for any special road improvements."

You also inform me that the township and city boundary lines were, prior to annexation, and will again soon be, co-extensive.

Article 15, section 4, of the Constitution of 1851, provides:

"No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector."

Sections 3261 and 3262 of the General Code read:

3261. "If by reason of non-acceptance, death, or removal of a person chosen to an office in any township, except trustees, at the regular election, or upon the removal of the assessor from the precinct or township for which he was elected, or there is a vacancy from any other cause, the trustees shall appoint a person having the qualifications of an elector to fill such vacancy for the unexpired term."

3262. "When for any cause a township is without a board of trustees or there is a vacancy in such board, the justice of the peace of such township holding the oldest commission, or in case the commission of two or more of such justices bear even date, the justice oldest in years, shall appoint a suitable person or persons, having the qualifications of electors in the township to fill such vacancy or vacancies for the unexpired term."

Section 3261 G. C. was originally section 20 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the incorporation of townships," passed March 5, 1831, 29 O. L., p. 484, and read:

> "That when by reason of non-acceptance, death or removal of any person chosen to office in any township at the annual meeting, as aforesaid, or in case where there is a vacancy, the trustees shall appoint a person having the qualifications of an elector, to fill such vacancy; and the person thus appointed shall take the same oath and be liable to the same penalty as though he had been chosen at the annual meeting."

Section 3262 G. C. was originally section 1 of an act passed on March 21, 1874, and entitled "An act to authorize the filling of vacancies in the boards of trustees of townships," and read:

> "Section 1. BE IT ENACTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF OHIO, That when any township shall for any cause be without a board of trustees, or for any cause there shall be a vacancy in the board of trustees of any township, it shall be the duty of the justices of the peace of such township to appoint a suitable person or persons having the qualifications of electors in such township, to fill the vacancy or vacancies that have occurred or may hereafter occur in any such board of trustees, and the justices of the peace discharging said duty shall make out a certificate in writing of said appointment or appointments, and file the same with the clerk of the township in which said vacancy occurred, who shall record the same; and the person or persons thus appointed shall take the same oath or affirmation required of like officers chosen at any annual election, and hold their offices until their successors shall be duly elected and qualified. Provided, that this act shall be supplemental and subject to the act entitled an act supplementary to an act passed April 17, 1872 (vol. 69, page 76), entitled an act to incorporate the original surveyed townships, passed March 14, 1831, and to repeal an act therein named."

The legislature also thereafter amended section 20 of the act first above referred to by the addition of the words "except trustees," making it read as it does today in section 3261 General Code.

From a review of this bit of legislative history it is clear that originally the legislature provided for the filling of vacancies of all township offices and recognized that a removal from the township was a cause for vacancy. Later in 71 O. L., p. 35, they saw fit to make separate provision for filling vacancies in the board of township trustees snce it was evident that a board could not appoint its own successors. In doing this they gave the justice of the peace power to fill the vacancies occuring in the board of trustees of any township for any cause, but did not specify the causes for vacancy. It does not seem to me that there is anything in this action that could be interpreted as a repudiation by the legislature, insofar as township trustees were concerned, of its former position that a removal from a district was cause for vacancy. Just the opposite is indicated by the fact that it provided in the act of March 21, 1874, 71 O. L. p. 35, above quoted, that the justice of the peace should "appoint a suitable person or persons, having the qualifications of electors, of such township to fill the vacancy or vacancies that have occurred or may hereafter occur in any such board of trustees," showing clearly that they still had the resident qualifications for township trustees in mind.

In Dillon on Municipal Corporations, page 635, section 371, it is said:

> "Non-residents of the corporation have, however, been held competent to be elected to office when residence was not expressly required, but the decisions cannot, perhaps, be said to conclude the point, and, if extended to the higher offices, are hardly consistent with the fundamental idea of municipal or local self-government."

In a note under this section it is said:

"Municipal officers may be elected from non-residents of the corporation when there is no statute or constitution prohibiting it, particularly when the office to be filled is one requiring professional skill and not representative or legislative in its character. State v. Blanchard (city surveyor) 6 La. An. 515. The conclusion was reached with hesitation, but the whole court concurred."

In 29 Cyc., page 1377, it is said:

"Residence within the district over which the jurisdiction of the office extends is often also made a necessary qualification by statute. In the absence of such an express provision, however, there would seem to be no reason for holding that residence within the district is necessary to eligibility provided the other qualifications mentioned in the statute are present."

Elliott on Municipal Corporations, page 179, section 181:

"A non-resident is eligible to office unless contrary is provided by statute."

In State ex rel. v. Walker, 17 Ohio, page 135, the court held:

"On the formation of a new county, the county commissioners of any of the counties from which the new county is formed, who resides within its limits, cease to be commissioners of the old county, unless they remove within it."

The court in this case said, at page 140:

"By the first section of the act establishing boards of county commissioners, passed March 5, 1831, it is enacted 'that there shall be established in each organized county of this state, a board of commissioners, to be elected by the qualified electors of the county at the annual election in October. By the sixth section each commissioner, before entering upon the duties of his office, is required to take an oath or affirmation faithfully and impartially to discharge the duties of the commissioner of the county in which he resides. These provisions of the statute seem to indicate that the office of commissioner of a county can only be held by a resident of the county, and when we take into consideration the general duties of the board of commissioners, the fact that they are the representatives of the county in its corporate capacity, that they are the corporate body in all suits and contracts, relating to the interests and funds of the county, etc., we cannot doubt that non-residence within the county is a disqualification, which necessarily vacates the office."

It will be seen from a consideration of the above case that the only statutory indication of legislative intention in connection with the residential qualifications of county commissioners was that the statute provided that the commissioner should, before entering upon his duties, take an oath or affirmation "faithfully and impartially to discharge the duties of a commissioner of the county in which he resides." This, to me, does not seem entitled to as much weight as the statutory expressions in sections 3261 and 3262 General Code upon the subject of residential qualifications for township trustees and inasmuch as the township trustees act for the township in much the same manner as the county commissioners for the county, it would seem by the same process of reasoning as adopted by the supreme court of this state in the case of State v. Walker, supra, that a non-residence within the township would be such a disqualification as would necessarily vacate the office.

Therefore it is my opinion, in answer to your first question, that the township trustees, by reason of their now residing without the township, are disqualified and may no longer hold their positions on such board.

This answer to your first question makes a reply to your second question unnecessary.

Answering your third question I beg to call your attention to an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, on May 25, 1916, and addressed to Hon. C. P. Kennedy, prosecuting attorney, Akron, Ohio (see opinions of the attorney-general for 1916, page 918). This opinion dealt, I think, with the very same situation which confronts you now. In this opinion it was held:

> "In case of the annexation of territory from one or more townships to a city, under authority of and in the manner provided by section 3558 et seq., an equitable division of the funds and indebtedness of said township or townships and the proper apportionment thereof may be made under authority of and in the manner provided by section 3544 G. C. read in connection with the provisions of the statutes governing the annexation of said territory to said city."

I have carefully read this opinion and agree with the same and therefore advise you in accordance therewith that an equitable division of the funds and indebtedness of the township and city should be made as provided for in section 3544 General Code.

After the division referred to under section 3544 is made, the remaining township funds will, of course, be used for township purposes only, and therefore after such division has been made, no part of the general road repair fund of the township could be used for the repair of roads formerly in the township, but now in the city of Akron.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MOTHER'S PENSION LAW—COURT MAY MAKE ALLOWANCE TO MOTHER—WHEN THE ABSENCE OF SUCH ALLOWANCE WOULD CAUSE HER TO WORK REGULARLY AWAY FROM HOME—OR WHEN SHE WOULD BE COMPELLED TO WORK ON OUTSIDE EMPLOYMENT IN HER OWN HOME.

Section 1683-3 G. C. authorizes the juvenile court to make an allowance to a mother when in the absence of such allowance she would be required to work regularly away from her home or when in the absence of such allowance she would be required to be engaged regularly in outside employment in her own home.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 21, 1917.

HON. JOHN C. STOUGHTON, Probate Judge, Logan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 19, 1917, asking for an interpretation of section 1683-3 General Code, referring to the allowance of mothers' pensions, especially in connection with that provision to the effect that "the allowance shall be made only when in the absence of such allowance the mother would be required to work regularly away from her home."

Section 1683-3 General Code reads:

> "Such allowance may be made by the juvenile court, only upon the following conditions: First, the child or children for whose benefit the allowance is made must be living with the mother of such child or children; second, the allowance shall be made only when in the absence of such allowance, the mother would be required to work regularly away from her home and children, and when by means of such allowance she will be able to remain at home with her children, except that she may be absent for work for such time as the court deems advisable; third, the mother must in the judgment of the juvenile court be a proper person, morally, physically and mentally, for the bringing up of her children; fourth, such allowance shall in the judgment of the court be necessary to save the child or children from neglect and to avoid the breaking up of the home of such woman; fifth, it must appear to be for the benefit of the child to remain with such mother; sixth, a careful preliminary examination of the home of such mother must first have been made under the direction of the court by the probation officer, the agent of an associated charities organization or humane society, or in the absence of such probation officer, society or organization in any county, the sheriff of such county shall make such investigations as the court may direct, and a written report of the result of such examination or investigation shall be filed with the juvenile court, for the guidance of the court in making or withholding such allowance."

The evident purpose of the mother's pension law was to keep the mother at home with her children and under such circumstances as would afford her sufficient time to properly care for them, upon the theory that where the mother is a proper person it is better for the children that they be kept at home under her influence and care than sent to some institution which, however maternal in its aims, must of necessity afford its juvenile inmates a degree of protection and encouragement far below that inspired by a mother's love.

Section 1683-3 G. C. provides in part:

"the allowance shall be made only when in the absence of such allowance the mother would be required to work regularly away from her home and children and when by means of such allowance she will be able to remain at home with her children, except that she may be absent for work for such time as the court deems advisable;"

I take it what you wish to know in connection with this clause is whether or not a mother who is regularly employed by outside parties in her own home can be given an allowance under this section.

Attention is called to the fact that the statute does not require as a condition precedent to the allowance that the mother be employed "away from home," but it provides that she be employed "away from her home and children." This means, I think, that whenever she must engage in employment that will take her away from her home or from her children she is, if other conditions are properly met, entitled to an allowance. If she must work regularly at home for outside parties, her employment can certainly be said to take her away from her children, for even though she is at home, in the same house with them, she cannot, under such circumstances, give them the proper care and attention.

Attention is called to another provision of section 1683-3 G. C. which tends to strengthen the conclusion that the law intends to assist all mothers employed at home as well as a mother employed away from home. That provision is this:

"Such allowance shall, in the judgment of the court, be necessary to save the child or children from neglect."

Now it is quite clear that a mother engaged regularly at home in outside employment must, of necessity, neglect her children to at least some extent and it is also clear that if the state should make her an allowance, enabling her to quit such employment and devote her time at home to her children, the state by such allowance would be saving these children from neglect within the meaning of the provision of section 1683-3 just quoted.

For these reasons I am of the opinion that under section 1683-3, General Code, an allowance may be made to a mother when in the absence of such allowance she would be required to work regularly away from her home or when in the absence of such allowance she would be required to be engaged regularly in outside employment in her own home, subject, of course, to the other provisions of the statute.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ANNEXATION OF TOWNSHIP TO ADJOINING CITY—UNDER AGREEMENT OF TOWNSHIP SCHOOL BOARD WITH CITY BOARD TO PAY CERTAIN PERCENTAGE OF MONEY ON HAND, LESS AMOUNTS CERTIFIED TO BY TOWNSHIP SCHOOL CLERK—A RESOLUTION BY TOWNSHIP BOARD OFFERING CERTAIN SUM FOR A SITE AND COMMENCING CONDEMNATION PROCEEDINGS DOES NOT CREATE LEGAL OBLIGATION AGAINST BOARD, THEREFORE CANNOT BE DEDUCTED FROM AGREED PERCENTAGE.

Part of a township recently was annexed to the city of Toledo. An agreed upon percentage of the township's school moneys, both in hand and in process of collection, was to be paid to the city school district. However, all sums that the township school clerk had certified to were to be deducted from the moneys in hand.

Prior to this agreement the township board had adopted a resolution that a written offer of $500.00 be made for a tract of land, no certification being made. The township board had also taken steps in probate court to condemn land for which $3,000.00 had been offered, no certification being made.

HELD: That under this agreement neither the $500.00 referred to nor the amount to be paid for the tract of land involved in the condemnation proceeding should be deducted from the moneys on hand by the township board prior to their payment of forty per cent. of such moneys to the city board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 21, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of March 6, 1917, as follows:

"We would respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:

"Part of a township recently was annexed to the city of Toledo. An agreed upon percentage of the township's school moneys, both in hand and in process of collection, was to be paid to the city school district. However, all sums that the township school clerk had certified to were to be deducted from the moneys in hand.

"Prior to this agreement the township board had adopted a resolution that a written offer of $500.00 be made for a tract of land, no certification being made. The township board had also taken steps in probate court to condemn land for which $3,000.00 had been offered, no certification being made.

"Questions: Did the above proceedings put upon the township district obligations that would have to be considered in a settlement with the city district? Or, should they be ignored? If the former, must a settlement between the boards be delayed until the real estate proceedings have ended? Would proper certification have altered the situation?"

You also inform me that the agreement referred to provided in part as follows:

"That the president and clerk of this board be, and they are hereby authorized and directed to draw a voucher payable to the board of education of the city school district of the city of Toledo, Ohio, for forty (40) per cent. of the said moneys as this board may have on hand on this date and to which the clerk of this board has not made certification."

When the resolution offering $500.00 for the tract of land was made by the township board, the certificate of the clerk under section 5660 General Code should have been filed. Inasmuch as this was not done, the offer was void and the township board incurred no obligation whatever by said resolution.

In regard to the condemnation proceedings:

Sections 7624 and 3697 read:

> "Section 7624. When it is necessary to procure or enlarge a school site or to purchase real estate to be used for agricultural purposes, athletic field or play ground for children, and the board of education and the owner of the property needed for such purposes are unable to agree upon the sale and purchase thereof, the board shall make an accurate plat and description of the parcel of land which it desires for such purposes, and file them with the probate judge, or court of insolvency, of the proper county. Thereupon the same proceedings of appropriation shall be had which are provided for the appropriation of private property by municipal corporations."
> "Section 3697. When a municipal corporation makes an appropriation of property, and fails to pay or take possession thereof, within six months after the assessment of compensation shall have been made, its right to make such appropriation on the terms of the assessment so made shall cease and determine, and lands so appropriated shall be relieved from all incumbrance on account of any of the proceedings in such case, and the judgment or order of the court directing such assessment to be paid shall cease to be of any effect, except as to the costs adjudged against the corporation. Upon motion of any defendant, such costs may be retaxed, and a reasonable attorney's fee paid to the attorney of such defendant, which, together with any other proper expenses incurred by the defendant, may be included in the costs."

From this latter section it is clear that after the appropriation proceedings are completed, the school board still has the right to refuse to accept property condemned. It follows, therefore, that in the case mentioned the township board had not completely obligated itself at the date of the agreement set out herein to take over the property involved in the appropriation proceeding.

Neither was it necessary for the clerk of the board to have filed his certificate under section 5660 G. C. at the time the resolution to appropriate was adopted. See Pansing v. Village of Miamisburg, 11 O. C. C. (n. s.), 511; affirmed in 79 O. S.

From the foregoing it will be seen that because of the failure to file the certificate in connection with the resolution offering the $500.00, and by reason of section 3697 G. C. in connection with the appropriation proceeding, the township board had not at the time incurred a legal obligation with respect to the purchase of the one tract of land or the appropriation of the other. This being so they may or may not have had these proceedings in mind when they agreed upon the division of the funds. However, judging from the agreement which they entered into, they did not. The agreement provides that the township board is to pay over to the board of education of the city of Toledo forty per cent. of the moneys which the township board had on hand and "to which the clerk of this board has not made certification."

In neither case above mentioned was any certification made by the clerk, and therefore under this agreement the money to be expended, if these propositions were carried out, could not have been deducted from the monies on hand.

It is therefore my opinion, in direct answer to your question, that neither the $500.00 offered by the board for the tract of land referred to, nor the amount to be paid for the other tract in process of condemnation should be deducted from the monies on hand by the township board before the forty per cent. is computed to be paid according to the agreement of the board of the city of Toledo. If this ruling works a hardship on the township board, they have their remedy in that they are not compelled to proceed further with either the purchase of the one tract or the appropriation of the other.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROCEEDS OF SALE OF COUNTY REAL ESTATE—BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—MAY BE USED TO CONSTRUCT, MAINTAIN, ETC., NECESSARY BUILDINGS FOR COUNTY CHILDREN'S HOME—REGARDLESS OF SECTION 5638 G. C.—SAID FUNDS CANNOT BE USED TO PURCHASE NEW SITE.

1. When the county commissioners sell real estate belonging to the county, they may create a special fund out of any part of the proceeds realized from the sale, from which they can construct, equip, maintain or repair the necessary buildings for a county children's home, without any reference to the provisions of section 5638 G. C.

2. No part of this fund can be used for the purchase of a new site for a county children's home. Hence, the provisions of section 5638 G. C. apply in the matter of purchasing a site for the county children's home.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 21, 1917.

HON. JOSEPH T. MICKLETHWAIT, Prosecuting Attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 30, 1917, in which you ask my opinion as to certain matters therein set out. Your communication reads as follows:

> "The commissioners of this county have concluded to sell the present children's home site and purchase a new one, using the proceeds from the sale of the old with which to buy the new site and erect buildings thereon at a cost of about $50,000.00.
> "In an opinion submitted by former Attorney-General Turner to the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, being opinion No. 1526, it was held that the county commissioners may sell at public sale real estate of the county when the interests of the county so require, or when the same is not needed for public use; the manner of disposal is one for their discretion, and if the interest of the county will be best subserved the same may be sold in lot or parcels.
> "The commissioners have asked me to prepare the necessary papers to dispose of this property under sections 2447 and 2447-1 of the General Code. The question presents itself to my mind as to whether or not the commissioners have the necessary authority, in view of the provisions of section 5638 of the General Code to make this expenditure, without first submitting the question to the voters of the county."

Section 5638 is as follows:

> " 'The county commissioners shall not levy a tax, appropriate money or issue bonds for the purpose of building county buildings, purchasing sites therefor, or for land for infirmary purposes, the expenses of which will exceed

$15,000.00, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or for building a county bridge, the expense of which will exceed $18,000.00, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or enlarge, repair, improve, or rebuild a public county building, the entire cost of which expenditure will exceed $10,000.00; without first submitting to the voters of the county, the question as to the policy of making such expenditure.'

"I would also call your attention in this connection to sections 2433 and 2434 of the General Code.

"You will, therefore, readily observe that the question herein raised was not passed upon in said opinion No. 1526."

As you suggest in your communication, the opinion you received from my predecessor, as of date April 29, 1916, covers merely the question of the sale of the present site of the children's home and the manner in which the county commissioners may conduct said sale. So we are now at the point as to how the county commissioners shall proceed after the sale of the present site is made.

From what you say in your present communication and what you said in the communication of my predecessor, I am taking it as a fact that the proceeds realized from the sale of the present site will be more than sufficient to take care of the cost of another site and the erection of the necessary buildings thereon. I am assuming this to be a fact for the reason that you set out in your former communication to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices that the present location is worth $100,000.00, and in your communication to me you suggest that the county commissioners are about to invest $50,000.00 in a new site and the necessary buildings thereon.

The section under which your county commissioners are proceeding to sell the present site is section 2447 G. C. This section reads as follows:

"Section 2447. If, in their opinion, the interests of the county so require, the commissioners may sell any real estate belonging to the county, and not needed for public use; and, in case of the sale of such real estate not used for county purposes, the proceeds of such sale or such parts thereof as the board of commissioners may designate may be placed by the commissioners in a separate fund to be used only for the construction, equipment, maintenance or repair of other county buildings, and the provisions of section 5638 of the General Code shall not apply to appropriations or expenditures of said fund."

It will be noted that under the provisions of this section the county commissioners may set aside all the proceeds realized from the sale, or any part thereof, in a separate fund. It further provides that the moneys in this fund shall be used only for the construction, equipment, maintenance or repair of other county buildings. And it further provides that the provisions of section 5638 G. C. shall not apply to appropriations or expenditures of said fund.

From the provisions of this section the county commissioners can easily take care of the matter of providing for the construction, equipment, maintenance and repair of the necessary buildings to be erected for the county children's home. They will simply have to create a fund out of the proceeds of the sale of the present site and place a sufficient amount in said fund to take care of the construction and equipment of the necessary buildings. This money then can be appropriated by the county commissioners without any reference to the provisions of section 5638 G. C., and therefore without any necessity of submitting the proposition, as to the wisdom of the expenditure, to the voters of the county.

But it will be noticed under the provisions of this section that this fund can be used only for the construction, equipment, maintenance or repair of county buildings. It therefore can not be used to purchase another site for your county children's home. So that in the matter of the purchasing of a site, we are driven to the provisions of section 5638 G. C. This section reads in part as follows:

> "Section 5638. The county commissioners shall not levy a tax, appropriate money or issue bonds for the purpose of building county buildings, purchasing sites therefor, or for land for infirmary purposes, the expenses of which will exceed $15,000.00, * * * without first submitting to the voters of the county, the question as to the policy of making such expenditure."

Now, the question immediately arises as to the amount of money your county commissioners will invest in a site for a children's home. If they invest $15,000.00 or less in said site, they can invest without first submitting to the voters of the county the question as to the policy of making such expenditure. But if they invest more than $15,000.00 in a site, it will be necessary for them first to submit the question to the voters of the county. This is true even though they have the funds necessary to purchase said site without levying a tax or without issuing bonds. This for the reason that section 5638 G. C. provides that the county commissioners can not appropriate money for any of the purposes mentioned in said section when the cost exceeds a certain amount without first submitting the question to the voters of the county.

There is no question that the county commissioners may use a part of the proceeds of the sale of the present site for the purchase of a new site, but in doing this they will be compelled to appropriate the money out of some fund, with which to purchase the new site. And when they appropriate money under the provisions of section 5638 G. C., and the amount appropriated is more than $15,000.00, the question must be submitted to the voters of the county.

In your communication you made reference to sections 2433 and 2434 G. C. The provisions of these sections will not help us to solve the problem which you have on your hands. Section 2433 G. C. provides as follows:

> "Section 2433. When, in their opinion, it is necessary, the commissioners may purchase a site for a court house or jail, or public comfort station, or land for an infirmary, or a detention home, or additional land for an infirmary or county children's home at such price and upon such terms of payment, as are agreed upon between them and the owner or owners of the property. The title to such real estate shall be conveyed in fee simple to the county."

It will be noted that the only power given to the county commissioners in this section, in so far as it pertains to county children's home, is to purchase "additional land for a county children's home." This would not apply to the purchase of a site for a county children's home. The same reasoning applies to section 2434 G. C.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the county commissioners may create a special fund out of any part of the proceeds realized from the sale of the present site of the county children's home, from which special fund they may use sufficient money to construct, equip, maintain and repair the buildings necessary to be erected on said site, without any reference to the provisions of section 5638 G. C.; and they may appropriate any part of the balance of the proceeds realized from the sale of the present site, for the purchase of a new site for the county children's home, but in the event the amount invested in the new site is more than $15,000.00, it will be necessary for your commissioners first to submit the question as to the policy of making such expenditures to the voters of your county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE DEPOSITORY—DEPOSITS MUST BE EITHER CASH OR BONDS—TIME CERTIFICATE OF DEPOSIT INSUFFICIENT—TREASURER NOT AUTHORIZED TO PAY INTEREST ON CASH DEPOSITS.

A foreign trust company making a deposit under section 9778 G. C. with the treasurer of state, in cash, may not be allowed interest on the deposit so made.

Such deposit must be either in cash or bonds—a time certificate of deposit in a state depository is insufficient.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 21, 1917.

HON. CHESTER E. BRYAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 9, 1917, submitting a file of correspondence between you and The Otis Steel Company and The Guardian Savings and Trust Company, respectively, both of Cleveland, and both relating to certain matters in connection with a deposit which you hold in your official capacity for the Trustees, Executors and Securities Insurance Corporation, Ltd., of London, England.

It appears that the deposit at present exists in the form of bonds which are about to mature. The Trust Company does not desire at the present time to reinvest the deposit and for that reason asks you the following questions:

> "1. If the deposit is converted into cash, may interest be paid to the depositor thereon at the average rate on inactive state deposits?
> "2. If this can not be done, may the treasurer of state accept, in lieu of cash or securities, a certificate of deposit upon a state depository bank, maturing in six months?"

Sections 9778 and 9779 G. C. govern the matter concerning which the inquiry is made. They provide as follows:

> "Section 9778. No such corporation either foreign or domestic shall accept trusts which may be vested in, transferred or committed to it by an individual, or court, until its paid in capital is at least one hundred thousand dollars, and until such corporation has deposited with the treasurer of state in cash fifty thousand dollars if its capital is two hundred thousand dollars or less, and one hundred thousand dollars if its capital is more than two hundred thousand dollars, except that, the full amount of such deposit by such corporation may be in bonds of the United States, or of this state, or any municipality or county therein, or in any other state, or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past paid dividends of at least three per cent. on its common stock.
> "Section 9779. The treasurer of state shall hold such fund or securities deposited with him as security for the faithful performance of the trusts assumed by such corporation, but so long as it continues solvent he shall permit it to collect the interest on its securities so deposited. From time to time said treasurer shall permit withdrawals of such securities or cash, or part thereof, on the deposit with him of cash, or other securities of the kind heretofore named, so as to maintain the value of such deposit as herein provided."

These sections are not ambiguous in any way. What is expressly authorized by them to be done, may be done; what is not expressly authorized by them to be done, there is no authority to do. Though the treasurer of state may lawfully permit the depositor to collect the interest on securities deposited with him under these sections, there is no authority for him to pay interest at any given rate upon cash so deposited.

Your first question must therefore be answered in the negative.

Your second question is to be answered by observing that the deposit must be either in cash or in bonds. In my opinion a time certificate of deposit, not payable on demand, is neither cash nor bonds.

Therefore the second question must be answered in the negative.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—UNDER SECTION 5656 G. C.—MAY NOT BORROW MONEY TO COVER OVERDRAFT IN COUNTY FUND—NOR PAY OBLIGATION INCURRED IN VIOLATION OF SECTION 5660 G. C.

County commissioners may not borrow money under authority of section 5656 G. C. for the purpose of covering an overdraft in a county fund; neither may obligations against such fund incurred in violation of the provisions of section 5660 G. C. be funded under said section 5656 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 23, 1917.

HON. CHARLES G. WHITE, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged I am in receipt of your favor of March 7, 1917, in which you ask my opinion on facts stated by you as follows:

"We are placed in this position in our county and the commissioners have asked me to secure an opinion from your office. The bridge fund of our county is now overdrawn about $9,000.00 and there is no immediate relief in sight. It has been the custom of our commissioners to issue a note to some bank in the county for the payment of overdrawn amounts in this fund. I can find no authority for doing this and have so informed the commissioners. They, however, feel that since it has been done in the past that it should not be stopped at this time and argue that the men who have honestly done this work for the county should be paid in some manner, and have insisted that I consult your department and ascertain if there is not some way that they can issue either notes or bonds to take up these obligations.

"I desire to say also, that the auditor did not certify that the necessary funds were on hand to pay these bills. If there is any way that this can be met

I would appreciate finding it out, as well as the commissioners, but I have spent not a little time investigating the matter before referring to your office, and found none."

To my mind your communication is somewhat ambiguous. It is not altogether clear whether you mean to say that there is an actual overdraft in the county bridge fund to the amount of $9,000.00 caused by payment out of the county treasury of the claim against the county bridge fund in the amount of $9,000.00 in excess of the amount standing to the credit of the bridge fund, or whether you mean that obligations to the amount of $9,000.00 in excess of the amount of the credit of the county bridge fund have been incurred which obligations are still unpaid. It does appear, however, that the county auditor did not certify that the necessary funds were on hand to pay the claims which gave rise to the situation as stated in your communication. With respect to this, section 5630 of the General Code, in so far as applicable to the question at hand, provides that the commissioners of the county shall not enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money unless the county auditor first certifies that money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, or has been levied and placed on the duplicate and in process of collection and not appropriated for any other purpose; while section 5661 General Code provides that all contracts, agreements or obligations or orders and resolutions entered into or passed contrary to the provisions of section 5660 General Code shall be void.

If the claims against the county bridge fund mentioned in your communication were paid out of the county treasury without necessary money standing to the credit of the county bridge fund an illegal overdraft in such fund was thereby created, and it is clear that the county commissioners have no authority to restore such fund by issuing deficiency bonds for want of statutory authority in the premises, neither can they borrow money under the provisions of section 5656 General Code for the reason: 1st, that this section applies only to the funding of unpaid legal indebtedness, and for the reason, 2nd, that the overdraft was illegally created.

If, on the other hand, the claim against the county bridge fund still remains unpaid the same can not be funded under the provisions of section 5656 of the General Code for the reason, as I infer to be the fact from your communication, that the county auditor did not furnish the certificate required by section 5660 at the time the contracts were entered into out of which the claims against the county bridge fund arose. This being so, the contracts were void under the provisions of section 5661 General Code and the claims arising under the same are illegal; and in as much as section 5658 General Code provides with respect to the question at hand that no indebtedness of the county shall be funded under section 5656 unless such indebtedness is first determined to be an existing valid and binding obligation of the county it is apparent that section 5656 General Code has no application to these claims.

In this connection it may be suggested meeting the possible condition of an actual overdraft in the county bridge fund as hereinabove defined that the county commissioners may by following the procedure provided for in sections 2296 et seq. of the General Code make a transfer of the money from some other county fund to the county bridge fund. Not knowing what the condition of the other funds of your county is, I am not, of course, in position to make any recommendation along this line.

In conclusion I might say that in as much as there is no question with reference to the limitation of the tax rate here made I see no reason why it was necessary to create an overdraft in the county bridge fund or create obligations against the same without there being sufficient money in the county treasury to the credit of the bridge fund; for under the general power granted to the county commissioners by section 2434 General Code they could have issued bonds for the purpose of constructing, repairing or improving bridges up to the amount of $18,000.00 without the vote of the people provided for in section 5638 General Code, or if an emergency was presented within the provisions of section 5643 General Code the county commissioners could have borrowed the money by the issue of bonds under the provisions of section 5644 General Code without a vote of the people without reference to the amount of such bond issue.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONSOLIDATION OF OHIO CORPORATION WITH FOREIGN CORPORATION—SHARES OF STOCK OF SAID COMPANY NOT EXEMPT FROM TAXATION UNDER SECTION 5372 G. C.—SUCH COMPANY AN OHIO CORPORATION WITHIN MEANING OF, AND STOCK EXEMPT FROM TAXATION UNDER SECTION 192 G. C.

The shares of stock of a railroad company formed by consolidation of an Ohio corporation with a company of another state are not exempt from taxation in this state under the provisions of section 5372 General Code, but the company so formed is an Ohio corporation within the meaning of section 192 General Code, and the shares of stock of such railroad company are exempt from taxation in this state under said section 192 General Code, which provides that no person shall be required to list for taxation a share of capital stock of an Ohio corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 23, 1917.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your communication of March 8, 1917, asking for an opinion, in which you say:

> "The commission is in receipt of an inquiry from the auditor of Hamilton county as to whether the stock of The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad Company in possession of residents of Ohio is taxable in this state. The history of the organization of this company as given in Poor's Manual of Railroads is as follows:
> " 'Chartered January 13, 1906, in Ohio, and January 16, 1906, in Pennsylvania. Consolidation, effective as of January 1, 1906, of the Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula R. R. Company (see manual for 1905, page 767), and the New Castle & Beaver Valley R. R. Company (see manual for 1905, page 763). The property was originally leased to the Pennsylvania Company from year to year at an annual rental equal to the net earnings of the road after deducting operating expenses and taxes. Stockholders on May 15, 1910, voted to lease the property to the Pennsylvania Company for 999 years, from July 1, 1910, on the following general basis: 1. The efficient operation and maintenance of the property; 2. The maintenance of the corporated organization; 3. The payment of a guaranteed rental sufficient to pay the interest on the funded debt and other obligations, and a dividend of 7 per cent. on the preferred and common capital stock; 4. Betterments to meet from time to time, the demands of the increasing business, the cost of which shall be represented by capital stock or bonds to be issued by the company and to bear such rate of dividend or interest as may be satisfactory to the lessee; and 5. The failure to pay the rental provided in the lease, and perform all of the covenants therein contained, for ninety days, shall work a forfeiture of the lease.'

"Kindly advise the commission whether such stock is taxable in Ohio."

Section 2 of article XII of the State Constitution, among other things, provides that

"Laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise; * * *."

Sections 5324 and 5328 of the General Code provide as follows:

"Section 5324. The term 'investment in stocks' as so used, includes all moneys invested in the capital or stock of a bank whether incorporated under the laws of this state or the United States, or an association, corporation, joint stock company, or other company, the capital or stock of which is or may be divided into shares, which are transferable by each owner without the consent of the other partners or stockholders, for the taxation of which no special provision is made by law, held by persons residing within this state, either for themselves or others.'

"Section 5328. All real or personal property in this state, belonging to individuals or corporations, and all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, or otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation, except only such property as may be expressly exempted therefrom. Such property, moneys, credits, and investments shall be entered on the list of taxable property as prescribed in this title."

In view of the general provisions of section 5328 of the General Code, above quoted, and the fact that the question made by you calls for a consideration and construction of statutory provisions exempting from taxation shares of stock in a corporation under certain circumstances, it may be well at this point to note the cardinal rule of construction applicable to the consideration of statutes granting immunity from taxation that they are to be construed in all strictness and all questions of doubt relative thereto resolved against the claimed exemption.

On this point, the supreme court of this state in the case of Lee v. Sturgis; Insurance Company V. Ratterman, 46 O. S., 153, 159, says:

"* * * where an exception or exemption is claimed, the intention of the general assembly to except must be expressed in clear and unambiguous terms. 'The exemption must be shown indubitably to exist. At the outset every presumption is against it. A well-founded doubt is fatal to the claim. It is only where the terms of the concession are too explicit to admit fairly of any other construction that the proposition can be supported.' Intent to confer immunity from taxation must be clear beyond a reasonable doubt, for, as in the case of a claim of grant, nothing can be taken against the state by presumption or inference. * * *"

Among other cases supporting the rule of construction above noted are:

Cincinnati College v. State, 19 Ohio, 110;
Lander v. Burke, 65 O. S., 532, 542;
Watterson v. Halliday, 77 O. S., 150, 170.

The question made by you immediately depends upon the consideration and construction of section 5372 and section 192 of the General Code, which are as follows:

> "Section 5372. Personal property of every description, moneys and credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies or otherwise, shall, except as otherwise provided, be listed in the name of the person who was or became the owner thereof on the day preceding the second Monday of April, in each year, and the transfer or sale of any taxable property subsequently thereto shall not authorize any person to omit the same from his list nor the assessor to fail to assess the same in the name of the person who would have been required to list it, although such listing be not made until after the sale or transfer of such property; but all such property shall be listed for taxation in the same manner as if no sale or transfer thereof had been made. No person shall be required to list for taxation any shares of the capital stock of a company, the capital stock of which is taxed in the name of such company.
> "Section 192. No person shall be required to list for taxation a share of the capital stock of an Ohio corporation; or a share of the capital stock of a foreign corporation, the property of which is taxed in Ohio in the name of such corporation; or a share of the capital stock of any other foreign corporation, if the holder thereof furnishes satisfactory proof to the taxing authorities that at least two-thirds of the property of such corporation is taxed in Ohio and the remainder is taxed in another state or states, provided such corporation, as a fee for the privilege of exercising its franchise in Ohio, pays annually the same percentage upon its entire authorized capital stock that is required by law to be paid by a domestic corporation on its subscribed or issued capital stock."

By the provisions of section 5372 it is clear that the question as to exemption of shares of stock from taxation in this state does not depend upon whether the company is a foreign or domestic corporation, but does depend upon whether its capital stock is taxed in the name of such company. The term "capital stock" as used in section 5372 is represented by whatever it is invested in, and means corporate property.

> Jones v. Davis, 35 O. S. 474, 477.
> Hubbard v. Brush, 61 O. S. 252, 261.

The shares of stock, which are the subject of the inquiry made by you and as to which you ask my opinion, are, I assume, shares in the consolidated corporation now known as "The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad Company," and not those of the constituent company of the same name, for the scheme of consolidation provided by law as to railroad companies contemplates the conversion of the stock of the constituent companies in exchange for stock in the consolidated company.

It is evident that the "capital stock," i. e., corporate property of the consolidated corporation, now known as The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad Company, is not all taxed in its name in this state, for a part of the physical corporate property is located in the state of Pennsylvania and is not subject to taxation in this state. This being so, the shares of capital stock of The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad Company are not exempt from taxation under section 5372 of the General Code.

In the case of Hubbard v. Brush, 61 O. S. 252, the supreme court, in construing section 2746 R. S., and which was identical as to provisions with section 5372 General Code above quoted, in its opinion say :

"The phrase 'capital stock,' within the meaning of that term, as employed in that section, should be held to embrace the entire corporate property. If any part of the corporate property is not taxed within this state, the owners of shares of its stock who are residents of this state are not exempt by virtue of the provisions of that section from listing those shares for taxation in this state and paying taxes thereon, the exemption applying only in cases where the 'capital stock,' i. e., all the corporate property, has been taxed within this state."

Lander v. Burke, 65 O. S. 632.
Lee v. Sturges; Insurance Co. v. Ratterman, 46 O. S. 174.

There remains to be determined whether the shares of stock of this corporation are exempt from taxation under section 192 of the General Code. The first sentence of this section is as follows:

"No person shall be required to list for taxation a share of the capital stock of an Ohio corporation; * * *"

The articles of agreement of the consolidation referred to in your communication show that the corporation at that time and thereafter known as The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad Company was a corporation formed by consolidation under the laws of Ohio and Pennsylvania of a number of Ohio and Pennsylvania railroad corporations, and the question presented on the consideration of the above quoted language of Section 192 of the General Code is whether the corporation formed by consolidation in 1906 of said The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad Company with The New Castle & Beaver Valley Railroad Company, a Pennsylvania corporation, and which consolidated company is now known as The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad Company, is an Ohio corporation within the meaning of said section. An Ohio corporation, I take it, is one created under the laws of the said state.

Section 2 of Article XIII of the constitution provides:

"Corporations may be formed under general laws; but all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed."

A railroad corporation may be created by filing articles of incorporation and by organization under the general corporation statutes of this state. (Secs. 3235 et seq. Revised Statutes; Secs. 8623 et seq. General Code). And if the corporation now known as The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad had been so created and had thereafter, by purchase or merger, acquired the properties of The New Castle & Beaver Valley Railroad Company located in the state of Pennsylvania, I do not apprehend that The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad Company would for that reason be considered any the less an Ohio corporation within the meaning of section 192 of the General Code or otherwise. Nor do I apprehend that a railroad company formed by the consolidation under the laws of two or more existing railroad companies incorporated under the laws of this state would be considered any the less an Ohio corporation than if it had filed articles of incorporation and had organized pursuant to the general incorporation statutes.

The question, however, is as to the status of the corporation formed by the consolidation mentioned in your communication. That the railroad company at that time known as The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad Company was a corporation organized under the laws of Ohio seems to have been an accepted fact although such company, as before noted, had been formed by the consolidation of a number of smaller Ohio and Pennsylvania Railroad companies; otherwise there would have been no lawful authority for the consolidation of this company with the New Castle & Beaver Valley Railroad Company, which was wholly a Pennsylvania corporation, for the laws of this state have never provided for the consolidation of railroad companies, except where at least one of the companies to be consolidated is an Ohio corporation. (Section 3380 Revised Statutes; 9026 General Code.)

In the case of Ashley v. Ryan, 49 O. S. 504, 528, the supreme court of this state speaking of consolidation under the laws of this state of the Toledo & Western Railway Company, an Ohio corporation, with a number of railroad companies organized under the laws of other states and together known as the Wabash System, says:

> "The further claim is made that, by filing the articles of agreement of consolidation of the companies composing the Wabash system, no 'new corporation' is created; and, therefore, the provisions of section 148a, as amended February 12, 1889, do not apply to them; that this section only applies where all the companies entering into the consolidation are Ohio companies. If this were so, then the plaintiffs should not have presented their articles to the secretary of state to be filed and recorded. But we are of the opinion that it is not so, and that a new company is formed in the one case as well as in the other. Referring to the Revised Statutes on the subject of 'consolidation,' it will be observed that section 3379 authorizes the consolidation of Ohio companies and that the next authorizes the consolidation of a company in this state with a company in an adjoining state. The next section, 3381, provides how the consolidation is to be effected, and applies without distinction to either case. It is then provided by section 3382 that when the agreement is made and perfected, and the same, or a copy thereof, is filed with the secretary of state, 'the several companies parties thereto shall be deemed and taken to be one company, possessing within this state all the rights, privileges and franchises, of a railroad company.' And by section 3384 it is provided that, upon the election of the directors of the consolidated company, all and singular the rights, privileges, franchises and property of the companies who are parties to the agreement shall be transferred to and vested in the 'new company without further act or deed.' The result is that by consolidation, whether between Ohio companies or between an Ohio company and companies of another state, a new company is formed by the extinguishment of the old ones. And it has been so determined in a number of cases. Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S., 324; Compton v. Railway Co., 45 Ohio St., 592, 615; Lee v. Sturges, 46 Ohio St., 163, 169."

In the case of Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S., 319, 323, the supreme court of the United States having for consideration and determination the question of the status of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company, a corporation formed in 1869 by the consolidation of an Ohio railway company with a number of railway companies organized under the laws of other states, with respect to the effect of such consolidation, says:

> "When the consolidation was completed the old corporations were destroyed, a new one was created, and its powers were 'granted' to it, in all respects, in the view of the law, as if the old companies had never existed, and neither of them had ever enjoyed the franchises so conferred. The same legislative will created and endowed the new corporation. It did one as much as the other. In this respect there is no ground for any distinction.
> "These views are sustained by several well considered cases exactly in point. One of them embodies the unanimous judgment of this court. Clearwater v. Meredith, 1 Wall., 25; McMahan v. Morrison, 16 Ind., 172; the State of Ohio v. Sherman, 22 Ohio St., 411; Shields v. the State of Ohio, 26 Ohio St., 86."

In the case of the State of Ohio ex rel. v. Sherman, above cited, it was held that where a corporation in the pursuance of an act of the legislature transfers or conveys its franchise to be a corporation to others the transaction in legal effect is a surrender or abandonment of its charter by the corporation and a grant by the legislature of a similar charter to the transferees or purchasers.

In the case of Shields v. State of Ohio, 25 O. S., 86, the court having under consideration the question of the status of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company formed by the consolidation above referred to in the discussion of the case of Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S., 324, says:

"The consolidation took place in 1869, and was effected in all respects in pursuance of the act of April 10, 1856 (4 Curwen, 2791; S. & C. 327); and the claim is that a consolidation under that act is to be regarded in law as a surrender or relinquishment of the several individual charters of the companies so uniting, and the acceptance of a charter de novo from the state. If such be the law, it cannot well be denied that the consolidated company, organized, as it was, after the taking effect of the present constitution, is bound by and subject to all its provisions. Is such the legal effect of the consolidation? Are the old companies dissolved, and their charters extinguished, and is the consolidated company a new corporation, receiving all its rights and powers directly from the legislature?

"In the light of the decision by this court in the case of The State of Ohio v. Sherman et al. (22 Ohio St., 411), we do not see how an affirmative answer to these questions can be avoided. In the case referred to, the court held, substantially, that a transfer of all its franchises by a corporation, in pursuance of an act of the legislature authorizing the same, is in legal effect a grant by the legislature of similar franchises to the transferees, and constitutes them a new corporation. * * * This statute plainly contemplates and expressly provides for the formation of a 'new corporation.' The old stock is to be surrendered or extinguished; a new amount of capital stock is to be agreed upon and distributed to parties who voluntarily take the same; and a certificate is to be filed with the secretary of state, which, it is declared, 'shall be evidence of the existence of such corporation.' Section 3 of the act declares that the companies thus uniting 'shall be taken and deemed to be one corporation.' Section 5 provides for the election of a board of directors of the new corporation, which it denominates a 'corporation created by' the consolidation, 'and by the provisions of' that act, and vests in 'such new corporation,' all and singular 'the rights, privileges, and franchises' of the 'former corporations.' Nothing could be much plainer, it seems to us, than that a consolidated company, organized under such a statute, is a corporation 'formed under a general law,' within the meaning of article 13, section 2, of the present constitution, and as such, liable to all the limitations and restrictions therein, equally as corporations organized under the general corporation laws of the state, enacted under the present constitution. The fact that it is formed out of old defunct corporations does not make it any the less a corporation created by the legislature. It is not the material out of which it is formed, but the plastic hand which formed it, that we are to look to for its character and status under the constitution.

"In general, it may be said that a company created by the consolidation of foreign corporations, remains a domestic corporation of each of the con-curring states, the peculiar legislation of neither state becoming operative within the limits of the other. Its property within the particular state is subject to taxation, or vested with immunity from it, according to its laws, or to the provisions of the original charter of the constituent company, these privileges not being destroyed by the consolidation, unless otherwise provided by the constitution or by the statute. (Purdy's Beach on Private Corporations, vol. 3, section 1278.)

"The consolidation of two or more corporations pursuant to the laws of different states results in the formation of one corporation which is regarded as a domestic corporation in each of the states whose laws are followed in effecting such consolidation. (Smith v. Cleveland, etc., R. Co., 170 Ind., 382, 394; Ohio & Mississippi Railway Co. v. People ex rel., 123, Ill., 467.)"

In the case of Ashley v. Ryan, supra, the court in its opinion further says:

"There has been some diversity of opinion as to the status of a corporation formed by the consolidation of companies under the laws of different states. But it seems pretty well settled, upon principle at least, that where formed under co-operative legislation of the different states, it becomes a corporation in each state where its road is located. It is a legal entity residing and doing business in different states, with a status in each, derived from and determined by the laws of the state."

In the case of Muller v. Dows, 94 U. S. 444, it was held that a corporation created by the laws of the state of Iowa, although consolidated with another of the same name in the state of Missouri under the authority of the statutes of each state was, nevertheless, in Iowa a corporation existing there under the laws of that state alone.

The court in this case had under consideration the question whether the Chicago & Southwestern Railway Company was a corporation created by the laws of Iowa so as to confer jurisdiction on the circuit court of the United States for the district of Iowa of an action therein instituted against said railway company by certain plaintiffs, one of whom was a citizen of Missouri. The court in its opinion says.

"* * * it is argued on behalf of the appellants that the Chicago & Southwestern Railway Company cannot claim to be a corporation created by the laws of Iowa, because it was formed by a consolidation of the Iowa company with another of the same name, chartered by the laws of Missouri, the consolidation having been allowed by the statutes of each state. Hence, it is argued the corporation was created by the laws of Iowa and of Missouri; and as Burns, one of the plaintiffs, is a citizen of Missouri, it is inferred that the circuit court had no jurisdiction. We cannot assent to this inference. It is true the provisions of the statutes of Iowa, respecting railroad consolidation of roads within the state with others outside of the state, were that any railroad company, organized under the laws of the state, or that might thus be organized, should have power to intersect, join, and unite their railroads constructed or to be constructed in the state, or in any adjoining state, at such point on the state line, or at any other point, as might be mutually agreed upon by said companies; and such railroads were authorized to 'merge and consolidate the stock of the respective companies, making one joint-stock company of the railroads thus connected.' The Missouri statutes contained similar provisions; and with these laws in force the consoldation of the Chicago and Southwestern railways was effected. The two companies became one. But in the state of Iowa that was an Iowa corporation, existing under the laws of that state alone. * * *"

The foregoing authorities quite clearly indicate the view that a railroad company formed by authorized consolidation under the laws of this state is an Ohio corporation even though one of the constituent companies be a corporation of another state and this view tends to the conclusion that The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad Company formed by the consolidation mentioned in your communication is an Ohio corporation within the meaning of section 192 of the General Code.

Some doubt as to the correctness of the view indicated in the above authorities with respect to a consolidation of this kind is created by the language used in the opinion of the court in the case of Lee, Treasurer, v. Sturges, supra. Judge Spear, in this case, speaking of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company, which company, as before noted herein, was formed by consolidation under the laws of this state, with respect to the question as to exemption from taxation of the shares of stock of this company under sections 3 and 59 of the act of April 5, 1859, carried into the Revised Statutes as section 2746 and later into the General Code as section 5372, above quoted, expressed the view that The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company, as to matters of taxation, was essentially a foreign corporation.

The considerations presented in the argument in said opinion preliminary to the statement just noted, however, are more immediately pertinent to the obvious conclusion reached in said opinion, that the question whether the shares of stock of The Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway Company held in Ohio are taxable here is not to be answered in the negative merely because it may be ascertained that the company was incorporated under the laws of Ohio; and it is clear from the opinion in this case that the decision of the court on the question presented would have been the same had the view been therein expressed that this company was to all intents and purposes an Ohio corporation, and this for the obvious reason there appearing that the larger part of the property of said company was not taxable in this state.

Though the question is inherently one of some difficulty, I am inclined to the view that any corporation formed under the general laws of this state as required by section 2 of article XIII of the State Constitution is an Ohio corporation, and in as much as it has been expressly held in the case of Shields v. State of Ohio, 26 O. S. 86, before noted, that a consolidated company organized under the statutes of this state providing for the consolidation of railroad companies is a corporation formed under the general laws within the meaning of said section 2 of article XIII of the State Constitution, I am of the opirion that the company formed by the consolidation mentioned in your communication is an Ohio corporation, and admitting, for the purposes of this opinion, the constitutionality of section 192 of the General Code in so far as it pertains to the question at hand, I am of the opinion that the shares of stock of The Pittsburgh, Youngstown & Ashtabula Railroad Company are exempt from taxation in this state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE.
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF NILES CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:

"RE:—Bonds of Niles city school district in the sum of $9,000.00, issued for the purpose of improving the high school property and obtaining additional school property, being 18 bonds of $500.00 each."

ROAD IMPROVEMENT—BONDS FOR SAME UNDER AGREEMENT BETWEEN TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES AND COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—FOR TOWNSHIP'S SHARE OF COST—SHOULD BE ISSUED UNDER SECTION 6929 G. C. AND NOT UNDER SECTION 3295 G. C.

Section 6929 General Code governs in the matter of issuing bonds to cover a township's share of the cost and expense of a road improvement under an agreement as to the division of the cost and expense of such improvement made by the trustees of said township with the board of county commissioners under section 6921 General Code, and such bonds should be issued under said section 6929 and not under section 3295 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am herewith returning to you transcript of the proceedings of the trustees of Middleburgh township, Cuyahoga county, relating to the issue of bonds by the said trustees in the sum of ten thousand dollars for the purpose of paying the township's share of the improvement of East Bagley road in said township on an agreement made by and between the said trustees and the county commissioners of Cuyahoga county.

The issue of these bonds has been provided for by the trustees on the assumed authority of section 3295 of the General Code, as amended, 106 O. L., 536. This section as amended provides generally that the trustees in the township may issue bonds for any of the purposes for which municipal corporations may issue bonds, and for the purpose of providing funds to pay the township's share of the cost and expense of any improvement made under an agreement with the county commissioners.

The transcript indicates that the East Bagley road improvement, to which this bond issue relates, is an improvement projected and conducted, or to be conducted, by the county commissioners of Cuyahoga county.

The transcript shows that on the second day of September, 1916, an agreement was entered into between the county commissioners and the township trustees with respect to the division of the cost and expense of improving that part of the road in Middleburgh township, and it was thereby agreed that the township trustees should pay the sum of $9,665.00 as the township's share of the cost and expense, which agreement was later on, on September 4, 1916, incorporated in the record of the township trustees by resolution duly adopted. The improvement of this road is projected and conducted by the county commissioners under chapter 6 of the Cass Road Law, which chapter has been carried into the General Code as sections 6906 to 6956, inclusive.

Section 6921 of the General Code authorizes the county commissioners to enter into an agreement with the trustees of a township in which said improvement is in whole or in part situated, whereby the county and the township may pay such proportion or amount of the total cost and expense of the improvement as may be agreed upon between them.

Section 6926 of the General Code provides for a levy by the county commissioners of a tax upon all taxable property of the county for the purpose of paying the county's share of the cost and expense of an improvement under this chapter; while section 6927 of the General Code provides for a levy by the county commissioners upon all the taxable property of the township to pay the township's share of the cost and expense of such improvement.

Section 6929 General Code provides for an issue of bonds by the county commissioners in anticipation of the collection of such taxes, which bonds cover not only the share of the cost and expense of such improvement to be borne by the county, but that to be borne by the township as well. It is likewise clear that the county commissioners may, under the provissions of section 6929 issue bonds covering the share of the cost and expense apportioned to a township under some plan provided for in section 6919 General Code, and likewise the share apportioned to the township by agreement provided in section 6921. It is manifest that the scheme provided by section 6929 with respect to the issue of bonds covering the township's share of the cost and expense of a road improvement projected by the county commissioners under chapter 6 of the Cass Road law, is altogether different, if not entirely inconsistent with that provided by section 3295 General Code. In one way, the bonds to meet the township's share of the improvement are issued by the county commissioners, in the other, by the township trustees; in one way the bonds are subject only to the fifteen mill limitation of the Smith one per cent. law, in the other way the bonds are subject to the interior limitation of two mills for township purposes and the limitation of ten mills for all purposes.

Looking to legislative history with reference to the act in which section 3295 was amended and the act enacting the Cass road law, I note that the Cass law was enacted May 17, 1915, approved by the governor on June 2, 1915, and filed in the office of the secretary of state on June 5, 1915, while the act amending section 3295 was passed on May 27, 1915, approved by the governor on June 4, 1915, and filed in the office of the secretary of state on une 5, 1915, so that it appears the Cass law was both enacted and approved before the act amending section 3295, but the Cass law went into effect as of a later date for the reason that the act amending section 3295 went into effect after the expiration of the ninety day referendum period, while the Cass law went into effect, by its own terms, on September 6, 1915.

On the opinion of the court in the case of State v. Lathrop, 93 O. S. 79, 86, it might be argued that in so far as section 6929 is in conflict with section 3295 as to operation with respect to the transaction here under consideration effect should be given to the provisions of section 6929 as the later statute.

I do not deem it necessary, however, to decide whether or not there is any conflict in the application of the provisions of section 3295 and of those of section 6929, nor as to how such conflict, if any, should be decided.

Section 3295 seems to be a general statute providing authority in the township trustees to issue bonds for the various purposes, including that of providing funds to pay the township's share of the cost of an improvement made under an agreement between the township trustees and the county commissioners. The authority granted to the township trustees by this section to borrow money for this purpose by the issue of bonds does not on familiar principles authorize the township trustees to make an agreement with the county commissioners with respect to the division of the cost and expense of road improvements, and to get this independent power upon the part of the township trustees we must find it, if at all, in other statutory provisions. We find such power granted to the township trustees by the provisions of section 6921 General Code, but this section, as before noted, is a part of chapter 6 of the Cass road law relating to the matter of road construction and improvement by county commissioners, and with respect to the matter of issuing bonds to cover the township's share of the cost and expense of the road improvement under the agreement provided for in section 6921. We find full provision therefor in section 6929, and on familiar principles of construction this is the section which should govern in the matter of issuing said bonds rather than section 3295.

In opinion 1327 addressed by my predecessor, Mr. E. C. Turner, to Honorable Irving Carpenter, prosecuting attorney, Norwalk, Ohio, under date of March 6, 1916, it was held that where a road is improved under an agreement between the county commissioners and the township trustees by the terms of which the cost is to be divided between the county and the township and it is necessary to issue bonds to cover the township's share of the cost and expense of such improvement the same should be issued by the county commissioners under authority of section 6929 General Code. In this opinion Mr. Turner did not expressly hold that the township trustees did not have authority under section 3295 General Code to issue bonds to cover the township's share of the cost and expense of such improvement, but did hold specifically that in such case the bonds should be issued by the county commissioners under section 6929.

Again, in opinion 1520 addressed to you under date of April 27, 1916, Mr. Turner held in an opinion disapproving bonds of Norwich township, Huron county, Ohio, in the sum of $17,000.00, to improve roads in said township, that the only authority possessed by the township trustees to borrow money for improvement of roads was that prescribed by sections 3298-8 and 3298-9 General Code, the same being a part of the Cass road law. This opinion is not exactly in point upon the question here presented, but I am in full accord with the opinion of Mr. Turner first above noted, and feel that, on account of the great uncertainty existing with respect to the authority of township trustees to issue bonds under section 3295 General Code, until the question is determined by our highest court the bonds covering cases of this kind should be issued by the county commissioners; and for all of the above reasons I would respectfully recommend that the resolution heretofore adopted by your board purchasing these bonds be rescinded, but that such recision be general and not on the specific ground of the illegality of the issue so that the township trustees may, if they care to do so, sell these bonds upon the open market without the embarrassment which an express finding by your board as to the illegality of the issue might occassion.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HOUSE BILL 584—MONEYS APPROPRIATED THEREIN FOR CONSTRUCTION, ETC., OF ROADS—CANNOT BE CONTRACTED AGAINST UNTIL JULY 1, 1917.

The moneys appropriated under house bill No. 584 for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of inter-county highways and main market roads cannot be contracted against by the state highway department before July 1, 1917, with a view of paying the obligations incurred under said contracts out of the moneys so appropriated. This for the reason that said act provides that it shall not become effective until July 1, 1917, and for the reason that section 2 provides that the sums appropriated shall not be used to pay liabilities existing prior to July 1, 1917.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 7, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to a certain matter therein set out. Your communication reads as follows:

> "I respectfully direct your attention to an opinion rendered me by Hon. Edward C. Turner, former attorney-general of Ohio on June 21, 1915, in response to my question as to whether or not this department might legally enter into contracts in anticipation of moneys to come into the state treasury at the August, 1915, settlement, such sums having been appropriated by the legislature.
> "The following is the last paragraph of Mr. Turner's opinion:
> " 'Answering your question specifically, it is, therefore, my opinion that you may at the present time enter into contracts in anticipation of the moneys that will come into the state treasury at the August, 1915, settlement, the only precaution to be observed by you in the premises being to so arrange the contracts that it will not be necessary to actually make any payments to the contractors from the appropriation about which you inquire until after the funds represented by such appropriation shall have come into the state treasury.'
> "I further respectfully direct your attention to house bill No. 584 of the present general assembly which contains appropriations to the state highway department for the two years, commencing July 1, 1917, and ending June 30, 1919. Section 10 of this act is as follows:
> " 'This act shall not take effect until July 1, 1917.'
> "I respectfully request your opinion as to whether this department is obliged to wait until the going into effect of house bill No. 584 on July 1, 1917, before it will be proper to contract against moneys to come into the treasury at the August 1917 settlement, or whether contracts may be entered into prior to the actual taking effect of the above act involving funds to come into the state treasury at the August 1917 settlement."

In your communication you refer to an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Mr. Turner, in reference to a certain matter submitted to him by your department. This makes it necessary for me to note the opinion rendered by Mr. Turner to your department, and decide whether the facts upon which he rendered you the opinion are similar to the facts upon which you ask my opinion.

Mr. Turner's opinion was based upon house bill No. 709, which is found in 106

O. L. 452. This act was passed May 27, 1915, approved June 2, 1915, and filed in the office of the secretary of state on June 4, 1915. Mr. Turner's opinion is found in Vol. II, p. 1064 of annual report of the attorney general for 1915, being No. 521. It will be noted that his opinion was rendered on June 21, 1915; that is, it was rendered after the date of the filing of said house bill No. 709 with the secretary of state. In his opinion he says:

> "The various items carried in house bill No. 709 were available for contract purposes as soon as the bill became a law, which was on June 4, 1915."

Mr. Turner evidently considered that the provisions of section 1d of article II of the Constitution did not apply to this bill, possibly for the reason that he considered the appropriations made in said house bill were for the current expenses of the state government and state institutions; that is, provided for the current expenses of the state highway department, which is one of the departments of the state. I assume that Mr. Turner must have viewed the provisions of said house bill in this light, for otherwise the said law would not have become effective on June 4, 1915. Owing to the provisions of the referendum it would not have become effective for ninety days after June 4, 1915.

I am not passing upon the question as to whether the provisions, such as are found in house bill No. 709, are subject to the referendum, but I am assuming that this was the assumption of Mr. Turner in rendering his opinion. At least he went on the theory that the bill became a law on June 4, 1915, and the only thing upon which he passed was this:

> "The state highway commissioner may at the present time enter into contracts in anticipation of the moneys that will come into the state treasury at the August, 1915, settlement, provided such contracts are so arranged that it will not be necessary to actually make any payments to contractors from the proceeds of the August settlement until the funds have come into the state treasury."

That is, that the state highway commissioner, after the bill became a law, could contract against moneys which had not yet come into the state treasury and which would not come into the treasury until the August settlement of 1915.

Mr. Turner based his opinion to some extent upon an opinion rendered by Mr. Hogan, his predecessor, which opinion was rendered May 23, 1914, to Hon. James R. Marker, state highway commissioner, and is found in volume I, page 699, of the annual report of the attorney-general for 1914. But Mr. Hogan did not hold that items carried in an appropriation bill could be contracted against before the appropriation bill became effective. He held merely that contracts could be entered into involving the expenditure of money for which a levy had been made, before the money realized from the said tax levy is actually in the treasury.

With the above in mind, let us notice specifically the facts upon which the answer to your question must be based. Your question has to do with the provisions of House Bill No. 584, passed by the present legislature in its late session. The said bill was passed March 21, 1917, approved March 31, 1917, and filed with the secretary of state March 31, 1917, and if the principles of the referendum would apply to a bill such as this, it would not become effective until June 30, 1917. Section 10 of the bill itself provides that it shall not take effect until July 1, 1917.

The question is as to whether you can contract against the items appropriated in said law for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of inter-county highways and main market roads, before the law itself becomes effective. It is my opinion that you can not so contract. Until July 1, 1917, the said law and all the provisions thereof are held in abeyance. Until that date it has no more force or effect than if it had never been enacted.

It could hardly be said that your department could have in the year 1916 contracted against money which it anticipated would be appropriated by the legislature which would in all probability meet in 1917. Neither can you contract against moneys which in all probability will be appropriated on July 1, 1917, by virtue of the fact that the act will go into full force and effect as of that date.

Further, section 2 of said act provides as follows:

> "The following sums shall not be expended to pay liabilities or deficiencies existing prior to July 1, 1917, or incurred subsequent to June 30, 1919."

that is, the appropriations made in this act are to cover liabilities entered into after June 30, 1917, and prior to June 30, 1919. In other words, it was meant to cover a period of two years only, in order that it might comply with the provisions of the constitution that appropriations must be limited to a period of two years. If you enter into a contract before July 1, 1917, there is a liability incurred. The liability dates from the date upon which the contract is entered into, but section 2 provides that the sums appropriated in said act shall not be used to pay liabilities so entered into.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that your department can not contract against the appropriations made in said act before July 1, 1917, with the idea of paying the liabilities incurred under and by virtue of said contract out of the funds appropriated in said act.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HUMANE SOCIETY—NOT ENTITLED TO ANY PART OF FINES COLLECTED FOR VIOLATION OF SECTION 13378 G. C.

No part of the fines collected for violations of section 13378 of the General Code are payable to the humane society.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1917.

HON. LEWIS D. SLUSSER, Probate Judge of Summit County, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 24, 1917, as follows:

> "Will you kindly give me your ruling as to whether or not any part of the fines collected for a violation of section 13378 of the General Code, should be turned over to the Akron humane society.
> "It is my opinion that none of this amount should be so paid, but I am anxious to have your ruling prior to my quarterly settlement with the county treasurer."

I take it that your question is asked with the thought in mind that possibly the provisions of section 13376 G. C., as to payment of fines to the humane society, might apply as well to section 13378, since both relate to crimes in connection with cruelty to animals.

Sections 13376 and 13378 G. C. read as follows:

"Section 13376. Whoever overworks, overrides, overloads, tortures, deprives of necessary sustenance, unnecessarily or cruelly beats, needlessly mutilates or kills, or impounds or confines an animal and fails to supply it during such confinement with a sufficient quantity of good, wholesome food and water, or carries or conveys it in a cruel or inhuman manner, or keeps cows or other animals in an enclosure without wholesome exercise and change of air, or feeds cows on food that produces impure or unwholesome milk, or abandons to die an old, maimed, sick, infirm or diseased animal or works it, or being a person or corporation engaged in transporting live stock, detains such stock in railroad cars or compartments longer than twenty-four hours after they are so placed without supplying them with necessary food, water and attention, or permits such stock to be so crowded as to overlie, crush, wound or kill each other, shall be fined not less than two dollars nor more than two hundred dollars for the first offense, and for each subsequent offense such person shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than two hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than sixty days, or both. Nothing herein shall prevent the dehorning of cattle. All fines collected for violations of this section shall be paid to the society or association for the prevention of cruelty to animals, if there be such in the county, township, village or city where such violations occurred."

"Section 13378. Whoever engages in or is employed at dog fighting, cock fighting, bear baiting, pitting an animal against another, or cruelty to animals, or receives money for the admission of another to a place kept for such purpose, or uses, trains or possesses a dog or other animal for seizing, detaining or maltreating a domestic animal, shall be fined not less than five dollars nor more than one hundred and fifty dollars or imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than thirty days. Whoever knowingly purchases a ticket of admission to such place, or is present thereat, or witnesses such spectacle, shall be an aider and abettor."

As these sections stand today in the General Code, the provision of section 13376, as to payments of fines to the humane society, appears to have no application to section 13378, but whether it really has such application or not is best ascertained from an investigation into the legislative history of the two sections.

On February 17, 1831, in 29 O. L. 161, the legislature passed an act entitled "An act for the prevention of certain immoral practices." Sections 11 and 12 of this act read:

(11.) "That any person or persons who shall hereafter confine, or aid or assist in confining, any bull, steer, or other domestic or domesticated animal or animals, either by tying, penning or inclosing the same, for the purpose of bull baiting, bear baiting, or other purpose of torture; or shall aid or assist in torturing the same, when so tied or penned, either by dogs, whips, spears, or other instruments; shall forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding one hundred dollars."

(12.) "That if any person or persons shall publicly exhibit, or aid and assist in exhibiting, the game commonly called cock fighting, such person or persons shall forfeit and pay a fine not exceeding twenty dollars."

Section 14 of this act provided that all fines paid on account of prosecutions under the act should be collected in the name of the state and paid over into the township treasury for the use of schools in the township.

On March 29, 1875, an act was passed in 72 O. L. p. 129, "to prevent cruelty to animals and to provide for the organization of associations or societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals and to repeal certain acts herein named." Section 1 of this act referred to cruelty to animals and made certain cruel acts misdemeanors. Section 2 provided that any neglect to supply animals with food should be a misdemeanor. Section 4 provided that carrying animals in vehicles in a cruel or inhuman manner should be a misdemeanor. Section 6 provided that abandoning animals to die should be a misdemeanor. Section 7 made dog fighting or cock fighting a misdemeanor. Section 10 made the keeping or training of dogs for purposes of catching domestic animals a misdemeanor. Section 23 of the act provided in part:

> "All the funds collected from the fines and all the cases tried under the provisions of this act shall be paid into the society or association for the prevention of cruelty to animals, if any such society or association exists in such township, city or village where the case is tried, and if no such society exists in said township, city or village then such fine or fines shall be paid to the state society for the prevention of cruelty to animals."

On May 5, 1877, 74 O. L. 240, the legislature passed an act entitled "An act to amend, revise and consolidate the statutes relating to crimes and offenses and to repeal certain acts therein named; to be known as title 1, Crimes and Offenses, part 4 of the act to revise and consolidate the general statutes of Ohio." In this act, at page 298, the legislature expressly repealed the act of February 17, 1831, first above referred to, and at page 307 they repealed sections 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 7 and 10 of the act of March 29, 1875, above referred to, and substituted for all of these sections sections 21 and 22, at page 270, which sections read as follows:

> "Sec. 21. Whoever overdrives, overloads, tortures, torments, deprives of necessary sustenance, or unnecessarily or cruelly beats, or needlessly mutilates or kills any animal, or impounds or confines any animal in any place and fails to supply the same during such confinement with a sufficient quantity of good, wholesome food and water, or carries in or upon any vehicle, or otherwise, any animal in a cruel or inhuman manner, or who keeps cows or other animals in any inclosure without wholesome exercise and change of air, or feed cows on food that produces impure or unwholesome milk, or abandons to die any maimed, sick, infirm, or diseased animal, shall be fined not more than two hundred nor less than five dollars, or imprisoned not more than sixty days, or both.
> "Sec. 22. Whoever engages in or is employed at cock-fighting, dog-fighting, bear-baiting, pitting one animal against another of the same or of a different kind, or any similar cruelty to animals, or receives money for the admission of any person to any place kept for any such purpose, or uses, trains, or possesses a dog or other animal for the puspose of seizing, detaining, or maltreating, any domestic animal, shall be fined not more than one hundred and fifty nor less than five dollars, or imprisoned not more than thirty nor less than ten days. Any one who knowingly purchases a ticket of admission to any place mentioned in this section, or is present thereat, or witnesses such spectacle, shall be deemed an aider and abettor."

On June 20, 1879, the legislature repealed the remainder of the act of March 29, 1875, leaving nothing on the statute books relating to crimes in connection with cruelty to animals save the two sections adopted in the act of May 5, 1877 (74 O. L. 240-270), above quoted. These sections were carried into the Revised Statutes of 1880 as sections 6851 and 6852, and read as follows:

> "Sec. 6951. Whoever over-drives, over-loads, tortures, torments, deprives of necessary sustenance, or unnecessarily or cruelly beats, or needlessly mutilates or kills, any animal, or impounds or confines any animal in any place and fails to supply the same during such confinement with a sufficient quantity of good, wholesome food and water or carries in or upon any vehicle, or otherwise, any animal in a cruel or inhuman manner, or who keeps cows or other animals in any inclosure without wholesome exercise and change of air, or feeds cows on food that produces impure or unwholesome milk, or abandons to die any maimed, sick, infirm, or diseased animal, or, being a person or corporation engaged in transporting live stock, detains such stock in railroad cars, or in compartments, for a longer continuous period than twenty-four hours after the same are so placed, either within or beyond this state, without supplying the same with necessary food, water, and attention, or permits such stock to be so crowded together as to overlie, crush, wound, or kill each other, shall be fined not more than two hundred nor less than five dollars, or imprisoned not more than sixty days, or both.

"Sec 6952. Whoever engages in or is employed at cock-fighting, dog-fighting, bear-baiting, pitting one animal against another of the same or of a different kind, or any similar cruelty to animals, or receives money for the admission of any person to any place kept for any such purposes, or uses, trains, or possesses a dog or other animal for the puspose of seizing, detaining, or maltreating, any domestic animal, shall be fined not more than one hundred and fifty nor less than five dollars or imprisoned not more than thirty nor less than ten days; and (any) one who knowingly purchases a ticket of admission to any place mentioned in this section, or is present thereat, or witnesses such spectacle, shall be deemed an aider and abettor."

It will be noted that at this time no provision existed in law for the payment to the Humane Society of any of the fines collected under the "cruelty to animals" prosecutions, the old law making such provision having been repealed in toto.

Now on April 15, 1881, the legislature passed an act (78 O. L. 134), entitled "An act to amend section 6951 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio." This act added the following provision to section 6951 R. S.:

"Provided, that all fines collected for violations of this section shall be paid to the society or association for the prevention of cruelty to animals, if any such society or association is organized in such township, village or city where such violation occurred."

This section so amended became section 13376 of the General Code and section 6952 Revised Statutes, above quoted, became section 13378 General Code in practically the same form as it was in the Revised Statutes.

From this review of the history of these sections, it is plain that the provision of section 13376 G. C., to the effect that all fines collected for violations of this section, shall be paid to the society or association for the prevention of cruelty to animals, if there be such in the county, township, village or city where such violation occurred, never has applied and does not now apply to the provisions of section 13378 of the General Code relating to dog-fights, cock-fights, bear-baiting, etc.

It is therefore my opinion, in direct answer to your question, that no part of the fine collected for a violation of section 13378 of the General Code should be paid over to the Akron Humane Society.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WHERE FUNDS APPROPRIATED FOR CONTRACT—HAVE BEEN DIVERTED TO OTHER PURPOSES—CONTRACTOR ENTITLED TO INTEREST ON FINAL ESTIMATES—FROM TIME SAME BECAME PAYABLE UNTIL PAID.

Interest should be allowed to a contractor on final estimates after the same are payable and until paid, where the funds which were appropriated for a contract have been used for other purposes without the knowledge or consent of such contractor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1917.

HON. JOS. T. MICKLETHWAIT, Prosecuting Attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of the 10th you request my opinion on the following statement of facts:

"After the disastrous flood of 1913 which destroyed the bridge across the Scioto river in this city and washed out and destroyed the road known as the Towpath road, which is in fact the only road entering the county seat from the west, steps were duly and legally taken by the county commissioners of this county in conformity to emergency legislation passed by the general assembly of Ohio, authorizing the issuing and sale of bonds for that purpose to raise funds and rebuild the bridge and repair and reconstruct the road. Ample funds were raised by the bond issue to fully pay for the work, including all additions and extras as well as the interest hereinafter mentioned, and leave a considerable surplus in the fund. The county auditor duly issued his certificate that the funds were in the treasury to pay for this contract.

"When the work was completed a final estimate was made by the engineer and given to the contractor showing the amount of the work done and the balance due him under the contract for the same. This estimate was presented to the county commissioners for allowance and payment. It was found by them to be correct, but a voucher was not issued for it at that time because in the meantime the money in this fund, which, as above stated, had been more than ample to pay this amount and all amounts pertaining to the repair of this road, had been by a former board of county commissioners diverted and used for other purposes and there were no funds on hand at that time with which to pay the contractor. The same remained unpaid for about a year and until funds were accumulated, by taxation, in the funds to which the money for this purpose had been diverted.

"The question is: Is the contractor entitled to interest upon the amount of his final estimate from the time it was presented to the county commissioners and found by them to be correct until the date of its payment?

"The county commissioners have requested my opinion on the question.

"I am constrained to the belief that under section 8305 of the General Code of Ohio which provides: '* * * when money becomes due and payable upon any * * * settlement between parties * * * the creditor shall be entitled to interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum and no more', the contractor would be entitled to such interest.

"I am led to this conclusion from the justice of the matter, the plain reading of the above section and the authorities among which is the case of Warren Bros. v. Cincinnati, 7 O. L. R., 542, but as the interest in question amounts to a considerable sum, something like a thousand dollars, I consider the matter of such importance that I would like to have some backing for my opinion or be convinced that I am wrong before advising the commissioners. Will you, therefore, kindly give me your official opinion upon the subject and very greatly oblige?"

When the contractor mentioned in your statement of facts entered into the contract with your board of county commissioners for the construction of the road and bridge named, the county auditor issued his certificate that the funds were in the treasury for the payment of any and all estimates under said contract as the said estimates became due and payable. An estimate becomes due and payable after the work on the contract is completed and said estimate has been made by the engineer and properly filed with and allowed by the board. The contractor has then performed his portion of the contract and the county must close the contract by performing its part, that is, by paying. If the funds have been diverted from their proper channels by the county officials, and through no fault of the contractor, the contractor cannot be made to suffer through non-payment thereof.

In the case of the Toledo Consolidated Electric Company v. Toledo, 13 O. D., 137, the ordinance provided that payment should be made for electic lighting twice each year. The payments, however, were made by the city from time to time and received by the compnay on account of the electric light furnished without reference to the dates mentioned in the ordinance and without anything being said by either party as to interest. The court held that by the great weight of authority the liability of the city for interest in its debts does not differ from that of individuals and the company was therefore allowed interest on overdue accounts.

In your case the estimate approved by the commissioners was a debt owing by the county to the contractor which was due and payable five days after the same had been approved or allowed by the commissioners. If the city in the case above referred to could be held on over due payments on its contract, how, then, can the county escape the payment of interest on an overdue payment on one of its contracts? The money was due the contractor when his contract was completed and his claim thereon allowed. The consideration, therefore, had been performed and whoever withheld same from him was liable for whatever damage was done on account of such withholding.

It is held in Gray v. Case School, 62 O. S., 1, that as a general rule interest is payable on money in the shape of damages on the ground of delay in paying the principal. That is, it is allowable by law as a compensation for a delay in payment after a maturity of an obligation.

In the case of Melanpy v. Building, etc., 13 O. D., 192-3, it was held that where default is made under an order for the payment of money, interest will run upon the amount so retained.

In Candee et al. v. Webster, 9 O. S., 452, the court, after reviewing the rule in many states, held as follows:

"In this want of uniformity in the decisions of the other states upon the subject, owing in part to the difference in the statutes of the different states, as well as to the different views taken of the subject, we have in the absence of any previously established rule in this state, regarded ourselves at liberty to have respect to our own statute and practice, and endeavor to apply to the case such a rule as may, in its general application, seem most in accordance with reason and the rights of the respective parties.

"Our statute of June 1, 1824, fixing the rate, and providing for the payment of interest in this state, provides 'that all creditors shall be entitled to receive interest on all money after the same shall become due,' * * * 'until such debt, money, or property shall be paid.' * * *

"It has already been seen that the law subjecting the debtor to the liability of paying interest in this state, continues such liability as an incident to the debt, 'until such debt, money, or property is paid.' The statute makes no exception in favor of any legal proceedings. * * *

"A party seeking to avail himself of an exemption from his general liability to pay interest on his indebtedness * * * must show such a state of facts as in equity entitle him to exemption."

The statute now follows very closely the statute as quoted in the last mentioned case. General Code section 8305 provides in part:

"* * * When money becomes due and payable upon * * * any * * * settlement between the parties * * * or other transaction, the creditor shall be entitled to interest at the rate of six per cent per annum and no more."

In your case the contractor is the creditor and the money was due and payable on the settlement between the parties. The statute makes no exception of the county and the creditor is entitled to interest.

A case of interest along this line is that of Warren Bros. Company v. City of Cincinnati, and was for the failure of the city to make a final estimate on completed work or to take the necessary steps leading up to settlement of the claims of the contractors within a reasonable time. This case is first reported in 7 Ohio Law Reporter, page 542, where the court holds:

"The failure of the city to do its duty by either accepting or rejecting the work alone makes it amenable to the cause of action set out in the petition; and if liable, damages as interest on the money thus wrongfully withheld is a proper remedy."

The said case was carried to the court of appeals, which court reversed the judgment of the lower court, and was carried then to the supreme court and reported in 92 O. S. p. 514, where the judgment of the court of appeals was reversed and the judgment of the court of common pleas affirmed in the following language:

"It is ordered and adjudged by this court, that the judgment of the said court of appeals be, and the same hereby is, reversed.

"And this court coming now to render the judgment that the court of appeals should have rendered, and it appearing that the city unreasonably delayed the payment of the money due the plaintiffs in error, * * * and it further appearing that the common pleas court allowed the city substantially one year in which to approve and accept, or reject the work of the contractors, for which time it allowed the contractors no interest on the balance of the unpaid contract price.

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged and decreed by this court, that the judgment of the common pleas court be, and the same is, hereby affirmed."

The money which should have remained in the fund from which payment could be made when the contract in your case was finished, was appropriated, when the contract was let, for the use and benefit of the contract. The certificate of the county auditor informs the contractor that said money was in the fund appropriated for that purpose at the time the contract was let. It was through no fault of the contractor that said funds were misapplied. When the work was finished it was proper for the final estimate to be allowed and when examined and found correct it was proper for the same to be approved by the board of county commissioners, the money which should have been retained in the fund for the payment of same was used for the benefit of the county and so the delay in paying the same to the contractor is such delay for which compensation by way of interest should be allowed.

I therefore advise you that interest should be allowed on said sum beginning five days after said estimate was approved by the county commissioners and the bill ordered paid, and extending up to the day of payment.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE OHIO THRESHERMAN'S MUTUAL INSURANCE ASSOCIATION.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am herewith returning to you with my certificate of approval endorsed thereon the articles of association of The Ohio Threshermen's Mutual Insurance Association. I find the same to be in apparent conformity to the provisions of section 9593 et seq. General Code providing for the organization of mutual protective associations.

The risks insured are extra hazardous and of a character outside the purpose of ordinary mutual protective associations organized under the provisions of sections 9593 et seq. General Code, but in as much as the membership of this particular protective association is restricted to persons engaged in a particular trade or occupation, to wit: that of owning and operating threshing machine outfits and similar agricultural machinery, and the property to be insured is all such as is used by said members in their said trade or occupation, such members may, by the express provisions of said section 9593 associate for the purpose of protecting said risks by mutual protective insurance.

I am, therefore, approving these articles of association, and herewith return check drawn to your order in the sum of $25.00.

Very truly yours,

COUNCIL MAY FILL VACANCY BY MOTION—WHEN ONLY ONE PERSON IN NOMINATION—MAY NOT RESCIND SUCH VOTE AND ELECT ANOTHER PERSON.

The council of a municipality may elect a new member to fill a vacancy by motion, duly seconded, and passed by roll call, there being no person other than the one named in the motion in nomination.

When a completed vote has been taken which results in the giving of the necessary majority or plurality to the candidate, or one of the candidates, to fill a vacancy in its membership, the council cannot rescind its vote or reconsider its action and elect another person.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a communication under date of April 11, 1917, from Hon. Byron A. Fouche, city solicitor of Fremont, Ohio, in which he submitted a request for an opinion on the question hereinafter stated. Inasmuch as the request submitted by Mr. Fouche is one of importance, I am addressing my opinion on same to you.

The request submitted by Mr. Fouche raises a question as to whether Mr. White or Mr. Rhodes is the duly elected councilman of the first ward of the city of Fremont, Ohio, under the following proceedings of the council of said city of Fremont, at the regular meeting of council of the city of Fremont, Ohio, on Feb. 27, 1917:

"* * * * * * *

"City Council,

"Gentlemen:—Because of my appointment as city solicitor, and my acceptance of said appointment, I herewith tender my resignation as member of the council from the first ward, Fremont, Ohio, said resignation to take effect forthwith.

"Respectfully,

"B. A. Fouche.

"Moved by Mr. Schwartz, seconded by Mr. Swedersky, that the resignation be accepted. Yeas: Bliss, Scherf, Schwartz, Swedersky, Winnes, Zimmerman. Mr. Fouche refused to vote. 6 yeas.

"Moved by Mr. Winnes, seconded by Mr. Swedersky, that council proceed to elect a successor to Mr. Fouche of the first ward, as provided in section 4236 General Code of Ohio. Yeas: Schwartz, Swedersky, Winnes, Scherf, Zimmerman. Nay: Bliss. 5 yeas, 1 nay. Carried.

"President Lutz appointed Mr. Schwartz chairman of the finance committee, Mr. Zimmerman on the improvement committee, and Mr. Scherf chairman of the railroad committee.

"Mr. Swedersky nominated the name of R. White to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Fouche, seconded by Mr. Winnes.

"President Lutz asked for further nominations, and after no further nominations were made the president ordered roll call. Yeas, Scherf, Schwartz, Winnes, Zimmerman. Nay: Bliss. 5 yeas, 1 nay. Carried.

"President Lutz appointed White on the finance committee and the laws, rules and ordinance committee. (Thereupon Mr. Zimmerman said that to enliven things there ought to be a new vote and other candidates.)

"Mr. Zimmerman nominated the name of L. Rhodes, seconded by Scherf. Lutz declared five minutes recess. When council reconvened Mr. Bliss was appointed as teller.

"Moved by Mr. Zimmerman, seconded by Bliss, the nominations be closed. Yeas: Scherf, Swedersky, Schwartz, Winnes, Zimmerman. 6 yeas. Carried.

"At this point Hon. F. O'Farrell, who had been employed by council to assist the solicitor as legal advisor of the council during the illness of the city solicitor, told council that the second attempt at an election was void and futile, that on the first vote, the vote that had previously been taken on Mr. White's nomination, Mr. White was elected by five to one, which action was ratified by the president in declaring him elected and appointing Mr. White on committees, but council proceeded to ballot.

"First ballot: Mr. White 3, Mr. Rhodes 3, tie. Second ballot: Mr. White 3, Mr. Rhodes 3, tie. President Lutz cast a deciding vote in favor of Mr. Rhodes.

"President Lutz appointed Mr. Rhodes on the finance committee and laws and ordinance committee."

Section 4236 General Code provides for the filling of a vacancy in the membership of a city council and reads as follows:

"When the office of councilman becomes vacant the vacancy shall be filled by election by council for the unexpired term. If council fails within thirty days to fill such vacancy, the mayor shall fill it by appointment"

An examination of this section of the Code discloses the fact that the only provision made for the filling of a vacancy is that it shall be filled by the council by an election. No provision is made in this section, nor in any other section of the Code, for the manner in which the election is to be held. In the particular case as is disclosed by the foregoing transcript of the proceedings of council of said city the mode of election used was that of nominating Mr. White by a motion duly seconded and then a roll call was had, there being no other nominations, and the motion was carried by a five to one vote.

In the case of State ex rel. Shinnich v. Green, 37 O. S. 227, the court held in the first branch of the syllabus "that it was competent to elect by a motion, there being no other person than the one named in the motion in nomination."

At page 230 in the opinion of the court we find the following:

> "In the case at bar, the vote was by yeas and nays, on the adoption of a motion to elect the relator clerk. It is essential to a valid election that all who are present, and are constituent members of the elective body, shall have an opportunity to vote. They all in this respect stand upon equal footing. As there was but one candidate in nomination, the vote on the motion was a vote for or against that candidate. If a majority voted for the motion it was a clear expression that the person named in the motion was the choice of a majority of those entitled to vote. As no mode of voting at such an election is prescribed by law, any mode not forbidden by law which insures to each member the right to vote, and by which the will of the majority can be fairly ascertained, may be adopted.
> "The mode adopted was the one prescribed by statute for the transaction of the most important business of the council. We see no reason why it is not a fair mode of ascertaining the choice of the council. Certainly this method, by placing the yeas and nays upon record, tended to a higher degree of accountability than by a ballot, though that method of voting might have been adopted."

It is clear, therefore, from the foregoing decision of the supreme court that the mode of electing selected by the council of said city of Fremont was proper and in accordance with law. It is evident, therefore, that Mr. White was the lawfully elected councilman from the first ward of said city of Fremont selected to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mr. Fouche.

The next question that presents itself is whether or not, after a completed vote has been taken which resulted in the giving of the necessary majority to Mr. White as a candidate, the council could rescind its vote or reconsider its action and elect another to fill the vacancy.

A similar question has been considered by the supreme court of our state in the case of State ex rel. Calderwood v. Miller, 62 O. S. 436, and in the opinion of said court at page 445 we find the following:

> "The council was engaged in the duty of electing officers; a duty imposed on the members thereof, not on the body as a council. They were not engaged in the deliberative business which is the ordinary work of the council; but in the election of a city officer. They were not acting under parliamentary law; but were casting their votes and making their choice as required by a specific statute. They could make this choice but once. Having done so they could not reconsider it. Much less, could some of them against the protest of a plurality, under the suggestions or invitations of the presiding officer or sua sponte change their votes. This would give to the minority the power of defeating the choice of a plurality which had already been legally made and ascertained."

Section 1676 Revised Statutes of Ohio, which was being interpreted by the court in State ex rel. Calderwood v. Miller, supra, provided that the members of council should elect the officer in question, while section 4236 G. C., supra, provides that when there is a vacancy in its membership the council shall fill same by election. Still I do not think that this variation in the phraseology makes any difference in the effect of the statutes and believe that the election means the same thing in substance whether the law provides that the council shall do that particular thing by election, or whether the members of council shall elect.

I am sustained in this view by the supreme court of Kentucky in Wheeler v. Commonwealth, 98 Ky., 59, in which Hazelrigg, J., in rendering the opinion of the court, says at page 465:

> "The duty of electing a city attorney was imposed on the council in express terms. The members were thus constituted a definite body of electors for that purpose. * * * All the members were acting not only as councilmen, but as electors."

In volume 2 of Dillon on "Municipal Corporations" 5th Ed., section 529, it is said:

> "The weight of authority is also to the effect that when a completed vote has been taken which results in the giving of the necessary majority or plurality to one of the candidates, the council cannot rescind its vote or reconsider its action and elect another person."

This language was quoted with approval by the supreme court of Wisconsin in the recent case of State v. Tyrrel, 158 Wis. 425, 149 N. W. 280.

Additional authorities to the same effect are:

State ex rel. Coogan v. Barber, 53 Conn. 76;
State v. Phillips, 79 Me. 506, 10 Atl. 447;
State ex rel. v. Wadhams, 64 Minn. 318, 67 N. W. 64;
People v. Stowell, 9 Abb. N. C. 456.

It would seem, therefore, in view of the above mentioned decision of our owm supreme court, and all the other authorities cited, that the council of said city, having once elected Mr. White as a member of said body by a proper vote, would have no right to reconsider its action and hold another election thereafter in an endeavor to fill the vacancy.

Such a view of the law renders unnecessary a determination of the fact as to whether or not the council of said city acted in the proper manner to reconsider the vote, or whether its action in taking a second ballot amounted to a reconsideration of the former vote.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that Mr. White is the duly elected councilman from the first ward of said city of Fremont, and should be permitted to take his seat in said body.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTION FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENTS IN GEAUGA, WAYNE AND OTTAWA COUNTIES—ROAD IMPROVEMENT—STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER UNDER SECTION 1218 MAY NOT ENTER IN CONTRACT FOR SAME UNTIL COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE AGREED TO PAY THEIR PORTION OF COST—SUCH AGREEMENT ON PART OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS VOID UNLESS AUDITOR FIRST FILES CERTIFICATE THAT MONEY IS IN TREASURY—A CONTRACT BY COMMISSIONERS BEFORE SUCH CERTIFICATE IS FILED CANNOT BE USED AS A BASIS FOR STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONERS ENTERING INTO CONTRACT UNDER SECTION 1218 G. C.

1. Under the provisions of section 1218 G. C. the state highway commissioner cannot enter into a contract for a road improvement until the county commissioners have entered into an agreement to assume that part of the cost and expense over and above that which the state agrees to assume.

2. The agreement of the county commissioners to assume that part over and above that which the state agrees to assume is void unless the county auditor first files his certificate to the effect that the money is in the treasury to take care of the obligation.

3. A contract so entered into by the county commissioners, before said certificate of the county auditor is filed, cannot be used as a basis for the state highway commissioner's entering into a contract under the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 30, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communications of April 20 and 21, 1917, in which you ask my approval of certain final resolutions attached to said communications, which resolutions have to do with the construction of the following highways:

"Geauga county—Section 'K-1,' Cleveland-Meadville road, Pet. No. 2376, I. C. H. No. 15.

"Geauga county—Section 'B', Hamden-Andover road, Pet. No. 2385, I. C. H. No. 475.

"Ottawa county—Section 'H', Toldeo-Elmore road, Pet. No. 2772, I. C. H. No. 52.

"Wayne county—Section 'O', Akron-Wooster road, Pet. No. 3073, I. C. H. No. 96."

It will be noted that the final resolution adopted by the county commissioners of Ottawa county is dated April 16, 1917, while the certificate of the county auditor, to the effect that the money is in the treasury to the credit of the county road improvement fund, is dated April 18, 1917;

That the final resolution made by the county commissioners of Geauga county, in reference to the improvement of the Hamden-Andover road, inter-county highway No. 475, is dated April 9, 1917, while the certificate of the county auditor, to the effect that the money is in the treasury, is dated April 10, 1917;

That the final resolution made by the commissioners of Geauga county, in reference to the improvement of the Cleveland-Meadville road, being inter-county highway No. 15, is dated April 9, 1917, while the certificate of the county auditor, to the effect that the money is in the treasury, is dated April 10, 1917; and

That the final resolution of the county commissioners of Wayne county, in reference to the improvement of the Akron-Wooster road, inter-county highway No. 96, is dated April 18, 1917, while the certificate of the county auditor, to the effect that the money is in the treasury, is dated April 19, 1917.

In other words, all these final resolutions of the county commissioners of the different counties have been entered into on a date prior to the day upon which the county auditor certified that the money was in the county treasury, to the credit of the county highway improvement fund.

In reference to the above, I desire to call your attention to section 5660 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "The commissioners of a county, the trustees of a township and the board of education of a school district shall not enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, respectively, first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, or has been levied and placed on the duplicate, and in process of collection and not appropriated for any other purpose; money to be derived from lawfully authorized bonds sold and in process of delivery shall, for the purpose of this section, be deemed in the treasury and in the appropriate fund. Such certificate shall be filed and forthwith recorded, and the sums so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the county, township or board of education is fully discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or as long as the order or resolution is in force."

It is to be noted that said section provides:

> "The commissioners of a county * * * shall not enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money, unless the auditor * * * thereof, * * * first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, etc."

It is plainly evident from the reading of said section that the county commissioners have no authority to enter into a resolution in which they agree to assume the payment of a certain amount of the cost and expense of making an improvement before the auditor certifies that the money is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which the cost and expense must be paid.

In other words, the certificate of the county auditor must be of a date not later, to say the least, than the day upon which the county commissioners enter into said agreement, and inasmuch as all the certificates attached to the final resolutions bear a date later than the final resolutions to which they are attached, respectively, it is my opinion they do not comply with the provisions of said section 5660 G. C.

I am therefore returning these final resolutions to you, without my approval, and suggest that you have the county commissioners of the various counties adopt another final resolution as of a date later than the day upon which the county auditor certified to them that the money is in the treasury. There could be no objection whatever to both the certificate and the resolution being of the same date, provided the certificate of the auditor was really filed with the county commissioners before the time at which the resolution was made. If they bear the same date, it would possibly be presumed that the certificate of the county auditor had been made either before the entering into of the final resolution or contemporaneously therewith.

I think these matters had better be corrected now, rather than run the risk of getting into difficulty over this technical proposition later on.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney General.

RECOGNIZANCE—ENTERED INTO BY PERSON CHARGED WITH BAILABLE OFFENSE—CONDITION THEREOF COMPLIED WITH IF ACCUSED APPEARS BEFORE MAGISTRATE ON DAY NAMED—NO RECOVERY CAN BE HAD UPON SUCH RECOGNIZANCE THEREAFTER.

Upon a preliminary examination, before a magistrate of one charged with an offense which is bailable, if there be an adjournment of such examination, the accused has a right to be released upon giving a recognizance in compliance with section 13508 General Code; the condition of such recognizance is complied with by the appearance of the accused before the magistrate on the day and hour specified in the recognizance and upon his abiding the orders of the court and not departing without leave upon such adjourned examination and no recovery can be had upon such recognizance thereafter.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 1, 1917.

HON. JAMES F. FLYNN, Prosecuting Attorney, Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 13, 1917, you addressed the following communication to this office:

> "Enclosed herewith find a bond which was given in the mayor's court of this city, August 14, 1915, by Norman Rickel.
> "The bond requires his appearance on September 14, 1915, at 9 a. m. Upon that date the case was continued to a later date and during the remainder of the year was continued two or three times. During the year 1916 the case was continued various times and in August, 1916, was continued to no definite date.
> "In January, 1917, Robert Koegle, acting mayor, was relieved of his duties and R. D. Mitchell assumed them under the title of mayor of Sandusky, whereupon he set the case for a day certain in February, and upon that date the defendant, Norman Rickel, failed to put in appearance, whereupon mayor Mitchell declared the bond forfeited and the same has been turned over to me in due course for collection.
> "It is my opinion that the bond is worthless for this reason: that it does not provide that the said Rickel shall appear on the 14th day of September, A. D. 1915, and from day to day thereafter until the case is finally disposed of; that under the provisions of the bond enclosed continuing the case from the 14th day of September, 1915, to any future date required the execution of a new bond, as in my opinion the bond enclosed was of no more force and effect after the 14th day of September, 1915.
> "Will you kindly send me your opinion of the enclosed bond or recognizance?"

The bond is on a printed blank, headed: "Recognizance of Defendant to Appear before Mayor." The condition is as follows:

> "THE CONDITION OF THIS RECOGNIZANCE IS SUCH, That, if the above bounden Norman Rickel shall personally be and appear before me, at my office in said city, on the 14th day of September, A. D., 1915, at 9 o'clock a. m., then and there to answer to a charge of burglary and larceny preferred by C. A. Weingates, and abide the judgment of the court, and not depart without leave, and in the meantime to be of good behavior, and to keep the peace toward the citizens of the state generally, and the said C. A. Weingates especially, then this recognizance shall be void; otherwise, etc. * * *."

It is dated August 14, 1915, and executed by Norman Rickel, and also by Chas. H. Dater and Geo. C. Bies. Approved by Jacob Dietz, mayor.

Although the communication does not fully state the fact, it is undoubtedly true that Rickel was charged with burglary and larceny; that he was brought before the mayor and his case continued for a month, and that this recognizance was taken to insure his appearance at the preliminary examination to be held upon the 14th day of September, 1915.

The statute providing for such recognizance is section 13508 General Code, which is as follows:

> "When an adjournment is ordered the accused may enter into a recognizance before the magistrate, with good and sufficient surety approved by him, in such amount as he may deem reasonable, conditioned for the appearance of such person before the magistrate, at a place, day and hour specified in the recognizance, but such adjournment shall not be for longer than twenty days without the consent of the accused. * * *"

It will be assumed that the accused consented to a continuance for more than twenty days. It is not necessary, in answering your question, to determine whether or not other terms of a recognizance than those required by the above section have any binding force or effect, as it does not appear that any of the terms of the condition of the bond in question have been violated. It is assumed that Rickel did appear at the time and hour mentioned in the recognizance, that the court rendered no judgment for him to abide, unless an order for him to reappear upon another day certain, and that he did not depart without leave, and that during such continuance his behavior was all right. He, therefore, had kept the letter of his bond when he appeared again at the time set for his appearance, when the same was again continued on September 14, 1915, if, indeed, he had not fully complied with it when he appeared on September 14, and remained until he was allowed by the court to depart.

Your opinion expressed in the inquiry is, therefore, approved, and you are advised that no recovery can be had upon the recognizance in question.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MINERAL RIGHTS—ARE SUBJECT TO REVALUATION UNDER SECTION 5562—ALTHOUGH COUNTY AUDITOR, ACTING WITH COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, FINDS THAT REAL PROPERTY IN ANY ASSESSMENT DISTRICT IS ASSESSED AT ITS TRUE VALUE IN MONEY—AND HAVE DECIDED TO CARRY SAME INTO CURRENT DUPLICATE AT SAME VALUATION UNDER 5548—COUNTY AUDITOR MAY INCREASE VALUATION OF REAL PROPERTY ON ACCOUNT OF ERECTION OF NEW STRUCTURES—OR DECREASE VALUATION BECAUSE OF DESTRUCTION—REGARDLESS OF SECTION 5548.

The provisions of section 5548 General Code, as amended in senate bill 177, passed March 21, 1917, authorizing the county auditor on approval of the board of county commissioners to carry real property in any tax assessment district or subdivision into the new tax duplicate at the same valuation assessed against said real property on the existing duplicate do not affect the provisions of section 5562 G. C. authorizing an increase or reduction in the assessed value of land containing minerals or separate mineral rights therein, and the assessed value of the particular mineral land or of the separate mineral right therein may be increased or reduced even though no order for assessment of real property in the tax district wherein such mineral land is located is ordered to be made as provided for in section 5548 General Code.

Neither do the provisions of section 5548 G. C. affect the provisions of sections 5576, 5577 and 5604 G. C. (S. B. 177) authorizing an increase in the assessed valuation of the particular lots or parcels of land by reason of the construction of a new building or other structure or betterment, nor those of section 2591 G. C. authorizing a reduction in the assessed value of a particular lot or parcel of land by reason of the destruction or injury of any building or other structure thereon, and an increase or reduction in the assessed value of such particular real property may be made as provided for in this section even though no assessment of the value of real property in the tax assessment district or subdivision wherein such particular real property is located is ordered to be made under section 5548 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 1, 1917.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 31, 1917, in which you ask for my opinion as follows:

> "If the county auditor and the county commissioners, proceeding under section 5548 G. C. find that the real estate in any township, village, ward or assessment district is now assessed for taxation at its true value in money as the same appears on the tax duplicate, may there be any change made in the value of mineral rights which are required by section 5560 G. C. to be assessed separately from the fee of the soil? What effect, if any, is to be given to the provisions of section 5562 General Code if such a finding has been made by the county auditor and the county commissioners? In other words, may there be any change under the provisions of section 5562 G. C. in the value of mineral rights as entered upon the duplicate for the year 1916 unless the county auditor and county commissioners find that the real estate in the subdivision in which the minerals are located is not assessed at its true value in money.
> "If the county auditor and county commissioners find that the real estate in any subdivision is now assessed at its true value in money, may the county auditor thereafter add to the value of any parcel of real estate the value of any new structure or improvement made thereto since April 9, 1916, or deduct therefrom the value of any structure or improvement which has been destroyed during the year ending April 8, 1917? In other words may the value of new structures be added to the value of such real estate, and the value of structures destroyed be deducted from such real estate unless the county auditor and county commissioners find that the real estate is not assessed at its true value in money in any subdivision in which the same was located?"

Section 5548 General Code, as amended in senate bill 177, passed March 21, 1917, and which went into effect on the approval of the governor the same day, provides in part as follows:

"Each county is made the unit for assessing real estate for taxation purposes. The county auditor in addition to his other duties, shall be the assessor for all the real estate in his county for purposes of taxation, provided that nothing herein shall affect the power conferred upon the tax commission of Ohio in the matter of the valuation and assessment of the property of any public utility. Upon the taking effect of this act, on or before the second Monday in April, 1917, and annually thereafter between the first day of January and the first day of February, the county auditor shall ascertain whether the real property in each township, village, ward, or assessment district, as provided in section 3349 of the General Code, is assessed for taxation at its true value in money, as the same then appears on the tax duplicate. If he finds that it is assessed at its true value in money, in any such township, village, ward, or assessment district, he shall, subject to the provisions hereinafter made, enter such valuation upon the tax list and duplicate for the current year. In such event, and unless he finds that such property is not assessed at its true value in money, in each such division, such assessments shall constitute the valuation for taxation for the current year, subject to the provisions hereinafter made. Said county auditor shall submit his findings concerning the valuation of such real estate to the board of county commissioners of his county, and said board shall, at a hearing fixed within not less than ten nor more than twenty days thereafter, confirm, modify, or set aside the same by order entered on the journal of said board. Notice of such hearing shall be given by publication in a newspaper of general circulation in the county. If by such order it is determined that the real estate in any such subdivision is not on the duplicate at its true value in money, then such county auditor shall proceed to assess such real estate in such subdivision or subdivisions. Such assessments shall also be made by him in any such subdivision upon the filing of a petition therefor with the county auditor by not less than twenty-five freeholders in such subdivision, or by the board of trustees in any such township, or by the council of any such village. Such petition may be filed at any time after January first of any year, but not later than the fourth Monday in April, 1917, and the first Monday in March annually thereafter. * * *."

Section 5560 General Code provides that where the fee of the soil of a tract, parcel or lot of land is in a person, natural or artificial, and the right to the mineral therein is in another, such property shall be valued and listed agreeably to such ownership in separate entries, specifying the interests listed, and be taxed to the parties owning different interests, respectively; while section 5562 General Code provides in respect to the question at hand that if at the time the assessor makes the list of personal property it is found that land containing minerals or separate mineral rights therein has increased in value to the extent of $100.00 or more by reason of the discovery of minerals or by the construction or develpoment of the means of producing the same, the assessor shall increase the assessment of such land or of such separate mineral right therein, as the case may be, to its true value in money in the name of the owner thereof, and by this section it is likewise further provided that if at said time it is found that such land containing minerals or separate mineral rights therein has decreased in value during the year in consequence of the exhaustion of minerals or the failure to find or develop the same and such decrease amounts to $100.00 or more, the value of such land or mineral right shall be reduced to its true value.

Your first inquiry calls for a consideration of the effect of the provisions of section 5548 General Code as above quoted on the earlier provisions of section 5562 authorizing an increase or reduction in value of mineral land or of separate mineral rights therein.

In consideration of this question it is to be recognized that as it is the function of the legislature to express the will of the state by means of statutes enacted by it, it is essential that the legislature should know what is the existing state of the law whenever a statute is passed, and it is always presumed that the legislature possesses such knowledge. The language of every enactment must be construed as far as possible so as to be consistent with every other which it does not in express terms modify or repeal. This is but a more fundamental statement of the rule that the repeal or modification of existing statutes by implication from the provisions of later enactments is not favored in law, and that there always exists a strong presumption against the same.

In the light of these principles let us note the provisions of section 5548 and the earlier provisions of section 5562. Without here attempting any exact analysis of the provisions of section 5548 General Code, above quoted, it is sufficient to note that these provisions operate upon real property included as a whole in a township, village ward or other tax assessment district, and authorize the county auditor acting in conjunction with the county commissioners to carry the real property therein into the current tax duplicate at the previous duplicate valuation, or the real property in such tax assessment district or subdivision may be assessed by the county auditor in the manner provided by this section.

The direction taken by the action of the county auditor and the board of county commissioners with respect to the real property in such tax assessment district or subdivision is determined by the consideration whether or not such real property does or does not stand on the existing tax duplicate at its true value in money.

If on a consideration of the value of real property in such tax assessment district or subdivision as a whole it is determined that such property does stand on the existing tax duplicate at its true value in money the same is by action of the county auditor and board of county commissioners carried into the current duplicate as the proper valuation of the real property in such tax assessment district or subdivision as entered upon said current duplicate, and so far as the effect of section 5548 General Code is concerned this would be the result as to the valuation to be entered on mineral land or separate mineral right therein which might lie within such tax assessment district or subdivision.

Now looking to the provisions of section 5562 General Code, it will be noted that they do not apply generally to all real property lying within a particular tax assessment district or within any given territory, but that they relate to particular tracts or parcels of land containing minerals and to separate mineral rights therein, and the provisions of this section authorize an increase or reduction in the taxable valuation of such mineral land or of the separate mineral rights which may exist in said land on considerations affecting that property alone. In other words, comparing the provisions of section 5548 and those of 5562 General Code, it will be noted that the former relate to a subject matter, to wit, real property lying within certain tax assessment districts or subdivisions which may perchance embrace the particular kinds of real property or property rights covered by the provisions of section 5562.

In this view of these two sections of the General Code and the respective operation of their provisions it may be noted as a settled rule of statutory construction that special statutory provision for particular cases operate as exceptions to the general provisions which might otherwise include the particular cases and such cases are governed by special provisions. Or, stated in another way, if there are two acts of which one relates especially to a particular subject matter, while the subject matter of another is more general and would, if standing alone, also include the particular matter, the statute relating to the particular matter is to be read as an exception to the more general provisions of the other.

Gas Company v. Tiffin, 59 O. S. 420, 441.
Doll v. Barr, 58 O. S. 113, 120.

Applying these principles of construction to the question first presented by you, I am of the opinion that the provisions of section 5562 General Code are in no wise affected by later provisions of section 5548 General Code, and that even though the county auditor acting in conjunction with the county commissioners under the provisions of the latter section finds that the real property in any township, village, board or assessment district is now assessed for taxation at its true value in money and in consequence such real property, so far as section 5548 General Code is concerned, is to be carried into the current duplicate at the same valuation, mineral lands or separate mineral rights therein, as the case may be, may nevertheless be subject to revaluation in the manner provided for in section 5562 General Code.

The consideration determining the answer to your first question likewise determines the second question presented by you. The statutory provision authorizing taxing officials to add to the value of any parcel of real estate the value of new structures or improvements thereon are in sections 5576, 5577 and 5604 General Code, as amended in senate bill 177.

Section 5576 General Code provides if the county auditor ascertains that a mistake has been made in the value of an improvement or betterment of real property, or that the true value of such improvement or betterment has been omitted, he shall return the correct value thereof, having first given notice to the owner or agent thereof of his intention so to do; while section 5577 General Code provides, with respect to the question at hand, that authority made by the county auditor in conformity to the provisions of section 5576 shall be listed on the grand duplicate of the county and placed in the hands of the county treasurer for collection.

Section 5604 General Code provides that when the county board of revision provided for in the act discovers or has its attention called to the fact that in a current year or in any year during the five years next preceding any taxable land, building, structure or improvement, has escaped taxation, or has been listed for taxation for less than its true value in money, the board may investigate the same and report the fact and information in its possession to the county auditor, who is required to make such correction as he is authorized and required by law to make in other cases in which personal property has escaped taxation or has been improperly listed or valued for taxation.

Section 2591 General Code makes provision for a reduction in the value of real property when a building or structure thereon has been destroyed or injured by fire, flood, tornado, or otherwise, when the damage or loss to such building or structure is $100.00 or more and is not covered by insurance. With respect to the particular kind of property affected by the provisions of the section of the General Code just noted it is obvious that such property may be included within a tax assessment district or subdivision covered by the provisions of section 5548 General Code, but upon the reasoning applicable to the consideration of your first question, it is clear that sections 5576, 5577, 5604 and 2591 General Code relating to particular properties as the subject matter of their respective operations are to be read as exceptions to the provisions of section 5548 and that action may be taken increasing or reducing the value of real property on account of the erection of new structures thereon on the one hand, or the destruction or injury of structures or improvements thereon on the other, even though the county auditor and the county commissioners may find that the real property in a tax assessment district or subdivision, which may include such property, is assessed at its true value in money, and so far as section 5548 is concerned is therefore to be carried into the current duplicate at the old valuation.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MULCAHY HIGHWAY BILL—NOT AFFECTED BY ERRORS IN FIRST SECTION—MEANING AND INTENT CAN BE ASCERTAINED BY REFERRING TO OTHER PORTIONS OF THE ACT.

The meaning and intent of section 1 of Am. H. B. No. 300, passed by the 82d general assembly and approved by the governor, can be ascertained beyond a reasonable doubt by referring to other portions of the act, including the title. Consequently, the omissions therein, which render the section unintelligible when standing alone, do not prevent it from becoming effective according to the meaning and intent thus ascertained.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 1, 1917.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR GOVERNOR:—I have your letter of April 18, 1917, which is as follows:

> "It has been reported to me that there is a printer's error in the Mulcahy highway bill, H. B. No. 300.
> "I respectfully ask your opinion as to whether the printer's inadvertence will effect the future legal status of this act."

There is, as you state, a manifest error in section 1 of the bill to which you refer. Said section reads as follows:

> "Section 1. That sections 2784, 2787, 2788, 6862, 6865, 6866, 6870, 6871, 6877, 6889, 3298-1 to 3298-15 inclusive, 3298-18, 3370 to 3376 inclusive, 6906 to 6913 inclusive, 6917 to 6920 inclusive, 6922, 6923, 6925 to 6936 inclusive, 6939, 6941, 6945, 6946, 6947, 6949 to 6953 inclusive, 7181, 7182, 7184, 7185, 7187 to 7192 inclusive, 7196, 7198, 7200, 7202, 7203 to 7213 inclusive, 1191, 1192, 1193, 1203, 1208, 1209, 1211, 1212, 1214, 1215, 1216, 1219, 1221, 1222, 1223, 1224, 1225, 1230-1, 1231, 7246 and 13421-17, of the General Code, to enact supplemental sections 3298-15a to 3298-15n inclusive, 3298-24, 3298-25 to 3298-53 inclusive, 3374-1, 3374-2, 6944-1, 6945-1, 6947-1, 6947-2, 6948-1, 6948-2, 7188-1, 7188-2, 1193-1, 1193-2, 1213-1, 1218-1, 1224-1, 1231-5 to 1231-11 inclusive, 7247 to 7251 inclusive and 13421-18a of the General Code; and to repeal sections 3377, 3378, 3379, 6924, 6940, 6954, 7183, 7186, 7193, 7194, 7195, 7197, 7199, 7201, 7477 and 7478 of the General Code relating to a system of highway laws for the state of Ohio."

(Here follow numerous sections evidently intended to be sections of the General Code and the numbers of which correspond with those mentioned in the first two clauses of the section down to the semicolon.)

Section 6 of the bill is as follows:

"Section 6. That said original sections 2784, 2787, 2788, 6862, 6865, 6866, 6869, 6870, 6871, 6877, 6889, 3298-1 to 3298-15 inclusive, 3298-18, 3370 to 3376 inclusive, 6906 to 6913 inclusive, 6917 to 6920 inclusive, 6922, 6923, 6925 to 6936 inclusive, 6939, 6941, 6945, 6946, 6947, 6949 to 6953 inclusive, 7181, 7182, 7184, 7185, 7187 to 7192 inclusive, 7196, 7198, 7200, 7202, 7203 to 7213 inclusive, 1191, 1192, 1193, 1203, 1208, 1209, 1211, 1212, 1214, 1215, 1216, 1219, 1221, 1222, 1223, 1224, 1225, 1230-1, 1231, 7246, and 13421-17 of the General Code and also sections 3377, 3378, 3379, 6924, 6940, 6954, 7183, 7186, 7193, 7194, 7195, 7197, 7199, 7201, 7477, and 7478 of the General Code be and the same are hereby repealed.

"This act shall succeed all acts, and parts of acts, not herein expressly repealed which are inconsistent herewith."

It will be observed that the enacting or introductory clause of section 1 does not make sense. It is not a complete sentence. Analyzed gramatically, the portion thereof which ends with the phrase "General Code", as it first occurs therein, appears to be a subject without any predicate; while the remainder thereof consists of two infinitives without any verbal support. The existence of the error is thus perfectly apparent on the face of the bill. In its essence it consists of an omission of words required to complete a sentence; and those words must be supplied in order to express accurately the legislative intent.

The case, therefore, differs from one in which the words used in an enrolled bill duly authenticated, make an intelligible sentence, but it is sought by comparison with the enrolled bill, or by reference to the journal, to show that the enrolled bill is incorrect. In such case it is held that the enrolled bill must stand as the law. Ritzman v. Campbell, 93 O. S. 246.

The principle embodied in the decision cited is simply that the journal of the house and senate and other documents, papers and records, tending to show the contents of a measure which has been enacted into law, are not competent evidence to prove such contents, the enrolled bill, when duly signed by the presiding officers of the respective houses, as required by the constitution, being the best and only competent evidence of such contents; so that it is not permissible to impeach the latter by the former, either for the purpose of showing what the true contents of the latter are or for the purpose of showing that a law, in the very words of the latter, was never enacted properly.

But here it is not necessary to resort to any document other than the enrolled and signed bill itself in order to show a mistake in it. The error is perfectly apparent and the sole question is as to the effect thereof. It is obvious that one of two possible results might follow from this situation, viz.: either (1) the bill or rather this section of it is not and never will be a law, because of fatal ambiguity, i. e., having no meaning on its face it can be given no meaning, and without any meaning it can be given no operative effect; or, (2) the bill will be given such meaning as it may be possible to give it by gathering the legislative intent from other portions of the enactment, including the title.

It will be observed that the second alternative, above stated, does no violence to the rule in Ritzman v. Campbell, because it does not resort to anything excepting the enrolled bill itself to find the legislative intent.

The rule which is to be applied here is stated in Lewis' Sutherland Statutory Construction, vol. 2, section 410, as follows:

> "Legislative enactments are not any more than any other writings to be defeated on account of mistakes, errors or omissions, provided the intention of the legislature can be collected from the whole statute; and the title and preamble may be referred to for this purpose."

Among the cases cited by the author to support this text is that of State v. Commissioners, 87 Minn., 325, 337, from which the following quotation is made in the note:

> "In cases of imperfectly drawn statutes, the courts, rather than pronounce them unconstitutional and void, will draw inferences from the evident intent of the legislature, as gathered from the law taken as a whole, supplying technical inaccuracies in expression, and obviously unintentional mistakes and omissions by implication, from the necessity of making them operative and effectual as to specific things which are included in the broad and comprehensive terms and purposes of the law; and these inferences and implications are as much a part of the law as what is distinctly expressed therein."

The author sums up his comment on the rule embodied in the case which he cites as follows:

> "This is but making the strict letter of the statute yield to the obvious intent."

With this principle in mind it becomes incumbent upon me to look elsewhere in house bill No. 300 than in section 1 to see whether or not the intent which would have been expressed by the words which are obviously omitted from said section can be found elsewhere in the bill. If such intent can be found, section 1 is to be given the meaning thus ascertained; if such intent cannot be found, section 1 must be held to be void for uncertainty.

The title of the law is as follows:

> "AN ACT.
> "To amend sections 2784; 2787, 2788, 6862, 6865, 6866, 6869, 6870, 6871, 6877, 6889, 3298-1 to 3298-15, inclusive, 3298-18, 3370 to 3376, inclusive, 6906 to 6913, inclusive, 6917 to 6920, inclusive, 6922, 6923, 6925 to 6936, inclusive, 6939, 6941, 6945, 6946, 6947, 6949 to 6953, inclusive, 7181, 7182, 7184, 7185, 7187 to 7192, inclusive, 7196, 7198, 7200, 7202, 7203 to 7213, inclusive, 1191, 1192, 1193, 1203, 1208, 1209, 1211, 1212, 1214, 1215, 1216, 1219, 1221, 1222, 1223, 1224, 1225, 1230-1, 1231, 7246 and 13421-17 of the General Code, to enact supplemental sections 3298-15a to 3298-15n, inclusive, 3298-24, 3298-25 to 3298-53, inclusive, 3374-1, 3374-2, 6944-1, 6945-1, 6947-1, 6947-2, 6948-1, 6948-2, 7188-1, 7188-2, 1193-1, 1193-2, 1213-1, 1218-1, 1224-1, 1231-5 to 1231-11, inclusive, 7247 to 7251, inclusive, and 13421-18a of the General Code; and to repeal sections 3377, 3378, 3379, 6924, 6940, 6954, 7183, 7186, 7193, 7194, 7195, 7197, 7199, 7201, 7477 and 7478 of the General Code, relating to a system of highway laws for the state of Ohio."

By comparing the code sections which follow the general language above quoted from section 1 in the bill with the sections of the General Code as they now exist and will continue to exist at least until the act in question becomes effective, if at all, I find that the sections therein set forth are obviously intended to be either amendatory of such existing sections or supplementary thereto.

Sections 2, 3 and 5 of the act provide as follows:

> "Section 2: This act shall not affect pending actions or proceedings, civil or criminal, pertaining to the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance, repair, supervision or control of highways, bridges or culverts, brought in any court at any time prior to the taking effect of this act, under or involving the provisions of any statute hereby amended or repealed but the same may be prosecuted or defended to final determination in like manner as if such statute had not been amended or repealed."
> "Section 3: This act shall not affect or impair any contract entered into, any act done, any right acquired or any obligation incurred prior to the time when this act takes effect, under or by virtue of any statute hereby amended or repealed but the same may be completed, asserted or enforced as fully and to the same extent as if such statute had not been amended or repealed * * *."
> "Section 5. The words 'county highway superintendent' found in any section of the General Code of Ohio not herein amended or repealed shall after the taking effect of this act be read 'county surveyor.'"

Section 6 has been quoted. I call attention to the use of the phrase "said original sections" therein. In my opinion the title of the act and the other passages therein just referred to offer clear and convincing evidence of the legislative intention. In fact, the title itself expresses the intention without any ambiguity whatsoever and while it is no part of the act, still it may be looked to to supply errors and omissions in the body of the act. But even without the title, the legislative intent to amend and repeal is clearly enough expressed in the other sections referred to, and in addition to all this the legislature has employed in the body of section 1 itself the form of legislation which it is its custom invariably to employ when it is amending statutes and enacting supplementary sections. Nay more, the legislature has framed the body of section 1 simply in accordance with the requirement of article 2, section 16, of the Constitution, which provides that:

> "No law shall be * * * amended unless the new act contains the * * * section or sections amended and he section or sections so amended shall be repealed."

There can be no reasonable doubt as to what the legislature intended to do after the act itself is examined and without regard to any other record or document.

For the foregoing reasons I am of the opinion that the second alternative, above suggested, must be applied, the conditions thereof being satisfied, and that amended house bill No. 300 is in all respects a valid measure, subject to the referendum; and that finally the true meaning and application of the incomplete language in section 1 thereof is to be determined by consulting the title, where that intent and application is most clearly expressed. In other words, section 1 has and must be given the effect of amending the sections of the General Code first mentioned in the title of the act and enacting the supplemental sections therein referred to. The last clause of section 1, wherein repeals are mentioned, is, of course, mere surplusage, being incomplete in itself and the subject matter thereof being completely covered by section 6.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN SANDUSKY AND RICHLAND COUNTIES—DISAPPROVAL—RESOLUTIONS—FOR WARREN AND HANCOCK COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 2, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 30, 1917, in which you enclose certain final resolutions and request that I approve the same. The final resolutions enclosed by you have to do with the following described highways:

Sandusky County—Sec. "B-1" Fremont-Bowling Green road, Pet. No. 2893, I. C. H. No. 278.
Sandusky County—Sec. "L" Fremont-Bellevue road, Pet. No. 2886, I. C. H. No. 274.
Warren County—Sec. "b" Morrow-Lebanon road, Pet. No. 3054-T, I. C. H. No. 252.
Richland County—Sec. "E" Ganges-Plymouth road, Pet. No. 2871, I. C. H. No. 478.
Hancock County—Sec. "G" Lima-Sandusky road, Pet. No. 2426, I. C. H. No. 22. (Also copy.)

I have examined these final resolutions carefully and find those which have to do with I. C. H. No. 278 and I. C. H. No. 274, in Sandusky county, and I. C. H. No. 478 in Richland county, are correct in form and legal. I am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

I am returning to you the final resolution having to do with I. C. H. No. 252, in Warren county, and the one having to do with I. C. H. No. 22 (together with copy), in Hancock county, without my approval endorsed thereon.

It will be noticed that the final resolution having to do with I. C. H. No. 252, in Warren county, is of date April 26, 1917, but the certificate of the township clerk certifies that the resolution was entered into on the 26th day of August, 1916. Further, his certificate to the effect that the money required for the payment of the township's portion of the improvement is in the township treasury, to the credit of the township road fund, is of date April 28, 1917. As stated in a former opinion rendered to you, the certificate of the clerk or auditor must be of date not later than the date upon which the final resolution of the township trustees or county commissioners is adopted. It will be noted that this final resolution does not comply with said conditions.

For the same reason I am returning to you the final resolution having to do with I. C. H. No. 22, Hancock county, with copy of same. This resolution or agreement was entered into on April 14, 1917, while the certificate of the county auditor is of date April 20, 1917. As said in my former opinion to you in reference to this matter, the courts are very strict in the construction they place upon this matter of the certificate of the county auditor, holding that unless it is filed as of a date earlier than the entering into of the agreement for expenditure of money, the agreement is void. For a fuller discussion of this proposition, I refer you to my former opinion.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CHILDREN'S HOME—WHEN COST OF ERECTION OF SAME TO COST MORE THAN $15,000.00—QUESTION OF POLICY OF EXPENDITURE MUST BE SUBMITTED TO VOTERS—COUNTY BUILDINGS—WHEN COST OF ERECTION MORE THAN $25,000.00—MUST FOLLOW PROVISIONS OF SECTION 2333 G. C.

1. In the erection of a county children's home to cost in excess of $15,000.00, it is necessary to submit the question, as to the policy of making such an expenditure, to the voters of the county, under the provisions of section 5638 et seq. G. C.

2. In the erection of a county building to cost in excess of $25,000.00, it is necessary to follow the provisions of section 2333 G. C., as well as the sections that follow. This would include a county children's home.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 2, 1917.

HON. FRANK B. GROVE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cadiz, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 9, 1917, in which you ask my opinion about certain matters therein set out. Your communication reads as follows:

> "I wish your opinion in regard to the following matter:
> "The department of inspection of the industrial commission has issued orders for extensive changes and repairs in the Harrison County Children's Home. The trustees of said home have had an estimate made by an architect and same shows that to make said changes and repairs as so ordered will cost about $15,000.00. Said trustees, and also the board of county commissioners, think it unwise to expend $15,000.00 on changes and repairs which will still leave the building in an undesirable condition; hence they have had an estimate as to the cost of rebuilding and remodeling the dormitory and find same will cost at least $35,000.00.
> "The county commissioners have no money available with which to make the repairs covered by either of above estimates. The present county budget requires the full three mill levy. The county has at present $75,000.00 worth of outstanding bonds Our duplicate is about $29,000,000.00.
> "Under the provisions of Sec. 5638 et seq. General Code, will it not be necessary for the county commissioners to submit to the voters of the county the question as to the policy of making either of the expenditures above named before said commissioners can legally issue bonds to provide money for either an expenditure of $15,000.00 or of $35,000.00 as above?
> "In the event that said improvements are made, will it be necessary that a building commission be appointed as provided in Sec. 2333 General Code?"

There are two separate and distinct questions contained in your communication. The first question is as follows:

> "Under the provisions of Sec. 5638 et seq. General Code, will it not be necessary for the county commissioners to submit to the voters of the county the question as to the policy of making either of the expenditures above named before said commissioners can legally issue bonds to provide money for either an expenditure of $15,000.00 or of $35,000.00 as above?"

As your first question has to do with the provisions of section 5638 G. C., I will quote said section in full, which reads as follows:

"Sec. 5638. The county commissioners shall not levy a tax, appropriate money or issue bonds for the purpose of building county buildings, purchasing sites therefor, or for land for infirmary purposes, the expenses of which will exceed $15,000.00, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or for building a county bridge, the expense of which will exceed $18,000.00, except in case of casualty, and as hereinafter provided; or enlarge, repair, improve, or rebuild a public county building, the entire cost of which expenditure will exceed $10,000.00; without first submitting to the voters of the county, the question as to the policy of making such expenditure."

It will be noted that, under the provisions of said section 5638, whenever county buildings are built, the expense of which will exceed $15,000.00, or whenever public county buildings are repaired, improved or enlarged, the cost of which expenditure will exceed $10,000.00, the question as to the policy of making such expenditure must first be submitted to the voters of the county. There is just one exception noted in this section and that is except in case of casualty. On account of this exception it might be well for us to note briefly as to whether your proposition would come under the excepted class.

The accepted meaning of the word "casualty" would seem to prevent such a construction being placed upon the matter under consideration. The exception takes care of those cases in which a county building might be destroyed by storm, flood or fire and it would be necessary to rebuild immediately. But there is no casualty in cases in which buildings are rendered unserviceable due to decay.

In Commissioners of Defiance County v. Croweg, et al., 24 O. S. 492, the court makes a clear distinction between those cases in which the restoration of structures is made necessary due to decay, and those in which restoration is made necessary due to casualty.

Now, if your proposition does not come within the exception, the following principles must apply: If the cost of reconstruction of the building is over $15,000.00, the question as to the policy of making such expenditure must first be submitted to the voters of your county. Or if your county commissioners decide to repair the old building and the cost of repair exceeds $10,000.00, the question as to the policy of making such expenditure will likewise have to be submitted to the voters of your county.

Your second question is as follows:

"In the event that said improvements are made, will it be necessary that a building commission be appointed as provided in Sec. 2333 General Code?"

The answer to your second question is not so easily arrived at as that to your first question. In order to reach a conclusion as to the correct answer to your second question, it will be necessary for us to go into the history of legislation to some extent, in reference to public buildings. Your question has to do, in brief, as to whether your county commissioners, in the event they decide to rebuild, must proceed under the provisions of sections 2333 et seq. G. C., or whether they may proceed under the provisions of sections 2343 et seq. G. C. Let us note, therefore, a little legislative history in reference to sections 2333 et seq. G. C.

In 1904 an act was passed by the general assembly, entitled:

> "An act to provide for a commission for building court houses." (97 O. L. 111.)

Section 1 of this act provided that when the county commissioners of any county determine, under and by virtue of the statutes of Ohio, to erect a court house which shall cost to exceed $25,000.00, they shall apply to the judge of the court of common pleas, who shall appoint four men, freeholders, who, in connection with the county commissioners, shall constitute a building commission.

In 1906 this act was amended (98 O. L. 53), but it still applied to no county building other than court houses. This act of 1906 was carried into the Revised Statutes as sections 794-1 to 794-5 inclusive.

When the General Code was enacted by the legislature in 1910, this particular act was given sectional numbers 2333 to 2342 inclusive. Further, the legislature when it adopted the General Code modified the said act to a considerable extent. It was made to include not only court houses, but also "other county buildings." Section 2342 G. C. was also amended, which will be more carefully noted later on.

At this point I desire to call attention to the fact that when this act was enacted in 1904, and when it was amended in 1906 and was placed in the Revised Statutes as sections 794-1 to 794-5 inclusive, it was a separate, distinct, complete and all-inclusive act. It provided a procedure for the erection of court houses which cost to exceed $25,000.00. It did not attempt to repeal any sections of the statutes, nor any act. It did not pretend to be supplementary to any section or to any act. It was a separate and distinct act, containing within itself all the provisions necessary to make it effective for the purpose for which it was enacted.

With this brief history in mind, it will be necessary for us to note the decisions of our courts together with the opinions rendered by this department, which have had a somewhat checkered course, but when they are considered in the light of the history above set forth, they are harmonious.

In Mackenzie v. State, 76 O. S. 369 (decided June 4, 1907); the court held in this case that:

> "'An act to provide for a commission for building court houses', passed April 18, 1904 (97 O. L. 111), and amended March 8, 1906 (98 O. L. 53), is constitutional, and Revised Statutes, sections 794 to 799, inclusive, do not apply to proceedings thereunder." (Syll.)

On p. 370 the court say in the opinion:

> "As we construe the statutes, two independent modes of erecting court houses are provided. One mode is under the supervision of the county commissioners, upon plans submitted to them, the clerk of the court, the sheriff, probate judge, and one person to be appointed by the judge of the court of common pleas, and to be approved by a majority of them. The procedure under this scheme is defined in sections 794 to 803 of the Revised Statutes. A very different and, as we regard it, complete and independent scheme is provided for in 'An act to provide for a commission for building court houses' (97 O. L. 111) as amended (98 O. L. 53). The first mode or scheme may be applied to any building which shall cost ten thousand dollars or more; the second to court houses which shall cost to exceed twenty-five thousand dollars."

That is, the court holds that sections 794 to 799 inclusive, R. S., provide one mode of erecting public buildings which is under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners, while sections 794-1 to 794-5 inclusive, R. S., provide an additional mode of erecting court houses, which is under the jurisdiction of a building commission; that these two acts are separate and distinct, each having within itself the necessary provisions to make it an effective instrument for the purposes for which it was enacted; that when proceeding under the one act, the provisions of the other act do not apply, and that the act creating the building commission (sections 794-1 to 794-5 inc. R. S.) is neither supplementary to nor amendatory of sections 794 to 799 inc. R. S., and does not even refer to those sections, to qualify its general terms.

It will be well, in the further discussion of this question, to remember that sections 794-1 to 794-5 inc. R. S. became under the General Code sections 2333 to 2342 inc., and sections 794 to 799 inc. R. S. became sections 2343 to 2357 inc. G. C. So under the General Code sections 2333 to 2342 inc. provide for the commission plan of building county buildings, while sections 2343 to 2357 inc. provide for the building of county buildings by the county commissioners.

It must further be kept in mind that when the General Code was enacted and section 794-1 R. S. became section 2333 G. C., the provisions were made not to apply to court houses alone, but "to court houses or other county buildings costing over $25,000.00;" also the provisions of section 2338 G. C. vary materially from the provisions of section 794-1 R. S.

Section 794-1 R. S. read in part as follows :

"Said building commission shall, after adopting plans, specifications and estimates, invite bids and award contracts for said court house, and for furnishing, heating, lighting, ventilating and for sewerage of the same, and to determine all questions connected therewith until said court house shall have been completed and accepted by said building commission."

When this part of the section 794-1 R. S. was carried into the General Code as section 2338, it was made to read as follows:

"After adopting plans, specifications and estimates, the commission shall invite bids and award contracts for the building and for furnishing, heating, lighting and ventilating it, and for the sewerage thereof. Until the building is completed and accepted, by the building commission, it may determine all questions connected therewith, and shall be governed by the provisions of this chapter relating to the erection of public buildings of the county."

In other words, it will be noted that the following language was added:

"and shall be governed by the provisions of this chapter relating to the erection of public buildings of the county."

With this explanation in mind, let us note further the authorities. Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, one of my predecessors, rendered an opinion on April 7, 1911, found in Vol. II, p. 1142 of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1911-1912, in which he held that in the erection of a county infirmary building, costing over $25,000.00, the provisions of section 2333 G. C. must be followed, and that it must be erected under the jurisdiction of a building commission, subject merely to the exceptions found in section 2436 G. C., which had to do with the matter when the county infirmary had been destroyed by fire and the rebuilding of the same. He held that sections 2333 et seq. G. C. provided the only method for erecting county buildings costing over $25,000.00. On p. 1144 of said opinion he reasoned as follows:

"I take it that all of said sections are mandatory and are to be strictly followed by the commissioners; and if there were no exception to the provisions of the above-mentioned sections, then the procedure therein contained would be the exclusive method by which such county buildings would be constructed and erected. But there is an exception, at least in respect to the building of an infirmary building when the same has been destroyed by fire, as provided in section 2436, General Code, which reads as follows:

"My final conclusion is that in the situation covered in said section 2436, General Code, the said section becomes operative and governs in so far as the exception goes, to wit: the commissioners may appropriate money, levy tax and issue and sell the bonds of such county in anticipation thereof, in an amount, etc., without first submitting to the voters thereof the question of rebuilding such infirmary, appropriating such money, etc.; for to hold otherwise would make the exception of no effect upon the original rule which it modifies, and more restricted than it really is. But with respect to the remaining provisions of said sections 2333 to 2342, General Code, I think it necessarily follows, and I am of the opinion that said remaining provisions would apply and govern and that the county commissioners would be legally required to rebuild in accordance therewith. That is to say, the only exception, as I have stated above, to the provisions contained in said sections is, that in the event the county infirmary is destroyed by fire or other casualty, then the commissioners may expend a sum to the extent of fifty thousand dollars without submitting the proposition to a vote of the people of the county; and this being the only exception, of course it follows that all the remaining provisions would govern."

In rendering this opinion, Mr. Hogan did not refer to nor comment at all upon Mackenzie v. State, supra, although the court in that case held directly opposite to the opinion rendered by Mr. Hogan.

On February 7, 1914, Mr. Hogan was again called upon to pass upon the exact question upon which he had passed before. In this opinion, found in Vol. I, p. 251, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, he refers to and comments upon Mackenzie v. State, supra, but still holds to the conclusions reached in his former opinion. In the syllabus he holds as follows:

> "1. Section 2333 General Code governs and must be followed by the commissioners proceeding to construct county buildings at a cost exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars."

After distinguishing to some extent the case of Mackenzie v. State, supra, from the case upon which he had rendered an opinion theretofore, Mr. Hogan uses the following language on p. 252 of the opinion:

> "I repeat therefore that, while I acknowledge that the statements of Judge Davis in the opinion in the Mackenzie case are inconsistent with my former opinion, yet, because these statements were, strictly speaking, obiter dicta, I still am inclined to the view that it would be at least the safer policy to follow the building commission act in constructing a county building, the cost of which exceeds twenty-five thousand dollars."

In a case decided by the superior court of Cincinnati and reported in 18 O. N. P. (N. S.) 97, styled State ex rel. v. Green, the court held that in the erection of a court house, under the provisions of sections 2333 to 2342 inc. G. C., the building commission must be governed by not only the provisions of these particular sections, but also by the provisions of sections 2343 to 2357 inc. G. C., thus holding directly opposite from Mackenzie v. State, supra. The superior court held that the principle enunciated in the Mackenzie case was abrogated, due to the amendment which had been added to section 2338 G. C. at the time of the adoption of the General Code in 1910, which amendment read as follows:

> "and shall be governed by the provisions of this chapter relating to the erection of public buildings of the county."

The above case was affirmed by the circuit court in State ex rel. v. Green, 22 O. C. C. (N. S.) 1. The supreme court refused to order the circuit court to certify the record, holding that there was no manifest error in the finding of the court of common pleas and the circuit court.

Let us briefly recapitulate in reference to the holdings of the different courts and of this department:

The court in the Mackenzie case held that in the erection of a court house, under the provisions of sections 794-1 to 794-5 inc. R. S., the commission was controlled by no other provisions than those found within the act itself; but it must be remembered that this case was decided before the adding of the amendment to section 2338 G. C.

The superior court of Cincinnati held that in the erection of a court house, under the provisions of sections 2333 to 2342 inc. G. C., the commission must look not only to the provisions of these sections, but to the general provisions having to do with the building of county buildings, namely, sections 2343 et seq. G. C. But it must be remembered that this case was decided after the addition to section 2338 G. C.

It will be noted in these two cases that the court did not pass directly upon the question which we have under consideration, that is, whether it was obligatory, in the construction of county buildings costing over $25,000.00, to proceed under section 2333 G. C., which had to do with the creation of the building commission, or whether proceedings might be had under section 2343 G. C., which gives the county commissioners jurisdiction.

But when we come to consider the opinions rendered by Mr. Hogan, we find he holds clearly and distinctly that in the erection of county buildings costing more than $25,000.00 proceedings must be had under sections 2333 et seq. G. C., and this plan is the only one that can be followed.

In view of the history of this legislation and in view of the court decisions and the decisions of this department, what is the answer to your question?

The building commission act, as originally enacted, provided merely for plans in the erection of court houses, but, as said before, when the General Code was enacted it was made to include not only court houses, but other county buildings also. When the General Code was enacted, new matter was added to section 2338 G. C., as above set out, which states that the building commission shall be governed by the provisions of this chapter relating to the erection of public buildings of the county. What are the provisions of this chapter? Chapter 1 is headed "Building Regulations." It is divided into three parts:

> "1. 'State Buildings,' which is controlled by sections 2314 to 2332 inc. G. C.
> "2. 'County Buildings and Bridges,' which is controlled by sections 2333 to 2361 inc. G. C.
> "3. 'General Provisions,' which is controlled by sections 2362 to 2366 inc. G. C."

It is to be noted in this chapter, as it is now enacted, that the two acts, which we have above been considering, are merged in one act, under the title "County Buildings and Bridges." It is no longer two acts, but one act, the provisions of which have to do with county buildings and bridges.

In view of all the above, I am of the opinion that the opinions rendered by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan are correct, and that in the erection of county buildings, costing to exceed $25,000.00, it is necessary to follow the provisions as laid down in sections 2333 et seq. G. C.

In passing, I desire to call your attention to section 2351 G. C., which makes a special provision in reference to the building of a children's home. This you will consider as well as the provisions of sections 2333 et seq. G. C.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that if your county proceeds with the erection of a county children's home, it will be necessary for it to follow the provisions of section 2333 G. C., as well as the sections that follow. I have gone into this matter pretty fully, for the reason that I felt it ought to be decided definitely and specifically in view of the decisions of the courts and the opinions of this department.

It must be kept in mind, however, that the provisions of section 2333 G. C. apply only in cases where the county buildings are erected, and not where they are merely repaired or remodeled. So that if your county commissioners merely repair or remodel an old building, the provisions of this section would not apply. In the case decided by the superior court of Cincinnati, herein set out, this matter is discussed to some extent and may be of aid to you in deciding the matter.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

REGISTERED BONDS—ISSUED SUBSEQUENT TO JANUARY 1, 1913—UPON DEMAND OF HOLDER—INSTEAD OF COUPON BONDS—NOT TAXABLE.

When a municipal corporation, upon the demand of the owner or holder of any of its coupon bonds issued prior to January 1, 1913, issues instead thereof registered bonds subsequent to January 1, 1913, such registered bonds are not taxable when owned by residents of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 2, 1917.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of March 9, 1917, in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "When a municipal corporation, upon the demand of the owner or holder of any of its coupon bonds issued prior to January 1, 1913, issues instead thereof registered bonds subsequent to January 1, 1913, are such registered bonds taxable when owned by residents of Ohio?"

Article 12, section 2, of the constitution now provides:

> "Laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, joint stock companies, or otherwise; and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money, excepting all bonds at present outstanding of the state of Ohio or of any city, village, hamlet, county, or township in this state or which have been issued in behalf of the public schools in Ohio and the means of instruction in connection therewith, which bonds so at present outstanding shall be exempt from taxation."

The phrase "at present" evidently refers, as you assume, to January 1, 1913, when this section, as adopted by the electors in 1912, took effect. The sections of the General Code, under favor of which the exchange referred to by you could have been effected, are as follows:

> "Section 3928: On demand of the owner or holder of any of its coupon bonds, a municipal corporation may issue instead thereof a registered bond, or bonds, of the corporation not exceeding in amount the coupon bonds offered in exchange. The registered bond or bonds shall be signed and sealed as other municipal bonds are signed and sealed, and bear the same rate of interest, be payable both principal and interest at the same time and place, as the coupon bonds for which the exchange is made, and shall be of such denomination as the holder of the coupon bonds may elect.
> "Section 3929: When due, the interest and principal of such registered bonds shall be paid only to the person, corporation, or firm appearing by the records of the municipal corporation to be the owner thereof, or order. Such registered bonds may be transferred on such record by the owner in person or by a person authorized so to do by power of attorney duly executed. The exchange and registration here required shall be transacted by the trustees of the sinking fund at their business office where a registry shall be kept for that purpose which shall show the date, series, denomination and owner of such registered bonds and the number and series of the coupon bonds for which they were exchanged.

"Section 3930: No registered bonds shall be issued by a municipal corporation until the bonds and coupons offered in exchange shall have been cancelled or destroyed. The trustees of the sinking fund may demand of the holder of the coupon bonds a reasonable fee as compensation for the expense of making such exchange.

Undoubtedly the automatic exemption of article 11, section 12 is an exemption in rem. Specific things are hereby withdrawn from the exemption of the taxing power. In the case you put, it is clear that on January 1, 1913, there was in existence a specific thing which was then exempt from taxation by favor of the constitution itself. Since that time the form of the thing has been changed. Is it, nevertheless, the same thing which existed on January 1, 1913? This, to my mind, is the only question which need be considered. Stated in another way it amounts to this: Does the exchange by the holder thereof of a municipal coupon bond for a registered bond or bonds effect a substantial change in the res or thing which exists, considered as a subject of taxation?

The people in adopting the amendment to article 12, section 2, of the constitution must, I think, be presumed to have understood its application in the respect now under consideration, in the light of the long established definition of the class of things affected thereby as subject to taxation. It will be observed that the first part of article 12, section 2, requires laws to be passed taxing inter alia all investments in bonds; and that the part of the section now under consideration is in form and in substance an exception to this requirement.

The term "investment in bonds" has been defined for years in this state by what is now section 5323 General Code. Though several amendments have been made to that section since its original enactment, its substantial meaning has never been changed. It now provides as follows:

"The term 'investment in bonds' as so used, includes all moneys (invested) in bonds, certificates of indebtedness, or other evidences of indebtedness of whatever kind, whether issued by incorporated or unincorporated companies, towns, cities, villages, townships, counties, states, or other incorporations, or by the United States, held by persons residing in this state, whether for themselves or others."

It is not necessary for the present purpose to analyze this definition minutely. It is sufficient to observe that the subject of taxation thereby pointed out is not a tangible thing but an intangible thing evidenced by a certain form of certificate or security. It is the investment in the bond and not the bond itself—if any distinction is to be drawn—which is the subject of taxation.

On the other hand, however, it is equally clear that this principle does not furnish a complete answer to the question which you submit; for while the subject of taxation is the intangible investment, yet it might still be argued that the subject of the exemption is not an investment made prior to a certain date, but rather an investment evidenced by a paper writing issued prior to a certain date, regardless of when the investment was made. Indeed, I think this view must be accepted; for it is clear that if a municipal bond were issued prior to January 1, 1913, it is exempt in the hands of any person who may hold it, whether he acquired it, i. e., made his "investment" prior to that date, or not. After all, therefore, the fact that both in substance and for the purpose of section 5323 General Code the chose in action and not the mere paper evidence of it is the real subject of taxation is not perfectly conclusive.

Nor do I think that we are helped by considering the question from the standpoint of the municipalities which have issued these bonds. From their standpoint the debt is substantially the same debt, notwithstanding the exchange of bonds; but the same argument might be made if the bonds, instead of being exchanged for registered bonds, had been refunded by the issuance of an entirely separate set of bonds.

Without passing directly upon this question, which is not before me, I am certainly not prepared to hold that such refunding bonds would be exempt from taxation merely because the original indebtedness which they were designed to extend had been created prior to January 1, 1913. While such consideration may, therefore, be helpful as influencing the point of view from which the solution of the question may be approached, they are not conclusive in themselves. In my opinion the real question to be answered is as follows:

> "Are the registered bonds issued in place of the original bonds substantially the same obligations as the original bonds?"

I put the question this way because I think that by considering it as such, attention is directed to the exact thing which is the subject of taxation, viz., the right of the holder of negotiable papers against the obligor thereof, based upon the paper which he holds. The second of the other considerations referred to would have us look at the question from the viewpoint of the obligor and inquire when his debt was created. The suggested viewpoint requires us to look at it from the standpoint of the obligee or his transferee, who must make whatever return for taxation the statutes require—who has indeed made the "investment" hereinbefore referred to.

Looking to sections 3928 G. C., et seq., above quoted, it will be observed that the registered bond corresponds with the coupon bond for which it is exchanged in rate of interest, time of payment and place of payment. It differs or may differ from the original coupon bond in denomination, though originally the amount of registered bonds issued to any one holder will, of course, correspond in the aggregate to the amount of coupon bonds offered in exchange by him. The new bond also differs from the old in that the right of the municipality with respect to the payment of interest and principal is more clearly defined and the right of the holder correspondingly limited; that is to say, the principal and interest of the registered bond can be paid only to the person appearing on the register as the owner thereof; whereas the municipality would be protected in paying an ordinary coupon bond to any one appearing upon the face thereof to be a holder in due course. Some question even exists as to whether or not registered bonds are negotiable instruments. Authorities will be found to the effect that where the payment is restricted as in section 3929 of the General Code, the bond is not negotiable.

> Scollins v. Rollins, 173 Mass., 275;
> Benwell v. Newark, 55 N. J., Equity, 260;
> Manhattan Savings Institute v. N. Y.;
> National Exchange Bank, 170 N. Y., 58.

A very valuable discussion of the different classes of municipal bonds and the negotiability of each is to be found in the New Jersey case, above cited, in the opinion by Pitney, V. C. On the other hand, however, it has been held that registered bonds, subject to restrictions substantially the same as those found in section 3929 of the General Code, are negotiable. D'Esterre v. Brooklyn, 90 Fed., 586. I think the exact status of the bonds issued by an Ohio municipality is that which Pitney, V. C., described in Benwell v. Newark as convertible coupon bonds; that is to say, any ordinary coupon bond issued by any municipal corporation in Ohio, under the General Code of the state, may, upon the agreement of both parties, be converted into a registered bond. While Vice Chancellor Pitney speaks of a convertible coupon bond as one which is converted from a coupon bond into a registered bond by certain alterations on the face thereof, yet I do not think that the mere fact that the Ohio statutes require a formal taking up and destruction of the coupon bonds and a formal issuance of new evidences of indebtedness changes the substantial result. In effect all Ohio municipal bonds are, as I have already stated, convertible into registered bonds, though not as a matter of right if the municipal authorities are unwilling. In short, a coupon bond has the potentiality, at least, of being exchanged for registered bonds.

This fact, then, makes immaterial the differences which exist between a coupon bond and a registered bond, for while such differences do exist and have been pointed out, yet the registered bond is issued under what may be termed an implied condition or right existing by virtue of the coupon bond.

It thus becomes apparent that the holder of the coupon bond, in having it exchanged for a registered bond, is merely exercising the right which he had as a holder of the coupon bond. That being the case, it is further clear to me that the change in the form of the obligation which he holds does not make a substantial change therein for the purpose of the present inquiry. In other words, the registered bond is in substance the same bond as the original coupon bond, in that it is the outgrowth of that bond and owes its existence to rights determined by and arising from the original bond.

For this reason, then, I am of the opinion that the question which you submit is to be answered in the negative. In arriving at this conclusion I have not considered the question suggested by a brief which has been furnished to me by counsel employed by certain insurance companies and by an opinion of Hon. Robert P. Duncan, prosecuting attorney of Franklin county, to the auditor of that county, respecting the effect of article 12, section 11 of the constitution, though my impression is that this constitutional provision does not afford any trustworthy assistance in the solution of the question; nor have I considered the question made in the brief above cited respecting the change in the constitutional exemption as an impairment of the obligation of the contract, though here, too, I am not satisfied that such question is in the case. My conclusion is based wholly upon the fact that the issuance of the registered bond is a right which inheres in the holder of the original coupon bond by virtue of his ownership of that bond. So that, however, different as an obligation, the duty of the municipality to the holder of a registered bond may be, as compared with its duty to the holder of a coupon bond, that obligation is one which is derived from and is a part of the original obligation of the city under the coupon bond when first issued; hence the change in form and even the change in substance does not amount, in effect, to the issuance of a new bond for the purpose, at least, of the application of article 12, section 2, of the constitution.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General

FOREIGN CORPORATION—NOT REQUIRED TO COMPLY WITH SECTIONS 178 AND 183 G. C.—WHOSE ONLY ACTIVITY IN THIS STATE IS THAT OF OWNING REAL PROPERTY.

A foreign corporation whose only activity in this state is that of owning real property here, which it leases to others, is not required to comply with the provisions of sections 178 and 183 of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 3, 1917.

HONORABLE WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of a communication under date of April 12, 1917, from Messrs. Squire, Sanders and Dempsey, attorneys at law, Cleveland, Ohio, asking my opinion whether on the facts therein stated The Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, a New Jersey corporation, is required to comply with sections 178 and 183 General Code, and conformable to a rule of this department I am addressing my opinion with respect to the question presented to you. The facts as stated in the communication above referred to are as follows:

> "The Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, under an agreement not made in this state, has purchased and acquired certain real estate and a manufacturing plant located therein formerly owned by the Mechanical Rubber Company, a New Jersey corporation, and the Sawyer Belting Company, a Massachusetts corporation, the deed being delivered outside of the state of Ohio. The Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company will not conduct any business on the premises, but proposes to grant a long term lease thereof to the Mechanical Rubber Company and the Sawyer Belting Company—the lease to be executed and delivered outside of this state, under which lease certain periodical rents are to be paid to the owner at its office in another state. The Mechanical Rubber Company and the Sawyer Belting Company have each duly procured licenses to do business in the state of Ohio as foreign corporations.
> "The Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company does not and will not maintain any office in this state nor have any representative therein; it will not manufacture, sell or deal in any products in this state, all of its officers and agents being non-residents. So far as Ohio is concerned, its sole function will be to hold title to the property above mentioned and to receive at its office the rent therefrom.
> "The corporate power of The Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company to do the foregoing appears from the following clause in its certificate of incorporation, included among the objects for which the corporation was formed:
> " 'To invest in, grant, bargain, sell, buy, rent, deal in, own, improve, lease or receive any and all kinds of property, real or personal, within or without the state of New Jersey, including the shares and evidences of indebtedness of other corporations as well as its own shares, and to deal with the same as a natural person might do, and in all ways not inconsistent with the law.' "

In this state there are two laws imposing conditions upon foreign corporations entering the state to transact business therein. First, the license fee law provided by sections 178 to 182, inclusive, General Code, which applies to foreign corporations, except that kind specified in said section 178 General Code; and, second, the initial franchise tax law provided for in sections 183 to 192, inclusive, General Code, which, except as to the classes of foreign corporations specified in section 188, provides for a franchise tax upon the proportion of the capital stock of the corporation represented by the property and business in this state. In addition to the foregoing, an annual franchise tax is imposed on foreign corporations doing business in this state by General Code section 5503.

Section 178 General Code provides that before a foreign corporation for profit "transacts business in this state" it shall procure from the secretary of state a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of the law to authorize it to do business in this state, and that the business of such corporation to be transacted here is such as may be lawfully carried on by a corporation organized under the laws of this state for such or similar business, or if more than one kind of business, by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kind of business exclusively. This section further provides that no such foreign corporation doing business in this state without such certificate shall maintain an action on a contract made by it in this state until it has procured such certificate.

Section 180 General Code provides that for issuing the certificate required by section 178 General Code authorizing such foreign corporation to transact business in this state, the secretary of state shall be entitled to receive from such foreign corporation certain fees based upon the authorized capital stock of such corporation.

Section 183 General Code provides that "before doing business in this state," a foreign corporation organized for profit and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state shall make and file with the secretary of state in such form as he may prescribe a statement under oath of its president, secretary, treasurer, superintendent or managing agent in this state, which shall contain the following facts:

1. The number of shares of authorized capital stock of the corporation and the par value of each share.

2. Name and location of the office or offices of the corporation and the names and addresses of the officers or agents of the corporation in charge of its business in Ohio.

3. The value of the property owned and used by the corporation in Ohio, where situated, and the value of the property of the corporation owned and used outside of Ohio.

4. The proportion of capital stock of the corporation represented by the property owned and used by the business transacted in Ohio.

Section 184 General Code provides that from the facts thus reported and any other facts coming to his knowledge, the secretary of state shall determine the proportion of capital stock of the corporation represented by its property and business in this state, and shall charge and collect from such corporation for the privilege of exercising its franchise in this state, one-tenth of one per cent. upon the proportion of its authorized capital stock represented by property owned and used and business transacted in this state, but not less than ten dollars in any case.

It is a familiar principle of law that no state has the power to authorize a corporation of its creation to exercise its corporate franchise in another state except with the express or implied consent of such state. Any right or power to do business which a corporation of one state may presume to exercise in another, therefore, exists purely by virtue of the rule of comity—a rule which, it seems, in some respects has the force and effect of a rule of the common law.

It is a principle equally well settled, following what has just been said, that since a corporation has no absolute right to recognition in a state other than that of its creation, but depends for its recognition on the express or implied assent of such state, it may grant such assent and authorize a foreign corporation to do business therein on such terms and conditions as it may think proper to impose, provided, of course, such conditions do not infringe on the constitution and laws of the United States.

In pursuance of this power to prescribe conditions upon which foreign corporations may enter this state for the purpose of transacting business herein, the legislature has enacted the statutory provisions above noted. From the terms of sections 178 and 183 General Code, it is apparent that the conditions therein imposed apply only to the corporations transacting or doing business in this state or which seek to do so.

In this connection it may be noted that irrespective of statutes of this kind, a foreign corporation is only liable to state franchise taxation based on its doing business if it in fact does business in the state, and what constitutes "doing business" is to be determined from what it actually does. It cannot consist in the corporation's doing what it has a right to do without the consent of the state.

Judson on Taxation, section 175.

Statutes of similar import to the above, applying to foreign corporations of different kinds, have been enacted in practically all of the states, and the provisions of these statutes in respect to what constitutes "doing business" within the meaning of these terms as used in such statutes have been construed in many decisions of the courts of the several states and of the United States. In these decisions, however, the courts for the most part have refrained from formulating any general rule for determining when a foreign corporation is "doing business" within the meaning of such statutes, but have contented themselves in determining whether under the facts in the particular cases such corporations are within the statute.

With respect to mercantile and commercial corporations it may be noted that in so far as any general rule can be gathered from the decisions the phrase "doing business" within any particular state, as applied to such corporations, implies corporate continuity of conduct in respect to such business such as might be evidenced by the investment of capital, the maintenance of an office for the transaction of business and those incidental circumstances which attest the corporate intent to avail itself of the privilege of carrying on the business and activities such as appertain to the ordinary business and purpose of the corporation as distinguished from acts simply within its corporate powers.

Penn Colliers Co. v. McKeever, 183 N. Y., 98;
Simons-Burk Clothing Co. v. Linton, 90 Ark., 96;
Kilgore v. Smith, 122 Pa., 48;
Caesar v. Cappell, 83 Fed. Rep., 403-422;
Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S., 727;
Toledo Commercial Co. v. Glenn Mfg. Co., 55 O. S. 217, 222, 223.

From the facts stated in the communication above referred to and quoted, it appears that with respect to this state the sole activity of The Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company consists of the owning of property situated here, the purchase and sale of which was consummated outside of the state, which property it proposes to lease by an instrument to be executed and delivered likewise outside of the state of Ohio. Under this state of facts I am inclined to the view that The Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company is not required to comply with the provisions of sections 178 or 183 General Code.

As before noted both of said sections by their terms are predicated upon the condition that the foreign corporation is transacting or doing business in this state, and it has been uniformly held that the ownership by a foreign corporation of property within the jurisdiction of a particular state cannot of itself constitute "doing business" by the corporation therein.

Judson on Taxation, section 176;
Missouri Coal and Mining Co. v. Ladd, 160 Mo., 435;
Sullivan v. Southern Timber Co., 103 Ala., 371.

In the case of Wilson v. Peace, 85 S. W., Reporter, 31 (Tex.), it was held that the mere fact that a foreign corporation owned land and leased it to a farmer, the rent to be paid in grain, does not show that the company was doing business in the state within the foreign corporation statutes.

In the case of Zonne v. Minneapolis Syndicate, 220 U. S., 187, it was held that a corporation which merely holds title to the land subject to lease and received the rental thereon is not engaged in business within the federal corporation excise tax law of 1909, which provides that every corporation organized for profit and having a capital stock represented by shares, organized under the laws of the United States or of any state or territory of the United States, or under the acts of congress applicable to Alaska or the District of Columbia, or organized under the laws of any foreign country and engaged in business in any state or territory of the United States or in Alaska or in the District of Columbia, shall be required to pay annually an excise tax with respect to the carrying on or "doing business" of such corporation.

In the case of the Louisville Property Company v. the Mayor and City Council of the City of Nashville, 114 Tenn., 213, which was an action brought by a foreign corporation against the city of Nashville for damages to its property, the defense was made that the company had not complied with the statutes of the state of Tennessee, requiring a foreign corporation, as a condition to the right of carrying on business in the state, to file with the secretary of state a copy of its charter. The court held that regardless of the qualifications under this statute of the state the company's title was good against anyone other than the state; and also held that it was not necessary for the corporation to procure a license inasmuch as the statute made a distinction between the acquisition of property and the "doing of business," and that the lawmakers evidently contemplated that a foreign corporation might enter the state to engage in business, and yet not seek to acquire property, or might buy property, and still not do business.

A case of interest in the consideration of the question here presented is that of the People of the State of New York ex rel. The Singer Manufacturing Company v. Wemple, 150 N. Y., 46. The case was one arising under the franchise tax law of the state of New York, and the opinion of the court, so far as the same touches the question at hand, is as follows:—

"The relator is a foreign corporation carrying on a portion of its business in this state. The comptroller of the state of New York imposed a tax on the corporation for the year ending November 1st, 1890, of $2,-569.99, under chapter 542, Laws of 1880, and the acts amendatory thereof. The general term of the third department ordered a reduction of the tax to $1,163.74, and the comptroller appeals from that order.

"The facts are undisputed; the report of the relator to the comptroller fixes the amount of capital stock employed in this state at $372,397.10; the relator also advised the comptroller that about $900,000 of its surplus earnings were invested in real estate in the city of New York, then under lease and not occupied by it, but the intention was to erect a new building when the existing leases expired, and to use a small portion of it for the offices of the company and lease the remainder to tenants.

"The comptroller insists that the amount so invested in real estate must be added to the capital stock reported as employed in this state and the tax computed on the total sum, while the relator contends that the real estate constitutes no part of the capital stock enployed within this state.

"We are of opinion that the amount represented by the real estate was no portion of the capital stock employed within this state even if the $900,000 was a part of the capital stock of the company; it was an independent investment, and was in no sense employed within this state in the transaction of the ordinary business of the relator. (People ex rel. The Southern Cotton Oil Company v. Wemple, 131 N. Y., 64.) If at any time the whole or any portion of this real estate should be used by the relator in carrying on its business in this state a different question would be presented, which need not now be considered."

Although, as appears from the facts stated in the communication above referred to, the acquisition of this property in Ohio and the subsequent leasing of the same to the other corporation mentioned therein are by acts which have been consummated, or will be consummated, outside of the state, yet even if the whole transaction were conducted in this state it would not, in my opinion, constitute the transaction or doing of business under the statutory provisions above noted, and this for the reason that the transaction would be an isolated one not connected with any continuous corporate activity pertaining to the ordinary business and purpose of the corporation.

In this connection it seems to be the concensus of opinion that a corporation to come within the purview of the statutes of this kind prescribing conditions on the right of foreign corporations to do business within the state must transact therein some substantial part of its ordinary business which must be continuous in the sense at least that it is distinguished from mere casual or occasional transactions, and it may be laid down as a general rule that the act of a foreign corporation in entering into a single contract or transacting or performing an isolated business act in the state does not ordinarily constitute the carrying on or doing business therein.

Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S., 727;
Delaware, etc., Canal Co., v. Mahlenbrock, 63 N. J., Law, 281;
Penn Colliers Co. v. McKeever, supra;
Booth v. Weigand, 30 Utah, 135.

In keeping with this principle numerous authorities may be cited to the point that when a foreign corporation receives a mortgage on land in the domestic state such corporation is not "doing business" within the meaning of the foreign corporation statute.

Caesar v. Cappell, supra;
Floorshine Bros. Dry Goods Co. v. Lester, 60 Ark., 120;
Keene Guaranty Savings Co. v. Lawrence, 32 Wash., 572.

In the case of Lakeview Land Co. v. Traction Co., 95 Tex. 252, 257, it was held that a purchase, outside of the state by a foreign corporation, of land in the state did not constitute the doing of business within the state in the purview of a statute of this kind.

On the considerations noted herein, I am of the opinion, therefore, that if, as stated in the communication received by me from the law firm of Squire, Sanders & Dempsey, the activities of The Rubber Goods Manufacturing Co. are to be limited to the acts stated therein, they will not be required to comply with either the provisions of section 178 or 183 of the General Code.

In arriving at this conclusion I find that I am in substantial accord with an opinion of my predecessor, Mr. Turner, addressed by him to the Tax Commission of Ohio, June 12, 1916, (Opinions of the Attorney-General, 1916 Vol. II, p. 995). The conclusions herein reached are likewise in substantial accord with the opinions of my predecessor, Mr. Hogan, found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for the years 1912 and 1913, at pages 526 and 86 respectively.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

EIGHT HOUR LAW—DOES NOT APPLY TO WORKMEN ENGAGED IN OPERATION OF MUNICIPAL POWER—HEAT—LIGHT AND WATER PLANTS—WORKMEN WORKING FOR PUBLIC AND WORKMEN ENGAGED ON PUBLIC WORK DISTINGUISHED.

The provisions of section 17-1 G. C. and of section 37 of article II of the constitution do not apply to workmen engaged in the operation of municipal power, heat, light and water plants, for the reason that these men are workmen working for the public and not workmen engaged on a public work.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your communication of April 26, 1917, in which you ask for certain information, was duly received. Your communication reads as follows:

> "Section 17-1 of 103 Ohio Laws, page 854, reads as follows:
> " 'Except in cases of extraordinary emergency, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political subdivision thereof, whether done by contract or otherwise; and it shall be unlawful for any person, corporation or association, whose duty it shall be to employ or to direct and control the services of such workmen to require or permit any of them to labor more than eight hours in any calendar day or more than forty-eight hours in any week, except in cases of extraordinary emergency. This section shall not be construed to include policemen or firemen.'
> "Former Attorney-General Hogan rendered an opinion, ruling that engineers, firemen and other workmen in municipal heat, water and power plants, did not come within the terms of the statute, and that such employes were exempt from its operation.
> "Mr. Hogan's opinion was reversed by his successor, Mr. Turner, who, in Opinion No. 814, rendered September 10, 1915, ruled that all municipal power, heat, light and water plants came within the definition of public works, and all persons engaged in the construction, repair, replacement, alteration, maintenance, or operation thereof, were subject to the provisions of the above law.
> "In accordance with Mr. Turner's opinion, this department on August 18, 1916, issued Factory Order No. 7108 to Harry E. Rock, director of public service, Urbana, Ohio, ordering the city of Urbana to adopt a working schedule for engineers, firemen, and other workmen in and about the city waterworks plant, on a basis of not more than eight hours per day, or more than forty-eight hours in any one week.

"Service Director Rock and Mayor Talbert of Urbana, have questioned the legality of our order, and up to the present time have refused to comply with the same. Therefore, before instituting legal proceedings to compel compliance, I believe it would be advisable to secure an opinion from the present attorney-general involving the construction of the law referred to, making particular inquiry as to its application to employes engaged in the maintenance and operation of municipal waterworks, heat, power and light plants.

"We will await your decision in the matter before taking any action."

In your communication you ask for a construction of section 17-1 G. C., and inasmuch as you have quoted this section in full in your communication, I will not requote the same in my opinion. As said section 17-1 G. C. was enacted in view of the constitutional provision found in section 37 of article II, I desire to quote said constitutional provision, which reads as follows:

"Except in cases of extraordinary emergencies, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political subdivision thereof, whether done by contract, or otherwise."

Since the adoption of said section 37 of article II as a part of our constitution, constructions have been placed upon the same a number of times by this department, and, as you suggest in your communication, these constructions have not always been harmonious. In order to have in mind just what has been decided by this department, I will set out briefly the different opinions rendered in reference to the application of this particular section.

On February 13, 1914, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan rendered an opinion in which he held that the provisions of this section do not apply to educational institutions. This opinion is found in Vol. I of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, p. 283. Mr. Hogan held:

"Such an institution is not a public work in the sense intended by the statute."

On April 29, 1914, Mr. Hogan rendered another opinion, found in Vol. I of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, p. 595, in which he held that the provisions of said section do not apply to engineers, firemen and other employes of the waterworks department of a city.

On April 30, 1915, Hon. Edward C. Turner, my predecessor in office, rendered an opinion, found in Vol. I of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, p. 598, in which he held that the provisions of said section do not apply to employes engaged in the work of the agricultural experiment station at Wooster, Ohio. In this opinion he affirmed the findings of Hon. Timothy S. Hogan made in the two opinions above set forth. He used the following language in rendering his opinion (p. 599):

"The answer to your question depends necessarily upon the meaning and scope of the words, 'public work carried on or aided by the state.'

The meaning of this language has been considered and construed by my predecessor, the Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, in two opinions—one of the date of March 11, 1914, addressed to Hon. R. H. Hughes, acting president of Miami university, and the other of date April 29, 1914, addressed to Hon. C. E. Van Dusen, city solicitor of Lorain, Ohio.

"Without going into or repeating the process of reasoning and argument contained in these two opinions, suffice it to say that I agree with the conclusions reached by Attorney-General Hogan, and I am of the opinion that the language referred to in section 37 of article II of the constitution and in section 17-1 of the General Code, applies only to public work of a constructive, improvement or betterment character, and not to the general routine performed under or in various departments of the state. As stated in the opinion of April 29, 1914, above referred to, there is a wide distinction between 'workmen engaged in public work' and 'workmen working for the public'.

"I am, therefore, of the opinion that general routine experiment station work does not come within the purview of sections 17-1 and 17-2 of the General Code."

While Mr. Turner in the above opinion agreed with Mr. Hogan that the employes of a municipal waterworks department do not come under the provisions of said section, yet in an opinion rendered by him on September 10, 1915, found in Vol. II of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, p. 1713, he held that employes engaged in the operation of municipal power, heat, light and water plants are within the provisions of said section, thus apparently reversing himself and Mr. Hogan.

On March 29, 1917, I rendered an opinion (No. 151), in which I held that the provisions of said section do not apply to employes of the state hospital located at Massillon, Ohio. In this opinion I commented upon the opinions heretofore rendered, and concurred in the two opinions of Mr. Hogan and the first opinion rendered by Mr. Turner. So that in passing upon the question now before me, I feel that it would not be advisable to again go into the matter of reviewing the former opinions rendered by this department, or in any way try to harmonize the same. Further, I feel that the law which might be applied to the matter in question has been thoroughly discussed in the former opinions, and therefore I shall not attempt to discuss the law in its application to this section. I desire, however, to note carefully the reading of said provision and draw my conclusion from this alone.

Let us note the wording of the provision itself. The only part of it necessary to be considered particularly is:

"Except in cases of extraordinary emergency, not to exceed eight hourse shall constitute a day's work and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political subdivision thereof, whether done by contract or otherwise;".

1. It will be noted that the language is:

"for workmen engaged on any public work", and not for workmen engaged in any public work. The word "on" has a distinctive meaning. This meaning is radically different from the word "in". The word "on" immediately brings to one's mind the idea of a building, structure, improvement. It involves the idea of something being erected, constructed, made. It brings to one's imagination something that is growing, expanding, developing. It, too, compels one to consider that some time the thing being constructed, erected, developed, will reach a finished state. In other words, the thing will be completed at some time in the future.

It is impossible for one to think of a workman working on something without at the same time instinctively thinking that day after day the thing on which the man is working is nearing completion, and nearing completion because of the efforts of the workman. It would be an impossibility to conceive of a workman's working on something and yet never getting the thing upon which he works any nearer to a completion.

A man might be engaged in the work which would run on from day to day with no change; in other words, a mere routine; a business, a profession, a vocation. But one cannot conceive of the word "on" being used in connection with mere routine; a business, a profession, a vocation. There is a vast difference between:

A man's working on a building;
A man's working in a building;
A man's working on the state house;
A man's working in the state house;
A man's working on a municipal water plant;
A man's working in a municipal water plant.

In other words, there is a great difference between working on a public work and working in a public work.

2. The word used in the said section is on a "work". The word "work" signifies something definite, an object, something with form and shape and existence. A carpenter, stone mason, bricklayer, a road builder, may be engaged in working upon a "work"; but it is a terrific straining of the English language to say that a person working as a fireman, engineer, meter reader, etc., in the matter of operating any business, could be said to be a workman engaged on a "work". He is engaged in a vocation, an occupation, a business, just as the lawyer, the office man, the preacher, the school teacher. The school teacher is engaged in a most important public work. But what a straining of the English language it would be to say that he is engaged on a public work, under the terms of the section of the statute now under consideration. Yet he is engaged in work for the public just as is the man engaged in the operation of a municipal power, heat, light and water plant.

3. It will aid us materially, in construing this provision, to note this language, "carried on or aided by the state". The very term "aided by the state" shows clearly what was in the mind of the convention and of the legislature in adopting the provisions above set forth. There is some definite specific work to do, which is to cost a certain sum of money to complete, which the state is going to pay for itself, or it is going to aid some political subdivision in paying for the same, or it is a work carried on by some political subdivision, without any assistance from the state. This language plainly evidences that the convention and the legislature, in adopting the above provision, had in mind some particular piece of work which either the state could do itself, or could aid in doing, or some political subdivision could do itself.

Further, the provision states the same principle shall apply "whether done by contract or otherwise". These words throw a flood of light upon the meaning of the whole provision. Where there is a public work to be done by the state or a political subdivision of the same, they can do the work in one of two ways, either by contract with some one to perform the work, or do the work themselves. That is, they could let the job to some contractor, who would do the work for a certain stipulated sum and employ the necessary labor therefor, or the state or political subdivision can employ the necessary material and labor and do the work under their own supervision.

Whether the work is let to a contractor and he employs labor, or whether the state or political subdivision employs the labor directly, the eight hour per day rule applies. It would be impractical and inconsistent to talk about letting a contract for doing the work in the matter of operating a municipal power, heat, light and water plant. There is nothing in connection with this which at all contemplates the letting of a contract. The municipality might let the contract for the construction of a municipal power, heat, light and water plant, or it might employ the labor and oversee the work itself. In such a case the provisions of the statute under consideration would undoubtedly apply. But such a construction cannot be placed upon said provisions when it comes to applying it to men engaged in running the said plant.

4. The language, "except in cases of extraordinary emergency", throws much light on the language which follows. There might be extraordinary emergencies in cases where bridges are washed out by a flood, or public works are destroyed by the elements, in which it might be absolutely necessary to employ workmen in the erection of the same, due to certain circumstances, for more than eight hours per day and forty-eight hours per week; but it could hardly be said that these words could be used in reference to men working in their daily vocation and business of operating a municipal power, heat, light and water plant.

In a careful reading of the entire provision, we do not find a single word, phrase or clause which would seem to indicate that its terms were meant to apply to employes engaged in running municipal power, heat, light and water plants. The men there employed are not engaged on a public work, nor engaged in repairing or maintaining a public work. The distinction between the occupation or vocation of men working in a municipal power, heat, light and water plant, and the occupation or vocation of those working on a public work, cannot be better stated than as stated by Mr. Hogan, to this effect: In the former, they are workmen working for the public; in the latter they are workmen engaged on a public work.

Moreover, in placing a construction upon this statute, it must be kept in mind that we are considering a criminal statute; that the courts always place a strict construction upon the language used therein; and that nothing is included in the terms of the statute other than that which is included in the plain meaning of the language used therein.

On account of all the above, I am of the opinion that workmen engaged in the operation of municipal power, heat, light and water plants do not come within the provisions of section 17-1 G. C., nor within the provisions of section 37 of article II of the constitution.

I affirm the opinions above set out, rendered by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, and the opinion of Mr. Turner rendered on April 30, 1915, found in Vol. I of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, p. 598.

In passing, I suggest that this is a matter which might with propriety be passed upon by the courts, owing to the fact that opinions rendered by this department are so varying and confusing that they are of but little assistance to public officials in the matter of performing their duties.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL COUNCIL—BEFORE ENACTING ASSESSING ORDINANCE FOR AN IMPROVEMENT—SHOULD ENACT RESOLUTION SETTING FORTH METHOD OF ASSESSMENT AND PART OF COST TO BE ASSESSED AGAINST ABUTTING PROPERTY OWNERS.

In cases in which the council of a municipality decides to assess against abutting property owners the cost and expense, or any part thereof, of an improvement, under the provisions of section 3952 G. C., the council should, before enacting the assessing ordinance, enact a resolution setting forth the method of making the assessment and the part of the cost to be assessed against the abutting property owners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have a communication of recent date in which Ralph Levinson, solicitor of the village of Bergholz, asks for certain information set out in his communication. His communication reads as follows:

"The village of Bergholz of Jefferson county, Ohio, of which the undersigned is solicitor, has entered into an agreement with the county commissioners of Jefferson county under the Cass highway law, being sections 6949 to 6954, and also in Year Book 106, pages 608 to 610.

"The agreement provides that of the portion of the road to be improved which runs through the village, the commissioners and the village will assume one-half of the costs and expenses. A notice of the road improvement has been published by the commissioners in the same manner as it does in all county roads, a copy of which I am herewith enclosing.

"The village desires to assess the one-half which it has assumed on the abutting property owners. As yet there has been no ordinance or resolution passed in council providing for such assessments. An ordinance of council consenting to the extension of the road through the village, the resolution authorizing mayor and clerk to enter into the agreement with the commissioners and for the village to assume the one-half and the agreement itself are the only things as yet done by council. However, the last two sentences of section 6952 read as follows:

" 'The council of said municipality may assess against abutting property owners all or any part of the cost and expense of said improvement to be paid by it under agreement with the county commissioners.

Said assessments shall be made in one of the methods provided for in the case of street improvements wholly within the municipality, and under the exclusive control of the council.'

"The question which confronts me and which I am not satisfactorily able to understand from this law, is whether or not council may accomplish this by merely passing an 'assessing ordinance' after the work has been completed and in that ordinance set forth that it has chosen to so assess its part in that manner by virtue of this 'Cass law'. And if assessment so made would be binding on the property owners and collectible the same as other assessments and taxes.

"Or on the other hand whether council would have to proceed in this case the same as in street improvements made exclusively by the municipality and pass the usual resolution declaring the necessity for the improvement and then follow this up with the 'ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement.'

"The village in this instance as well as the commissioners desire to proceed with this improvement in order that it might be completed this summer as soon as possible. For that reason we prefer not to be obliged to wait all this time, for such legislation and the notices to mature, unless it be absolutely essential towards making the assessments of the village on the abutting property owners legal and collectible.

"I realize that strictly speaking your department does not give opinions to solicitors, but inasmuch as this law is not yet settled and there are no court decisions, that I find on this point, I sincerely hope that in this instance you will grant me sufficient consideration to enlighten me on this point. By reason of this law being primarily the county road proposition, I am inclined to think that some of these questions at least have been before your department already."

While the communication does not state whether the improvement in the village of Bergholz is to be of a greater width than that contemplated by the county commissioners, yet from the language used I am assuming that the improvement in the village is to be of the width contemplated by the county commissioners, and that it is not the intention of the village council to provide for a greater width than that contemplated by the county commissioners.

Further, it must be kept in mind that the provisions of sections 6949 to 6954 inc. G. C. map out the course to be pursued and the steps to be taken when the county commissioners extend a road improvement into a municipality, whether the road in the municipality is of the width contemplated by the county commissioners, or whether the village council decides to improve the portion in the village to a greater width than that contemplated by the county commissioners.

While the language in sections 6951 and 6952 G. C. is a little misleading, yet there is no question in my mind that the legislature intended the provisions of these sections to apply to both cases. Under my assumption of fact section 6950 G. C. is not material in answering your question.

To make sure that the solicitor and this department have a correct understanding as to all matters connected with the proposed improvement, I am going to suggest a few matters that are not directly involved in the request made by the solicitor.

In order to understand this matter thoroughly, it will be necessary to quote sections 6949, 6951 and 6952 G. C., which are as follows:

"Sec. 6949. The board of county commissioners may extend a proposed road improvement into or through a municipality when the consent of the council of said municipality has been first obtained, and such consent shall be evidenced by the proper legislation of the council of said municipality entered upon its records, and said council may assume and pay such proportion of the cost and expense of that part of the proposed improvement within said municipality as may be agreed upon between said board of county commissioners and said council.

"Sec. 6951. If the board of county commissioners approve the same, said board shall have prepared the necessary plans, profiles, cross-sections, specifications and estimates for the improvement of such portion of said road, to the width indicated in said resolution of such municipality. The estimates therefor shall set forth in detail the probable cost and expense of so much of said improvement as is made necessary by reason of the same being improved to said increased width. After the plans, specifications, profiles, cross-sections and estimates have been returned to the county commissioners by the county surveyor, and by them approved, the county commissioners shall cause a copy thereof to be filed with the clerk of said municipality. Said plans, profiles, specifications and estimates shall also state what proportion of said increased cost is made necessary by improving street intersections.

"Sec. 6952. Upon receipt of such copy the council of such municipality may approve such plans, specifications, profiles, cross-sections and estimates, and such council may enter into an agreement with the board of county commissioners of such county as to the part of the estimated cost and expense of said improvement that is to be paid by said municipality on account of the increased width of the said improvement.

"After such plans and specifications have been approved and the agreement has been entered into by the said council with the county commissioners determining what part of the estimated cost and expense of said improvement is to be paid by said municipality, council shall cause notice to be given that said plans have been approved and said agreement entered into, by one publication in some newspaper of general circulation in the municipality, and said notice shall fix a time when claims for compensation and damages on account of the proposed improvement shall be filed. If any claims for compensation or damages are filed and the council is not able to agree upon the amount of the same with the persons filing such claims, they shall order proceedings to be instituted in a court of competent jurisdiction, to inquire into such claims for compensation and damages in the manner provided for in the case of street improvements wholly under the control and jurisdiction of the municipality. All compensation and damages on account of said improvement shall be paid by the municipality. The council of said municipality may assess against abutting property owners all or any part of the cost and expense of said improvement to be paid by it under agreement with the county commissioners. Said assessments shall be made in one of the methods provided for in the case of street improvements wholly within the municipality, and under the exclusive control of the council."

In looking over the provisions of these three sections, it is fairly evident that the course which ought to be followed by the village council and the county commissioners, in the improvement of the kind set out in the communication, is as follows, and that the steps taken should be in the following order:

1. Consent of the village council given to the county commissioners to extend the improvement into or through the village (Sec. 6949 G. C.).

2. Preparation of plans, profiles, cross-sections, specifications and estimates for the improvement of a portion of the road lying within the municipality (Sec. 6951 G. C.).

3. The return of said plans, profiles, cross-sections, specifications and estimates by the county surveyor to the county commissioners (Sec. 6951 G. C.).

4. The approval of said plans, etc., by the county commissioners (Sec. 6951 G. C.).

5. A copy of the plans, profiles, cross-sections, specifications and estimates to be filed with the clerk of the municipality (Sec. 6951 G. C.).

6. The approval by the village council of said plans, profiles, cross-sections, specifications and estimates (Sec. 6952 G. C.).

7. Agreement of the council of the municipality with the county commissioners as to the part of the cost and expense of the improvement within the municipality to be borne by each (Sec. 6952 G. C.).

8. Notice to be given that the said plans, specifications, profiles, cross-sections and estimates have been approved by the village council and that the agreement has been entered into between the village council and the county commissioners as to the part of the cost and expense each is to bear (Sec. 6952 G. C.).

This I believe is the natural and logical order which ought to be pursued in the matter of such an improvement. The agreement upon the part of the village council and the county commissioners, as to the portion of the cost and expense of the part of the improvement within the village that each is to bear, might be made before the approval of the plans, specifications, profiles, cross-sections and estimates, but the parties would be acting somewhat in the dark before they knew what the estimated cost and expense of the improvement would be.

The approval of the plans, profiles, etc., ought to be done by resolution or ordinance. Further, I believe that the notice to be given ought to be done by resolution or ordinance providing that a notice should be given in accordance with the provisions of section 6952 G. C.

After the above steps have been taken, all jurisdictional matters will have been performed and the county commissioners may proceed with the improvement. In fact, after the approval of the plans, profiles, etc., and after the agreement is entered into as to the division of the cost and expense of said improvement, the county commissioners might proceed with the improvement, inasmuch as the provisions in step number 8 have nothing whatever to do with the county commissioners, but merely with the question of compensation and damages to be granted on account of the proposed improvement.

Now, we come directly to the question which is contained in the following two paragraphs:

> "The question which confronts me and which I am not satisfactorily able to understand from this law, is whether or not council may accomplish this by merely passing an 'assessing ordinance' after the work has been completed, and in that ordinance set forth that it has chosen to so assess its part in that manner by virtue of this 'Cass law'. And if assessment so made would be binding on the property owners and collectible the same as other assessments and taxes.
> "Or on the other hand whether council would have to proceed in this case the same as in street improvements made exclusively by the municipality and pass the usual resolution declaring the necessity for improvement and then follow this up with the 'ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement'."

It is my opinion that the procedure first stated is correct; that is, the village council would need only to pass an assessing ordinance. As you suggest, section 6952 G. C. provides in part:

> "The council of said municipality may assess against abutting property owners all or any part of the cost and expense of said improvement to be paid by it under agreement with the county commissioners. Said assessment shall be made in one of the methods provided for in the case of street improvements wholly within the municipality and under the exclusive control of the council."

This section refers to section 3812 G. C., which provides that the assessment may be made by any of the following methods:

> "1. By a percentage of the tax value of the property assessed.
> "2. In proportion to the benefits which may result from the improvement, or
> "3. By the foot front of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement."

So that the provisions of section 6952 G. C. have to do merely with the assessment. Every other step has been taken. It would be of no avail or purpose to take the other steps provided for in the case of street improvements. When the village council agrees with the county commissioners to assume a certain part of the cost and expense of the improvement in the municipality, the matter is settled so far as the village is concerned. The obligation is fixed. The die is cast. This amount agreed upon may be assessed against abutting property owners as provided in section 3812 G. C. This would require simply the assessing ordinance. Under the ruling of our courts this ordinance may be passed during the progress of the work, or at the completion thereof. See:

> Morgan v. City of Cleveland, 4 Dec. Rep. 113.

But it is my opinion that it would be preferable to pass this ordinance at the completion of the work. This for the reason that the exact cost and expense of the improvement would then be known.

Our courts have held that the ordinance of necessity provided for in section 3814 G. C. was provided for both to fix a time within which claims for damages must be presented, and also to prevent hasty and inconsiderate action on the part of the municipal corporation. But such an ordinance would be useless in the present case, due to the fact that section 6949 G. C. takes care of the one part of the question and section 6952 G. C. takes care of the matter of fixing a time when claims for compensation and damages should be presented.

The question now is as to whether anything ought to be done by the village council before they enact the assessing ordinance, or whether the assessing ordinance is the only thing that remains to be done. The resolution of necessity, as said, is not necessary. But section 3815 G. C. provides that this resolution shall also determine the method of assessment, the mode of payment, etc.

Hence, I am of the opinion that your council should adopt a resolution determining the method of assessment, the proportion of the total cost and expense of the improvement assumed by the village and the fraction of the cost and expense of the improvement assumed by the village, to be assessed against the abutting property owners, and the number of installments in which the assessments will be paid. In doing this, council will be guided by sections 3814 and 3818 G. C.

The adoption of this resolution need not delay the progress of the work, as the county commissioners have jurisdiction over this matter. Your council can proceed with the enacting of this resolution even after the county commissioners have commenced the work upon said improvement Then not earlier than twenty days after notice is completed, as provided in section 3818 G. C., your council can proceed with the assessing ordinance. But, as said before, this assessing ordinance comes more logically at the completion of the work.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that your council should adopt a resolution determining the method of assessment and setting forth the part of the total cost and expense of the improvement to be borne by the village, and the fraction of said part to be assessed against the abutting property owners, together with the number of installments in which the assessments will be paid, and this before they enact the assessing ordinance.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 1008 G. C.—RELATING TO THE HOURS OF LABOR FOR WOMEN—AS AMENDED MARCH 20, 1917.

The exemption of Saturday in section 1008 G. C., as amended in the act passed March 20, 1917, applies only to mercantile establishments.

The words "located in any city," as found in said act, apply only to mercantile establishments.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of April 10, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "House Bill No. 327, by Mr. Reynolds, contains the following:
> " 'Females over eighteen years of age shall not be employed or permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with any factory, workshop, telephone or telegraph office, millinery, or dressmaking establishment, restaurant or in the distributing or transmission of messages or in any mercantile establishment located in any city, more than nine hours in any one day, except Saturday, when the hours of labor in mercantile establishments may be ten hours, or more than six days, or more than fifty hours in any one week, but meal time shall not be included as a part of the work hours of the week or day, provided, however, that no restriction as to hours of labor shall apply to canneries or establishments engaged in preparing for use perishable goods, during the season they are engaged in canning their products.'

"Will you please advise this commission whether or not in your opinion the exemption for Saturdays is to apply to mercantile establishments only, or whether or not it may apply to factories, workshops, restaurants, etc., as enumerated above?"

I also have your subsequent letter of April 19, 1917, which reads as follows:

"On April 10 I wrote to you in reference to H. B. No. 327.

"In making up this opinion, I wish you would consider whether the words 'located in any city' modify the phrase 'in any mercantile establishment' only, or whether they apply to all of the industries specifically mentioned in the act."

House Bill No. 327, passed March 20, 1917, and filed in the office of secretary of state March 29, 1917, reads as follows (omitting formal parts):

"* * Sec. 1008. Every person, partnership or corporation employing females in any factory, workshop, business office, telephone or telegraph office, restaurant, bakery, millinery or dressmaking establishment, mercantile or other establishments shall provide a suitable seat for the use of each female so employed and shall permit the use of such seats when such female employes are not necessarily engaged in the active duties for which they are employed and when the use thereof will not actually and necessarily interfere with the proper discharge of the duties of such employes, such seat to be constructed, when practicable, with an automatic back support and so adjusted as to be a fixture but not obstruct employes in the performance of duty, and shall further provide a suitable lunch room, separate and apart from the work room, and in establishments where lunch rooms are provided, female employes shall be entitled to no less than thirty minutes for meal time; provided, that in any establishment aforesaid in which it is found impracticable to provide a suitable lunch room, as aforesaid, female employes shall be entitled to not less than one hour for meal time during which hour they shall be permitted to leave the establishment. Females over eighteen years of age shall not be employed or permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with any factory, workshop, telephone or telegraph office, millinery or dressmaking establishment, restaurant or in the distributing or transmission of messages or in any mercantile establishment located in any city, more than nine hours in any one day, except Saturday, when the hours of labor in mercantile establishments may be ten hours, or more than six days, or more than fifty hours in any one week, but meal time shall not be included as a part of the work hours of the week or day, provided, however, that no restriction as to hours of labor shall apply to canneries or establishments engaged in preparing for use perishable goods, during the season they are engaged in canning their products.

"Section 2. That said original section 1008 of the General Code be, and the same is hereby repealed."

"* * ".

Section 1008 G. C., before the last amendment, 103 O. L. 555, read as follows:

> "Every person, partnership or corporation employing females in any factory, workshop, business office, telephone or telegraph office, restaurant, bakery, millinery or dressmaking establishment, mercantile or other establishments shall provide a suitable seat for the use of each female so employed and shall permit the use of such seats when such female employes are not necessarily engaged in the active duties for which they are employed and when the use thereof will not actually and necessarily interfere with the proper discharge of the duties of such employes, such seat to be constructed, where practicable, with an automatic back support and so adjusted as to be a fixture but not obstruct employes in the performance of duty, and shall further provide a suitable lunch room, separate and apart from the work room, and in establishments where lunch rooms are provided, female employes shall be entitled to no less than thirty minutes for meal time; provided, that in any establishment aforesaid in which it is found impracticable to provide a suitable lunch room, as aforesaid, female employes shall be entitled to not less than one hour for meal time during which hour they shall be permitted to leave the establishment. Females over eighteen years of age shall not be employed or permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with any factory, workshop, telephone or telegraph office, millinery, or dressmaking establishment, restaurant or in the distributing or transmission of messages or in any mercantile establishment located in any city, more than ten hours in any one day, or more than fifty-four hours in any one week, but meal time shall not be included as a part of the work hours of the week or day, provided, however, that no restriction as to the hours of labor shall apply to canneries or establishments engaged in preparing for use perishable goods."

It will be noted that the amendment of March 20, 1917, in addition to changing the hours of labor from ten to nine, consists of the words:

> "except Saturday, when the hours of labor in mercantile establishments may be ten hours."

It is axiomatic that when the language used by the legislative body is plain and unmistakable, there is no need of applying rules of construction. The amendment made by the last legislature is so plain, that "he who runs may read." They merely sought to grant the option of extending the hours of labor in mercantile establishments on Saturday to ten hours, while they reduced the hours in any one day from the ten hours that applied to all the establishments enumerated in that part of the section, to nine hours.

In order to answer the question raised by your supplemental letter of April 19, 1917, it is necessary to consider the said section 1008 prior to its amendment, as found in 103 O. L. 555.

In 102 O. L. 488, will be found the act as passed May 31, 1911. This section reads in part as follows:

> "Sec. 1008. * * Females over eighteen years of age shall not be employed or permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with any factory, workshop, telephone or telegraph office, millinery, or dressmaking establishment, restaurant or in the distributing or transmission of messages more than ten hours in any one day, or more than fifty-four hours in any one week, but meal time shall not be included as a part of the work hours of the week or day, provided, however, that no restriction as to the hours of labor shall apply to canneries or establishments engaged in preparing for use perishable goods."

It will be noted that section 1008 as passed May 31, 1911, was amended by the act found in 103 O. L. 555, by the insertion of the phrase,

"or in any mercantile establishment located in any city."

The sole purpose of that amendment was to make that portion of the section apply to mercantile establishments located in cities. It will be recalled that at the time this amendment was sought to be made it was insisted very strongly that the reasons calling for such a law did not exist to the same extent in villages where the volume of business transacted was not so great nor as continuous as in cities. It was urged that in villages more hours would be needed and that since less labor would be required, the same evils that would result from the long hours of labor could not ensue.

It is my view that the words "located in any city" modify and apply to the term "in any mercantile establishment." I think that the above history of this legislation and the plain words used in the slight amendments made in the acts passed by the three preceding legislatures clear up the question of any ambiguities.

Answering your question specifically, I am of the opinion that the exemption of Saturday, as found in the amendment of March 20, 1917, applies only to mercantile establishments, and further that the words "located in any city" apply only to mercantile establishments.

In answering the above, I am assuming but not passing upon the constitutionality of the statute.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—OF MIAMI COUNTY—HAD NO LEGAL AUTHORITY TO ENTER INTO CONTRACT WITH AN ENGINEER—TO MAKE MAPS, ETC., OF CONSERVANCY DISTRICT—AND TESTIFY BEFORE COMMISSIONERS—BECAUSE OF AUDITOR'S FAILURE TO FILE CERTIFICATE UNDER 5660.

The county commissioners of Miami county entered into a contract with an engineer to make certain surveys and collect certain data in connection with the proposed plan of the Miami conservancy district for flood prevention, especially as to the effect of such plan if adopted in Miami county. The contract also provided that this engineer was to receive an additional sum for testifying before the conservancy board in connection with objections entered by the county commissioners. However, the county auditor failed to file a certificate under section 5660 G. C. HELD: That the county commissioners, because of the auditor's failure to file such certificate, had no legal authority to enter into this contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1917.

HON. R. A. KERR, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 2, 1917, as follows:

"Enclosed I hand you resolution passed by the board of county commissioners of this city, relative to the employment of an assistant engineer to work in connection with the county surveyor, in furnishing a hydrographic survey, etc., all of which is set up in the resolution. I also enclose copy of contract entered into by the commissioners and John W. Hill by virtue of such resolution.

"You will note that the resolution says that the assistance is asked by virtue of General Code No. 2411. In my opinion it is quite doubtful whether section No. 2411 is broad enough to cover employment of this kind. All of the work covered by the contract has been paid for excepting the $545.00 mentioned as payable in the event said John W. Hill is called upon to testify, which he was. As stated before, I do not think the section 2411 mentioned covers the case at hand. The only other section that I find that might apply is section 10 of the flood emergency act of 1913, providing for additional engineers where their services were rendered necessary by reason of the flood of 1913. This section, however, provides that payment may be made from money borrowed under the provisions of this act. I cannot see, however, how it would cover the case in question.

"The previous bills paid under this contract were paid by the commissioners after they had been approved as follows: 'Approved: L. P. Knopp, at request of prosecuting attorney'. L. P. Knopp is the county engineer.

"Mr. Hill has done this work, and I feel he should be paid, but at the same time I do not see how the bill can be allowed according to law.

"I would appreciate it very much if you would let me have your opinion at an early date concerning this matter, as it has been in my hands since shortly after my taking office on January 1st, but has not received immediate attention because of the pressure of criminal work."

The agreement referred to provides:

"AGREEMENT.

"This agreement made this 13th day of March, A. D. 1916, by and between the boards of county commissioners of Miami county, Ohio, party of the first part, and John W. Hill, party of the second part.

"WITNESSETH. Party of the first part does hereby employ John W. Hill as an assistant engineer to work in connection with the county surveyor to make, furnish and provide for said county a hydrographic survey of the Miami river valley and the Stillwater river valley, through Miami county, Ohio, within the flood lines of March 25, 1913; said survey to be sufficient in the judgment of the said John W. Hill to furnish him the necessary data upon which to testify in court, if necessary, in regard to flood protection in said county without the building of dams in said Miami river and said Stillwater river, and to make an estimate of the cost for the improvement of the channel of the said Miami and Stillwater rivers in said county, so as to control future floods without the building of dams in the said Miami and Stillwater rivers, and to do all things necessary or required to make such survey, report and maps, hereinbefore referred to. And to make an estimate of the cost of the construction of the dam or dams, proposed to be constructed by the Morgan Engineering Company of said county; to make an estimate of the number of acres that would be flooded if said proposed dam or dams were built; to make an estimate of the cost of the dam proposed to be built in the Miami conservancy district (provided the said Hill can procure a set of plans showing said proposed dam or dams, or can obtain access to the same when filed as an official plan in the office of the board of directors of said conservancy district, or in the court of common pleas of Montgomery county, Ohio, on objection to the same), and the said Hill shall also make to the said board of county commissioners, or to an attorney by it designated, a written report, if required, of all the facts and information he has obtained by reason of this contract, and the said party of the first part agrees to pay to the said John W. Hill as compensation, as such assistant engineer, the sum of five thousand four hundred fifty dollars ($5,450.00) payable as follows: Sixteen hundred thirty-five dollars ($1,635.00) to be paid within thirty (30) days after the said Hill begins work, and sixteen hundred thirty-five dollars ($1,635.00) to be paid within sixty (60) days after the said Hill begins work, sixteen hundred thirty-five dollars ($1,635.00) to be paid when work is completed, and five hundred forty-five dollars ($545.00) to be payable in the event the said John W. Hill is called upon to testify in any proceeding involving the question of flood prevention in said county, it being agreed and understood that the last mentioned amount is to be payable only in case the said Hill is called upon to testify, and shall be payable upon the conclusion of the testimony of the said Hill.

"The said part of the second part in consideration of the said amount hereinbefore mentioned does agree with the party of the first part to perform all the things in this contract required of him.

(Signed) "C. M. HUNT,
"B. S. LEVERING,
"CHAS. H. JACKSON,

"Board of county commissioners of Miami county, Ohio, party of the first part.

(Signed) "JOHN W. HILL,
"Party of the second part."

Since requesting my opinion in this matter you have given me the additional information that no certificate was filed by the county auditor under section 5660 G. C. This section was formerly section 2834b R. S., and it has frequently been held that it is mandatory, and that unless it is complied with, the county commissioners cannot make a valid contract.

In the case of State v. Commissioners, 19 O. C. C., p. 27, it was held:

"(1) Sec. 2834b R. S. is mandatory, and is made condition precedent to be complied with before the board of county commissioners can make a lawful contract, and the certificate is as much a condition precedent as is the fact that the funds are provided.

"(2) A failure of the petition in a suit on such a contract, to aver that the proper certificate was first obtained, is fatal to the action."

See North v. Commissioners, 10 O. C. C., (n. s.), 462;
Stolz v. Selz, 12 O. D., N. P., 665;
Stone Company v. Trustees, 18 O. D., N. P., 136;
Buchanan Bridge Co. v. Campbell, 60 O. S., 406;
Lancaster v. Miller, 58 O. S., 558.

From these authorities it is clear that inasmuch as the county auditor did not file a certificate under section 5660 General Code at the time the commissioners entered into this contract with Mr. Hill, they (the county commissioners) did not enter into a legal agreement and the balance of $545.00 cannot, therefore, be legally paid Mr. Hill.

The above being true, discussion of whether or not the county commissioners might have had the power to enter into such a contract, as set out herein, is unnecessary.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT—MAY BE ESTABLISHED AS SEPARATE DISTRICT—UNDER DIRECT SUPERVISION OF COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT WHEN APPLICATION IS MADE BEFORE JUNE 1ST OF ANY YEAR.

A village school district which makes application to the county board of education before June 1st of any year may be established as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 5, 1917.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of March 22, 1917, you ask my opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "The village of Rittman maintains a first grade high school, and in March, 1917, the board of education of said village made application to the county board of education to be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent, the object of the application being to dispense with the services of the district superintendent. The district superintendent maintains that said village board of education cannot make such application and that the county board cannot make it a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent and thus dispense with the services of the district superintendent, the district superintendent maintaining that such application could not be made after September 10, 1915."

Your inquiry calls for a consideration of the matter of supervision of village school districts.

Prior to the time the new school code was enacted, supervision of village schools was provided for by Revised Statutes section 4017-a, as follows :

> "The board of education of each village * * * may appoint a suitable person to act as superintendent * * * for a term not longer than three school years, the term to begin within four months of the day of appointment; but nothing herein shall be construed as preventing two or more districts uniting and appointing the same person as superintendent. * * * The superintendent shall, upon his acceptance of the appointment, become empowered to visit the schools under his charge, direct and assist teachers in the performance of their duties, classify and control the promotion of pupils, and perform such other duties as the board may determine. He shall report to the board of education, annually, and oftener if required, as to all matters under his supervision, and may be required by the board to attend any or all of its meetings and may take part in its deliberations, but shall not vote; * * *"

The above part section quoted from the Revised Statutes was carried into the General Code under section numbers 7705 and 7706 and read in part as follows:

> "Section 7705: The board of education of each village, township and special school district may appoint a suitable person to act as superintendent * * * for a term not longer than three school years, to begin within four months of the date of appointment. But nothing herein shall prevent two or more districts uniting and appointing the same person as superintendent.

"Section 7706: Upon his acceptance of the appointment, such superintendent may visit the schools under his charge, direct and assist teachers in the performance of their duties, classify and control the promotion of pupils, and perform such other duties as the board determines. He shall report to the board of education annually, and oftener if required, as to all matters under his supervision, and may be required by it to attend any and all of its meetings. He may take part in its deliberations, but shall not vote. * * *"

It will be noted, then, that supervision was not a new proposition as far as village schools were concerned when the provisions in relation thereto were enacted in the new school code. Many villages, perhaps most of them, employed superintendents to supervise the schools. Sometimes such superintendents spent all of their time so supervising and sometimes they spent a part of their time teaching. Many villages, too, united with some other district and employed a superintendent to supervise the schools of several districts so united for that purpose, so that at the time of the enactment of the new school code there were outstanding many contracts of employment between boards of education of village school districts and superintendents or between boards of education of such united school districts and superintendents, which contracts may or may not have extended beyond the time when it was the duty of the county board of education to arrange the county school districts into supervision districts, as provided by section 4738 G. C., when first enacted. Whatever contracts there were then outstanding carried with them vested rights which could not be affected by legislation.

General Code section 4740 as found in 104 O. L., 141, reads as follows:

"Section 4740: Any village or rural district or union of school districts for supervision purposes which already employs a superintendent and which officially certifies by the clerk or clerks of the board of education on or before July 20th, 1914, that it will employ a superintendent who gives at least one-half of his time in supervision, shall upon application to the county board of education be continued as a separate supervision district so long as the superintendent receives a salary of at least one thousand dollars and continues to give one-half of this time to supervision work. Such districts shall receive such portion of state aid for the payment of the salary of the district superintendent as is based on the ratio of the number of teachers employed to forty, multiplied by the fraction which represents that fraction of the regular school day which the superintendent gives to supervision. The county superintendent shall make no nomination of a district superintendent in such district until a vacancy in such superintendency occurs. After the first vacancy occurs in the superintendency of such a district all appointments shall be made on the nomination of the county superintendent in the manner provided in section 4739. A vacancy shall occur only when such superintendent resigns, dies or fails of re-election.

"Any school district or districts, having less than twenty teachers, isolated from the remainder of the county school district by supervision districts provided for in this section shall be joined, for supervision purposes, to one or more of such supervision districts, but the superintendent or superintendents already employed in such supervision district or districts shall be in charge of the enlarged supervision district or districts until a vacancy occurs."

The above section provided that three classes of districts might remain or continue as separate supervision districts and not be affected by the provisions of the new school code in relation to district supervision. The three classes were village, rural and union of school districts for supervision purposes. The districts, however, of the three classes which "already employs a superintendent" and which officially certified on or before July 20, 1914, and complied with the other provisions of said section were the only districts of the classes mentioned which might "be continued as a separate supervision district." That is to say, when the supervision plan of the new school code became effective, all schools of the county school district, except city schools and village schools, specially exempted, were to be a part of a supervision district of a county school district unless such school could qualify under the provisions of General Code section 4740 as a separate supervision district and the separate supervision districts were limited to the three classes above named and to those in said classes which already employed a superintendent and which followed the other provisions in said section contained. The above section was construed in Attorney-General's Reports for 1914, page 980, on an inquiry as to whether or not a rural school district might join a village school district which already employed a superintendent and the two districts thus joined be a separate supervision district, but it was held:

"Under section 4740 General Code, as amended, a village district already employing a superintendent cannot join with a rural school district which never employed a superintendent and which districts were never heretofore joined together for supervisory purposes, by employing a superintendent in common upon application to the county board of education to be joined and continued as separate districts, as authorized in said section."

In other words, it was held that section 4740 applied only to such districts as had theretofore employed a superintendent and which were so employing such superintendent at the date of such amendment, and that a district which had not already theretofore employed a superintendent could not qualify as a separate supervision district. In fact, said decision held that separate supervision districts which had not existed theretofore, could not under the provisions of said amendment be created or established as such.

In 1915 said section 4740 G. C. was twice amended by the same legislature, first in Senate Bill No. 282, found in 106 O. L., 398, as follows:

"Any village or rural school district or union of school districts for high school purposes which maintain a first grade high school, and which employs a principal shall upon application to the county board of education before June 1st of any year, be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent. Such district shall continue to be under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district by resolution shall petition to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district. Such principals shall perform all the duties prescribed by law for a district superintendent, but shall teach such part of each day as the board of education of the district or districts may direct. Such districts shall receive no state aid for the payment of the salaries of their principals and the salaries shall be paid by the board employing such principals."

Said section, however, never became effective, for on the same day was passed by the legislature Senate Bill No. 323, found in 106 O. L., 439, which again amended said section 4740 to read as follows:

"Any village or rural school district or union of school districts for high school purposes which maintains a first grade high school and which employes a superintendent shall upon application to the county board of education before September 10, 1915, or before June 1st of any year thereafter, be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent. Such district shall continue to be under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district by resolution shall petition to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district. Such superintendents shall perform all the duties prescribed by law for a district superintendent, but shall teach such part of each day as the board of education of the district or districts may direct. Such districts shall receive no state aid for the payment of the salaries of their superintendents, and the salaries shall be paid by the boards employing such superintendents."

Only the last above quoted section, then, will be considered as the amendment of 1915. It would seem that from the use of the word "continued" in said section that the legislature intended separate supervision districts to exist only where such districts had theretofore been in existence and that if any district which maintained a first grade high school had not theretofore existed as a separate supervision district, it would be impossible to have the same become a supervision district because of the use of said words "be continued as a separate district." The language, however, is in direct conflict with certain other language of said section and the intent of the legislature can only be gathered from a careful consideration of all the language of said section.

When section 4740 G. C. was first enacted, it was necessary for a certificate of the clerk to be filed with the county board of education as to the matters therein required on or before July 20, 1914. In 1915 said section was amended so that instead of filing a certificate, as required in the original section, it was only necessary for a board of education to file an application and in the year 1915 said application could be filed on or before September 10th thereof. In any year thereafter said application could be filed "before June 1st." It was not the intention that the filing was to be an annual affair, for said section continues:

"Such district shall continue to be under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district, by resolution, shall petition to become a part of a supervision district of a county school district."

So that something else outside of an annual filing of such application, where separate supervision districts already existed, was meant. Only one thing could be meant, that is, that any district which maintains a first grade high school and which employs a superintendent might, in any year, before June 1st thereof, file with the county board of education an application and thus be established or created as a separate supervision district.

The same view seems to have been taken of this matter by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, for in Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1915, volume I, page 948, the following language is used:

> "Therefore, what seems to be the controlling intention of the section, as amended by Senate Bill No. 323, is that the districts therein referred to may be not only 'continued' as separate supervision districts, but also established as such upon application prior to the specified dates."

Answering your question, then, I advise you that the village school district board of education which made such application before June 1st may be established as a separate supervision district as provided by section 4740 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

A DOMESTIC INSURANCE COMPANY—NOT DOING BUSINESS IN THIS STATE—NOT LIABLE FOR PAYMENT OF FRANCHISE TAX—ALTHOUGH NOT REQUIRED TO FILE REPORTS WITH SUPERINTENDENT OF INSURANCE.

Though a domestic insurance company is not "doing business in this state" within the meaning of section 9590 General Code and is not therefore "required by law to file reports with the superintendent of insurance" as provided for in said section, said company is exempted by the provisions of section 5518 General Code from the requirement of making reports to the tax commission as a domestic corporation for profit and paying the franchise taxes provided for by sections 5495 et seq. General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 7, 1917.

HONORABLE WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your favor of March 19, 1917, requesting my opinion, in which you say:

> "The Globe Insurance Company, a corporation organized under the laws of this state, has tendered to this office a certificate of dissolution, with the proper fee.
> "We desire to be advised whether the same can be received and filed without a certificate from the tax commission, certifying that all Willis taxes have been paid.
> "As we are advised, this corporation has not been transacting business for a number of years, and all the data and information in regard to this corporation is in your office."

This company, which is a domestic corporation for profit, prior to the year 1893 transacted business in the state of Ohio as an insurance company. On April 28 of said year it reinsured all of its outstanding risks, and has not been in business since that date. The only business of any kind that was transacted by the company since it reinsured its outstanding business. has been to take care of certain real estate which it owned and held pending the sale thereof and the sale of some securities it had on hand at that time for the purpose of paying its obligations and distributing the balance to its stockholders. During this time the company has not filed report with either the superintendent of insurance or with the tax commission of Ohio, and has not paid either the franchise tax provided for in the Willis law, and the later amendments of the said law or the tax imposed by law upon the gross premiums collected by insurance companies.

Specifically, your question is whether or not you are authorized to accept a certificate of dissolution of this corporation without a certificate from the tax commission showing that all the Willis law taxes have been paid by the company.

Section 5495 of the General Code, originally enacted in 1902 as a part of section 1 of the Willis franchise tax law (95 O. L., 124), and as since amended and carried into the General Code, provides that annually during the month of May each corporation for profit organized under the laws of this state shall make a report to the tax commission, which report is to be signed and verified in the manner provided by section 5496 of the General Code, and is to contain the information prescribed by section 5497, which section, together with section 5496 G. C. was likewise originally enacted as a part of the Willis franchise tax law of 1902.

Section 5498 of the General Code provides that upon the filing of the report provided for in the preceding section of the General Code above mentioned, the tax commission shall determine the amount of the subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock of the corporation and certify such amount to the auditor of state, who is required to charge and collect from said company a fee of 3/20ths of one per cent upon its subscribed or issued and outstanding stock, which fee shall not be less than ten dollars in any case.

Section 5520 of the General Code provides that the mere retirement from business or voluntary dissolution of a corporation shall not exempt it from the requirements to make report and pay the fee or tax in accordance with the provisions of the sections before mentioned; while section 5521 of the General Code provides that in case of dissolution or revocation of its charter on the part of a domestic corporation or of the retirement from business in this state on the part of a foreign corporation, the secretary of state shall not permit a certificate of such action to be filed with him until the commission has certified that all reports, etc., are filed, and that all taxes, fees and penalties thereon due from such corporation have been paid.

Section 5518 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "An incorporated company, whether foreign or domestic, owning or operating a public utility in this state, and as such required by law to file reports with the tax commission and to pay an excise tax upon its gross receipts or gross earnings as provided in this act, and insurance, fraternal beneficial, building and loan, bond investment and other corporations, required by law to file annual reports with the superintendent of insurance, shall not be subject to the provisions of sections one hundred and six to one hundred and fifteen (Secs. 5495 to 5504 G. C.) inclusive of this act."

Giving application to the provisions of section 5518 of the General Code just quoted, I note the provisions of section 9590, of the General Code, which require that the president or vice-president and secretary of each insurance company organized under the laws of this or any other state and doing business in this state annually on the first day of January, or within thirty days thereafter, to prepare under oath and deposit in the office of the superintendent of insurance a statement of the condition of such company on the 31st day of December next preceding, said statement or report to contain in detail the information further prescribed in the said section.

Referring to the statement required of insurance companies under the provisions of section 9590 of the General Code just noted, section 5432 of the General Code provides that in such annual statement to the superintendent of insurance every insurance company shall set forth the gross amount of premiums received from it by policies covering risks within the state during the preceding calendar year without deductions for remissions, return premiums, etc.

Section 5433 of the General Code provides that if the superintendent of insurance finds such report to be correct, he shall compute an amount of 2½% on the balance of the gross amount of premiums and considerations received for reinsurance, which amount so computed shall be paid by the company as a tax to be covered into the general revenue fund of the state.

Section 5518 of the General Code was originally enacted as section 7 of the Willis franchise tax law of 1902, which section provided as follows (95 O. L., 127):

> "Provided that electric light, gas, natural gas, waterworks, pipe line, street railroad, electric interurban railroad, steam railroad, messenger, union depot, express, freight line, sleeping car, telegraph, telephone and other corporations, required by law to file annual reports with the auditor of state, and insurance, fraternal, beneficial, building and loan, bond investment, and other corporations required by law to file annual reports with the superintendent of insurance, shall not be subject to the provisions of the preceding sections of this act. Provided, further, that a corporation shall not be required to file its first annual report under this act until the proper month hereinbefore provided for the filing of such report, next following the expiration of six months from the date of its incorporation or admission to do business in this state."

The court of appeals of Cuyahoga county was called upon to construe this section as to some of its provisions in the case of The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company v. the State of Ohio, 2 Ohio App. 228 (20 C. C. N. S., 61). The court in this case had under consideration the question of whether The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company, a corporation organized for profit under the laws of this state, was liable for the franchise tax provided by the Willis law from the year 1902 to 1908, inclusive.

It appears that this railroad company previous to the year 1871 owned and operated a railroad within this state. On October 25, 1871, The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company leased all its property to The Pennsylvania Railroad Company and surrendered possession of all its railroad and all property and equipment connected therewith to The Pennsylvania Railroad Company; The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company, however, retaining its corporate existence for the purpose of collecting its rents under the lease and distributing the same as dividends to its stockholders with an agreement to pay for the extensions, renewals, betterments and increased facilities for its railroad property; The Pennsylvania Railroad Company to operate the road and pay all taxes lawfully assessed against it. In April, 1873, all rights under this lease were assigned to The Pennsylvania Company, which company, it seems, has ever since been in possession of the property of The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company, and has paid all taxes assessed on the real and personal property of The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company. After leasing its property, The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company did not at any time pay franchise taxes under the Willis law, neither did it pay any excise taxes under the Cole law, which law, among other things, defined a railroad company within the meaning and purpose of the act as a corporation engaged in operating a railroad wholly or partially in this state, and provided further that railroad companies should file an annual report or statement with the auditor of state in the form as therein prescribed and pay an annual excise tax based on the gross earnings of the company.

In the case above cited counsel for the state construing section 7, of the Willis law, as originally enacted, maintained that the phrase

"required by law to file annual reports with the auditor of state", qualified and limited the term steam railroads, and that inasmuch as The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company as a non-operating company was not required to file reports with the auditor of state, the railroad company was not within the exemption of section 7, of the Willis law, and was therefore liable for the franchise tax provided by the said law. The court, however, held that the designation of "steam railroads" in section 7, of the Willis law in itself gave steam railroad corporations the exemption provided for in said section, and that the phrase,

"required by law to file annual reports with the auditor of state", limited and qualified only the term "other corporations" immediately preceding, and that together the only purpose of these terms was to complete the enumeration of the exempted corporations, and not to limit and qualify the enumeration of the exempted corporations already made.

The court, in its opinion in this case, at pages 65 and 66, says:

> "Clearly the intention was to exempt steam railroad corporations, and the other fourteen mentioned corporations, from the operation of the act, and also to exempt therefrom such other corporations, if any, then existing, or which might thereafter be authorized by law to file annual reports with the auditor of state.
> "The use of the words 'other corporations required,' etc., was to complete the enumeration of exempt corporations and not, as claimed by the state, to limit and qualify the enumeration already made.
> "At least two good reasons appear for this conclusion: There was then in existence at least one kind of corporation (equipment company) not enumerated, which was required to file annual reports with the auditor of state, and other like companies might afterwards be authorized by law, in which event section 7 of the Willis act, with its enumeration of exempt companies, but without the general words, 'other companies', etc., would have to be amended every time such new companies might be authorized.

"We think the legislature meant something by its enumeration of exempt companies in section 7, and that the courts are not at liberty to disregard this enumeration and rewrite the statute as suggested by the attorney-general. That is for the legislature to do, and it is significant that the legislature has not done it, though more than ten years have elapsed and subsequent legislation has wholly revampt the laws upon the subject here involved.

"We conclude that the statute is unambiguous and plain, requiring nothing to be added to or taken from its words so that it may be understood and applied by the taxing officers of the state, and that by its plain terms The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company, being a steam railroad corporation, is exempt from the provisions of the Willis act.

"This conclusion makes it unnecessary to examine other statutes claimed to be in pari materia, or to go beyond the words of section 7 itself, to determine the intention of the legislature in enacting said section. The section intends what it says."

Section 7 of the Willis franchise tax law of 1902 was carried into the General Code, as adopted by enactment, in 1910 as section 5541, and was later amended by the Hollinger law (102 O. L., 224) and carried into the General Code as section 5518 thereof. In its present form this section, as will be noted, does not enumerate the particular public utility corporations exempted from the payment of franchise taxes, but the provisions of said section with reference to such corporations are general in their terms and provide that an incorporated company, whether foreign or domestic, owning or operating a public utility in this state and as such required by law to file reports with the tax commission and pay an excise tax on its gross receipts or gross earnings, shall be exempt from the payment of this franchise tax required of other corporations.

By comparison of the provisions of section 5518 of the General Code with the provisions of section 7 of the Willis law as originally enacted, it will be noted that no change whatever has been made in the language of the original section with respect to the exemptions therein granted to insurance, fraternal, beneficial, building and loan, bond investment and other corporations required by law to file annual reports with the superintendent of insurance.

In section 5518 as in original section 7 of the Willis law of 1902, there is a specific enumeration of the particular classes of corporations required by law to file annual reports with the superintendent of insurance which enumeration, as in the original act, is followed by the phrase,

"and other corporations required by law to file annual reports with the superintendent of insurance."

Giving effect to the decision of the court of appeals of Cuyahoga county in the case of The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company v. the State of Ohio, it follows that the phrase just above quoted following the specific enumeration made in both of these sections does not qualify or limit the specific kinds of corporations enumerated, but that the specific enumeration of corporations named in said section in itself imports a legislative intent to exempt such corporations from the payment of the franchise taxes; and inasmuch as insurance companies are so specifically enumerated as exempt in both section 7 of the Willis law as originally enacted, and in section 129 of the Hollinger law, which is now section 5518 of the General Code, I am quite clearly of the opinion that The Globe Insurance Company is exempt from liability for the payment of franchise taxes, though as a company not "doing business in this state" it does not make the annual report provided for by section 9590, and is not required to do so.

Answering your question specifically, therefore, I am of the opinion that you are authorized to accept a certificate of dissolution of this company without a certificate from the tax commission of Ohio showing a payment by this company of franchise taxes.

The conclusion reached by me in this matter is directly opposed to that reached by my predecessor, Honorable Edward C. Turner, in an opinion affecting this precise question and the same insurance company, directed to the tax commission of Ohio, under date of December 29, 1916, being Opinion No. 2131, found on page 1945, Vol. II, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916.

The conclusion of Mr. Turner in the opinion above referred to, that The Globe Insurance Company was required to make payment of franchise taxes, is based wholly upon the consideration that the said company as an insurance company "not doing business in this state" was not required to make annual reports to the superintendent of insurance, an argument based on a construction of section 5518 General Code, which, as we have seen, was specifically denied by the court in the case of The Cleveland and Pittsburgh Railroad Company v. State of Ohio, supra. The decision of the court in this case, to my mind, is squarely in point on the question here presented and inasmuch as the said decision was practically affirmed by the supreme court of this state in an order made by such court overruling a motion to direct the court of appeals to certify its record for the specific reason that it did not appear from the record that error had probably intervened, I feel that the decision is binding upon me as to the proper construction of the statutory provisions involved in the consideration of the question presented by you.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

VERIFY—AS USED IN GENERAL CODE WITH REFERENCE TO EXPENSE ACCOUNTS—MEANS BY AFFIDAVIT.

The word "verify" as used in section 4734 and other sections of the General Code in reference to expense accounts, means verified by affidavit, that is, sworn to before some officer duly authorized to administer oaths.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 7, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of April 6, 1917, you request my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "Section 4734 G. C. provides for the payment of the actual and necessary expenses of the members of the county board of education. Said section provides further that 'such expenses, and the expenses of the county superintendent, itemized and verified, shall be paid from the county board of education fund upon voucher signed by the president of the board'.
> "What is the meaning of the word 'verified' as used in this section, and other sections of the General Code, as to expense accounts? Does it mean that the account must be sworn to, or that a mere certificate as to its correctness is sufficient?"

"Verification" is defined by Bouvier's Law Dictionary as:

> "The certificate that the writing is true", and by Black's Law Dictionary as:

> "A confirmation of the correctness, truth or authenticity of a pleading, account or other paper by an affidavit, oath or deposition", and by Words and Phrases, as:

> "Applied to pleadings and statements of claims filed with municipal officers, has a settled meaning, and refers to an affidavit attached to such statement of claim, as to the truth of the matters therein set forth."

In Bader v. State, 176 Ind., 268, the plaintiff was prosecuted for making out and filing with the county auditor a claim which was alleged to be false and fraudulent. The statute of Indiana required the claim to be verified. The court held that verification means to be sworn to and that the verification is separate and apart from the claim itself, and cites in support of said proposition the case of Patterson v. City of Brooklyn, 40 N. Y. Supp., 581, where the following language is used:

> "The term 'verified', as applied to pleadings and statements of this character, has a settled meaning in our statutory law, and it refers to an affidavit attached to the statement as to the truth of the matters therein set forth."

The above was in all probability the clear intent of the legislature when it provided that such expenses shall be itemized and verified, thus meaning that the statement of account shall be furnished showing each item and that the account as a whole shall be verified, that is, sworn to.

In the case of State v. Trook, 172 Ind., 560, the defendant was being prosecuted on an indictment for subornation of perjury. The statute of Indiana provided that every private bank doing business under the state banking laws shall make a report, which report shall be verified. Defendant made the report and made affidavit thereto. In defending against the indictment, however, he claimed that an affidavit was not necessary in order that the account be verified and that the prosecution for perjury could not properly lie. But the court held that the word "verified" imports that the report shall be sworn to.

In McCormick v. Tuolumne County, 37 Calif., 257, the plaintiff filed claims against the county which were certified to, but not verified under oath. The statute provided that such claims should be verified, nothing being said, however, as to being verified by affidavit. The court said:

> "The verification contemplated by statute involved in this case is a verification by oath annexed to the account."

Several cases, however, seem to indicate that the rule of the California and Indiana courts is not always followed. In Summerfield v. Phoenix Insurance Company, 65 Fed., 299, the insured was required by the terms of the policy to procure and attach to the preliminary proofs of loss a duly verified estimate of a builder, setting forth his opinion as to the actual cash value of the building immediately before the fire.

A careful consideration of said case discloses a complete distinction between same and the other cases above cited.

On page 295 the court says:

> "The question presented is whether the 'estimate' of Graham & Bro., dated on the 24th of April, and signed by them professionally, giving an itemized account of what the cost of rebuilding anew would be, and furnished the defendant on April 26th, fulfilled the requirements of the policy as set out in paragraph numbered 2 in the above statement of facts. The defendant contends that this paper was not such a certificate as the policy required * * *. The policy in the clause set out * * * indicates that the cash value of the premises before the fire may be established by estimating the cost of rebuilding anew, and deducting from the estimate the probable deterioration suffered by the premises from previous use. Such a paper, suggested probably by this provision of the policy, prepared by Graham & Bro., as architects and builders, and signed by them professionally, was furnished by the plaintiff on the 26th of April, and was then made a part of her preliminary proofs of loss. The relation of that paper to the present litigation is this: It was furnished by the plaintiff as her statement of the amount of her loss, and it was verified by the signature of Graham & Bro. as builders, and upon their professional responsibility and reputation. I do not think the phrase 'duly verified', as used in the policy, necessarily requires an attestation by affidavit. In the clause next preceding that in which this certificate is required, papers there mentioned are required to be sworn to, but an express requirement is omitted in regard to this paper. It is true that the term 'verify' applied to legal papers generally means, or implies, an oath; but it is equally true that it does not always, or necessarily, do so. Affidavits are usually made to facts, not to opinions; to actual expenditures, not to estimates of them."

In Tugart Valley Brewing Company v. Vilter Mfg. Co., 184 Fed., 845, the statute provided that the account set forth under the mechanics' lien law should be duly verified, and the court held that to verify "is an oath or affirmation taken and administered by and before an officer having authority by law to administer and certify oaths and affirmations."

Reasoning, then, from the above cited authorities, the intention of the legislature is somewhat clarified. It would have been much better when the word "verified" was used if the draughtsman had added thereto "by affidavit", for something more than a mere setting down of figures or correcting of items was apparently meant. If that alone was intended, then the use of the word "itemized" would have been sufficient, but when the word "verified" is used in connection with the word "itemized," something in addition to the account was clearly intended. The account was to be submitted to the board of education and, upon vouchers signed by the president, was to be paid from public funds. The knowledge of the items of such accounts is generally with the person only who makes it and files the account. That is to say, being items of personal expenditure, it would be almost an impossibility for the board or the county auditor to ascertain the correctness or incorrectness of such accounts, and for that reason it is altogether possible and quite probable that the verification intended was one which carried such weight or strength with it as to make the person who received the money liable to be prosecuted in case the account was wilfully misrepresented.

From the above, then, I conclude that the word "verify", as used in section 4734 G. C. means verified by affidavit; that is sworn to before an officer duly authorized to administer oaths.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE FIRE MARSHAL—HAS NO AUTHORITY TO APPOINT OR EMPLOY LEGAL COUNSEL—NOTWITHSTANDING APPROPRIATION FOR SAME.

Despite the provisions of the 1915 appropriation bill, the state fire marshal has no authority to appoint or employ legal counsel or attorneys at law (Sec. 333 G. C.); and a person appointed or employed by him to render legal service, as such, may not be paid out of such appropriation, though the services actually rendered be such as might lawfully have been rendered by an assistant fire marshal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 8, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 3, 1917, enclosing voucher No. 1179, of the department of state fire marshal, and in connection therewith submitting the following questions for my opinion:

> "1. Has the department of state fire marshal a legal right to employ counsel other than the attorney-general's office?
> "2. Is the enclosed voucher a legal claim against the state of Ohio?"

I have carefully examined the statutes relative to the office of state fire marshal and the organization of his department and find therein no express authority to employ legal counsel. It is true that the fire marshal discharges such duties and exercises such powers under the law as would make it extremely convenient, if not absolutely necessary, for him to employ legal services. In fact, were it not for the express provision of statute which I am about to quote, I am satisfied that the state fire marshal would have the implied power to employ legal counsel to assist him and his deputies and assistants in the discharge of their several duties, provided, of course, there were at a given time moneys appropriated for the uses and purposes of his department under such provisions as to be available for expenditure for such purpose.

In spite of these considerations, however, the power to employ legal counsel does not, in my opinion, exist in the state fire marshal. Section 333 of the General Code provides in part as follows:

> "The attorney-general shall be the chief law officer for the state and all its departments. No state officer, board, or the head of a department or institution of the state shall employ, or be represented by, other counsel or attorneys-at-law. * * *."

Whatever might be the result if there were an express provision authorizing the state fire marshal to employ legal counsel, in the face of the general prohibition of the section last above quoted, I am clearly of the opinion that in the absence of such express provision no state officer—and the state fire marshal is a state officer—has any claim or color of authority to employ legal counsel.

In this connection, however, I observe that the voucher is drawn upon appropriation account designated as "A-3", and upon consulting the general budget appropriation bill passed by the 81st general assembly and covering the fiscal biennium ending on June 30, 1917, I find that "A-3", unclassified personal service, as applied to the state fire marshal's department, was an account expressly authorized to be expended for the following purposes:

"Fees, mileage and maintenance of witnesses, township clerks, special attorneys and stenographers".

The question naturally suggests itself as to whether or not the general assembly, in passing this appropriation, intended to set aside, during the biennium and as to this department, the provisions of the general law. Certainly such an intention is to be presumed against, especially in the case of appropriations for the current expenses of state departments.

The casual insertion of the phrase "special attorneys" in the above quoted context should not, in my opinion, be regarded as equivalent to a formal authorization to the state fire marshal to employ special attorneys, in the teeth of the prohibition contained in the general law, unless such conclusion is inevitable.

This is but another way of saying that the appropriation is prima facie for a purpose consistent with the permanent law and whatever may be the power of the general assembly to disregard the permanent law and confer independent authority upon an administrative officer to act in defiance of the permanent law in the expenditure of an appropriation, the assembly will be presumed not to have intended any such violent result in a given case.

I feel that it is my first duty, therefore, to determine whether the appropriation can be given some effect consistent with the permanent law and not to raise the more fundamental question as to the power of the legislature to suspend the permanent law through the medium of an appropriation, unless it is necessary to do so.

In my opinion the appropriation and the law may stand together. It is only by inference that an appropriation to pay "special attorneys" carries with it power to appoint or employ such attorneys. This inference may be contradicted by clear expression to the contrary. The statute contains such a clear expression. Therefore, if the appropriation for the fees of special attorneys can be interpreted as applicable to the payment of special attorneys employed for work in connection with the state fire marshal's office, but not employed by the state fire marshal, the statute and the appropriation may be harmonized.

The general statutes authorize the attorney-general to appoint certain statutory subordinates, and in addition to appoint special counsel when in his opinion the interests of the state require it,

"to represent the state in civil actions, criminal prosecutions or other proceedings in which the state is a party or directly interested".

(Sec 336 G. C.).

The section goes on to state that:

> "Such special counsel shall be paid for their services from funds appropriated by the general assembly for that purpose".

This statute does not in terms require that the sum appropriated to pay special counsel appointed by the attorney-general under this section shall be appropriated to the department of the attorney-general. The legislature has it within its power, without violating this section, to apportion the appropriations as it sees fit, among the several departments.

In other words, however impractical such a scheme might be, it is conceivable that the legislature might wish to have special counsel, appointed by the attorney-general and assigned to a particular department, paid out of an appropriation account charged against that department, instead of against the attorney-general's office, and yet to preserve the attorney-general's statutory power to appoint and not do violence to the prohibition against the employment of attorneys-at-law by other state officers and departments.

On this hypothesis, then, the statute and the appropriation may be reconciled. The state fire marshal may not employ legal counsel. The attorney-general must do that. But the attorney-general may appoint special counsel and assign him or them to the work of the state fire marshal's department, and his fees may be paid from the appropriation account above referred to. Such an interpretation does violence to no provision of law, nor to the appropriation. Any other interpretation of the two provisions would either permanently or temporarily abrogate some express language of one or the other of them.

I do not find that the gentleman to whom the voucher is made payable was appointed as special counsel by the attorney-general. The bill and voucher presented are for legal services. In my opinion the voucher may not be paid.

I am informed that the rule of law which I have laid down has been apparently evaded in the past by employing persons with the qualifications of attorneys-at-law as assistant fire marshals. The nature of the duties of assistant fire marshals is such that it might be highly expedient to employ persons trained in the law in such positions. Nor would it in my opinion be violative of the law for a member of the bar to be appointed as assistant fire marshal, provided he should confine himself in that capacity to the discharge of the duties pertaining to such a position, some of which, as for example, taking testimony, determining whether or not evidence is sufficient to charge a person with arson or similar crime, assisting a prosecuting attorney, etc., are of a legal character.

Most of the detailed services for which the voucher is drawn are of such character as they might have been rendered by an assistant fire marshal. Apparently, however, the gentleman who presents the bill and in whose favor the voucher is drawn, was not employed as an assistant fire marshal, but as an attorney-at-law or legal counsel. Accordingly, the claim as presented cannot be paid.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DRIVEWAYS—RIGHTS OF ABUTTING PROPERTY OWNERS IN SAME—GOVERNED BY SECTION 7212—EXPENSE OF RECONSTRUCTING SAME DEVOLVES UPON COUNTY COMMISSIONERS AND TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—SUPPLEMENTAL TO OPINION NO. 203.

1. So far as the rights of abutting property owners in driveways or approaches leading from the public highway are concerned, the provisions of section 7212 G. C. control, the contract for the road improvement having been entered into on August 19, 1915.

2. Under the provisions of section 7212 G. C. the state bears no part of the expense of reconstructing driveways or approaches leading from the public highway to abutting property, this expense devolving upon the county commissioners or township trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 8, 1917.

HON. S. L. GREGORY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wilmington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 26, 1917, which letter is supplemental to a letter I received from you dated March 15, 1917, and upon which I gave you my opinion, being Opinion No. 203, as of date April 19, 1917. While I gave you my opinion as to the law, basing it upon your first communication, yet you ask me to be a little more specific along the lines suggested in your last communication. This I am very glad to do.

Your communication of April 26, 1917, reads as follows:

> "Your Opinion No. 203 received. Your decision has made clear to us of whatever of doubt we may have had as to the construction of Sec. 7212 G. C., but the specific question we desired answered you passed over. On August 19, 1915, a contract was let by the state highway commissioner to improve an inter-county road in this county. At the date of the letting of this contract Sec. 1192-1 G. C. was in effect which provided that the owners and occupants of land abutting such improvements should build and maintain all farm approaches. On the first Monday of September following the letting of this contract Sec. 7212 became a law, thereby repealing Sec. 1192-1. Now what we wish to know is whether the law in effect when the contract was let controls or whether the new law to wit, Sec. 7212, controls. If Sec. 7212 controls, then what part of the expense of rebuilding the road approaches should the state bear?"

Inasmuch as I shall be compelled to use to some extent your letter of March 15, 1917, I will quote it, which reads as follows:

> "I write you for an opinion at request of the county commissioners of this Clinton county in a matter in which both the state and county are interested. On August 19, 1915, a contract was let to improve an inter-county road. No mention was made in the specifications as to farm approaches (old Sec. 1192-1, new Sec. 7212 G. C.). Now is there any legal obligation on the county or the state to build the farm approaches in this case under either of the sections mentioned or under any other sections of the statute?

"Also please define farm approaches as to kind and number."

I stated in my former opinion that the provisions of section 1192-1 G. C., now repealed, had nothing to do with the matters about which you inquired, and that the provisions of section 7212 G. C. controlled. I used the following language in said opinion:

"While you mention in your communication section 1192-1 G. C., yet, inasmuch as this section has been repealed, and inasmuch as the provisions of said section, in my opinion, have nothing to do with the construction to be placed upon section 7212 G. C., which you also mention in your communication, I shall not quote nor comment upon said section 1192-1 G. C., now repealed."

I am still of the opinion that the provisions of section 1192-1 G. C., having nothing whatever to do with the matters contained in your two communications, but inasmuch as you particularly raise the question as to the provisions of section 1192-1 G. C. in your second communication, I will place a construction upon said section in connection with section 7212 G. C.

Section 1192-1 G. C. now repealed, reads as follows:

"The construction and drainage of public road approaches necessary for the protection of a state highway may be included as a part of the improvement of said highway. Upon the completion of said highway, the owners or occupants of adjoining lands shall construct and keep in repair all private approaches or driveways from such highway, under the direction of the county commissioners, but no such approaches or driveways shall be constructed in such manner as to obstruct or interfere with said highway or with any drain or ditch which has been constructed as a part of said highway. Whoever fills up or places any material in a ditch along a state highway so as to interfere with the drainage or the purposes of its construction, or constructs an approach or driveway from a state highway, except as provided by law, shall be fined not less than five dollars nor more than twenty-five dollars."

Section 7212 G. C. reads as follows:

"The owners or occupants of land shall construct and keep in repair all approaches or driveways from the public roads under the direction of the county highway superintendent, provided, however, that if, in the construction or improvement, maintenance and repair of any road, the approach or driveway of an abutting property owner is destroyed, the county commissioners or township trustees, shall compensate such abutting property owner or occupant of said lands for the destruction of such approach or driveway, or in lieu thereof, authorize the county highway superintendent to reconstruct the same."

In your first communication you state that no mention was made in the specifications as to farm approaches. In my former opinion I stated that this matter should not be included in the specifications, on account of the provisions of section 7212 G. C. Neither should such a matter be included in the specifications, under the provisions of section 1192-1 G. C.

It will be noted that section 1192-1 G. C. provides:

> "The construction and drainage of public road approaches necessary for the protection of a state highway may be included as a part of the improvement of said highway."

This part of the section provides that public road approaches might be included in the specifications and in the estimate of the cost and expense of the highway improvement. But it will be noted that section 1192-1 G. C, provides that upon the completion of said highway, the owners or occupants of adjoining lands shall construct and keep in repair all private approaches or driveways from such highway. Hence, it is quite evident that the specifications and estimates would not include the cost and expense of private approaches or driveways of owners or occupants of adjoining lands.

As stated in my former opinion, the cost of the construction of private approaches or driveways ought not to be included in the specifications and estimates of the cost and expense of the road improvement, under the provisions of section 7212 G. C., for the reason that under its provisions the county commissioners or township trustees must either rebuild the approaches or pay damages to the owner or occupant of adjoining land. So that under either section, the cost and expense of constructing private driveways or approaches should not be included in the specifications and estimates of the cost and expense of the road improvement.

Your direct question is as to whether the provisions of section 1192-1 G. C., or the provisions of section 7212 G. C., shall apply in reference to the construction of farm approaches or driveways after the completion of a road improvement. If the provisions of section 1192-1 G. C. control, then the owners or occupants of adjoining land would be compelled to construct and keep in repair private approaches or driveways from such highway. If the provisions of section 7212 G. C. control, then the county commissioners or township trustees must reconstruct any approaches or driveways destroyed in the improvement of the highway.

So it is readily seen that it is important to decide which one of these sections would control in the contract under consideration. As said in my former opinion, I am of the opinion that the provisions of section 7212 G. C. control. It is true the contract for the road improvement was let on August 19, 1915, while the provisions of section 1192-1 G. C. were in force and effect. But the provisions of section 7212 G. C. became effective on the first Monday in September, 1915, just eighteen days after the entering into of the contract. While you do not so state in either of your communications, yet I am assuming that the said road improvement was not completed, indeed, scarcely begun, until after the provisions of section 7212 G. C. became effective.

The contract between the state highway commissioner for the state and the road contractor was entered into on August 19, 1915. Hence their rights under the contract were fixed in general by the provisions of said section. But the rights of abutting property owners in the matter of private approaches or driveways were not fixed or determined at that time. They had nothing to do with the terms of the contract. Their rights would be determined when the highway was completed. This is the provision of both sections. Section 1192-1 G. C. says:

> "Upon the completion of said highway, the owners or occupants of adjoining lands shall construct", etc.,

while section 7212 G. C. states:

> "That if, in the construction or improvement, maintenance and repair of any road, the approach or driveway of an abutting property owner is destroyed, the county commissioners or township trustees shall * * authorize the county highway superintendent to reconstruct the same", which would not be until the highway was completed.

Under both of these sections the rights of the abutting property owners were fixed at the completion of the work. Their remedy, if any, dates from that time. Hence, their rights are determined by the provisions of section 7212 G. C. This might be different if the estimate of the cost and expense of the building of the approaches were to be included in the estimate of the cost and expense of the road improvement and paid for out of the special fund provided for said purposes; but, as said before, such is not the case.

Answering your question specifically, I am of the opinion that the provisions of section 7212 G. C. will control in the matter of constructing approaches and driveways leading from the said improvement to the abutting land, the matters in reference to which I have fully discussed in my former opinion.

You also ask, if the provisions of section 7212 G. C. control, then what part of the expense of rebuilding the road approaches should the state bear? None whatever. The provisions of section 7212 G. C. state this is a matter for the county commissioners or township trustees to attend to, the cost of which must be borne either by the county or township. I discussed the matter fully in my former opinion as to when the county commissioners would act and when the township trustees would act.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COMMON PLEAS JUDGE—UNDER PROVISIONS OF ARTICLE IV, SECTIONS 12 AND 14—CANNOT ENLIST IN UNITED STATES ARMY AND RETAIN OFFICE OF COMMON PLEAS JUDGE.

1. Under the provisions of section 12, article IV of the constitution, requiring the judges of the court of common pleas "to reside in the county while in office", the word "reside" means an actual, personal residence and not merely a legal, constructive residence. Hence, a person holding said office could not enlist in the army of the United States and still retain the office of common pleas judge.

2. The provisions of section 14, article IV of the constitution, requiring that judges of the court of common pleas "shall not hold any other office of profit or trust, under the authority of this state, or the United States", apply to office in the army of the United States, as well as to office in the civil service. Hence, a person holding said office could not accept a commission in the army of the United States and still retain the office of common pleas judge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 9, 1917.

HON. W. P. BARNUM, Judge of Court of Common Pleas, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 2, 1917, which you addressed to Honorable James M. Cox, governor of Ohio, in which you ask for certain information therein set out. Your communication reads as follows:

> "As probably you know, I have been common pleas judge here for the last eight years, and was re-elected last November for another six years.
> "The probabilities are that today or tomorrow I shall enlist in the officers' reserve corps and go to training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison near Indianapolis for the ninety days' training course, and if I make good there and receive a commission, will probably continue on until the issues of the day are settled.
> "As I take it, there is no legal inhibition to me continuing as a judge during the ninety days' course I shall take at Indianapolis, but the question I want to put to you, or rather ask you to put to the attorney-general, if you will be kind enough to do so, is this: If I finish my training course at Indianapolis and am accepted, would it be necessary for me to resign as judge, in the event I take a commission in the army?"

1. In order to answer the question embodied in your communication to the governor, it will be necessary to note two provisions of the constitution of the state of Ohio. I will first note and comment upon section 12, of article IV, of the constitution, which reads as follows:

> "The judges of the courts of common pleas shall, while in office, reside in the county for which they are elected; and their term of office shall be for six years."

As will be immediately noticed, in so far as the question you ask is concerned, the important word in this section is "reside." In the first place it will be noted that it does not say, "be a resident of the county", or, "maintain a residence in the county", but it states:

> "The judges of the courts of common pleas shall, while in office, reside in the county."

Does the word have reference merely to a legal residence such as would entitle the judges of the court of common pleas to return to the county, if temporarily absent, and exercise their functions as citizens and voters; or, does it mean that they must actually and personally reside in the county? From a reading of the section, it would seem to me more than the former. This is the question that must be decided.

In Shattuck v. Maynard, 3 Md. 123, 124, the court distinguishes this word in reference to its two meanings, as follows:

> "The word 'reside' is used in two senses: The one constructive, technical, legal; the other denoting the personal, actual habitation of individuals. When a person has a fixed abode where he dwells with his family, there can be no doubt as to the place where he resides. The place of his personal and legal residence is the same. So, when a person has no permanent habitation or family, but dwells in different places as he happens to find employment, there can be no doubt as to the place where he resides. He must be considered as residing where he actually or personally resides. But some individuals have permanent habitations, where their families constantly dwell, yet pass a great portion of their time in other places. Such persons have a legal residence with their families and a personal residence in other places; and the word 'reside' may, with respect to them, be used to denote either their personal or their legal residence."

To substantiate this language used by the court, many cases are cited by the court.

To illustrate further how this word "reside" is used in the two above senses, I desire to note language used by the court in Wheat v. Smith, 50 Ark. 266, 281:

> "It is well settled that when an ambassador or consul is sent by one government to represent his state in a foreign country, his continued residence in a foreign land, if referable to his official duties, does not work a change of his domicile. There is no inference of domicile or of animus manendi to be drawn from such residence. The domicile of origin, as the home domicile is termed, is presumed to prevail until another is acquired, 'the presumption of law being that the domicile of origin subsists until a change of domicile is proved, the onus of proving the same is on the party asserting it'. The residence of Smith in the foreign country is referable, so far as the testimony here goes, solely to his official station as consul. The citizenship and residence, which he formerly possessed in Lafayette county, are presumed to have continued in the absence of proof to the contrary, and we cannot pronounce the action of the court erroneous."

It is readily seen in the above language that the court speaks of the actual residence of Smith, which was for the time being in a foreign country, and the legal, constructive residence of Smith, which he continued to hold in his own state.

In this case Smith returned from the foreign country, as consul or ambassador, and desired to make the race for a county office soon after his return, without waiting for the one year's residence in the county, required before he could be a candidate for said office. The court held that he had a legal and constructive residence in his own state, although he had been an actual resident of the foreign country.

The above cases show clearly that the important thing to decide is whether the word "reside", as used in said section of the constitution, means an actual residence, or merely a legal or constructive residence.

In State ex rel. v. Allen, 21 Ind. 516, the court was passing upon a question similar to the one under consideration. In the syllabus the court say:

> "A county auditor is required, both by the constitution and the laws of Indiana, not only to be a resident of, but actually to reside in the county and keep his office in the auditor's office to be provided by the county, and personally discharge, or superintend the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by law."

On p. 522 the court, in rendering its opinion, used the following line of argument:

> "Now, whenever the auditor voluntarily permanently disables himself to perform the duties of his office he, by that act, constructively resigns the office by abandonment of it. A temporary disability to discharge the duties of the office might not, of itself, create a vacancy. In an office, capable of being served by deputy, the deputy of the principal might, doubtless, continue to act during the temporary disability of the principal; and, if no deputy had been appointed, perhaps the sureties of the principal might appoint. See The State v. Pidgeon, 8 Blackf. 132. But a disability designed to continue for the whole term of office must vacate the office. And the question now arises, did the auditor, in this case, by enlisting as a private soldier, in the army of the United States for three years, or during the existing war, thus disable himself? Of this we have no doubt. What did he undertake, what did he agree to do, by that enlistment? In what situation did he place himself. He placed himself in the service of the government of the United States, and agreed, yes, legally bound himself, to leave, not only the county of Vigo, but the state of Indiana, and remain absent, if required, for three years, devoting his entire time to the service of the United States in parts remote from the state of Indiana. This, we judicially know, because we know that the government was not enlisting soldiers to serve in Vigo county, nor in the state of Indiana; for there was no rebellion existing within those limits to be put down by an army. Allen not only undertook to leave the state, and did leave it, but he further deprived himself of the power to return, of his own volition, for a period of three years. The soldiers, as we judicially know, were enlisted for the war which was being carried on in the southern states; and while we concede the nobleness and patriotism of the spirit which prompted the defendant to enlist, still we cannot allow such considerations to control in the decision of a question of law. Legal decisions should not rest upon the impulses of the hour, but upon principles of perpetual application. The proper way to test the decision in this case is to turn ourselves back to a period prior to this war, and to suppose an officer to be recruiting for the regular army; to suppose further, that Allen, then the auditor of Vigo county, enlists for three or five years in that army and is marched off to a frontier military post of the United States; would anybody say, in that case, that he had not abandoned the office of county auditor? Such, in law, is this case. See Kerr v. Jones, 19 Ind. 351. It could make no difference that Allen should afterwards, and before the expiration of the term of his enlistment, get released therefrom, that fact being a mere accident; the vacancy having once become complete by abandonment, could not be refilled by an accidental, voluntary or forcible reoccupancy."

While the wording of the constitution, upon which the court was placing a construction in the above cause, was not exactly in the language of our constitution, yet I believe that the principle enunciated by the court therein would apply to the matter under consideration.

In People v. Owers, 29 Colo. 535, the court placed a construction upon a constitutional provision very similar, if not entirely similar, to the one under consideration. The court in the fourth and fifth branches of the syllabus lays down the law as follows:

"Section 29, article VI of the constitution, which provides that all judicial officers excepting judges of the supreme court shall reside in the district, county, precinct, city or town for which they are elected or appointed, requires that a district judge shall maintain his actual residence in his district as distinguished from a legal or constructive residence or domicile. But where a district judge for eight months after the beginning of his term on account of his health and on the advice of physicians has lived out of his district as much of the time as his actual presence was not needed in the district, and it is his bona fide intention to return and maintain his actual residence in the district as soon as his health will permit, although the time when he will be able to return is not definite, it is held not sufficient to work a forfeiture of his office.

"The naked declaration of a district judge of his intention to maintain his actual residence in his district would not be conclusive of the question."

On p. 546 the court, in rendering its opinion, used the following reasoning:

"A more difficult question arises out of the alleged violation by defendant of section 29 of article VI, which says that all (judicial) officers provided for in the article, excepting judges of the supreme court, shall respectively reside in the district, county, precinct, city or town for which they may be elected or appointed. The word 'reside' may, and sometimes does, have different meanings in the same or different articles or sections of a constitution or statute, but the direction here, that a district judge shall reside within his district, manifestly was not intended for his convenience, but for the benefit of the people, whose servant he is. Doubtless one, if not the only, object of the section was to compel the officer to maintain his residence where litigants might expeditiously and with as little expense as possible, have access to him for the transaction of official business. Bearing this in mind, it is quite clear that 'residence' here means an actual, as distinguished from a legal or constructive, residence, or, its equivalent, domicile; and it is equally certain that, thus far in defendant's second term, he has not complied with this mandatory provision by residing where it commands. This section, however, should be given a reasonable and not a purely technical or literal interpretation. For instance, no one would say that it was necessary for a district judge actually to reside and be physically present in his judicial district every hour, or day, or week, or month, continuously every year during his term of office. If, however, he has removed his actual residence from his district, and does not purpose to return, or intends to maintain his actual residence outside his district indefinitely, or for any considerable portion of his term, the section would be ignored, the office become vacant, and the incumbent might be ousted because of such misconduct."

The holding of the court in this case seems to be that if the judge were outside his district merely for the time during which his actual presence was not needed in the district, with the intention of returning as soon as his health would permit, he would still be considered as actually residing in the district; but if he intended to maintain his actual residence outside his district, indefinitely or for any considerable portion of his term, he could not be held to be actually residing within the district.

It will be noticed that the above case is very similar to the one under consideration, and the law as enunciated therein would apply to this matter.

2. I note from your communication that you are enlisting in the officers' reserve corps and expect to go to the training camp at Fort Benjamin Harrison for the ninety-day training course, and if you make good there you expect to receive a commission in the army of the United States. This will make it necessary for us to note another section of the constitution of the state of Ohio, namely, section 14 of article IV, which reads as follows:

"The judges of the supreme court, and of the court of common pleas, shall, at stated times, receive, for their services, such compensation as may be provided by law, which shall not be diminished, or increased, during their term of office; but they shall receive no fees or perquisites, nor hold any other office of profit or trust, under the authority of this state, or the United States. All votes for either of them, for any elective office, except a judicial office, under the authority of this state, given by the general assembly, or the people, shall be void."

If you receive a commission in the United States army, you will be holding an office therein, and, so far as I am able to learn, the courts make no distinction between an office in the army and one in the civil affairs of the state or nation.

In Kerr v. Jones 19 Ind. 351, the court was passing upon a question similar to the one which I am now considering. In the syllabus it stated the law as follows:

"The office of colonel of volunteers, as now existing, and the office of reporter of the decisions of the supreme court of Indiana, within the meaning of the ninth section of the second article of the constitution of said state, are lucrative offices.

"The office of colonel of volunteers in the military service of the United States, is not an office in the militia.

"The acceptance, therefore, of the latter office, by the incumbent of another lucrative office, under the laws of Indiana, would vacate the former."
