Section 1277 G. C. provides for a fee of $25.00 from each applicant who desires to receive a certificate to practice medicine or surgery in this state. That is, at the time the applicant files his application for examination he deposits a fee of $25.00 with the state medical board. If he fails to pass such examination then said section provides that the fee shall not be returned to the applicant but within a year thereafter such applicant may again be examined by said board without paying any additional fee. The fees so paid to the board for examination shall be paid in advance to the treasurer of the board and by him paid into the state treasury to the credit of a fund for the use of the state medical board. While this statute refers primarily to the fees upon applications for examinations of applicants who desire to receive licenses in the regular practice of medicine, yet they apply, as above noted, to those applicants who also take examinations in the practice of a limited branch or branches, as herein described.

Section 1282 provides that the state medical board may dispense with the examination as to a physician or surgeon who is duly authorized to practice medicine or surgery in another state or territory or in the District of Columbia, and which physician or surgeon wishes to remove from such state, territory or district to this state and wishes to reside and practice his profession in this state. But before such person can practice his profession in this state he must receive a certificate or license from the state medical board. Such certificate cannot be received until the physician or surgeon has filed an application with the state medical board and has paid a fee of $50.00 and has presented a certificate or license issued by the state medical board of the state, territory or district in which he formerly resided, provided the laws of such state, territory or district require of physicians and surgeons practicing in such state, territory or district qualifications of a grade equal to those required of physicians and surgeons practicing in Ohio, and provided further that equal rights are accorded by such state, territory or district to physicians and surgeons of Ohio. If the reciprocal provisions above referred to are found to be proper, and if the application and certificate from such state are filed with the board and a fee of $50.00 paid, then the license to practice in this state can be received by such applicant.

Section 1284 G. C. refers to the practice of midwifery and provides that if the applicant passes a satisfactory examination and has paid a fee of $10.00, the state medical board shall issue a certificate to that effect. The fee of $10.00 shall be paid at the time the application is filed, just the same as the fee of $25.00 is paid when the application under section 1277 is filed and to which reference was made above.

Section 1289 provides that a fee of $25.00 shall be paid by a person before he is admitted by the state medical board to take an examination to practice osteopathy. Such fee shall be paid at the time the application to take the examination is made.

Section 1292 provides for the reciprocal certificate issued to an osteopath and a fee of $50.00 shall be paid at the time the application is made, and what I have said with reference to reciprocal certificates issued under the provisions of section 1282 applies to reciprocal certificates issued under section 1292.

Section 1295-11 provides that a fee of $10.00 shall be paid by each applicant for a certificate to practice nursing as a registered nurse in this state and is a fee for examination and should be paid at the time the application for examination is made. Such fees shall be paid in advance to the treasurer of the state medical board and by him paid into the state treasury to the credit of a fund for the use of said board in the enforcement of the act which provides for the examination and registration of nurses in Ohio.

Thus, in answer to your first question, I advise you:

(a) The fees provided for in section 1270 shall be paid at the time of the issuance of the certificate and after the entrance examiner has ascertained that the preliminary qualifications are sufficient.

(b) The fees under section 1274-2, when the applicant has practiced five years, are paid after the affidavit and when the license is received; and when the applicant has practiced less than five years or more than one year, such fee is paid at the time the application for examination is made.

(c) The fees under section 1277 are paid when the application for examination is made.

(d) The fees under section 1282 are paid when the application for license is made.

(e) The fees under section 1284 are paid at the time the application for examination is made.

(f) The fees under section 1289 are paid at the time the application for an examination is made.

(g) The fees under section 1292 are paid at the time the application for license is made.

(h) The fees under section 1295-11 are paid at the time the application for examination is made.

Coming now to your second question:

Having determined that the fees are required to be paid at the times mentioned, you ask if a refunder under any of the following conditions may be made: (A) If a refunder may be made upon the failure to qualify educationally.

Preliminary educational qualifications are provided for in section 1270 G. C., above quoted, and no fee is required of the applicant until the entrance examiner is satisfied either that such applicant has a certificate showing the qualifications mentioned in said section, or has taken an examination. Then the statute provides:

> "If the entrance examiner finds that the preliminary examination of an applicant is sufficient, he shall, upon payment to the treasurer of the state medical board of a fee of $3.00, issue a certificate thereof which shall be attested by the secretary of the state medical board."

That is, the entrance examiner must first find that the applicant has the necessary preliminary education or must give such applicant an examination in the branches as are required for graduation from a first class high school of this state, and if the examiner finds that the applicant has the educational qualification required, or if such applicant passes the examination given by the entrance examiner, then such entrance examiner shall issue such applicant a certificate, but not until the fee of $3.00 has been paid to the treasurer of the state medical board.

I am informed that it frequently happens that the fee of three dollars is enclosed with the application for a preliminary examination. This proceduce is not in strict compliance with the statute and if same is held by the board or the officials thereof, it is so held only as agent of the applicant, subject to be returned to him at his request, in case he fails to qualify for the preliminary education certificate, or to be received by the board officially, if such applicant qualifies, and when the preliminary educational certificate is furnished to such applicant.

So that, answering your question, subdivision A, I advise you that no fee being properly payable until after the entrance examiner is satisfied of the educational qualifications of the applicant, none could be returned which is properly paid. If, however, the officials of the board are holding any fees simply as agents of the applicant, such fees are returnable on request in case the applicant fails to qualify educationally.

Coming now to subdivision B of your second question, that is, if a fee may be refunded upon the failure of the applicant to pass the final examination, nothing it seems to me could be clearer than the language of section 1277 G. C., which provides that on failure to pass such examination, the fee shall not be returned to the applicant, but within a year after such failure he may present himself and be again examined without the payment of an additional fee. Then said section further provides that all fees for examination shall be paid in advance to the treasurer of the board and by him paid into the state treasury to the credit of a fund for the use of the state medical board, and no provision being made for a return of said fees, it is, as above stated, most clear to me that there cannot be a refunder upon a failure to pass a final examination.

The other sections which call for the payment of fees do not provide, as does section 1277, that the fees shall not be returned, neither do they provide that they shall be returned, and I must therefore conclude that provision being made for payment, and no provision being made for a return of such fees, none can be returned which are received officially by the board or its officers.

In sub-division C of your second question you ask if there can be a refunder upon a withdrawal of the application. The statutes makes no provision for the withdrawal of an application and does make provision for the payment of the various fees at the times the various applications are filed and that such fees shall be paid into the state treasury, and makes no provision for the return of said fees. I must, therefore, conclude that there is no way to refund any fees, even if an application can be withdrawn. But I find no provision of statute by which an application may be withdrawn and, therefore, there would be no refunder in that class. This does not apply to a fee paid at the time the application for a preliminary examination is made, as above explained.

Subdivision D of your second question asks if there may be a refunder for any other cause. My answer to subdivision C of said question answers subdivision D, and you are advised that the statute providing for no refunders, none can be had.

In your third question you ask if any of the fees may be properly refunded, how should it be done in view of the provisions of section 24 of the General Code. Said section reads in part as follows:

> "On or before Monday of each week every state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, * * * shall pay to the treasurer of state all moneys, checks and drafts received for the state, or for the use of any such state officer, state institution, department, board, commission * * * during the preceding week, from taxes, assessments, licenses, premiums, fees, penalties, fines, costs, sales, rentals or otherwise, and file with the auditor of state a detailed verified statement of such receipts. * * *"

You will note that said section provides that all moneys, etc., "received for the state or for the use of any such state officer," etc., that is, whatever money is so received, shall be paid to the state treasurer on or before Monday of each week. But if any money would be received for the use of any individual, as in case the fee of three dollars is paid at the time the application is filed for the preliminary examination, then and in that case the money would not be paid into the state treasury until such time as the same comes properly into the hands of the board for the use of the state.

So that applying the provisions of said section to the provisions of the act, which provides for the state medical board and for the examination and registration in the practice of medicine in Ohio, whenever fees are paid to the board or to the treasurer thereof, and such fees are paid for the use of the state or an officer or department thereof, then on Monday of each week such fees must be deposited under the provisions of said section 24 with the treasurer of state and a detailed, verified account of same must be filed with the auditor of state.

In your question No. 4 you ask if the state medical board may, in its rules, authorized by section 1267 G. C., provide for the collection of any fees not authorized by statute.

The state medical board is a creature of statute and can only do those things which are permitted under the statute authorizing such board and defining the powers thereof. Section 1267 of the General Code, to which you refer, provides:

"The state medical board shall meet in Columbus on the first Tuesday of January, April, July and October of each year, and at such other times and places as the board may direct. Five members of the board shall constitute a quorum. The board shall have a seal and shall prescribe rules for its government."

The last sentence thereof, which provides that the board shall prescribe rules for its government, in no wise permits the board to levy or collect any fees.

So that, answering your fourth question, I advise you that the state medical board is not authorized under section 1267 of the General Code to provide for the collection of any fees not authorized by statute.

In your question 5 you ask if there is any authority in the provisions of section 1295-5 to collect the fee of $3.00 from nurses which is authorized by section 1270 G. C. to be collected from doctors.

Section 1295-5 G. C. provides:

"On and after January 1, 1916, no person shall practice nursing as a registered nurse in this state without first complying with the requirements of this act. All graduates in nursing shall either personally or by letter or proxy present their diplomas to the nurses' examining committee for verification. Accompanying such diploma the applicant shall file an affidavit, duly attested, stating that the applicant is the person named in the diploma and is the lawful possessor of the same. The applicant shall state date of birth and the actual time spent in the study of nursing. If the committee shall find the diploma to be genuine and from a nurses' training school in good standing, connected with a hospital or sanitarium in good standing, as defined by the state medical board, and the person named therein to be the person holding and presenting the same, and that said person has paid the fee as hereinafter provided for the examination of applicants, the committee shall issue a certificate to that effect signed by its secretary and chief examiner; such certificate, when left with the probate judge for record as hereinafter required; shall be conclusive evidence that its owner is entitled to practice nursing as a registered nurse in this state. All other persons desiring to engage in such practice in this state shall apply to the nurses' examining committee for a certificate, and submit to the examination hereinafter provided except that all students who were on May 1, 1915, matriculated in a training school for nurses located in the state of Ohio, recognized by the state medical board of Ohio, and who shall have graduated subsequent to May 1, 1915, and who shall file their diploma for registration prior to June 1, 1918, shall receive certificates as heretofore provided. The applicant shall file with the secretary a written application, under oath, on a form prescribed by the state medical board, and provide proof that said applicant is more than twenty-one years of age and of good moral character. The applicant shall file documentary evidence that before matriculating in a training school for nurses, said applicant received an education equivalent to that required for completion of the first year of a high school course of the first grade, in this state, or four units of high school work as defined in the school laws of Ohio, and evaluated by the entrance examiner of the state medical board in the same manner as provided in section 1270 of the General Code of Ohio, and a diploma of graduation from a training school in good standing, connected with a hospital or sanatorium in good standing, as defined by the state medical board, at the time the diploma was issued. At the time of application the applicant shall present such diploma with the affidavit that said applicant is the person named therein and is the lawful possessor thereof, stating date of birth, residence, the training school or schools at which said applicant obtained education and training in nursing, the time spent in each, the time spent in the study and training of nursing, and such other facts as the state medical board requires. If engaged in the practice of nursing, the affidavit shall state the period during which and the place where said nurse has been so engaged."

The part of the above quoted section which applies to your inquiry is that portion which affects applicants who must qualify for examination. That is, the applicant shall file with the secretary of the state medical board a written application under oath on a form prescribed by such board, and provide proof that the applicant is more than twenty-one years of age and of good moral character. The applicant shall file documentary evidence that before matriculating in a training school for nursing, said applicant has received an education equivalent to that required for completion of the first year of a high school course in a high school of the first grade in this state, or what would be defined as four units of high school work. The section then provides:

> "and evaluated by the entrance examiner of the state medical board in the same manner as provided in section 1270 of the General Code of Ohio."

The manner of evaluation, as provided in section 1270 G. C., is that the applicant shall present to the entrance examiner his preliminary educational credentials, if he has them to present, and if he has no such credentials then the entrance examiner may examine the applicant in such branches as are required therein. If the entrance examiner finds that the preliminary education of the applicant is sufficient, he shall, upon payment to the treasurer, of the state medical board of a fee of three dollars, issue a certificate thereof, which certificate shall be attested by the secretary of the state medical board.

I, therefore, advise you that the fee of $3.00 for the preliminary educational certificate, which is provided for by section 1270, is chargeable under section 1295-5, because the evaluation of credentials under both sections are the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT—WHEN CREATED IN A DISTRICT CONTAINING LESS THAN FIFTEEN SQUARE MILES—WHAT TERRITORY ANNEXED—BOARD OF EDUCATION—SPECIAL ELECTION.

1. When a village school district is created in a rural district, which rural district has less than fifteen square miles, the territory outside of the village is annexed to such village district for school purposes.

2. In a newly created village school district a special election may be held for members of a board of education.

3. Although the territory of a newly created village district, together with the territory annexed for school purposes, may be the same as that which was originally a rural school district, yet there is a new district and a new board of education shall be elected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1917.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—My opinion is requested by you on the following statement of facts:

> "The village of Euclidville was recently created and became a village school district. The territory of this village previous to its creation was included within the boundaries of the rural school district of Euclid township, which district included more territory than is included in the village, all of which became attached to the village school district for school purposes, as it contained less than sixteen square miles. * * *
> At a special municipal election held on September 7th (1917), a school board was attempted to be elected, although the old school board for the rural school district was still in office and claimed the right to conduct the school affairs for a district which they claimed was changed in name only, the territory remaining exactly the same as before the creation of said village.
> The citizens of the district outside of the municipality did not vote at the election, although they could have done so if they wanted to. * * *
> Was this election legal and is the old school board succeeded by a new one?"

Additional information is given as follows:

"The election in Euclidville on September 7th was a special municipal election called by the agents of the petitioners to the trustees for the incorporation of the village and was the first municipal election held after incorporation.

In the call for that election it was specified that there were to be three members of the board of education elected for a term of four years and two for a term of two years. Ballots were procured and a vote was had for members of the board of education in accordance with the call.

* * * ten days prior to said election legal notice of the election was posted in two public places outside of the village of Euclidville in addition to the notices posted within the village. One of these notices was placed on the bulletin board at the town hall in South Euclid and the other on Mayfield road. Two electors residing outside of the village of Euclidville appeared at the election and cast their votes for members of the board of education."

Further additional information is given as follows:

"The valuation of said district will be over $500,000."

Section 4687 G. C. provides:

"Upon the creation of a village, it shall thereby become a village school district, as herein provided, and, if the territory of such village previous to its creation was included within the boundaries of a rural school district and such rural school district included more territory than is included within the village, such territory shall thereby be attached to such village school district for school purposes, provided such territory has an area of less than sixteen square miles."

That is—and applying the same to your case—the territory from which was created the village of Euclidville was, I am informed, formerly Euclid rural school district and had formerly been a special district, and under the provisions of section 4735 G. C., which provides that all existing township and special districts shall become rural school districts, said Euclid special school district became the Euclid rural school district. When Euclidville was created it did not include all the territory of the Euclid rural school district, but by the provisions of section 4687, above quoted, the remainder of said territory became annexed to the territory of the village for school purposes because there was an area of less than sixteen square miles. So that, as the special district became a rural district by the provisions of section 4735, above mentioned, so now the rural district becomes a village district under the provisions of section 4687, above quoted.

It is further to be noted under the provisions of section 4735 G. C. that:

"All officers and members of boards of education of such existing districts shall continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and powers until their terms expire and until their successors are elected and qualified."

But under the provisions of sections hereinafter noted, when the territory of a newly created village is held to constitute a village school district, provision is otherwise made by law for a board of education for such newly created school district.

Before it is definitely determined whether or not the territory of a village and that which is annexed to it for school purposes shall constitute a village school district, the provisions of section 4680 G. C. must be considered. Said section reads as follows:

> "Each village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than five hundred thousand dollars, shall constitute a village school district."

That is to say, Euclidville, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, which in this case was the entire district of the Euclid rural school district, became, ipso facto, a village district, for, as mentioned in your statement of facts, it has a tax valuation of over $500,000.

So that, for the organization of the district as a village school district, it is next necessary to consider the provisions of section 4710 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "In villages hereafter created, a board of education shall be elected as provided in the preceding section. When villages hereafter created or which have been heretofore created, fail or have failed to elect a board of education as provided in the preceding section, the commissioners of the county to which said district belongs, shall appoint such board, and the members so appointed shall serve until their successors are elected and qualified. The successors of the members so appointed shall be elected at the first election for members of the board of education held in such district after such appointment; two members to serve for two years and three members for four years, and thereafter their successors shall be elected in the manner and for the term as provided by section 4709 of the General Code. The board so appointed by the county commissioners shall organize on the second Monday after their appointment. If the members of such board are elected at a special election held in such district the members so elected shall serve for the term indicated in the preceding section, from the first Monday in January after the preceding election for members of the board of education and the board shall organize on the second Monday after such election."

That is, the village now being created, together with the territory attached for school purposes, containing a tax valuation of upwards of $500,000, a board of education shall be elected as is provided by section 4709, which reads:

> "At the first election in such district a board of education shall be elected, two members to serve for two years and three to serve for four years. At the proper municipal elections held thereafter their successors shall be elected for four years."

The members of such board having been elected at a special election held in such district, the members so elected shall serve, two for the term of two years and three for the term of four years, and said terms shall be counted from the first

Monday in January after the preceding election for members of the board of education, which election for members of the board of education occurred the last time in 1915, and the first Monday in January thereafter would be the first Monday in January, 1916. So the terms of the members of the board for the newly created village district began as of the first Monday in January, 1916, two extending two years therefrom or until the first Monday in January, 1918, and three extending four years therefrom, or until the first Monday in January, 1920.

A matter very similar to the one in question here was considered in Opinion No. 757, Annual Reports of the Attorney General for 1912, page 1526, in which a village was incorporated from the territory of a special school district known as the North Kingsville school district, which special school district was located in Kingsville township, Jefferson county, Ohio. Following the creation of said village district, a special election was held and a board of education was elected at such special election. It was held in said opinion that the old board held over only until the new board should organize, which organization should be effected on the second Monday after such special election.

It was again held in Opinion No. D 290, Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1911-1912, page 537, that an incorporated village which forms a part of a township school district becomes, ipso facto, a village school district upon the attainment of the tax valuation necessary for such village school district.

In Buckman v. State, 81 O. S. 171, the record presented in said case but a single question, that is, did the village of Kenmore, by its creation as an incorporated village, thereby, and by that act alone, become a village school district. It was admitted that the tax valuation of the property within the village at the time of its incorporation was largely in excess of the amount prescribed by statute (at that time $100,000, now $500,000). The court held that the incorporation of the village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, must be considered a village school district from and after the time such village was incorporated; that no vote of the electors was necessary in the creation or establishment of such village school district.

It would seem clear, from the above cited sections, opinions and decisions, that a new district was created and that there was a legal election and the old board is succeeded by the new board in said school district. The creation of the village, in a school district which contained less than sixteen square miles, caused the entire territory of such district to become annexed to the territory of the village for school purposes, and although the boundary lines remained the same, there was a new district, while in many respects the same, yet a district which is capable of having rights and advantages different from a rural district. The old district, that is, the rural district, went out of existence when the new district was created and the old board simply held over until the new board was duly elected and qualified. The statute provides for the election of a new board which may be elected at a general or special election. In this case the new board was elected at a special election called for that purpose and as soon as the members qualify and organize, the affairs of the schools of said district shall be in the hands of the new board as successors to the old board.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCIOTO RIVER—BED BELONGS TO ADJOINING PROPRIETORS.

1. The bed of the Scioto River belongs to adjoining proprietors. He who owns the land on both sides owns it clear across.

2. The proprietor on one side owns in front of his land at the bank to the middle of the stream, or the thread of the stream.

3. Being such owners, subject only to an easement, a gravel bar in the river would belong to such adjacent proprietors.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1917.

HON. C. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 10, 1917, you request an opinion from this department as follows:

> "1. To whom does the bed of the Scioto river belong?
> 2. Do the lands of land-owners adjoining the Scioto river extend to low water mark, or to the thread of the stream?
> 3. If a gravel bar starts at the shore and extends some distance out into the river and beyond low water mark, is the adjoining land-owner entitled to pay for gravel taken from this gravel bar?
> The gravel bar in question at times has water running on both sides of it, there being a small stream of water between it and the shore most of the time. However, when the River is low it is dry from the shore out to the end of the bar. The commissioners have taken gravel from this gravel bar, and the adjoining land-owner demands payment.
> We would like to have your opinion as to the foregoing matters as soon as convenient."

It is apparent that the first and second inquiries amount to the same thing, and the answer to the third is dependent upon the answers to the others. The rule seems to be universal as to unnavigable streams, that the adjoining proprietors own them to the center of the stream. Washburn, upon this subject, says:

> "In respect to streams and rivers which are not navigable, the rule seems to be universal, that describing land as running to the stream or the bank, and by it or along the stream or the bank, extends to the middle or thread of the stream, the filum aquae, unless there is something in the description clearly excluding the intermediate space between the edge or bank of the stream and its thread. And if the bed of the stream changes imperceptibly by the gradual washing of the banks, the line of the land bordering upon it changes with it; but if this change is by reason of a freshet, and suddenly done, the line remains as it was originally."
> 3 Washburn on Real Property, Sec. 2334.

The Scioto river, however, is a navigable stream in contemplation of law, and as will appear hereinafter the rule is not universally settled, but differs in different jurisdictions. It is made a navigable stream by express legislation by an act of February 17, 1808, entitled, "An act declaring certain streams navigable," as follows:

> "Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that the following streams be, and they are hereby declared to be, navigable, or public highways, to wit: The Mahoning from the Pennsylvania line as far up as Jesse Holliday's mill; Still Water, from its confluence with the Muskingum river, as far up as the mouth of Brushy Fork of said stream; Will's Creek, from its confluence with the Muskingum as far up as Cambridge; One Log (commonly called Cannotton) as far up as the division line between the 14th and 15th townships in the seventh range; the Scioto from its confluence with the Ohio river, as far up as the Indian boundary line, and the Little Muskingum, from its confluence with the Ohio, up as far as the south line of section 36 in the second township of the seventh range." (6 O. L. 6.)

The other sections of the act prohibit or regulate the building of dams and provide a penalty for violation thereof.

In Vol. 7 Ohio Laws, page 165, this is repealed so far as applies to Still Water. I have been unable to find any further repeal, but in Chase's Statutes, published in 1835, purporting to give all the statutes of the state and of the Northwest Territory from 1788 to 1833, and compiled by the great Salmon P. Chase, this is given in the enumeration of special acts, Chase's Statutes, Vol. III, page 2168, as follows:

"Chap. DCCCXVI—An act declaring certain streams navigable. Passed, February 17, 1808; 6 O. L. 6. See post, O. L. L. c. 818, 832, 847."

The above reference mentions the subsequent act repealing that portion of the former applying to Still Water, passed January 24, 1829, 7 O. L. 108.

No further reference is made to this subject in Chase's Statutes, and after that period it seems to have disappeared, as I find no reference to the subject in any subsequent compilation or edition of the Ohio Statutes; so that, unless there be some repeal that has escaped my notice, the Scioto river is still a navigable stream as far as the Indian boundary line. This line is shown on ancient maps as crossing the river in the neighborhood of the north line of Delaware county, and is the line established by Wayne's treaty with the Indians; therefore Pike county is on that part of the waters of the Scioto which are legally designated as navigable, and we are relieved from the investigation and discussion of whether it be in fact a navigable stream at the present time. A rather full discussion of the subject of boundaries on such navigable streams is given by Washburn, Vol. III, sections 2335 et seq., discussing what is a navigable stream, and the line of riparian ownership in reference to it. We are relieved by the operation of the above statute from the first discussion, interesting though it be. There is, however, some difference in the character of navigable streams with the consequent difference in the decisions as to ownerships of their beds; the distinction is as to those streams which are upon tide water, in reference to which such ownership extends only to the line of the high-water mark. This distinction undoubtedly comes from the English laws, none of the tributary streams in England being navigable, and few of the main streams being navigable above tide water. In this country with very large fresh water rivers a different rule has been adopted, and in some jurisdictions a distinction is made between public and navigable streams by which tide waters were regarded as public highways for all the world, and therefore not the subject of private ownership, and streams within states subject to state jurisdiction as to their navigation and as to the grant of the soil in their beds. In some of the states the beds of these navigable rivers are held to belong to the state, the adjoining proprietors owning only to low water mark; in others, the common law doctrine is held that the ownership of banks is extended to the thread of the stream, which thread of the stream, by the way, is the middle of the distance across it.

Among the states which hold this latter doctrine are given Connecticut, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Massachusetts, Maryland, Wisconsin, South Carolina, Maine, Mississippi, Vermont, New Jersey and New York—thirteen states; while the former doctrine, that of ownership by the state, is held by the same number. It is not important to consider the doctrine in the other states than those given, the statement being made simply to show the fact of a difference of opinion and practice in the different states. The latter doctrine is settled for this state by our supreme court in two cases:

> "In Ohio owners of land situated on the banks of navigable streams running through the state, are also owners of the bed of rivers to the middle of the stream, as at common law."
> Admrs. of Gavit v. Chambers & Coates, 3 Ohio 496.

The opinion is a per curiam, and on page 498 is a considerable discussion of the reasons for holding the land subject to the ownership of adjoining proprietors. It is declared not to have been the intention of the United States to reserve an interest in the beds, banks and waters of the rivers other than use for navigation to the public, and all grants of lands upon such waters are held to be made subject to the common law rule, which the court states as follows:

> "He who owns the lands upon both banks, owns the entire river, subject only to the easement of navigation, and he who owns the land upon one bank only owns to the middle of the river, subject to the same easement."

The above case was approved and the same doctrine affirmed in a comparatively modern case: June v. Purcell, 36 O. S. 396, the first section of the syllabus being as follows:

> "The principle decided in Gavit v. Chambers (3 Ohio 496), that the owners of lands situated on the banks of navigable streams running through the state are also owners of the beds of the rivers to the middle of the stream, as at common law, has become a rule of property, and, irrespective of the question of its original correctness, ought not to be disturbed."

The river in this case was the Sandusky. A very full statement of the facts is given in the report and arguments of counsel stated at length. The opinion, written by Judge White, fully discusses the questions involved and approves the decision in Gavit v. Chambers as a rule of property. On page 407 is found the following:

> "The common law doctrine, having been incorporated into the jurisprudence of this state at so early a day, and having been regarded as a rule of property for more than half a century, it ought not now, irrespective of the question of its original correctness, to be disturbed. To disturb the rule now, 'would be a dangerous tampering with riparian rights.'"

The matter you speak about, therefore, it seems may be answered with certainty as follows:

1. The bed of the Scioto river belongs to adjoining proprietors. He who owns the land on both sides owns it clear across.

2. The proprietor on one side owns in front of his land at the bank to the middle of the stream, or the thread of the stream

3. Being such owners, subject only to an easement, a gravel bar in the river would belong to such adjacent proprietors.

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CAPITAL STOCK—FOREIGN CORPORATION—HOW COMPUTED.

The authorized capital stock of a foreign corporation, which is empowered under its charter to issue not more than a given amount of capital stock, par value, and not more than a given amount of preferred stock, an amount of common stock equal to the amount of preferred stock being reserved from issuance except in exchange for the preferred stock, and there being no power to re-issue preferred stock after it has once been retired or exchanged for common stock, is not the sum of the authorized common stock and the authorized preferred stock, but the sum of the unreserved common stock and the preferred stock—or, stated in another way, the whole amount of the common stock.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1917.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of September 6th requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "The Lima Locomotive Works, Inc., a foreign corporation qualified to transact business in this state, filed its annual report for franchise tax for 1917 with this commission.
> We are enclosing a copy of the certificate of incorporation and of the certificate of amendment to the articles of incorporation.
> What is the amount of the authorized capital stock of this company? This information is requested in order that the commission may determine the basis of the franchise fee as provided by section 5502 General Code."

As stated in your letter, the question is made by the following quotations from certificates, authenticated copies of which have been filed in the office of the secretary of state.

1. Certificate of incorporation of The Lima Locomotive Works, Inc. This certificate recites that the undersigned associated themselves to establish a corporation under the general laws of the state of Virginia, and among other things states the following with respect to the capital stock of the corporation:

> "The capital stock of said corporation shall be of the minimum par value of one thousand dollars ($1,000) and of the maximum par value of ten million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($10,750,000), divided into shares of the par value of one hundred dollars ($100) each. The minimum capital stock shall be common stock, with the rights and privileges hereinafter stated. Of the maximum capital stock three million two hundred thousand dollars ($3,200,000) par value thereof, or a maximum of thirty-two thousand (32,000) shares of the par value of one hundred dollars ($100) each shall be preferred stock, and seven million five hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($7,550,000) par value thereof, or a maximum of seventy-five thousand five hundred and fifty (75,550) shares, of the par value of one hundred dollars ($100) each, shall be common stock; and the terms upon which the said preferred stock and common stock are created and shall be issued are as follows ,to wit:
> Each and every holder of the preferred stock shall be entitled at any time (except when the stock transfer books of the corporation are closed for the payment of dividends or for stockholders' meetings), and subject to the laws of the state of Virginia in such case made and provided and under such regulations as may be provided in the by-laws or by resolution of the board of directors of the corporation, to deliver to the corporation, properly endorsed, his certificates for preferred stock and to receive in lieu thereof certificates for common stock, share for share, and thereupon such certificates of preferred stock shall be retired and cancelled and never again reissued, and the amount of the capital stock of the corporation represented by the preferred stock certificates so received and cancelled and by the common stock certificates so issued in lieu thereof, shall become and shall thereafter remain common stock; and such further proceedings, if any, as may be necessary to carry out this provision in accordance with the laws of the state of Virginia shall from time to time be taken by the corporation."

2. Certificate of amendment to the certificate of incorporation of said company, filed June 9, 1917. This amendment, to adopt its recital, consists of:

"(a) changing the statement of article fourth of the certificate of incorporation of the division into shares of the maximum amount of common stock so that said statement will read as follows:

'seven million five hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($7,550,000) par value thereof, or a maximum of seventy-five thousand five hundred (75,500) shares of the par value of one hundred dollars ($100) each, shall be common stock' and (b) including in said article fourth an additional provision to stand as the eighth paragraph of said article as follows:

'No part of three million two hundred thousand dollars ($3,200,000) of the authorized maximum amount of common stock shall be issued except upon surrender for conversion or for redemption and upon cancellation of an equivalent number of shares of the preferred stock.'"

There has been a slight delay in the consideration of this question due to the desire of Messrs. Wheeler and Bentley, counsel for the company, to be heard in the matter.

I feel that I can make no question as to the authority of the company to amend its articles of incorporation in the manner in which the certificate of amendment purports to change them. If in effect such change amounts to a reduction of the authorized capital stock of the company, the result is not altered, for what may be done by amendment, and whether or not a special proceeding is necessary to reduce the capital stock of a Virginia corporation, is a question of Virginia law to be decided in the first instance by the administrative officers whose action is invoked by the presentation of the papers designed to effect a given end. The secretary of state of Virginia having permitted the filing of the certificate of amendment, I assume that it is in all respects valid, and has the effect upon the present provisions of the certificate of incorporation that it purports to have.

Some question may exist as to what was the authorized capital stock of The Lima Locomotive Works, Inc., under its original certificate of incorporation, though I am strongly inclined to the view that it was $10,750,000.00. As amended, however, the certificate of incorporation provides in the first instance for $7,550,000.00 common stock and $3,200,000.00 preferred stock, giving a maximum of $10,750,000.00, with the qualification, however, that $3,300,000.00 of the authorized common stock may not be issued as ordinary common stock, but only in exchange for preferred stock which shall thereupon be converted, redeemed and cancelled.

It is clear, therefore, that the authority to issue common stock generally is limited to $4,250,000.00 par value of such stock which, added to the $3,200,000.00 authorized preferred stock, gives a maximum of $7,550,000.00 authorized stock which the company will be permitted to have under its certificate of incorporation after its initially authorized preferred stock is fully redeemed or converted into common stock. As suggested, the stock will then all be common stock and the power to issue common stock will be exhausted.

The amount last named would then be the authorized capital stock of the company unless the authority to issue preferred stock would still exist. This requires further consideration of the original certificate of incorporation for this question is not affected by the amendment.

I call attention in this connection to the underscored provisions of the second paragraph above quoted from said original certificate. From these words it clearly appears that when the initial issue of preferred stock has been fully redeemed or converted into common stock, the authority to issue preferred stock will be exhausted.

I think it is apparent from the foregoing that under its amended articles of incorporation The Lima Locomotive Works, Incorporated, can never have more than $7,550,000.00 of stock of any kind.

The authorized capital stock of a foreign corporation, for the purposes of the Ohio compliance statutes and franchise tax laws, is in my opinion that amount of capital stock which the corporation may, without securing further authority from the state by way of amendments to its articles of incorporation or the observance of any other formalities, issue and have outstanding at any one time.

It follows that the authorized capital stock of The Lima Locomotive Works, Incorporated, for the purposes at hand, is $7,550,000.00, and I so advise you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOL DISTRICT—IN WHICH CHILDREN'S HOME IS LOCATED—WHEN FIRST SEMI-ANNUAL REPORT SHOULD BE MADE—TRANSFER OF SCHOOL FUNDS—UNDER SECTION 7678 G. C.—WHEN SUCH TRANSFER SHOULD BE MADE.

The first semi-annual report of the superintendent of a school district in which is located a children's home from which the children attend the schools of such district, shall be made in February of the school year, that is, in the first instance in February, 1918.

The first transfer of school funds to the various districts, as provided by G. C. 7678, by the county auditor, is made from the February distribution of taxes in 1918.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1917.

HON. LEWIS F. HALE, Prosecuting Attorney, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You ask my opinion on the following statement of facts:

"Please give decision interpreting sections 7677, 7678 and 7681 of the General Code of Ohio, answering the following questions:

"Should the first superintendent's report to county auditor, as required by section 7677, have been made in August, 1917, or not be made until February, 1918? Shall the auditor make transfer of school funds in his own county and certify amounts to auditors of other counties as required by section 7678 in August settlement of 1917, or not until the February settlement, 1918? In other words, can tuitions be collected for the six months previous to August, 1917?

"Our auditor has prepared an estimate of the amount chargeable to the various school districts in other counties and is ready to make transfers to the proper school funds, but is in doubt whether he should proceed further. He will hold up this matter until we hear from you."

The sections to which you refer, and section 7676, pertinent to said inquiry, read as follows:

"Sec. 7676. The inmates of a county, semi-public or district children's home shall have the advantage of the privileges of the public schools. So far as possible such children shall attend such schools in the district within which such home is located. Whenever this is impossible and a school is maintained at the home, such school shall be under the control and supervision of the city, township, village or special board of education, having jurisdiction over the school district within which such home is located. Such board of education shall employ with the approval of the superintendent of the home necessary teachers, and provide books and educational equipment and supplies, and conduct such school in the same manner as a public school within the district. The trustees of the home shall furnish necessary furniture, fuel and light."

"Sec. 7677. On or about the first day of February and of August the superintendent of the school district in which the inmates of a county, semi-public or district children's home is located shall furnish the county auditor a detailed report showing the average per capita cost, of conducting a school at such home, or the average per capita cost, except for improvement and repairs, of all the elementary schools in such district in case such inmates attend such a school, for the preceding six months. Such report shall also give the names and former residence of all inmates in attendance at school, the duration of attendance, and such other information as the county auditor may require to carry out the provisions of the next section."

"Sec. 7678. A child who is an inmate of a county, semi-public or district children's home and who was previously a resident of the school district in which such home is located shall be entitled to an education at the expense of such school district, but any child who was not a resident of such school district shall be educated at the expense of the school district of its last residence. Any child who was not a resident of the school district within which such home is located prior to admission or commitment to such home, shall be educated at the expense of the district of its last residence. The county auditor upon receipt of the above report from the board of education shall, before making a semi-annual distribution of taxes collected, estimate the amounts chargeable to the various school districts for tuition of inmates of such home, and shall transfer to the proper school funds such amounts. In case there are inmates from another county, the county auditor of the county in which the home is located shall certify the amount to the auditor of the county of such children's residence who shall forthwith issue his warrant on treasurer of the same county for such amount, and shall proceed to apportion the proper amounts to the various school districts of such county in the manner described above."

"Sec. 7681. The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district, but the time in the school year at which beginners may enter upon the first year's work of the elementary schools shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the local boards of education. Inmates of the proper age of county, semi-public and district children's homes shall be admitted after the manner described in section 7676. The board of education may admit the inmates to a private children's home or orphan asylum located in the district, with or without the payment of tuition fees, as may be agreed upon; provided any child who is an inmate of such a home or asylum and previous to admission was a resident of the school district in which such home or asylum is located, shall be entitled to free education; and provided, any such inmate who attends the public schools was prior to admission to such home or asylum a resident of another school district of the state of Ohio and a tuition fee is charged, the same method of reimbursement shall be followed as is provided in sections 7677 and 7678; and provided further, for any such inmate who attends the public schools, and who prior to admission to such home or asylum was not a resident of the state of Ohio, such home or asylum shall pay from its own funds such tuition as may be agreed upon. But all youth of school age living apart from their parents or guardians, and who work to support themselves by their own labor, shall be entitled to attend school free in the district in which they are employed."

Said sections provide for the education of the school youth who resides in a county, semi-public or district children's homes, and in substance charge the education of such youth to the district or districts of their last places of residence. The superintendent of the school district in which the inmates of a county, semi-public or district children's home is located shall furnish the county auditor a detailed report, which report shall show the average per capita cost to such district of conducting a school at such home, or the average per capita cost of conducting all of the elementary schools in such district, in case such inmates attend such school for the preceding six months, and such report shall also give the names and former residence of all inmates who attend any of the schools of the district for which the superintendent is making such report, together with the duration of the attendance, and such other information which the county auditor may require in order to carry out the provisions of the law in relation to ascertaining the residence of the child or children which attend such schools, and in order to ascertain the liability of the district or districts which were formerly the places of residence of such children. If the report shows that any of such children were previously residents of the school district in which such home is located, then such pupils are entitled to an education at the expense of said school district, because that school district is the school district of their last place of residence. But any child who was not a residence of such school district in which such home is located, prior to the time it became an inmate of such home, shall be educated at the expense of the school district of its last place of residence, and the county auditor, from the report which is made to him by the superintendent of the schools of the district in which the home is located, shall, when he makes a semi-annual distribution of taxes, estimate the amounts chargeable to the various school districts for tuition to the inmates of such home and shall transfer to the proper school funds such amounts; that is, from the reports which are made, such county auditor shall ascertain the last place or places of residence of the inmates whose residence, prior to coming into said home, was in a district or districts other than the district in which the home is located and shall then charge to such district or districts the proper tuition for the pupils who resided therein prior to becoming inmates of the home, and credit such tuition to the district in which the home is located, and which is furnishing such pupils the proper schooling, and such county auditor shall make the proper transfer of such funds. In case any of the inmates of such homes resided in another county, the county auditor shall certify the amount to the auditor of the county from which such children came, and the auditor of such county shall issue his warrant on the treasurer in favor of the auditor of the county in which the home is located, and proper distribution shall be made of the funds received on said order.

Said sections, above quoted, were amended in 1917 in house bill No. 164, and became effective June 25, 1917. The act, therefore, would speak from that time, and while said date on which the law became effective is prior to the first day of August, 1917, yet from a careful consideration of the language of section 7677 it seems clear to me that the legislature intended that the first report should be in February, 1918, rather than in August, 1917, for several reasons, among which are: February is mentioned prior to August in said section, and the February settlement is the first semi-annual settlement time in the school year, which begins September 1st, and the first distribution time of the year's taxes; that is, the first semi-annual settlement in a fiscal year is the February settlement, and the August settlement is the second semi-annual settlement in the fiscal year. If said report were made on or before August 1st of 1917, and the calculations were made upon the average per capita cost for the preceding six months, that is, for the six months preceding August 1, 1917, and the county auditor should transfer to the proper school funds such amounts as are necessary to cover the estimates of the past six months, then such school districts would be receiving funds prior to the time the tuition expense was actually furnished for the teaching of said pupils. That is—and putting it in a different way—the school year beginning September 1st, and all youth between the ages of six and twenty-one years are permitted school advantages. The taxes which are levied are collected at the two semi-annual tax-paying periods, viz., December and June. The two annual distributions are made in February and August, 1918. Whatever, then, a board of education of a district in which a children's home is located is compelled to pay out for tuition expenses in the education of the school youth for six months, beginning September 1, 1917, would be returned to such school board, or, in other words, credited to such school board when the first semi-annual settlement is made in February, 1918, and whatever tuition expense such board of education would be compelled to pay during the last half of the school year for the same purpose would be returned to said board when the August settlement would be made, and from the last half of the yearly taxes. I know of no statutes which will compel a school district to pay tuition in advance. Contracts for the payment of tuition may be made in advance of the time the schooling is received, and in this case the statute stands in the place of a contract and makes the various districts where such pupils last lived liable for the tuition thereof. But tuition from one district to another is paid, ordinarily, either monthly, semi-annually or annually, as may be determined by the board. In this case the statute makes the paying time the time of the semi-annual settlement.

I must therefore hold that the first superintendent's report to the county auditor, as required by General Code section 7677, should be made on or before the first day of February, 1918, and that the county auditor should make the proper transfer of school funds for the tuition expenses provided for in the act of which said section is a part, at the February and August settlement periods in 1918. In other words, the tuition cannot be collected for the six months previous to August, 1917, or previous to the time that such law, of which said section is a part, became effective.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT—HOW VACANCY IN SAID POSITION FILLED.

Where a vacancy occurs in the position of a district superintendent the same is filled by the electing power, that is, by the presidents of the boards of education, or the members thereof, as the case may be, and is not filled by the county board of education in the first instance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1917.

HON. E. A. SCOTT, Prosecuting Attorney, West Union, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads as follows:

> "In one of the supervision districts of Adams county the presidents of the rural boards of education met prior to September 1st of the present year and elected a district superintendent for one year.
> A few days ago one of the district superintendents resigned. The county board of education filled the vacancy.
> My question is this: Has the county board of education the right to fill said vacancy or should the presidents of the rural boards of education fill the vacancy?"

The county board of education, under the provisions of section 4738 G. C. shall divide the county school district any year into supervision districts. The division so made by the county board shall take effect on the first day of September following the time it is made.

Section 4739 G. C. provides that each supervision district shall be under the direction of a district superintendent. Such district superintendent shall be elected by the presidents of the village and rural boards of education within such district, except that where the supervision district contains three or less rural or village school districts the boards of education of such school district, in joint session, shall elect such superintendent.

Section 4741 G. C. provides that the first election of any district superintendent shall be for a term of not longer than one year and that thereafter he may be re-elected in the same district for a period or term of not to exceed three years, and further provides:

> "Whenever for any cause in any district a superintendent has not been appointed by September first, the county board of education shall appoint such superintendent for a term of one year."

Section 4742 provides that not less than sixty days before the expiration of the term of the district superintendent, the presidents of the boards of education within such supervision district, or within supervision districts which contain three or less village or rural districts the boards of education, of such districts, shall meet and elect his successor, and that the president of the board of education in the village or rural district which has the largest number of teachers shall issue the call and give at least ten days' notice of the time and place of such meeting and such president of the board in the district having the largest number of teachers shall act as chairman of such meeting and certify the results of such meeting to the county board of education.

Section 7610-1 G. C., as enacted in 107 O. L., p. 623, provides:

> "If the board of education in a district fails to provide sufficient school privileges for all the youth of school age in the district, or to provide for the continuance of any school in the district for at least thirty-two weeks in the year, or to provide for each school an equitable share of school advantages as required by this title, or to provide suitable school houses for all the schools under its control, or to elect a superintendent or teachers, or to pay their salaries or to pay out any other school money, needed in school administration, or to fill any vacancies in the board within the period of thirty days after such vacancies occur, the county board of education of the county to which such district belongs, upon being advised and satisfied thereof, shall perform any and all of such duties or acts, in the same manner as the board of education by this title is authorized to perform them. * * *"

The provisions of the above section, however, would probably apply only to the election of a district superintendent in districts where the full board of education acts, but without deciding that question, which is not necessary to be decided in this opinion, the intent and purpose of the legislature is clearly ascertained by the language of said section, coupled with the language of section 4741, above quoted. That is, it is the duty of the county board of education to act in the election of a district superintendent only when the act is not performed by those persons whose duty it is to perform same. In other words, when a supervision district is formed, the presidents of the boards of education of such district, or the members of the various boards, as the case may be, shall elect a district superintendent. If, for any cause, such district superintendent is not elected by the first day of September, which it will be remembered is the beginning of the new school year, then the county board of education shall perform the duty which the presidents or members of the various boards should have performed. Likewise, if under the provisions of section 4610-1, above quoted, a board of education fails to perform any of the acts therein enumerated and the matter is called to the attention of the county board and such board is satisfied that such condition exists, then the county board may perform the act which should have been performed by the district board in the first instance.

The presidents or the members of the various boards are given the right to elect district superintendents and it is a well established principle of law, and is particularly set forth in Throop on Public Officers, section 436, that:

> "A power to elect or appoint to an office includes a power to fill a vacancy therein."

So that the presidents or members of the various boards, as the case may be, who have the right in the first instance to elect or appoint the district superintendent, have the right to fill a vacancy, should one occur.

Answering, then, your question specifically, I advise you that the presidents of the rural boards of education, and not the county board of education are the proper persons to fill the vacancy which was caused by the resignation of one of your district superintendents.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MINOR UNDER AGE OF EIGHTEEN YEARS—PLACED ON PROBATION BY JUVENILE COURT—EFFECT OF VIOLATION OF SAID PROBATION AFTER REACHING AGE OF EIGHTEEN YEARS—JURISDICTION OF JUVENILE AND COMMON PLEAS COURTS.

A boy came into the custody of the juvenile court prior to his becoming eighteen years of age and was placed on probation by the court upon certain conditions. After arriving at the age of eighteen he violated this probation. HELD, if the violation of probation in this case consisted of a violation of some rule of conduct imposed by the juvenile court upon this boy prior to his becoming eighteen years of age, the juvenile court can now deal with such boy in exactly the same manner as if he were still under eighteen years of age, except that the court is without authority to commit such boy to the boys' industrial school. If, however, the violation of probation consisted of the commission of some offense against the state laws or local ordinances since such boy became eighteen years of age, the juvenile court has no jurisdiction in the punishment of such offense and the boy should be proceeded against in the same manner and in the same court as though he were an adult.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1917.

HON. R. D. TURNER, Probate Judge, Kenton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 14 ,1917, as follows:

"Section 1652 General Code provides that a juvenile judge may commit a delinquent child under the age of eighteen to the care and custody of a probation officer and may allow such child to remain at its own home subject to the visitation of the probation officer or otherwise as the court may direct and subject to be returned to the judge for further orders for proceedings whenever such action may appear to be necessary.

"The juvenile code also provides that where once a delinquent child comes under the custody of the court it remains a ward of the court until it attains the age of twenty-one years. The question that arises in our court is as follows: We have a boy that came into the custody of the court before he attained the age of eighteen and was placed on probation subject to certain conditions. Since his probation he has attained the age of eighteen and since that time has violated the provisions of his probation. Our understanding is that the rules of the boys' industrial school at Lancaster will not permit us to commit a boy over eighteen to that institution. This being the case, what shall we do with this boy? He has not committed a felony and we could not commit him to the Ohio state reformatory, and we are at a loss to know what course to pursue and, therefore, ask your advice."

Sections 2084, 1642, 1644, 1652 and 1659 of the General Code read:

"Sec. 2084. Male youth, not over eighteen nor under ten years of age, may be committed to the boys' industrial school in the manner provided by law on conviction of an offense against the laws of the state.

"Sec. 1642. Such courts of common pleas, probate courts, insolvency courts and superior courts within the provisions of this chapter shall have jurisdiction over and with respect to delinquent, neglected and dependent minors, under the age of eighteen years, not inmates of a state institution, or any institution incorporated under the laws of the state for the care and correction of delinquent, neglected and dependent children and their parents, guardians, or any person, persons, corporation or agent of a corporation, responsible for, or guilty of causing, encouraging, aiding, abetting or contributing toward the delinquency, neglect or dependency of such minor, and such courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any charge or prosecution against any person, persons, corporations, or their agents, for the commission of any misdemeanor involving the care, protection, education or comfort of any such minor under the age of eighteen years.

Sec. 1644. 'Delinquent Child Defined.' For the purpose of this chapter, the words 'delinquent child' includes any child under eighteen years of age who violates a law of this state, or a city or village ordinance, or who is incorrigible; * * * A child committing any of the acts herein mentioned shall be deemed a juvenile delinquent person, and be proceeded against in the manner hereinafter provided.

Sec. 1652. In case of a delinquent child the judge may continue the hearing from time to time and may commit the child to the care or custody of a probation officer, and may allow such child to remain at its own home, subject to the visitation of the probation officer or otherwise, as the court may direct, and subject to be returned to the judge for further or other proceedings whenever such action may appear to be necessary; or the judge may cause the child to be placed in a suitable family home, subject to the friendly supervision of a probation officer, and the further order of the judge, or he may authorize the child to be boarded in some suitable family home in case provision be made by voluntary contribution or otherwise for the payment of the board of such child, until suitable provision be made for it in a home without such payment; or the judge may commit such child, if a boy, to a training school for boys, or, if a girl, to an industrial school for girls, or commit the child to any institution within the county that may care for delinquent children, or be provided by a city or county suitable for the care of such children. In no case shall a child, committed to such institutions, be confined under such commitment after attaining the age of twenty-one years; or the judge may commit the child to the care and custody of an association that will receive it, embracing in its objects, the care of neglected or dependent children, if duly approved by the board of state charities, as provided by law. Where it appears at the hearing of a male delinquent child, that he is 16 years of age, or over, and has committed a felony, the juvenile court may commit such child to the Ohio state reformatory.

Sec. 1659. When a minor under the age of eighteen years is arrested, such child, instead of being taken before a justice of the peace or police judge, shall be taken directly before such juvenile judge; or, if the child is taken before a justice of the peace or a judge of the police court, it shall be the duty of such justice of the peace or such judge of the police court, to transfer the case to the judge exercising the jurisdiction herein provided. The officers having such child in charge shall take it before such judge, who shall proceed and dispose of the case in the same manner as if the child had been brought before the judge in the first instance."

On May 3, 1915, my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, rendered an opinion to Hon. Edw. C. Peck, juvenile judge, Bryan, Ohio, found in the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. 1, page 621, in which he held:

"Juvenile court judge is without authority to commit a youth over eighteen years of age to the boys' industrial school, notwithstanding the status of delinquency attached to the youth prior to arriving at the age of eighteen."

Section 1653-1 General Code, not referred to in that opinion, reads:

"The provisions of section 1652 shall not apply to the girls' industrial school or the boys' industrial school, so far as the same allows the commitment of a child under ten years or over eighteen years of age to such institution. In no case shall a child found to be a dependent or neglected child be committed to such institution, nor shall any child under ten years or over eighteen years of age, be committed to such school except as provided in section 2111 of the General Code."

This makes it clear that a boy over eighteen years of age cannot be committed to the boys' industrial school at Lancaster by the juvenile court, even though the status of delinquency attached to such youth prior to his arriving at the age of eighteen.

Section 1643 G. C. reads:

"When a child under the age of eighteen years comes into the custody of the court under the provisions of this chapter, such child shall continue for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection, a ward of the court, until he or she attain the age of twenty-one years. The power of the court over such child shall continue until the child attain such age."

I note that because of this section you seem inclined to the view that the juvenile court would have jurisdiction over the youth referred to concerning the commission of an offense committed subsequent to his arrival at the age of eighteen. In the opinion of Mr. Turner, just referred to, he discusses this question as follows:

"It is my opinion, therefore, that if the delinquent who is now over eighteen years of age has violated a law, the jurisdiction to hear and determine his case would rest in some tribunal other than the juvenile court, notwithstanding that for such purposes the jurisdiction of the juvenile court attached to said delinquent and continues until he may have reached the age of twenty-one years and that there is no jurisdiction in the juvenile court to commit, in the case under consideration, for an offense committed by the boy, although possessing the status of delinquency, when said offense against the law was committed after the boy had reached the age of eighteen years."

I concur in this view expressed by my predecessor and in direct answer to your inquiry would advise you as follows:

If the violation of probation in this case consisted of a violation of some rule of conduct imposed by the juvenile court upon this boy prior to his becoming eighteen years of age, the juvenile court can now deal with such boy in exactly the same manner as if he were still under eighteen years of age, except that the court is without authority to commit such boy to the boys' industrial school. If, however, the violation of probation consisted of the commission of some offense against the state laws or local ordinances, since such boy became eighteen years of age, then it is my opinion that in the punishment of such offense the juvenile court has no longer jurisdiction and that this boy should be proceeded against in the same manner as though he were an adult.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SECRET SERVICE OFFICER—AUTOMOBILE—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO FURNISH—MAY NOT BE APPOINTED AS DEPUTY SHERIFF AND SECURE AUTO THROUGH SHERIFF'S DEPARTMENT—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY MAY HIRE AUTO FOR SAID OFFICER UNDER SECTION 3004 G. C.

1. County commissioners have no authority to furnish an automobile for the use of the county secret service officer.

2. Secret service officer cannot be appointed as deputy sheriff and be furnished with an automobile through the sheriff's department for the use of said secret service officer.

3. Prosecuting attorney, when he deems it necessary in any specific case, may hire an automobile for the use of the secret service officer and pay for the same out of the fund provided for by section 3004 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1917.

HON. JARED P. HUXLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of September 22, 1917, wherein you ask my opinion as follows:

"Is there any way by which the county commissioners can furnish an automobile for the use of the secret service officer of this county, for his work?

Under the law passed at the last session of the legislature, authorizing the county commissioners to purchase automobiles for the use of county officials in the transaction of public business, I thought possibly this might be accomplished. We are very much in need of an automobile in this department and if there is any possible way by which one can be secured under the law, we are anxious to know it.

If there is no other way, would it be possible to have our secret service officer appointed as a deputy sheriff and then secure the automobile through the sheriff's department?"

Your communication resolves itself into three questions, as follows:

1. Can the county commissioners furnish an automobile for the use of a secret service officer appointed by the prosecuting attorney?
2. Can a secret service officer be appointed as a deputy sheriff and be furnished with an automobile through the sheriff's department?
3. Is there any way in which an automobile can be secured for the use of such secret service officer?

The section referred to by you, which authorizes county commissioners to purchase automobiles for county officials, is section 2412-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 585), which provides as follows:

"That, whenever the county commissioners are of the opinion that it is expedient to purchase one or more automobiles or other vehicles for the use of the county commissioners and county sheriff in order to facilitate the transaction of public county business, they shall adopt a resolution to that effect, and shall file an application in the court of common pleas, setting forth the necessity for such purchase, together with a statement of the kind and number of vehicles required and the estimated cost of each such vehicle. Ten days' notice of the time of hearing such application shall be published in a newspaper of general circulation in the county. If upon such hearing of said application the court shall find that it is necessary and expedient to purchase one or more of such vehicles, it shall so order, and shall fix the number and kind of such vehicles, and the amount to be expended for each."

The above quoted section is very clear in its terms and gives the commissioners authority to purchase automobiles only for their own use and for use of the sheriff. There is no provision of law giving the county commissioners authority, either directly or indirectly, to purchase an automobile for use of a secret service officer.

Therefore, in answer to your first question, I advise you that the county commissioners may not purchase an automobile for the use of a county secret service officer.

Your second question is, can a secret service officer be appointed as a deputy sheriff and be furnished with an automobile through the sheriff's department?

A secret service officer cannot be appointed as a deputy sheriff and thereby secure use of an automobile under authority of section 2412-1, supra, authorizing the commissioners to purchase automobiles for the use of the sheriff, for the reason that the legislature did not intend by this section to provide automobiles for the use of all officials, but only for the use of the commissioners and sheriff; and if a person appointed as deputy sheriff should use an automobile purchased for the sheriff's department, in the discharge of duties as a secret service officer, he would be using said machine for business other than official business of the sheriff's department, a purpose not contemplated or authorized by section 2412-1.

Said section 2412-1 would of course authorize the use of such automobile by a deputy sheriff when acting in such capacity, or in other words when he is performing the duties imposed by law upon the sheriff; but it does not authorize the use of such automobile by the sheriff or his deputies when engaged in work not connected with the sheriff's department.

A deputy sheriff has certain duties to perform. A secret service officer has certain duties to perform. These duties are entirely separate and distinct and it is needless to say that a man cannot act in both capacities at the same time. Therefore, if a person were appointed as deputy sheriff and performed only the duties of a secret service officer, although nominally a deputy sheriff, he would not in reality be a deputy sheriff, and not performing duties connected with the sheriff's department, would not be allowed to use an automobile purchased for the use of such department.

If it were possible for one person to hold the office of deputy sheriff and secret service office (I am not passing on that question here), such person would be permitted to use an automobile purchased for the use of the sheriff, only in the performance of duties as such deputy sheriff, and not when otherwise engaged.

Therefore, in answer to your second question I advise you that a secret service officer cannot be appointed as a deputy sheriff and be furnished with an automobile through the sheriff's department, for the use of said secret service officer.

In your third question you inquire whether there is any way in which an automobile can be secured for the use of such secret service officer.

Section 2915-1 G. C. provides for the appointment of a secret service officer by the prosecuting attorney. It also provides for his compensation. There is, however, no provision in said section allowing expenses incurred by the secret service officer, in the discharge of his official duties. I know of no express provision of law allowing a secret service officer automobile hire or expenses incurred in the discharge of his duties. However, if a case should arise where the circumstances are such that the prosecuting attorney considers it absolutely necessary to hire an automobile for the use of his secret service officer, to enable said officer to perform his duties in connection with said case, I am of the opinion that inasmuch as such expenses are incurred by him "in the furtherance of justice" and are "not otherwise provided for," they may be paid by the prosecuting attorney under section 3004 G. C. Said section provides as follows:

> "Sec. 3004. There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney in addition to his salary and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary, to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for. * * *"

Therefore, in answer to your third question I advise you that the prosecuting attorney, when he deems it necessary in any specific case, may hire an automobile for the use of his secret service officer and pay for the same out of his "furtherance of justice" fund.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DELINQUENT CORPORATION TAX DUPLICATE—HOW SAME SHOULD BE CERTIFIED TO ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

In certifying delinquent corporations to attorney-general the provisions of sections 5491 G. C. must be complied with.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1917.

HON. CHESTER E. BRYAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—We are in receipt of your letter of October 5th wherein you state as follows:

> "The department of the auditor of state has announced its desire and intention to transmit to the attorney-general's department immediately the delinquent domestic corporation tax duplicate, instead of returning such duplicate to the treasurer of state for collection, for a period of thirty days.
> I respectfully request your opinion as to whether or not the tax duplicate, after the 15 per cent penalty is added by the auditor of state, can be immediately transmitted to your own department for collection, instead of being returned to the treasurer of state's department and retained here for a period of thirty days. We will be pleased to follow this procedure if your department will give us such authority, or your opinion that such a plan is permissible.
> The law covering the collection of these accounts will be found, I believe, in sections 5492 and 5512 G. C., and sections 20 and 268 as amended, O. L. 107, page 546.
> I will greatly appreciate your early consideration of this matter, as the delinquent duplicate will be certified by this department to the auditor of state next week."

In your request for opinion you refer to sections 5492, 5512, 20 and 268 of the General Code. None of these sections as I see it are decisive of the question.

Section 5492 refers to the action to be brought for the recovery of taxes or fees and penalties.

Section 5512 permits a suit in injunction to be instituted on failure to pay taxes, fees or penalties.

Sections 20 and 268 are general statutes referring to the collection of general claims in favor of the state and have no reference whatever to the payment of delinquent corporation fees and penalties.

The statute which is determinative of the question which you ask is section 5491, which reads as follows:

> "All taxes received by the treasurer of state, under the provisions of this act, shall be credited to the general revenue fund. If any public utility fails or refuses to pay, on or before the fifteenth day of December, the tax assessed against it, or if any corporation fails or refuses to pay, on or before the dates fixed, in this act, (October 1st as to domestic corporations—see section 5498, December 1st, as to foreign corporations, see section 5503) the fee charged against it, the treasurer of state shall certify the list of such utilities or corporations, so delinquent, to the auditor of state, who shall add to the tax or fee due, a penalty of fifteen per cent thereon. The auditor of state shall thereupon forthwith prepare proper duplicates and reports of such taxes and fees and penalties thereon and certify them to the treasurer of state for collection. Thirty days after he receives such duplicates of delinquent taxes and fees and penalties thereon from the auditor of state, the treasurer of state shall certify to the commission a list of such public utilities and corporations as have failed to pay such taxes or fees and penalties thereon."

It is apparent therefore that on failure to receive the fees of domestic or foreign corporations on the dates above specified, it becomes the duty of the treasurer to certify the list of such corporations so delinquent to the auditor, who in turn adds a fifteen per cent penalty and certifies the same back to the treasurer of state for collection. The treasurer of state thereupon holds the same for thirty days, and if the same are not paid within said thirty days, the treasurer of state certifies to the tax commission "a list of such public utilities and corporations as have failed to pay such taxes or fees and penalties thereon." After the tax commission has received the same it then proceeds to direct the attorney-general to collect the same under the provisions of section 5492 or to take the action provided under section 5512 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—MEMBER OF DITCH COMMISSION—MAY RETAIN COMPENSATION PAID TO HIM AS MEMBER OF SAID COMMISSION.

The county surveyor appointed as a member of the commission to codify, consolidate and clarify the ditch laws of Ohio, under an act found in 107 O. L. 611, is entitled to retain the compensation paid him as member of such commission, in addition to his salary as county surveyor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1917.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have a letter from Mr. Perry T. Ford, under date of September 14, 1917, as follows, and am addressing my opinion on same to you:

"The bill providing for the appointment of members to constitute a drainage commission for Ohio specifically prescribes that one member shall be the county surveyor.

The law governing the duties of the county surveyor provides that all his time and attention shall be devoted to the duties of his office and that all fees collected by the surveyor be returned to the county fund.

By request of Mr. Harry Core, prosecuting attorney of Putnam county, I would like to have an opinion from your department as to whether or not, being the surveyor member of that commission, I will have to turn all fees collected from that source back to the county."

I take it that Mr. Ford refers to the commission to codify, consolidate and clarify the ditch laws of Ohio, provision for the appointment of which was made by the last general assembly in an act to be found in 107 O. L., page 611. Sections 1 and 2 of this act read as follows:

> "Section 1. The governor is hereby authorized to appoint a commission of three members to consist of a county surveyor, a farmer and a lawyer, all of whom have had experience in ditch matters, to codify, consolidate and clarify the ditch laws of the state. The commission shall organize within ten days after appointment by electing a chairman and secretary, and shall make a report to the governor prior to January 1, 1918.
> "Section 2. Each member shall be paid five dollars for each day actually engaged on the work of the commission, and shall also be paid his actual and necessary expenses incurred while engaged in such work. The commission may employ such assistants as it may deem necessary and fix their compensation, and may purchase such stationery and supplies as may be needed. The compensation and expenses of members and assistants, and cost of stationery and supplies shall be paid on warrant of the auditor of state upon the presentation of vouchers signed by the chairman and secretary of the commission."

Section 7181 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., p. 110, reads in part:

> "The county surveyor shall give his entire time and attention to the duties of his office and shall receive an annual salary to be computed as follows: * * * Such salary shall be paid monthly out of the general county fund upon the warrant of the county auditor and shall be instead of all fees, costs, per diem or other allowances, and all other perquisites of whatever kind or description which any county surveyor may collect or receive. The county surveyor shall be the county tax map draftsman, but shall receive no additional compensation for performing the duties of such position. When the county surveyor performs service in connection with ditches or drainage works under the provisions of sections 6442 to 6822 inclusive of the General Code of Ohio, he shall charge and collect the per diem allowance or other fees therein provided for, and shall pay all such allowances and fees monthly into the county treasury to the credit of the general county fund. The county surveyor shall do likewise when he performs services under the provisions of sections 2807 to 2814 inclusive of the General Code of Ohio."

The county surveyor, as will be seen from the above, now receives a regular salary which ordinarily is supposed to cover his entire time. However, in passing the act above quoted the legislature made an exception to this rule since it specifically provided that one of the members to be appointed on the commission referred to should be a "county surveyor." I believe they also intended to make an exception to the general rule concerning the compensation of the surveyor, and that they meant to allow the county surveyor appointed on this commission his compensation as a member of such commission in addition to his salary as county surveyor.

The compensation he receives as such member is not received by him as county surveyor. If he chose to decline the appointment he could do so, and so could any and every other county surveyor in the state who might be appointed in his place.

His position as county surveyor does not require a county surveyor to accept this appointment, and it is quite likely that if the surveyor member of the commission were obliged to serve without compensation, it might be difficult to persuade the county surveyor to accept the appointment. In the event that no one of them would accept without compensation, and no compensation could be paid to such surveyor member, the governor would be unable to secure a third member of the commission qualified to accept the appointment.

With these considerations in mind I am convinced, after a careful reading of the two statutes, that the above expressed conclusion is proper. It might be added that the act creating the ditch law codifying commission was passed one day later than the act providing for the county surveyor's salary. I believe it is hardly necessary to dwell upon this fact to sustain our conclusion.

In direct answer to your question, then, I am of the opinion that the county surveyor appointed by the governor as a member of the commission to codify, consolidate and clarify the ditch laws of Ohio is entitled to the compensation provided in the act authorizing such appointment, in addition to the regular salary which such county surveyor receives.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEMALES—EMPLOYMENT IN THE TRANSMISSION OF MESSAGES—SECTIONS 1008 AND 12993 NOT IN CONFLICT.

Sections 1008 G. C. and 12993 are not in conflict regarding the employment of females in the transmission of messages.

Section 1008 prohibits females over eighteen years of age to be employed more than a certain number of hours in any one day or week in the establishments or vocations therein named when under the law they are permitted to be engaged in such employment.

Section 12993 absolutely forbids a female under twenty-one years of age to be employed in the transmission of messages.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.:

GENTLEMEN:—We have your recent favor in which you state:

> "Our chief deputy of the division of workshops, factories and public buildings, requests that you furnish this department an opinion on the following matter:
> 'Sections 12993 and 1008 of the General Code, as amended by the eighty-second general assembly, seem to be in conflict. Section 12993 provides, among other things, that no female under twenty-one years of age shall be employed in the transmission of messages.
> Section 1008, as amended, seems to conflict by implication, at least, in that it permits females, over eighteen years of age and under twenty-one, to be employed in the distributing or transmission of messages, provided such females do not work more than nine hours in any one day, or more than fifty hours in any one week, or more than six days in any one week.

Since the _____ Telegraph Company is laboring under the impression that females between eighteen and twenty-one years of age can be employed in the transmission of messages, I will thank you to secure an opinion from the attorney-general on the subject.'"

Section 1008 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L. 149, reads in part:

"* * * Females over eighteen years of age shall not be employed or permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with any factory, workshop, telephone or telegraph office, millinery, or dressmaking establishment, restaurant or in the distributing or transmission of messages or in any mercantile establishment located in any city, more than nine hours in any one day, except Saturday, when the hours of labor in mercantile establishments may be ten hours, or more than fifty hours in any one week, but meal time shall not be included as a part of the work hours of the week or day, provided, however, that no restriction as to hours of labor shall apply to canneries or establishments engaged in preparing for use perishable goods, during the season they are engaged in canning their products."

Section 12993 G. C. provides:

"No * * * female child under sixteen years of age shall be employed, permitted or suffered to work in, about or in connection with * * * nor any * * * female under twenty-one years in the transmission of messages. * * *"

These two statutes affecting the same subject matter are in pari materia, should be read together and every provision in each should be given its full meaning unless such provisions are so repugnant to each other as to call for the application of the rule of implied repeal.

Section 1008, supra, provides that females over eighteen years of age shall not be employed, etc., in any one of a number of named establishments, or in the distribution or transmission of messages, more than a certain number of hours per day and week. Section 12993 prohibits children of certain age from being employed, etc., in certain named establishments, and further prohibits any female under twenty-one years to be employed in the transmission of messages. This latter section has no reference to the hours of labor. The provisions of section 1008, above quoted, have reference only to the hours of labor permitted. I do not find any conflict in these provisions. Both sections are prohibitive. They do not in words or terms permit anything. They prohibit the things set forth in the sections, respectively.

As stated in Conrad v. State, 75 O. S. 52, by our supreme court:

"The rule as to strict construction of penal statutes does not require us to go so far as to defeat the purpose of the statute by a technical application of the rule."

While it is true in section 1008 the statute provides that "females over eighteen years of age shall not be employed, etc., * * * in the distribution or transmission of messages * * * ," and section 12993 provides "* * * or female under twenty-one years in the transmission of messages," even though section 1008 was a later enactment of the legislature, it is my opinion that the later enactment did not in any manner affect the provision in the prior statute. If the legislature wanted to cut down the age limit in the provision as found in section 12993, which is a general prohibition against the employment of females under twenty-one years in the transmission of messages, they might easily have done so in express terms, and when we find in a statute, which is in pari materia but applying to the hours of labor instead of the vocations, certain provisions as to the same class of labor, all in prohibitive language, I do not believe such provisions would work an implied repeal. The rule of implied repeal only obtains when absolutely necessary, and my view of these sections is that they do not necessarily conflict.

As far as the hours of labor are concerned in the establishments and vocations named in section 1008, females over eighteen are prohibited from engaging for longer periods than in said section provided; that is, if they are permitted, under the law, to be employed, permitted or suffered to work in connection with such establishments or in such business. Under section 12993 females under twenty-one years of age are prohibited from being employed, permitted or suffered to work in connection with the transmission of messages.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF COLUMBIANA COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1917.

APPROVAL—CONTRACT BETWEEN BOARD OF TRUSTEES OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY AND EDGAR H. LATHAM—DISAPPROVAL OF BOND FORM.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1917.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have examined the contract which you submitted to me, which contract was entered into on the first of August, 1917, between Edgar H. Latham and your board of trustees, for the construction and completion of an addition to the dining room and the construction of a store room, including an alternate of increasing said store room seven feet in length, at the Ohio Union on the campus of the Ohio State University, said contract calling for the sum of $11,084.00, to be paid from the Ohio State University endowment fund income.

I find said contract to be in compliance with law and have this day approved of the same, the auditor of state having certified that there are funds available for the payment thereof.

The bond accompanying said contract is not in the form as at present prescribed by statute and no money should be paid on the contract until the bond has been corrected or until a certificate has been made by you that all material men, subcontractors and laborers have been paid.

CEMETERY TRUSTEES—MAY IMPROVE MAIN DRIVEWAY INSIDE OF CEMETERY—WITHOUT PRELIMINARY ACTION OF COUNCIL OF MUNICIPALITY.

A board of cemetery trustees appointed under section 4175 G. C. has power and authority to improve the main driveway inside the cemetery grounds without any preliminary action of the council of the municipality. They may do this under such rules and orders as they may adopt, subject, however, to any ordinances that may have theretofore been adopted by the village.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1917.

HON. ALDRICH B. UNDERWOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in which you make the following inquiry:

> "I am writing for your opinion upon the following facts: The village of Medina, Ohio, has a cemetery known as Spring Grove cemetery. A board of cemetery trustees under 4175 G. C. control same. This board has $11,000.00 on hand from sale of lots and other minor sources. They now desire to improve and pave the main driveway inside of and leading into the cemetery proper at an estimated cost of not to exceed $4,000.00 or $5,000.00.

My questions, therefore, are these: (1) Can the board of cemetery trustees make the improvement without legislation by the village council? (2) If so, does the paving or improvement of the driveway fall within the terms 'improvement' or 'embellishment of grounds' as used in statutes above referred to on cemeteries? (3) If so, name what steps are necessary to be taken by the board of cemetery trustees."

By way of introduction let us note that chapter 9, division 4, title XII of part first of the General Code contains provisions regulating the matter of cemeteries for cities and also cemeteries for villages. The control of cemeteries for cities rests with the director of public service, whose powers and duties are specifically set out; while the control of cemeteries for villages is vested in a board of trustees whose duties and powers are the same as are those of the dirctor of public service in reference to city cemeteries.

Sections 4160 to 4175 inc. G. C. of said Chap. 9 relate to cemeteries for cities, and section 4174 to 4182 inc. G. C. of the same chapter cover cemeteries for villages.

Section 4175 G. C. makes provision for the mayor's appointing a board of cemetery trustees consisting of three persons, to have the control and management of village cemeteries.

Section 4178 G. C. provides in part as follows:

"The board of cemetery trustees shall have the powers and perform the duties prescribed in this chapter for the director of public service. * * *"

Under this provision it will be necessary for us to turn to the powers and duties conferred upon the director of public service, found in sections 4160 to 4173 G. C. in said chapter.

Section 4165 G. C. gives authority to said director to determine the size and price of lots to be sold and the terms of payment therefor.

Section 4166 G. C. reads as follows:

"No more shall be charged for lots than is necessary to reimburse the corporation for the expense of lands purchased or appropriated for cemetery purposes, and to keep in order and embellish the grounds, and provision shall be made for the interment in such cemetery of persons buried at the expense of the corporation."

Under this section the moneys arising from the sale of lots shall be used for the purchase or appropriation of lands for cemetery purposes "and to keep in order and embellish the grounds."

Section 4167 G. C. provides as follows:

"The director of public service shall have entire charge and control of receipts from the sale of lots, and of the laying off and embellishing the grounds. * * *"

In the same section the director of public service is given powers as follows:

"He shall sell lots, receive payments therefor, direct the improvements, and make the expenditures, under such rules and orders as he prescribes."

Section 4161 G. C. provides that:

> "The director of public service shall take possession and charge and have the entire management, control, and regulation of public graveyards, burial grounds, and cemeteries located in or belonging to the corporation. * * * "

Section 4162 G. C. provides:

> "The director shall direct all the improvements and embellishments of the grounds and lots. * * *"

From all these provisions it is seen that the director of public service has authority to sell lots, receive the money therefore and expend the same under such rules and orders as he prescribes, and further that he uses the moneys in part to keep in order and embellish the grounds of the cemetery.

Remembering that the board of trustees of village cemeteries has the same power and authority as the director of public service, it seems to me quite evident that the board of trustees would have authority to improve and pave the main driveway inside of and leading into the cemetery proper and expend the money therefor without any action being taken by the council of the village of Medina, and that they would do this under such rules and orders as they themselves may prescribe, under section 4167 G. C.

I might call attention to one provision of section 4161 G. C., to the effect that the powers and duties of the director of public service are subject to the ordinances of the city. This would apply to a village cemetery and if the village has enacted certain ordinances in reference to the matters over which the board of trustees has charge, the provisions of these ordinances should be followed.

In rendering this opinion I am not unmindful of an opinion rendered by my predecessor Hon. Timothy S. Hogan and found in Vol II of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, p. 1643. However, the facts in that case were entirely different from those we now have under consideration. Mr. Hogan was dealing with streets fronting the cemetery and not with avenues lying within the cemetery grounds. His opinion was as follows:

> "Inasmuch as the statutes do not confer such power (that is the power to improve streets), the board of trustees of a cemetery in a village may not improve a street fronting on its property."

Neither am I unmindful of an opinion rendered by the court of common pleas of Logan county in the case of State ex rel. Kelley v. Roebuck, 15 Ohio Dec. 400. The court had under consideration the powers and duties of the director of public service and the council of a municipality under statutes which were entirely different from those we now have before us.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP'S SHARE OF COST AND EXPENSE OF JOINT COUNTY ROAD IMPROVEMENT—UPON WHAT PROPERTY LEVY SHOULD BE MADE TO TAKE CARE OF SAME.

The levy which must be made to take care of a township's share of the cost and expense of a joint county road improvement must be made upon the property of the entire township and not upon that located outside of a municipality or municipalities that may be located within the township. This is true whether the proceedings would be controlled by the Cass highway act or the White-Mulcahy law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1917.

HON. CALVIN D. SPITLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 5, 1917, which reads as follows:

"In 1916 a petition was filed for the improvement of a road along the county line between Seneca and Crawford counties approximately nine miles in length. Action was taken on said petition by the joint board of commissioners of Seneca and Crawford counties and the improvement was granted and all other proceedings were had including the apportionment of the expenses which were apportioned as follows: Five per cent to each of the counties; five per cent to the land owners of each county whose lands will be benefited by the improvement; and forty per cent to each of the townships in which said improvement is located.

It so happens that Bloom township of Seneca county, Ohio, is unable to raise the money to pay her proportionate share of this improvement by reason of the fact that the corporation of Bloomville, in said township, cannot increase its tax budget, and the question arises whether a road district can be created in Bloom township under section 3298-25 excluding the corporation of Bloomville for the purpose of raising the money for the township's share of the cost of this improvement. In other words, can such a road district be created so as to include the improvement of joint county roads lying within the township?"

In order to answer the question suggested in your communication, it might be well for us to note the provisions of the law as it has existed since the 28th day of June, 1917, inasmuch as section 3298-25 G. C., to which you refer, is a part of the White-Mulcahy act which became effective on said date. Said section reads as follows (107 O. L. 83):

"Sec. 3298-25. The board of trustees of a township in which township there is located a municipal corporation or corporations, or a part of a municipal corporation, may by resolution erect that portion of such township not included within the corporate limits of such municipal corporation or corporations into a road district, whenever in their opinion it is expedient and necessary and for the public convenience and welfare for the purpose of constructing, reconstructing, resurfacing or improving the public roads within such road district. The road district so created shall be given an appropriate name by which it shall be known and designated."

Sections 3298-25 to 3298-53 G. C. (107 O. L. 83) are entirely new matter and provide a scheme by which the township trustees may create a separate road district out of the territory of a township which lies outside of the municipality or parts of municipalities that may be located in the township. This new matter was enacted to enable the township trustees to construct township highways and pay for the same without making a levy upon the property which lies inside the municipal corporations that may be located in the township. This was done for the reason that many municipalities are taxed almost up to the limit at present and hence cannot bear the extra tax necessary to take care of the matter of road improvement.

Your question now is as to whether this principle could be applied in the improvement of a road located on the county line between Seneca and Crawford counties and in which, of course, both counties are interested.

As said before, let us first note the provisions of the new law relative to the matter of improving roads by the joint board of county commissioners of two or more counties.

Section 6934 G. C. (107 O. L. 102) provides:

"When a joint board is proceeding upon a petition, the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of the improvement shall be apportioned and paid in the method specified in the petition which may be any one of the methods provided by section 6919 of the General Code. When a joint board acts by unanimous vote and without the filing of a petition, they shall set forth in their resolution declaring the necessity for the improvement the method of apportioning and paying the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of the improvement, which may be any one of the methods provided by section 6919 of the General Code. * * *"

We will now turn to section 6919 G. C. and ascertain how the cost and expenses for a road improvement may be provided. It will be noted that there are four different methods set out in said section. In the road improvement which you have under consideration, evidently the first method set out in section 6919 G. C. was selected. This section reads in part as follows (107 O. L. 98):

> "Sec. 6919. * * *
> 1. Not less than thirty-five per cent nor more than fifty per cent thereof shall be paid out of the proceeds of any levy or levies for road purposes upon the grand duplicate of all taxable property in the county, or out of any funds available therefor; not less than twenty-five per cent nor more than forty per cent thereof shall be paid out of the proceeds of any levy or levies for road purposes upon the taxable property of any township or townships in which said improvement may be in whole or part situated. * * *"

It is readily seen, from the provisions of this section, that the amount apportioned to the township must be realized from a levy upon the taxable property of the township or townships, not the taxable property located outside the municipality or municipalities. Hence it is clearly evident from these provisions of the new law that the township's share of the cost and expense of a joint county improvement could not be paid out of the proceeds of the levy made upon the property located outside of a municipality or municipalities in the township. This evidently is the correct construction to be placed upon the new law, relative to the matter about which you inquire. However, I desire to proceed further and suggest that the improvement about which you inquire could not proceed under the provisions of the new law, but would have to come under those of the old.

In an opinion rendered by me on July 16, 1917, No. 449, after going into the matter pretty carefully, I arrived at the conclusion that a road improvement is a proceeding under the terms of section 26 G. C. I quote the following from said opinion:

> "From all these cases it seems to me that there can be no question but that the matter of a road improvement constitutes a proceeding under the terms of section 26 G. C."

Said section 26 provides:

> "Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending * * * proceedings. * * *"

Under this section, if a road improvement were pending at the time the Cass act was amended by the White-Mulcahy act, then the amendment of the said act would not affect the proceeding which was pending at the time the amendment took effect, namely, on June 28, 1917.

From the facts set out in your communication, the proceeding in reference to the road improvement therein mentioned was undoubtedly pending, inasmuch as the county commissioners had allowed the petition and had proceeded with the apportionment of the costs and expenses of the improvement to the different counties, townships and abutting property owners.

Hence, it will be seen that the further proceedings relative to the said improvement would be governed by the old law and not by the new. However, under the old law there was no such a provision as that found in section 3298-25, supra, of the new. Therefore, the further proceedings in reference to the improvement could not be based upon the provisions of section 3298-25.

So in looking at your question from either standpoint, in view of the provisions of the old law or those of the new, section 3298-25 G. C. could not apply in the matter of paying the township's share of the cost and expense of a joint county road improvement.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TAX LEVY—UNDER SECTION 3298-15d G. C.—MUST BE INCLUDED IN REGULAR BUDGET EACH YEAR—WHEN LEVY SHOULD BE MADE—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—IN ISSUING BONDS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT—MAY ANTICIPATE TAXES TO BE LEVIED YEAR AFTER YEAR—CERTAIN CONDITIONS—COMPELLED TO LEVY TAX FOR INTEREST AND SINKING FUND.

1. The tax levy provided for in section 3298-15d G. C., in anticipation of which bonds may be issued under section 3298-15e G. C., must be included in the regular budget each year, and the said levy must be made at the same time as are other tax levies.

2. Township trustees, in issuing bonds to provide for the cost of a proposed road improvement, may anticipate the taxes to be levied year after year under authority of section 3298-15d G. C., and are not compelled merely to anticipate the tax levy of the year in which the bonds are issued, with the condition that all the bonds mature within ten years.

3. Township trustees are compelled to levy a tax from year to year sufficiently large to provide for the interest and at the same time to create a sinking fund for the redemption of all outstanding bonds at maturity. Sec. 11 of Art. XII of the constitution and section 5649-1 G. C., make this obligatory upon the township trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1917.

HON. OTHO W. KENNEDY, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 15, 1917, in which you ask me to place a construction upon sections 3298-15d and 3298-15e (107 O. L. 79), with a view to answering the following questions:

"1. Under the foregoing statutes, assume that the tax duplicate in a certain township is one million dollars, and the board of trustees of that township is desirous of improving certain roads; that the rate of taxation was such in the township that the board of trustees could make a levy of three mills.

(a) When must the board make this levy?

(b) Must it be made in the May levy, or may it be made at any other time during the year?

(c) If it can be made at any other time, in what manner must the board proceed?

2. Further, assume that the board made a levy of three mills at the proper time of the year, and then proceeded to issue bonds in anticipation of the collection of the levy. (It is at once apparent that this three mill levy on a million dollar duplicate would return three thousand dollars.)

(a) Can the board issue bonds to exceed the sum of three thousand dollars?

(b) If the board would issue bonds for even three thousand dollars, when should those bonds come due?

If the levy is made and put on the duplicate, it is the duty of the treasurer to collect this money, and ordinarily the money would have found its way into the township treasury, the August settlement of the following year. (This might vary, depending when it was placed on the duplicate.

But statute 3298-15e says that these bonds must mature within ten years. This seems to say that the bonds need not be paid off as soon as the money is available for that purpose, but such bonds may mature any time within ten years.

3. Again, assume that the board would issue bonds in the sum of ten thousand dollars under the foregoing condition of the duplicate and tax rate. Ten thousand dollars could easily be paid off within ten years.

(a) Can the board issue bonds in the sum of ten thousand dollars, as a matter of law?

(b) If it does issue bonds in the sum of ten thousand dollars, how and when can it make a levy to take care of the interest and redeem the bonds at maturity?

You will note that the question that is concerning me is this: Section 3298-15d says that the trustees may 'levy annually.' Section 3298-15e says that the trustees may issue bonds in anticipation of the collection of that levy. So it must follow that there must be some kind of a levy made before bonds can be issued in anticipation thereof. Now, if a levy must be made each year, and there is no provision of law whereby there may be a provision made in the resolution providing for the issue of the bonds for this annual levy, what is the object and purpose of the provision that says that these bonds may extend over a period of ten years? Has the present board authority to pass a resolution that will be binding on future boards, in respect to this levy? If it has not such power and authority, then future boards might refuse to make such levy.

In other words, under the above statutes, for what amount may bonds be issued in any one year? Can the amount exceed three mills on the duplicate of the township, and if so, may it be in such amount that a three mill levy each year, for not to exceed ten years, will pay the interest and principal?"

The particular parts of sections 3298-15d and 3298-15e G. C. (107 O. L. 79), upon which you ask me to place a construction, are as follows:

"Sec. 3298-15d. * * * For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the township's proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of constructing, reconstructing, resurfacing or improving roads * * * the board of trustees of any township is hereby authorized to levy annually a tax not exceeding three mills upon each dollar of the taxable property of said township. * * *"

"Sec. 3298-15e. The township trustees, in anticipation of the collection of such taxes and assessments or any part thereof, may, whenever in their judgment it is deemed necessary, sell the bonds of said township in any amount not greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the estimated compensation, damages, costs and expenses of such improvement. Such bonds shall state for what purpose they are issued and shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and in such amounts and to mature at such times as the trustees shall determine, subject to the provision, however, that said bonds shall mature in not more than ten years. * * *"

The particular words which give rise to the questions in your mind are "annually" as found in section 3298-15d G. C., and "such taxes" found in section 3298-15e G. C. In order to reach a correct understanding of the answers to be given your questions, it may be well for us to consider one or two other sections.

Section 5649-3a G. C. provides that on or before the first Monday in June, each year, the trustees of each township shall submit, or cause to be submitted to the county auditor, an annual budget setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year and for each month thereof. That is, in each and every year the township trustees must levy a tax to take care of the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year. This would apply to the levy provided for in section 3298-15d G. C., as well as for other purposes. A levy is made each year and this levy extends no further than to take care of the amount of money needed for all purposes during the incoming year.

Section 5649-1 G. C. provides as follows:

"In any taxing district, the taxing authority shall, within the limitations now prescribed by law, levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes for all bonds issued by any political subdivision, which tax shall be placed before and in preference to all other items, and for the full amount thereof."

Under the provisions of this section it is obligatory upon the township trustees of any township to levy a tax sufficient to provide for the sinking fund and interest purposes for all bonds issued by the township in the past. That is, year after year it is made obligatory upon the township trustees to levy a tax that will be sufficient to create a sinking fund for the redemption of all bonds as they become due year after year, and to pay the interest upon the same, and this tax shall be placed before and in preference to all other items and for the full amount thereof. This provision applies to the bonds issued under and by virtue of the provisions of section 3298-15e G. C., as well as to any other bonds that may be issued. In connection with the provisions of this section I desire to call attention to section 11 of article XII of the constitution, which reads as follows:

"No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

Under this provision no bonded indebtedness can be incurred by the township trustees, unless they provide at the same time for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption.

In other words, there are constitutional and statutory provisions that the township trustees must levy annually, that is from year to year, a sufficient tax to pay the interest on all bonds outstanding, and at the same time to provide a sinking fund for their redemption whenever they may fall due. With this in mind, let us turn to the provision of section 3298-15e, supra, which is as follows, that in anticipation of the collection of such taxes, the township trustees may sell the bonds of the township in a sum not greater than necessary to pay the estimated cost of an improvement. This does not mean in anticipation of taxes already levied by the township trustees, and hence is not limited to the amount of money that will be collected during any one year. But looking ahead to the taxes which the township trustees are authorized to levy year after year, the township trustees, in anticipation of these levies and the collection thereof, may sell the bonds to take care of the costs of an improvement, provided the bonds are made to mature in not to exceed ten years. This provision does not contemplate that the board of trustees which makes provision for the issuance of the bonds shall levy the tax necessary to take care of the bonds, nor does it mean that said board shall levy any particular rate at that particular time; but, as said before, it contemplates the levy that will be made by the trustees, year after year, under the authority of section 3298-15d, supra.

It might assist us, in understanding the provisions of these sections, to note the reasoning of the court in Link v. Karb, Mayor, 89 O. S. 326, in which the court was placing a construction upon section 11 of article XII of the constitution, above quoted. To be sure, the matter under consideration by the court was different from that which we now have before us, but the reasoning applies as well to this case as it does to that of Link v. Karb, supra. On p. 338 of the opinion in Link v. Karb, supra, the court reasons as follows:

> "* * * we have reached the conclusion that, in obedience to this amendment to the constitution the taxing officials of any political subdivision of the state must provide in the resolution or ordinance authorizing such issue, or in a resolution or ordinance in relation to the same subject-matter passed prior to the issuing of such bonds, for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest thereon and provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity. This, of course, does not require the immediate levying of a tax certain, either in amount or rate, for the provision of this amendment is that this tax shall be levied annually and collected annually, but it does mean that, at the time the issue of bonds is authorized, the taxing authorities proposing to issue such bonds shall provide that a levy shall be made each year thereafter during the term of the bonds in an amount sufficient to pay the interest thereon and retire the bonds, and such provision, so made at the time the bonds are authorized, shall be binding and obligatory upon these taxing officers of that political subdivision and their successors in office until the purpose of such levy shall have been fully accomplished by the retirement of the bonds so issued. Such a provision fills the full purpose of this amendment to the constitution and is not subject to the objection that it is impossible at the time of issue to determine either the amount that must be raised for that purpose or the rate that must be levied to raise such an amount. That amount may be determined from year to year, and levied annually, for that is the command of the amendment itself; but having declared at the time of the issue of such bonds that a levy shall be made in an amount sufficient, there then remains for the taxing officials the mere matter of calculation as to the amount. The levy must be made at all events in pursuance to the original provisions therefor, and subsequent taxing authorities must make such annual levy, regardless of what exigencies may arise in the future."

In view of all the above, I will answer your questions as follows:

1. Answering your first question, it is quite evident that the amount of money necessary to pay the interest and create a sinking fund to redeem the bonds that mature from year to year must be submitted with the annual budget and the levy made for this purpose at the same time that the levy is made for all other purposes.

2. Answering your second question, the township trustees, in issuing bonds to provide for the cost of a proposed road improvement, may anticipate the taxes to be levied year after year under authority of section 3298-15d and are not compelled merely to anticipate the tax levy of the year in which the bonds are issued, with the condition that all the bonds mature within ten years. However, the bonds issued at any one time should be issued with a view to the money that can be realized from year to year from a levy of three mills on the tax valuation of the township, and also with a view to the amount of bonds which, up to any particular time, have been issued and outstanding under section 3298-15e G. C.

3. Your next question is as to whether the present board of township trustees has authority to pass a resolution to sell bonds and thus bind future boards to make a levy to take care of the interest and create a sinking fund for the redemption of the bonds so issued by the present board. As said before, the constitutional provision above quoted and the legislative enactment found in section 5649-1 G. C. make it obligatory upon future boards to make such a levy. If they do not, they could be compelled to do so through a mandamus proceeding.

In answering your second question I used the following language:

> "However, the bonds issued at any one time should be issued with a view to the money that can be realized from year to year from a levy of three mills on the tax valuation of the township, and also with a view to the amount of bonds which, up to any particular time, have been issued and outstanding under section 3298-15e G. C."

While you do not particularly ask the question to which I am going to give a little attention, yet it occurs to me that it is one which is so directly connected with the questions which you do ask that it should be given some attention.

Section 3298-15d G. C. specifically limits the rate of tax which may be levied for the purposes set out in said section to three mills on all the taxable property of the township. Then section 3298-15e immediately follows and provides that "the township trustees, in anticipation of the collection of such taxes and assessments * * * may * * * sell the bonds of said township * * *." As said before in reference to this provision, the township trustees may anticipate a levy of taxes and a collection of the same from year to year during the time for which the bonds are issued to mature, but not to exceed ten years. The question now is, what tax levy can the township trustees anticipate. Manifestly, they cannot anticipate the levy and collection of taxes to exceed a rate of three mills upon a valuation such as exists at the time of the issuance of the bonds. If the tax levy is limited to three mills the township trustees cannot issue bonds for the purposes set out in section 3298-1 G. C. to mature in amounts faster than can be cared for, together with the interest, by a levy of three mills. At the same time that the bonds are issued, the township trustees must provide for the levy of a tax to take care of the interest of the bonds from time to time and also to create a sinking fund which will be sufficient to redeem the bonds at their maturity, but they cannot provide for a sinking fund and interest that will exceed an amount which can be realized from a levy of three mills upon the taxable property of the township, and this for the reason that they are specifically limited by law to three mills.

In reference to this matter I desire to call attention to a principle of law laid down by Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, Vol. I, section 212:

> "By the constitutions of Texas and Louisiana and Alabama the amount of the tax which may be levied is limited. In these constitutions there is therefore not only a requirement that provision shall be made for the levying of a tax for the payment of the principal and interest of the indebtedness, but the amount of the tax which may be levied is also limited. The direct requirement is that the tax shall be 'sufficient' to pay the debt, and this requirement carries with it a correlative prohibition against incurring any debt greater than such amount as may be satisfied and paid by the levy of a tax within the limit of the constitution. In other words, the constitution requires not only that no debt shall ever be created above such a sum as the levy directed will pay, but also that when and before the debt is created it shall be ascertained whether the maximum amount of the tax permitted by the constitution will annually pay the interest and provide for the principal or for the sinking fund required by the constitution. The debt is not to go beyond what a tax can be levied to pay. If at the time when the debt is incurred a tax is levied which is not sufficient in amount to pay the interest and to create the prescribed sinking fund, the debt will be sustained up to the amount which is justified by the tax directed to be levied and will be held to be invalid as to the excess."

In examining the cases cited by Mr. Dillon, to substantiate the principles of law thus enunciated by him, I conclude that the principles stated by him are borne out by the decisions of the courts, but I desire to note but one case which is to the same effect as the situation above made.

In The Citizens Bank v. The City of Terrell, 78 Tex., 450, we find, among other principles of law set forth in the syllabus, the following:

> "8. The command of our constitution is that when the debt is created provision shall then be made for levying and collecting a tax to discharge it. It amounts to more than a direction that no debt shall ever be created above such a sum as the directed levy will pay. The constitution will not be obeyed unless it shall be ascertained when and before a debt is created whether one-fourth of one per cent or less on the taxable valuation will annually pay the interest and sinking fund.
> 9. As a limit upon the amount of debt the city can incur it must look to the assessment tax rolls taken for the city and under its authority."

And in the opinion on page 459 the court reasons as follows:

> "The command of our constitution is that when the debt is created provision shall then be made for levying and collecting a tax to discharge it. It amounts to more than a direction that no debt shall ever be created above such a sum as the directed levy will pay.
> The constitution will not be obeyed unless it shall be ascertained, when and before a debt is created, whether one-fourth or one per cent or less on the taxable valuation will annually pay the interest and sinking fund."

Also on page 459, in commenting upon a decision rendered by the supreme court of the United States in which it was interpreting the constitution of the state of Nebraska, the court used the following language:

> "In this case the constitution of the state of Nebraska, under which the question arose, limited the amount of the debt that could be created to '10 per cent of the assessed valuation.'

Upon this point the opinion holds that the amount of the assessed value of the taxable property was ascertainable only by a reference to the assessment itself, 'a public record equally accessible to all intending purchasers of bonds as well as to the county officers;' and that the county officers 'are bound, it is true, to learn from the assessment what the limit upon their authority is, as a necessary preliminary in the exercise of their functions and the performance of their duty; but the information is (not) for themselves only. All the world besides must have it from the same source and for themselves. The fact, as it is recorded in the assessment itself, is intrinsic and proves itself by inspection, and concludes all determinations that contradict it.'"

From all the above and from what would seem to be sound reasoning, the township trustees, while they are permitted to anticipate the levy of a tax from year to year during the time for which the bonds were issued, yet they cannot anticipate a levy of more than three mills upon a tax duplicate such as it is at the time the bonds are issued. Hence the township trustees cannot issue bonds under section 3298-15e to an amount which, with former issues under the same section, would cause more bonds to mature in any one year than could be taken care of, together with interest, by a levy of three mills upon a tax valuation such as that which exists at the time the bonds are issued.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—MAY ASSIGN CHILDREN TO VARIOUS SCHOOLS OF THE DISTRICT—MANAGEMENT BY TRUSTEES OF STATE NORMAL COLLEGE.

A board of education of a city school district may assign the youth of such district to the various schools located therein and may arrange with the trustees of a state normal college to assume the management of certain schools of such district, not to exceed six rooms thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1917.

HON. C. H. CURTIS, Prosecuting Attorney, Ravenna, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in which you request my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"I desire your official opinion as to the authority of Kent village school district to assign and set off a certain portion of the territory of their said district to the Kent state normal college which is located also within the limits of such district and thereby refuse admission to pupils of such assigned territory from attendance at the other schools of such district.

In explanation of the above question, permit me to advise you that at the time the legislative committee of the state was investigating and deciding upon a site for such normal school, as authorized under act found in volume 101 Ohio Laws, page 320, the said board of education of Kent village school district passed the following resolution:

'The clerk read the following resolution:

Resolved, By the board of education of Kent village school district, that in the event the state normal school for northeastern Ohio being located at Kent, said board hereby promises and agrees to enter into an agreement with the trustees of said school that sufficient territory of said district contiguous to said normal school will set apart to the normal school sufficiently large to permit at least 250 pupils to attend the training school.

Moved by Andrews, seconded by Bowers, that the foregoing resolution be adopted. Vote—Ayes, 4—Bechtle, Bowers, Parkinson, Andrews (cd).' Thereafter such board of education under date of June 26, 1916, passed a resolution fixing such assignment of territory as above indicated in the following to wit:

'The following territory and district lines were agreed upon:

The territory east of river and bounded by Crain Ave. to DePeyster St.; DePeyster to Main St.; and Main St. to the river to constitute the DePeyster district.

All territory west of river will constitute the central district.

The territory east of the river and bounded by the north and east by Hall St., east to Vine St., and Vine St., south to township line will constitute the south school district.

The normal school district to be the territory bounded by Crain Ave., to DePeyster St., DePeyster to Main St., Main St. to the river; the river to Hall St.; Hall St. to Vine St.; Vine St. to the township line. This division will throw about 25 pupils living between Williams and Hall St., into the normal school district and somewhat relieve the congestion in the south school.'

Again such board thereafter at their meeting held September 24, 1917, passed the following:

'Moved by Bowers, seconded by Longcoy that school boundary lines as approved and adhered to of meeting date June 26th, 1916, as found on page 213 of record of meetings be continued and enforced. Ayes—Andrews, Kneifel, Longcoy, Bowers (4) cd.'"

In relation to the matters contained in your inquiry, conferences have been permitted to be had with the officials of the Kent state normal school and with representatives of the office of the superintendent of public instruction, and this opinion is based upon the facts contained in your letter and also upon those facts received through said conferences.

Chapter 10, title 5 of part 2 of the General Code provides for state normal schools and house bill No. 44, passed May 10, 1910, found in 101 O. L. 320, reads in part as follows:

"Sec. 1. That the normal school system of the state of Ohio created and established by chapter ten of the General Code, be extended by the creation and establishment of two additional state normal schools, one in northeastern Ohio and one in northwestern Ohio, to be so located as to afford the best opportunity possible for all the people to obtain the benefits and advantages to be derived from teachers trained both theoretically and practically. Neither of such schools shall be located in any city or village which now has a college located therein.

Sec. 2. Within thirty days after the passage of this act the governor shall appoint a commission composed of five persons, not more than three of whom shall be from any one political party, and no one of whom shall be personally or financially interested in any site determined upon by said commission. Said appointees shall constitute a commission with full power and authority to select suitable locations, lands, or lands and buildings and secure options on the same as said commission may find necessary for the establishment of said normal schools and upon such terms and conditions as said commission may deem to be for the best interests of the state and submit a report of their proceedings to the governor for his approval on or before the first day of December, 1910. The members of said commission shall serve without compensation but shall be paid their reasonable and necessary expenses while in the discharge of their official duties and shall serve until the appointment and organization of the boards of trustees, hereinafter provided.

Sec. 3. As soon thereafter as the general assembly shall appropriate a sufficient amount of money for the purchase of said sites and the erection of suitable buildings thereon, the governor shall appoint by and with the advice and consent of the senate five competent persons who shall constitute a board of trustees for the proposed normal school in the northeastern portion of Ohio, and five other competent persons who shall constitute a board of trustees for the proposed normal school in the northwestern portion of Ohio.

Sec. 4. Each board of trustees shall organize immediately after its appointment by the election from its members of a president, a secretary and a treasurer. The treasurer, before entering upon the discharge of his duties shall give bond to the state of Ohio for the faithful performance of his duties, and the proper accounting for all moneys coming into his care. The amount of said bond shall be determined by the trustees but shall not be for a less sum than the estimated amount which may come into his control at any one time. Said bond shall be approved by the attorney-general.

Before adopting plans for the buildings of said normal schools each board shall elect a president of known ability for the school under its control, who shall have advisory power in determining said plans. In planning said buildings, ample provisions shall be made for the establishment of a well equipped department for the preparation of teachers in the subject of agriculture.

The boards of trustees in connection with the presidents of the normal schools shall select and appoint an able and efficient corps of instructors for the said schools, provide a suitable course of study for the theoretical and practical training of students who desire to prepare themselves for the work of teaching, fix rates of tuition and provide proper equipment.

Said boards shall proceed without unnecessary delay to purchase said selected sites, lands and buildings, as the case may be, and erect thereon suitable and substantial buildings or enlarge, reconstruct and properly repair in a suitable and substantial manner such building or buildings, if any there be, and complete said buildings as soon as conditions will permit. And said board of trustees shall do any and all things necessary for the proper maintenance and successful and continuous operation of said normal schools and may receive donations of lands and moneys for the purpose of said normal schools.

The governor when appointing said board of trustees shall designate one member of each board to serve one year, one to serve two years, and one to serve three years, one to serve four years and one to serve five years, and thereafter one trustee for each board shall be appointed annually for five years for the control and management of said normal schools. They shall serve without compensation other than their reasonable and necessary expenses while engaged in the discharge of their official duties. Not more than three members of each board shall be selected from any one political party."

General Code section 7644 provides that each board of education shall establish a sufficient number of elementary schools to provide for the free education of the youth of school age within the district under its control, and that such board may establish such schools at such places as will be most convenient for the attendance of the largest number of pupils thereof.

General Code section 7663 provides that a board of education may establish one or more high schools whenever it deems the establishment of such school or schools proper or necessary for the convenience or progress of the pupils attending them, or for the conduct or welfare of the educational interests of such district.

General Code section 7690 provides that each board of education shall have the management and control of all of the public schools of whatever name and character in the district, and General Code section 7684 provides that boards of education may make such assignment of the youth of their respective districts to the schools established by them as in their opinion will promote the interest of education in their districts.

In your inquiry you ask what, if any, authority the Kent village school district has to assign and set off a certain portion of its territory to the Kent state normal college, and inasmuch as the board of education of the Kent village school district has no power to transfer territory but has power to assign pupils, I am taking it that you meant to ask if the board of education of the Kent village school district has the right to make such assignment of youth of their respective school districts.

The Kent school district is an exempted village school district, and under the provisions of law above quoted the board of education therein provided that there should be assigned to the various schools in said district the pupils who lived in the territory bounded and described in the resolution of June 26, 1917, quoted above, and not necessary to again quote. Suffice it, however, to say that there were four districts denominated: DePeyster district, central district, south school district and normal school district, and your question calls for an opinion as to whether or not the board of education has a right to assign the pupils of the village district to the various schools located therein and especially to the schools located in the state normal school district.

In the district in which is located the state normal school is also located what is commonly called a ward building. Said building is denominated the normal school district building, and means that the building is located in the district in which the normal school is also located. It is entirely within the province of the board of education under and by virtue of section 7684, above referred to, to assign the youth of that portion of the Kent village school district to the school which is established by said board of education in the district in which the normal school is located, and said board does so by finding that in its opinion such assignment will best promote the interests of education in said district. The board of education of a city school district may also arrange with the trustees of the state normal school to assume the management of all or such part of the schools of such district as may be necessary to provide adequate facilities for practicing teaching by the students of said normal school, provided the number of rooms for which appropriation is made does not exceed six for each of said normal schools.

The section of our General Code which contains the above provision is section 7654-7, as found in 107 O. L. 627, and reads as follows:

> "Each of the state normal schools at Athens, Oxford, Bowling Green and Kent shall be authorized to arrange with the boards of education of rural districts to assume the management of one-teacher rural schools, or of rural schools having two or more teachers, or both types of rural schools having two or more teachers, or both types of rural schools and to maintain such schools as model rural schools. In no case shall there be more than one of each type of such rural schools established in a rural school district nor more than six model rural schools established by any state normal school. Each state normal school which complies with the provisions of this section, subject to the approval of the superintendent of public instruction, shall receive five hundred dollars annually from the state for each class room of such model schools when vouchers therefor have been approved by the superintendent of public instruction, and each of said normal schools shall also be authorized to arrange with the boards of education of village and city school districts to assume the management of the schools of the district or such part of them as may be necessary to provide adequate facilities for practice teaching by the students of said normal school and providing the number of rooms for which such appropriation is made does not exceed six for each state normal school."

So that, answering your question specifically, I advise you that the board of education of the Kent village school district has power to assign the pupils of that portion of said district to the school which is located in the territory in which the state normal school is located, and that the pupils so assigned shall attend the schools of said district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF COUNTY COMISSIONERS OF WILLIAMS COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 17, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:

> RE:—Bonds of Williams county, Ohio, in the sum of $18,500.00 for the purpose of meeting the cost and expense of constructing certain road improvements petitioned for by F. L. Doughton et al.

I have carefully examined the transcript of proceedings of the board of county commissioners and other officers in Williams county, Ohio, relating to said bond issue, and I find that said proceedings are in conformity with the provisions of the General Code relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared and executed by the proper officers of said county in accordance with the resolution of the board of county commissioners providing for their issue will, when so executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—CERTIFICATE OF INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION—REQUIRED UNDER SECTION 1218-1 G. C. (107 O. L.)

A certificate of the industrial commission, to the effect that a contractor has paid into the state insurance fund the premium due according to law and the rules of the department, and that said applicant is entitled to the rights and benefits of said fund for a period of six months from the date of the payment of said premium, substantially complies with the provisions of section 1218-1 G. C. (107 O. L 131). This would apply to only those cases in which the contractor pays a premium and does not elect to directly compensate his injured employes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 17, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 8, 1917, reading in part as follows:

> "On request for certificate by several contractors, the industrial commission made statement as follows:
> 'This is to certify that (name of contractor) of (address of contractor) has paid into the state insurance fund the premium due according to law and the rules of this department, and that said applicant is entitled to the rights and benefits of said fund for a period of six months, beginning _____, 191____.
> The Industrial
> _____Auditor. Commission of Ohio.
> I respectfully ask your opinion whether the aforesaid certificate is sufficient to comply with the provisions of section 1218-1. If not sufficient, I ask that you prepare the proper certificate to be used to comply with the provisions of section 1218-1."

That part of section 1218-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 131) which you quoted in your communication is as follows:

> "* * * No estimate shall be paid to any contractor by the state highway commissioner until the industrial commission of Ohio has certified that such contractor has complied with each and every condition of the act of February 26, 1913, and of all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto and known as 'the workmen's compensation law."

In comparing that part of section 1218-1 G. C. above quoted with the certificate which is being furnished by the industrial commission in compliance with the provisions of section 1218-1 G. C., it is to be noted that the industrial commission furnishes a certificate to the effect that the contractor has paid into the state insurance fund the premium due according to law and the rules of their department, and that said applicant is entitled to the rights and benefits of said fund for a period of six months beginning with the date upon which the premium is paid; whereas said section provides that the industrial commission shall certify that the contractor has complied with each and every condition of the act of February 26, 1913, and all acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto and known as the workmen's compensation law.

The question in your mind is as to whether the certificate furnished by the industrial commission is a substantial compliance with the provisions of the law, and whether you would be justified in accepting said certificate as a compliance with the law and which would entitle you to pay estimates to a contractor relative to whom said certificate is made.

In order to answer this question it might be well for us to consider what particular object and purpose the legislature had in mind in enacting said provision of section 1218-1 G. C. The legislature undoubtedly had in mind that the state could not with justice and propriety enter into a contract with some one to improve certain parts of the highways of the state, and pay said contractor for said improvement when the contractor was not complying with the provisions of the law which would take care of the injured or killed employes, if any, in his employ; that is, if the state, through its laws, makes it obligatory upon those employing five or more persons to comply with certain regulations which shall be for the benefit of the employes, then it could not with justice pay the contractor money out of the state treasury when the contractor is not obeying the law.

We will briefly note the provisions of the workmen's compensation law to ascertain whether the certificate provided by the industrial commission substantially covers the vital provisions of the law.

Section 1465-53 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The state liability board of awards shall classify occupations with respect to their degree of hazard, and determine the risks of the different classes and fix the rates of premium of the risks of the same, based upon the total pay-roll and number of employes in each of said classes of occupation sufficiently large to provide an adequate fund for the compensation provided for in this act (G. C. sections 1465-41a to 1465-43, 1465-45, 1465-46, 1465-53 to 1465-106), and to maintain a state insurance fund from year to year."

Section 1465-69 (107 O. L. 159) reads as follows:

> "Except as hereinafter provided, every employer mentioned in subdivision two of section 1465-60, General Code, shall, in the month of January, 1914, and semi-annually thereafter, pay into the state insurance fund the amount of premium determined and fixed by the industrial commission of Ohio for the employment or occupation of such employer the amount of which premium to be so paid by each such employer to be determined by the classifications, rules and rates made and published by said commission; and such employer shall semi-annually thereafter pay such further sum of money into the state insurance fund as may be ascertained to be due from him by applying the rules of said commission, * * *."

Section 1465-72 G. C. provides:

"The state liability board of awards shall disburse the state insurance fund to such employes of employers as have paid into said fund the premium applicable to the classes to which they belong, who have been injured in the course of their employment, wheresoever such injuries have occurred, and which have not been purposely self-inflicted, or to their dependents in case death has ensued. * * *"

From these three sections we note that:

(1) The state liability board of awards (now the industrial commission) shall fix the rates of premium to be paid by the employer;

(2) The employer shall pay into the state insurance fund the premium so fixed by the industrial commission, in the month of January, 1914, and semi-annually thereafter;

(3) When this is done the industrial commission shall disburse the state insurance fund to such employes of employers as have paid into said fund the premium so fixed by the industrial commission.

From these provisions and from what was evidently the object and purpose of the legislature in the enactment of the provision found in section 1218-1, supra, it is my opinion that the form of the certificate provided by the industrial commission substantially complies with the law; that is, if the industrial commission certifies that the contractor has paid into the state insurance fund a premium as fixed by the industrial commission, then under the law and under the certificate itself the contractor would be entitled to the rights and benefits of the fund for a period of six months. In other words, his employes, if injured or killed, would be entitled to the relief provided for under the law and under the rules of the commission, and as said before this was the object and purpose of the above enactment.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the form of the certificate set out in your communication is a substantial compliance with the provisions of said section 1218-1 G. C., and that you would be justified and warranted in making estimates to a contractor in reference to whom said certificate has been made.

In passing I might say that the above form of certificate would not answer in those cases in which employers elect to directly compensate their injured employes, but it would apply to all those cases in which employers pay premiums, fixed by the industrial commission, into the state insurance fund.

Further, the certificate which is issued by the industrial commission at any one time covers no more than the period set out in the certificate itself. At the end of this time, of course, your department would be under the necessity of requiring a new certificate from the industrial commission.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDING FOR BOND ISSUE OF BOARD OF EDUCATION OF LAKEWOOD CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT —DISAPPROVAL BOND FORM.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE:—Bonds of Lakewood city school district, in the sum of $100,000.00, purchased by the industrial commission of Ohio as a part of an issue of $620,000, voted and authorized by said school district for the purpose of constructing, repairing and furnishing school buildings in said school district.

I have carefully examined the transcript of proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Lakewood city school district relating to the above bond issue, and I find said proceedings to be substantially regular and in accordance with the provisions of the General Code relating to bond issues of this kind. The only irregularity of any kind that I find in the proceedings relating to said bond issue is one with respect to the canvass of the votes of the electors authorizing said bond issue in the sum of $620,000.00 for the purpose above stated.

It appears that the election on the proposition of said bond issue was held on June 12, 1917. The board of education of the school district being in regular session on the evening of said date, and the clerk of the board having received the returns of the election while the board was thus in session, said board proceeded to canvass said returns and entered the result of the election on the minutes of said meeting, instead of having a meeting held on the second Monday after the election as contemplated by the provisions of section 5120 General Code, which provides that in school elections the returns shall be made by the judges and clerks of each precinct to the clerk of the board of education of the district not less than five days after the election, and that thereupon such board shall canvass such returns at a meeting to be held on the second Monday after the election, and the result thereof entered upon the records of the board.

However, I am disposed to view the provisions of section 5120 General Code as directory only in so far as they designate the time of the meeting at which the returns of the vote at such an election should be canvassed, and in as much as the canvass made by the board of the votes shows that said bond issue received the affirmative vote of 932 electors as against a vote of 175 in opposition to same, I am disposed to hold that the result of said election should not be questioned by reason of the irregularity in the canvass of the same.

No irregularities have been found in the proceedings relating to the issue of said bonds.

The tax rate sheet returned by the auditor of Cuyahoga county to the state tax commission shows that the tax rate for all purposes on the taxable real and personal property in said school district for the year 1917 to be 15.3 mills; 3/10 mills of which combined rate is outside of all limitations of the Smith one per cent law; and that the combined rate for all purposes within the fifteen-mill limitations of said law is fifteen mills.

Inasmuch as taxes to meet the interest and principal on this bond issue is subject to the fifteen-mill limitation, it is not clear how, if the present combined rate for all purposes covered thereby is to be maintained, any additional levy can be made for the purpose of paying the interest on this bond issue and paying the principal of such bonds as they mature.

In this connection I might say that there is nothing in the tax rate sheet above referred to to indicate that any levy was made by the board to meet the interest on said bonds and the principal thereof payable in the year 1918. That is, there is nothing at all entered in column 47 of said rate sheet showing a levy for indebtedness incurred after June 2, 1911, by a vote of the people.

I am unable to say, as a matter of law, that the board of education of this school district will not be able to levy within the limitations prescribed by law a sufficient amount from year to year to pay the interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for the payment of such bonds at maturity, and this for the reason that section 5649-1 General Code provides that in taxing districts the taxing authority shall, within the limitations now prescribed by law, levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes for all bonds issued by any political subdivision, which tax shall be paid before and in preference to all other items and for the full amount thereof.

The transcript shows that the school district now has bonds outstanding in the sum of $1,078,500.00, with an estimated tax duplicate valuation of $48,000,000.

My best information is that Lakewood is a live, growing city, and one whose tax duplicate valuation will in all probability rapidly increase as the years go by. It does not appear that either the said school district or the municipality has ever defaulted as to any of its bonded indebtedness, and it is probable that these bonds, if purchased by you, could and would be taken care of as said bonds and the interest thereon mature. However, I am calling your attention to the foregoing facts to the end that you may exercise your own independent judgment in this matter, which is one that I cannot decide as a matter of law.

The transcript contains a form of the proposed bonds. The form is abbreviated and is not altogether satisfactory to me. In addition to the recitals therein contained there should, I think, be express recitals to the effect that said bonds are issued pursuant to the affirmative vote of more than a majority of the electors of the said school district in favor of said bond issue; that said issue of bonds does not exceed any constitutional or statutory limitation of indebtedness of said school district; and that due provision has been made for an annual levy of taxes to pay the interest on said bonds and to create a sinking fund for the retirement of said bonds at maturity.

I wrote to the clerk of the board of education advising him that I was not satisfied with the bond form, but was advised by him that the treasurer of state has approved said bond form.

Under the circumstances you may view this question as one that is foreclosed; however, though said bond form probably contains all that the law really requires, it will be understood that in approving the proceedings relating to said bond issue I have not given my approval to the said bond form as it appears in the transcript.

Very truly yours,

Attorney-General.

RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT—ELECTION—MEMBERS OF BOARD OF EDUCATION—TERM—BOARD OF ELECTION SHOULD DESIGNATE NUMBER TO BE VOTED FOR AND LENGTH OF TERM—IF FOR DIFFERENT TERMS.

In a rural school district which was a township district prior to 1904, three members of the board of education shall be elected at the November election in 1917.

Members of boards of education in rural school districts are elected for the term of four years except at the first election in a newly created district when two shall be elected for two years and three for four years.

Boards of election should designate the number to be voted for and if for different terms then the length of each term.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1917.

HON. W. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—A letter has been received by this department which contains a question of such general importance that I am directing my reply thereto to you and will send the inquirer a copy of same. The request reads as follows:

> The West Farmington village was created in 1891 from territory in the township of Farmington, Warren county, Ohio. In 1912 the village school district and the township district were united by a transfer of the territory of the village district to the township district. The township board of education assumed control of the village schools at that time. In 1909 four members of the board of education were elected for the term of four years. In 1911 one member was elected for the term of four years. In 1913 four members were elected for the term of four years and in 1915 one member was elected for the term of four years. Said member last elected resigned July 25, 1916, and the board filled the vacancy for the unexpired term. Four members are now nominated. Shall the board of elections in the preparation of the ballots designate the term of four years for said nominees or shall a two-year term be designated for some and a four-year term for others?"

General Code section 4745 provides:

> "The terms of office of members of each board of education shall begin on the first Monday in January after their election and each such officer shall hold his office for four years * * * and until his successor is elected and qualified."

General Code section 4712 provides:

> "In rural school districts, the board of education shall consist of five members elected at large at the same time township officers are elected and in the manner provided by law, for a term of four years."

So that, it may be assumed at the outset that the term of office for which a member of a rural school district board of education shall be elected is four years, unless there be some other provision of our law which may in some manner modify the provisions of said sections in relation thereto.

The history of the legislation in relation to the election of members of boards of education for rural school districts, coupled with the facts related by the inquirer, assists somewhat in the solution of this problem. When our school laws were codified in 1904 there was enacted section 3915 of the Revised Statutes, which read as follows:

> "The board of education of township school districts shall consist of five members elected at large at the same time and in the same manner as township officers are elected, for the term of four years from the first Monday in January after their election or until their successors are elected and qualified. At the first township election held after the passage of this act there shall be a board of education elected in all township districts, as provided for herein, two to serve for two years and three to serve for four years, and at the township election held every second year thereafter their successors shall be elected for the term of four years. Upon the organization of said boards upon the succeeding first Monday in January of their election, the previously existing township boards of education shall be thereby abolished and the newly elected and organized boards shall be their successors in all respects."

This, then, was the authority for the election of the board of education of which the present board is the successor. Said law became effective April 25, 1904, and the first election for township officers after it took effect was held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the same year.

General Code section 1442, as amended in senate bill No. 187, passed March 29, 1904, and approved by the governor March 31, 1904, changed the time of township elections from the first Monday in April, the time at which they had theretofore been held, to the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November. Said section read as follows:

> Township officers and justices of the peace shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November annually, in the manner provided by law. All township officers hereafter elected shall begin their respective terms on the first Monday in January after their election and all township officers now holding office, including assessors in municipalities who are serving as such by appointment and those hereafter elected, shall hold their offices until their successors are elected and qualified."

So that, the first board of education of the Farmington township school district, which was elected under the provisions of Revised Statutes 3915, above quoted, was elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in 1904. Two members thereof were elected for the term of two years and three members thereof were elected for the term of four years, said terms to begin on the first Monday in January, 1905, and to extend for the respective terms, and until their successors were elected and qualified. When the sucessors to the members of said board, who were so elected in 1904, were elected, they could only be so elected for the term of four years, thus preserving the continuity of the board. Said section 1442 Revised Statutes was amended in senate bill No. 168, passed March 31, 1906, to read as follows:

> "Township officers shall be chosen for a term of two years and justices of the peace for a term of four years by the electors of each township, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the odd numbered years, and their terms of office shall commence on the first day of January next after their election."

So that, the first township election at which successors to any of the members of the board of education, above mentioned, could be elected was held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in 1907, and the members of the board which were elected at said election began their terms on the first Monday in January, 1908. It will be remembered that at the election held in November, 1904, there were two members elected for the term of two years and until their successors were elected and qualified. The successors to the said two members, then, having been elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in 1907, their terms—that is, the terms of those two—began on the first Monday in January, 1908, and extended for the period of four years. The three, however, who were elected "at the first township election" were elected for the term of four years and until their successors were duly elected and qualified, and the change in the time of election affected the terms of said members so that instead of terminating on the first Monday in January, 1909, said terms did not terminate until the first Monday in January, 1910; that is, the successors of said members were elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1909, to serve for the term of four years from and after the first Monday in January next thereafter and until their successors were duly elected and qualified. In 1911, at the November election, two members should have been elected for the term of four years from and after the first Monday in January, 1912, but the inquirer states that only one member was elected, and I shall speak of this condition again in this opinion.

In 1912 the village district was transferred to the rural district under and by authority of General Code section 4692, which at that time read as follows:

"Any school district or any part thereof may be transferred to an adjoining school district by the mutual consent of the boards of education having control of such districts. * * *"

From that time to the present time the territory of what formerly composed the West Farmington village district and the territory of Farmington township school district has all been under the jurisdiction of the township school board.

In 1914 section 4735 was amended to read:

"The present existing township and special school districts shall constitute rural school districts until changed by the county board of education, and all officers and members of boards of education of such existing districts shall continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and powers until their terms expire and until their successors are elected and qualified."

It was by the authority of said section, above quoted, that what was formerly the Farmington township school district became the Farmington rural school district as it now exists and has existed to this time. Vacancies have existed in said board from time to time (I am informed by the clerk of the board) and the same have been filled by the remaining members of the board. This by virtue of section 4748, which reads as follows:

"A vacancy in any board of education may be caused by death, nonresidence, resignation, removal from office, failure of a person elected or appointed to qualify within ten days after the organization of the board or of his appointment, removal from the district or absence from meetings of the board for a period of ninety days, if such absence is caused by reasons declared insufficient by a two-thirds vote of the remaining members of the board, which vote must be taken and entered upon the records of the board not less than thirty days after such absence. Any such vacancy shall be filled by the board at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term. A majority vote of all the remaining members of the board may fill any such vacancy."

As originally enacted in 1904, said section read as follows:

"Vacancies in any board of education arising from death, non-residence, resignation, removal from office, failure of person elected or appointed to qualify within ten days after the organization of the board or of his appointment, removal from the district or from other cause, shall be filled by the board of education at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, for the unexpired term. A majority vote of all the remaining members of the board can fill any vacancy or vacancies that may exist in said board."

The fact that the vacancies were filled by the remaining members of the board and for the unexpired term preserved the continuity of said board and permitted the terms, as originally fixed, to continue, that is, the term of two members of said board shall begin on the first Monday in January of even numbered years, divisible by four, and the terms of three members to begin in even numbered years, not divisible by four. That arrangement, then, continuing until now would cause the terms of three members to end on the first Monday in January, 1918, and the successors of said members shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November in this year.

In Opinion No. 596, rendered to Hon. H. W. Cherrington, prosecuting attorney, Gallia county, on September 6, 1917, this department held that outside of the first election in a township, village or newly created school district, there is no authority in our school laws to elect a member of a board of education for a term other than four years, and without repeating the language of said opinion and that you may have the same before you, I am enclosing a copy of same herewith.

You are, therefore, advised that at the election to be held November 6th of this year, there shall be elected three members of the board of education in said district, and section 5018-1 G. C. provides that where the names of several persons are grouped together upon the ballots, as candidates for the same office, the ballots shall contain, immediately above the names of such candidates, the words "vote for not more than _____." The blank space shall be filled in with the number representing the persons who may lawfully be elected to such office. In this case the word "three" shall be written in the blank space and three members will be elected who will take their office on the first Monday in January, 1918. It is merely a matter of calculation from your minutes to ascertain which are the three members to be succeeded, and the other two being members, who were either originally duly elected or appointed, will serve until their successors are duly elected and qualified, and their successors will be elected at the November election in 1919 and will begin their terms on the first Monday in January, 1920.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—WHEN THEY MAY ERECT BRIDGES—VACATION OF STREETS.

1. County commissioners have authority to erect bridges in villages or cities, provided the bridges are located upon state or county roads running into or through the village or city, but they have no authority to erect a bridge upon a street laid out for the use and benefit of the village or city.

2. A county and village can change the location of a bridge from one street to another and vacate that part of the street upon which the bridge originally stood and which will no longer be used for public travel, provided that said streets are either county or state roads as well as streets.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1917.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 12, 1917, in which you enclose a copy of letter received by you from W. W. Pierson, solicitor of the village of Girard, and ask my opinion in reference to a matter set out in Mr. Pierson's letter. Your communication reads as follows:

> "Enclosed is a copy of a letter from W. W. Pierson, solicitor of the village of Girard, in which he raises the question which is substantially as follows:
> Can the county commissioners construct a bridge along Main street across the Mahoning river at Girard, and thereby destroy the bridge on the next parallel street, to wit: West Liberty street?
> This point is not real clear in Mr. Pierson's letter. However, I understand that the construction of a bridge in Main street across the river would destroy the approaches to the present West Liberty street bridge. If this were not so, there would be no question but what a bridge could be constructed as desired, and West Liberty street bridge could be left as it is.
> I am unable to find any authority under our laws, which would permit the commissioners to abandon the Liberty street bridge.
> Would appreciate your opinion in this matter."

The facts, as I gather them from your communication and from that received by you from the solicitor of the village of Girard, are as follows:

Through the village of Girard there runs the Mahoning river, and parallel with the Mahoning river a number of railroad tracks. Also running through the village of Girard are West Liberty street and Main street, running parallel with each other and across the railroad tracks and the Mahoning river at or about right angles. On West Liberty street there is now a bridge crossing the Mahoning river, said street crossing said railroad tracks at grade. Said West Liberty street is a county road formerly called the Weathersfield road. Main street was laid out as a street by the village of Girard and terminates at the said railroad tracks.

The county commissioners and the railroad company are desirous of erecting an overhead bridge both across the tracks of said railroad company and the Mahoning river, but in doing this it is advisable to locate the bridge on Main street, rather than on West Liberty street, where it is now located. However, the railroad company will not join in this matter unless the crossing at West Liberty street can be abandoned. In the erection of the bridge at Main street it will be necessary to destroy the approaches to the present West Liberty street bridge.

The question now is as to whether the county commissioners can legally proceed with the erection of said bridge on Main street under the facts above set forth. To answer same it will be necessary for me to note two sections of the General Code, which are very similar in their provisions.

Section 2421 G. C. provides:

> "The commissioners shall construct and keep in repair necessary bridges over streams and public canals on state and county roads * * * except only such bridges as are wholly in cities and villages having by law the right to demand, and do demand and receive part of the bridge fund levied upon property therein. If they do not demand and receive a portion of the bridge tax, the commissioners shall construct and keep in repair all bridges in such cities and villages. The granting of the demand, made by any city or village for its portion of the bridge tax, shall be optional with the board of commissioners."

Inasmuch as there is no provision of the General Code conferring upon cities and villages the right to demand and receive a part of the bridge fund, that part of the section which refers to that matter is of no particular force or effect.

Section 7557 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners shall cause to be constructed and kept in repair, as provided by law, all necessary bridges in villages and cities not having the right to demand and receive a portion of the bridge fund levied upon property within such corporations, on all state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, transferred and abandoned turnpikes and plank roads, which are of general and public utility, running into or through such village or city."

From both of these sections it is to be noted that the county commissioners shall cause to be constructed all necessary bridges in villages and cities on all state and county roads.

In connection with this matter I desire to call attention to two decisions of our courts. One is City of Piqua v. Geist, 59 O. S. 163. The court in this case sets forth the law as follows, in the syllabus:

> "Under the amendment made February 8, 1894, of section 860, Revised Statutes (91 Laws 19) county commissioners are not required to construct and keep in repair bridges over natural streams and public canals, on streets established by a city or village for the use and convenience of the municipality, and not a part of a state or county road, though the city or village receive no part of the bridge fund levied on the property within the same. It is the duty of the city or village to construct and keep in repair such bridges, and is liable in damages to one injured by its neglect to do so."

In this case the court was construing section 860 R. S., which afterwards became section 2421 G. C.

In City of Newark v. Jones, 16 O. C. C. 563, the court found in the syllabus as follows:

> "In villages and cities not having the right to demand and receive any portion of the bridge fund levied upon property within such corporation, > the county commissioners have the authority and duty to construct and maintain all necessary bridges in state and county roads, free turnpikes and plank roads, which are of general and public utility, running into and through any such village or city, but they have no authority to construct bridges in the streets, as such, of such villages and cities."

From a reading of the statutes above quoted and the decisions of the courts as herein set out, it is quite evident that the county commissioners are authorized to construct the bridge about which you inquire, on Main street of the village, providing Main street is a state or county road. However, the facts set out in your communication show that Main street, as far as it runs, namely, to the railroad tracks, is not a state or county road, but merely a street laid out by the village of Girard. Hence from the above quoted decisions and statutes, the county commissioners would have no authority to erect a bridge upon Main street.

Further, I desire to call your attention to the fact that from the ending of Main street at the railroad tracks to Marshall road, there is neither a street nor a county road. Therefore, neither the county nor the village would have authority to construct a bridge over this route. From this fact it develops that the county commissioners will of necessity be compelled to take an initial step precedent to the step which they take in reference to the building of the bridge, namely, they will have to lay out a county road extending Marshall road across the Mahoning river and the railroad tracks, until it at least joins with Main street, or further if it should be desired. It is my opinion that the road laid out should extend at least as far as the approach will extend on Main street.

That the county commissioners have full authority to lay out a county road which extends through an incorporated village or city, is clear from a number of cases.

In Wells v. McLaughlin et al., 17 Ohio 99, the court held as follows in the syllabus:

> "The power conferred upon county commissioners to lay out and establish county roads authorizes them to locate a road within or through an incorporated town or city."

This principle was affirmed in Lewis v. Laylin, 46 O. S. 663, 672.

In laying out this county highway, the county commissioners would proceed under and by virtue of section 6860 et seq. .G C. After the county road has been established, it is quite evident, under the above quoted sections and decisions, that the county commissioners will have authority to erect this bridge on Main street, which will then not only be a street, but will also be a county road.

After the bridge is erected at Main street, the municipal authorities and the county commissioners could, and, as I understand it from their agreement with the railroad company, would be compelled to vacate that part of West Liberty street no longer needed. The municipal authorities could vacate it in so far as the highway partakes of the nature of a street, provision for which is made in section 3725 et seq. G. C.

However, it was held in Railway v. Cummins, 53 O. S. 683, without report, that a municipal corporation cannot abandon a county road which by annexation has been brought within its limits. Under this holding of the court it will be necessary also for the county commissioners to vacate this part of the highway under the provisions of section 6860 et seq. G. C.

It must be remembered that the proposed improvement is not only the erection of a bridge across a river, as provided in sections 2421 and 7557 G. C., but it is more particularly the erection of a high level bridge across the railroad tracks, in order to eliminate the grade crossing. This compels us to take note of another section of the General Code, namely, section 8863 et seq.

> "If the council of a municipal corporation in which a railroad or railroads, and a street or other public highway cross each other at a grade or otherwise, or the commissioners of a county in which a railroad or railroads and a public road or highway cross each other at grade, and the directors of the railroad company or companies are of the opinion that the security and convenience of the public require alterations in such crossing, or the approaches thereto, or in the location of the railroad or railroads or the public way, or the grades thereof, so as to avoid a crossing at grade, or that such crossing should be discontinued with or without building a new way in substitution therefor, and if they agree as to the alterations they may be made as hereinafter provided; provided, however, that the commissioners of a county shall have the same powers with respect to that part of a state, county or township road which lies within the limits of a municipal corporation as are conferred upon municipal corporations to alter or require to be altered, any railroad crossings, or to require any improvement in connection therewith to be made, and to apportion the cost thereof between the county and such railroad or railroads, as is provided in sections 8874, 8875, 8876, 8877, 8878, 8879, 8880, 8881, 8882, 8883, 8884, 8885, 8886, 8887, 8888, 8889, 8890, 8891, 8892, 8893 and 8894, of this chapter."

This section gives the county commissioners full authority to build a high level bridge upon a state, county or township road which lies within the limits of a municipal corporation. In doing this, they have the same powers given to them that are given to the council of a municipal corporation, either to agree amicably with a railroad company in the matter of the erection of a high level bridge, and by so doing eliminate a grade crossing, or by compelling the railroad company so to do.

On account of the fact that this proposed improvement involves the erection of a high level bridge and the elimination of a grade crossing, it will be necessary for the commissioners to follow the provisions of section 8863 et seq. G. C., in making the improvement.

In passing, I desire to note a suggestion made by the village solicitor, that the question of issuing bonds will soon be put up to the voters of Liberty township and the village of Girard. While I am not asked for an opinion in reference to this matter, yet I wish to state it will be well to note carefully the provisions of section 8863 et seq. G. C. in the matter of paying the cost and expense of the erection of a high level bridge.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—MAY CONTRIBUTE TO MAINTENANCE OF THE ROADS OF VILLAGE—STREETS DISTINGUISHED—MAY BUILD ROADS IN MUNICIPALITY.

1. Under section 7467 G. C., township trustees have authority, by agreement with a village, to contribute to the maintenance and repair of the ROADS of the village, but not of the streets as such, viz., the highways of a village which were laid out by the village as streets.

2. Township trustees have authority, under section 3298-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 73) to construct or build roads in a municipality, but they have no authority to build or construct public highways within a municipality when they are streets as such, viz., those laid out by the municipality for its use and benefit.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1917.

HON. SUMNER E. WALTERS, Prosecuting Attorney, Van Wert, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of recent date which reads in part as follows:

> "Under the present highway laws of the state have township trustees authority to improve that portion of a public highway which lies within the limits of a municipality?"

In submitting your question you use two terms which are very broad and somewhat uncertain as to the meaning which should be given them. These two terms are "improve" and "public highway." The word "improve" is broad enough to include both construction and reconstruction of public highways as well as the maintenance and repair of the same; while the term "public highway" is broad enough to include the streets of a municipality which have been laid out by the municipality as streets as well as to include those streets which are also state, county or township roads. The fact that these two terms are very broad and inclusive must be kept in mind in giving an answer to your question.

Let us first consider the matter of the improvement of the public highways of a municipality, limiting the word "improvement" to a mere maintenance and repair. Answering your question in this limited sense we turn to sections 7464, 7465, 7466 and 7467 G. C., but more especially to section 7467 G. C. Without quoting these sections in full let it suffice for me to say that they have to do peculiarly and particularly with the question of maintenance and repair of public highways and have nothing to do with the construction or building of highways.

Section 7467 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The state, county and township shall each maintain their respective roads as designated in the classification hereinabove set forth; provided, however, that either the county or township may, by agreement between the county commissioners and township trustees, contribute to the repair and maintenance of the roads under the control of the other. The state, county or township or any two or more of them may by agreement expend any funds available for road construction, improvement or repair upon roads inside of a village, or a village may expend any funds available for street improvement upon roads outside of the village and leading thereto."

From the provisions of this section it is quite evident that the township trustees may by agreement with the village expend money upon roads within a village, but from the provisions of this section as a whole it is quite evident that this has reference merely to a contribution by the township trustees towards the maintenance and repair of the public highways inside a village. It does not give nor aim to give the township trustees authority to go into a village and take the initiative in the matter of the construction or building of the streets of the village, whether they be streets proper—that is, laid out as such by the village—or whether they be not only streets but township, county or state roads as well. But it does give to township trustees authority to contribute, out of their funds available for the construction, improvement or repair of roads, to the maintenance and repair of the roads inside a village. Inasmuch as the word "roads" is used in said section 7467, it is my opinion that this section is limited to a contribution to the maintenance and repair of state, county or township roads within a village, and not to streets as such, namely, those laid out by the village as streets, for its use and benefit. This section contemplates that the village assumes the initiative and the jurisdiction over the maintenance and repair of its streets, and that the township trustees by agreement merely contribute out of their funds for that purpose. It must also be remembered further that the provisions of this section are limited to villages and do not apply to cities. Such, I take it, are the powers granted and the limitations set out in said section 7467, in so far as it applies to your question.

Let us next inquire as to whether the township trustees under any circumstances can enter a municipality and assume jurisdiction over the matter of improving the streets of the municipality, whether they be streets as such or are as well township, county and state roads. I am now using the word 'improvement" in its broad sense as including not only maintenance and repair of public highways, but also the construction or building of the same.

Section 3298-1 G. C. sets out the general jurisdiction of township trustees over public highways, and reads as follows:

> "The board of trustees of any township shall have power, as hereinafter provided, to construct, reconstruct, resurface or improve any public road or roads, or part thereof, under their jurisdiction. Such trustees shall also have the power to construct, reconstruct, resurface or improve any county road or inter-county highway or main market road within their township; provided, however, that in the case of a county road the plans and specifications for the proposed improvement shall first be submitted to the county commissioners of the county and shall receive their approval and in the case of an intercounty highway or main market road such plans and specifications shall first be submitted to the state highway commissioner and shall receive his approval. The township trustees shall have power to widen, straighten or change the direction of any part of a road in connection with the proceedings for its improvement."

That is, the trustees of a township have power (1) to construct, reconstruct, resurface or improve any public road or roads or part thereof under their jurisdiction; (2) to construct, reconstruct, resurface or improve any county road or intercounty highway or main market road within their township.

Before determining the question as to whether the provisions of this section are broad enough to give township trustees jurisdiction over the streets of a municipality in the improvement of the same, using "streets" in its broad sense as including streets proper, as well as streets which are also township, county or state roads, and also using the word "improve" in its broad sense, let us note what authority county commissioners have in the improvement of public highways of a municipality. Such a consideration may assist us in answering your question.

Section 6949 G. C. (107 O. L. 69) provides that:

> "The board of county commissioners may construct a proposed road improvement into, within or through a municipality."

However, before they can do this, the consent of the municipality must be given. This section and those which follow map out the complete course to be followed by the county commissioners and the municipality in said construction.

Section 6949 G. C., above quoted, and the sections which immediately follow give authority to the county commissioners to construct a proposed road improvement into, within or through a municipality; that is, county commissioners may construct a road improvement into, within or through a municipality, provided it is an extension of an improvement outside the municipality, and provided further that the consent of the municipality is first secured. It is to be noted in this section that the power and authority of the county commissioners are not limited to villages, but they have jurisdiction in cities as well, inasmuch as the word "municipalities" is used.

With this in mind, let us return to the question of the authority of the township trustees to improve a public highway within the limits of a municipality, using the word "improve" to mean construct or build. First let me say that there is no provision whatever in reference to the powers and duties of township trustees within a municipality, such as is above set out relative to county commissioners.

The question then immediately arises, have the township trustees any such powers as those which pertain to county commissioners as set out in section 6949 et seq. G. C., supra. This question is to be answered by considering whether the above provisions relating to county commissioners are a grant of power or a limitation upon the power which the county commissioners had before the enactment of said provisions. If sections 6949 et seq., supra, are strictly a grant of power to the county commissioners, then it would seem that the legislature did not intend that the township trustees should have any such power or authority, or it would have at the same time granted the power specifically to township trustees. However, if sections 6949 et seq. are a limitation of the power already possessed by the county commissioners, then no such conclusion could be drawn.

Inasmuch as the county commissioners have always had the right and authority to enter a municipality in order to improve the county highways located within the municipality, it is my opinion that the provisions of section 6949 et seq. should be considered as a limitation upon the power and authority of county commissioners, rather than a grant, for they cannot enter a municipality for the purposes of said sections, namely, extending a road improvement into, through or within the municipality, unless they first secure the consent of the municipality itself.

I am further of the view that the same law would apply to the power and authority of the township trustees to enter a municipality for the purpose of improving the public roads thereof, as would apply to the power and authority of the county commissioners to enter a municipality for the same purpose.

Hence, since the township trustees are given no particular power and authority under the highway laws of the state, it will be necessary for us to note what the law has been as construed by the courts in reference to this matter.

In Wells v. McLaughlin, 17 Ohio Rep. 99, the court held as follows: (Syll.)

> "The power conferred upon county commissioners, to lay out and establish county roads, authorizes them to locate a road within or through an incorporated town or city."

This principle was affirmed in Lewis v. Laylin, 46 O. S. 663, 672. In the third branch of the syllabus of Lewis v. Laylin, supra, we find the following principle of law stated:

> "County commissioners have authority under the two-mile assessment pike law to improve a state, county or township road, although the improvement embraces that part of the highway which lies within the limits of a municipal corporation."

We must note, however, that this is limited to the improvement of a state, county or township road.

In City of Newark v. Jones, 16 O. C. C. 563, the court say in the syllabus:

> "County commissioners have the authority and duty to construct and maintain all necessary bridges in state and county roads, turnpikes and plank roads, which are of general and public utility, running into and through any such village or city, but they have no authority to construct bridges in the streets as such of such villages and cities."

To the same point we might cite:

> City of Piqua v. Geist, 59 O. S. 163.

While the above decisions relate to the power and authority of county commissioners, yet, as said before, I am of the opinion that the same principles of law would also apply to township trustees.

Therefore, in view of all the above the answer to your question is fairly clear to the effect:

(1) That the township trustees have no authority whatever to enter into a municipality and construct or build streets which are streets as such merely—that is, those which were laid out by the municipality for its own use and benefit; but they have authority to enter into a municipality and construct or build the public highways thereof which are not only streets but also township roads.

(2) That the township trustees have authority, by agreement with a village, to contribute to the maintenance and repair of the roads of the village—that is township, county or state roads—but they have no authority to contribute to the maintenance and repair of streets as such, viz., those laid out by the municipality for its own use and benefit.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—WILLIAMS COUNTY—LIMITATION OF AMOUNT OF BONDS THAT MAY BE ISSUED UNDER SECTION 6929 G. C.

Under the provisions of section 6929 General Code, as amended 107 O. L., 69 (101), the county commissioners are not authorized to issue the bonds therein provided for in an amount greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the estimated compensation, damages, cost and expense of the improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 22, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

"RE:—Bonds of Williams county, Ohio, in the sum of $38,500.00 for the purpose of meeting the cost and expense of constructing the improvement of Stryker-Evansport road, I. C. H. 312. Petitioned for by J. W. Sloan.

I have made an examination of the transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Williams county and other officers relating to the above bond issues, and I am returning the same herewith without my approval.

The proceedings relating to this bond issue are regular and in conformity with the provisions of the General Code, save in one particular. The road improvement in question was initiated by a resolution adopted by the board of county commissioners of said county December 18, 1917, under the authority of section 6910 General Code, authorizing the board of county commissioners to initiate road improvements of this kind without petition. In this resolution the board of county commissioners directed the county surveyor to make such survey, plats, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications as the improvement might require, and thereafter such proceedings were had by the board of county commissioners that on August 20, 1917, said board approved and adopted said plans, profiles, specifications and estimates for the improvement.

By additional transcript furnished by the county auditor at my request I am advised that the estimate of the aggregate amount necessary to pay compensation, damages, cost and expense of the improvement is the sum of $23,500. The resolution of the board of county commissioners providing for the issue of said bonds provides for the issue of the same in the aggregate sum of $38,500.00.

Section 6929 of the General Code, as it read at the time this road proceeding was initiated, provided authority in the board of county commissioners to sell bonds to meet the cost and expense of such a road improvement "in the aggregate amount necessary to pay the estimated cost and expense of such improvement." With respect to this particular point, section 6929 General Code, was amended in the White-Mulcahey act, which went into effect as the law June 28, 1917, so as to provide that the board of county commissioners may sell the bonds of the county "in an amount not greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the estimated compensation, damages, cost and expense of the improvement."

Whether we apply these provisions of section 6929 General Code as they read at the time this improvement was initiated, or the provisions of the section as amended and as in force at the time the resolution of the board of county commissioners providing for this bond issue was adopted, it must be said in either event that the legislature did not contemplate any authority in the board of county commissioners to issue and sell bonds of the county in an amount exceeding the total estimate of the cost and expense of said improvement approved by such board.

For the reason, therefore, that this issue of bonds is in an amount in excess of the estimate of the cost and expense of this improvement, I am unable to approve the same. Though not now deciding the point, I am inclined to the view that the legislation of the board of county commissioners providing for this bond issue may be sustained as valid to the extent of the bonds issued thereunder not in excess of said estimate (Smith v. Village of Rockford, 9 C. C. N. S. 465); but inasmuch as your resolution providing for the purchase of this issue does not indicate any intention or desire on your part to purchase any part of this issue less than the whole amount thereof, I do not feel that I can do otherwise than to disapprove the proceedings providing for the issue, and to advise you not to purchase the bonds.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—WILLIAMS COUNTY—LIMITATION OF AMOUNT OF BONDS THAT MAY BE ISSUED UNDER SECTION 6929 G. C.

Under the provisions of section 6929 General Code as amended in 107 O. L. 69 (101), the county commissioners are not authorized to issue the bonds therein provided for in an amount greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the estimated compensation, damages, cost and expense of the improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 22, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE:—Bonds of Williams county, Ohio, in the sum of $25,000.00, for the purpose of meeting the cost and expense of constructing certain road improvements petitioned for by G. W. Cassell et al.

I am herewith returning without my approval the transcript of proceedings of the board of county commissioners and other officers of Williams county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue.

The proceedings relating to this bond issue are regular and in conformity with the provisions of the General Code, save in one particular. The road improvement in question was initiated by a petition filed June 10, 1916, signed by fifty-one per cent of the lot and land owners resident of said county to be especially taxed or assessed therefor.

Thereupon, after finding that said petition was signed by fifty-one per cent of the property owners to be assessed, the county commissioners directed the county surveyor to make such survey, plats, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications as the improvement might require, and thereafter such proceedings were had by the board of county commissioners that on May 28, 1917, said board approved and adopted said plans, profiles, specifications and estimates for the improvement.

By additional transcript furnished by the county auditor at my request, I am advised that the estimate of the aggregate amount necessary to pay compensation, damages, cost and expense of the improvement is the sum of $23,500.00. The resolution of the board of county commissioners providing for the issue of said bonds provides for the issue of the same in the aggregate sum of $25,000.00.

Section 6929 of the General Code, as it read at the time this road proceeding was initiated, provided authority in the board of county commissioners to sell bonds to meet the cost and expense of such a road improvement "in the aggregate amount necessary to pay the estimated cost and expense of such improvement." With respect to this particular point, section 6929 of the General Code was amended in the White-Mulcahey act, which went into effect as the law June 28, 1917, so as to provide that the board of county commissioners may sell the bonds of the county "in an amount not greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the estimated compensation, damages, cost and expense of the improvement."

Whether we apply these provisions of section 6929 General Code as they read at the time this improvement was initiated, or the provisions of the section as amended and as in force at the time the resolution of the board of county commissioners providing for this bond issue was adopted, it must be said in either event that the legislature did not contemplate any authority in the board of county commissioners to issue and sell bonds of the county in an amount exceeding the total estimate of the cost and expense of said improvement approved by such board.

For the reason, therefore, that this issue of bonds is in an amount in excess of the estimate of the cost and expense of this improvement, I am unable to approve the same.

Though not now deciding the point, I am inclined to the view that the legislation of the board of county commissioners providing for this bond issue may be sustained as valid to the extent of the bonds issued thereunder not in excess of said estimate (Smith v. Village of Rockford, 9 C. C. N. S. 465); but inasmuch as your resolution providing for the purchase of this issue does not indicate any intention or desire on your part to purchase any part of this issue less than the whole amount thereof, I do not feel that I can do otherwise than to disapprove the proceedings providing for the issue, and to advise you not to purchase the bonds.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—WILLIAMS COUNTY—LIMITATIONS OF AMOUNT OF BONDS THAT MAY BE ISSUED UNDER SECTION 6929 G. C.

Under the provisions of section 6929 General Code, as amended, 107 O. L. 69 (101), the county commissioners are not authorized to issue the bonds therein provided for in an amount greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the estimated compensation, damages, cost and expenses of the improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 22, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE:—Bonds of Williams county, Ohio, in the sum of $35,500.00, for the purpose of improving section "A" of the Montpelier-Jimtown road, initiated by a unanimous resolution of the board of county commissioners, November 27, 1916.

I am herewith returning without my approval the transcript of proceedings of the board of county commissioners and other officers of Williams county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue.

The proceedings relating to this bond issue are regular and in conformity with the provisions of the General Code, save in one particular. The road improvement in question was initiated by a resolution adopted by the board of county commissioners of said county November 27, 1916, under the authority of section 6910 General Code, authorizing the board of county commissioners to initiate road improvements of this kind without petition. In this resolution the board of county commissioners directed the county surveyor to make such survey, plats, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications as the improvement might require, and thereafter such proceedings were had by the board of county commissioners that on May 28, 1917, said board approved and adopted said plans, profiles, specifications and estimates for the improvement.

By additional transcript furnished by the county auditor at my request I am advised that the estimate of the aggregate amount necessary to pay compensation, damages, cost and expense of the improvement is the sum of $34,082.00. The resolution of the board of county commissioners providing for the issue of said bonds provides for the issue of the same in the aggregate sum of $35,500.00.

Section 6929 of the General Code, as it read at the time this road proceeding was initiated, provided authority in the board of county commissioners to sell bonds to meet the cost and expense of such a road improvement "in the aggregate amount necessary to pay the estimated cost and expense of such improvement."

With respect to this particular point, section 6929 General Code was amended in the White-Mulcahey act, which went into effect as the law June 28, 1917, so as to provide that the board of county commissioners may sell the bonds of the county "in an amount not greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the estimated compensation, damages, cost and expense of the improvement."

Whether we apply these provisions of section 6929 General Code as they read at the time this improvement was initiated, or the provisions of the section as amended and as in force at the time the resolution of the board of county commissioners providing for this bond issue was adopted, it must be said in either event that the legislature did not contemplate any authority in the board of county commissioners to issue and sell bonds of the county in an amount exceeding the total estimate of the cost and expense of said improvement approved by such board.

For the reason, therefore, that this issue of bonds is in an amount in excess of the estimate of the cost and expense of this improvement, I am unable to approve the same. Though not now deciding the point, I am inclined to the view that the legislation of the board of county commissioners providing for this bond issue may be sustained as valid to the extent of the bonds issued thereunder not in excess of said estimate (Smith v. Village of Rockford, 9 C. C. N. S. 465); but inasmuch as your resolution providing for the purchase of this issue does not indicate any intention or desire on your part to purchase any part of this issue less than the whole amount thereof, I do not feel that I can do otherwise than to disapprove the proceedings providing for the issue, and to advise you not to purchase the bonds.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROPRIATION—PERSONAL SERVICE—WHERE AN APPROPRIATION IS FOR SPECIFIC NUMBER OF ASSISTANTS—HEAD OF DEPARTMENT MAY NOT EXPEND SAME FOR A LESSER NUMBER OF ASSISTANTS WITHOUT AUTHORITY OF CONTROLLING BOARD.

Where one of the items of a gross personal service appropriation in the budget bill of 1917 is "19 assistants—$22,800.00" the head of the department may not, without application to the controlling board, expend the moneys covered thereby for the compensation of a lesser number of assistants than that designated; but must assign to each position for which the legislature appropriated an adequate salary, regard being had to the grade of the service, etc.; but upon application by the head of the department the controlling board, acting under section 4 of the appropriation act, may authorize the head of the department to expend the amount covered by the item for the compensation of a lesser number of assistants.

An appropriation in gross to a department for personal service, itemized in part by allowances for the payment of "19 assistants" and the like, and coupled with the authority of the controlling board to authorize the total amount appropriated to be expended otherwise than in accordance with the itemization is "specific" within the meaning of article II, section 22 of the Constitution. The constitutional provision does not require that a separate appropriation be made for the salary of each person employed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 22, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date in which you request my opinion as follows:

"Article II, section 22, of the Ohio Constitution, provides that 'No money shall be drawn from the treasury except in pursuance of a specific appropriation made by law; and no appropriation shall be made for a longer period than two years.'

House bill No. 584 carries an item for the department of state fire marshal, as follows: '19 assistants—$22,800.00.'

It is now the desire of the state fire marshal to employ only eighteen assistants and distribute the amount appropriated for nineteen assistants as follows:

1 assistant----------$2,400.00 per annum
17 assistants, each----------$1,200.00 per annum

Can this be legally done? In other words, do you consider '19 assistants—$22,800.00' a specific appropriation? If you hold that it is a specific appropriation, then how much of this appropriation is each of the nineteen assistants entitled to?"

Answering your first question, I beg to state that the item which you quote from the appropriation bill does not purport to be an appropriation at all, much less a specific appropriation. The personal service items in house bill No. 584, passed by the last session of the general assembly, have been as a matter of practice classified as "items" instead of as "appropriations," which was the case with the budget bill of the preceding session. The only "appropriation" involved in your question is one of $60,150.00 in amount for the year 1917-1918, and a corresponding amount for the year 1918-1919. (See 107 O. L., pages 212, 288.)

If the $22,800.00 item were really an appropriation, then the principles of the opinion of my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, addressed to you under date of April 27, 1915 (Opinions of Attorney-General for that year, volume 1, page 564), would come into play and dictate to your second general question an answer to the effect that such an appropriation for the salaries of nineteen assistants could not lawfully be expended for the salaries of eighteen assistants, and that while the head of the department necessarily has discretion in dividing up such an appropriation among the number of clerks for the compensation of whom it is made, that discretion is so limited as that he must assign to each of the nineteen positions which the legislature had in mind a substantial salary, having regard to the grade of work to be performed and other like factors which must be assumed to have been in the minds of the legislature.

The general budget bill of 1915 provided for this matter by specific machinery furnished by section 9 thereof (106 O. L. 828), dealt with in the opinion of my predecessor to the industrial commission of Ohio under date of September 1, 1916 (volume 2, 1916 (volume 2, Reports of the Attorney-General for that year, page 1495).

As pointed out, however, the present bill is framed upon a theory entirely different from either the partial appropriation bill of 1915 or the general budget bill of that year, inasmuch as the appropriations for personal service have been treated in the manner which I have described, instead of being made as distinct appropriations and placed in the second column of figures found in the bill. This treatment of the general subject-matter of personal service appropriations made unnecessary any such provision as was found in section 9 of the general budget bill of 1915; for the extent to which the specification of items set forth in the first column of the bill is controlling and the manner in which a variation therefrom may be authorized is expressly provided for by section 4 of the appropriation bill (107 O. L. 350). This section is lengthy and I assume that you are perfectly familiar with it. Therefore, I shall not quote it. Suffice it to say that in the first instance and without further authority, an item set forth in the first column of the appropriation bill is absolutely controlling upon the head of a department. Therefore, in the absence of any further action the principles of the opinion of April 27, 1915, above referred to, would apply and the answer hereinbefore abstracted would have to be given to your second question.

However, if application is properly made to the controlling board, as is also provided in section 4, and that board approves the departure from the itemized classification of purposes sought by the application and grants the authority prayed for, the proposed change in the plan of expenditure may be made.

Completely answering your second question, then, I beg to advise that the controlling board, upon application, may authorize the state fire marshal to do as he desires to do; but that without such authority the state fire marshal may not lawfully expend the $22,800.00 item for the salaries of nineteen assistants in the payment of the salaries of eighteen assistants, and that without such application to the controlling board he must assign to each of the nineteen positions for which the appropriation is made a substantial salary, to be determined upon the principles above referred to.

I have thus far not answered your question as to whether or not an appropriation for "19 assistants—$22,800.00" is a specific appropriation within the meaning of article II, section 22 of the Constitution, except by saying that it does not purport to be an appropriation at all, but merely one of the specifications of a larger appropriation of $60,150.00, which said larger appropriation is further amplified as to the purposes for which it may be expended by the power given to the controlling board by section 4 of the law. I have no disposition, however, to avoid answering your question in such a way. In my opinion, the appropriation which the legislature has made is a specific one and satisfies the constitutional requirement. That this is the case is demonstrable by referring to the legislative practice in the past but no exhaustive discussion of what this practice has been is necessary in the present instance. The $60,150.00 appropriation which has actually been made is distributed by a detailed itemization. The only way in which the legislature could have been more specific than it has been would be to fix the exact compensation of each person to be employed by the fire marshal. This it might conceivably do, but it may well stop short of this and give some discretion to the employing authority with respect to the amount of compensation without failing to be specific. The discretion is not absolute and the bill itself throws limitations about its exercise in many ways. Nor is the discretion of the controlling board absolute. The $60,150.00 appropriation can be expended only for personal service within the proper limits of the state fire marshal's department, no matter to what extent the controlling board authorizes the itemization thereof to be varied. In my opinion, a general appropriation of $60,150.00 to the fire marshal's department for personal service, without any such limitations except the one implied in the nature of the case, viz.: that the money must be spent for the proper purposes of the fire marshal's department and for personal service, would be specific enough to satisfy the constitutional requirement.

For these reasons your first question is answered in the affirmative.

Another way of putting the same thing is to say that the framers of the Constitution by requiring appropriations to be specific did not intend to deprive the legislature of the power of permitting the head of a department to fix the compensation of his subordinates. There are many permanent statutes in our Code granting this power, and no question has ever been raised as to their constitutionality.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROBATE DIVISION—OF CONSOLIDATED PROBATE AND COMMON PLEAS COURTS—COMPENSATION OF DEPUTIES, ETC.—BY WHOM FIXED—JUDGE IS EX OFFICIO CLERK—BY WHOM WRITS AND AFFIDAVITS SIGNED—DEPUTY CLERK MAY ADMINISTER OATHS IN CERTAIN MATTERS—SEAL—FEES—SALARY OF DEPUTIES FROM WHAT FUND PAYABLE—APPLICATION FOR ADDITIONAL ALLOWANCE—WHERE SAME SHOULD BE FILED.

1. Where the probate and common pleas courts of a county have been consolidated, the judge of the common pleas court having a probate division is authorized to fix the compensation or salary of the deputies, clerks, assistants, etc., in the probate division of that court.

2. In such consolidated court the judge thereof is ex-officio clerk of the probate division of said court and the clerk of the common pleas court does not become the clerk of the probate division.

3. All writs issued by such combined court would be signed by the clerk thereof. Affidavits would be signed by the officer authorized to issue the oath.

4. The deputy clerk of said probate division is authorized to administer oaths in all ministerial matters when necessary in the discharge of his duties. The deputy clerk cannot sign writs issuing out of said probate division except that writs required to be signed by the clerk can be signed "per" the deputy.

5. The seal of the probate division of said combined court, and not the seal of the court of common pleas, should be attached to writs issued from the probate division.

8. In the event it is found necessary to have an additional allowance for said probate division under section 2980-1 G. C., the application therefor should be filed by the judge of said combined courts in the court of common pleas, and such application should be heard before a foreign judge in the same manner as in any other cause in which the judge had a disqualifying interest.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 23, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Some time ago I received a request from you for written opinion upon certain questions arising out of the consolidation and combining of the probate court with the common pleas court, by virtue of the constitutional amendment authorizing same, and under sections 1604-1 et seq. G. C. which were acts of the legislature carrying into execution the constitutional provision. Some time prior to receipt of your request, I had a request from Hon. E. A. Scott, prosecuting attorney of Adams county, asking some questions on the same subject matter.

I am addressing an opinion to you covering the questions propounded by you and Mr. Scott, and will furnish the prosecuting attorney of Adams county with a copy of this opinion.

The questions may be stated as follows:

1. Where the probate and common pleas courts of a county have been combined and consolidated, who is authorized to fix the compensation or salary of the deputies, clerks, assistants, etc., in the probate division of that court?

2. Does the clerk of the common pleas court become clerk of the probate division of said court, and would the clerk be the proper officer to sign all writs, certificates and affidavits issued in the probate division of such combined and consolidated courts?

3. If the clerk of the common pleas court is not the proper officer to sign said documents, what would be the proper official signature to such writs and affidavits of said probate division?

4. Have the appointees of said probate division, namely, the deputies, clerks and assistants, authority to sign such writs, administer oaths and take affidavits?

5. Should the seal of the court of common pleas, in the custody of the clerk of said court, be attached to writs issued from the probate division?

6. Should the fees taxed for services in said probate division be those set forth in sections 1601, 1602 and 1603 G. C., or would they be taxed as provided for clerks in the common pleas court?

7. Would the salary for deputy hire, allowed by the county commissioners prior to such consolidation, be the salary for deputy hire in the probate division of the common pleas court after said courts are combined?

8. In the event it is found necessary to have an additional allowance for said probate division under section 2980-1 G. C., where should such application be filed and before what judge should it be heard?

The following sections of the Constitution and the General Code will have to be considered in the answering of the above questions:

Sec. 7 of Art. IV of the Constitution, adopted September 3, 1912, provides:

"Sec. 7. There shall be established in each county, a probate court, which shall be a court of record, open at all times, and holden by one judge, elected by the electors of the county, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and shall receive such compensation payable out of the county treasury, as shall be provided by law. Whenever ten per centum of the number of the electors voting for governor at the next preceding election in any county having less than sixty thousand population as determined by the next preceding federal census, shall petition the judges of the court of common pleas of any such county not less than ninety days before any general election for county officers, the judge of the court of common pleas shall submit to the electors of such county the question of combining the probate court with the court of common pleas, and such courts shall be combined and shall be known as the court of common pleas in case a majority of the electors voting upon such question vote in favor of such combination. Notice of such election shall be given in the same manner as for the election of county officers. Elections may be had in the same manner for the separation of such courts, when once combined."

To carry this provision into effect, the legislature (103 O. L. 960) passed the act found in the General Code under section numbers 1604-1 et seq., and under which courts of common pleas and probate courts of counties availing themselves of these provisions have been combined and consolidated.

Section 1604-1 G. C. provides for the requisite petition for submission of the question of combining the probate and common pleas courts.

Section 1604-3 G. C. provides in part as follows:

> "* * * * * * *
> If a majority of the votes cast at such an election shall be in favor of combining said courts, such courts shall stand combined and consolidated at the expiration of the term for which the probate judge has been elected in the county wherein such election has been held."

Section 1604-4 G. C. provides:

> "When the probate court and the court of common pleas have been combined there shall be established in the court of common pleas a probate division, and all matters whereof the probate court has jurisdiction by law shall be filed in and separately docketed in said probate division, and the resident judge of the court of common pleas, shall appoint the necessary deputies, clerks and assistants to have charge and perform the work incident to the probate division. The salaries of such deputies, clerks and assistants to be regulated by section 2980-1 of the General Code. Error may be prosecuted or appeals taken from said probate division to the court of appeals in all cases where the same lie to the court of common pleas in counties where such courts have not been combined."

Under the provisions of the Constitution and the above legislative enactments, in certain counties of this state the probate court and the court of common pleas have been combined and in the court of common pleas in such counties "a probate division" shall be established and "all matters wherof the probate court has jurisdiction by law shall be filed in and separately docketed in said probate division. Error may be prosecuted or appeals taken from said probate division to the court of appeals in all cases where the same lie to the court of common pleas in counties where such courts have not been combined."

It will be noted that there is no specific provision that the probate court in such counties is abolished; neither is it expressly stated that the common pleas court after such consolidation shall succeed to and be endowed with all the powers, duties and jurisdiction of the old probate court; yet I believe it is a fair inference, from the language used in section 1604-4 G. C., that the succession and endowment spoken of above was intended by the legislature. Now, since all of the provisions of the law regarding the probate court remain on the statute books without express change or repeal, I take it that all of the statutory law regarding probate courts and probate judges apply in the counties where there has been a consolidation of the two courts, save only as necessarily modified by the fact of consolidation and the establishment of the probate division in the court of common pleas.

It is my view then that in all the sections of the General Code which make provision regarding the probate court, wherever the term "probate judge" is found such words shall be read "the judge of the court of common pleas having a probate division," and wherever the words "probate court" are found in said statutes, such words shall be read "the court of common pleas having a probate division," except as herein noted.

So in my opinion the common pleas judge, as far as the probate division of his court is concerned, stands in the shoes of the probate judge, and to determine his powers and duties reference will have to be made to part first, title IV, chapter 6 of the General Code, entitled "Probate Court," sections 1580 et seq.

The act providing for the consolidation and combining of said courts, in section 4 thereof, now being section 1604-4 G. C., provides that the resident judge of the court of common pleas—

"shall appoint the necessary deputies, clerks and assistants to have charge and perform the work incident to the probate division. The salaries of such deputies, clerks and assistants to be regulated by section 2980-1 of the General Code."

Section 2978 G. C. provides:

"Each probate judge * * * shall charge and collect the fees, costs, percentages, allowances and compensation allowed by law * * *."

Section 2980 G. C. provides:

"On the twentieth of each November such officer shall prepare and file with the county commissioners a detailed statement of the probable amount necessary to be expended for deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks and other employes, except court constables, of their respective offices, showing in detail the requirements of their offices for the year beginning January 1st next thereafter with the sworn statement of the amount expended by them for such assistants for the preceding year. Not later than five days after the filing of such statement, the county commissioners shall fix an aggregate sum to be expended for such period for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes of such officer, except court constables, which sum shall be reasonable and proper, and shall enter such finding upon their journal."

"The aggregate sum so fixed by the county commissioners to be expended in any year for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes, except court constables, shall not exceed for any county auditor's office, county treasurer's office, probate judge's office, county recorder's office, sheriff's office, or office of the clerk of the courts, an aggregate amount to be ascertained by computing thirty per cent on the first two thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, forty per cent on the next eight thousand dollars or fractional part thereof and eighty-five per cent on all over ten thousand dollars, of the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected for the use of the county in any such office for official services during the year ending September thirtieth next preceding the time of fixing such aggregate sum; provided, however, that if at any time any one of such officers require additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, said officer may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas, of the county wherein such officer was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application and if, upon hearing the same said judge shall find that such necessity exists, he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salary of such deputy, deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes as may be required, and thereupon the board of county commissioners shall transfer from the general county fund, to such officers' fee fund, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay said salary or salaries.

Notice in writing of such application and the time fixed by such judge for the hearing thereof shall be served by the applicant, five days before said hearing upon the board of county commissioners of such county. And said board shall file in said proceeding their approval or disapproval of the allowance asked for and shall have the right to appear at such hearing and be heard thereon; and evidence may be offered.

When the term of an incumbent of any such office shall expire within the year for which such an aggregate sum is to be fixed, the county commissioners at the time of fixing the same, shall designate the amount of such aggregate sum which may be expended by the incumbent and the amount of such aggregate sum which may be expended by his successor for the fractional parts of such year."

In the case of those counties where at the last regular election it was voted to consolidate such courts, the commissioners of course at the time fixed had allowed a certain amount for deputy hire in the then existing probate court, and when said court was consolidated and combined with the common pleas court there probably was an unexpended balance in the fund remaining to the proabte court. It is my opinion that this balance would inure to the probate division of the common pleas court in such counties where said courts were combined.

I will address myself now to your specific questions:

1. Section 1604-4 G. C. specifically grants the authority to and imposes the duty upon the resident judge of the common pleas court having a probate division, to appoint the necessary deputies, etc. The act providing for the consolidation does not specifically state that such judge of the court of common pleas shall fix the salaries, but it does provide that such salaries shall be "regulated by section 2980-1 of the General Code."

Section 2981 G. C. authorizes the officers referred to in sections 2978 and 2980-1 G. C., which include probate judge, not only to appoint and employ the necessary deputies, etc., but to fix their compensation; and since it is my opinion that the common pleas court stands in the place of the probate judge, as far as the probate division of his court is concerned, it would follow that the power and duty of fixing the compensation of deputies, etc., in the probate court, which was formerly given the probate judge under section 2981 G. C., would devolve upon the common pleas judge, where the common pleas court had a probate division, and it would be his duty to fix the compensation or salary of the deputies, etc., in the probate division of his court.

2. Sec. 16 of Art. IV of the Constitution of Ohio provides:

"There shall be elected in each county, by the electors thereof, one clerk of the court of common pleas, who shall hold his office for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified. He shall, by virtue of his office, be clerk of all other courts of record held therein; but, the general assembly may provide, by law, for the election of a clerk, with a like term of office, for each or any other of the courts of record, and may authorize the judge of the probate court to perform the duties of clerk for his court, under such regulations as may be directed by law. Clerks of courts shall be removable for such cause and in such manner as shall be prescribed by law."

Since the probate court is a court of record (Railroad v. Belle Center, 48 O. S. 273), this section of the Constitution would, unless otherwise provided by law, constitute the clerk of the common pleas court the clerk of all other courts of record within the county. But since it is my view that the legislature intended that the provisions applying to probate courts, as referred to in chapter 6, supra, should, after a consolidation and combination of courts, as provided by law, remain in full force and effect, and that all provisions specifically applying to probate judges should be read as applying to the common pleas court having a probate division, I am of the opinion that the section of the Constitution above quoted has no such force or effect.

Section 1584 G. C. provides:

> "Each probate judge shall have the care and custody of the files, papers, books, and records belonging to the probate office. He is authorized to perform the duties of clerk of his own court. He may appoint a deputy clerk or clerks, each of whom shall take an oath of office before entering upon the duties of his appointment, and when so qualified, may perform the duties appertaining to the office of clerk of the court. Each deputy clerk may administer oaths in all cases when necessary, in the discharge of his duties. Each probate judge may take a bond with such surety from his deputy as he deems necessary to secure the faithful performance of the duties of his appointment."

Inasmuch as this section specifically authorizes the probate judge to perform the duties of clerk of his own court, it is my view that it imposes upon a common pleas judge of a court having a probate division the same duties and gives him the same authority. I am therefore of opinion that the judge of a common pleas court having a probate division is ex officio clerk of said probate division, and that the clerk of the court of common pleas would have no authority, as such clerk, to sign writs, certificates and affidavits issued in the probate division of such combined courts.

3. Since the judge of the common pleas court having a probate division is ex officio clerk of the probate division by virtue of section 1584 G. C., all writs of said probate division would be signed by said judge, as judge and ex officio clerk of the probate division of his court.

In the matter of affidavits, of course the officer administering the oath would attach his jurat to the affidavit sworn to and use whatever title designates his official character.

4. Under the provisions of section 1584 G. C., supra,

> "* * * Each deputy clerk may administer oaths in all cases when necessary, in the discharge of his duties. * * *"

So as far as administering oaths is concerned, the deputies are fully authorized, in the discharge of their duties, to act, and such deputy clerk or clerks under said section,

> "may perform the duties appertaining to the office of clerk of the court. * * *"

Section 9 G. C. provides that "a deputy, when duly qualified, may perform all and singular the duties of his principal."

In Warwick v. State of Ohio, 25 O. S. 21, it was held that a deputy clerk of the probate court has authority to administer oaths to parties making applications for marriage licenses, touching the merits of such applications, and perjury may be assigned upon such oaths. The decision was based on the fact that the administering of such oaths was regarded as ministerial and not as judicial duties.

Welch, J., referring to the fact that such duties were formerly imposed upon the clerk of the court of common pleas and at that time regarded as merely ministerial, says:

> "If they were ministerial in the hands of the clerk, they remained ministerial in the hands of the probate judge. In the absence of a deputy clerk, the probate judge is his own clerk, and responsible for acts done or omitted as such clerk, on the same principles applicable to other ministerial officers. The provision of law authorizing him to appoint a deputy clerk plainly implies that he is his own clerk—that he is both court and clerk; for there can be no deputy where there is no principal."

In State v. Metzger, 10 N. P. (N. S.) 97, the court says at page 106:

> "The judge of probate certainly cannot appoint a substitute for himself as judge. He occupies a dual position and undertakes dual functions. The performance of the clerical function is insured by placing upon him as an authorized official the clerical duty of doing that work and under the statute he is legally responsible for the performance of these duties."

It is therefore clear that a deputy cannot act in all matters enjoined upon the probate court. Whenever the acts enjoined are judicial, of course no one but the judge himself can perform the act; for example, in the case of Mellinger et al. v. Mellinger, 73 O. S. 221, the court held that the duties enjoined upon the probate court by section 5964 R. S. are judicial duties and cannot be performed by the deputy clerk of said court. Section 5964 R. S. is now sections 10570 et seq. G. C.

So it is my view that as to all ministerial duties imposed by law on the probate judge, his duly qualified deputies are authorized to act in his stead.

It might be well to call attention to a decision of the Franklin county common pleas court in 1897, in the case of Littleton v. Marshall, as found reported in 8 Ohio Dec. N. P. 672, wherein objection was raised to a summons issued by a clerk of the common pleas court, on the ground that it had not been signed by the clerk as required by law, but the clerk's signature was printed and signed "Per" with the signature of the clerk's deputy. Judge Pugh held that even a strict construction of the law would permit that the clerk's name could be written, printed or stamped at the end of the summons, and that the clerk's deputy signed his name after the printed name of the clerk, with a "Per," which proves an adoption of the printed signature by the clerk through his deputy. Further verification, says the court, was afforded by the seal of the clerk duly affixed. This case, which is the only reported decision, on the question therein involved, in Ohio, as far as I can find, might be considered in connection with the answer to the third question herein.

5. As to all writs, documents and other papers issued in the probate division of the combined courts, it is my view that the seal of the probate court should be used, and that there is no authority for the use of the seal of the court of common pleas. As hereinbefore said, I am of the opinion that wherever in the General Code the words "probate court" are found, they should be read "common pleas court, probate division," as applying to counties having such combined courts.

Section 31 G. C., providing what shall be engraved upon all official seals, reads in part as follows:

> "* * * The seal of the * * * probate court of each county, > shall * * * be one and three-fourths inches in diameter, and each, respectively, shall be surrounded by these words: * * * 'Probate Court ----------County, Ohio' (insert the name of the proper county)."

I believe that the seal above mentioned, instead of "Probate Court," as above shown, should be surrounded by these words: "Court of Common Pleas, Probate Division, ---------- County, Ohio" (insert the name of the proper county).

6. For the reason heretofore given, I hold that the fees taxed for services in said probate division of such combined courts are governed by sections 1601, 1602 and 1603 G. C., and that these sections should be read by substituting "judge of the court of common pleas having a probate division," wherever the words "probate judge" are found.

7. It appears from a mere reading of sections 2980 and 2980-1 G. C. that the legislature did not have the question of combined probate and common pleas courts in mind when said sections were passed; still under familiar principles of law they would have application to subsequently enacted legislation. Had the courts not been combined, the probate judge would have continued to pay salaries for deputy hire, etc., from the fund allowed him by the county commissioners, as we have determined that when the courts are consolidated the probate court continues on, although designated as the probate division of the common pleas court, and although the functions of probate judge are performed by the resident common pleas judge. As said common pleas judge stands in the shoes of the former probate judge, he would have the same right to expend the fund in question.

So it is my opinion that the salary for deputy hire, theretofore allowed prior to such consolidation, would be paid from the balance remaining of the aggregate sum so fixed by the county commissioners for deputy hire in the probate court. It is to be remembered that under section 2980 G. C. the commissioners fix an aggregate sum to be expended for the year beginning January 1 next after the statement required to be filed by the county officer, and the amount of such aggregate sum is fixed under section 2980-1 G. C., subject to the additional allowance therein provided for.

The county commissioners have nothing to do with fixing the salaries of the deputies, although they do fix the aggregate sum that is to be expended, as before mentioned. Whatever sum is so fixed for deputy hire, etc., for a probate court in any one year, is the fund from which the deputies of such probate court would be paid, and if in that year under the law the probate court was consolidated and combined with the common pleas court, the salary of the deputies, etc., of the probate division of said combined court for that year would be paid out of the aggregate sum first fixed for the probate court.

8. It will be noted that section 2980-1 G. C. provides among other things that if at any time any of the county officers referred to required additional allowance to carry on the business of the office, said officer may make application—

> "to a judge of the court of common pleas, of the county wherein such officer was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application and if, upon hearing the same said judge shall find that such necessity exists, he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salary of such deputy, * * *."

Repeating my former observation, that the common pleas judge of the consolidated court, so far as the statute relating to probate judges is concerned, occupies the same position as the probate judge did, it is my view that whenever it becomes necessary to have an additional allowance to take care of the expenses of the deputies and other employes in the probate division of such consolidated court, the common pleas judge of such combined court would file in the common pleas court his application for such additional allowance, in the manner and form as provided in section 2980-1 G. C., and that said application would be treated the same as if it had been filed by the probate judge prior to the consolidation of the courts. All the rules of law applicable to such proceedings would apply to this proceeding, and of course under familiar principles the common pleas judge could not pass upon his own case. It would become his duty to see that the application should be for hearing before a judge of the court of common pleas, called in to temporarily preside and hold court in that county, just the same as in any other matter pending in such court, wherein the local judge was disqualified or disabled.

In conclusion I might say that while the questions herein involved have been under consideration, it has been brought to my attention that in the two counties which have availed themselves of the law permitting a consolidation of the probate and common pleas courts, the judges of such courts have interpreted the law, at least as to some of the questions herein involved, especially relating to the one whether or not the clerk of the court of common pleas was or was not the clerk of the probate division of the combined court, and have been proceeding in these matters along the lines indicated in this opinion. The practical interpretation of doubtful statutes by contemporaneous officials is entitled to some weight, and I have given that fact due consideration in reaching the conclusion in those matters herein.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 23, 1917.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—A few days ago you submitted to this department an abstract of title covering the following premises, situated in the county of Franklin and in the state of Ohio, and bounded and described as follows:

"Being a part of tract 'C' set off in partition to William N. King in the case of Elizabeth King an infant, etc., versus William N. King, Case No. 44686 in the court of common pleas of Franklin county, Ohio, and being of record in Complete Record 244, page 390, said court. Beginning at a point in the north line of King avenue distanced 102.76 feet west from the southwest corner of Elizabeth J. to a point in the north line of said McMillen land, being the south line of the lands of the Ohio State University, which said point is distanced 352.76 feet westwardly from an iron pipe in said north line of said McMillen land, which said pipe is placed in said line on the line of the west line of Perry street produced northwardly; thence westwardly from said point 268.42 feet to a point in said line, being the northwest corner of said tract 'C' as designated on the plat and report of the commissioners in said partition proceedings; thence southerly parallel with the west line of Perry street produced northwardly as aforesaid and the west line of Perry street, south 3 degrees 14' west 1401.25 feet to a point in the north line of King avenue distanced 268.42 feet westwardly from the place of beginning, thence eastwardly with said north line of King avenue 268.42 feet to the place of beginning, being a strip or parcel of ground 268.42 feet in width off of the west side of said tract 'C' in said partition, as designated and delineated on the plat filed with said commissioners' report."

With the abstract you also submitted a deed covering the same piece of property wherein Mary Horton King, widow, deeds said property to the state of Ohio.

I have carefully examined said abstract dated September 17, 1917, and find that the title to the premises described is in the name of Mary Horton King. The deed submitted covenants that Mary Horton King is lawfully seized of the premises and that said premises are free and clear from all encumbrances except all taxes and assessments due and payable after June, 1917.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that if this deed is accepted it will fully convey the title to said premises to the state of Ohio, free and clear from all encumbrances except the taxes above noted, which, under the form of deed submitted, will have to be paid by the state.

DEPOSITION—IN CRIMINAL CASE—WHERE SAME MAY BE TAKEN.

1. A deposition in a criminal case may be taken within or without the state of Ohio.
2. A deposition in a criminal case cannot be taken without the state of Ohio when the defendant is in prison.
3. A deposition of a non-resident of Ohio may be taken within the state of Ohio, whether the defendant is imprisoned or not.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 23, 1917.

HON. JARED P. HUXLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your request for my opinion you state:

"We have a prisoner in our county jail charged with first degree murder, the case being assigned for trial for November 12th. I have reason to believe that the defendant's attorneys are about to file an application to the court for a commission to take depositions of witnesses who reside in or about Henderson, Kentucky. I do not know whether they will attempt to take these depositions at Henderson or whether they will attempt to take them at Cincinnati or some other point within the state of Ohio.

Under the new law, passed at the last session of the legislature, to amend sections 13668 and 13668-1 of the General Code, I would like to have your opinion as to whether or not these depositions of witnesses who do not live within this state could possibly be taken by bringing them into the state for the sole purpose of taking the depositions; also, whether in your opinion there is any possibility of them having the right to take the depositions out of the state and taking the defendant out of the state for the purpose of being present when these depositions are taken."

"Sec. 13668. When an issue of fact is joined upon an indictment and material witness for the defendant or for the state resides out of the state, or, residing within the state, is sick or infirm or about to leave the state, or is confined in prison, such defendant or the prosecuting attorney may apply in writing, to the court or the judge thereof in vacation, for a commission to take the deposition of such witness or witnesses. Such commission shall not be granted and said order shall not be made until there is filed with the clerk of said court an affidavit stating in substance the evidence sought to be secured by deposition, and that it is competent, relevant and material and that the defendant is not confined in prison or, if confined in prison, that the deposition is not to be taken outside of the state of Ohio. If it appear to the court, or judge, upon such application supported by said affidavit that the evidence sought to be secured by deposition is relevant, competent and material and that the defendant is not confined in prison, or, if confined in prison, that the deposition is not to be taken outside of the state of Ohio, the court or judge shall grant such commission and make an order stating in what manner and for what length of time notice shall be given to the prosecuting attorney or to the defendant before such witness or witnesses shall be examined.

Sec. 13668-1. When the deposition is to be taken in the state of Ohio and such commission is granted, and the defendant is confined in prison, the sheriff or deputy shall be ordered by the court or judge to take the defendant to the place of the taking of such deposition and have him before the officer at the taking of such deposition. Such sheriff or deputy shall be reimbursed for actual reasonable traveling expenses, for himself and the defendant, so incurred, the bills for the same, upon approval by the county commissioners, to be paid from the county treasury on the warrant of the county auditor. Such sheriff shall receive as fees therefor one dollar for each day in attendance thereat. Such fees and traveling expenses shall be taxed and collected as other fees and costs in the case."

That is, when an issue of fact is properly joined upon an indictment and a material witness, either for the state or for the defendant, resides out of the state, or, if such material witness resides within the state and is sick, infirm, about to leave the state or is confined in prison, then and in either of such events the defendant, or the prosecuting attorney, as the case may be, may apply in writing to the court or to the judge of the court in vacation for a commission to take the deposition of such witness or witnesses. Before such commission is granted by the court, the party asking for same shall file with the clerk of such court an affidavit which states in substance the evidence sought to be secured by the taking of such deposition, and the affidavit must also state that such evidence is competent, relevant and material to the issue thus joined. The affidavit must further state whether or not the defendant is confined in prison and if the defendant is confined in prison then the affidavit must state that the deposition is not to be taken outside of the state of Ohio. The court or judge, as the case may be, must, before such commission is granted to take such deposition, find that the evidence sought to be secured by such deposition is relevant, competent, and material and that the defendant is either confined in prison or not. If however, the court finds that the defendant is confined in prison, then the court must further find that the deposition is not to be taken outside of the state of Ohio. If, however, the court finds that the evidence sought to be secured by deposition is relevant, competent and material and that the defendant is confined in prison and that the deposition is not to be taken outside of the state of Ohio, then and in either of such events the court or judge, as the case may be, shall grant such commission and at the time of the granting of such commission shall make an order, in which order the court or judge, as the case may be, shall state in what manner and for what length of time notice of the taking of such deposition shall be given to the prosecuting attorney or the defendant, as the case may be, and such witness or witnesses shall not be so examined until such notice is given pursuant to such order and until such commission is granted, as aforesaid. If such deposition is to be taken within the state of Ohio, and the commission has been granted, as aforesaid, and the defendant is confined in prison, the sheriff, or a deputy thereof, shall be ordered by the court or judge to take the defendant to the place of the taking of such deposition and shall have such defendant before the officer at the time such deposition is taken. If, however, the deposition is to be taken outside of the state of Ohio, and the defendant is not confined in prison, then it is not necessary for the court to make an order requiring that the defendant be taken to the place of the taking of such deposition, but the notice of the issuing of said commission and of the taking of such deposition is sufficient notice to the defendant.

So that, answering your several questions I advise you that in your case, and being a case in which the defendant is confined in prison, the deposition cannot be taken outside of the state of Ohio and can only be taken within the state of Ohio under the conditions above mentioned. There is no authority to compel the attendance of witnesses from without the state of Ohio at the place of the taking of such depositions, but if a witness voluntarily attends or comes from without the state of Ohio to a place designated within the state of Ohio, then and in that event the deposition may be taken within the state of Ohio. In no event, however, when a prisoner is confined, can a court order such defendant to be taken outside of the state of Ohio to be present at the taking of depositions and in no event can such depositions be taken outside of the state of Ohio when such prisoner is so confined.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY AUDITOR—WARRANT ISSUED UPON EXHAUSTED FUND—AFTER ENACTMENT OF SECTION 5649-3d G. C.—STAMPED NOT PAID FOR WANT OF FUNDS—CASHED BY BANK—INTEREST PAID TO BANK BY COUNTY MAY BE RECOVERED.

If a county auditor issued warrants upon exhausted funds or appropriation accounts after the enactment of sections 5649-3d, and the same were not paid but stamped "Not paid for want of funds;" and if a bank then cashed the warrants and subsequently received interest thereon from the county treasury, such interest may be recovered from the bank.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 23, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date requesting my opinion as follows:

> "We desire to call your attention to two opinions of Attorney-General Timothy S. Hogan, to be found in full in the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1912, Vol. 1, page 163, and Vol. 2, page 1127, in which Mr. Hogan held that sections 2676 and 2677, General Code, were impliedly repealed when the Smith One Per Cent Tax Law was enacted.
> If these section were, in fact, repealed, and a county auditor still issued warrants upon exhausted funds or appropriation accounts, and the county treasurer refused to pay same, but stamped them unpaid for want of funds, and a bank cashed them and was then paid interest on same, may this interest be recovered, and if so, from whom?"

I agree with the opinions of Mr. Hogan to which you call attention and which held, in substance, that section 5649-3d of the General Code by providing that "all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof" superseded sections 2676 and 2677 of the General Code, authorizing the county treasurer to endorse all warrants presented to him and not paid for want of money belonging to the fund on which they were drawn "Not paid for want of funds."

The theory of these opinions was not so much that sections 2676 and 2677 are in themselves repealed or amended by implication, but rather that there is no authority in the auditor for the issuance of any warrant unless there is money in the treasury and appropriated for the purpose for which the warrant is issued because of the controlling provisions of the more recent section 5649-3d. Hence, if the auditor has no authority to issue such warrants it is obvious that the county treasurer would have no authority to create obligations against the county by stamping them "Not paid for want of funds" and thus giving rise to the accrual of interest.

Another way of putting the same thing is to say that sections 2676 and 2677 of the General Code authorize the treasurer to stamp warrants only when the warrants are legal and constitute a binding obligation of the county; and inasmuch as a warrant issued since section 5649-3d was passed is not legal and creates no obligation against the county if there was no appropriation upon which it might be drawn or the appropriation is exhausted, the authority of the treasurer under the sections cited is indirectly, but none the less effectually, destroyed.

Your letter infers that in spite of these conclusions a county auditor still assumed after section 5649-3d became effective to issue warrants when there was no money in the treasury appropriated for their payment. Obviously, on the principles just stated, such warrants were of no legal significance whatever and could not be treated as legal warrants by anybody. On presentation to the county treasurer he was accordingly without authority to create any obligation against the county by stamping them "Not paid for want of funds," although possibly there was nothing inherently wrong in so stamping them. Any one presenting these warrants for payment of interest under sections 2676 and 2677 would not have any valid claim against the county, and the payment of interest on such warrants would be an illegal drawing of money from the treasury.

There is, of course, no question whatsoever that the receiver of moneys drawn from the treasury without authority of law may, under existing statutes, be held liable therefor. Accordingly I advise that a bank receiving money as interest under the circumstances stated by you may be compelled to refund same to the county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OIL—PURCHASED BY RAILROAD COMPANY OUTSIDE OF STATE AND DISTRIBUTED FOR ITS OWN USE—NOT SUBJECT TO INSPECTION.

Where a railroad company operating in the state of Ohio purchases a car of oil outside of the state and has the same shipped into Ohio and distributed for its own use, such oil is not subject to inspection.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 23, 1917.

HON CHARLES L. RESCH, State Inspector of Oils, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 25, 1917, in which you say:

> "If a railroad company, operating in the state of Ohio, were to purchase a car of oil in Pennsylvania, have the same shipped into Ohio and distributed for their own consumption, must this car of oil be inspected as required by the laws of the state of Ohio?"

Section 854 of the General Code reads:

> "Before being offered for sale to a consumer for illuminating purposes within this state, all mineral or petroleum oil, and any fluid or substance, the product of petroleum, or into which petroleum or a product of petroleum enters or is a constituent element, whether manufactured within the state or not, shall be inspected as provided in this chapter."

From your statement it is clear that the oil purchased by the railway company in Pennsylvania is not offered for sale or sold in Ohio but used by the railway company in this state for its own purpose. This being the case it is my opinion that no inspection is necessary.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—HAD AUTHORITY TO MAKE LEVY FOR NEEDY BLIND—UNDER SECTION 2969 G. C.

County commissioners had authority to make levy for support of needy blind under section 2969 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 23, 1917.

HON. JOHN C. D' ALTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On August 29, 1917, you submitted the following letter to this department for opinion:

"The writer, his attention having been directed to the facts of a particular case, with respect to the right of a certain blind person to relief under our Blind Pension Law, has come to the conclusion that the legislature has repealed that part of the pension law which makes the same effective.

By reference to Vol. 103 O. L. at page 60, we find that sections G. C. 2967, 2967-1 and 2968 were amended and that original sections G. C. 2962, 2963 and 2964 were repealed. In Vol. 103 at pages 833-835, we find sections 2965, 2966, 2969 and 2970 were repealed. In Vol. 104 O. L. at page 200, we find that sections 2967 and 2967-1 were apparently supplemented by sections 2967-2 and 2967-3, although as noted above, sections 2967 and 2967-1 had been repealed in Vol. 103 O. L. at pages 61 and 835.

Section 8 of an act to 'create an institute for the relief of the needy blind,' Vol. 103 O. L. at page 833, provides for a levy to be made by the state for the purpose of creating a fund for the maintenance of such an institution. But, as the law now stands we are unable to find any authority such as that given in repealed section 2969, for county commissioners to make a levy to provide for a fund to give relief to the needy blind.

The auditor informs me that in accordance with his instructions from Columbus, the county commissioners have this year, as in former years, made a levy in accordance with provisions of former section G. C. 2969.

The questions that now naturally arise are as follows:

1. Had the county commissioners the authority to make a levy for the support of the needy blind?

2. If they had not such authority, what is to be done with the funds arising from this levy?

Will you kindly give this subject such attention as in your judg ment it deserves?"

In order to understand the matter clearly it will be necessary to refer somewhat to the history of the various acts referred to.

Prior to the act found in 103 O. L., 60, blind relief was administered by the blind relief commission composed of three persons, residents of the county. The act found in 103 O. L., 60, abolished the county blind relief commission and transferred its functions to the county commissioners. In order to accomplish this object sections 2962, 2963 and 2964 were repealed and sections 2967, 2967-1 and 2968 were amended. Subsequently, by an act passed at the same session of the general assembly, it was determined to create an institution for the relief of the needy blind, to be administered by the state and to accomplish that purpose H. B. 678, 103 O. L. 833, was enacted. This act repealed sections 2962, 2963, 2964, 2965, 2966, 2967, 2967-1, 2968, 2969 and 2970. In other words, it repealed the entire legislation for county blind relief.

The constitutionality of the act last referred to, creating a state institution for the relief of the needy blind, was contested in the case of State ex rel. Walton v. Edmondson, auditor of Hamilton County, 89 O. S. 351, and the act was declared unconstitutional, the syllabus reading as follows:

> "1. The act of April 2, 1908 (99 O. L. 56), 'To provide for the relief of needy blind,' now included in sections 2962 to 2970, General Code, as amended February 18, 1913 (103 O. L., 60), is a valid exercise of legislative power not repugnant to the federal or state constitutions.
> 2. The act of April 28, 1913 (103 O. L. 833), 'To create an institution for the relief of the needy blind,' requires the expenditure of public funds raised by taxation, for a private purpose and also violates section 5, Article XII of the Constitution. It is, therefore, unconstitutional and viod.
> 3. Where an unconstitutional statute contains a clause repealing a prior valid law, for which the later statute was a substitute, the repealing clause will also be held inoperative, in the absence of an expressed intention to repeal the prior law without regard to the substitute."

In view of the decision of the supreme court in the case last mentioned, the old sections of the statute, to wit, sections 2965 to 2970 with the amendments of sections 2967, 2967-1 and 2968 as found in 103 O. L. 60, were restored, thereby giving the county commissioners the duty of providing blind relief in the county.

In view of the fact that the act found in 103 O. L., 833, was in force and effect and not as yet declared unconstitutional at the time that the levy for county blind relief should have been made, many counties did not provide blind relief by a levy at the proper time and were therefore unable to provide blind relief. In view of that fact, in order to relieve the situation, the act found in 104 O. L. 200 was passed as an emergency act, the reasons being set forth in section 3 of said act.

It would appear therefore that the act found in 103 O. L. 833 having been declared unconstitutional, section 2969 as found in the General Code prior thereto was restored, said section reading as follows:

> "In addition to the taxes levied by law for other purposes, the county commissioners of each county shall levy a tax not to exceed three-tenths of one mill per dollar on the assessed value of the property of the county, to be levied and collected as provided by law for the assessment and collection of taxes, for the purpose of creating a fund for the relief of the needy blind of their respective counties."

In answer to your question I would therefore advise that under section 2969 the county commissioners had the authority to make a levy for the support of the needy blind.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PUBLICATION—NOTICE OF AMENDMENT TO ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—THREE CONSECUTIVE WEEKS—COMPLIANCE—WHAT NOTICE SHOULD CONTAIN.

1. Under the provisions of section 8722 General Code providing for the publication of notice of amendments to the articles of incorporation publication of such notice once a week for three consecutive weeks is sufficient; but publication will not be deemed complete until the lapse of three full weeks from the date of the first publication.

2. Inasmuch as said section 8722 General Code does not specifically require amendments of the articles of incorporation of a corporation to be set out in full in said notice it would seem that the statute would be complied with by correctly and fully setting out the substance of the amendments adopted. However, inasmuch as it has been the usual and approved practice for such notice to set out a copy of the resolution adopted by the stockholders or the members of the corporation, as the case may be, providing for such amendments, thus carrying into the notice the amendments in full, such practice should not be departed from.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 23, 1917.

HONORABLE WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of a communication from you under date of October 3, 1917, in which you call my attention to section 8722 General Code providing for the publication of notices of amendments to articles of incorporation, and with respect to the provisions of which you ask my opinion on the questions stated by you as follows:

> "1. Must notice be given each day for three consecutive weeks, or once a week for three consecutive weeks?
> 2. Shall the notice contain the amendments in full or just the substance of the amendments?"

Section 8722 General Code reads as follows:

> "Amendments to articles of incorporation shall not take effect until filed for record with the secretary of state, nor, unless it be waived, until the corporation gives notice of them in some newspaper of general circulation in the county where its principal office is located, for three consecutive weeks."

With respect to your first question, it is generally held that where a notice is required to be published for a certain number of weeks, publication once a week for that number of weeks successively is sufficient.

Davis v. Huston, 15 Neb., 28.
Alexander v. Alexander, 26 Neb., 68.
Swett v. Sprague, 55 Me., 190.
Cass v. Bellows, 31 N. H., 501.
Bachelor v. Bachelor, 1 Mass., 256.
Ricketts v. Village of Hyde Park, 85 Ill., 110.

I am of the opinion therefore that it will be a sufficient compliance with the provisions of section 8722 if the notice therein provided for be published in some newspaper of general circulation in the county where the principal office of the corporation is located once a week for three consecutive weeks.

The preposition "for" as used in this connection means "during," and for this reason I am inclined to the view that the publication provided for in this section is not complete until the lapse of three full weeks from the date of the first publication.

State v. Cherry Co., 58 Neb., 734.

With respect to your second question it will be noted that the section above quoted does not specifically require amendments of articles of incorporation of a corporation to be set out in said notice and it would seem that the statute would be complied with by correctly and fully setting out the substance of the amendments adopted. However, it has been the usual and approved practice for such notice to set out a copy of the resolution adopted by the stockholders or members of the corporation, as the case may be, providing for such amendments, together with a recital that the same had been adopted by a vote of the owners of three-fifths of the capital stock therein subscribed; or, if the corporation has no capital stock, that said resolution has been adopted by a vote of at least three-fifths of its members. This, of course, carries into the notice the amendments in full.

I do not think that this practice should be departed from although, as above indicated, I am not prepared to hold that a notice which fully and correctly states the substance of the amendments would not be a compliance with the statutes.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CEMETERY ASSOCIATION—LAND—APPROPRIATION—PURCHASE.

Section 10093 G. C. gives the right to a company or association, incorporated for cemetery purposes, to appropriate or otherwise acquire one hundred acres for cemetery purposes, and section 10094 G. C. gives the right to such a company or association to purchase an additional one hundred acres, but does not give authority to appropriate additional lands for such purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 24, 1917.

HON. GEORGE S. ADDAMS, Judge of Insolvency Court, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 25, 1917, in which you ask whether this department has ever placed a construction upon sections 10093 and 10094 G. C., and that if it has not, you inquire what construction should be given to these sections, in connection with the question you ask, which is as follows:

"A cemetery association in this county owns one hundred acres which it is using for the purposes mentioned in its articles of incorporation. It has, however, sold off in cemetery lots a large portion of this ground. It now desires to enlarge its holdings so that it may continue to sell cemetery lots. Has it the right to appropriate more ground? Has the question been passed on by your department?"

The two sections above referred to read as follows:

"Sec. 10093. A company or association incorporated for cemetery purposes may appropriate or otherwise acquire and hold, not exceeding one hundred acres of land; also, take any gift or devise in trust for cemetery purposes, or the income from such gift or devise according to the provisions of such gift or devise, in trust, all of which shall be exempt from execution, from taxation, and from being appropriated to any other public purpose, if used exclusively for burial purposes, and in no wise with a view to profit.

Sec. 10094. Such company or association which is limited to the ownership, by appropriation or otherwise, of a designated number of acres of land for such purpose, may purchase, according to law, additional lands to the extent necessary therefor, but not more than fifty acres in any year, nor purchase or hold more in the aggregate than one hundred acres."

It will assist us, in arriving at a conclusion in this matter, to note briefly the history of what might be called the cemetery act. The original cemetery act was passed February 24, 1848. On March 12, 1873, an act was passed amending section 5 of the original act. This section 5 was subdivided into a number of sections in the Revised Statutes, but the first part of section 5 embodied the principles set out in section 10093 G. C., to the effect that no cemetery association should acquire and hold more than one hundred acres of land and read as follows:

"Sec. 5. That such association shall be authorized to purchase, to take by gift or choice, or to appropriate and to hold, not exceeding one hundred acres * * *."

I desire particularly to call attention to the fact that the provision which afterwards became section 10094 G. C. was not a part of the act of March 12, 1873. But on March 22, 1877, an act was passed by the general assembly entitled:

"An act to provide for the procurement of additional lands for cemetery purposes."

Section 1 thereof read as follows (74 O. L., 60):

"Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, That any company incorporated under the laws of this state, for cemetery purposes, and limited thereby to the ownership by appropriation or otherwise to a designated number of acres of land for such purpose, may purchase, according to law, additional lands to the extent necessary for such purposes; provided, not more than fifty acres shall be purchased in any one year, and not more in the aggregate shall be so purchased and held by any such association than one hundred acres, as provided in section five of the act providing for the incorporation of cemetery associations, passed February 24, 1848."

This section became by the codification of 1880 section 3572 R. S., reading as follows:

"Any such company or association which is limited to the ownership, by appropriation or otherwise, of a designated number of acres of land for such purpose, may purchase, according to law, additional lands to the extent necessary for such purposes; but not more than fifty acres shall be purchased in any year, and not more in the aggregate shall be so purchased and held by any such company or association than one hundred acres."

This section then became section 10094 G. C. and was made to read as above quoted. It might be noted that section 5 applies merely to an association, while section 1, as above quoted, applies to an incorporated company; but as these sections now stand as found in sections 10093 and 10094 General Code they include both a company and an association.

We will now try to ascertain the purpose of the enactment which later became section 10094 G. C. It is plainly evident from the act as it formerly stood, before the enactment which became section 10094 G. C., that a cemetery association could acquire and hold one hundred acres of land, but not to exceed that amount.

With this in mind, what was the purpose of enacting what afterwards became section 10094 G. C.? The title of the act gave this purpose: "To provide for the procurement of additional lands for cemetery purposes." Section 10094 G. C. itself provides that such company may purchase additional lands to the extent necessary therefor—that is for cemetery purposes. This certainly means lands in addition to the one hundred acres theretofore allowed under the provisions of the law as it existed prior to the enactment of the provision which became section 10094 G. C.

How much additional land can such company purchase? (1) It cannot purchase more than fifty acres in any one year. (2) It cannot "purchase or hold more in the aggregate than one hundred acres." This latter limitation is the one that causes some difficulty. This might be construed to mean one hundred acres as a whole, including its powers under section 10093 as well as those under section 10094 G. C. It is ready susceptible of such a construction, but if this construction were placed upon it, the section would serve no purpose whatever, as the former law gave such rights and powers before section 10094 G. C. was enacted. Hence this construction should not be placed upon it, if there is any other which can reasonably be given it.

The other construction is that the company is entitled to acquire by condemnation or otherwise under section 10093 G. C. one hundred acres and hold the same, but if this amount is sold off for burial purposes to such an extent that more land is needed for such purpose, the company then may purchase under section 10094 G. C. land up to one hundred acres. This it seems to me is the correct construction inasmuch as it gives effect to the provisions of both sections and does violence to neither.

With this in mind we will take one step further. Section 10094 provides that the company "may purchase according to law" additional lands. Your question is as to whether the company can appropriate additional lands.

The question then is as to whether an appropriation could be held to be a "purchase according to law." It is my opinion that the words "may purchase according to law" could not be so interpreted as to include the right of appropriation. The courts and text writers usually hold that inasmuch as the right to appropriate is an extraordinary right, the general assembly must clearly and unequivocally grant the right, or it will not be assumed to have been given.

Randolph in his work on Eminent Domain, Sec. 111, lays down the following proposition:

> "Authority to purchase does not include the power to condemn although purchase at the common law includes technically all modes of acquisition other than descent. Its meaning in a statute is limited to acquisition by contract between the parties without governmental interference. If a statute permits a corporation to acquire land, and does not plainly authorize condemnation, it will be effectuated as authorizing purchase."

While the cases cited by the author to substantiate the propositions of law thus laid down are not very well selected, yet it is my opinion that the propositions of law thus laid down by the author are sound.

In Boston & Lowell Ry. Co. v. Salem & Lowell Ry. Co., 2 Gray 1, the following proposition is set out in the syllabus:

> "An act of the legislature appropriating private property to public uses, under the power of eminent domain, in order to be consistent with article X of the declaration of rights, must show by express words or necessary implication the intention of the legislature to exercise this power and must be accompanied by provisions for making compensation to the owner."

From the above and from what would seem to be a sound principle of law, I am of the opinion that section 10094 G. C. grants to a cemetery association no power to condemn property, but simply to purchase property by agreement with the owner thereof; that is, section 10093 gives a cemetery association the right to appropriate and hold not to exceed one hundred acres, while section 10094 gives the association the right to purchase an additional one hundred acres for cemetery purposes.

I am aware that section 10094 uses the language "may purchase according to law." It might be held that the phrase "according to law" would so extend the ordinary meaning of the word "purchase" that it would include the right to condemn. However, it is my opinion that the said phrase would not include the right of condemnation.

Hence answering your question specifically, my view is that section 10093 G. C. gives a company or association incorporated for cemetery purposes the right to appropriate not exceeding one hundred acres of land, and that section 10094 gives to such company the right to purchase an additional hundred acres for cemetery purposes. Your company already having acquired one hundred acres under section 10093 G. C., it would not have authority to appropriate any additional lands, but might purchase additional lands under section 10094; that is, section 10093 provides that you may acquire and hold not exceeding one hundred acres of land. Inasmuch as you have sold the greater part of the hundred acres which you already have and therefore are in need of additional lands for cemetery purposes, you have authority to purchase additional lands under section 10094, but not to appropriate the same.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

PUBLIC HEALTH NURSE—CITY NOT AUTHORIZED TO PAY PORTION OF COMPENSATION—MAY NOT BE APPOINTED MEMBER OF SANITARY POLICE FORCE AND RECEIVE COMPENSATION FROM MUNICIPALITY.

A city may not legally appropriate and expend money to pay a portion of the compensation of a public health nurse; nor is a municipal board of health authorized to appoint such a nurse as a member of the sanitary police force and thereby endeavor to pay her for said services in that way.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 24, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of October 10th requesting my opinion on the following:

"We are enclosing you herewith communications from the city solicitor of Athens, Ohio, and the president of the board of health of said city, and we respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:

A nurse has been employed as public health nurse by a welfare organization of the city of Athens. This organization has no direct connection with the municipal government of said city.

Question: May the city legally appropriate and expend moneys to pay a portion of the compensation of said nurse in the event that such nurse is also appointed a sanitary police by the board of health of a city, if such nurse is not under the entire supervision and command of the Athens board of health or health officer of said board?"

The question that is contained in your communication was presented, in substance, to my predecessor, Honorable Edward C. Turner, by the state board of health and was passed on by him in an opinion rendered to that board under date of May 13, 1915, found in volume 1, Opinions of the Attorney-General of Ohio for 1915, at page 726. In the course of that opinion it was said by Mr. Turner:

"* * * Particular stress is laid on the authority contained in section 4411 of the General Code, which is as follows:

'The board may also appoint as many persons for sanitary duty as in its opinion the public health and sanitary condition of the corporation require, and such persons shall have general police powers, and be known as the sanitary police, but the council may determine the maximum number of employes so to be appointed.'

'The board shall determine the duties and fix the salaries of its employes; but no member of the board of health shall be appointed as health officer or ward physician.'

The sections quoted above provide for the employment of persons to be known as 'sanitary police' who shall have and exercise general police powers, and it is argued that because of the development of certain disease and the progress made in the determination as to cause and prevention of disease, that a broad interpretation would be given to the sections quoted above for the purpose of meeting the various situations which exist and which come under the control of the state board of health.

I am unable to place a public nurse in the class as comprehended by section 4411 of the General Code. The legislature had under consideration the question of the necessity of a nurse to be employed by the board of health, and in section 4436 of the General Code, provided as follows:

'When a house or other place is quarantined on account of contagious diseases, the board of health having jurisdiction shall provide for all persons confined in such house or place, food, fuel and all other necessities of life, including medical attendance, medicine and nurses, when necessary. The expenses so incurred, except those for disinfection, quarantine, or other measures strictly for the protection of the public, when properly certified by the president and clerk of the board of health, or health officer where there is no board of health, shall be paid by the person or persons quarantined, when able to make such payment, and when not by the municipality in which quarantined.'

The section quoted above contains the only authority which addresses itself to the employment of a nurse, and this is limited to special cases. It would appear, therefore, that if there be the need for a public nurse that is to be gathered from the very able argument of Mr. Bauman, the question is one which should be addressed to the legislature rather than to this office, as I am of the opinion that there is no authority on the part of council to appropriate to the board of health the funds necessary to pay the compensation and expenses of a public nurse, nor is there authority on the part of the board of health to employ such nurse, except that contained in section 4436 of the General Code."

I concur in the reasons given by Mr. Turner and in the conclusion reached, and therefore advise you that a city may not legally appropriate and expend moneys to pay a portion of the compensation of a public health nurse, and that a municipal board of health is not authorized to appoint such nurse as a member of the sanitary police force and thereby endeavor to pay her for said services in that way.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OSTEOPATH—NOT PHYSICIAN WITHIN MEANING OF SECTIONS 1954 AND 1956 G. C.—LUNACY PROCEEDINGS.

An osteopath is not a physician within the meaning of sections 1954 and 1956 G. C. relative to lunacy proceedings.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 24, 1917.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of August 31, 1917, requesting my opinion on an inquiry presented to your board by Dr. E. A. Baber, superintendent of the Dayton State Hospital, which inquiry reads as follows:

"I would be pleased to have you obtain for me from the attorney-general's office, information concerning any provision that has been made whereby a doctor of osteopathy would be entitled to sign the medical certificate of a committment paper for admission to a hospital for the insane, as provided in section 1954 of the General Code, which says two of the witnesses must be reputable physicians.

An application for admission to this institution in the matter of George Schweitzer of Shelby county, has been received in this office and dated the 28th of July, 1917, and issued over the signature of

Probate Judge H. H. Needles, at Sidney, Ohio. Lester C. Pepper, M. D., and F. D. Clark, D. O., constitute the medical witnesses. The 'M. D.' which is printed in the form, after Dr. Clark's name has been crossed out and 'D. O.' substituted. On line 5 of the medical certificate this statement is printed above Dr. Clark's signature: 'I am a registered physician of the state of Ohio and have had at least five years' experience in the practice of medicine.'

I would be pleased to receive his opinion in this matter at once in order to properly instruct Judge Needles concerning the selection of his medical witnesses."

Section 1954 G. C. reads:

"When such affidavit is filed, the probate judge shall forthwith issue his warrant to a suitable person, commanding him to bring the person alleged to be insane before him, on a day therein named, not more than five days after the affidavit was filed, and shall immediately issue subpoenas for such witnesses as he deems necessary, two of whom shall be reputable physicians, commanding the persons in such subpoenas named to appear before him on the return day of the warrant. If any person disputes the insanity of the party charged, the probate judge shall issue subpoenas for such person or persons as are demanded on behalf of the person alleged to be insane."

Section 1956 G. C. provides:

"Unless for good cause the investigation is adjourned, the judge, at the time appointed, shall proceed to examine the witnesses in attendance. Upon the hearing of the testimony, if he is satisfied that the person charged is insane, he shall cause a certificate to be made out by two medical witnesses in attendance that the person is insane to the best of their knowledge and belief. The medical witnesses must have at least five years' experience in the practice of medicine, shall not be related, by blood or marriage, to the person alleged to be insane or to the person making the application for commitment, nor have any official connection with any state hospital. The medical certificate shall contain answers to such interrogatories as the Ohio board of administration, with the advice of the superintendent of the several hospitals, prescribes."

It will be noted that section 1954 provides that two of the witnesses "shall be reputable physicians," and section 1956 provides:

"The medical witnesses must have at least five years' experience in the practice of medicine."

In other words, the statute contemplates an examination and certification by two "reputable physicians" who must have "at least five years' experience in the practice of medicine." The question presented then is, whether or not an osteopath is a physician within the meaning of section 1954, and if he is, is he engaged in the practice of medicine within the meaning of section 1956?

The word "physician" has been often defined, but many of the definitions rest upon statutes in the various states defining either the word physician itself or what shall constitute the "practice of medicine," so that a great many of these definitions are useless in the case submitted.

In Vol. 30 of Cyc, page 1544, we find the following definition:

> "The word 'physician' is defined to mean a person who has received the degree of doctor of medicine from an incorporated institution; one lawfully engaged in the practice of medicine."

This definition is the same as found in Bouvier's Law dictionary, volume 3, page 2586, and practically the same as is found in the Standard dictionary. These definitions express, I believe, the meaning of the word "physician" as it is ordinarily used and thus defined the word could not be held to include an "osteopath."

Section 1954 G. C. was originally section 20 of an act passed March 23, 1878, 75 O. L., p: 69. I think it is clear that at the time the legislature used the word "physician" in the sense above expressed it did not mean to include an osteopath.

Quoting from Nelson v. State Board of Health, 22 Ky. Law Rep., 438, 50 L. R. A., 383:

> "The proof shows that osteopathy is a new method of treating diseases, which is said to have originated with Dr. A. T. Still, of Kirksville, Missouri, about the year 1871. He practiced it more or less from that time until about the year 1890, when he opened a school for the instruction of others. In 1892 he obtained an imperfect charter for his schools under the laws of Missouri."

From this it is seen that at the time the act of 1878 was passed, osteopathy had only been known for seven years and it was not until twelve years after the act was passed that the first school of osteopathy was opened. In 1878, when the legislature of Ohio enacted this statute, no legislative recognition had ever been given to osteopathy, and it is not difficult to arrive at the conclusion that section 1954 G. C., when originally enacted, did not refer to or include osteopaths.

However, I am not unmindful of the rule laid down in State v. Cleveland, 83 O. S., p. 61, that:

> "The statute may include by inference a case not originally contemplated when it deals with a genus within which a new species is brought."

It therefore is proper to look into the statutes regulating the practice of medicine in Ohio to learn whether an osteopath, though not originally classed as a physician within the meaning of section 1954, has since become a physician within the meaning of the term as used in that statute. As before noted, section 1956 G. C. provides that the medical witnesses certifying to the insanity of a person "must have at least five years' experience in the practice of medicine," and we now look to the provisions of the present statutes relative to the practice of medicine in Ohio.

Section 1270 General Code sets forth the preliminary educational credentials which an applicant for a certificate to practice medicine or surgery must possess. Sections 1273 and 1274 provide:

"Sec. 1273. The examinations of applicants for certificates to practice medicine or surgery shall be conducted under rules prescribed by the state medical board. Each applicant shall be examined in anatomy, physiology, pathology, chemistry, materia medica and therapeutics, the principles and practice of medicine, diagnosis, surgery, obstetrics and such other subjects as the board requires. The applicant shall be examined in materia medica and therapeutics and principles and practice of medicine of the school of medicine in which he desires to practice, by the number of members of the board representing such school.

Sec. 1274. If the applicant passes such examination, and has paid the fee required by law, the state medical board shall issue its certificate to that effect, signed by its president and secretary, and attested by its seal. Such certificate when deposited with the probate judge as required by law, shall be conclusive evidence that the person to whom it is issued is entitled to practice medicine or surgery in this state. An affirmative vote of not less than five members of the board is required for the issuance of a certificate."

These statutes all refer to the general practice of medicine, including all of its branches.

Special and separate provision is then made in the statutes for the practice of osteopathy. Sections 1288, 1289, 1290, 1291, 1292 and 1293 provide:

"Sec. 1288. The provisions of this chapter shall not apply to an osteopath who passes an examination before the state medical board in the subjects of anatomy, physiology, obstetrics, and diagnosis in the manner required by the board, receives a certificate from such board, and deposits it with the probate judge as required by law in the case of other certificates. Such certificates shall authorize the holder thereof to practice osteopathy in the state, but shall not permit him to prescribe or administer drugs, except anesthetics and antiseptics necessary in the practice of osteopathy; neither shall the certificate permit the holder to perform major surgery, which is hereby declared to be all operative procedures requiring the use of the knife or other surgical instruments for the opening of any natural cavity of the body or the amputation of any member or part of the body. Such certificates may be refused, revoked or suspended as in the case of certificates to physicians and surgeons.

Sec. 1289. Before he shall be admitted to an examination before the state medical board a person who desires to practice osteopathy shall pay a fee of twenty-five dollars to its treasurer and file with its secretary such evidence of preliminary education as is required by law of applicants for examination to practice medicine or surgery, together with a certificate from an osteopathic examining committee as hereafter provided, showing that the applicant holds a diploma or a physician's osteopathic certificate from a reputable college of osteopathy as determined by such committee, and that he has passed an examination in a manner satisfactory to the committee in the subjects of pathology, physiological chemistry, gynecology, minor surgery, osteopathic diagnosis and the principles and practice of osteopathy.

Sec. 1290. Upon recommendation of the Ohio osteopathic society, the state medical board shall appoint three persons who shall constitute the state osteopathic examining committee. One member of such committee shall be appointed each year who shall serve for a term of three years.

Sec. 1291. Upon recommendation of the osteopathic committee and the payment by the applicant of a fee of fifty dollars, the state medical board may issue a certificate without examination to a graduate of a reputable school of osteopathy, who is of good moral character, and has been engaged in the practice of osteopathy in any other state for at least five years.

Sec. 1292. Upon recommendation of the osteopathic committee, the state medical board may dispense with the examination of an osteopath, duly authorized to practice osteopathy in another state, a territory or the District of Columbia, who wishes to remove from such state, territory or district and reside and practice his profession in this state, upon his complying with the following conditions:

Such osteopath shall make an application on a form prescribed by the board, pay a fee of fifty dollars and present a certificate or license issued by the proper board of such state, territory or district; provided the laws of such state, territory or district require of osteopaths practicing therein qualifications of a grade equal to those required of ostetopaths practicing in Ohio, and equal rights are accorded by such state, territory or district to osteopaths of Ohio holding a certificate from the state medical board who desires to remove to, reside and practice their profession in such state, territory or district

Sec. 1293. The osteopathic examining committee shall meet at the office of the state medical board for action on applications for osteopathic certificates at such time as the board directs. Each member of the committee shall receive the same compensation as a member of the state board, payable as provided in such case."

It will be noted that the examinations provided for those desiring to become practitioners of medicine in all of its branches are quite different from examinations provided for persons who are applicants for certificates to practice osteopathy. It will also be noted that the legislature does not speak of osteopaths as "practitioners of medicine" but as persons "practicing osteopathy." It does not refer to them as surgeons or physicians, but as osteopaths. In section 1288 General Code, it distinguishes between the two in providing that the certificates of osteopaths "may be refused, revoked or suspended as in the case of certificates of physicians and surgeons."

This distinction is further emphasized by the provisions of sections 1286 and 1288 and sections 12694 and 12696. These sections were formerly sections 43, 44, 45, 52 and 54 of an act entitled "an act to revise and consolidate the laws relating to the appointment, powers and duties of the state board of health, the state board of medical registration and examination, the Ohio board of pharmacy and the state board of embalming examiners," passed May 9, 1908, and found in 99 O. L., p. 492.

Section 43 of this act read:

"A person shall be regarded as practicing medicine, surgery or midwifery, within the meaning of this act, who uses the words or letters, 'Dr.', 'Doctor', 'Professor', 'M. D.', or any other title in connection with his name which in any way represents him as engaged in the practice of medicine, surgery or midwifery, in any of its branches, or who examines or diagnoses for a fee or compensation of any kind, or prescribes, advises, recommends, administers or dispenses for a fee or compensation of any kind, direct or indirect, a drug or medicine, appliance, application, operation or treatment of whatever nature for the cure or relief of a wound, fracture or bodily injury, infirmity or disease. The use of any such words, letters or titles in such connection or under such circumstances as to induce the belief that the person who uses them is engaged in the practice of medicine, surgery or midwifery, shall be prima facie evidence of the intent of such person to represent himself as engaged in the practice of medicine, surgery or midwifery."

Section 44 provided certain exceptions.
Section 45 read:

"The provisions of this act shall not apply to an osteopath who passes an examination before the state medical board in the subjects of anatomy, physiology, obstetrics and diagnosis in the manner required by the board, receives a certificate from such board, and deposits it with the probate judge as required by law in the case of other certificates. Such certificate shall authorize the holder thereof to practice osteopathy in the state, but shall not permit him to prescribe or administer drugs, or to perform major surgery."

Section 52 read:

"Whoever practices medicine or surgery in any of its branches in this state before he obtains a certificate from the state medical board in the manner required by law, or whoever so practices medicine or surgery after such certificate has been duly revoked, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than five hundred dollars or be imprisoned in the county jail not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both."

Section 54 read:

"Whoever announces or advertises himself as an osteopath, or practices as such, without complying with all the provisions of law relating to the practice of osteopathy, shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than five hundred dollars, or be imprisoned in the county jail not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or both."

Sections 43 and 44 of this act were originally section 2 of an act entitled "An act to amend sections 4403c and 4403f of an act entitled 'an act to regulate the practice of medine in the state of Ohio,' passed February 27, 1896," passed April 14, 1900, and found in 94 O. L., p. 197.

Section 2 of this act, after providing who should be regarded as practicing medicine or surgery, provided that the act should not apply "to any osteopath who holds a diploma from a legally chartered and regularly conducted school of osteopathy in good standing, as such, where the course of instruction requires at least four terms of five months each in four separate years, provided that the said osteopath shall pass an examination satisfactory to the state board of medical registration and examination on the following subjects: anatomy, physiology, chemistry and physical diagnosis, providing that said osteopath shall not be granted the privilege of administering drugs nor of performing major or operative surgery."

From a reading of these sections and an examination of all the statutes relating to the practice of medicine and osteopathy, it will be seen that the legislature has clearly recognized the fact that the practice of medicine and the practice of osteopathy are not one and the same, but two different things, and bearing in mind the different educational qualifications required and the totally different examinations provided with reference to the two professions, I cannot but conclude that an osteopath is not a physician within the meaning of sections 1954 and 1956 of the General Code and am therefore of the opinion that a certificate of insanity, signed only by one doctor of medicine and one osteopath, or signed only by two osteopaths, does not meet the requirements of the statute.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE BY COUNCIL OF CITY OF COSHOCTON.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 27, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of the city of Coshocton, Ohio, in the sum of $16,000.00, for the purpose of providing funds for the improvement of Third street in said city.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the city council and other officers of the city of Coshocton relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in all respects regular and in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that bonds covering said issue, properly prepared in accordance with the ordinance of council providing for said issue and according to the bond form submitted, will, when signed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said city.

APPROVAL—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE AMERICAN MUTUAL AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 27, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am herewith returning, with my approval, articles of incorporation of the American Mutual Automobile Insurance Company.

I find that said articles of incorporation are drawn in conformity with the provisions of the act of March 21, 1917, amending certain sections of the General Code relating to the incorporation of mutual insurance companies, other than life and mutual protective associations. The particular kind of insurance contemplated by the articles of incorporation is that authorized by sub-section 1 of section 9607-2, General Code, as amended in said act.

Finding said articles of incorporation to be in conformity with said act, and not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of this state or of the United States, the same are for this reason approved.

I am also returning herewith check for $25.00 enclosed with your letter.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CRANE TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, PAULDING COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Crane township rural school district, in the sum of $5,000.00, for the purpose of improving public school property owned by said school district.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Crane township rural school district, Paulding county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue and find the same to be in all respects regular and in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that bonds properly prepared in accordance with the resolution of the board of education covering this issue will, when properly signed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

No bond form was submitted with the transcript, but I am this day asking the prosecuting attorney of the county to forward to me a copy of the bond and coupon form before the same goes to print, and for this reason I will retain the transcript until I receive such bond and coupon form, to the end that when same is approved it can be made a part of the transcript.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LINE FENCE STATUTES—CONSTITUTIONALITY—WHAT ASSESSMENTS AUTHORIZED.

The unreported case of Roth v. Beach, 80 O. S. 746 does not, in effect, hold the line fence statutes unconstitutional, as was the holding of the lower courts; but was decided on grounds identical with those on which Alma Coal Co. v. Cozad, 79 O. S. 348, was decided and is consistent with McDorman v. Ballard, 94 O. S. 183.

The line fence statutes are not to be so interpreted as to authorize an assessment against an owner of lands which are, and are to remain, unenclosed; but, subject to this limitation, are constitutional.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1917.

HON. GEORGE F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 20th requesting my opinion as follows:

"I desire an opinion on the constitutionality of sections 5908 and following, concerning the powers of township trustees to apportion fences and on failure of the owner on either side to construct his portion, to sell the same and certify the costs, etc., to the county auditor for collection.

In the case of the Alma Coal Co. v. Cozad, Treas., 79 O. S., 348, it is held in the second paragraph of the syllabus:

'The act of April 18, 1904 (97 O. L. 138), may not be so construed and administered as to charge an owner of lands which are, and are to remain, unenclosed, with any part of the expense of constructing and maintaining a line fence for the sole benefit of the adjoining proprietor.'

In the case of Beach v. Roth, et al., 18 C. C. (n. s.) 579, it is held that section 4243 Rev. Stat. (now sections 5913, 5914, 5915 of the General Code) providing for the building of line fences and the assessment of the costs thereof on adjoining proprietors, is unconstitutional.

This judgment of the circuit court was affirmed by the supreme court of Ohio, in the case of Roth et al. v. Beach, in the 80th O. S. 746.

In the case of McDorman v. Ballard, et al., 94 O. S. 183, the court holds that the maintenance of fences around enclosed lands (Sec. 5908, and following, of G. C.) is constitutional. The court, in the opinion in this case, refers to the case of the Alma Coal Co. v. Cozad, Treas., 79 O. S. 348, but makes no mention whatever of the case of Roth et al. v. Beach, in the 80th O. S. 746.

From the above, it occurs to me that the case first above mentioned, in the 79 O. S. limits the application of the above sections to cases in which the lands are wholly unenclosed, and which are so to remain, but valid as to lands which are, or in future, are to be enclosed. The case above referred to in 80 O. S. seems to make a sweeping judgment, declaring the whole partition fence law unconstitutional.

In the 94 O. S., cited above, the supreme court seems to ignore entirely the judgment of the 80 O. S., and to reaffirm the 79 O. S. If the sections of the General Code providing for the payment of the amount assessed against the adjoining owner, are unconstitutional, as found in the 80 O. S., it seems that the trustees might have authority to award portions of the fence, but not to collect for payment on sale of same. This case stands unreversed so far as I am able to find.

The above decisions have created a doubt in my mind as to the rights and powers of the trustees, under these sections, and for this reason I desire your opinion, as before stated."

It will not be necessary to refer to the reported cases cited by you, as you have correctly stated the purport of the decisions therein. I suggest, however, that it is inaccurate to suppose that in affirming the judgment of the circuit court in Beach v. Roth, supra, the supreme court necessarily affirmed all that the circuit court said in its opinion in deciding that case. As a matter of fact, an examination of the original record in the case shows that the same allegations were made therein as were made in the petition in Alma Coal Co. v. Cozad, supra, viz: that the lands of the plaintiff were, and were to remain, unenclosed, so that the assessment against him would be a taking of his property for the benefit of his neighbor. The brief memorandum in Roth v. Beach shows that the judgment was affirmed on the authority of Alma Coal Co. v.

Cozad; and, of course, the allegations of the petition, as I have summarized them, made a case clearly within the principles of the former case.

It is seen, therefore, that there is nothing in the judgment of affirmance of Roth v. Beach in any way inconsistent with Alma Coal Co. v. Cozad, nor with McDorman v. Ballard.

The supreme court has never held the statute unconstitutional. It has merely declined, perhaps on constitutional grounds, to interpret it so as to authorize an exaction to be made by assessment against the property of an owner whose lands are, and are to remain, unenclosed.

I take it that the foregoing statement will clear up the doubt that exists in your mind.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—HAS NO RIGHT TO EMPLOY COUNSEL OTHER THAN HIS REGULAR ASSISTANTS IN CIVIL ACTIONS—MAY NOT PAY FOR SUCH SERVICES UNDER 3004 G. C.—COMMISSIONERS ONLY COUNTY OFFICIALS WHO MAY EMPLOY COUNSEL OTHER THAN PROSECUTING ATTORNEY.

A prosecuting attorney has no right to pay from the fund provided by section 3004 G. C. any amount to an attorney who assisted such prosecuting attorney in the trial of a civil action.

The prosecuting attorney has no right to employ counsel other than to appoint his regular assistants when such employment is in a civil action.

No county officer has a right to employ counsel, or an attorney outside of the prosecuting attorney, except that the county commissioners may employ an attorney when they deem it for the best interests of the county and on request of the prosecuting attorney.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1917.

HON. R. A. KERR, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion on the following facts:

> "Can a prosecutor pay from the money allowed him under G. C. 3004 a sum of money to an attorney to represent him, or rather represent the county in any action, and if so, can it be done in a civil action?"

Upon my request for additional information you state that:

> "He (the ex-prosecutor) received a telephone message that the conservancy act would be for hearing before the court of appeals and that he wished P. T. to assist, but that the commissioners were not in session and he did not have time to get them in session to act on the matter in time for him to have Mr. T. appear for the county before the court of appeals, and because of this fact he paid Mr. T. from his expense fund."

In his report the state examiner made the following finding of fact in relation thereto:

"Mr. F. C. G. was prosecutor of this county from January, 1915, to January, 1917. As provided in section 3004 G. C. he drew $1,275.00 from the treasury for the expenses for the year 1915 * * *. The two principal items of expense are shown to be expenses in connection with the conservancy flood proposition * * *. There are three items in the conservancy expense list that your examiner believes wholly illegal. They are

June 22, 1915, to P. T., attorney fee	$25 00
July 8, 1915, to P. T., part fee in conservancy	100 00
Sept. 1, 1915, to P. T., part fee in conservancy error proceedings.	100 00
The total of these three items is	$225 00

We claim they are illegal because the prosecutor has no statutory authority to employ the services of other attorneys to be paid for by the county * * *. The conservancy case was a civil case. Mr. T. was employed in this case by the commissioners on request of the prosecutor, as is shown on the commissioners' journal No. 14, pp. 57 and 244. These two resolutions show contracts with Mr. T. for certain sums * * *. There can be no connection between these two specific contracts made by the commissioners with Mr. P. T. and the $225.00 paid him by prosecutor G."

Section 3004 G. C. provides:

"There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney, in addition to his salary and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half of the official salary, to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for. Upon the order of the prosecuting attorney the county auditor shall draw his warrant on the county treasurer payable to the prosecuting attorney or such other person as the order designates, for such amount as the order requires, not exceeding the amount provided for herein, and to be paid out of the general fund of the county.

Provided that nothing shall be paid under this section until the prosecuting attorney shall have given bond to the state in a sum not less than his official salary to be fixed by the court of common pleas or probate court with sureties to be approved by either of said courts, conditioned that he will faithfully discharge all the duties enjoined upon him, by law, and pay over, according to law, all moneys by him received in his official capacity. Such bond with the approval of such court of the amount thereof and sureties thereon and his oath of office inclosed therein shall be deposited with the county treasurer.

The prosecuting attorney shall annually, before the first Monday in January, file with the county auditor an itemized statement, duly verified by him, as to the manner in which fund has been expended during the current year, and shall if any part of such fund remains in his hands unexpended, forthwith pay the same into the county treasury. * * *"

Section 2412 G. C. provides:

> "If it deems it for the best interests of the county, upon the written request of the prosecuting attorney the board of county commissioners may employ legal counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney in the prosecution or defense of any suit or action brought by or against the county commissioners or other county officers and boards, in their official capacity."

In your case one P. T., an attorney-at-law, was employed under the provisions of both of said sections and paid from county funds. No question is raised about his employment under the provisions of section 2412, for in those cases the prosecuting attorney made written requests of the county commissioners for said employment and the county commissioners passed proper resolutions finding it to be for the best interest of the county that P. T. should be so employed, and thus employed him.

It is only the employment of P. T. by the prosecuting attorney, and his payment from the fund provided by section 3004 G. C. which is held by the examiner to be illegal.

Section 2917 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county commissioners and all other county officers and county boards and any of them may require of him written opinions or instructions in matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any such officer or board may direct or to which it is a party, and no county officer may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county except as provided in section twenty-four hundred and twelve. He shall be the legal adviser for all township officers, and no such officer may employ other counsel or attorney except on the order of the township trustees duly entered upon their journal, in which the compensation to be paid for such legal services shall be fixed. Such compensation shall be paid from the township fund."

In your case I am assuming for the purpose of this opinion that the county commissioners, or some officer or board of the county, were parties to the conservancy case, for if no such officer or board were parties to the case I am of the opinion there would have been no right to spend any public funds in the prosecution or defense thereof.

The prosecuting attorney is authorized by section 2915 G. C. to appoint necessary assistants, clerks and stenographers for his office and may fix the salary of such assistants, which, however, is to be kept within the amount allowed such prosecuting attorney by the judge or judges of the common pleas court.

Section 2914 G. C. provides that the judge or judges of the common pleas court, shall, on or before the first Monday in January of each year, fix an aggregate sum to be expended by the prosecuting attorney for the incoming year in the payment of compensation for assistants, clerks and stenographers. It is thus provided how the regular assistants in the prosecuting attorney's office are employed and paid. But because conditions may arise wherein it will be necessary to employ counsel other than the regular assistants in the office of the prosecuting attorney, provision is made by section 2412 that the board of county commissioners may, if it deems it for the best interest of the county, and upon the written request of the prosecuting attorney, employ legal counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney in the prosecution or defense of any suit or action brought by or against the county commissioners or other county officers and boards in their official capacity. That is, the county commissioners have no right to employ counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney except upon the written request of the prosecuting attorney and then only when they find that it will be for the best interests of the county and when the services are necessary in the prosecution or defense of an action or suit brought by or against the county commissioners or other county officers or boards in their official capacity. Section 2917 G. C. provides that the prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county commissioners and that he shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions which any such officers or boards may direct or to which it is a party, and then further provides:

> "And no county officer may employ other counsel or attorney at the expense of the county except as is provided in section 2412."

It is noted above what section 2412 provides, that is, that the county commissioners may employ, under the conditions therein mentioned, and that no county officer has a right to employ counsel, or an attorney other than the prosecuting attorney, except as is provided in section 2412. The prosecuting attorney, then, being a county officer, would have no right to employ any attorney to assist him under any circumstances, except, however, his regular assistants, as above mentioned.

It is urged, however, that the employment can be made under and by virtue of section 3004. Said section provides a fund equal to one-half of the salary of the prosecuting attorney as an expense fund for such prosecuting attorney and such fund may be used by him to pay any expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice not otherwise provided for. There is no provision made in our law, other than the above section, for the expenses of the prosecuting attorney while he is performing his official duties, and so whatever expenses he would necessarily be compelled to pay in the performance of his official duties would have to be paid from the fund created by section 3004. Outside of said expenses the only other provision is that he may expend from said fund in the furtherance of justice.

I am of the opinion that the phrase "in the furtherance of justice" refers only to criminal matters and has no reference to a civil action.

Holding these views, then, I advise you that a prosecuting attorney cannot pay from the money allowed under section 3004 G. C. any sum of money to an attorney to represent him, or rather represent the county, in an action when said action is a civil proceeding.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE FIRE MARSHAL—HAS NO JURISDICTION OVER PROPERTY OWNED BY UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.

The state fire marshal of Ohio has no jurisdiction over property in Ohio purchased by the United States government for the erection of a postoffice building.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1917.

HON. T. ALFRED FLEMING, State Fire Marshal, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 9, 1917, as follows:

> "Upon recent inspection made in the town of Urbana, Ohio, our inspector found some dilapidated barns and sheds on the property owned by the United States government, located in that city. We immediately issued orders, calling for their removal. The attached letter is self-explanatory.
> "What I am anxious to know is, whether the state gives us and waives any right as suggested in turning over the property. I feel, in this particular instance, that the building will be removed, but would like to have your opinion so that it may be my guide in the future.
> I cannot see why we would not have control of fire hazard conditions if they exist on property owned by the federal government and located in this state."

Since receiving your communication I have been given the additional information by your department that the buildings referred to are buildings resting upon a site purchased by the United States government for the erection of a new postoffice building in Urbana.

Section 8 of article 1 of the constitution of the United States (clause 17) gives congress the power

> "To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular states, and the acceptance of congress, become the seat of the government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards, and other needful buildings:"

Sections 13770, 13771, 13772 and 13773 of the appendix to the General Code read:

> "Sec. 13770. That the consent of the state of Ohio is hereby given, in accordance with the seventeenth clause, eighth section, of the first article of the constitution of the United States, to the acquisition by the United States, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, of any land in this state required for sites for custom houses, court houses, post-offices, arsenals, or other public buildings, whatever, or for any other purposes of the government.
> Sec. 13771. That exclusive jurisdiction in and over any land so acquired by the United States shall be and the same is hereby, ceded to the United States, for all purposes except the service upon such sites of all civil and criminal process of the courts of this state; but the jurisdiction so ceded shall continue no longer than the said United States shall own such lands.

Sec. 13772. The jurisdiction ceded shall not vest until the United States shall have acquired the title to the said lands by purchase, condemnation or otherwise; and so long as the said lands shall remain the property of the United States when acquired as aforesaid, and no longer, the same shall be and continue exempt and exonerated from all state, county and municipal taxation, assessment or other charges which may be levied or imposed under the authority of this state; provided that nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prevent any officers, employes or inmates of any national asylum for disabled volunteer soldiers located on any such land over which jurisdiction is ceded herein, who are qualified voters of this state from exercising the right of suffrage at all township, county and state elections in any township in which such national asylum shall be located.

Sec. 13773. That the act entitled 'An act ceding to the United States exclusive jurisdiction over certain lands acquired for public purposes within this state, and authorizing the acquisition thereof,' passed the sixth day of May, 1902, shall not be so construed as to have a retroactive operation, or to apply to any land or lands acquired by the United States for any of the purposes mentioned in section 1 of said act, prior to the date of passage thereof."

I shall assume that the postoffice site referred to was purchased subsequent to the passage of sections 13770 and 13771—that is, subsequent to May 5, 1902—and that therefore these sections apply to the postoffice site in question.

In United States vs. Cornell, 2 Mason Reports, p. 60, the defendant was indicted for murder of one William Kane in Fort Adams in Newport Harbor, alleged to be a place within the sole and exclusive jurisdiction of the United States. The defendant killed a fellow soldier in the garrison. He pleaded not guilty and the case was referred to the supreme court on the question of jurisdiction. Judge Story delivered the opinion of the court and at page 63 said:

"The constitution of the United States declares that congress shall have power to exercise 'exclusive legislation' in all 'cases whatsoever' over all places purchased by the consent of the legislature of the state in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock yards and other needful buildings. When therefore a purchase of land for any of these purposes is made by the national government, and the state legislature has given its consent to the purchase, the land so purchased by the very terms of the constitution ipso facto falls within the exclusive legislation of congress, and the state jurisdiction is completely ousted. This is the necessary result, for exclusive jurisdiction is the attendant upon exclusive legislation; and the consent of the state legislature is by the very terms of the constitution, by which all the states are bound, and to which all are parties, a virtual surrender and cession of its sovereignty over the place. Nor is there anything novel in this construction. It is under the like terms in the same clause of the constitution that exclusive jurisdiction is now exercised by congress in the District of Columbia; for if exclusive legislation and exclusive jurisdiction do not import the same thing, the states could not cede, or the United States accept for the purposes enumerated in this clause, any exclusive jurisdiction. And such was manifestly the avowed intention of those wise and great men who framed the constitution."

The legislature of Rhode Island, in furtherance of an object to assist the government to erect forts to fortify the harbor of Newport, by an act of that body passed in 1794, authorized any town or person in the state, by and with the consent of the governor of the state, to sell and dispose of to the president, for the use of the United States, all such lands as should be deemed necessary to erect fortifications upon for the defense of the port harbor of Newport, and to execute deeds therefor in due form of law. The act also contained the proviso, similar to that found in section 13770 G. C., above quoted, that all civil and criminal processes, under the authority of the state, or any officer thereof, may be executed on the land so ceded and within the fortifications that may be erected thereon, in the same way and manner as if the lands had not been ceded as aforesaid.

"The counsel for the prisoner next contend that the state has retained a concurrent jurisdiction over the place; and if so, then the averment in the indictment is not supported in point of fact. This leads us to the consideration of the true intent and effect of the proviso already mentioned. In its terms it certainly does not contain any reservation of concurrent jurisdiction or legislation. It provides only that civil and criminal processes, issued under the authority of the state, which must of course be for acts done within, and cognizable by, the state, may be executed within the ceded lands, notwithstanding the cession. Not a word is said from which we can infer that it was intended that the state should have a right to punish for acts done within the ceded lands. The whole apparent object is answered by considering the clause as meant to prevent these lands from becoming a sanctuary for fugitives from justice, for acts done within the acknowledged jurisdiction of the state. Now there is nothing incompatible with the exclusive sovereignty or jurisdiction of one state, that it should permit another state, in such cases, to execute its processes within its limits. And a cession, or exclusive jurisdiction, may well be made with a reservation of a right of this nature, which then operates only as a condition annexed to the cession, and as an agreement of the new sovereign to permit its free exercise as quoad hoc his own process. This is the light in which clauses of this nature (which are very frequent in grants made by the states to the United States), have been received by this court on various occasions, on which the subject has been heretofore brought before it for consideration; and it is the same light in which it has also been received by a very learned state court."

In Ft. Leavenworth R. R. v. Lowe, 114 U. S., 525, Field, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said at page 532:

"When the title is acquired by purchase by the consent of the legislatures of the states, the federal jurisdiction is exclusive of all state authority. This follows from the declaration of the constitution that congress shall have 'like authority' over such places as it has over the district which is the seat of government. That is, the power of 'exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever.' Broader or clearer language could not be used to exclude all other authority than that of congress; and that no other authority can be exercised over them has been the uniform opinion of federal and state tribunals and of the attorneys general."

The court then cites with approval both the case of the United States v. Cornell, 2 Mason, 60, and that of Commonwealth v. Clary, 8 Mass. R., 72. These cases were both followed in the case of Sinks v. Reese, 19 O. S., p. 306, in which it was held:

"Asylums for disabled volunteer soldiers of the United States are among the 'needful buildings' for the erection of which the government of the United States, through the medium of a corporation created by itself or otherwise, may purchase and hold territory, under the provisions of article 1, section 8, of the constitution of the United States."

Brinkerhoff, C. J., in the opinion of the court, said:

"This act of the state legislature, consenting to the establishment of the asylum within her borders, and ceding jurisdiction of the lands and appurtenances of the asylum to the United States, under the operation of the clauses of the eighth section of the first article of the constitution of the United States above referred to, fixes the exclusive jurisdiction of the general government over this institution, its lands and its inmates, 'in all cases whatsoever,' except as to the execution of process issuing under state authority."

There is no question but what the postoffice building is a "needful building" within the meaning of the provision of the United States constitution, above quoted, and it is therefore my opinion that the state fire marshal of Ohio can exercise no jurisdiction over the postoffice site referred to.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—SALARY BASED ON ROAD MILEAGE IN COUNTY — MAY RECOVER DIFFERENCE BETWEEN AMOUNT RECEIVED AND AMOUNT ACTUALLY ENTITLED TO—WHEN AUDITOR'S ESTIMATE OF NUMBER OF MILES IS LESS THAN ACTUALLY EXIST IN COUNTY —COUNTY MAY RECOVER WHEN HE HAS RECEIVED MORE SALARY THAN HE IS ENTITLED TO.

1. If a county surveyor has received a less amount in salary than that which he was entitled to receive, due to the fact that the county auditor fixed a road mileage less than that which actually exists in the county, he would be entitled to receive the difference between that which he did receive and that which he was entitled to receive.

2. If the county surveyor has received more salary from the county than that to which he was entitled, due to the fact that the county auditor fixed a road mileage in excess of that which actually exists in the county, the county would be entitled to recover the difference between that which he did receive and that which he was entitled to receive.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of October 3, 1917, which is as follows:

> "Attorney-General Edward C. Turner, in an opinion rendered to this bureau September 21, 1915 (Opinions 1915, Vol. 2, page 1798), in answering the tenth inquiry, held:
> 'It is the duty of the county auditor to determine the mileage of public roads upon which the county surveyor's salary is to be based.'
> Acting in accordance with this opinion the auditor of a certain county determined the mileage of public roads in his county to be 800 miles. The county surveyor was paid upon this basis for two years, or until his retirement from office on the first Monday of September, 1917. The new surveyor insists that there are over 1,000 miles of public roads in the county, and the auditor desires to know if, in the event he makes a new determination, he will be legally justified in paying the ex-surveyor an amount sufficient to reimburse him for salary he was entitled to but did not receive.
> Should your opinion be in the affirmative, could the examiners of this bureau make findings for recovery against a county surveyor who had received too much salary because of an error made by a county auditor in determining the mileage of the public roads of his county?"

The section of the General Code which fixes the salary of the county surveyor is section 7181 both in the Cass act and in the White-Mulcahey act. Under the Cass act the salary of the county surveyor was based on the road mileage of the county, and also upon the population of the county. The provisions in reference to road mileage read as follows:

> "The county surveyor * * * shall receive an annual salary to be computed as follows: One dollar per mile, for each full mile of the first one thousand miles of the public roads of the county, * * *"

Under the law as it now stands in section 7181 of the General Code, the salary of the county surveyor is based upon the road mileage of the county, the population of the county, and the tax duplicate of the same, and the provision which has to do with the road mileage of the county reads as follows:

> "The county surveyor shall receive an annual salary to be computed as follows: One dollar per mile for each full mile of the first one thousand miles of the public roads of the county."

In both of these sections the matters upon which the salary of the county surveyor, or as he was formerly called the "county highway superintendent," are definite and certain. These are matters of record, and the record of any county would show definitely the road mileage of the county, the population of the county, and also the tax duplicate of the county, and the county surveyor is and was entitled to receive a salary as set out in said section 7181, and this provides that he is to receive one dollar per mile for each full mile of the first one thousand miles of the public roads of the county. It is not based upon road mileage as fixed by the county auditors of the different counties, but is based upon a road mileage as it actually exists; and therefore if the county surveyor whose term expired on the first Monday of September, 1917, was paid a salary less than that which he should have received due to the fact that it was based upon a road mileage less than that which actually exists in the county, then he would be entitled to receive an additional amount to be computed upon the difference between the road mileage which actually exists in the county, and that upon which he was paid during the year which ended the first Monday in September, 1917.

And, in reference to this matter, I desire to say further that the amount to which he may be entitled over and above that which he received is to be based upon the difference between the road mileage as it actually exists and the road mileage upon which his salary was based, and not upon the road mileage which the county auditor may determine to exist in the county.

You further ask as to whether the county would be entitled to recover the amount which was paid a county surveyor over and above that which he was entitled to receive owing to the fact that his salary was based upon a road mileage in the county in excess of that which actually exists. It is my opinion that the county would be entitled to recover. The mistake that would be made in reference to this matter is a mistake of fact and not one of law, and hence the parties interested in the matter would not be bound by the mistake which was made in reference to road mileage of the county.

I am not unmindful of the opinion of Honorable Edward C. Turner, found in Vol. 2, page 1798, 1915 Opinions of the Attorney-General, to which you call attention in your communication. It is my opinion that Mr. Turner was dealing with the question as to how the county auditor might protect himself in the matter of issuing warrants for the salary of the county surveyor. To be sure, the county auditor would be compelled to protect himself in that he should not issue warrants in excess of that to which the county surveyor would be entitled, and hence it would be up to him, in a way, to decide as to what the road mileage in any county is, in order that he might be protected in the matter of issuing warrants. It was this point, as I view it, with which the opinion of Mr. Turner has to do; but the mere fact that the county auditor would decide that road mileage in a certain county is a certain number of miles would not prevent the county surveyor from receiving the amount to which he was actually entitled, and would not prevent the county from recovering the amount which the county surveyor received over and above that which he should have received.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that a county surveyor would be entitled to receive from the county the difference between the salary which he should have received as based upon the road mileage of the county and that which he did receive; and also that the county would be entitled to recover from the county surveyor if he received more than that to which he was entitled due to the fact that the county auditor fixed a road mileage in excess of that which actually exists in the county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DOMESTIC CORPORATIONS—REPORTS—FEES—TAX COMMISSION—EFFECT OF DECISION OF SUPREME COURT IN CASE OF THE STATE V. LITTLE MIAMI R. R. CO.

The case of the State v. Little Miami Railroad Company is not to be regarded as deciding the point as to the liability of corporations organized for the purpose of constructing and operating public utilities which have never entered upon the operation of such utilities; which do not own utilities which are being operated by others as their lessees, etc.; or which have wholly abandoned the operation of what were originally public utilities or have sold the same; but the scope of the decision as controlling administrative action should be limited to the case of the liability of "underlying companies" so-called.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 31, 1917.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 23d requesting my opinion as follows:

> "You are respectfully requested to advise this commission what classes of domestic corporations are exempted from making reports to the tax commission and paying the fee of three-twentieths of one per cent upon their subscribed or issued and outstanding stock under the ruling of the supreme court in the Little Miami Railroad Company case. There are a number of cases pending before the commission to which it desires to apply the ruling of the court and it therefore requests your instruction as to the effect of the court's decision."

In short, your letter asks me to state what has been decided by the supreme court in the case of State v. Little Miami Railroad Company.

Accurately speaking, the supreme court has decided that there is no error prejudicial to the state apparent on the face of the record of the proceedings of the lower courts; so that for this reason the court has overruled the motion for an order to the court of appeals to certify its record in the case.

Strictly speaking, therefore, the supreme court did not pass upon the merits of any question that might be made in the court below, save in so far as it was necessary to do so in order to determine the probability of the intervention of error prejudicial to the state, which was the complaining party.

Two separate opinions were rendered in the lower courts, one by Bigger, J., of the common pleas court, and one by Kunkle, J., for the court of appeals. Judge Bigger in interpreting section 5518 of the General Code, in connection with the sections providing for the collection of the tax and particularly sections 5415 and 5416, General Code, held that when a corporation organized for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad or other public utility has leased its entire plant to another corporation, together with the authority to operate it, the entire enterprise constitutes but one "public utility" for the purposes of the law; so that the payment of excise taxes measured by the gross earnings of that utility is to be taken as a substitute for payment of any franchise taxes on account of the corporate franchises of the lessor and lessee, respectively. This interpretation of the statutes constituted one ground of Judge Bigger's decision.

The common pleas court went further, however, and held that the Hollinger act of 1911 was to be regarded, so far as what is now section 5518 of the General Code was concerned, as merely a revision or codification of the previous law which had been interpreted by the courts in the case of The State v. The Cleveland & Pittsburgh Railroad Company. The court therefore regarded the verbal changes that were made in the section as compared with original section 7 of the Willis law of 1902 as not intended to change the substance of the law. Hence, it would follow that the case of The State v. The Cleveland & Pittsburgh Railroad Company is controlling under the new law as well as under the old.

These two grounds of decision are quite distinct, as will be observed. Both of them are put forward by Judge Bigger as reasons for his judgment.

The court of appeals did not render a lengthy opinion in the matter, contenting itself with a general approval of what Judge Bigger had said in his opinion, but giving express sanction to the second ground of decision noted in the above analysis of the opinion of the common pleas court, namely, that the new law was a virtual revision of the old and that the former decision was controlling. It does not appear, however, that the court of appeals intended to disapprove the other reasoning of Judge Bigger.

The answer to your question depends upon which of these two grounds of decision is accepted. If the first is the true rule, then the case may be regarded as deciding merely that a public utility corporation which has leased all of its property to another company, which is operating the plant, is not liable for franchise taxes.

If the second ground of decision is adopted, it would seem, according to the opinion of Judge Winch in the Cleveland & Pittsburgh case, 2 Ohio App. Rep., 228, that all corporations which are organized for the purpose of constructing and operating a given public utility, such as a railroad or an interurban railroad, would because of their names, so to speak, never become liable for franchise taxes.

In spite of the express dicta of the courts on the point, I can not bring myself to the conclusion that the second ground of decision is to be taken as adjudicated law. To do so would do too much violence to present section 5518 of the General Code in its application to public utilities. The language is:

> "An incorporated company, whether foreign or domestic, owning or operating a public utility in this state, and as such required by law to file reports with the tax commission and to pay an excise tax upon its gross receipts or gross earnings * * *" shall be exempt from the franchise tax.

It is very clear that at the very least the ownership of a public utility is required in order to satisfy the terms of this section. What the lower courts really meant in stating in substance that the Cleveland & Pittsburgh case was still a controlling decision in spite of the amendment of the statute was, I think, that the statute was to be regarded as merely a revision of the pre-existing law, in so far as that law applied to so-called "underlying companies," that is to say, to lessor companies and those in a similar situation. I am satisfied that at the least the remarks of the courts must be limited to the case which was before them.

I therefore advise that all that can be taken as distinctly decided by the case to which you refer is that "underlying companies," which is to say, companies which have leased public utilities to "operating companies" but still retain their general ownership, are exempt from the franchise tax. The case decides nothing as to corporations which have been organized for public utility purposes but which have never acquired ownership of a public utility by construction or purchase thereof, or which have abandoned the operation of the public utility or parted with all property therein. As to all such companies it may be said, I think, that the words of the statute do not exempt them and that until it is held otherwise by the courts at least your commission should rule that the franchise tax is due from them.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—EXPENSES—CONSULTATION WITH STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT.

The county surveyor who upon his own motion makes a trip to Columbus to consult with the state highway department concerning road and bridge matters may be allowed his expenses incurred in so doing when such trip is made in good faith.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 3, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of September 27, 1917, as follows:

"Can a county surveyor, who, upon his own motion, makes a trip to Columbus to consult with the state highway department, concerning road and bridge matters, be allowed his expenses incurred in so doing under the provisions of section 2786 G. C., or any other section?"

Section 2786 of the General Code reads:

"The county surveyor shall keep his office at the county seat in such room or rooms as are provided by the county commissioners, which shall be furnished with all necessary cases and other suitable articles, at the expense of the county. Such office shall also be furnished with all tools, instruments, books, blanks and stationery necessary for the proper discharge of the official duties of the county surveyor. The cost and expense of such equipment shall be allowed and paid from the general fund of the county upon the approval of the county commissioners. The county surveyor and each assistant and deputy shall be allowed his reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of his official duties."

Section 7191 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., 115, reads:

"The county surveyor may request advice and assistance from the state highway commissioner in all matters relating to his duties. In so far as the highways, bridges and culverts under the control of the state are concerned the county surveyor shall be governed in the conduct of his work by the instructions of the state highway commissioner as issued from time to time for the guidance of county surveyors."

It will be noted that section 7191 G. C. provides that "the county surveyor may request advice and assistance from the state highway commissioner in all matters relating to his duties." I think it must be admitted that a county engineer may not always find it practical to advise with the state highway commissioner by letter, since advice upon engineering matters often involve the examination of plans and discussion of the same. If, therefore, it becomes necessary in a given case for the county surveyor to consult the state highway commissioner personally, there is but one way to accomplish this and that is by the surveyor making a trip to Columbus. In such case it is my opinion that his actual and necessary expenses might be paid under section 2786.

Of course this practice might be abused in some instances, but in the case you submit I find no hint of any such abuse and I am assuming that the trip you refer to was made in perfect good faith.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE BUILDING CODE—PROVISIONS DO NOT APPLY TO DWELLINGS—CITY COUNCIL—LOCAL BOARD OF HEALTH—MAY NOT ENACT ORDINANCE OR RESOLUTION BY REFERENCE ONLY.

The provisions of the state building code do not apply to dwellings.

It is not within the province of a city council or local board of health to enact an ordinance or a resolution by reference only, without giving specific or detailed requirements and to include therein the provisions of the Ohio building code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 3, 1917.

HON. JAMES E. BAUMAN, Secretary and Executive Officer, State Department of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in which you ask this department to review the holdings of my predecessors wherein they have held that the state building code does not apply to dwellings.

You call attention to a number of the provisions of part 4 of the state building code, under the title of "Sanitation," and you contend that these provisions clearly show that they apply to dwellings.

You also submit the following question:

> "Is it within the province of a city council or local board of health to enact an ordinance or resolution by reference only, without giving specifications or detailed requirements, and to make the provisions of part 4, sanitation, Ohio building code, sections 12600-137 to 12600-273 General Code, inclusive, applicable to buildings or persons not affected or included in the administrative and penalty sections, Nos. 12600-274 to 12600-282 General Code, inclusive?"

In view of the conclusions herein reached, it will not be necessary to quote the provisions of the statutes to which you have called attention. These provisions and others no doubt were under consideration by Honorable Timothy S. Hogan, when he states in an opinion to the state board of health, under date of June 25, 1912, and recorded in volume 1, page 821, of the attorney general's reports for 1912:

> "Provisions not germane to the title, and really not intended to apply to other than public matters, have possibly by inadvertence crept into its 142 pages. I cannot see my way clearly to say that this act was ever intended to apply to the owner or occupant of a family homestead, or dwelling, or a single lot in a village as to his sewerage, vault, or use thereof. While the sections relative thereto, cited by you, standing alone, might include the dwelling or a village town lot; yet, I think these sections must be construed in the light of the whole act, and not taken verbatim et liberatim."

In this opinion Mr. Hogan holds that the state building code does not apply to dwellings. He makes the same holding in an opinion under date of July 12, 1912, to your board, and found at page 823 of the above report.

The first opinion, and which is the one referred to by you in your letter, is found at page 1638 of volume 2, reports of the attorney-general for the year 1911.

Honorable Edward C. Turner, as attorney-general, makes a like holding in an opinion to your board, under date of December 8, 1915, and reported in volume 3, page 2348, opinions of the attorney-general for the year 1915.

After carefully considering these opinions and the sections referred to by you, I see no reason for overruling the holdings of my predecessors and I therefore conclude with them that the state building code does not apply to dwellings.

Your second question is in reference to the right of a municipality to enact an ordinance which by reference merely will include and cover the specifications of the state building code covering the law of sanitation, without specifically reciting the provisions of said act in the ordinance.

The statutes provide the method in which municipalities may enact ordinances.

Section 4224, General Code, provides:

> "The action of council shall be by ordinance or resolution, and on the passage of each ordinance or resolution the vote shall be taken by 'yeas' and 'nays' and entered upon the journal, but this shall not apply to the ordering of an election, or direction by council to any board or officer to furnish council with information as to the affairs of any department or office. No by-law, ordinance or resolution of a general or permanent nature, or granting a franchise, or creating a right, or involving the expenditure of money, or the levying of a tax, or for the purchase, lease, sale, or transfer of property, shall be passed, unless it has been fully and distinctly read on three different days, and with respect to any such by-law, ordinance or resolution, there shall be no authority to dispense with this rule, except by a three-fourths vote of all members elected thereto, taken by yeas and nays, on each by-law, resolution or ordinance, and entered on the journal. No ordinance shall be passed by council without the concurrence of a majority of all members elected thereto."

Section 4226 General Code provides:

"No ordinance, resolution or by-law shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. No by-law or ordinance, or section thereof, shall be revived or amended, unless the new by-law or ordinance contains the entire by-law or ordinance, or section revived or amended, and the by-law or ordinance, section or sections so amended shall be repealed. Each such by-law, resolution and ordinance shall be adopted or passed by a separate vote of the council and the yeas and nays shall be entered upon the journal."

This latter section refers to amendments of an ordinance or by-law, and it specifically provides that "no by-law or ordinance, or section thereof, shall be revived or amended, unless the new by-law or ordinance contains the entire by-law or ordinance, or section revived or amended."

This provision is like the provision contained in the constitution of the state of Ohio which governs the general assembly as to laws passed by it. Article II, section 16, of the constitution reads, in part, as follows:

"Every bill shall be fully and distinctly read on three different days, unless in case of urgency three-fourths of the house in which it shall be pending, shall dispense with the rule. No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, and no law shall be revived, or amended unless the new act contains the entire act revived, or the section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed."

This provision of the constitution clearly shows that it was intended that bills should not be enacted by reference merely, but that each act should contain the entire provision to be enacted into law. The same general provision is contained in section 4226, General Code, as to ordinances.

While there is no express provision that an original act or ordinance shall contain the entire act or ordinance, yet the same principle and general rule will apply.

There is no authority, therefore, for a municipality to enact an ordinance and by reference merely to include therein statutory provisions. This same principle will apply to rules made by the local board of health. This is shown by the provisions of section 4413, General Code, which reads as follows:

"The board of health of a municipality may make such orders and regulations as it deems necessary for its own government, for the public health, the prevention or restriction of disease, and the prevention, abatement or suppression of nuisances. Orders and regulations not for the government of the board, but intended for the general public, shall be adopted, advertised, recorded and certified as are ordinances of municipalities, and the record thereof shall be given, in all courts of the state, the same force and effect as is given such ordinances."

Your second question is, therefore, answered in the negative.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—AMITY RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT—BOARD OF EDUCATION—SPECIAL MEETING—NOTICE REQUIRED.

A special meeting of a board of education can be legally called only by the service of notice thereof on the members in the manner provided by section 4751 General Code; and proceedings of such board providing for an issue of bonds of the school district are invalid where vital action pertaining thereto was taken at a special meeting from which one member was absent, where no written notice of the meeting had been served on each member of the board in the manner provided by said section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 3, 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In re: Bond issue of Amity rural school district in the sum of $8,000, for the purpose of building and equipping a new school building in said school district.

I am herewith returning to you, without my approval, transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Amity rural school district relating to the above bond issue. The transcript shows that the meeting of the board of education, under date of January 16, 1917, at which the board of education adopted the resolution providing for the submission of the question of said bond issue to the electors of the school district, was a special meeting, but the transcript fails to show that this meeting was called in the manner provided in section 4751 of the General Code. Neither has the board of education been willing or able to give me any assurance that notice of this meeting was given in the manner required by said section. Inasmuch as one of the members of the board of education was not present at this meeting, I find no escape from the conclusion that said meeting was illegal and that the bond issue is wholly unauthorized.

Kattman v. Board of Education, 15 O. C. C. (n. s.), 232.

The meeting of the board of education under date of March 26, 1917, at which pursuant to the election the resolution was adopted providing for the issue of the bonds in question, was likewise a special meeting with respect to which the transcript fails to show that the same was called in the manner required by section 4751 General Code. All the members of the board of education were present at this meeting, however, and this circumstance probably cured the irregularity with respect to the legal character of this meeting. By reason, however, of the fatal irregularity with respect to the first meeting of the board of education, above noted, I am compelled to disapprove said bond issue and to advise you not to purchase the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE—IMPLIED AUTHORITY TO PURCHASE LAND TO ESTABLISH FISH HATCHERIES.

In carrying out the provisions of section 1390 G. C. (107 O. L. 486) the secretary of agriculture has the implied power, if not express authority, to purchase such lands as he may need in order to enable him to establish necessary fish hatcheries to propagate fish for the waters of the state. However, a purchase of lands for this purpose could not be made unless the legislature has appropriated money which could be used for said purpose.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 3, 1917.

HONORABLE N. E. SHAW, Secretary of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 10, 1917, which communication reads as follows:

> "This department has in operation at Chagrin Falls a small hatchery consisting of three ponds fed by a flow of spring water for a distance of five miles. In view of the fact that the demand for fish for stocking purposes has become so great, not only for this district but in all parts of the state, we find it necessary to enlarge the hatchery at Chagrin Falls.
> We have an opportunity to purchase additional grounds containing approximately four acres, adjacent to the hatchery, for the sum of $1,100.00. Mr. I. S. Myers, member of our board, and Mr. A. C. Baxter made a careful inspection of this site and found it very suitable for this purpose. The land lays entirely within the village of Chagrin Falls, and the price is considered very reasonable, but purchase must be made promptly if this price holds good.
> If this purchase meets with your approval, I should like to be advised at your earliest convenience."

The concluding paragraph of your communication is as follows:

> "If this purchase meets with your approval, I should like to be advised at your earliest convenience."

I take it, however, that it is not so much my approval of the purchase under contemplation that you desire, but rather as to whether you have authority under the law to make the purchase.

In examining the statutes carefully I find no provision whatever requiring the attorney-general to approve a purchase of lands made by you for the purposes set out in your communication; but there might be a question raised as to whether you have authority, as the agent of the state, to purchase lands to provide for a fish hatchery.

I might suggest in passing that the provision in reference to the acquiring of lands for the establishment of game preserves is much more definite and specific than is the provision in reference to purchasing lands for fish hatcheries.

Section 1423 G. C., 107 O. L., 488, provides, in part, as follows:

> "* * * At least fifty per cent of the money arising from all such licenses shall be expended by the secretary for the purchase and propagation of game birds and game animals to be used in restocking sections where a scarcity of such birds and game animals exist and for establishing and purchasing or otherwise acquiring title to lands for game preserves, and the secretary is hereby empowered to organize such lands into game preserves, * * *."

Here the provision is definite and specific to the effect that the secretary may purchase lands for the purpose of establishing game preserves; but when we turn to fish hatcheries the provision is not so definite and specific.

Section 1390 G. C., 107 O. L., 486, provides as follows:

> "The secretary of agriculture shall have authority and control in all matters pertaining to the protection, preservation and propagation of song and insectivorous birds, game birds, game animals and fish within the state and in and upon the waters thereof. He shall enforce by proper legal action or proceedings the laws of the state for the protection, preservation and propagation of such birds, animals and fish; shall establish fish hatcheries and propagate fish therein or in any other manner for the waters of the state, and, so far as funds are provided therefor, shall adopt and carry into effect such measures as he deems necessary in the performance of his duties."

It will be noticed under this section that the secretary of agriculture is commanded to establish fish hatcheries and propagate fish therein or in any other manner for the waters of the state, and, so far as he may have funds, he is ordered to adopt and carry into effect such measures as he deems necessary in the performance of his duties.

There are other provisions of the General Code which make it quite evident that the secretary of agriculture is authorized and empowered to maintain fish hatcheries. For example, in section 1454 G. C., 107 O. L., 489, we find the following:

> "Nothing in this chapter shall prevent the secretary of agriculture, his agents and employes from taking fish at any time or place or in any manner for the maintenance or cultivation of fish in hatcheries."

and in section 1455 G. C., 107 O. L., 490, we have the following:

"For the purpose of obtaining spawn for the fish hatcheries, the secretary of agriculture may place his agents in any boat used in taking fish and pay for such spawn such amount as he may fix."

From all these provisions, both directly and indirectly, the secretary of agriculture is authorized and empowered to establish fish hatcheries, but in none of these provisions, nor in any other provision of the General Code with which I am familiar, is he authorized specifically and directly to purchase lands upon which fish hatcheries may be established.

But the provision of law is quite familiar that when a public official is empowered and authorized, and as in section 1390 G. C. is commanded to do a certain thing, he has power and authority to do all those things which are necessary to enable him to perform the duties which are placed upon him by law. That is, he has the implied power to do those things which are essential to enable him to carry out those things which he is expressly authorized to carry out. Of course, it is quite evident that the secretary of agriculture cannot establish fish hatcheries without acquiring land upon which the same may be established. Further, said section 1390 G. C. itself provides that he "shall adopt and carry into effect such measures as he deems necessary in the performance of his duties."

From all the above, it is my opinion that if the secretary of agriculture deems it necessary in order to enable him to carry out the duties which are imposed upon him in reference to fish hatcheries to purchase or acquire lands in the name of the state, he is impliedly authorized, if not expressly authorized, under the provisions of section 1390 G. C. to so purchase lands. In purchasing land, to be sure, he should use sound discretion as to the location thereof and the price he should pay for the same. Such is the general power and authority of the secretary of agriculture in the matter referred to by you in your communication.

We now come to the question as to whether you have authority to enter into a contract for the specific purchase set out in your communication. While you have the general power to purchase and acquire lands for the purpose of establishing fish hatcheries upon the same, yet unless an appropriation has been made for the purpose of acquiring land by you, you would have no power or authority to enter into a contract to purchase, and this for the reason that there could be no obligation created against the state without an appropriation having been made.

"It shall be unlawful for any officer, board or commission of the state to enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the expenditure of money, unless the auditor of state shall first certify that there is a balance in the appropriation pursuant to which such obligation is required to be paid, not otherwise obligated to pay precedent obligations."

When we turn to the provisions of the appropriation act as passed by the last general assembly we find no provision made which would enable you to carry out the specific object which you have in mind. It is true on page 197 of 107 Ohio Laws the legislature appropriated $25,000.00 for "fish propagation and distribution," but when we turn to page 194 of the same volume we find that this is for "contract and open order service." This upon its face would evidently not include the matter of purchasing real estate, and further the bill itself shows that this was not the intention because when we turn to page 340 we find a division styled "additions and betterments." Under this heading of "additions and betterments" we find, on page 344, the heading "fish and game." The only appropriation that is made under this particular heading is $1,000.00 for drainage of the London hatchery.

From all the above it is quite evident that the legislature has not seen fit to make appropriation for the purchase of real estate by you for the purposes set out in your communication. Hence, there having been no appropriation made you could not enter into a valid contract for the purchase of the real estate mentioned by you in your communication. So that while you have the general authority under section 1390 G. C. to purchase real estate, yet you cannot purchase at this particular time, due to the fact that no appropriation has been made for payment for the land which would be purchased.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CANDIDATE—WHEN NOTICE OF WITHDRAWAL MUST BE FILED WITH BOARD OF ELECTIONS.

1. Where five days before the election candidates file written notices of withdrawal with the board of elections, such withdrawals come too late to affect the duties devolving upon election officers in counting, canvassing and abstracting the votes.

2. The withdrawal of a candidate to be effectual must be filed with the deputy supervisors of elections before they have provided for the printing of the ballots.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 3, 1917.

HON. J. P. HUXLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your telegram to me reads as follows:

> "All candidates for city solicitor except B————, Republican, have given written notice to board of elections of withdrawal of their candidacy. Should votes cast for those who have withdrawn be counted by the board?"

You do not say when the withdrawing candidates filed their written notices of withdrawal, but I take it that same must have been done very recently and that such fact occasioned your telegram.

It will be necessary to consider several sections of the election law which bear upon the question submitted.

Section 5010 G. C. provides:

> "If a person nominated as herein provided die, withdraw, or decline the nomination, or if a certificate of nomination is insufficient or imperfect, the vacancy thus occasioned, may be filled or the defect corrected in the manner required for original nominations. Such nomination to fill a vacancy, or corrected certificate must be certified to the secretary of state at least thirty days or to the board of deputy state supervisors at least twenty-five days previous to the day of election. If, when the original nomination was certified, there was certified a committee authorized to represent the party, as herein provided, it may fill such vacancy."

Section 5012 G. C. will have no application because it merely refers to a vacancy caused by the death of a candidate.

It will be seen from section 5010 G. C. that provision is made for the filling of a nomination that has been declined or when a person nominated has withdrawn, provided the certificate to fill the vacancy is certified to the deputy state supervisors of elections at least twenty-five days previous to the day of election.

So if this were a case of filling a vacancy, the time for such filling having gone by, no vacancy could be filled. But your question really has to do with the duties of the election officers at and after the election, and whether such officers can pay any attention to the withdrawal of the candidacy thus made a few days before the election.

In State ex rel. v. Taylor, Sec'y of State, 55 O. S. 385, the supreme court had before it a question regarding the omission from a ticket of the name of a candidate who subsequently withdrew, there being no nomination to fill the vacancy. The court held in the first paragraph of the syllabus as follows:

> "It is the imperative duty of the secretary of state, as state supervisor of elections, to send to the deputy supervisors the form of ballot to be used at an approaching election immediately upon the expiration of the time allowed for correcting certificates of nomination."

And further held that since the withdrawal of the candidate had not been filed prior to the time when, in the performance of his duties, the secretary of state would have sent out the form of ballot, such withdrawal was too late and that the name should appear upon the ballot.

At p. 391 the court says:

> "All the supervisors are charged with important and clearly defined duties with respect to the filling of vacancies. It is not their duty to aid in the creation of vacancies that are not to be filled."

So in the instant case, as far as the ballot is concerned, which is to be delivered to the elector, a withdrawal, after the ballot has been prepared by the supervisors of elections, is wholly unavailing. It is the same as if no withdrawal had been filed at all. Withdrawals to be effectual must certainly be prior to the time of the printing of the ballots or prior to the time within which, under the law, the supervisors of elections should have printed the ballots.

Under the so-called absent voters' law, section 5078-1 et seq. G. C. (107 O. L. 52), an elector who finds that he will be unavoidably absent from his home precinct on election day may, by taking the proper steps, obtain a ballot and cast same.

Section 5078-3 G. C. (107 O. L. 54) provides that at any time not more than thirty days nor less than three days prior to the day of election, the elector who has made application for and received the absent voter's supplies therein provided for, may appear before the proper officer and mark and seal his ballot and have same returned to the deputy supervisors of elections of his home county for proper casting on election day. This presupposes that at sometime not later than thirty days before the election the deputy supervisors of elections shall have had the ballots printed; otherwise the applications received from absent voters could not be attended to.

I take it under the law that the city ticket in question had been duly prepared at least thirty days prior to the election and that opportunities have been given to the absent voters of Youngstown to receive the official ballot and to mark and return same, for a long time prior to the filling of the withdrawals of the candidates in question.

Absent voters may have voted for these very candidates who are now seeking to have their names withdrawn. These absent voters' ballots, as well as the ballots cast at the different precincts in your city on election day, must necessarily contain the names that have been printed upon the official ballot, and when the judges come to count the ballots on the closing of the polls, their duty is no different than it is under all other circumstances; that is, the mere fact that knowledge has been brought home to them that some person has withdrawn, gives them no right or authority to allow that knowledge to affect the performance of their official duties in casting and counting the vote.

Section 5083 G. C. provides for the counting of the votes.

Section 5088 G. C. provides that the clerk shall enter in separate columns by tallies under or opposite the names of the persons voted for, all the votes read by the judges, and that after the examination of the ballots has been completed, the number of votes for each person shall be enumerated under the inspection of the judges and set down as provided in the form of the tally sheets.

In your telegram you ask whether or not the "votes cast for those who have withdrawn be counted by the board." Of course the deputy supervisors of elections have nothing to do with the counting of the votes cast at the polls on election day. The returns of such voting come to them under the provisions of section 5093 G. C., and it is from such returns that the board makes the abstract required by section 5094 G. C.

In view of the foregoing it is my opinion that the duties of the election officers require that they count all the votes cast for any person on any ticket on the ballot; that the mere fact that some of the candidates, whose names appear on the ballot, have withdrawn since the printing of the ballots, has no effect whatever; that it is the duty of the election officers to transmit the returns of the election in their respective precincts to the deputy supervisors of elections, without respect to any withdrawals; and further that the deputy supervisors of elections, in their duty of obstracting the returns, can pay no attention to the fact that there is on file in their office withdrawals of certain candidates. If a man is voted for at an election in any manner, receives the highest number of votes for the office, and is duly qualified therefor, he is elected to said office. If he does not want the office, he need not qualify, or if he qualifies, it is in his power to resign.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND SALE—DELIVERY OF BOND TO PURCHASER—BIDS.

Where bonds are sold at public sale in conformity with law, the notice of proposals as published, making no specifications relative to delivery, no expense in connection with such delivery is payable from public funds.

Officers of a taxing district cannot legally insert in the notice for proposals for the public sale of bonds, a clause stating that the bonds will be delivered to the city or office of the purchaser.

Where no specification relative to delivery is embodied in the notice for proposals for the public sale of bonds, and a bidder inserts in his bid, that the bid is based upon the bonds being delivered at his bond house or city, such bid does not comply with the advertisement for proposals and is not a legal bid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 3, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of October 12, 1917, you submit the following inquiries:

> "Where bonds are sold at public sale in conformity with law, the notice for proposals as published making no specifications whatever relative to delivery, is any expense in connection with such delivery payable from public funds?
> May the officers of a taxing district legally insert in the notice for proposals as published in clause stating that the bonds will be delivered to the purchaser?
> Where no specification relative to delivery is embodied in the notice for proposals as published, and a bidder inserts in his bid that the bid is based upon the bonds being delivered at his bond house or city, can such bid in this form be legally accepted by the officers of a taxing district?
> If your answer to question 3 be in the affirmative, what officer, or officers, are entitled to draw from the public funds the expense of such delivery?
> If your answer be that expenses incurred in delivery of bonds to the purchaser are legally payable from public funds, in view of the statutory requirements that the proceeds of bond sale can only be used for the purpose for which such bonds are issued, from what funds could such expenses of delivery be legally paid?"

Your question covering all bonds issued by any political subdivision will be answered, however, in reference to sales made under authority of sections 2294 and 3924 General Code. Section 2294 General Code reads as follows:

> "All bonds issued by boards of county commissioners, boards of education, township trustees, or commissioners of free turnpikes, shall be sold to the highest bidder after being advertised once a week for three consecutive weeks and on the same day of the week, in a newspaper having general circulation in the county where the bonds are issued, and, if the amount of bonds to be sold exceeds twenty thousand dollars, like publications shall be made in an additional newspaper having general circulation in the state. The advertisement shall state the total amount and denomination of bonds to be sold, how long they are to run, the rate of interest to be paid thereon, whether annually or semi-annually, the law or section of law authorizing the issue, the day, hour and place in the county where they are to be sold."

Section 2295 General Code provides:

"None of such bonds shall be sold for less than the face thereof with any interest that may have accrued thereon, and the privilege shall be reserved of rejection of any or all bids. When such bonds have been once advertised and offered at public sale, as provided by law, and they, or any part thereof, remain unsold, those unsold may be sold at private sale at not less than their par value and accrued interest. All moneys from the principal on the sale of such bonds shall be credited to the fund on account of which the bonds are issued and sold, and all moneys from premiums and accrued interest on the sale of such bonds shall be credited to the sinking fund from which said bonds are to be redeemed."

Section 3924 General Code provides as follows:

"Sales of bonds, other than to the trustees of the sinking fund of the city or to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the city school district as herein authorized by any municipal corporation, shall be to the highest and best bidder, after publishing notice thereof for four consecutive weeks in two newspapers printed and of general circulation in the county where such municipal corporation is situated, setting forth the nature, amount, rate of interest, and length of time the bonds have to run, with the time and place of sale. Additional notice may be published outside of such county by order of the council, but when such bonds have been once so advertised and offered for public sale, and they, or any part thereof, remain unsold, those unsold may be sold at private sale at not less than their par value, under the directions of the mayor and the officers and agents of the corporation by whom such bonds have been, or may be, prepared, advertised and offered at public sale."

Section 3926 General Code, reads as follows:

"Municipal corporations may issue bonds and other obligations in such denominations as the council may determine and sell them at popular subscription at a price of not less than par. Such bonds may be issued as registered or coupon bonds, or payable to bearer only, and provision may be made for the redemption, retirement or reissue of them. All such bonds shall be first offered the sinking fund trustees as is provided in the preceding sections, and shall be advertised and sold as provided in such sections, setting forth the amount of bonds to be sold and the denomination in which they will be issued, with an invitation for tenders for all or part of such issue. Such advertisement shall state the time and place when tenders will be opened and the award made. All tenders shall be in sealed envelope and shall not be opened until the day and hour specified in the advertisement. At the time so specified the tenders shall be opened."

The foregoing sections provide the manner in which sales of bonds by municipal corporations and by county commissioners and other political divisions shall be made. They also provide for the advertisement of such sale and such advertisements are to state the time and place of sale.

There are no provisions in these sections, which would authorize the delivery of these bonds at any place other than in the political subdivision making sale thereof.

Attention is called to the provisions of section 1465-58 General Code, in reference to the offering of bonds to the industrial commission of Ohio. There is specific provision contained in this section which authorizes the delivery of bonds to the state treasury. This section reads as follows:

> "The state liability board of awards shall have the power to invest any of the surplus or reserve belonging to the state insurance fund in bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or of any county, city, village or school district of the state of Ohio, at current market prices for such bonds; provided that such purchase be authorized by a resolution adopted by the board and approved by the governor; and it shall be the duty of the boards or officers of the several taxing districts of the state in the issuance and sale of bonds of their respective taxing districts, to offer in writing to the state liability board of awards, prior to advertising the same for sale, all such issues as may not have been taken by the trustees of the sinking fund of the taxing district so issuing such bonds; and said board shall, within ten days after the receipt of such written offer either accept the same and purchase such bonds or any portion thereof at par value and accrued interest, or reject such offer in writing; and all such bonds so purchased forthwith shall be placed in the hands of the treasurer of state, who is hereby designated as custodian thereof, and it shall be his duty to collect the interest thereon as the same becomes due and payable, and also the principal thereof, and to pay the same, when so collected, into the state insurance fund. The treasurer of state shall honor and pay all vouchers drawn on the state insurance fund for the payment of such bonds when signed by any two members of the board, upon delivery of said bonds to him when there is attached to such voucher a certified copy of such resolution of the board authorizing the purchase of such bonds; and the board may sell any of said bonds upon like resolution, and the proceeds thereof shall be paid by the purchaser to the treasurer of state upon delivery to him of said bonds by the treasurer."

There is no other authority of statutes for any officer to make delivery of bonds at any place outside of the political district of which he is an officer.

In order for such officer to make delivery in any other place, specific authority of statute would be required. As there is none, such delivery could not be legally made. The statutes contemplate that delivery shall be made at the offices of the officer or boards making the sales of bonds. This places all bidders upon an equal footing.

Answering your questions specifically:

1. Where bonds are sold at public sale in conformity with law, the notice of proposals as published, making no specifications relative to delivery, no expense in connection with such delivery is payable from public funds.

2. Officers of a taxing district cannot legally insert in the notice for proposals for the public sale of bonds, a clause stating that the bonds will be delivered to the city or office of the purchaser.

3. When no specification relative to delivery is embodied in the notice for proposals for the public sale of bonds and a bidder inserts in his bid, that the bid is based upon the bonds being delivered at his bond house or city, such bid does not comply with the advertisement for proposals and is not a legal bid.

This disposes of your fourth and fifth questions and they need not be answered.

We understand that there has been a general practice of delivering these bonds to the buyers at the expense of the political subdivision, and we recommend that no finding be made as to past transactions.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE BY WELLINGTON VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT, LORAIN COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 3, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—IN RE Bonds of Wellington village school district, Lorain county, Ohio, in the sum of $8,500.00, for improving the school building within said school district and providing sanitary facilities therefor.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Wellington village school district relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRANSFER OF TERRITORY—SECTION 4696 G. C. RELATIVE TO FILING PETITION FOR TRANSFER OF TERRITORY DOES NOT APPLY—WHEN TRANSFER IS MADE FROM ONE DISTRICT TO ANOTHER WITHIN COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICT.

The provisions of section 4696, relative to the filing of a petition for transfer of territory from one county school district to another, or from one county school district to an exempted village school district, do not apply when territory is transferred from one district to another within the county school district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1917.

HON. S. L. GREGORY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wilmington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:— In your inquiry for my opinion you say:

> "'Garrison Corner' district, which joins Blanchester village school district on the south has petitioned the county board of education of Clinton county to transfer their district to Blanchester for school purposes, 26 out of a possible 30 voters signing the petition. Both districts are in Marion township, Clinton county, Ohio, and are contiguous. Blanchester village school district is under the supervision of the county superintendent but has its own individual superintendent and is not under the supervision of a district superintendent.
> "Now will section 4696, Laws of Ohio, page 397, vol. 105-106, apply where it says 'If 75 per cent of the qualified voters or electors sign the petition the county board must transfer?'"

When you say that "both districts are in Marion township, Clinton county, Ohio," I am taking it that you mean both of said districts, that is, the Garrison

Corner district and the Blanchester village district, are in Clinton county school district.

Section 4696 G. C. reads:

> "A county board of education may transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining exempted village school district or city school district, or to another county school district, provided at least fifty per centum of the electors of the territory to be transferred petition for such transfer. Provided, however, that if at least seventy-five per cent. of the electors of the territory petition for such transfer the county board of education shall make such transfer. No such transfer shall be in effect until the county board of education and the board of education to which the territory is to be transferred each pass resolutions by a majority vote of the full membership of each board and until an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness be decided upon by the boards of education acting in the transfer; also a map shall be filed with the auditor or auditors of the county or counties affected by such transfer."

That is to say, the county board of education of Clinton county may transfer a part or all of a school district of said county school district to an exempted village school district or to a city district or another county school district.

An exempted village school district is defined by section 4688 G. C., which reads:

> "The board of education of any village school district containing a village which according to the last federal census had a population of three thousand or more, may decide by a majority vote of the full membership thereof not to become a part of the county school district. Such village district by notifying the county board of education of such decision before the third Saturday of July, 1914, shall be exempt from the supervision of the board."

So that, an exempted village district is one which is not under county or district supervision, but in your case you say the district has county supervision, that is, it is under the direct supervision of the county superintendent, and if such be the case said district would not be an exempted village district but would be a separate supervision district, which class of districts is defined by section 4740 G. C., which reads:

> "Any village or wholly centralized rural school district or union of school districts for high school purposes which maintains a first grade high school and which employs a superintendent shall upon application to the county board of education before June 1st of any year be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district by resolution shall petition to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district. Such superintendents shall perform all the duties prescribed by law for a district superintendent, but shall teach such part of each day as the board of education of the district or districts may direct."

The district, then, being a separate supervision district, and being in the same county school district in which the contiguous district lies, transfer, if any be made, would not be made under the provisions of General Code section 4696, but under the provisions of section 4692, or, 4736 in case a new district was formed. That the provisions of section 4696 do not apply to the transfer of territory from one school district to another in the same county school district is settled by the case of Board of Education v. DeTray, 95 O. S. In that case territory was transferred from one county school district to another and a majority of the residents of the territory so transferred filed a remonstrance within thirty days seeking to prevent such transfer from becoming effective, and while it was admitted that the transfer was made under and by authority of the provisions of section 4696, yet it was contended that because sections 4696, 4692 and 4736 were all enacted in the same bill, the provisions with reference to circumstances which were contained in section 4692 and 4736 should also apply to section 4696.

Mathias, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, used the following language:

> "The action of the boards of education of the two counties is authorized by section 4696 General Code, which provides that a part or all of a school district of the county school district may be transferred to an adjoining exempted village school district or city school district, or to another county school district, provided at least fifty per centum of the electors of the territory to be transferred petition therefor, and that if at least seventy-five per cent of the electors petition therefor the county board of education shall make such transfer. * * * Under section 4692 the county board may transfer territory from one district to another within the county without petition, but a majority of the electors, by filing a remonstrance, within thirty days, may avoid or veto the action of the board of education; whereas, on the other hand, under section 4696, territory cannot be transferred from one county school district to a district of another county until at least fifty per cent of the electors residing in the territory proposed to be transferred seeks the same by petition.
> A county board of education may transfer territory to another county district upon the petition of fifty per cent of the qualified electors of the territory to be so transferred, and must make such transfer upon the petition of seventy-five per cent of such electors. If the provision of section 4692, with reference to remonstrances, applied to proceedings under section 4696, then it would be possible for a bare majority of the electors to recall the action of the board of education initiated by the petition of fifty per cent of the electors of such territory; and such remonstrance would have a like effect even if the proceedings to transfer such territory had been initiated by at least seventy-five per cent of the electors of the territory, and the board of education had acted pursuant to the mandatory provisions of section 4696.
> It is therefore quite apparent that although these two sections of the General Code were enacted at the same time and as a part of the same general legislation, the provision for a remonstrance has to do only with the proceeding provided for in section 4692, and has no application whatever to a proceeding pursuant to provisions of section 4696."

If, then, the provisions for a remonstrance which are contained in section 4692 cannot apply, when territory is transferred from one county school district to another, or from one county school district to an exempted village district, it must be equally clear that the provisions of section 4696 cannot apply to a transfer of territory which must be made under section 4692. That is to say, territory is only transferred upon a petition of fifty per cent of the electors or upon seventy-five per cent, as the case may be, when such territory is from one county school district to another, or from one county school district to an exempted village school district, or to a city district, and said provisions do not apply where the territory is transferred from one district to another in the same county school district.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that the provisions of section 4696 do not apply to the transfer of territory where both districts are in Marion township, Clinton county school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CRIMINAL DOCKET—MAYOR OR POLICE JUDGE HAS NO AUTHORITY UNDER SECTION 1742 TO RETAIN PART OF FINES COLLECTED TO PAY FOR SAME.

Neither a mayor nor a police judge has authority, under section 1742 or any other section of the General Code, to retain a part of the fines or penalties collected by him to pay for criminal dockets used in the performance of his duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 5, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of September 28, 1917 received, in which you ask for the following information:

> "Section 1742 G. C. clearly provides how a justice of the peace may be provided with dockets for use in his court.
> Can a mayor of a municipality, which contains a mayor's court, or a judge of a police court, secure their criminal dockets in like manner?"

The section to which you refer in your communication provides in part as follows:

> "Sec. 1742. A justice of the peace may retain out of fines or other moneys belonging to the county coming into his hands in criminal proceedings, the amount paid for a criminal docket, * * * . A justice of the peace paying out money for such purpose shall file with the county auditor, at the expiration of his term of office, a sworn itemized statement thereof. In making the annual statement to the auditor as required by law, a justice of the peace, having made such expenditures or having such moneys in his hands contemplated for such purposes, shall include therein the moneys so paid or held by him."

Your question is as to whether a mayor of a municipality or a police judge would be warranted in retaining money out of fines and penalties received by him, sufficient to enable him to purchase criminal dockets, under this same section.

In the first place it will be noted that this section is specific in limiting its provisions to a justice of the peace. Again, this said section is found in the chapter which relates entirely to justices of the peace, this chapter 11 being headed "Justices of the Peace." So there would be nothing in this section or in its context which would seem to warrant the conclusion that the provisions of the same should be made to apply to a mayor or a police judge.

Further, in considering the provisions relative to a mayor of a municipality and a police judge, I find none similar to these set out in said section 1742. Not only is there nothing similar to these provisions, but on the other hand the provisions in reference to fines and penalties, as to mayors and police judges, seem to indicate that they are given no such authority as that found in section 1742.

Section 4270 G. C. provides:

> "All fines and forfeitures collected by the mayor, or which in any manner comes into his hands, and all moneys received by him in his official capacity, other than his fees of office, shall be by him paid into the treasury of the corporation weekly * * * . All fines, penalties, and forfeitures collected by him in state cases shall be paid over to the county treasurer monthly."

This would seem to clearly indicate that there was no intention on the part of the legislature that a mayor should retain any of the fines and penalties received by him. It is different with a justice of the peace. Not only do we find the provisions as set forth in said section 1742, but also in section 13429G. C. we find the following:

> "Fines collected by a justice of the peace shall be paid into the general fund of the county where the offense was committed within thirty days after collection unless otherwise provided by law."

The provisions of this section fit into those of section 1742, to the effect that there are cases in which a justice of the peace is not required to pay the fines collected by him into the treasury of the county. However, there is no such provision as this in reference to mayors.

When we come to the matter of police judges, we find the following set out in section 4599 G. C.: That the clerk of the police court shall make a report each month, under oath, to the city auditor and county auditor, of all fines paid in during the preceeding month in city cases and state cases respectively. The section then provides:

> "He shall immediately pay into the city and county treasuries, respectively, the amount then collected, or which may have come into his hands, from all sources, during the preceeding month."

There is nothing in this or any other section of the General Code, relative to police judges, to indicate that the legislature intended that they should retain any part of the fines collected by them.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that neither a mayor nor a police judge would be warranted, under section 1742 or any other section of the General Code, in retaining a part of the fines and penalties collected by him, to pay for the crimminal dockets required by him in the performance of his duties.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

RESIDENCE—HOW DETERMINED—PROBATE COURT—NO JURISDICTION TO HOLD LUNACY INQUEST ON NON-RESIDENT OF COUNTY.

Residence is a question of mixed law and fact and change of residence is a question of intention and fact, or facts in the light of intention, and it may continue in a certain territory or jurisdiction, after actual connection with any particular spot therein has ceased.

Under the facts set out in this inquiry S. has not gained a residence in Logan county and the probate court of that county has no jurisdiction to hold an inquest of lunacy on him.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1917.

HON. EARNEST TOMPSON, Probate Judge, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 21st, you make the following request for an opinion:

> "S. lived in Wayne county, Ohio, for six or eight years. His family physician examined him during a spell of sickness and discovered and so stated that he should be sent to a hospital for the insane. This occurred last of August, 1916. Instead of filing affidavlit in probate court, his father put him in a private sanatorium for ten days, then took him to the father's home in Hardin county, Ohio. The wife and children of S. came to Logan county the last of August, 1916, and started the children to school. S. came to Logan county to his family September, 1916. In October, S. returned to Wayne county, Ohio, where he roomed and boarded while working. He worked in factory in Wayne county during the winter of 1916-17, going from there to his father in Hardin county in June, 1917, and coming to his wife and family three weeks later where he has been since.

August 2nd, 1917, the wife filed with the probatte court of Wayne county an affidavit in regular form charging lunacy against S. The honorable probate court held that S. was not a resident of Wayne county. Thereupon, the wife made affidavit in lunacy against S. in the probate court of Logan county, and on August 8th the Logan county probate court found S. insane and made out the papers and application.

Twelve months will not have expired since S. left Wayne county the first time until the last of August, 1917. S. has been in Logan county not more than two months; his family will not have been here twelve months until the last of August.

General Code, sec. 1819 says if the judge finds that the person whose commitment or admission is 'in doubt' etc. he shall notify without delay the Ohio Board of Administration giving his reasons for requesting commitment or admission.

Please give me your opinion as to whether or not this is a proper case to be taken up with the Ohio Board of Administration, and said board be requested to say where S. should be sent.

Is S. a legal resident of Wayne or Logan county for the purposes of an inquest, under the above statement?"

The answer to your last question will be confined to a consideration of whether or not S. is a legal resident of Logan county. This department has no authority to volunteeer opinions intended to govern the probate judge of Wayne county in the absence of any request coming from that county, and while the assumption in your question that S. is a legal resident of one or the other of the counties must in the nature of the case be correct, and while a decision that he is not such resident of your county leaves this unfortunate man and his wife in the situation of having no place to go and of being denied the benefit of the humane provisions for those in his condition, yet the answer to your question must be confined to what may be given within the authority of this department.

It is not necessary to consider the question raised by you as to whether a legal settlement under the poor laws is necessary to give jurisdiction to the probate court to hold an inquest of lunacy. According to your statement of fact S. has not been in Logan county for one year, so that if the statutes did require such legal settlement he has not gained it.

Section 7437 G. C.

If the legal residence required by law be not required to amount to the legal settlement required by the above section, but means residence generally, the subject becomes one which has received a great deal of attention from the courts at all times.

In considering this question it is necessary to observe that it is a mixed question of law and fact, and it is also to be determined upon a mixed question consisting both of the intention of S. as to his residence, and the facts above stated. Or, to state it in another form, a consideration of the above facts in the light of the intention of S. It is rendered more difficult by the question of the mental condition of S. as to whether he was capable of forming or entertaining an intention upon the subject of his residence. This question we will first consider.

The statement of fact nowhere shows him absolutely to be insane at any time. Every fact contained in the statement is consistant with his sanity. The fact that a doctor called him "crazy" at one time, and that his father at another time put him in a private sanatorium for a few days, and that his wife had filed two applications charging him with lunacy, and that his family and the family doctor have generally looked upon him as insane for a year or so, only give grounds for the suspicion of his insanity. In passing an opinion upon this fact, therefore, it is necessary to consider him at all times sane and perfectly capable of entertaining intentions as to his place of residence.

We find him a resident of Wayne county and that he made certain moves back and forth and did certain acts, all having a bearing upon the question of fact and his intention of moving from the county.

The question of residence seems to be settled in Ohio, in conformity with the general doctrine elsewhere, to be commonly but not universally equivalent to that of domicile. This word is defined in the Century dictionary as follows:

> "1. In general, a place of residence of a person or a family; in a narrow sense, the place where one lives; a place of habitual abode, in contradistinction to a place of temporary sojourn.
> 2. In law, the place where a person has his home, or his principal home, or where he has his family residence and personal place of business; that residence from which there is no present intention to remove, or to which there is a general intention to return."

It has been generally held by our supreme court that the terms "resident" and "residence" referred to this thing known as "domicile."

Henderson v. Horner, 16 Ohio Reports, 145.

This was a case involving a conflict of laws as to whether a contract is governed by the laws of the state in which it was made or where it was to be enforced, and it was held to be controlled by the subject of residence. Brichard, C. J., at page 148, says:

> "In general, the term 'residence' implies the place of domicile, the place where a person has his home, and where he has gained a residence. Sometimes it implies the place where a man temporarily resides, where he transacts business for a brief period. There is an obvious distinction between 'a person resident at the time,' and 'a person having gained a residence, or a settlement.' And in gathering the meaning of an act of legislation, the whole act must be taken together. The object to be obtained must be considered, and if necessary to give force to it according to the true spirit and intention of the law giver, words having a general and a more limited signification may be enlarged or limited so as to meet the general object of the law. We think the legislature intended to provide for a case like this, and that Forsyth, while in Albany, was a person 'resident without this state > at the time such contract was made,' in the sense and within the meaning of those words as used in the statute, and as bearing upon the contract then made and there to be performed. True, he had a legal residence in Ohio at the same time. But it is not true that he was then actually resident in this state. He was non-resident, for the time, at the place of his legal residence."

Of the two kinds of residence mentioned above, the real residence, in the present case, governs the permanent residence, so that if S. left Wayne county as the saying is animus revertendi, or if upon going to Harding county or to Logan county he had no intention of taking up a residence there he might still retain such residence in Wayne county. As to what his actual intention was there is no statement. His wife evidently understood the intention to be to retain the family residence in Wayne county as she resorted thereto in her attempt to secure the holding of an inquest. None of the acts stated indicate an intention to remove to Logan county or to Hardin county, but rather the contrary. As to his going to a private sanatorium, in whatever county that was, that has no effect upon the question as the statement is "his father put him in a private sanatorium for ten days, then took him to his father's home in Hardin county." In respect to these things S. had no intention, as the statement shows that he was not acting voluntarily, but was under the control of his father. When the wife and children came to Logan county, your verbal statement is that they came to her father and that they did not keep house, and that their household goods were stored. Whether this storage was in Logan or Wayne county is not stated and this, though a very slight circumstance, might have some remote bearing as indicating to some slight extent in which county they proposed to reside. However, there is nothing in the circumstance that indicates anything more than a prolonged visit to the father-in-law rendered necessary probably by the circumstances of the family at the time. Some significance might be attached to the fact that the children went to school in Logan county, as some strictness is now used in reference to the admission of children to schools other than those where they have had their residence; they ought to go to school, however, and where a visit is prolonged throughout the substantial part of a term of the school, children should be admitted to the school where they are located, either paying or not paying tuition.

For the purpose of voting, a man's residence is where his wife lives. S. did not vote, so far as we know; neither are we helped out by the consideration of this fact, as the wife's residence is dependent upon the circumstances and considerations above mentioned, and not controlled by the fact that for the time being she was living off the charity of her father at his house. The return of S. to Wayne county without his family would have no perceptible effect on determining his residence as he might have gone any place where he was acquainted or where he could obtain employment and remain there away from his family without acquiring a residence. It has no other significance than indicating to some extent that he still considered he had a connection with Wayne county, and his returning to Hardin county and Logan county could have no further effect than his ordinary going to those places, unless with an actual intention to acquire a new residence or unless under circumstances from which such intention would necessarily be implied. In such cases the presumption of regularity and continuance is entitled to weight. If the statement be made that a man is a resident of Wayne county in August, 1916, it affords a presumption that that is his present residence, which presumption it would be necessary to remove at least by some evidence. One important circumstance, however, should not be overlooked—he has not a definite habitation in Wayne county, no particular house or spot to which he can point as his home in that county. This, however, while one potent fact in determining residence is not entirely conclusive, as there are examples where for the purpose of voting persons are considered temporarily absent from their place of residence for years at a time, during which period they have no definite habitation in the precinct in which they vote, and are to all intents and purposes living elsewhere, but still maintain their residence, founded upon their temporary removal with the intention to return.

It may be that the question of intention extends further in reference to residence for voting purposes than for general purposes, as the practice is to retain such residence by mere intention without actual physical connection with the place, and is also permitted in the same manner to change it and acquire the new residence by such intention, as held by our supreme court in 1878:

> "An inmate of a county infirmary, who has adopted the township in which the infirmary is situated as his place of residence, having no family elsewhere, and who possesses the other qualifications required by law, is entitled to vote in the township in which said infirmary is situated."
> Sturgeon v. Korte, 34 O. S., 525.

Of course it must always be borne in mind that the elector must vote in the precinct of his residence, and in this case the offering to vote in the precinct in which he has his actual domicile seems to have been considered sufficient to indicate such intention.

> "What constitutes a person a resident of Ohio, for the purpose of voting, of admission to the public schools and benevolent institutions of the state, for the administration of estates and in other cases, has been a frequent matter for consideration in the courts. There is no substantial difference between the words residence and domicile in regard to these matters, though they are not always synonymous. For business purposes and perhaps for purposes of taxation, a man may have more than one residence, but he can have but one domicile."
> Grant v. Jones, 39 O. S. 506, 515.

Here, as elsewhere in the law, is recognized some difference between residence and domicile, though they are generally one and the same, but in at least two instances judges of the supreme court of this state have said that a man may have more than one residence, and necessarily may have a residence different from his domicile. A domicile necessarily is an actual residence, as the name implies a domus or house, and yet in practice men have or rather they retain that mysterious and intangible thing "residence" other than a domicile. The distinction between "residence" and "domicile" is very fully set out in III Bouvier's Law Dictionary, page 2920, and the subject is discussed by the supreme court of Massachusetts in an opinion as follows:

"* * * 'citizenship,' 'habitancy' and 'residence' are severally words which may in the particular case mean precisely the same as 'domicil,' but very frequently they may have other and inconsistent meanings; and while in one use of language the expression a change of domicil * * * of residence, are necessarily identical or synonymous, in a different use of language they import different ideas * * * .

We cannot construe the statute to mean anything else than 'being domiciled in.' A man need not be a resident any where. He must have a domicile. He cannot abandon, surrender or lose his his domicil, until another is acquired * * * . It surely was not the purpose of the legislature to allow a man to abandon his home, * * * with no intention of making any place a place of residence or home, and thus avoid taxation. Such a construction of the law would create at once a large migratory population * * * .

We think, however, that the sounder and wiser rule is to make taxation depend upon domicil. Perhaps the most important reason for this rule is , that it makes the standard certain. Another reason is, that it is according to the general views and traditions of our people."

This is quoted by Honorable U. G. Denman, Attorney-General of Ohio, in an opinion upon the subject of residence for taxing purposes, found in report of the attorney-general, 1910-11, page 808, in which he held that one might retain his domicile in a city where he had his permanent home, but had abandoned it and retained no settled connection with any particular spot in the city. By the opinion such person was required to pay his taxes in his last domicile, which seemed to have gone largely upon the ground that he had not gained another, and which therefore is particularly applicable. This opinion is quoted with approval by Honorable Edward C. Turner, attorney-general, in an opinion by him, found in Vol.I, of the Opinions of 1915, at page 121.

From all these considerations the best opinion I am able to give you is that, upon the facts as stated by you, S. has not acquired a residence in Logan county. It is perfectly apparent, however, from the above discussion that the matter would have to be determined from all the facts, and that there are various other details than those mentioned which should be taken into acount; that it could only be determined by a court fully hearing the evidence and that the decision of the court might depend to some extent upon other details not mentioned in your inquiry. At any rate, it would be upon all the facts developed upon a full hearing.

You further inquire whether it is a proper matter to submit to the decision of the Ohio Board of Administration. The authority of this board upon the subject of residence is found in section 1819 General Code, above quoted, and in section 1820. We have noticed that section 1818 requires the question to be answered:

"When did the person become a resident of this state," and also the further question:

"When did he become a resident of the county?"

Section 1819, however, speaks only of a legal residence in this state, that is to say, if the judge finds that the person has not a legal residence in this state, or his legal residence is in doubt or unknown, the board of administration shall be notified.

Section 1820 provides that:

"The Ohio board of administration by a committee, its secretary, or such agent as it designates, shall investigate the legal residence of such person, and may send for persons and papers and administer oaths or affirmations in conducting such investigation. At any time after investigation is made, and before or after the admission, or commitment to such institution, a non-resident person whose legal residence has been established may be transported thereto at the expense of this state."

These sections were also passed before the law making counties liable, and should be interpreted as they would be without the existence of such liability, and therefore would seem to apply to the question of residence in the state. This application is made more probable by the concluding part of section 1820, which is as follows:

"* * * At any time after investigation is made, and before or after the admission, or commitment to such institution, a non-resident person whose legal residence has been established may be transported thereto at the expense of this state."

It would therefore seem that the board of administration is given authority by this section to make an investigation as to whether the person is entitled at all to enter the institutions, and therefore to investigate only the question of residence in the state, and that the other question is not submitted to them, as between conflicting counties which is to have the expense. That question did not exist at the time of this provision for the decision by the state board, and neither is it likely that a question which is principally one of financial liability would be so committed to a board or taken away from the ordinary tribunals for judicial decision of such questions.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE EMBALMING BOARD—EXPENSES OF MEMBERS CANNOT BE PAID FOR ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS AT ANNUAL CONFERENCE—AGE —APPLICANT FOR LICENSE NOT MATERIAL.

1. No expense of members of the state embalming board may be paid from state funds for attendance of such members at the annual conference of undertakers and embalmers at Jacksonville, Fla. However, application may be made to the emergency board under the provisions of section 2313-3 G. C.

2. The question of age is not to be considered in the granting of a license by affidavit. A person must have been in the practice of embalming prior to January 1, 1903, and must have had at least three years practical experience.

3. Age is not a condition precedent for an applicant to matriculate in a school or college or for an apprentice under a licensed embalmer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1917.

HON. B. G. JONES, Secretary-Treasurer, State Board of Embalming Examiners, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your request for my opinion you say:

"I respectfully ask for your opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Has the state board of embalming examiners the authority under the General Code to pay the expenses or part of the same of a member or members of this board who are selected to represent Ohio at the annual conference of undertakers' and embalmers' examining boards, which this year will be held at Jacksonville, Florida.

2. Must an applicant for a license by affidavit be of legal age before he can secure credit for practice prior to 1903 as required under section 1343 G. C.? If not, at what age should we construe this experience from?

3. At what age must the applicant for an embalmer's license be when he begins his apprenticeship under a licensed embalmer, as required under section 1342, or starts his college course as required in same section."

In answer to your first question: General Code section 1339, as amended in 107 O. L., 655, provides that each appointed member of the state board of embalming examiners, except the secretary-treasurer, "shall receive ten dollars per day and their reasonable and necessary traveling expenses while discharging the actual duties of their office. The secretary-treasurer shall receive an annual salary which shall be fixed by said board and such necessary expenses as are incurred in the performance of his duties as secretary treasurer * * * .

The salaries and expenses incurred by the board and the members thereof, in the discharge of their duties, shall be paid by the state auditor on vouchers countersigned by the secretary-treasurer, and the state of Ohio shall not be liable for same or be at any expense in this connection beyond the amount received as fees."

The above provision is the only provision of law which provides for any officer or member of the state board of embalming examiners. It cannot be said that the member or members of the board who would be selected to attend the annual conference of undertakers' and embalmers' examining boards would be doing so either "while discharging the actual duties of their office," or, if the secretary is selected, "in the performance of the duties as secretary- treasurer." Where no provision of law is made for expenses, none can be contracted and paid.

A leading case in Ohio which stands as authority upon the above proposition is Richardson v. State, ex rel, 66 Ohio State, 108. In that case a county commissioner actually paid railroad fare, livery hire, horse feed and horse shoeing, his board and other expenses of like personal character, but the court held that such expenses were not valid claims against the county and could not be paid from the county funds. On page 113, Williams, C. J., delivering the opinion of the court, uses the following language:

> "It is a fair inference that if it had been intended to reimburse the commissioner for expenditures of this character, the legislature would have expressed that intention in plain terms. It is well settled that the compensation of public officers cannot be enlarged, by implication, beyond the terms of the statute."

It was held by this department in opinion 108, rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, on March 31, 1917, that where no provision is made for the payment of expenses, no payment therefor can be made under our laws.

In opinion No. 651, Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1913, Vol. 1, page 416, the question was being considered as to whether or not a teacher who has been appointed by a board of education as delegate to the educational congress might legally be paid out of a school treasury. It was held:

> "Such expense may not be paid from the school treasury nor can the expenses of members of the board of education to such convention be paid out of the city fund. The expenses of persons not members of a board of education or teachers, incurred in attending the above named congress, may not be paid from the school fund. Before such expenses can be paid, an appropriation for this purpose must be made by the legislature."

Following the reasoning of said decisions and opinions I must conclude, in answer to your first question, that the state board of embalming examiners has no authority under the General Code to pay the expenses or part of the same of a member or members of said board who may be selected to represent Ohio at the annual conference of undertakers' and embalmers' examiners which will this year be held in Jacksonville, Florida.

However, I wish to call your attention to section 2313-3 G. C. (106 O. L., p. 183), which reads as follows:

> "No * * * board * * * shall attend at state expense any association, conference or convention outside the state unless authorized by the emergency board. Before such allowance may be made, the head of the department shall make application in writing to the emergency board showing necessity for such attendance and the probable cost to the state. If a majority of the members of the emergency board approve the application, such expense shall be paid from the emergency fund."

Coming now to your second question, that is, must an applicant for a license by affidavit be of legal age before he can secure credit for practice prior to 1903, as required under section 1343 G. C., section 1343 G. C. provides in part:

> "This section and the preceding sections shall not * * * apply to any person engaged in the practice of embalming or the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation prior to January 1, 1903, provided that he or she has at least three years' practical experience, if such person prior to January 1st, 1918, makes application to the state board of embalming examiners for a license * * * and an affidavit certifying that he or she was in such practice before January 1st, 1903, and thereupon the state board of embalming examiners shall issue a license to such applicant * * * ."

You were advised in opinion No. 525, rendered to you on August 12, 1917, that although three years experience is necessary under section 1343 G. C., and it is a condition precedent to the granting of a license to a person who has had such three years' experience, that such person was engaged in the practice prior to January 1, 1903, such experience may have been secured prior to January 1, 1903, or a part before and a part after said date. But it is impossible for me to conceive of a person being engaged in the practice prior to January 1, 1903, and yet be under the age of majority now. There is nothing in our law anywhere which provides at what age a person must have arrived before a license may be issued to such person, except section 1342, which provides:

> "All applications for a license to practice embalming and the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation in this state, must be made to the state board of embalming examiners in writing and contain the name, age, residence and the person or persons with whom employed, the name of the school attended, together with a certificate from two reputable citizens that the applicant is of legal age and of good moral character, * * * ."

But, as noted above, the provisions of said section shall not apply to a person who is entitled to a license by affidavit. That is to say, if an application is filed under the provisions of section 1343, by which the applicant desires to secure a license under the provisions of said section, the first thing your board must determine is, was such applicant in the practice prior to January 1, 1903, and second, has such applicant three years practical experience. Nothing is said in said section that a person must be of legal age or must have arrived at the age of majority before he begins to secure such experience, and I must therefore advise you that age is not to be considered in the granting of such license by affidavit, as is provided for under section 1343.

Coming now to your third question, viz., at what age must the applicant for an embalmer's license be when he begins his apprenticeship under a licensed embalmer, as required under section 1342, or starts his college course as required in same section. The provision of said section 1342, applicable thereto, was quoted above and provides in substance that the application must be accompanied by a certificate from two reputable citizens that the applicant is of legal age.

"Legal age," as defined by 2 Cyc., p. 51, is:

"The time at which one attains full personal rights and capacities; the time at which a person is enabled to do certain acts which before, through want of years and judgment, he was prohibited from doing."

Legal age in Ohio, with reference to contracts, is the age of majority, as defined by section 8023, which reads:

"All male persons of the age of twenty-one years and upward, and all female persons of the age of eighteen years and upward, who are under no legal disability, shall be capable of contracting respecting goods, chattels, lands, tenements, and any other matter or thing which may be the legitimate subject of a contract, and, to all intents and purposes, be of full age."

I shall therefore take it that the legislature meant that the term "legal age," as used in said phrase in section 1342, above quoted, means the age of majority as defined by the above quoted section 8023. But there is nothing in said section which provides that a person must be of any given age at the time of matriculation in a school or college or at the time he begins his apprenticeship under a person who is a legally licensed embalmer, and I must therefore conclude that age is not a requirement which may be demanded as a condition for such matriculation or apprenticeship. All that is required is that such person must be of legal age before the application for examination provided for in said section is made.

I therefore advise you, in answer to your third question that legal age is not a condition for an applicant to matriculate in a school or college or as an apprentice under a licensed embalmer, as required by the provisions of section 1342 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

"WHOLLY CENTRALIZED"—DEFINED—DISTRICTS NOT CENTRALIZED—NOT ENTITLED TO SEPARATE SUPERVISION UNDER 4740 G. C.—HOW BOARD OF EDUCATION MAY CENTRALIZE SCHOOLS AFTER PROPOSITION CARRIED AT ELECTION.

1. The words "wholly centralized" mean that the district in which the schools are located has voted on centralization, as provided by section 4726 G. C.

2. Any districts which have not so voted to centralize, as provided by section 4726 G. C., are not entitled to have separate supervision, as provided by section 4740 G. C.

3. Where centralization of the schools has been carried at an election called for that purpose, the board of education may centralize the schools in more than one place. It is not necessary that all the schools be centralized "under one roof."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1917.

HON. EARL K. SOLETHER, Prosecuting Attorney, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads as follows:

"The county board wishes to know what is meant by 'wholly centralized.' Does this mean that rural districts, partly centralized, that have been exempted for years, must give up superintendents and go under district supervision? Do you consider this section constitutional, since, in some cases, it will permit a village school with six teachers to exempt from district supervision, while it requires some partially centralized district with twelve teachers under the same roof to go under district supervision?

We have in this county a number of townships which have voted to centralize, who are maintaining a centralized school in their township, and in addition to that they also maintain one or more schools around the township for the instruction of the elementary pupils. In other words, do the words 'centralized schools' mean that all of the schools of the township must be under one roof?"

The section of the General Code which contains the words "wholly centralized" is No. 4740 and as amended is found in 107 O. L., 622. Said section reads as follows:

"Any village or wholly centralized rural school district or union of school districts for high school purposes which maintains a first grade high school and which employs a superintendent shall upon application to the county board of education before June 1st of any year be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district by resolution shall petition to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district. Such superintendents shall perform all the duties prescribed by law for a district superintendent, but shall teach such part of each day as the board of education of the district or districts may direct."

Schools are centralized under and by virtue of section 4726 G. C., which reads as follows:

"A rural board of education may submit the question of centralization, and, upon the petition of not less than one-fourth of the qualified electors of such rural district, or upon the order of the county board of education, must submit such question to the vote of the qualified electors of such rural district at a general election or a special election called for that purpose. If more votes are cast in favor of centralization than against it, at such election, such rural board of education shall proceed at once to the centralization of the schools of the rural district, and, if necessary, purchase a site or sites and erect a suitable building or buildings thereon. If, at such election, more votes are cast against the proposition of centralization than for it, the question shall not again be submitted to the electors of such rural district for a period of two years, except upon the petition of at least forty per cent. of the electors of such district."

This is the only section of the General Code which provides the method by which centralization can be had. It has frequently been considered that when under and by virtue of the provisions of section 7730 certain schools were suspended and the pupils who were residents of the district in which the suspended school was located were assigned to another school or schools, that that act was in effect a centralization of schools; but since the decision of our supreme court in State ex rel, etc., v. Board of Education, 95 O. S., 181, that theory of centralization must be disregarded. Johnson, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, page 183, uses the following language:

> "It will be observed that the only provisions for centralization are found in section 4726, in which the method by which centralization can be had is specifically described. By those provisions the matter of centralization is required to be left to a vote of the people.
> By the provisions of section 7730 the board of education of any rural or village district may suspend any or all schools in the district, and in a village district may provide, and in rural districts shall provide, for the conveyance of pupils attending such schools, to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district.
> It will be observed that in this section there is no reference to centralization, nor to the abolition entirely of the suspended district. The use of the term 'suspend' necessarily implies the possibility of a revivor or re-establishment, and the terms of the proviso indicate, of course, that the legislature contemplated the reopening of any 'suspended school'."

So that, whatever may have been considered as a centralization of schools, whether by vote of the electors or by action of the board, must, since the above holding of our supreme court, be confined exclusively to a vote of the electors, as provided by section 4726 G. C., and it would be impossible, since no provision is made for a part of a district to be centralized, to have anything except a wholly centralized district where centralization is had. This, however, does not mean that the schools of the district must all be centralized "under one roof."

In State v. Chester Township Board of Education, 15 Ohio Cir. Dec., 424, an action was brought against the board of education to compel it to purchase a site and erect a school building thereon after a vote had been had on centralization. The court held:

> "We are of the opinion, therefore, that the action of the present board, in proceeding to centralize the schools in two places within the township, whether wise or unwise, if done in good faith, cannot be prevented by mandamus."

So that, if as in your case the board of education determined that for the advanced pupils there should be one central school and for the elementary pupils there should be a sufficient number of buildings located elsewhere than at the central point, I am of the opinion the same is within the proper discretion of the board of education and still comes within the rule of centralization. If, however, the schools of the district have not been centralized according to the provisions of section 4726 G. C., then under the provisions of section 4740 such district is not entitled to separate supervision.

Answering your questions I advise you, first, that the words "wholly centralized" mean that the district in which the schools are located has voted on centralization, as provided by section 4726 G. C.; second, any districts which have not so voted to centralize, as provided by section 4726 G. C., are not entitled to have separate supervision, as provided by section 4740 G. C.; and third, where centralization of the schools has been carried at an election called for that purpose, the board of education may centralize the schools in more than one place. It is not necessary that all the schools be centralized "under one roof."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—PROVISIONS OF 6907 THAT COMMISSIONERS SHALL GO UPON LINE OF THE PROPOSED IMPROVEMENT WITHIN THIRTY DAYS AFTER THE PETITION IS FILED, MERELY DIRECTORY—ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

The provision in section 6907 G. C. (107 O. L., 95) to the effect that the commissioners shall go upon the line of the proposed improvement within thirty days after the petition is filed praying for the improvement, is merely directory. County commissioners will not lose jurisdiction over the subject matter of the petition even though they do not go upon the line of the improvement until after the time so specified in the statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 7, 1917.

HON. C. A. STUBBS, Prosecuting Attorney, Celina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 19, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "This is to inquire whether the provision in G. C. 6907 concerning the commissioners going upon the line of the proposed improvement within sixty days after such petition is presented (and as amended in 107 Ohio Laws to thirty days) is mandatory or simply directory.
> There are several road petitions filed in the auditor's office of Mercer county upon which the commissioners have as yet taken no action, which have been filed for considerably more than sixty days, some of them as long as a year.
> Under G. C. 6907 would the commissioners have the right to go upon the line of these improvements after the sixty-day period has expired?"

Section 6907 G. C., as it stood prior to the taking effect of the White-Mulcahy act, read as follows:

> "Section 6907. When a petition is presented to the board of commissioners of any county asking for the construction, reconstruction or repair of any public road or part thereof, as hereinafter provided for, signed by at least fifty-one per cent. of the land or lot owners, residents of such county, who are to be specially taxed or assessed for said improvement as hereinafter provided, the county commissioners shall go upon the line of said proposed improvement within sixty days after such petition is presented and, after viewing the proposed improvement, shall determine whether the public convenience and welfare require that such improvement be made."

Said section as it now stands reads in part as follows (107 O. L. 95):

"Sec. 6907. When a petition is presented to the board of commissioners of any county asking for the construction, reconstruction, improvement or repair of any public road or part thereof, as hereinafter provided for, signed by at least fifty-one per cent of the land or lot owners, residents of such county, who are to be specially taxed or assessed for said improvement as hereinafter provided, the county commissioners shall, within thirty days after such petition is presented, go upon the line of said proposed improvement and, after viewing the same, determine whether the public convenience and welfare require that such improvement be made. * * *"

You inquire whether the sixty-day provision of the former act and the thirty-day provision of the act as it now stands are mandatory or merely directory. The former act provided that the county commissioners shall go upon the line of said proposed improvement within sixty days after petition is presented. The new act provides that:

"* * * the county commissioners shall, within thirty days after such petition is presented, go upon the line of said proposed improvement * * *."

The general provision of law applying to this matter may be stated as follows:

"A statute specifying a time within which a public officer is to perform an official act regarding the rights and duties of others is directory merely, unless the nature of the act to be performed, or the phraseology of the statute, or of other statutes relating to the same subject-matter, is such that the designation of time must be considered a limitation upon the power of the officer."

This language is used in Cyc., Vol. 36, page 1160, and the principle therein stated is borne out by the decisions of the courts.

So far as I am able to see, there is nothing in the nature of the act which is to be performed within thirty days, under the law as it now stands, which would seem to indicate that time is of the essence of the act and that if it is not performed within the time specified it cannot be performed thereafter. Neither is there anything in the phraseology of the particular section, nor in the phraseology of the statute of which this section is a part, which would appear to indicate that the time therein set out must be considered as a limitation upon the power of the officer.

In considering this question, I should like to call attention to the fact that there is no provision within this section which fixes a time within which the county commissioners must determine whether the improvement should be made or not; that is, a time within which the petition must either be allowed or disallowed. The sixty and thirty day provisions relate to the time within which the county commissioners must go upon the line of said proposed improvement to get the information upon which they afterwards may arrive at a correct conclusion or finding as to whether or not the improvement should be made.

Furthermore, this limitation has nothing whatever to do with the filing of the petition; that is, there is no provision that the petitions must be filed within any particular time; but there is a provision that after the petition is filed the county commissioners must go upon the line within thirty days (sixty days under the old law).

The intention of the legislature certainly was not such that in the event the county commissioners should fail to go upon the line within thirty days, the public would lose all its rights under the petition. The petition remains on file. The prayer still stands. It is my opinion that even if the county commissioners do not act within the time prescribed, they do not lose their jurisdiction over the matter involved in the petition.

In James v. West, 67 O. S. 28, the court passed upon a matter which is somewhat similar to the one in question. In the third branch of the syllabus we find the following:

> "The statute which requires courts, referees and special masters to determine and adjudicate all causes within ninety days after final submission, is directory merely, and does not have the effect to oust the jurisdiction."

In the opinion (p. 43) the court quotes the act which read as follows:

> "1. Any cause now pending, or that may hereafter be begun in any court of record in this state, when submitted on motion or demurrer, shall be determined and adjudicated thereon by such court within thirty days after such submission. And any such cause when submitted to the court on proceedings in error, or on final trial on the issues joined, shall be determined and adjudicated within ninety days after such submission.
> 2. This act shall apply to all causes sent to a referee or special master, and to all motions affecting the confirmation, modification, or vacation of any report of such reference or master."

Commenting upon the act the court said:

> "This statute is directory merely, and does not have the effect to deprive the court, referee, or special master of jurisdiction. The object of the statute is to secure speedy action by the court, referees, and masters; but to take away jurisdiction would have the opposite effect, and cause intolerable delay."

In Caldwell v. Cleveland, et al., 12 O. N. P. (N. S.) 484, the court held a follows (third branch of syllabus):

> "The provisions of sections 8876 and 8877, requiring the preparation of plans within a limited period after the passage of an ordinance for abolishing dangerous crossings, is directory and not mandatory, and is a provision which may be waived by the parties for the purpose of giving more time for preparing the plans and for other purposes."

In the opinion (p. 496) the court uses the following language:

"It is undoubtedly true that the provisions of the statutes, sections 8876 and 8877, General Code, requiring the preparation of plans within a limited period after the passage of the ordinance, are clearly directory, and are in no sense mandatory, so far as they concern anyone except a railroad company and the municipality as the contracting parties. This provision as to the time of preparing plans is clearly for the purpose of fixing a reasonable time within which plans shall be prepared; and it is undoubtedly a provision which can be waived by the parties for the purpose of extending the time for preparing the plans, or otherwise."

Many cases in other states might be cited, but I will quote from but a few.

In Blumm v. Commonwealth, 7 Bush 320, the court was considering a law in which the following provision was found:

"If the order be made in vacation for a special term, notice thereof shall be posted up at the court house door ten days before its commencement."

The court held that the prescribed notice of ten days is merely directory and that an eight days' notice was sufficient. In the opinion the court say:

"Did the legislature intend that ten days' notice should be indispensable to the jurisdiction, or in other words a fundamental condition of the validity of the proceedings of the called term, or intend only that the requisition of the notice should be merely directory or precautionary? It seems to us that the latter was the purpose."

Other cases to the same point are:

The People v. Allen, 6 Wend. 486.
The People v. Board of Supervisors, 33 Calif., 487.
People ex rel. v. Earl, et al., 42 Colo. 238.

In view of all the above it is my opinion that the time limit prescribed in section 6907, supra, is directory merely, and that the county commissioners would not lose jurisdiction over the matter contained in the petition, even though they should not act within the time limit and should desire to act at a time after the time limit had expired.

Of course there might be such a period of time elapse after the filing of the petition, asking for the improvement, that it would be altogether unreasonable for the county commissioners to take up the matter of the petition with a view of allowing the same, but, as in all other cases of a similar kind, it is impossible for this department or a court to say just what would be an unreasonable period of time. This is a matter that ought to be considered by the county commissioners in exercising a sound discretion relative to any petition that might be filed with them. However, as a general proposition the above holding is evidently correct.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney General.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS—NOT CONSOLIDATED OR CENTRALIZED—TO WHAT AMOUNT OF STATE AID ENTITLED AFTER CONSOLIDATION OR CENTRALIZATION.

Any school district which is entitled to state aid for weak school districts, when the schools are conducted, not centralized or not consolidated, shall be entitled to the same amount of state aid for payment of any deficit in teachers' salaries and for transportation of pupils after such schools are consolidated or partly consolidated, or centralized.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 8, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"We are in receipt of a letter from the clerk of the board of education of Troy township (rural school district), Adams county, in which he advised me that one-half or more of the schools in said township (rural school district) have (been) suspended and transport pupils, part to other schools within the same township (rural school district) and part to the schools within the Coolville village school district and requested advice as to how to proceed in order that state aid might be obtained as provided by section 7730 G. C., as amended on March 21, 1917, 107 O. L., 638.

"Will you kindly give us an opinion construing the provisions of that section providing for state aid? Also advise us how under that section we are to calculate the sum of state aid to be extended."

Section 7730 G. C., to which you refer, and as found in 107 O. L., 638, reads as follows:

"The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district. Upon such suspension the board in such village school district may provide, and in such rural school district shall provide, for the conveyance of all pupils of legal school age, who reside in the territory of the suspended district, to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district. When the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below ten, such school shall be suspended and all of the pupils of legal school age, who reside in the territory of the suspended district, transferred to another school or schools when the county board of education so directs the board of education of the village or rural district in which said school is located. Notice of such suspension shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural district by the board of education of such village or rural district within ten days after the county board of education directs the suspension of such school; provided, however, that any suspended school as herein provided, shall be re-established by the suspending authority upon its own initiative, or upon a petition asking for re-establishment, signed by a majority of the voters of the suspended district, at any time the school enrollment of the said suspended district shows twelve or more pupils of lawful school age. Any school district that is entitled to state aid for salary of teacher according to provisions of sections 7595 and 7595-1 when such schools are not consolidated, or centralized, shall receive the same amount of state aid after such schools are consolidated or partly consolidated, but to be applied to the cost of transportation of pupils to consolidated school, or schools, or for salary of teachers and the transportation of pupils."

That part of said section which must be especially considered in answer to your questions is the part which I have italicised above. It is also the new matter of said section which was added by the amendment of March 21, 1917. Said new matter was made necessary by the recent practice of suspending certain schools and centralizing and consolidating such schools in the various rural school districts of this state, many of which schools, prior to such centralization or consolidation, were receiving state aid for weak school districts, and which districts, through such consolidation or centralization, were able to eliminate much expense for salaries of teachers, but which said districts after so consolidating or centralizing were subject to an added expense for the transportation of pupils, and the object of said amendment is to accomplish, as nearly as possible, the same results in consolidated and centralized schools as were accomplished through state aid to weak school districts before such consolidation or centralization was had, and not to place a hardship or penalty upon a district by refusing it state aid when the schools had been centralized or consolidated, but to give it, as nearly as possible, an amount of state aid thereafter equal to that which it enjoyed before consolidation and centralization. Aid to weak school districts, at the time said section was amended, was provided for as follows:

In section 7595 G. C. it is provided:

"* * * When a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers such salaries as are provided in section 7595-1 of the General Code for eight months of the year, after the board of education of such district has made the maximum school levy, at least two-thirds of which shall be for the tuition fund, then such school district may receive from the state treasurer sufficient money to make up the deficit."

Section 7596 G. C. provides:

"Whenever any board of education finds that it will have such a deficit for the current school year, such board shall on the first day of October, or any time prior to the first day of January of said year, make affidavit to the county auditor, who shall send a certified statement of the facts to the state auditor. The state auditor shall issue a voucher on the state treasurer in favor of the treasurer of such school district for the amount of such deficit in the tuition fund."

Section 7595-1 provides:

"Only such school districts which pay salaries as follows shall be eligible to receive state aid: Elementary teachers without previous teaching experience in the state, fifty dollars a month; elementary teachers having at least one year's professional training, fifty-five dollars a month; elementary teachers who have completed the full two > years' course in any normal school, teachers' college or university approved by the superintendent of public instruction, sixty dollars per month; high school teachers not to exceed an average of eighty dollars per month in each high school."

So that, when a school district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers, the salaries provided for in section 7595-1, supra, for eight months of the year, and the board of education has made the maximum school levy, at least two-thirds of which shall be for the tuition fund, then the board of education of such district shall, on the first day of October, or at any time prior to the first day of January, make an affidavit to the amount of such deficit, and file such affidavit with the county auditor of the county in which such school district is located. The county auditor shall certify such statement to the state auditor and the state auditor shall issue a voucher for the amount of said deficit on the state treasurer in favor of the treasurer of the school district, and the deficit of such school district is thus paid. Payment only of the deficit which occurred in the tuition fund or, in other words, the fund from which teachers were paid their salaries, was permitted. That is, the state aid was extended only for the payment of teachers' salaries and if a deficit occurred in any other fund the same could not be received from the state as aid to weak school districts, but must be provided for in other manners. So that when schools which had theretofore received such state aid for the payment of teachers were suspended, and the pupils were transported to other schools, then there were no teachers' salaries for such schools and hence no state aid could be received, but there was an added expense for transportation for which no provision theretofore had been made. The legislature, therefore, endeavored to provide a means to care for such transportation expense, or, in other words, endeavored to extend state aid so that the weak school districts might continue their schools, whether the expense thereof was in the furnishing of teachers or in transportation of pupils therein, and in so doing it enacted the provision that:

> "Any school district that is entitled to state aid for salaries of teachers, according to the provisions of sections 7595 and 7595-1, when such schools are not consolidated or centralized, shall receive the same amount of state aid after such schools are consolidated or partly consolidated, but to be applied to the cost of transportation of pupils to consolidated school or schools, or for salary of teachers and the transportation of pupils."

Said provision is ambiguous and very difficult to understand. But it must mean, if it means anything, that any school district which, if teachers were employed for all the schools therein, and there would be insufficient money to pay its teachers such salaries as are provided in section 7595-1 G. C., for eight months of the year, and the board of education of such district has made the maximum legal school levy, at least two-thirds of which is for the tuition fund, and which district, upon certifying that fact, would receive from the state the amount of such deficit, but which, because schools of such district are suspended and consolidated or centralized and state aid is not needed for the salaries of teachers, as when all the schools therein were provided with teachers, but which district instead of furnishing teachers for all the schools have consolidated or centralized all or a part of the schools therein, and is compelled to pay transportation expense of pupils, and sufficient funds cannot be provided to pay such transportation expense or to pay both the transportation expense and the teachers' salaries, then and in that event such district shall receive state aid in the "same amount," which amount is not a fixed number of dollars and cents but the amount of the deficit, and which said amount or deficit is not only received to pay teachers but also for any deficit in the transportation expenses. So that, when the schools of the district are suspended and are consolidated or centralized, or partly consolidated or partly centralized, and such district has not sufficient money to pay its teachers such salaries as are provided in section 7595-1 G. C., for eight months of the year, and to pay for the transportation of pupils, after the board of education of such school district has made the maximum legal levy, at least two-thirds of which shall be for the tuition fund, which tuition fund shall include the transportation expenses, then such school district may make affidavit to such deficit, as is provided by section 7596, supra, and such deficit shall be certified by the county auditor to the state auditor, and a warrant issued therefor and paid as aid to weak school districts. That is, there must be a district which would be entitled to state aid if the schools were all being conducted, but which said schools, or some of them, instead of being conducted, are suspended and centralized or consolidated or partly centralized or partly consolidated. The said district may, after such schools are so suspended and so centralized, or consolidated, receive the same amount of state aid as such district would have received had the schools not been so suspended and centralized or consolidated. In other words, it is only those districts in which schools are suspended and are centralized or consolidated and which would be entitled to state aid if such schools were not so centralized and consolidated, that may, under the provisions of this amendment, receive state aid after such schools are so centralized or consolidated and in no event in any greater amount than such district would have received had the schools been conducted instead of being centralized or consolidated. Any other construction of the language of said amendment would make it meaningless. To illustrate, it is suggested that said section might mean that where a school district has received state aid in the past, it shall receive the same amount of state aid in the future, and instead of paying the same to teachers, the amount so received might be applied to the payment of teachers and also to the cost of transportation. But will the language bear this construction? The first part of said amendment reads: "Any school district that is entitled to state aid." When is a district entitled to state aid? Only when the conditions of the statute have been met and there is a deficit, and any aid that is extended is simply for the amount of the deficit. It is not the amount which was received last year, or the year before; it does not say any district which has received state aid; but it must be a district which is entitled to state aid. The conditions of state aid are conditions precedent and must be found to occur before the warrant of the state auditor may issue therefor. So that it cannot mean a district which received state aid last year, or any other year in the past, but it must mean a district which is entitled to state aid for the current year, and that suggested construction must be rejected.

Another suggested construction is that when a consolidated or centralized district, or a partly consolidated or partly centralized district, is entitled to state aid and receives same, instead of applying said state aid to the payment of teachers, as the thing for which it was received, that such district could use same to pay transportation of pupils instead or could use a part to pay transportation and a part for the payment of teachers. This construction cannot follow, for if state aid is given to make up a certain deficit it must be applied to that purpose. If such state aid was only received for the payment of teachers and was then applied to transportation expenses, how would the teachers be paid? Would you borrow money or sell bonds under section 5656 G. C. for that purpose, and if so why not borrow money or sell bonds to pay the transportation expenses? This department has held on numerous occasions that such is permitted. But why speculate? The language of the statute must be given that construction which will tend to advance the beneficial purposes for which the statute is enacted and provides that when a school district has not sufficient money "to pay its teachers," then such school district "may receive from the state treasury sufficient money to make up the deficit." So that, the money being received to pay teachers must be applied to that purpose and the second suggested construction must be rejected.

This brings us then to the conclusion that the only construction which said language permits is that any school district which is entitled to state aid for the payment of the salary of teachers when the schools of such district are conducted severally, may, when the schools of such district are suspended and are consolidated or centralized, receive the same amount of state aid not only for the payment of the salaries of teachers but also for the cost of transportation of pupils. Said construction is permitted following the general rules of construction of statutes.

It is said in Lewis' Sutherland Statutory Construction, Vol 2, section 489, that:

> "Of two constructions, either of which is warranted by the words of the amendment of a public act, that is to be preferred which best harmonizes the amendment with the general tenor and spirit of the act amended. A statute may be construed contrary to its literal meaning when a literal construction would result in an absurdity or inconsistency, and the words are susceptible of another construction which will carry out the manifest intention."

Applying said rule to the amendment of the section in question, to construe it as above suggested is to harmonize the amendment with the remainder of the section and with the chapter of which the section is a part. The subject of the legislation is the providing of funds with which to maintain the public schools of the state. Giving of state aid to weak school districts is one of the provisions made by state to assist in the maintaining of the public schools and to hold that the aid should be given for transportation, the same as for teaching, is to harmonize said language with the remainder of the section and chapter.

In section 490 of Lewis' Sutherland Statutory Construction, the author says:

> "Statutes will be construed in the most beneficial way which their language will permit to prevent absurdity, hardship or injustice; to favor public convenience, and to oppose all prejudice to public interests. 'In construing an act of the general assembly such construction will be placed upon it as will tend to advance the beneficial purposes manifestly within the contemplation of the general assembly at the time of its passage; and courts will hesitate to place such a construction upon its terms as will lead to manifestly absurd consequences, and impute to the general assembly total ignorance of the subject with which it undertook to deal.' "

So in the statute before us, to construe it so that it will be most beneficial would be to give it the construction that not only state aid for weak school districts may be received for the payment of a deficit in teachers' salaries, but also that state aid may be received to make up any deficit in transportation expenses. This construction would also favor public convenience and public interests. It would tend to advance the beneficial purposes of the statute, that is, the providing of funds through which aid to weak school districts is given. This was within the contemplation of the general assembly at the time of the passage of the act and was the subject upon which the general assembly was legislating.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that section 7730 G. C., as amended, 107 O. L., 638, shall be construed to the effect that state aid is extended only to those districts in which schools are suspended and are centralized or consolidated, and which districts would be entitled to state aid if such schools were not so centralized or consolidated, and such district shall receive state aid only to the amount of the deficit, but in no event to a greater amount than the district would have received had the schools been conducted individually instead of being suspended and so centralized or consolidated.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION—AUTHORITY TO MAKE RULE RELATIVE TO EXPENDITURES FOR MEDICAL TREATMENT IN COMPENSATION CASES—DUTY OF COMMISSION RELATIVE TO KEEPING ITS MINUTES.

Under the provisions of section 1465-89 G. C., as amended 107 O. L., 528, the industrial commission is authorized to make a rule requiring claimants to get the approval of the industrial commission before a greater amount than two hundred dollars is expended for medical and hospital treatment in compensation cases.

The adoption of such rule will not abrogate the duty imposed upon the industrial commission to determine and extend upon its minutes the facts justifying the increased expenditure, at the time of the payment for such medical and hospital services.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 8, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your favor under date of October 20, 1917, in which you ask my opinion as follows:

> "The industrial commission is desirous of having your advice on the question as to whether or not it has authority to make a rule requiring claimants to get the approval of the commission before a greater amount than $200.00 is expended for medical and hospital treatment in compensation cases.
> Section 1465-89 of the act creating the industrial commission of Ohio was amended during the last session of the legislature to provide for the payment of an amount in excess of $200.00 upon a satisfactory finding of facts being made and upon unanimous approval by the commission.

I might add further that it is the desire of the commission to insist upon claimants getting the approval of the commission before a greater amount than $200.00 is expended, if it has such right."

Section 1465-89 of the General Code, the same being a part of the workmen's compensation law of this state, was amended by an act of the legislature passed March 21, 1917 (107 O. L. 528), and as amended the section reads:

"In addition to the compensation provided for herein, the industrial commission of Ohio shall disburse and pay from the state insurance fund, such amounts for medical, nurse and hospital services and medicines as it may deem proper, not however, in any instance, to exceed the sum of two hundred dollars unless in unusual cases, wherein it is clearly shown that the actually necessary medical, nurse and hospital services and medicines exceed the amount of two hundred dollars, such commission shall have authority to pay such additional amounts upon a satisfactory finding of facts being made and upon unanimous approval by such commission, such finding of facts to be set forth upon the minutes; and, in case death ensues from the injury, reasonable funeral expenses shall be disbursed and paid from the fund in an amount not to exceed the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars, and such commission shall have full power to adopt rules and regulations with respect to furnishing medical, nurse and hospital service and medicine to injured employes entitled thereto, and for the payment therefor."

Addressing myself to the precise question made by you, I note that the statute specifically provides that the industrial commission shall have full power to adopt rules and regulations with respect to furnishing medical, nurse and hospital service and medicine to injured employes entitled thereto, and I am unable to see any reason why you would not have authority under this section to make provision by rule for the approval of the industrial commission before expenditures for medical and hospital treatment in excess of $200.00 are made. Such rule would certainly be one having proper relation to the subject-matter of this section of the General Code, and would be in keeping with the manifest intent and purpose of said section to prevent expenditures for medical and hospital expenses in excess of said sum, otherwise than in exceptional cases where such expenditure is absolutely necessary. The adoption of such rule would not abrogate the duty imposed upon the industrial commission to determine and extend upon its minutes the facts justifying the increased expenditures at the time of the payment for such medical and hospital service.

The question submitted by you is answered in the affirmative.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CONTRACTOR—MAY NOT CHARGE PREMIUMS PAID TO INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION—WHEN EMPLOYED BY STATE UPON IMPROVEMENT.

Whether a state officer or department constructs an improvement upon force account or upon contract, the contractor employed on the job has no right to charge against the state premiums that may be paid by him for the protection of workmen or other employes employed on the work.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 10, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a communication from you in which my opinion is asked as follows:

> "A state department of Ohio makes a contract for the construction of an improvement upon the basis of a force account, under the following conditions: 'The state department hereby awards the contract to the contractor upon a basis of cost plus fifteen per cent. The contractor shall render, or cause to be rendered, daily reports of all cost for that day and whenever anything of value is purchased, shall enclose in said report bills in duplicate for same,' etc. In the performance of such construction, the contractor engages a number of workmen and laborers for this particular job, and under the laws of the state he pays the industrial commission of Ohio the insurance fees required under the workmen's compensation act.
> Question 1. May such insurance fees legally be considered as a part of the cost under this contract and be taxed, together with fifteen per cent, against the state department.?
> Question 2. Will the same ruling apply on contracts of like nature made by counties, municipalities, or other taxing districts?"

It occurs to me that there is some inconsistency in the statement of facts upon which your questions are predicated. The construction of an improvement by an officer or board of the state, or political subdivision thereof, on force account and the construction of said improvement by contract are entirely different things.

In the construction of an improvement on force account, in the accurate sense, the officer or board, in legal contemplation, employs the labor and furnishes the material needed therefor and pays for the same, although it is not unusual in such cases for such officer or board to contract for the services of some experienced contractor to superintend and direct the work of said improvement and pay him a certain percentage of the cost of the improvement in consideration of such services and, in some cases, for equipment furnished by such contractor. In such cases the workmen employed on the job are employes of the state within the provisions of paragraph 1 of section 14 of the workmen's compensation act (section 1465-61 General Code), and provision is made by section 17 of said act (section 1465-64 General Code) for contribution by the state to the state insurance fund for the protection of such employes.

Instances where state officers or boards are authorized to construct improvements occurring to me at the moment are those mentioned in sections 1209 and 2329, General Code, where provision is made for the completion on force account of certain improvements after default by the contractor.

Where an officer or board of the state, or political subdivision thereof, constructs an improvement under contract such officer or board has nothing to do with the employment of labor and the furnishing of material therefor, or with the payment for same, but their only interest is in the result of the work of the contractor. In such case it is the duty of the contractor to comply with the provisions of the workmen's compensation act and, unless he elects to pay compensation direct under section 22 of the act (section 1465-69 General Code), it is his duty to protect his employes by the payment of premiums unto the state insurance fund.

Assuming, but not deciding, that a state officer or board may under any circumstances construct an improvement by contract on the basis indicated in your communication, the contractor has no more right to charge into the cost of the improvement as a contract charge against the state the premium so paid than he would have to charge against the state such premiums in a case where the contract is for the construction of an improvement for a particular sum certain to be paid to him.

Answering your questions specifically, therefore, I am of the opinion that your first question should be answered in the negative, and, in answer to your second question, that the same ruling should apply on contracts of like nature made by counties, municipalities or other subdivisions.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FALSE TAX RETURNS—CORRECTIONS—BY COUNTY AUDITOR—BY ADMINISTRATOR OR EXECUTOR.

The provisions of section 8369 G. C., as amended by the act of March 21, 1917, (107 O. L., 31) do not affect the provisions of section 5389 G. C. as to previous years. A county auditor may proceed under the latter section to correct false returns made in years prior to the year 1917 and subject the same to fifty per cent penalty provided therein.

An administrator or an executor may not under the provisions of sections 5372-1 and 5372-2 G. C. (106 O. L., 247-248) correct the returns of the deceased person for the years prior to his decease without incurring any penalty.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 10, 1917.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 16, 1917, in which you submit for my opinion the following questions:

> "Do the provisions of section 5369 G. C., as amended by the act of March 21, 1917, 107 O. L., 31, in any way affect the provisions of section 5398 G. C., or may a county auditor proceed under the latter section to correct false returns made in years prior to the year 1917 and subject the same to the fifty per cent penalty provided therein?
> May an administrator or an executor under the provisions of sections 5372-1 and 5372-2 G. C., 106 O. L. 247-248, correct the returns of the deceased person for the years prior to his decease and this without incurring any penalty?"

In connection with your letter you submit a memorandum in which the following propositions are asserted:

1. That section 5369 G. C., as amended 107 O. L. 31, supersedes and "impliedly repeals" section 5398 G. C.

2. That sections 5372-1 and 5372-2 G. C., as enacted 106 O. L. 247 and at present in force, authorize a person acting in a representative capacity, including an executor or administrator, to correct the tax returns, not only for the current year, but for previous years as well; and that when such corrected or amended return is filed the taxes are to be based upon the same as filed without penalty.

The proposition upon which the first assertion is predicated is that section 5369 G. C., as amended aforesaid, covers all that is contemplated by section 5398 G. C.; and the reliance is on the principle that when a later act covers the entire subject-matter to which an earlier act relates, the later act must be taken to be the only law by which the subject-matter shall be governed.

The principle last above stated will be admitted for the purposes of this opinion and I shall inquire only as to whether in point of fact section 5369, as amended, does cover all subject-matter embraced within the provisions of section 5398; and more particularly whether or not so much of section 5398 as applies to the procedure for correcting tax returns for previous years is covered by section 5369 as amended.

The two sections are as follows:

> "Sec. 5398. If a person required to list property or make a return thereof for taxation, either to the assessor or the county auditor, in the year 1911 or in any year thereafter makes a false return or statement, or evades making a return or statement, the county auditor for each year shall ascertain as near as practicable, the true amount of personal property, moneys, credits and investments that such person ought to have returned or listed for the year 1911 or for any year thereafter for which the inquiries and corrections provided for in this chapter are made. To the amount so ascertained as omitted for each year he shall add fifty per cent, multiply the omitted sum or sums, as increased by said penalty by the rate of taxation belonging to said year or years, and accordingly enter the amount on the tax lists in his office, giving a certificate therefor to the county treasurer who shall collect it as other taxes.
> Sec. 5369. Each person required to list property for taxation shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation that all the statements in such list are true, and that such list contains a full disclosure of all property required by law to be listed for taxation, and the true value in money of all such property; and when any person required by law to list and make return of property to the county auditor, shall wilfully fail or refuse to make such list or return within the time fixed by law, or shall refuse to take and subscribe an oath or affirmation to such list or return, or shall wilfully omit to make a full and complete list and return of all taxable property, or shall wilfully fail to give the true value of any property in such list or return, or shall wilfully fail or refuse to answer all questions contained in the blanks for listing such property, the county auditor shall cause all such property to be listed and assessed and shall add to the amount thereof the penalty provided in section 5398 of the General Code; and in case of a false oath to any such list, he shall certify the facts to the prosecuting attorney, who shall proceed as in other cases of perjury. This section shall be printed in plain type upon all blanks for the listing of any property."

It is claimed that section 5369 G. C. now states the only grounds upon which tax returns may be corrected and penalties added, and that inasmuch as under it there is no authority to add the penalty unless the misconduct of the taxpayer is "wilful," it is in conflict with section 5398, which does not employ this term.

It does not seem to me that on the face of the statutes it can be claimed that the legislature intended to repeal section 5398 when it enacted section 5369. What is known as "implied repeal" is always a question of legislative intention. No matter to what extent two statutes may cover the same subject-matter, the later is not potent to repeal the earlier, if the later by appropriate recital recognizes the continuing force and effect of the earlier.

In this case section 5369 refers expressly to the penalty provided by section 5398. In so far as the penalty provisions of section 5398 are concerned, therefore, that section is in force if for no other reason than because of the express recognition of its force by section 5369.

But the argument is not after all directed to the point that entire section 5398 has been repealed by implication, but that whatever may be its present force as determining the amount of the penalty to be added, it is not in effect so far as the authority to make the correction is concerned. In other words, the argument is that the authority to make the correction now springs from section 5369, which covers the ground; and that section 5398 may be looked to only for the purpose of determining the penalties to be charged in case the inquiries and corrections authorized under section 5369 are made.

I do not find it necessary to analyze exhaustively the two sections, nor to dwell upon the fact that the inquiries and corrections to be made under section 5398 are or were to be made by the county auditor, while those authorized by section 5369 are to be made by other officers, it being the function of the auditor to "cause" the property to be listed and assessed and then to add the penalty.

Nor do I find it necessary to determine whether in part section 5369 does not in point of fact supplant and thus impliedly amend at least section 5398, in so far as the operation of the last named section to the correction of tax returns in the current year is concerned. Neither do I mean to hold, on the other hand, that section 5369, as amended, does not narrow the effect of section 5398, in so far as the current year is concerned. I only mean to say that I do not find it necessary to determine this question, because your question relates to the effect of section 5369 upon section 5398, in so far as the latter section may afford authority to the county to correct tax returns for previous years.

Section 5369 does not purport to authorize any corrections of returns for previous years. It is a part of an act providing for the assessment and collection of taxes generally. All of its provisions are apt only as referring to the machinery of taxation for the current year.

If section 5398 G. C., in addition to any possible effect it may have had originally in authorizing the county auditor to correct returns for the current year, also authorized returns of past years to be corrected, it is obvious, I think, that section 5369 G. C. cannot be said to cover the whole ground covered by section 5398, and in deference to the rule against implied repeals it would have to be held that so much at least of section 5398 as relates to the correction of returns for previous years is still in full force and effect.

I have italicised certain words in section 5398 which suggest or express two ideas:

1. That the section is not complete in itself, but that the legislative idea therein contemplated must be filled out by reference to other provisions of "this chapter;" and

2. That its framers clearly contemplated that correction for more than one year might be made under it or under the group of sections of which it is a part.

Thus the auditor is authorized by the first sentence of the section to ascertain as nearly as practicable the personal property which a given person ought to have returned "for any year * * * for which the inquiries and corrections provided for in this chapter are made;" and in the second sentence it is provided that the omitted sum or sums as increased by the penalty shall be multiplied "by the rate of taxation belonging to said year or years."

These words take us, I think, to section 5399 G. C., which provides as follows:

> "Sec. 5399. If any person required to list property, or make a return thereof for taxation to the assessor or county auditor, or to a board, officer, or person, other than a board composed of officers of more than one county, in the year nineteen hundred and eleven, or in any year or years thereafter fails to make a return or statement, or if such a person makes a return or statement of only a portion of his taxable property, and fails to make a return as to the remainder thereof, or if he fails to return his taxable property or part thereof, according to the true value thereof in money, as provided by law, the county auditor for each year as to such property omitted and as to property not returned or taxed according to its true value in money, shall ascertain as near as practicable the true amount of personal property, moneys, credits and investments that such person ought to have returned or listed, and the true value at which it should have been taxed in his county for not exceeding the five years next preceding the year in which the inquiries and corrections provided for in this section and in the next preceding and the next two succeeding sections are made and not in any event prior to the year nineteen hundred and eleven, and multiply the omitted sum or sums by the rate of taxation belonging to said year or years, and accordingly enter the amount on the tax lists in his office, giving a certificate therefor to the county treasurer, who shall collect it as other taxes. * * *"

Reading these two sections together, it is clear that the repeated use of the phrase "year or years" does contemplate corrections for years other than the one for which the assessment is being made and corrections affecting the duplicates of more than a single year. Such is not the case in section 5369 G. C., as I have pointed out.

For these reasons, then, I come to the conclusion that section 5369, inasmuch as it does not relate to corrections for previous years, does not affect in any way the provisions of sections 5398 and 5399 G. C., under the combined operation of which the county auditor, if he finds that in a previous year a false return or statement was made or that the making of a return or statement was evaded, may not only make the inquiries and corrections provided for in both sections, but add the penalty of fifty per cent. If the return is not "false," by which is meant either wilfully false or culpably negligent (Ratterson vs. Ingalls, 48 O. S. 468), the penalty may not be imposed, but the action to be taken will be referable to section 5399, which authorizes no penalty.

As I have said, it may be that the intention of the legislature was to take away from the auditor the power to make the assessment when a wilfully false return has made so far as the current year is concerned, but I do not find in section 5369 G. C. any evidence of an intent to deprive the auditor of this power so far as past years are concerned.

Indeed, very cogent reasons for making the distinction which the legislature apparently may have made can be suggested. So long as the assessing officers whose duty it is in the first instance to make the assessments are, as it were, on the ground, it is most appropriate that they, rather than the auditor, should reappraise the property and make the assessment. This is what is done by section 5369 G. C. But as to previous years, where the inquiry is not necessarily as to the value of property then existing, but rather as to the value of personal estate as it existed in previous years, the inquiry partakes of a character which may more appropriately be conducted by the auditor.

However that may be, I am of the opinion, as stated, that your first question must be answered by saying that however the provisions of sections 5369, as amended 107 O. L. 31, may affect the provisions of section 5398 G. C., they do not deprive the county auditor of power to proceed under section 5398 to correct false returns made in years prior to the year 1917 and subject the same to the fifty per cent penalty therein provided.

Your second question requires consideration of sections 5372-1 and 5372-2 G. C. These sections are as follows:

> "Sec. 5372-1. Personal property, moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies or otherwise in the possession or control of a person as parent, guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, assignee, receiver, official custodian, factor, agent, attorney, or otherwise, on the day preceding the second Monday of April in any year on account of any person or persons, company, firm, partnership, association or corporation, shall be listed by the person having the possession or control thereof and be entered upon the tax lists and duplicate in the name of such parent, guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, assignee, receiver, official custodian, factor, agent, attorney or other person, adding to such name words briefly indicating the capacity in which such person has possession of or otherwise controls said property, and the name of the person, estate, firm, company, partnership, association or corporation to whom it belongs; but the failure to indicate the capacity of the person in whose name such property is listed or the name of the person, estate, firm, company, partnership, association or corporation to whom it belongs shall not affect the validity of any assessment thereof.
> "Sec. 5372-2. If, on or after the day preceding the second Monday of April in any year, any personal property, moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies or otherwise become subject to the possession or control of a person as parent, guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, assignee, receiver, official custodian, factor, agent, attorney or otherwise, on account of any other person who was the owner thereof on said date, and such personal property has not been listed for taxation, such property shall be listed by such parent, guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, assignee, receiver, official custodian, factor, agent, attorney or other representative as provided in the next preceding section."

Section 5372-2 G. C. is the provision relied upon by counsel in this connection. It authorizes a person acting in a representative capacity to list "in any year" on account of the other person who was the owner thereof, on the second Monday of April, any personal property which was not listed by the owner on that date.

It is correctly argued, I think, for this section, that when the correction has been made as therein provided, no penalty can be attached on account of the omission, but I find no warrant for holding that this section authorizes the executor or administrator to list omitted property for previous years. It is argued that this provision gives to an executor or administrator "in any year" the right to correct the list of omitted property for taxation, he being the custodian thereof, and that the provision is one "for an executor or administrator to correct a deceased person's tax return for 'any year.'" I cannot discern this meaning in section 5372-2 G. C. The phrase "in any year," as therein used, describes the time when the property becomes subject to the possession or control of the representative and is not in anywise used in connection with the date on which the property should have been listed in previous years.

Paraphrased, the section would read as follows:

> If, on or after the tax listing day in any given year, personal property which has not been listed on that day by the then owner comes into the possession of a representative, the representative shall list it.

It is plain that the omitted property must come into the possession of the person acting in a representative capacity within the tax year. But this is not all; for all statutes authorizing corrections for previous years expressly provide, as does section 5399, above quoted, that corrections may be made for years "preceding the year," or at least use words like those found in section 5398 G. C., viz., "year or years." The very fact that there is no authority under section 5372-2 G. C. to do the necessary thing provided for in section 5398, for example, viz., to apply the rate of taxation for the preceding year or years to the valuation as determined by the amended return, points the way to the conclusion that it was not contemplated by section 5372-2 that the person acting in a representative capacity thereunder might correct returns for previous years.

For these reasons, then, your second question is answered in the negative.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—CORPORATION FORMED FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS—WHAT SAID ARTICLES MUST CONTAIN.

The operation of section 10067 providing for the formation of a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals is so far modified and controlled by the provisions of section 10063 that it is necessary to state in the articles of incorporation of such society the purpose for which it is formed in accordance with the latter section and to include therein the protection of children as well as animals.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 10, 1917.

The Ohio Board of State Charities, MR. H. H. SHIRER, Secretary, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On September 26, 1917, you addressed the following communication to this department:

> "An interesting question has been submitted to us by persons interested in the organization of an association to be known as the Animal Protective League, or some similar appropriate title.

It is the purpose of this organization to incorporate for animal protection only, but expect public financial aid as provided in sections 10071 and 10072 of the General Code.

In order not to interfere with another agency which deals exclusively with the problems of children the proposed corporation desires to incorporate for the sole purpose of the prevention of cruelty to animals.

As there is considerable doubt in our mind as to the question submitted, we respectfully request from you an expression as to whether section 10063 G. C. makes it mandatory for such organization to state in its articles of incorporation that it will care for children, although no such purpose is intended, in order that it may have public approval as set forth in sections 10071 and 10072."

What is desired is the organization of a corporation to be a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals under section 10067 and which is not to include the protection of children. The provisions of section 10067 are substantially the same as included in the first act passed upon the subject of the organization of such society which originally were for the prevention of cruelty to animals alone. This section being unrepealed it would not be in conflict with any subsequent legislation and would be full and complete authority for what you desire. The said section enacts as follows:

"Societies for the prevention of acts of cruelty to animals may be organized in any county, by the association of not less than seven persons * * * ."

Such provision, however, must be read in connection with another provision upon the same subject, and a later enactment, section 10062, provides for the Ohio state society for the prevention of cruelty to animals. Section 10063 is as follows:

"The objects of such society, and all societies organized under sections ten thousand and sixty-seven and ten thousand and sixty-eight, shall be the inculcation of humane principles, the enforcement of laws for the prevention of cruelty, especially to children and animals, to promote which objects such societies may respectively acquire property, real or personal, by purchase or gift. All property acquired by gift, devise, bequest, for special purposes, shall be vested in a board of trustees consisting of three members elected by the society,which board must manage such property, and apply it in accordance with the terms of the gift, devise, or bequest, with power to sell it and reinvest the proceeds."

This provision, acting upon former existing enactment, requires that the object of the society organized under the older laws "shall be the inculcation of humane principles, the enforcement of laws for the prevention of cruelty, especially to children and animals." This must always be the "object" for which the corporation is created. There is no reason for considering this requirement otherwise than as mandatory, so that the real object of the formation of the society is as therein stated. Whether this object be set out in the articles of incorporation or not it would still be there in legal intendment. The law which alone gives warrant for the existence of such society fixes its object and it can exist for no other or different object. As to whether the object should be stated in the articles of incorporation we must refer to section 8625, which prescribes the contents of such articles of incorporation in five paragraphs, and states that they must contain:

3. The purpose for which it is formed.

* * * "

It is observed that the word "purpose" is used in this section and "object" in the other. These words are not in all cases synonymous, but in the present instance they are so practically, as the purpose which must be set out in the articles of incorporation must be in the nature of the case the object of the existence of that corporation.

The history of this legislation may be found in Opinion No. 593 rendered by this department September 6, 1917, to Honorable Samuel Doerfler, prosecuting attorney of Cuyahoga county, and need not be here repeated further than as stating the sequence above of sections 10063 and 10067.

Inasmuch, therefore, as children must be included in the object of the existence of the corporation, and that object should be included in the statement of the purpose for which it was formed, the articles should include the provision as to children. It will be noted that by the express terms of the section it is not absolutely restricted to children and animals, but is generally the inculcation of humane principles and the enforcement of laws for the prevention of cruelty, especially to children and animals.

The difficulty as to the situation, however, practically disappears upon giving it a practical consideration. This society about to be organized, and which is required to include the protection of children as its object along with animals, is to accomplish its purpose and do its work practically; it is to inculcate humane principles generally and look after the enforcement of laws against cruelty, and these things it is always to do where the necessity for doing so exists. There are no requirements that it should expend half of its efforts on animals and the other half on children; or that its activities are to be restrained or governed in any other than a practical manner for the accomplishment of its humane purpose, and if it finds another society already in existence giving its care and bestowing its solicitude upon cases of children alone and fully accomplishing that work, it may give its principal or entire attention to the other branch of the subject; that is to say there could be no objection to such a division of labor between two such societies, and the occasion might arise when it will be highly desirable to the new society to have the power to extend its protection to the human race as well as to dumb animals.

You are therefore advised that the only proper and safe method of incorporating would be to state the purpose of the corporation in accordance with the requirements of section 10063 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW—EFFECT OF HOUSE BILL NO. 1, (107 O. L.,) (SEC. 1465-101) UPON CONTRACTS OF INDEMNITY INSURANCE.

The legislature in the enactment of House Bill No. 1 (section 1465-101 G. C.) passed February 15, 1917, intended thereby to make void existing contracts of indemnity insurance carried by employers paying compensation direct under section 22 of the Workmen's Compensation Act (Sec. 1465-69 G. C.) as well as contracts of indemnity insurance that might thereafter be entered into; and in the enactment of the amendatory provisions of section 22 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, further limiting the right of employers within the Workmen's Compensation Law to pay compensation direct to their injured employes to those "who do not desire to insure the payment thereof or indemnify themselves against loss sustained by the direct payment thereof," the legislature intended the same to apply to employers who at the time of its enactment were paying compensation direct under the provisions of this section, as well as to those who might thereafter elect to do so.

No employer within the Workmen's Compensation Act has the right of paying compensation direct to his injured employes, or to the dependents of those who may be killed, unless as a condition to such right he does not any longer carry indemnity insurance, and this without reference to whether such indemnity insurance was procured by the employer before or since the legislation above noted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November, 10, 1917,

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—This department is in receipt of a communication from you in which you advise that self-insuring risks, so-called, who have re-insured are asking whether they will be able to mature their contracts with liability insurance companies, or whether their contracts with these companies automatically terminated as of the date House Bill No. 1 (107 Ohio Laws, 7) went into effect, and you ask my opinion upon this question.

In consideration of the question submitted by you I do not deem it necessary to discuss or even to note to any considerable extent the provisions of the workmen's compensation act, and in this connection I will note only a few of the provisions of said act having more or less immediate relation to the considerations suggested by your question.

With respect to the question at hand it may be noted that sections 13 and 14 of the act, by the second subdivision thereof respectively, define the term "employer" on the one hand and the terms "employe," "workman" and "operative" on the other.

Section 22 of the act requires that except as therein provided all employers shall contribute to the state insurance fund provided for in the act by the payment of premiums thereto and by way of exception to this general requirement permits certain qualified employers under the rules and regulations of your board to pay compensation direct to their injured employes or to the dependents of such as may be killed, and also in such case to pay direct for such medical, surgical and hospital services and funeral expenses as may be incurred.

Section 23 of the act provides that except as otherwise provided in the act employers who comply with the provisions of section 22 shall be exempt from civil liability by reason of the injury or death of an employe, while by way of exception to the general provisions of section 23, section 29 provides that an employer complying with the provisions of section 22 shall nevertheless be liable civilly to the action of an injured employe or to the legal representatives of an employe who may be killed if the injury to the employe arises from the wilful act of the employer or any of such employer's officers or agents, or arises from the failure of such employer or any of such employer's officers or agents to comply with any lawful requirement for the protection of the lives and safety of employes.

Section 54 of the workmen's compensation act, the same being Section 1465-101 G. C., before repealed provided as folows:

> "All contracts or agreements entered into by any employer, the purpose of which is to indemnify him from loss or damage on account of the injury of such employe by accidental means or on account of the negligence of such employer or such employer's officer, agent or servant, shall be absolutely void, unless such contract or agreement shall specifically provide for the payment to such injured employe of such amounts for medical, nurse and hospital services and medicines, and such compensation as is provided by this act for injured employes; and in the event of death shall pay such amounts as are herein provided for funeral expenses and for compensation to the dependents of those partially dependent upon such employe; and no such contract shall agree, or be construed to agree, to indemnify such employer, other than hereinbefore designated, for any civil liability for which he may be liable on account of the injury to his employe by the wilful act of such employer, or any of such employer's officers or agents, or the failure of such employer, his officers or agents, to observe any lawful requirement for the safety of employes."

The provisions of this section were considered and construed by the supreme court in the case of State ex rel. Turner, Attorney-general, against the Employers' Liability Assurance Company, Ltd., of London, said case being No. 15089 on the docket of said court. The supreme court in this case held that section 54 of the workmen's compensation act did not repeal by implication section 9510 G. C. which, in general terms, among other things, authorizes the incorporation of liability insurance companies, but did hold that said section 54 had the effect of defining, limiting and declaring the nature and extent of the contract of indemnity that might be written by a liability insurance company in favor of employers who employ more than five employes. The court held that section 54 in various phases thereof affected contracts of indemnity drawn in favor of all classes of employers coming within the scope of the workmen's compensation act, including as well those who in one way or the other complied with section 22 of the act and those failing to comply with the act at all. As to the latter the court held that the effect of section 54 was to forbid contracts of indemnity to be written at all in favor of such employers indemnifying them against civil liability on account of injuries to employes by accidental means or on account of the negligence of such employer, his officers, agents or servants, whether such negligence be that of a wilful act or failure to comply with lawful requirements for the safety of employes or otherwise. As to employers electing and permitted to pay compensation direct to their injured employes or to the dependents of those killed, the supreme court held that contracts of indemnity in favor of such employers were required to contain a specific provision as a part of its terms for the payment to such injured employe "all such amounts for medical, nurse and hospital services and medicines and such compensation as is provided by the act of which this section is a part for injured employes, and in the event of death shall pay such amounts as provided by said act for funeral expenses and for compensation to the dependents of those partially dependent upon such employe." With respect to both classes of employers complying with the provisions of section 22 the court held that said section 54 had the effect of forbidding any agreement in contracts of indemnity in favor of such employers indemnifying such employers for civil liability on acount of injuries to such employes by wilful act of the employer or of the employer's officers or agents, or the failure of such employer, his officer or agents, to observe any lawful requirements for the safety of employes; but that as to such employers this inhibition in the contract of indemnity has application only to cases where the injured employe does not elect to receive as compensation for his injury the judgment or award of the Industrial Commission sitting as a board of awards or from the employer direct, but elects to and exercises the right to enforce his cause of action in the courts against his employer.

The decision of the court in the above case was handed down on the thirty-first day of January, 1917, and the judgment indicated was one ousting liability insurance companies from the exercise of the franchise of writing indemnity insurance policies to employers other than such as were consistent with the provisions of said section 54 as construed by the supreme court. The court in its decision made an order suspending the operation of the ouster for one hundred days in order to permit liability insurance companies to conform their policies to the court's decision, and I assume, of course, that your inquiry has reference to the effect of the act mentioned by you on existing and outstanding contracts of liability insurance, which in their terms comport with the decision of the supreme court in the case just noted.

The act to which you allude is one amending section 54 of the workmen's compensation act (section 1465-101 G. C.) passed February 15, 1917, and reads in full as follows:

"AN ACT

To amend section 1465-101 of the General Code of Ohio, making void contracts indemnifying employers against loss or liability for the payment of workmen's compensation, and agreements to pay such compensation, and making void contracts which indemnify the employer against damages when injury, disease or death arises from failure of employer to comply with lawful requirements for the protection of the lives, health and safety of employes, or when the same is occasioned by the wilful act of the employer or any of his officers or agents; prohibiting the issuance of licenses to enter into such contracts; and to repeal original section 1465-101 of the General Code of Ohio.

Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio:

Section 1. That section 1465-101 of the General Code of Ohio be so amended to read as follows:

Sec. 1465-101. All contracts and agreements shall be absolutely void and of no effect which undertake to indemnify or insure an employer against loss or liability for the payment of compensation to workmen or their dependents, for death, injury or occupational disease occasioned in the course of such workmen's employment, or which provide that the insurer shall pay such compensation, or which indemnify the employer against damages when the injury disease or death arises from the failure to comply with any lawful requirement for the protection of the lives, health and safety of employes, or when the same is occasioned by the wilful act of the employer or any of his officers or agents, or by which it is agreed that the insurer shall pay any such damages. No license or authority to enter into any such agreements or issue any such policies of insurance shall be granted or issued by any public authority.

Section 2. That original section 1465-101 of the General Code be and the same is hereby repealed."

In consideration of the question made by you it will be necessary to note also the amendatory provisions of section 22 of the workmen's compensation law, (sec. 1465-69 G. C.) enacted by house bill No. 506, passed March 20, 1917. As previously noted herein, section 22 of the workmen's compensation law requires that, except as therein provided, all employers shall contribute to the state insurance fund provided for in the act, by the payment of premiums thereto, and by way of exception to the general requirement permits certain qualified employers under the rules and regulations of your board to pay compensation direct to their injured employes or to dependents of such as may be killed, and also in such case to pay direct for such medical, surgical, hospital and funeral expenses as may be incurred.

Prior to the amendment of said section 22 of the workmen's compensation act by the act of March 20, 1917, three conditions precedent were required to exist before the Industrial Commission by a finding of facts could authorize an employer within the workmen's compensation law to pay compensation direct:

(1) That the applicant is of sufficient financial ability or credit to render certain the payment of compensation to injured employes or to the dependents of killed employes, and the furnishing of medical, surgical, hospital and nursing expenses and medicines, and funeral expenses to or greater than is provided for in section 31 to 42 of the workmen's compensation law.

(2) That such employer give such bond or security as the Industrial Commission may require to secure to such injured employe or to the dependents of such employes as may be killed, the payment of compensation and expenses provided for.

(3) In addition to these, such employer was required to pay into the state fund the five percentum required from all employers to be credited to the surplus fund.

By the amendment of section 22 of the act above noted, the right to pay compensation direct was further limited to employers.

> "Who do not desire to insure the payment thereof or indemnify themselves against loss sustained by the direct payment thereof."

and the question for consideration is as to the effect of this amendatory provision of section 22 of the workmen's compensation law, as well as of House Bill No. 1, upon existing and outstanding indemnity contracts written in favor of employers complying with the provisions of section 22 of the workmen's compensation law before the enactment of the legislation above noted, and upon the status of such employers in their relation to the workmen's compensation law.

The question thus presented depends, of course, primarily upon the intent of the legislature in the enactment of the statutory provisions above noted. That is, whether in the enactment of said provisions the legislature intended them to apply to contracts of indemnity and relations then in force, or to be prospective only, operating only on contracts thereafter entered into and relations thereafter created by employers electing to pay compensation direct under section 22 of the workmen's compensation act as amended.

It is recognized that the general rule of statutory construction applicable to questions of this kind is that, excepting in the case of remedial statutes and those which relate to procedure in court, an act of the legislature will not be so construed as to make it operate retrospectively unless the legislature has explicitly declared its intention that it should so operate, or unless such intention appears by necessary implication from the nature and language of the act. It is a still more cardinal rule, however, that the intent of the legislature in the enactment of a statute is to be sought for primarily in the language used in the enactment of the statute.

Looking to the provisions of house bill No. 1 as enacted, it is obvious that the words "all contracts and agreements" as used in said section might mean all contracts and agreements made before the enactment of the law, as well as those made afterwards; and looking to the provisions of this act as a whole, when read in connection with its title and keeping in view the obvious purpose that was sought to be subserved in the enactment of this statute, I am constrained to the view that in the enactment of this statute the legislature intended its provisions to have the effect of avoiding existing contracts of indemnity, as well as those that might be entered into thereafter.

In the case of P. B. & W. Railroad Co. v. Schubert, 224 U. S., 603, the court had under consideration the provisions of section 5 of the Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908. The section there under consideration provided as follows:

> "That any contract, rule, regulation, or device whatsoever, the purpose or intent of which shall be to enable any common carrier to exempt itself from any liability created by this act, shall to that extent be void; Provided, That in any action brought against any such common carrier under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act, such common carrier may set off therein any sum it has contributed or paid to any insurance, relief, benefit, or indemnity that may have been paid to the injured employe or the person entitled thereto on account of the injury or death for which said action was brought."

The court, holding that the provisions of this section were a means for the enforcement of the regulations prescribed by the employers' liability act of which said section is a part had no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the provisions of said section were intended to apply as well to existing as to future contracts of the character described therein; and I am constrained to the view that looking to the manifest purpose of the legislature in the enactment of house bill No. 1 and the amendatory provisions of section 22, it may with as much reason be concluded that the legislature intended to apply it to existing contracts and relations.

In citing the above case I realize that congress in the enactment of laws is not limited by the same constitutional provisions limiting the legislature of this state in the enactment of laws. Nevertheless, with respect to federal legislation as well as that of a state, the rule of construction applies that such legislation is to be given a prospective operation only unless the contrary intent clearly appears, and, in my view, the decision of the supreme court in the case just cited with respect to the construction of the statutory language before it in said case is both significant and persuasive with respect to the intention of the legislature in the enactment of house bill No. 1.

The conclusion reached by me with respect to the intent, purpose and effect of house bill No. 1 suggests, of course, the question of the constitutionality of said act, in view of the provisions of section 10, article I of the federal constitution and of section 28, article II of the state constitution. With respect to this question I must observe that ordinarily it is not within the province of this department to consider questions touching the constitutionality of statutes, and it is only in exceptional cases that this department ventures to do anything of this kind. I see no reason for departing from this policy in the instant case. However, in this connection I can not forbear to note that if the enactment of house bill No. 1 as a part of the workmen's compensation law of this state is to be considered as a legitimate exercise of the police power there is authority for upholding the constitutionality of its provisions, although they may effect existing contracts or other vested rights.

State ex rel. v. District Court, 128 Minn., 221.

The amendatory provisions of section 22 of the workmen's compensation law were obviously enacted for the purpose of effectuating the same purpose disclosed in the enactment of house bill No. 1. and the same considerations that lead me to the conclusion that the legislature in the enactment of house bill No. 1 intended the same to apply to existing contracts require me to hold that in the enactment of the amendatory provisions of section 22 the legislature intended the same to apply to employers who, at the time of its enactment, were paying compensation direct under the provisions of this section, as well as to those who might thereafter elect to do so. Now even if a consideration of the constitutional provisions above noted should require us to hold either that house bill No. 1 is unconstitutional, or that it is limited in its operation to contracts of indemnity thereafter entered into, it is obvious that these considerations have no application with respect to the effect and operation of the amendatory provisions of section 22 of the workmen's compensation law above noted.

When an employer elects and qualifies to pay compensation direct under the provisions of said section he enters into no contract with the state or the industrial commission with respect to such right or privilege, as we may choose to term it, and without impairing such right or privilege of the employer, it would be perfectly competent for the legislature to wholly abrogate such right or privilege by a repeal of the provisions of section 22 of the workmen's compensation act awarding such right or privilege; or, as was done in the case at hand, it was competent for the legislature to impose an additional condition upon the right or privilege of an employer to pay compensation direct under said section, and this without violating any right of such employer protected by the constitutional provisions above noted.

It follows, therefore, that even if it should be held that any contract of indemnity insurance carried by an employer paying compensation direct under section 22 at the time house bill No. 1 went into effect is valid and subsisting, notwithstanding the provisions of said act; nevertheless, under the amendatory provisions of section 22 of the workmen's compensation act, if such employer still desires to carry such indemnity insurance he must be denied the right of paying compensation direct to his injured employes or to the dependents of such as may be killed, and is required to comply with the provisions of said section by paying premiums into the state insurance fund for the protection of his employes and their dependents.

If we are required to view the provisions of house bill No. 1 as prospective in operation only, their effect is, of course, to avoid contracts of indemnity insurance entered into after said act went into effect; and in this connection I may say that I am not convinced that liability insurance contracts in which provision is made for the payment of premiums from year to year, or other stated intervals, can be kept in force and effect by the payment and acceptance of premiums after said act became effective.

With respect to life insurance contracts, the weight of authority supports the view that in such contracts where the premium is to be paid from year to year, or other stated intervals, the contract is to be considered as an entire one rather than as a contract from year to year or other stated intervals provided for premium payments. In other words, a life insurance contract is considered to be an entire one of assurance for life, and the payment of premiums after the first is not a condition precedent but a condition subsequent.

In applying this principle of construction to contracts of life insurance the courts recognize that such contracts are sui generis, and I am not aware that the principle has been applied in its integrity to insurance contracts other than those of life insurance. At any rate, it is clear that much of the reasoning of the majority opinion of the court in the leading case of New York Life Insurance Co. v. Statham, 93 U. S. 24, where this principle of construction was applied to a life insurance contract, failed of application to contracts of insurance other than life.

With respect to contracts of insurance of the kinds here in question, I am inclined to the view that where all the terms thereof indicate that subsequent premiums are to be paid by the assured as a condition of continuous protection from year to year or other period of time indicated by the times of premium payments, such contracts would not be considered as entire contracts within the principle above noted with respect to life insurance contracts, but would be considered to be contracts from year to year or other specified intervals of time, and this whether said insurance contracts in the first instance were for a designated period of time or were indefinite as to duration.

See Bryant v. Bonding Company, 77 O. S., 90.

It is manifest that contracts of this kind covering employers liability insurance could not be renewed by premium payments after house bill No. 1 went into effect, as such renewal would in legal contemplation be considered a new contract.

Making specific answer to your inquiry, I am of the opinion that the effect of house bill No. 1 is to avoid contracts of indemnity insurance carried by employers paying compensation direct under section 22 at the time said house bill No. 1 went into effect. In any event, I am of the opinion that by reason of the amendatory provisions of said section 22 of the workmen's compensation act no employer has the right of paying compensation direct to his injured employes, or to the dependents of those who may be killed, since said amendatory provisions went into effect, unless as a condition to such right he does not any longer carry indemnity insurance and this without reference to whether such indemnity insurance was procured by the employer before or since the legislation considered in this opinion.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LIFE INSURANCE POLICY—HOW TAXABLE—INTEREST OF BENEFICIARY IN MATURED POLICY DETERMINED.

The interest of the beneficiary in a life insurance policy which has matured by the death of the insured is to the amount remaining unpaid thereon taxable as a credit, whether such amount be payable in installments in a specified number or during the life of the beneficiary, or in a lump sum at the option of the beneficiary. If such amount be payable in installments at stated periods, the same should be taxable at the sum which the beneficiary at the time of listing same believes the same to be worth, as provided by section 5388 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 12, 1917.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication in which you ask my opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "Insurance companies issue both limited payment and straight life policies containing what is known as an 'income provision.' That is to say, a provision that the beneficiary upon the death of the insured or the maturity of the policy may elect to receive the insurance in installments, annual or otherwise, either a specified number or during the life of the beneficiary, also a provision that the insured may determine the number of installments with no option by the beneficiary. Is the beneficiary after the death of the insured or the maturity of the policy required to pay taxes upon his interest in such a policy as a credit, annuity or otherwise, first, if there is no option by the beneficiary, whether payable in a specified number of installments or during the life of the beneficiary; second, if the beneficiary has an option to receive the remaining unpaid installments at any time when an installment is due?"

The answer to the question submitted by you depends upon whether or not the legislature has made provision by statute for the taxation of the particular interests mentioned in your communication. Whatever taxing power is possessed by the legislature is so possessed as a part of the legislative power granted to it by section 1 of Article II of the state constitution. Section 2 of article

XII of the state constitution provides that laws shall be passed taxing by uniform rule all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise, and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money, except such particular property therein specifically exempted or which may be specifically exempted by the legislature, pursuant to the authority of said constitutional provision. Section 2 of article XII of the state constitution is essentially but a limitation upon the general taxing power granted by section 1 of article II of the constitution, and even in so far as the provisions of the former section of the constitution may be considered a mandate or declaration of intention that all property other than that specifically exempted shall be taxed, it still must be held, with respect to this section of the constitution, that its provisions with respect to taxation of property are not self executing, and in order to ascertain whether any particular property or interest therein is taxable, it must be ascertained whether or not statutory provision has been made for the taxation of the same.

Section 5328 General Code provides as follows:

> "All real or personal property in this state, belonging to individuals or corporations, and all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, or otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation, except only such property as may be expressly exempted therefrom. Such property, moneys, credits, and investments shall be entered on the list of taxable property as prescribed in this title."

The provision of this section, however, must be read in connection with those of section 5321 to 5327, inclusive, of the General Code, which define the particular species or kinds of property subject to taxation, and unless the given property or interest therein is comprised within some one or more of said definative sections, no authority exists for the taxation of the same.

In the case of The State Board of Tax Commissioners v. Holliday, 150 Ind., 216, it was held by a divided court that paid up nonforfeitable and partly paid up life insurance policies are not subject to taxation in the hands of persons insured for the reason that there was not, as held by the court, any statute providing any regulation for or any manner assessing or valuing such policies; and in an opinion of my predecessor, Hon Timothy S. Hogan, found in vol. 1 of the Attorney-General's reports for 1912, at page 590, it was held that a policy-holder's interest in an ordinary life insurance policy or in a limited term policy, which said interest consists merely of a right to a cash payment upon the surrender thereof, is not taxable, whether such policy be paid up or not, and this for the reason, as held in said opinion, on a consideration of the above mentioned and other sections of the General Code, that no statutory provision has been made for the taxation of such insurance policies. In the case supposed by you, however, the insurance policy has been matured by the death of the insured and the beneficiary has a present vested interest in the money to be paid on the same, and whether the amount unpaid thereon is to be paid in installments of a specified number or during the life of the beneficiary or in a lump sum at the option of the beneficiary, I see no reason why the amount remaining unpaid cannot be taxed to the beneficiary of the policy as a credit under the provisions of section 5327 of the General Code, the same, as a claim or demand, to be taxed as its true value in money as therein provided, or, if the same be payable in installments at stated periods, the same should be taxed at the sum which the beneficiary at the time of listing same believes them to be worth, as provided in section 5388 General Code.

I am therefore of the opinion that the interest of the beneficiary of a matured life insurance policy, as in the case supposed by you, is taxable in the manner above mentioned.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND ISSUE—UNDER SECTION 1259 G. C., QUESTION MUST BE SUBMITTED AT REGULAR ELECTION.

The question of issuing bonds under section 1259 G. C. (107 O. L. 185) can not be submitted at a special election, but must be submitted at a regular election in such municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Novmber 12, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of October 31, 1917, you request a written opinion on the following matter:

> "We are calling your attention to section 1259 G. C., as amended 107 O. L. 185, providing that the issuance of bonds shall be submitted to a vote of the electors. We are also calling your attention to section 4840 G. C., relative to special elections.
> Question. In a case wherein the officers of a municipality are under orders from the state board of health to remedy a dangerous condition to the public health by reason of imperfect water supply, and such improvement involves the expenditure of money which is not on hand, and it is decided by the municipal council to issue bonds under authority of section 1259 G. C., may a vote of the people on such bond issue only be held at a general election, or may the question be submitted at a special election called for such purpose?"

Section 1259 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L. 185, reads as follows:

> "Each municipal council, department or officer having jurisdiction to provide for the raising of revenues by tax levies, sale of bonds or otherwise, shall take all steps necessary to secure the funds for any such purpose or purposes. The council of a municipality, by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, by ordinance shall issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, and at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per. cent. per annum, as said council shall determine and in the manner provided by law, in order to provide the funds necessary and proper to carry out and perform all of the conditions of said finding and order and to make and install any or all of the improvements and changes herein provided, and the question of the issuance and sale of said bonds shall be submitted to a vote of the electors * * * ."

Said section 1259, above quoted, which is and was the section providing for the manner of raising funds to carry out the orders of the state board of health, prior to the amendment in 107 O. L. 185 containing the following:

> "* * * The question of the issuance of such bonds shall not be required to be submitted to a vote."

In the amended section the legislature specifically requires that:

> "* * * the question of the issuance of sale of said bonds shall be submitted to a vote of the electors * * * ."

And in this section there is no provision as to what election, or whether general or special.

Section 4840 G. C. provides:

> "Unless a statute providing for the submission of a question to the voters of a county, township, city or village provides for the calling of a special election for that purpose, no special election shall be so called. The question so to be voted upon shall be submitted at a regular election in such county, township, city or village, and notice that such question is to be voted upon shall be embodied in the proclamation for such election."

The language of this section is too plain to need interpretation. Unless a particular statute, which provides for the submission of the question to the voters, also provides for the calling of a special election for that purpose, no special election shall be called and the question must be submitted at a regular election.

In opinion No. 563, under date of August 27, 1917, given to the State Board of Health, Columbus, O., I was called upon to construe scetion 1259 G. C., as amended by H. B. No. 262, supra, and at pages 11 and 12 of the opinion used the following language:

> "My conclusion with respect to your first question is, then, that the election to be held under section 1259 G. C., as amended (107 O. L. 185), must be held on the day of holding the regular November election. This means that there is opportunity to vote upon such a question only once in every two years, except in charter cities where the frequency with which there may be an opportunity to vote upon the question may be determined by the frequency with which municipal elections may be held under the charter.
> It might be argued that section 4740 G. C. authorizes the submission of a question at any regular election. I should like to bring myself to this conclusion for the purposes of your inquiry, but I can not do so. The election must be an election 'in such city or village,' and notice of it must under section 4740 G. C. 'be embodied in the proclamation for such election.'
> The only occasion upon which the proclamation for a regular election in a city or village is authorized or required, is when there is to be an election 'for municipal officers' (section 4837 G. C.). The proclamations for general elections are to be made by the sheriff under section 4827, and such proclamations are to be made 'throughout the county.

Reading all the statutes together, it seems clear to me that section 4840 G. C. does not apply to any regular election, but only to an election for which a proclamation, addressed to the electors of the particular subdivision who are to vote on the question, is to be issued."

It is therefore my opinion that the question of issuing bonds under section 1259 G. C. (107 O. L. 185) can not be submitted at a special election, but must be submitted at a regular election in such municipality.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MINOR— WHOSE EMPLOYMENT IS UNLAWFUL—NOT WITHIN PURVIEW WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW.

A minor child whose employment is unlawful is not within the purview of the workmen's compensation law of this state, and the industrial commission of Ohio may not legally make an award to the parents as dependents of such minor child by reason of the death of such child from an injury sustained in the course of such unlawful employment, although the employer has otherwise complied with the provisions of the workmen's compensation law.

COLUMBUS OHIO, November 13, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a letter from you under date of October 26, 1917, in which you ask for an opinion on the questions indicated therein as follows:

"Under date of June 24, 1917, Quinton P. Fuerst died as a result of injuries sustained while in the employ of The Harrington Electric Company, Caxton Building, Cleveland, Ohio. Claim for an award from the state insurance fund has been filed by the parents of the deceased. The evidence on file in this case establishes that the age of deceased at the time of his death was 13 years and 8 months.

The commission desires your opinion as to whether the fact that deceased was under the age which would lawfully permit him to be employed in the employment at which he was engaged at the time of his death is sufficient to prevent the commission from making an award, under the provisions of the workmen's compensation act, in view of section 1465-93 and section 1465-61 of the General Code.

Your attention is directed to the fact that deceased, prior to entering the employ of the above named employer, had been attending school, and that the injury causing death was sustained during the the vacation period. It was the intention of the deceased, according to the evidence, to return to school at the end of the vacation period."

Section 1465-72 General Code provides that the state liability board of awards shall disburse the state insurance fund to such employes of employers as have paid into said fund premiums applicable to the classes to which they belong who have been injured in the course of their employment wheresoever such injury has occured, and which has not been purposely self-inflicted, or to their dependents in case death has ensued.

Section 1465-61 General Code, in so far as material to the question at hand, provides that the terms "employe," "workmen" and "operative," as used in the workmen's compensation law, shall be construed to mean:

"every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also including minors who are legally permitted to work for hire under the laws of the state, but not including any person whose employment is but casual or not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer."

"A minor working at an age legally permitted under the laws of this state, shall be deemed sui juris for the purpose of this act, and no other person shall have any cause of action or right to compensation for an injury to such minor workman, but in the event of the award of a lump sum of compensation to such minor employe, such sum shall be paid only to the legally appointed guardian of such minor."

In the case of Walter Kutz, a minor, etc., v. the Acklin Stamping Company, 27 C. C., N. S., 273, decided by the court of appeals of Lucas county, it was held that a minor unlawfully employed while under sixteen years of age is not within the contemplation of the workmen's compensation law, and that an employer giving employment to a minor not legally permitted to work is amenable to all the other statutes of the state affecting employment in case of injury to such minor, notwithstanding the employer has complied with the terms of the workmen's compensation law.

In the case just cited the plaintiff, a boy between the age of fifteen and sixteen years, was injured by an unprotected ventilating fan in the course of his employment as an assistant on a stamping machine. The court held the employment of the plaintiff to be unlawful by reason of the fact that the employer had not procured the age and school certificate provided for by sections 12994, 7765 and 7766 of the General Code. The injury to the plaintiff occurred in the month of May, a time when presumably the public schools were in session, although this phase of the question is one which does not seem to have engaged the attention of the court.

On account of the age of the boy mentioned in your communication, as well as by reason of the fact that his employment and injury occurred during the school vacation, I assume that no question with respect to the matter of the procurement of an age and schooling certificate arose in this case. On the contrary, I assume that the unlawfulness of young Fuerst's employment at the time of his injury and death arose by reason of the provisions of section 12993 General Code, which reads as follows:

> "No male child under fifteen years or female child under sixteen years of age shall be employed, permitted or suffered to work in, about or in connection with any (1) mill, (2) factory, (3) workshop, (4) mercantile or mechanical establishments, (5) tenement house, manufactory or workshop, (6) store, (7) office, (8) office building, (9) resturant, (10) boarding-house, (11) bakery, (12) barber-shop, (13) hotel, (14) apartment house, (15) bootblack stand or establishment, (16) public stable, (17) garage, (18) laundry, (19) place of amusement, (20) club, (21) or as a driver, (22) or in any brick or lumber yard, (23) or in the construction or repair of buildings, (24) or in distribution, transmission or sale of merchandise, (25) nor any boy under fifteen or female under twenty-one years in the transmission of messages.
> It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to employ, permit or suffer to work any child under fifteen years of age in any business whatever during any of the hours when the public schools of the district in which the child resides are in session."

Other than as is indicated by the name of the concern you do not advise as to the character of the business of The Harrington Electric Company, but with respect to this I assume from your communication that you found that the company's business and the work done by this boy came within one or more of the classes of work and employment which by the terms of this section are interdicted at all times to male children under the age of fifteen years.

Your precise question is whether or not the fact that young Fuerst was so unlawfully employed at the time of his injury and death legally prevents your commission from making an award of compensation or benefit to the parents of this boy by reason of his injury or death. I am of the opinion that such is the case.

Under the provisions of section 1465-61 General Code, above noted, it is only minors who are legally permitted to work for hire who are included within the term "employe," "workman" or "operative," as used in the workmen's compensation law, and it is only to employes or to their dependents in case of injury resulting in death that compensation or benefit can be paid under this act.

The workmen's compensation laws of the states of Minnesota and Wisconsin have provisions touching the status of minors as employes under said laws quite identical to those of section 1465-61 General Code.

In the case of Westerlund v. Kettle River Company, decided by the supreme court of Minnesota on May 18, 1917, and reported in 162 N. W., 680, the court, referring to such a provision in the workmen's compensation law of that state, says:

> "The section of the compensation statutes referred to provides that the term 'employe' shall include, among others, 'minors who are legally permitted to work under the laws of the state'. We are satisfied that this language will permit of no construction other than as stated in Pattee v. Noyes, 133 Minn., 109, 157 N. W., 995, namely, that the legislature intended thereby to exclude from the act minors whose employment is prohibited by law. This is made too clear for controversy when viewed in the light of the legal rights of minors in this state, and of our statutes affecting such rights, known as 'child labor laws.' In the absence of legislation to the contrary, all minors may lawfully engage in such employments or work as their age and capacity fit them, and in this respect are 'legally permitted' to work, though their contracts, except as to necessities, are voidable at their election.

In fact, we have no statute expressly permitting the employment of minors, and the use of the words 'legally permitted to work' was not intended as a reference to permissive legislation. But we have statutes, and have had for many years, known as the child labor laws, by which the employment of minors of certain age is expressly prohibited in specified classes of employment deemed detrimental to their moral welfare and dangerous to their life or limb. And in making use of the language quoted it is apparent that the legislature intended to preserve the status of minors in respect to their employment in dangerous occupations, and to remove them from the compensation act when employed in violation of law. No other construction of the statute can be adopted that would not be in discord with our whole legislative policy upon the subject * * * ."

In the case of Stetz v. F. Mayer Boot and Shoe Co., 163 Wis., 151, the court held that a minor under sixteen years of age who at the time of his employment and injury has not obtained a written permit authorizing his employment as required by the statutes of that state was not within the meaning of the provisions of the workmen's compensation law providing that the term "employe" as used therein shall include:

"legally permitted to work under the laws of the state"

"every person in the service of another under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens and also including minors who are legally permitted to work under the laws of the state * * * ;"

and hence that such minor was not an employe whose rights in respect to such injury were governed by the said law.

It has likewise been held in states whose workmen's compensation laws do not specifically define the statutes of minors that such minors illegally employed at the time of the injury are not within the purview of the workmen's compensation law.

Hetzel, Jr., v. Wasson Piston Ring Co., 89 N. J. L., 201; Hillestad v. Industrial Ins. Com,, 80 Wash., 426;

I note that in the case of Foth v. Macomber and Whyte Rope Company, 161 Wis., 549, it was held that the words

"minors who are legally permitted to work under the laws of this state" used in defining the term "employe" in the workmen's compensation law of said state are not to be restricted so as to apply only to minors permitted to be employed in the precise work in which the accidental injury in question was sustained, but that such words are to be given a broad, comprehensive meaning so as to include all minors who are permitted under the laws of the state to work at any gainful ocupation under any circumstances.

The decision of the court in this case was limited in the later case of Stetz v. F. Mayer Boot and Shoe Co., supra, and is not in accord with the other decisions noted in this opinion. In any event the decision of the court in the case of Foth v. Macomber and Whyte Rope Co. should be limited to the precise situation of facts and of the statutory law before the court at the time of this decision. At the time the workmen's compensation law of the state of Wisconsin was enacted it was provided by the statutes of that state that children of a certain tender age were not permitted to work at any gainful occupation; above that age they were divided into several classes—some were permitted to be employed to work under specified conditions and in specified occupations, and some were expressly prohibited from doing work that was considered to be extra hazardous—and the decision of the court was that any minor who is legally permitted to work at all in a gainful occupation is to be regarded as competent to contract with respect to the subjection of himself to the provisions of the workmen's compensation law, although his employment in the particular work at which he was injured was prohibited by law.

It is obvious that the broad principle of construction announced by the supreme court of Wisconsin in this case cannot be applied in the state of Ohio without bringing all minors who are able to labor within the purview of the workmen's compensation law, no matter how unlawful the employment of the minor at the time of his injury may be, for conceivably in this state every minor may be legally employed for hire in some gainful occupation at sometime or other.

I am not disposed to follow the rule of construction adopted by the court in the case of Foth v. Macomber and Whyte Rope Company, supra; and and giving effect to the case of Kutz etc. v. Acklin Stamping Company and other cases above noted, I think the test is whether the minor was legally employed in the particular work at the particular time when the injury was sustained, and applying this test to the finding made by you with respect to the employment of Quinton P. Fuerst, I am of the opinion as before indicated, that you have no legal right to make an award to his parents by reason of his death resulting from an injury sustained in said employment.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

STENOGRAPHERS— IN STATE EMPLOY MAY RECEIVE COMPENSATION FOR WORK DONE OUTSIDE OF TIME EMPLOYED BY STATE.

Stenographers in the department of fish and game commission may lawfully receive compensation for work done outside of the time employed by the state and not interfering with their regular duties in said department.

COLUMBUS OHIO, November 13, 1917.

Board of Agriculture, Fish and Game Division, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication of October 25, 1917, wherein you request my opinion as follows:

> "We are enclosing a letter from J. T. H. Mitchell, 331 Madison Ave., New York City, in which they request a list of parties securing hunters' licenses in Ohio for the year 1917.
> Would it be lawful for the stenographers of this department to furnish these names by doing the work outside of the time employed by the state? Please let us have your opinion regarding the matter."

The letter from J. T. H. Mitchell enclosed with your communication reads as follows:

> "I understand that the county officials at the end of each year send you a report giving the name and address of each individual who has taken out a license to hunt, during the said year.
> I should like very much to secure the names and addresses of the hunters to whom such licenses have been issued, and would ask if it is possible to secure the same from your commission—also what the approximate cost would be per thousand for having these names compiled, if it is not against the law to give out this information.
> Possibly some one employed by you would like to make some extra money by furnishing us with the aforesaid list of hunters.
> About what time of the year would these records be complete for 1917?
> Thanking you in advance for your courtesy in replying, * * *."

Your question is:

I take it, however, that what you wish to know is whether or not the stenographers of your department may lawfully receive compensation from Mr. J. T. H. Mitchell for work done on the list requested outside of the time employed by the state. I base this assumption upon the implied offer in Mr. Mitchell's letter to pay for the work done on said list.

I can find no prohibition in the statutes against state employes engaging in other occupations that do not interfere with their regular duties and I can see no reason why the stenographers in your department should not receive compensation from Mr. Mitchell for work performed for Mr. Mitchell by them outside of the time employed by the state.

My predecessor, in an opinion found in Vol. I, Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1915, at page 450, in passing upon the question of whether or not a person holding a position under the state may accept other employment, held as follows:

> "I find no reason for holding that the employment by the federal government is incompatible with the position of registrar of vital statistics. Because the registrar is as you point out, compensated for his service to the state by his annual salary, he is not thereby precluded from pursuing any gainful occupation which will not interfere in any way with the discharge of his duties as registrar."

I agree with the opinion of my predecessor, that a state employe is not precluded from pursuing any other occupation that does not interfere with his or her regular duties. Therefore in direct answer to your question I advise you that the stenographers in your department may work on the list requested by Mr. Mitchell when not engaged at their regular duties in your department and may lawfully receive compensation from Mr. Mitchell for said work.

I am not advising upon the propriety of furnishing the list of names requested by Mr. Mitchell.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY AUDITOR—TO WHOM LIST PROVIDED FOR IN SECTION 5607 SHOULD BE MAILED—WHEN PROPERTY HAS BEEN CONVEYED TO ANOTHER PERSON BEFORE TIME FOR MAILING SAID LIST.

Where a change is made in the taxable valuation of real property standing on the tax duplicate in the name of a particular person as the owner thereof and such owner sells the same by deed of conveyance to another person, such deed being presented to the county auditor for transfer and filed with the county recorder for record before the time provided in section 5607 General Code at which the county auditor is required to mail a copy of the list showing all changes made in the assessment of real estate, such list should be mailed to the person to whose name such property has been transferred and not to the person in whose name the property stood at the time the tax duplicate for the year was made up.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, NOVEMBER 13, 1917.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I am in receipt of a communication from you in which you ask my opinion on a question involved in the case of R. I. Gillmer v. J. C. Cratsley, county treasurer, et al., decided by the common pleas court of your county. With your communication you enclose a copy of the opinion of the court in this case. The question made is disclosed by your communication, which reads as follows:

"Growing out of a re-valuation which was made upon lands which for the year 1916 stood upon the auditor's duplicate in the name of Maria Heaton, but which were deeded to R. I. Gillmer, the transfer and the record of the same being made on April 26, 1916, the lands were given a new valuation for the year 1916, and the printed list containing the new valuation was sent to Maria Heaton and no notice was sent to R. I. Gillmer.

The contention of Mr. Gillmer is, that under section 5607, notice should have been given to him, and for this reason the court of common pleas has enjoined the re-valuing of the property by the auditor and the collection of taxes under the new valuation for the year 1916. I am mailing herewith a copy of the opinion of the court rendered in the case.

If we are to be bound by this opinion, it is incumbent upon the auditor to know the real owner at the time he sends out the printed list of the revalued real estate in any district. This places upon the auditor the burden of looking up each title on the records in the recorder's office before mailing out the list.

I would like an opinion from you as to whether, under the present law, it is incumbent upon the auditor to mail the notice of revaluation to the person in whose name the title stands on the day that the notice goes out. Section 5607 reads today as it did last year. However, section 5548-1, which provides for preliminary notice that revaluation is to be made, permits the notice to be sent to 'the owner of such real estate, or the person in whose name the same stands charged on the duplicate.'

Is there anything in our law which, in your opinion, permits the auditor to serve the notice upon the owner as shown on the tax duplicate for the current year or can section 5607 be given the interpretation as to the word 'owner,' which would include the owner appearing of record on the tax duplicate for the current year?"

From your communication and the opinion of the court in the case above noted it appears that the reassessment of the real property in question was made in and for the year 1916, and from the opinion it appears that the effect of the reassessment was to increase the taxable valuation of the property from $28,550.00 to $41,300.00.

Assuming that the provisions of section 59 of the Parrett-Whittemore Law (106 O. L., 246-272), which was given General Code section 5607, apply to the change made in the assessment of this property, the court enjoined the county treasurer from collecting taxes on the increased valuation for the reason that the notice of the change in the assessment of the property was not given to Gillmer in the manner provided by said section. Said section 59 of the Parrett-Whittemore Act (section 5607 G. C.) read as follows:

"On or before the 15th day of July, annually, the county auditor shall cause to be printed a list showing all changes made in the assessment of any tract, lot or parcel of real estate or improvement thereon or minerals or mineral rights therein and shall cause a copy of such list to be mailed to each owner whose assessment has been changed, if known, and if not, then to his agent, if known."

Looking to the provisions of section 60 of said act (section 5608 General Code) it appears that it is therein provided that the provisions of section 59 of the act shall not apply to the changes made in the assessments of real estate in the year 1916 nor in any fourth year thereafter. Section 60 of the Parrett-Whittemore Act, which is now section 5608 General Code, provides that on or before the first day of September, 1916, and every fourth year thereafter the county auditor shall cause to be printed separate lists showing the assessment of all real estate in each ward in municipal corporations divided into wards and in each township and municipal corporation not divided into wards in each county. It is further provided that such lists shall be in such form and shall contain in detail such information as the tax commission of Ohio may prescribe, and that the county auditor shall cause a copy thereof to be mailed to each owner of the real estate in the ward, township or municipal corporation if known and if not known then to his agent, if known. Said section 60 of this act further provides that in such years the county auditor shall not print and mail the lists provided for in the next preceding section.

I am informed by the tax commission that in some of the counties of the state there was a compliance with the provisions of section 60 of the Parrett-Whittemore Law in the year 1916, while in other counties such was not the case. I am not advised as to what, if any, consideration the court gave to the provisions of section 60 of the Parrett-Whittemore Law in applying the provisions of section 59 of said law to the controversy before it, nor in reaching a decision on the merits of the case am I advised to what extent, if at all, the court considered the provisions of section 58 of the Parrett-Whittemore Law, which provides that when the board of revision has completed its work of equalization and transmitted the statements and returns to him the county auditor shall give notice by advertisement in two newspapers of opposite politics published in and of general circulation throughout the county that the statements and returns for the current year have been revised and valuations completed and are open for public inspection in his office and that complaints against valuations or assessments, excepting valuations fixed and assessments made by the tax commission of Ohio, will be heard by the county board of revision.

In any event, I do not deem it to be within my province to express any opinion with respect to the correctness of the court's decision on the case before it.

The provisions of section 59 of the Parrett-Whittemore Law (section 5607 G. C.) were repealed by the legislature by the act of March 21, 1917, and said section 5607 was re-enacted to read as follows: (107 O. L., 35.)

> "On or before the 15th day of August, annually, the county auditor shall cause to be printed a list showing all changes made in the assessment of any tract, lot or parcel of real estate, or improvement thereon or minerals or mineral rights therein, and shall cause a copy of such list to be mailed to each owner whose assessment has been changed, if known, and if not, then to his agent, if known."

With the exceptions that the printed lists of changes in the assessment of real estate is now required to be printed and mailed on or before the 15th day of August instead of the 15th day of July, the provisions of section 5607 General Code as they now read are identical with the provisions of the same section as enacted in the Parrett-Whittemore Law.

In the case of Gillmer v. Cratsley above noted, it appears from your communication as well as from the opinion of the court of which you sent a copy, list of the changes made in the assessment of real property was sent to one Maria Heaton, who was the owner of the property in question at the time the tax duplicate for 1916 was made up, but that a copy of such printed list was not sent to Gillmer to whom Maria Heaton conveyed the property after the duplicate was made up, but before copies of the list provided for in said section 59 of the Parrett-Whittemore Act (section 5607 G. C.) were made out, though it appears that the property on the presentation of the deed of conveyance was transferred by the county auditor April 26, 1916, and that said deed was recorded on said date.

The court in construing the provisions of section 5607 General Code held that it was not a sufficient compliance with the provisions of the statute, under the facts disclosed, for the county auditor to mail a copy of the list provided for in the section to Maria Heaton, but that such copy should have been mailed to Gillmer. In thus construing the provisions of section 5607 under the facts stated I think the court was correct.

Section 2573 General Code provides that on application and presentation of title, the county auditor shall transfer any land or town lot from the name in which it stands into the name of the owner when rendered necessary by a conveyance; while section 2768 General Code provides that the county. recorder shall not record any deed of absolute conveyance of land until it has been presented to the county auditor and by him endorsed "transferred" or "transfer not necessary."

It appearing that these statutory provisions were complied with in this case, Gillmer's name appeared upon the tax list as the owner of this property at the time the county auditor sent out copies of the list of changes in the assessment of real property provided for in section 5607, and a copy of such list should have been sent to him.

I realize, of course, that by receiving a deed of conveyance of property standing on the tax list or duplicate in the name of one person, another person may become the owner of such property without presenting such deed for transfer or record, and in such case the county auditor would in all probability have no means of knowing who the owner of the property was for the purpose of the notice provided for in section 5607 of the General Code. In such case, unless the county auditor actually knows of such conveyance and the name of the real owner or his agent, the only thing he could do would be to mail a copy of such list to the person who by the tax duplicate appears to be the owner of the property, and in such case the real owner would have no reason to complain by reason of the fact that a copy of such list had not been sent to him. Where, however, it appears that the person taking such deed of conveyance from one listed on the tax duplicate as the owner thereof does, as a matter of fact, have the property conveyed thereby transferred to his name on the tax duplicate before the county auditor sends out the copy of the list of changes in the assessed value of the real estate provided for in section 5607 of the General Code, it is the duty of the county auditor to mail such owner a copy of the list provided for in said section.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PUBLIC HIGHWAY—VACATION—REPAIR OF SAID HIGHWAY.

1. Where the location of a public highway has been changed by the authorities having jurisdiction over the same and thereby a part of the public highway as it originally existed is rendered unnecessary for the use of the public, that part of the original road which is so rendered unnecessary by the change is vacated, even though the provisions of law in reference to the vacation of public highways have not been followed.

2. Neither the county commissioners nor township trustees are under any obligation, neither have they any authority to keep in repair such part of the public highway so vacated.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1917.

HON. HENRY W. CHERRINGTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 15, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "In 1894 the county road leading from Gallipolis to Crown City in this county, a distance of about twenty miles, was improved by paving with limestone by the county commissioners. The road, before improvement, passed directly in front of the premises and residence of one Johnson. When the road was improved the road was changed and a new route established about one-eighth of a mile from Johnson's house. There was no action taken to vacate the old road as it passed in front of Johnson's residence, and the old road remained as it had been through Johnson's premises, and one end of it has been used ever since by Johnson to reach the new county road. It is Johnson's only available outlet. The end of the road used by Johnson passes through the land of one Moore. There is no question but that Johnson has a right to use the road in question, but the query has arisen as to whether or not it is the duty of the county commissioners or township trustees to keep the old road in repair. The situation is somewhat acute."

In answering the question contained in your communication, it might be well for us to note the section of the Revised Statutes and General Code relative to this matter, especially in view of the fact that our courts have placed a construction upon the section of the Revised Statutes having reference to the matter about which you inquire.

Section 4669 R. S. reads as follows:

> "All alterations of county roads heretofore made and established, or which shall hereafter be made and established, shall be and remain part of such roads, and so much of the original roads as is rendered unnecessary by such alterations in the opinion of the viewers and county commissioners shall be and remain vacated."

This section of the Revised Statutes became section 6924 G. C., which read as follows:

"Alterations of county roads shall be a part of such roads. So much of the original roads as is rendered unncessary by such alterations, in the opinion of the viewers and county commissioners, shall be vacated."

This section has been repealed and the matter therein contained, relative to the vacation of roads, is now found in section 6869 G. C. (107 O. L. 72) and reads as follows:

"Section 6869. * * * That part of the road, if any, made unnecessary by any change or alteration therein shall be ordered vacated. * * *."

Thus we see that ever since 1887 the provision of our law relative to the vacation of public roads, from the fact that they are no longer necessary for the use of the public, has been practically the same.

The question now is as to whether a public road might be considered vacated from the fact that it is no longer necessary for the use of the public, even though the county commissioners have taken no formal steps in the matter of vacating the same.

In Silverthorn et al. v. Parsons et al., 60 O. S. 331, the court was considering a question very similar to the one suggested by you in your communication, in which it placed a construction upon section 4669 R. S. The facts in this case were briefly as follows:

(1) A road was changed from the place where it had been originally located to other lands. The lands upon which the new road was located had been deeded to the county for a money consideration and also with the understanding that the parties deeding the land should receive the land upon which the old road was located.

(2) The county commissioners never took any action in the matter of vacating the old road.

Under these facts the circuit court held (p. 338):

"That the commissioners of the county could not by contract executed or otherwise, turn the public highway over to a private individual, so as to deprive the public of its use without proceeding in the form and manner as provided by section 4661, Revised Statutes of Ohio * * *.

That the plaintiffs have no such right in law or equity to the premises embraced in said thirty feet roadway, as would entitle them to maintain this action."

The supreme court reversed the judgment and finding of the circuit court in the case above quoted. In the syllabus the court laid down the following proposition of law:

"When the owners of land crossed by a county road enter into an agreement with the county commissioners pursuant to which they convey to the commissioners other land, with a view to affecting a necessary change in the road, and the road is by order of the commissioners opened on the lands conveyed, and is so used by the public and by the proper authorities, there is a legal change in the location of the highway, notwithstanding the want of statutory proceedings for that purpose; and, under section 4669 of the Revised Statutes, so much of the original road as is rendered unnecessary by the change is vacated."

In the opinion (p. 339) the court say:

"Since the absence of favorable action by viewers does not prevent the change of the road to the new level, it cannot serve to defeat the result of such change, which section 4669 of the Revised Statutes defines to be that 'so much of the original road as is rendered unnecessary by such alteration * * * shall be and remain vacated.' "

This decision was based upon a case styled City of Steubenville v. King, 23 O. S. 610, which we will now consider. The first branch of the syllabus reads as follows:

"A conveyance of land to the county commissioners for a county road, the acceptance of such grant by the commissioners, the opening of the road by their order, and its subsequent use as such by the public, and by the proper authorities, constitute it a legal public highway, notwithstanding the want of statutory proceedings for its establishment."

In the opinion (p. 614) we find the court reasons as follows:

"That it was a legally established public highway at and before its annexation, we entertain no doubt. Because the statutes have pointed out certain methods to be adopted for the establishment of public roads, it by no means follows that they can never be established by any other means. The grant of the owner made to the county commissioners, their acceptance of the grant, the opening and working of the road by the public authorities, and its use as such by the public, were sufficient to establish it a legal public highway."

The case of City of Steubenville v. King, supra, is clearly to the point that a road may be legally established by the county without following the provisions of the statutes which relate to the establishing of a road. Using this case as authority, the court in the case of Silverthorne et al. v. Parsons et al., supra, held that an original road, rendered unnecessary by the change of the location of a road, is vacated, even though the provisions of the statute relative to the vacation of a public road are not followed.

I will cite one other case to the same point, which is found in 19 C. C. (N. S.) 62, styled Hagelbarger v. The Pennsylvania Co. The second branch of the syllabus reads as follows:

"In such case, where part of a road is vacated and a new road actually established and used by the public and the proper authorities, there is a legal change in the location of the road, even though the proceedings of the commissioners may have been informal."

In the opinion (p. 66) the court reasons as follows:

"We hold that clearly, from the evidence in this case, so much of the original road as extended from point No. 3 to point No. 2 on the plat already mentioned, was rendered wholly unnecessary by the opening of the road from point No. 1 to point No. 2. That being true, the establishment of the new road resulted in a vacation of this last named part of the old road."

From all the above it seems clearly evident to me that the road about which you inquire has been vacated, so far as the use of the same by the public is concerned, and if it has been vacated, then it naturally and logically follows that neither the county commissioners nor the township trustees would be under any obligation to maintain, repair and improve the same.

Of course if this road is held to be vacated, then the authorities would be under no obligation further to keep the same in repair. This is clearly evident on reason and the case of McQuigg et al. v. Cullins, 56 O. S. 649, is authority for the same conclusion, the first branch of the syllabus reading as follows:

"The order of vacation of a township road by the township trustees, in a proceeding conducted under chapter III, title 7, of the Revised Statutes, has the effect to relieve the public from any duty to keep such road in repair. But such order does not authorize the closing up or obstructing of the road against the objection of one who has acquired an easement in it."

While I am of the opinion that, based upon reason and the decisions quoted, the conclusion herein reached is correct, yet I have arrived at said conclusion with some doubt. I would therefore suggest that in order to remove all doubts relative to the matter, this particular road be vacated under and by virtue of the provisions of section 6862 et seq. G. C. (107 O. L. 71). This procedure would not entail very great trouble or expense and would remove all doubts in reference to the status of said highway.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE—SANDUSKY COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"IN RE:—Bonds of Sandusky County, Ohio, in the sum of $32,000.00, for the purpose of paying the respective shares of said county, Sandusky township and abutting property owners of the cost and expense of improving section 'O' of I. C. H. 281."

I am herewith returning with my approval transcript of proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers relating to the above bond issue.

This bond issue is the same issue purchased by you by resolution under date of August 21, 1917, and which was later rejected by you upon an opinion of this department, holding the proceedings relating to said bond issue to be invalid for the reason that the resolution providing for the issue of the bonds extended the maturity of some of the bonds beyond the period of five years from the date of the issue of the bonds, contrary to the provisions of section 1223 of the General Code as it read prior to its amendment in the White-Mulcahy Act, which went into effect June 28, 1917, it appearing by the transcript that the resolution providing for the issue of the bonds was adopted May 18, 1917. It appears, however, that as a matter of fact the resolution providing for the issue of these bonds was adopted August 18, 1917, after the White-Mulcahy act went into effect, amending section 1223 of the General Code so as to authorize the extention of the maturity of the bonds issued under said section to a period of time not exceeding ten years from the date of issue. This correction in the transcript, of course, obviated the objection made to the transcript as first presented to this department, and finding the proceedings in all respects to be in substantial conformity to the provisions of the General Code relating to bond issues of this kind, the same are hereby approved. The transcript shows that the estimated cost and expense of this improvement is the sum of $37,000.00, while, as you will note, the bond issue by the county commissioners, covering the shares of the cost and expense of said improvement to be paid for by the county, township and abutting property owners amounts to the sum of $32,000.00, leaving only the sum of $5,000.00 to be paid by the state of Ohio. The transcript, as presented to this department, shows no reason why the state is not paying fifty per cent. of the cost and expense of this improvement and therefore does not affirmatively show any authority on the part of the board of county commissioners to issue bonds in excess of the fifty per cent. which in such case would be payable by the county, township and abutting property owners. However, an investigation of the files in the office of the state highway commissioner shows that, including the improvement to which these proceedings relate, there are four county highway improvements to be made in Sandusky county and that the cost and expense thereof is in the sum of about $80,000.00, which sum is in excess of twice the amount apportioned by the state to Sandusky county for the construction of inter-county highways, and for this reason the state is required, as to this particular improvement, to pay such amount only towards the improvement as may have been agreed upon by and between the state highway commissioners and the county commissioners, in this case a sum of $5,000.00 (see section 1213 G. C.).

On a consideration of the transcript as a whole and the facts ascertained by me from the office of the state highway commissioner, I am of the opinion that the proceedings are in all respects valid and that bonds properly prepared in accordance with the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

To The Ohio Light & Power Co. of Newark, valuation of lands leased	266.66

APPROVAL—CONTRACT BETWEEN THE HARRISON SAFETY BOILER WORKS AND BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 17, 1917.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Sec'y., Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have recently submitted to this department for approval contract between the Harrison Safety Boiler Works, of Philadelphia, and the Board of Trustees of Ohio State University, which contract was entered into on September 12, 1917, for the construction and completion of an exhaust steam feed water heater and meter in the new power house on the Ohio State university campus, for the sum of $4,500.00, together with bond securing the same.

There was not attached to said contract any certificate from the Industrial Commission that the said concern had fully complied with the Workmen's Compensation Law, but under date of November 9, 1917, you advised us that the heater, under the contract, is to be delivered to the university f. o. b. power house switch, the unloading from the cars and the setting on foundation already prepared to be done by the university. In view of that fact it does not appear that there is any work of construction to be done in Ohio, but simply the delivery of the completed heater is to take place in this state. Such being the case, of course there would be no necessity for the certificate mentioned.

We have obtained from the auditor of state a certificate that there are funds available for the payment of this contract and have therefore approved the same and filed the same, together with the bond, in the office of the auditor of state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SALARY—POLICEMEN—FIREMEN—CITY MAY ISSUE BONDS TO PAY

The salaries or compensation of duly appointed and qualified occupants of positions in the police and fire departments of a city that have been created in accordance with law, for services performed by reason of their holding and filling said positions, are existing, valid and binding obligations of said city, for the payment of which bonds may be issued to provide funds as authorized in sections 3916 and 3917 of the General Code, when the corporation is unable to pay said salaries or compensation when due because of its limits of taxation, or when it appears to the council for the best interests of the corporation to extend the time of the payment of the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 17, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication requesting my opinion on the following:

> "We are enclosing herewith a copy of communication which was addressed to you by the city solicitor of Canton, Ohio, and which was presented to this department by a representative of your department, and in view of the recommendations of said representative we respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:
> Question. May bonds be issued under authority of section 3916 G. C., for the purpose of extending the time of payment of indebtedness, which indebtedness results from payrolls of the police and fire departments of a municipality, which payrolls said municipality is unable to meet for want of funds?"

Section 4374 G. C. provides for the establishment of a police department in a city, and reads as follows:

> "The police department of each city shall be composed of a chief of police and such inspectors, captains, lieutenants, sergeants, corporals, detectives, patrolmen, and other police court officers, station house keepers, drivers, and substitutes, as are provided by ordinance or resolution of council."

Section 4377 G. C. contains the provisions of law for the establishment of a city fire department, and reads as follows:

> "The fire department of each city shall be composed of a chief of the fire department and such marshals, assistant marshals, firemen, telephone and telegraph operators as are provided by resolution or ordinance of council. The director of public safety shall have the exclusive management and control of such other officers, surgeons, secretaries, clerks, and employes as are provided by ordinance or resolution of council."

I am taking it for granted that the council of the city of Canton has passed appropriate legislation for the establishment of a police department and fire department in said city, in accordance with the provisions of the above mentioned sections, and has fixed the salaries of said positions therein as the law requires. I also presume that the persons filling said position in said departments have been appointed and have qualified in accordance with law, and have performed the duties incumbent upon them as occupants of said positions.

From such presumptions it follows that the various positions in the police and fire departments have been legally created, the compensation therefor has been fixed in accordance with law, and the occupants thereof have been properly appointed and have duly qualified and have performed the duties devolving upon them in accordance with law.

Under those conditions, then, it seems clear that the claims of the occupants of the various positions in said police and fire departments for compensation for said services rendered by them are existing, valid and binding obligations of the corporation.

Sections 3916 and 3917 of the General Code provide for the funding of certain legal indebtedness of a municipal corporation, and read as follows:

"Section 3916. For the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may issue bonds of the corporation or borrow money so as to change but not to increase the indebtedness, in such amounts, for such length of time and at such rate of interest as the council deems proper, not to exceed six per cent. per annum, payable annually or semi-annually.

"Section 3917. No indebtedness of such municipal corporation shall be funded, refunded, or extended, unless it shall first be determined to be an existing, valid and binding obligation of the corporation by a formal resolution of the council thereof. Such resolution shall also state the amount of the existing indebtedness to be funded, refunded or extended, the aggregate amount of bonds to be issued therefor, their number and denomination, the date of maturity, the rate of interest they shall bear, and the place of payment of principal and interest."

One of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, had occasion to pass on the question of the right of a municipal corporation to fund certain legal indebtedness in accordance with the provisions of the two above mentioned sections, in an opinion rendered under date of August 7, 1912, to Hon. F. G. Long, city solicitor of Bellefontaine (found in annual report of the attorney-general for 1912, Vol. 2, page 1805). At page 1809 Mr. Hogan said:

"Section 3916, General Code, provides that when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation the council may borrow money so as to change but not increase the indebtedness. Section 3917, General Code, provides that no indebtedness shall be funded, until it be determined by council to be an existing, valid and binding obligation. I am aware of the fact that it has been held in the case of Herrman et al. v. The City of Cincinnati, 9 O. C. C., 357, that section 2701 Revised Statutes as it stood at the time said case was decided was not intended to authorize the issue of bonds of a municipality to meet deficiencies in its various departments, but that it was intended by such section to authorize the issue of bonds after a prior funded indebtedness of the municipal corporation existed. The statute, section 2701 R. S. as it at that time existed did not contain the provisions that are now embraced in section 3917, General Code. It is to be noted that section 3917, General Code, provides that no indebtedness of a municipal corporation shall be funded unless it shall first be determined to be an existing, valid and binding obligation. This addition to section 2701, Revised Statutes, was first incorporated in said section in 1896 and as it grants to a municipal corporation the right to fund an existing, valid and binding obligation, I am of the opinion that it does now authorize the issue of bonds to take care of such obligations whether the same had been a previously funded indebtedness of the corporation or not. As the salaries of the municipal officers are valid and binding obligations upon the corporation, I am of the opinion that under section 3916 and section 3917 of the General Code council may borrow money in order to pay the same when due. In reference to the other funds which have been exhausted moneys in which were not to take care of the existing, valid and binding obligations of the corporation, I am of the opinion that money cannot be borrowed in order to replenish the same, for the reason that the same is not covered by sections 3916 and 3917, General Code. The Smith law, section 5649-3d requires that all expenditures within the six months following the appropriation shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, except as to existing, valid and binding obligations of the corporation, I am of the opinion that appropriations that have been exhausted prior to the end of the six months cannot be replenished by the issuance of either deficiency bonds or by the issuance of bonds under the sections above referred to, but that as to the fixed charges of a corporation, such as salaries, which are upon services being rendered an existing, valid and binding obligation of the corporation, money may be borrowed to pay the same as provided in sections 3916 and 3917 of the General Code, supra."

I agree with the reasons advanced by Mr. Hogan in the foregoing opinion and in the conclusions reached. The facts that were considered by Mr. Hogan in that opinion are practically identical with the ones that are presented to me in the present case.

I therefore advise you that it is my opinion that the salaries or compensation of duly appointed and qualified occupants of positions in the police and fire departments of a city that have been created in accordance with law, for services performed by reason of their holding and filling said positions, are existing, valid and binding obligations of said city, for the payment of which bonds may be issued to provide funds as authorized in sections 3916 and 3917 of the General Code, when the corporation is unable to pay said salaries or compensation when due because of its limits of taxation or when it appears to the council for the best interests of the corporation to extend the time of the payment of same.

I might say, however, that from a practical standpoint it would be bad business policy for a city to avail itself of this power to issue bonds for the purpose of providing funds to pay obligations of this character, which are in reality current obligations, except in case of great emergency, since it is thereby lessening its authority to issue bonds for permanent propositions for which the bond issuing power is usually only granted, and it is also only extending the time of payment for a service from which it receives no future benefit.

I am sending a copy of this opinion to Hon. Walter S. Ruff, city solicitor of Canton, Ohio.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROBATION OFFICERS—SALARY—LIMITATION—CANNOT BE INCREASED OR DIMINISHED.

The provision of section 1662 G. C. that, "the entire compensation of the probation officer in any county shall not exceed the sum of $40.00 for each full thousand inhabitants of the county at the last preceding federal census," is a limitation upon the total amount of compensation to be paid to such probation officer during the entire year, but does not place any further limitation on the amount to be expended in any one month.

Section 1662 General Code, in providing that "the compensation of the chief probation officer shall not exceed $3,000.00 per annum and that of t.e assistants shall not exceed $1,500.00 per annum" places a monthly limitation upon the amount to be paid these officers. It is therefore unlawful.to pay the chief probation officer more than $250.00 a month or to pay the assistant more than $125.00 per month.

After the common pleas judge has appointed a probation officer and designated his compensation, such compensation cannot be increased or diminished by the court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 17, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of September 21, 1917, enclosing letter written to you by Hon. Fred. C. Becker, probate judge of Allen county, Ohio, making certain inquiries concerning which you ask me to render you my opinion. Judge Becker's letter reads as follows:

> "On the 1st day of February, 1915, G. B. was appointed chief probation officer of Allen county, Ohio, at a salary of $100.00 per month. On the 12th day of November, 1915, N. M. was appointed a probation officer at a salary of $60.00 per month; both served as such officers until April 22, 1917, when G. B. died. N. M. continues to serve as such officer. No appointment was made to fill the vacancy caused by the death of G. B.
> Under section 1662 of the General Code, before and since its amendment, the fund at the disposal of the juvenile judge is $40.00 for each full thousand inhabitants at the last preceding federal census, which in Allen county, Ohio, is fifty-six thousand, yielding the sum of $2,240.00 per annum.
> A new probation officer has been appointed and in determining his salary under section 1662 G. C., as amended in Vol. 1 of the supplement of the General Code, may we take the calendar year of 1917, for which the sum of $2,240.00 is available, and deduct the amounts paid G. B. and N. M. to date, and then proportion the remainder between N. M. and the new appointee for the balance of the calendar year of 1917? For example: N. M. has drawn or will have drawn, on September 12th, $540.00, and G. B. drew, up to the date of his death, $377.00, or in all the sum of $917.00, leaving a balance out of the $2,240.00 of $1,223.00. Can, then, this $1,223.00 be apportioned between the new appointee and N. M. for the balance of the calendar year of 1917, or must the $2,240.00 be taken as a yearly payment for all, regardless of calendar years, so that in any one month the total payable to both officers shall be but one-twelfth of $2,240.00."

Section 1662 General Code, to which you refer, was again amended in 107 O. L., p. 19, and now reads:

"The judge designated to exercise jurisdiction may appoint one or more discreet persons of good moral character, one or more of whom may be a woman, to serve as probation officers, during the pleasure of the judge. One of such officers shall be known as chief probation officer and there may be one or more assistants. Such chief probation officer and assistants shall receive such compensation as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of the appointment, but the compensation of the chief probation officer shall not exceed three thousand dollars per annum and that of the assistants shall not exceed fifteen hundred dollars per annum. The judge may appoint other probation officers, with or without compensation, but the entire compensation of all probation officers in any county shall not exceed the sum of forty dollars for each full thousand inhabitants of the county at the last preceding federal census. The compensation of the probation officers shall be paid by the county treasurer from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall be issued upon itemized vouchers sworn to by the probation officers and certified to by the judge of the juvenile court. The county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the treasury and the treasurer shall honor and pay the same, for all salaries, compensation and expenses provided for in this act, in the order in which proper vouchers therefor are presented to him."

From a reading of this section I am satisfied that the limitation "the sum of $40.00 for each full thousand inhabitants of the county" is not a limit upon the amount to be expended in any one month of the year, but a limitation upon the amount to be spent during the entire year and the expenditure of more than one-twelfth of this sum in any one or more months of the year will not violate this provision providing the total amount spent during the entire twelve months does not exceed "the sum of $40.00 for each full thousand inhabitants of the county at the last preceding federal census."

However, attention is called to the fact that this section also provides:

"The compensation of the chief probation officer shall not exceed three thousand dollars per annum and that of the assistants shall not exceed fifteen hundred dollars per annum."

This provision, I think, would make it unlawful to pay the chief probation officer more than $250.00 per month or to pay the assistants more than $125.00 per month.

With these considerations in mind I am of the opinion that in the case you refer to the balance of $1,223.00 may be used as compensation for the two probation officers mentioned, with this limitation, that the chief probation officer may not be paid more than $250.00 and the assistant probation officer, or officers, not more than $125.00 per month.

I wish, however, to call your attention to the provision of section 1662 General Code to the effect that "such chief probation officer and assistants shall receive such-compensation as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of the appointment." It will be noted that this section does not merely provide that the salary of the probation officers shall be fixed at the time of their appointment, but provides that the compensation which they shall receive shall be "as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of the appointment." The words "as the judge may designate at the time of the appointment" is descriptive of the salary which the probation officers are to receive, and to my mind makes it impossible for the court to alter the compensation of the probation officer or officers after it has once been fixed at the time of the appointment. If such compensation were altered by the judge later, it is clear that the probation officers would not thereafter be receiving a compensation which the judge appointing them had designated at the time of the appointment.

It is therefore my opinion, in the case you present, that the balance of the fund cannot be used for any increased compensation for the probation officer appointed on the 12th day of November, 1915, and whose compensation was at that time fixed at $60.00 per month.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—MAYOR—JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—WHEN ELECTED.

1. The same person can be elected to and hold the offices of mayor of a village and justice of the peace, provided the duties of such offices are not so numerous as to render the performance of same physically impossible.

2. Justices of the peace are to be elected in the odd numbered years.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1917.

HON. W. D. FULTON, State Supervisor of Elections, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 12, 1917, Mr. Harry McGrew of Sharonville, Ohio, submitted a question to me, upon which, owing to its public interest, I am rendering an official opinion to you, and will send a copy of same to Mr. McGrew.

The following questions are submitted in said communication:

> "1. Can one and the same person legally be elected to the offices of mayor of a village and justice of the peace at the same election?
> 2. Can such person legally hold these two elective offices at the same time?
> 3. Is the election of justice of the peace valid if he is elected in uneven numbered year?"

Section 4255 G. C., which provides for the election, term, qualification, powers and duties of a mayor of a village, prescribes as the only qualification that: "He shall be an elector of the corporation."

Section 1711-1 G. C. (103 O. L. 214) establishes the office of justice of the peace, giving to such justice of the peace such jurisdiction, powers and duties as were provided by the laws in force on September 3, 1912. This creation of the office by the legislature was rendered necessary by the schedule to Article IV of the Constitution, which provided for the abolition of the office of justice of the peace upon the adoption of Article IV, sections 1, 2 and 6 as amended. It was held In re Hesse, 93 O. S. 230, that since the adoption of Article IV, sections 1 and 9 of the Constitution of Ohio, on September 3, 1912, justices of the peace are no longer constitutional officers in Ohio.

Section 1712 et seq. G. C., providing for the election and duties of justice of the peace, do not prescribe any qualifications for that office, although section 1714, providing for a vacancy, states that the appointee to fill such vacancy shall be a qualified resident of the township.

An examination of the statutes pertaining to mayors of villages and justices of the peace will not disclose any statutory prohibition against one and the same person holding the two offices. Neither does the constitution of the state prohibit a person from holding said offices at the same time. In absence of constitutional and statutory inhibitions against persons holding more than one office or holding two designated offices, we are relegated to the common law to discover whether or not the offices are incompatible.

As stated in State ex rel. v. Gebert, 12 C. C. (N. S.) 274, offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to or in any way a check upon the other, or when it is physically impossible for one person to perform the duties of both. Physical impossibility to perform all the duties pertaining to more than one office was not strictly a ground of incompatibility under the common law. It consisted more of inconsistencies in the functions of the two offices.

An examination of the laws governing the offices of mayor and justice of the peace will not show any inconsistency in the functions of the two offices, nor is one, as far as I can see, in any way a check upon or over the other.

Under date of June 5, 1913, one of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, had the question before him as to whether or not the same person could legally hold the positions of mayor and justice of the peace. Mr. Hogan held that there was nothing in the statutes providing any duties as to either of these offices, which would in any way compel the incumbent of one to supervise or act as a check upon the other, nor were there any such conflicting duties attached to these offices as would cause the holding of both by one individual to contravene public policy. He held that if the duties of neither of these offices were so numerous as to make it impossible to faithfully discharge the obligations of both at the same time, they could be held simultaneously by one individual.

I fully concur in Mr. Hogan's decision, which is found in Vol. I of Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, p. 284, and, answering the first and second questions in the communication, I hold that the same person can legally be elected to the offices of mayor and justice of the peace, and that he may legally hold these two elective offices at the same time, if the duties of the two offices are not so onerous as to render such holding physically impossible.

Coming now to the third question: Article XVII, section 1 of the Constitution provides:

> "Election for state and county officers shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the even numbered years; and all elections for all other elective officers shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the odd numbered years."

Section 4831 G. C. provides:

> "Township officers and justices of the peace shall be chosen by the electors of each township on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the odd numbered years."

By virtue of the above constitutional and statutory provisions, I can not see how there would be any question as to the validity and legality of electing justices of the peace in the odd numbered years. Consequently it is my view that a justice of the peace must be elected in the odd numbered years.

Section 4963 G. C. (107 O. L. 400), which is found in the primary election laws, provides among other things that primaries for all elective state, district and county offices shall be held in the even numbered years, and primaries to nominate candidates for township and municipal offices and justices of the peace shall be held in the odd numbered years.

In the communication reference is made to H. B. No. 75, found in 103 O. L. 23. As this was an amendment to section 4826 G. C., providing for the time of holding elections for elective state and county offices and for the office of judge of the court of appeals, I can not see what application it has to the questions submitted. This section does provide:

> " * * * All votes for any judge for an elective office except a judicial office, under the authority of this state, given by the general assembly, or by the people, shall be void."

But this has no reference to the office of justice of the peace or mayor.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—DEED OF LANDS TO COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF LICKING COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of November 17, 1917, in which you enclose a form of deed from the state of Ohio to the board of county commissioners of Licking county, Ohio, to be executed in pursuance of certain proceedings had by your department.

In passing upon this matter, I am taking the introductory statements of the deed to be true, to the effect that you have determined these lands not to be necessary for the maintenance and operation of any of the canals of the state; that you appraised the said lands at the sum of $1,221.33; that they were duly advertised for sale for not less than thirty days prior to the date of the sale, in two newspapers of opposite politics and of the general circulation in Licking county, and that the board of county commissioners of Licking county bid the sum of $916.00 for the said lands, they being the highest and best bidders.

I am of the opinion that the proceedings by your department, leading up to the making of the deed, are in all respects regular and in conformity to law and I therefore approve the sale of said lands and have endorsed my approval on the form of deed and am forwarding the deed to the Governor of Ohio for his approval in reference to the sale. This he must give under the provisions of the statute before he signs the deed.

I might say in passing that the deed submitted is in the nature of a quit-claim, rather than a warranty, but if the county commissioners are satisfied therewith, there is nothing irregular in this.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—MAY DRILL GAS WELL—TO SECURE FUEL FOR COUNTY INSTITUTIONS.

A board of county commissioners has the legal right to contract for drilling a gas well on land belonging to the county, with a view to securing a fuel supply for the institutions of the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of November 7, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following question:
> Has a board of county commissioners the legal right to contract for the drilling of a gas well on the infirmary farm, with a view to securing fuel supply for said institution?"

In connection with this communication I also have a letter from the prosecuting attorney of Columbiana county in which he states that this matter refers particularly to Columbiana county, and that the county commissioners of said county are not about to enter upon any "wild-cat" scheme of speculation in drilling for gas, but that it is necessary for them to secure more gas for the uses of the infirmary buildings or they will be compelled to equip the furnaces at a great expense for coal instead of gas, and hence their desire to drill for gas if same may be done legally.

In answer to your question it will be necessary for us to note a number of sections of the General Code. Section 2522 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The board of county commissioners shall make all contracts and purchases necessary for the county infirmary and prescribe such rules and regulations as it deems proper for its management and good government, and to promote sobriety, morality and industry among the inmates. The commissioners shall keep a separate book in which the clerk, or if there is no commissioner's clerk, the county auditor, shall keep a separate record of their transactions respecting the county infirmary, which book shall at all times be open to public inspection."

It will be noted from this section that the county commissioners may make all contracts necessary for the county infirmary.

Sections 2529 and 2530 General Code read as follows:

> "Sec. 2529. On the first Monday of March in each year, the board of county commissioners shall certify to the county auditor the amount of money they will need for the support of the infirmary for the ensuing year, including all needful repairs thereof. The county auditor shall place the amount so certified on the tax duplicate of the county, and the county commissioners shall have full control of the poor fund and shall be held responsible therefor.

Sec. 2530. When in any county the funds applicable for the support of the poor are insufficient, the county commissioners may levy for such purposes in addition to those otherwise authorized any rate not exceeding six-tenths of a mill on the dollar of valuation."

By virtue of these sections provision is made for the securing of necessary funds with which the county commissioners are enabled to carry out the contracts which they make for the county infirmary. While these sections do not specifically provide for the matter of entering into contracts to drill for gas, yet they do provide that the county commissioners may make all contracts necessary for the county infirmary. One of the necessities, of course, of the county infirmary is heat and light, and if the county commissioners should deem it proper and necessary for the best management of the county infirmary to enter into a contract with a person or corporation to drill for gas, the gas to be used for heating and lighting the infirmary, I can see no legal objection to such a contract. It could hardly be held that the county commissioners would not have authority to drill for water to supply the infirmary with that commodity, and yet water is no more necessary for the uses and purposes of the infirmary than is heat. To be sure, the element of risk enters into the matter in that the county commissioners might spend quite an amount of money and not secure gas, but this same question could be raised even with other matters which pertain to the management of the county infirmary.

Section 2435-1 General Code provides that the commissioners of any county may invite bids and award contracts for supplying county buildings with light, heat and power. If they can enter into contracts with persons to furnish light, heat and power I am of the opinion that they could also have the power to enter into a contract with a person or corporation to drill for the commodity which will furnish the light, heat and power for the county buildings.

Furthermore, I know of no principle of law which would prevent the county commissioners' making use of any kind of mineral substances which might be under the soil of the property belonging to the county.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the county commissioners would have authority to enter into a contract for the drilling of a gas well on the infirmary farm, with a view to securing fuel supply for the said institution.

Of course, it is hardly necessary for me to suggest that the county commissioners should use sound discretion as to the wisdom of drilling or not drilling for mineral substances inasmuch as the expense connected with such a procedure is generally large.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FINDING FOR PLAINTIFF AGAINST INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION FOR "DAMAGES" INSTEAD OF "COMPENSATION" NOT SUFFICIENT GROUND ON WHICH TO REVIEW CASE ON ERROR.

The mere fact that the jury in the trial of a case against the industrial commission found in favor of the plaintiff for so much "damages" instead of for so much "compensation" is not a sufficient ground on which to take the case to a higher court for review on error.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your request for my opinion on the following matter:

> "IN RE:—Claim No. 61873, Sylvester Hodges, Dec.
> We attach hereto copy of statement of facts in connection with the above numbered claim. This statement sets forth in detail the proceedings which have taken place in this claim. We desire an opinion from you as to whether the use of the word 'damages' in the verdict given by the jury in the court of common pleas of Cuyahoga county instead of the word 'compensation' is sufficient ground on which to base an appeal to the higher courts. The commission desires your opinion on this point before taking further action with respect to paying the judgment rendered."

I have examined the papers that you submitted to me with your request, and after considering them in connection with the question which you submit I have come to the conclusion that the mere fact that there has been an error in describing the verdict in question as one for "damages" instead of for "compensation" would not be prejudicial error, since it would be merely an inaccuracy in description which could not be said to be detrimental to the defendant. The following quotation from 23 Cyc., 790, supports this view:

> "But an entry of judgment for the right sum, although it is inaccurately named 'damages' instead of 'debt,' or so much debt and so much damages, is not reversible error."

I therefore advise you, in direct answer to your question, that the mere fact that the jury in the trial of a case against the industrial commission found in favor of the plaintiff for so much damages instead of for so much compensation is not a sufficient ground, in my opinion, on which to take the case to a higher court for review on error.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—MISDEMEANOR CASES—FEES OF OFFICERS —ATTEMPT SHOULD BE MADE TO COLLECT COSTS FROM DEFENDANT BEFORE COMMISSIONERS MAKE ALLOWANCE.

Under section 3019 G. C. it is necessary that a person charged with a misdemeanor be tried, convicted and sentenced or plead guilty and have sentence passed upon him and that an attempt be made to collect the costs from him before the commissioners would be warranted in making the allowance in place of fees.

HON. HARRY M. RANKIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Washington C. H., Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 23, 1917, as follows:

"General Code section 3019 provides that 'in felonies wherein the state fails: and in misdemeanors wherein the defendant proves insolvent, the county commissioners * * * may make an allowance to any such officers in place of fees.'

Your department has heretofore rendered an opinion as to the meaning of the phrase 'wherein the state fails.' I have been unable to find anything, however, which defines what is meant by 'in misdemeanors wherein the defendant proves insolvent.'

From a reading of this section alone it would seem that the commissioners can make an allowance in lieu of fees only in cases where the fees can not be collected from the defendant because of his insolvency.

The insolvency of a defendant, it would seem, could only be proven in a case where there has been a final hearing in a court of competent jurisdiction, the defendant found guilty and the sentence of the court pronounced against him.

Is it necessary, therefore, that a person charged with a misdemeanor be tried, convicted and an attempt made to collect the costs from him before the commissioners are warranted in making an allowance in place of fees?"

On February 15, 1915, my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, rendered an opinion, found in opinions of the attorney-general for 1915, Vol. I, p. 148, in which is found the following statement:

"Under the provisions of this section (3019 G. C.) no allowance can be made to the officers in misdemeanor cases, unless the defendant 'proves' insolvent. It may be a matter of common knowledge that a defendant is insolvent and that a judgment against him for fine and costs would be worthless, but within the meaning of the statute it could hardly be said that a defendant has been proven insolvent until there has been a conviction or a plea of guilty and until sentence has been passed and there is a commitment for failure to pay the penalty assessed."

I agree with this statement and in answer to your question would advise you that it is necessary that a person charged with a misdemeanor be tried, convicted and sentenced or plead guilty and have sentence passed upon him and that an attempt be made to collect the costs from him before the commissioners would be warranted in making the allowance in place of fees.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

JUVENILE COURT—WHEN JUDGE ENTITLED TO FEES IN DELINQUENCY CASE UNDER SECTION 1602 G. C.

A "case" is filed in the juvenile court within the meaning of section 1602 G. C. when the original affidavit charging delinquency, dependency or neglect is filed with the court, and as long as the jurisdiction acquired upon that charge continues the filing of any additional affidavits or charges, or the making of any new orders by the court, does not constitute a new "case" within the meaning of section 1602 G. C., and the judge of the juvenile court can, therefore, receive no additional fees therefor.

Provided, however, that if the affidavit is filed against a boy who has been given an absolute discharge from the Boys' Industrial School, to which institution he was formerly committed by the juvenile court, the filing of such affidavit constitutes a new "case" and the fee provided for in section 1602 G. C. may be allowed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

HON. H. H. NEEDLES, Juvenile Judge, Sidney, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 26, 1917, as follows:

"Under section 1602 G. C. the probate court receives fees when acting as a judge of the juvenile court 'for each case filed against a delinquent, dependent or neglected child, two dollars and fifty cents.'

The question I would like your opinion on is, if a child is brought into court, found delinquent, made a ward of the court and committed to, say the Boys' Industrial School, is paroled and finally discharged, and later is brought into the court again and recommitted to the Boys' Industrial School, is the court entitled to two fees of $2.50 each or is the last proceeding expected to be had without charge?

And would it make any difference if complaint was filed in the latter case rather than to just pick the child up and under the continuing jurisdiction make the commitment?

I would like your opinion on the charge of all later proceedings in such cases after the first, which make the child a ward of the court, when it is necessary to rehear the matter for failure to observe the terms of parole, etc."

Section 1602 G. C. reads in part:

"The fees enumerated in this section shall be paid to the probate judge out of the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor * * * ; when acting as a judge of the juvenile court, for each case filed against a delinquent, dependent or neglected child, two dollars and fifty cents; * *"

Section 1647 G. C. provides:

"Any person having knowledge of a minor under the age of seventeen years who appears to be either a delinquent, neglected or dependent child, may file with the clerk of the court of the judge exercising the jurisdiction, an affidavit, setting forth the facts, which may be upon information and belief."

Section 1643 G. C. provides:

> "When a child under the age of eighteen years comes into the custody of the court under the provisions of this chapter, such child shall continue for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection, a ward of the court, until he or she attains the age of twenty-one years. The power of the court over such child shall continue until the child attains such age."

It will be noted that the only provision made for the filing of any charge against a minor in the juvenile court is an affidavit charging the child to be a delinquent, dependent or neglected child and that after the court has once found the child to be delinquent, dependent or neglected, its jurisdiction continues until after the child has become twenty-one years of age. This being so, any hearing given a child later or any order made concerning it subsequent to the original finding that the child was delinquent, dependent or neglected, is founded upon the continuing jurisdiction of the court and not upon any new jurisdiction arising from a new charge or complaint. This being true, I am of the opinion that a "case" is filed within the meaning of section 1602 G. C., supra, when the original affidavit charging delinquency, dependency or neglect is filed with the court and that as long as the jurisdiction acquired upon that charge continues, the filing of any additional affidavits or charges, or the making of any new orders by the court, does not constitute a new "case" within the meaning of section 1602 G. C.

Attention is called, however, to an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon Timothy S. Hogan, and found in the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General, 1914, Vol. 2, page 1757, in which it was held:

> "When a boy is committed to the boys' industrial school by the juvenile court, the jurisdiction of the juvenile court ceases. Such boy can only be released from the industrial school by the board of administration upon the recommendation of the superintendent."

In that opinion it was stated:

> "It will be noticed that section 1643 provides that 'when a child under the age of eighteen years comes into the custody of the court' such child shall 'continue for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection, a ward of the court, until he or she attain the age of twenty-one years.' The boys' industrial school at Lancaster is a reform school, the object of which is to bring about the reform of the boys committed to it. Owing to this fact, it seems to me that when a boy is committed to the boys' industrial school by the juvenile court, it is no longer necessary for the juvenile court to retain jurisdiction over the child, since the child could be properly disciplined and protected by the authorities of the boys industrial school. Therefore, inasmuch as the two reasons mentioned in section 1643 for the continuing jurisdiction of the juvenile court do not exist after the boy's commitment to Lancaster, it is my opinion that the jurisdiction of such court terminates when the boy is committed to the boys' industrial school."

Section 2091 G. C. authorizes the parole of boys committed to the boys' industrial school, and section 2092 provides for the return of boys who have violated their parole.

This department in Opinion No. 608, rendered under date of September 10, 1917, held that the act of creating the Ohio Board of Clemency, found in 107 O. L., 598 in no way affects the jurisdiction of the Ohio Board of Administration over the boys' industrial school. It follows, therefore, from the ruling of former Attorney-General Hogan, above quoted,that when a boy is committed by the juvenile court to the boys' industrial school at Lancaster, the jurisdiction of the juvenile court ceases and exclusive jurisdiction concerning such boy is vested in the authorities of the school and the Ohio board of administration. Should the board parole such boy, any violation of such parole should be called to the attention of the parole board, since that board and not the juvenile court has the authority to revoke the parole and return the boy to the institution. In cases where the boy has been given an absolute discharge from the boys' industrial school, neither the superintendent of that institution nor the Ohio board of administration has any jurisdiction over such boy. Neither has the juvenile court any jurisdiction over such boy founded upon any former jurisdiction. In such a case the only manner in which the juvenile court can acquire jurisdiction concerning the boys upon an affidavit being filed under section 1647 G. C., charging the boy with being a delinquent, dependent or neglected child. In that case, even though the boy was formerly committed by the same court to the boys' industrial school, the filing of the affidavit under section 1647 G. C. constitutes, I think, a new "case" and the juvenile court may, therefore, be allowed an additional fee under section 1602 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CANDIDATE—WHERE VOTES CAST FOR JUDGE OR CLERK OF ELECTION WHO IS NOT A CANDIDATE—HOW COUNTED.

Where votes are cast for a person for office, who has not been regularly nominated therefor, and who has not sought or aspired to such office, such votes should be counted for such person, even though he is a judge or clerk at the election at which said votes are cast, and such person so receiving the highest number of votes would be eligible to the office to which he was elected, notwithstanding the provisions of section 5092 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

HON. W. D. FULTON, State Supervisor of Elections, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have an inquiry from Hon. J. Parsons, mayor of Stockport, Ohio, under date of November 9, 1917, wherein he states that at the municipal election held in that village on November 6, 1917, one of the judges, whose name did not appear on the official ballot, was elected mayor by having his name written in on the ballots by the electors; that another judge in the same manner was elected village clerk, and still another judge in like manner was elected assessor. He states that no question is made as to the fairness of the count, and desires to know whether or not the election is valid. I am addressing an opinion thereon to you and will send Mr. Parsons a copy of same.

Under section 5070, subsection 6, G. C., if an elector desires to vote for a person whose name does not appear on the ticket, he can substitute the name by writing it in black lead pencil or in black ink in the proper place, and making a cross mark in the blank space at the left of the name so written.

Under section 5071 G. C., if there were no nomination for a particular office, or if by inadvertence or otherwise the name of the candidate regularly nominated is omitted from the ballot, the elector also may write in the name of a person for whom he desires to vote and properly mark it.

However, in the question under consideration it appears that all of the persons for whom votes were thus cast were election officers at said election, and section 5092 G. C. apparently makes a judge or clerk of elections ineligible to hold an office to which he may be elected at an election at which he is serving as such election officer. Said section 5092 provides:

> "No person, being a candidate for an office to be filled at an election, other than for committeeman or delegate or alternate to any convention, shall serve as deputy state supervisor or clerk thereof, or as a judge or clerk of elections, in any precinct at such election. A person serving as deputy state supervisor or clerk thereof, judge or clerk of elections contrary to this section shall be ineligible to any office to which he may be elected at such election."

This section, prior to its amendment, as found in 103 O. L. 496, did not contain the exception "other than for committeeman or delegate or alternate to any convention," and in consequence was general in its terms.

Said section 5092 prohibits a person, being a candidate for an office, to be filled at an election, other than those named, to serve as a judge or clerk of elections in any precinct at such election. The word "candidate" must be given its popular meaning The legislature must have so intended when using this term throughout the election laws. Lexicographers usually define a candidate as one who seeks or aspires to some office or privilege, or who offers himself for the same. A candidate has also been defined as one who offers himself or is offered by others for a place.

Section 5092 supra further provides that a person serving as judge or clerk of elections, contrary to the section, shall be ineligible to any office to which he may be elected at such election.

Now, while it is true that these persons who were serving as election officers received a sufficient number of votes to elect them to the particular offices, there is nothing in the facts before us to show that any of these parties were seeking or aspiring to the office, or were candidates in the usual acceptation of the term.

In the compilation of election laws prepared by the state supervisor of elections, there is a note under section 5092 G. C. which reads as follows:

> "* * * * While a judge or clerk of elections can not be a candidate, where such a person has received a sufficient number of votes by electors writing his name on the ballot for a particular office, and such votes are in conformity to law in all other respects, such person should be declared elected to that office."

This was the interpretation placed upon section 5092 by one of the former secretaries of state, in his capacity as state supervisor of elections.

Without passing on the question whether or not a person, whose name was not printed upon the ballot, might become a candidate in the true sense of the word, if he electioneered for the office and importuned electors to vote for him, as the facts in the present case do not show that there was any electioneering or that the parties were candidates in any sense, and as they merely show that the voters wrote in the names on the ballots, and on a count it was disclosed that the election officers had received a sufficient number of votes to elect them, it is my view that under such circumstances their election was valid.

I am inclined to the view that the word "candidate" in said section 5092 means a candidate as provided for under the election laws. But in any event I am of the opinion that the persons inquired about in the communication of mayor Parsons were eligible to the offices to which they were elected, even though they were election officers at such election, and that they do not come within the inhibition of section 5092 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney General.

MONEY TAKEN BY POLICE IN RAID OF PLACE OF GAMBLING—DISPOSITION THEREOF.

Money taken by the police department in the raid of a place of gambling may be applied to the payment of fines and costs assessed against the owners thereof and the balance remaining after paying such fines and costs is to be delivered to the owner as provided in section 4400 General Code, or to the person from whom taken, if not claimed by the owner within thirty days as provided in section 4399 General Code. If such money is not claimed for a period of one year after its seizure, then it shall be turned over to the police relief fund in municipalities having such fund and to the treasurer of the municipality that has no police relief fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of October 10th, 1917, is received, in which you state as follows:

> "We are enclosing herewith question, together with brief of the city solicitor of Lorain, Ohio, and respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:
> QUESTION:
> What is the proper disposition of moneys taken by the police department in the raid of places of gambling?"

The brief referred to in your request, calls attention to the provisions of sections 4398 to 4401 inclusive of the General Code, and to the case of Englehardt Administrator, v. Kumming, 10 O. N. P., n. s., page 609.

Section 4398 General Code provides as follows:

> "Stolen or other property recovered by members of the police force shall be deposited and kept in a place designated by the mayor. Each such article shall be entered in a book, kept for that purpose with the name of the owner, if ascertained, and the person from whom taken, the place where found with general circumstances, the date of its receipt and the name of the officer receiving it."

Section 4399 G. C. reads as follows:

> "An inventory of all money or other property shall be given to the party from whom taken, and in case it is not claimed by some person within thirty days after such arrest and seizure it shall unless otherwise ordered by the board be delivered to the person from whom taken, and to no other person, either attorney, agent, factor, or clerk, except by special order of the mayor."

Section 4400 General Code reads as follows:

"If within thirty days such money or property is claimed by another person it shall be retained by such custodian until after the discharge or conviction of the person from whom taken and so long as it may be required as evidence in any case in court. If such claimant establishes to the satisfaction of the police judge that he is the rightful owner, it shall be restored to him, otherwise it shall be returned to the accused person, personally, and not to any attorney, agent, factor or clerk of such accused person, except upon special order of the mayor after all liens and claims in favor of the municipality, against it have first been discharged and satisfied."

Section 4401 General Code provides:

"Property unclaimed for the period of one year shall be sold by the chief of police or marshal at public auction, after giving due notice thereof, by advertisement published three times in a newspaper of general circulation in such county. In municipalities where there is a police relief fund and trustees and officers thereof the proceeds from such sale shall be paid to the treasurer of such fund and be placed to its credit. In municipalities where there is no police relief fund and trustees and officials thereof, such proceeds shall be paid to the treasurer of the municipality, and be credited to the general fund."

These four sections provide what shall be done with stolen or other property recovered by the police force and also covers money or other property taken by the police department in raids on places of gambling.

It is provided in section 4399 General Code that if such property is not claimed by some person within thirty days after the arrest, it shall, unless otherwise ordered, be delivered to the person from whom taken.

Section 4400 General Code provides the manner in which the rightful owner may have the property restored to him.

In section 4401 General Code there is provision for the disposition of property which has not been claimed for a period of one year. Such property shall be sold as therein provided, and in municipalities where there is a police relief fund the proceeds of such sale shall be paid to the treasurer of such fund. In other municipalities the proceeds are paid to the treasurer of the municipality.

There is no provision of statutes which declares a forfeiture of money which has been taken in a gambling raid. Sections 13054 to 13082, inclusive, of the General Code provide various penalties for offences connected with various devices and schemes of gambling. In none of these is there found any provision for the forfeiture of money recovered from gamblers.

Section 13489 General Code provides as follows:

"Upon conviction of a person for keeping a room or place to be occupied or used for gambling or knowingly permitting gambling to be conducted therein, or permitting a game to be played for gain or a gaming device to be kept in a house or other place, or exhibiting a gaming device for gain, money or other property or for betting or gambling, or permitting such device to be so used, or for being without a fixed residence and in the habit of gambling, if money or other property, won in gaming, be found in his possession, it shall be liable for a judgment which may be rendered against him growing out of such violation of law."

It is specifically provided in this section that money or other property won in gaming and found in possession of a person engaged in gambling, that such money shall be liable for a judgment which may be rendered against him growing out of such violation of the law.

In the case of Englehardt, Administrator, v. Kumming, 10 O. N. P., n. s., 609, the syllabus reads:

"Where the record of a magistrate shows that at a trial held before him he finds from the evidence that certain slot machines are gambling devices, his action in ordering them destroyed is lawful.

When the record shows the action of such magistrate to be under a search warrant his action is in the nature of a proceeding 'in rem.'

The law does not recognize any property rights as existing in gambling devices."

This case upholds the right of a magistrate to destroy gambling devices. It also appears on page 611 of the opinion that money found in the slot machine had been applied by the magistrate towards the payment of the costs of the proceedings against the owner of the slot machines. The court sustains this application and says at page 611:

* * * "there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the mayor, such as to render him liable for the repayment of the money, in interpreting the statutes to permit him to apply this sum towards payment of the costs of the proceedings under the search warrant."

This case is authority for the application of money recovered in a gambling raid to the payment of fines and costs assessed against the owner of such money. It is also authority for the destruction of paraphernalia or other property used for gambling purposes.

However, all property recovered in a gambling raid is not subject to destruction, only such property as may be described as gambling devices may be destroyed. The rule, as stated at page 920 of Vol. 20 of Cyc. is as follows:

"Under most statutes gaming apparatus seized as kept and used for gambling should be retained by the police authorities as evidence against the accused, subject to the order of the court or justice trying him, and upon his conviction in a proper proceeding should be ordered destroyed, if it is such as is of no substantial or practical use or value except in connection with gambling or if the use to which it is customarily devoted is gambling, even though the actual owner of the property did not consent to or know of its unlawful use; or it should be returned to its proper owner if the alleged offender is discharged. Some statutes authorize the court upon proper information to issue a warrant or order for the summary seizure and destruction of such apparatus kept and used for gaming purposes, if it is of such character that it can be put to no legitimate use and that the law will not recognize it as property entitled to its protection under any circumstances; but if they are not of such character, they cannot be destroyed without affording the owner an opportunity to be heard upon the subject of their lawful use and to show whether or not they are intrinsically useful or valuable for some lawful purpose."

Money is not subject to destruction as a gambling device even though recovered in a gambling raid. In the case of Miller v. State ex rel. 149 Pac. Rep., (Okla.) 364, the syllabus reads:

"Sections 2506 and 2507 Revised Laws, 1910, do not furnish authority for the seizure and destruction of money, as being 'an article or apparatus suitable to be used for gambling purposes.'"

In the absence of any statute authorizing the forfeiture of money recovered in a gambling raid, there would be no authority to transfer such money to the police relief fund or to the treasurer of a municipality. Such money may be applied to the payment of the costs and fines assessed against the owner thereof. If any remains after fine and costs are paid, it should be returned to the owner as provided in section 4400 General Code, or to the party from whom taken as provided in section 4399 General Code. If such money remains unclaimed for one year, it would come under the terms of section 4401 General Code, and should be paid to the police relief fund in municipalities having such fund, or to the treasurer of the municipality having no such relief fund.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

HON. DONALD F. MELHORN, Prosecuting Attorney, Kenton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On October 22, 1917, you make the following request for an opinion from this office:

"It appears from Vol. 107 Ohio Law, that the last legislature twice amended code section 6455. The first amendment, passed March 20th, appears at page 606; the second, passed March 21st, appears at page 616.

Please advise whether or not both sections are to be taken together as constituting code section 6455, and if not, which amendment is now effective."

The two acts you mention were passed in two consecutive days by the legislature and signed by the governor on the same day. In order to give full consideration to the subject both sections may be here copied in full to advantage. The first is found in 107 O. L., 606, and is house bill 140, and is as follows:

"The county commissioners, by such order, shall direct the county surveyor or engineer to make and return a schedule of the lots and lands, and public or corporate roads or railroads that will be benefited, with an apportionmen of the cost of location, and the labor of constructing the improvement, in money, according to the benefits which will result to each. In apportioning the costs of such improvement, the benefits to any lots or lands by diking them, in whole or in part, shall be considered with other benefits, and labor performed by a landowner on the line of the improvement prior to its location may be considered and a reasonable allowance made therefor in the assessment against such landowner, if in the judgment of the engineer such labor has caused a ma erial reduction in the cost of constructing the proposed improvement, and a specification of the manner in which the improvement shall be made and completed, the number of floodgates, waterways, farm crossings, and bridges necessary, including kinds and dimensions thereof, and all county and township lines and railway crossings."

The other is senate bill No. 14 (107 O. L., 616), and is as follows:

"Section 6442. The word 'ditch' as used in this chapter shall be held to include a drain or water course. The petition for any such improvement shall be held to include any side, lateral, spur or branch ditch, drain or water course necessary to secure the object of the improvement, whether the same is mentioned therein or not, but no improvement shall be located unless a sufficient outlet is provided. The words 'according to the benefits' as used in this chapter in directing boards of county commissioners to assess lands for ditches, and in directing engineers to report assessments for the same, shall not be held to authorize any assessment for benefits conferred upon lands by nature nor the right of easement of the owners of superintendent lands to pass the water therefrom through natural watercourses, except as provided in section 6455, and the commissioners may change either terminus of said ditch before its final location if the object of the improvement will be better accomplished thereby."

"Section 6455. The commissioners shall, also by their order direct the county surveyor or engineer to make and return a schedule of all the lots and lands, and public or corporate roads or railroads that will be benefited, with an apportionment of the cost of location, and the labor of constructing the improvement, in money, according to the benefits which will result to each, and in making such apportionment the amount of such improvement found necessary by reason of the artificial construction or improvement of ditches, drains and water courses on superincumbent lands and leading therefrom into such improvement, shall be considered as a benefit to such superincumbent lands, and the benefits to any lots or lands by diking the same in whole or in part, shall be considered with other benefits, and a specification of the manner in which the improvement shall be made and completed, the number of flood gates, waterways, farm crossings and bridges necessary, including kinds and dimensions thereof, and all county and township lines and railway crossings."

Both of these acts, of course, were pending before the legislature at once—the former, house bill No. 140, was passed March 20, 1917; the latter, senate bill No. 14, was passed the following day, March 21, 1917. Both were approved by the governor on March 21, 1917. There is no record in the governor's office from which can be determined the order in which these two acts were given approval, nor does anyone now know the fact as to which was first approved. Both were delivered to the secretary of state at the same time, and with a number of other laws all were filed at once. In the secretary of state's office, and for the purposes of that office alone, house bill No. 140 is endorsed with "No. 162," while senate bill 14 is endorsed with "No. 169." This, however, is purely accidental, and arose from the order in which the clerk making the endorsement happened to pick them up, and therefore indicates nothing as to the priority of the filing there.

Under this state of facts one of two conditions exists: either both of said laws are in force in so far as one is not repealed by the other by implication, or only one is in force upon the theory that the latter of the two—whichever that might be—was intended to supersede and be a substitute for the former. The rule is against repeal by mere implication, and in favor of giving effect to every provision of two laws on a given subject, the latter of which does not expressly repeal the former, as it is possible to reconcile the one with the other, and consistently with the apparent legislative intention.

If house bill No. 140 ever became a law this rule would prevail. As to when a bill becomes a law, section 16 of article II of the constitution determines, the provisions being as follows:

> "Every bill passed by the general assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor for his approval. If he approves, he shall sign it and thereupon it shall become a law and be filed with the secretary of state."

There is a further provision as to its becoming a law without his approval, not here important. If this section governs to the extent of being absolutely final and conclusive without any regard to rules of construction for obtaining the legislative intent, then it would be impossible that anyone could ever know which of these acts, so far as they are inconsistent, operates to repeal the other.

Let us now pause in this branch of the discussion to compare the two sections as they appear, with a view to what, if any, contradiction, there is.

In house bill No. 140 there is a provision in favor of a land owner who has already performed labor on the line of the improvement upon which he owns land. This upon casual consideration, might be thought merely declaratory. It, however, turns out not to be so. Practically this would work no innovation in the application of the law and rarely, if ever, be in conflict with the section as subsequently enacted, because the land owner doing such work would ordinarily receive the benefit of it to the extent that he had completed it, and therefore his benefit from the new improvement would be correspondingly reduced and consequently his apportionment of the cost of the construction according to the benefit would be reduced in like measure. It is possible, however, that such adjacent land owner might have done a great deal of work that would very much lessen the cost of the new improvement, and yet not have been of any benefit at all to his own land. This would arise if the land owner had begun an improvement and completed it along a part of his land adjoining the stream, supposing it to be a dike, but had left a part of it open at the time of the new improvement so that his lands were still flooded to the same extent as they had been without any improvement. In such case his benefit from the new improvement would be the whole benefit received by his land, including his own work.

Now, under house bill No. 140 he would be allowed on his apportionment the amount which his work has reduced the cost of public work, or the proportion of the improvement based upon such amount, so that if that be in conflict with the provisions of senate bill No. 14 we have the case where we must decide which is in effect.

In like manner the latter act contains a provision not found in the former and which is an innovation in the drainage laws of the state, as follows:

> "And in making such apportionment the amount of such improvement found necessary by reason of the artificial construction or improvement of the ditches, drains and water course on the superincumbent land and leading therefrom to such improvement, shall be considered as improvement to such superincumbent land, * * *."

Our supreme court has recently decided that an owner of land upon which were located ponds and marshes might drain those into a natural course on his own land without becoming liable to any portion of the cost of the improvement of a stream or drain into which such water course empties.

Mason v. Commissioners, 80 O. S., 151.

The opinion in this case is very interesting and is an exhaustive thesis upon the subject of riparian rights as between upper and lower proprietors. It might follow from the law as laid down in that case to the effect that each owner has a property right in the privilege of drainage across servient land that the giving full application and effect to this provision in senate bill No. 14 would render it unconstitutional. However, that question need not be here considered, and no opinion on it is intended to be suggested. Attention is called to it here because no similar provision is found in house bill No. 140, and it furnishes an instance in which the two are contradictory, so that we have one provision in each which is not found in the other and which either is or is not the law as it may turn out, as to whether both or only one of these sections is in force. There is therefore such conflict as renders the determination of the question necessary.

If we suppose house bill 140 to have gone into effect and then come to the consideration of the effect upon it of the enactment of the other bill, we find this qualification of the rule above stated against repeals by implication, that is, that where the new law in its evident intent is a substitute for the old in its entirety the repeal takes place.

Lorain Plank Road Co. v. Cotton, 12 O. S. 263.
State ex rel. Cuneo v. Commissioners, 16 C. C. 218.
Goff v. Gates, 87 O. S. 142.

In Lorain Plank Road Company v. Cotton the acts in question were in reference to the Plank Road Company. Section 2 of the syllabus, referring to a section of the latter act under consideration, is as follows:

> "Said section, which revises the whole subject matter of the amendatory act of March 10, 1836 * * * ' for the regulation of a turnpike companies,' and is evidently intended as a substitution for it, is to be regarded as superseding the latter act, and not as furnishing an additional or cumulative remedy."

Peck, J., in the opinion, at page 272, quotes approvingly from Curwen's Introduction to Vol. 1, Rev. Stat., as follows:

> "A subsequent statute revising the whole subject matter of the former act, and evidently intended as a substitute for it, although it contains no express words to that effect, operates to repeal the former."

Ex rel Cuneo v. Commissioners is a circuit court case decided, however, by Price, J., who afterwards sat in the supreme court, and the decision was affirmed by the supreme court without report. On page 222 he quotes approvingly the same quotation above given in the Lorain, etc. v. Cotton case from Curwen's statutes and gives it a like application to the case before the court.

The first syllabus in Goff v. Gates, supra, is as follows:

> "An act of the legislature that fails to repeal in terms an existing statute on the same subject matter must be held to repeal the former statute by implication if the later act is in direct conflict with the former, or if the subsequent act revises the whole subject matter of the former act and is evidently intended as a substitute for it."

The first clause of this statement only makes the repeal where there is a direct conflict; the latter clause, however, extends it to those cases where the new act is evidently intended as a substitute for the old even though there be no such conflict. Doanahue, J., on page 151, again cites Lorain, etc. v. Cotton with approval; and also on page 152 cites State ex rel. Cuneo v. Commissioners and mentions the fact that Price, J., who rendered the opinion in that case was later a judge of the supreme court, and follows his brief collation of authorities with this sentence:

> "We have no doubt whatever that this is a correct statement of the law."

In applying this doctrine let us now revert to the effect of the approval of an act by the governor. The statement in the constitution above quoted is that that approval makes it a law. This statement, however, only refers to the time at which a law shall go into effect, not what its construction shall be or its operation with reference to other legislative enactments. For instance, the governor signed house bill No. 140. If the legislature had in the meantime repealed that section while it was in the hands of the governor and before he had signed it, his signature to it could not give it the force of law. The senate bill, however, does not expressly repeal section 140—the repealing clause in senate bill 14 is that original section 6455 of the General Code is repealed. This, of course, was true because at the time of its enactment the original section was still in force, house bill No. 140 had not become a law nor was it certain that it would become a law at any time. The presumption, which presumption by-the-way is only a fiction, is that each member of both houses of the legislature was fully aware of both of these provisions in every respect and acting intelligently and with express intention in reference to the same. They actually act by houses, and a law is passed when it has been passed by that house into which it comes from the other, so that senate bill 14 became the act of the legislature when it was passed by the house. Of course, under the above rule or presumption each member of the house in voting for it knew that house bill 140 was pending in the senate, or had been passed by it, but taking the two houses together the combined intent of the whole legislature is expressed in the act last passed. Therefore, when the governor placed the stamp of his approval upon senate bill 14 and it became a law, what thereby was its effect as to other legislation upon the same subject not expressly repealed?

While it became a law upon the governor's approval it became the law that the legislature intended it should be, such approval having no effect whatever upon the intent, construction or operation of the law. The legislature having passed senate bill No. 14 last intended that it should supersede house bill 140, at least so far as there was any conflict between the two.

Under the principles above announced and the authorities cited, I believe it went further and became section 6455 of the General Code. It seems to be apparent not only that the legislature intended its provisions to be the law, but that it intended its provisions to be the whole law, that is, to be the only section 6455 that was to be in force. True, they repealed only the original section, but as above explained they could not repeal that section as amended because the amendment had not yet gone into effect, and was not certain to go into effect; therefore the repealing clause repealed the law that was in effect at the time it passed, and as to the other law it never went into effect.

It may be urged against this view that the cases above cited partly went upon the fact of there being some conflict, or apparent conflict, between the provisions of the former and latter enactments. However, the statements of the law in the syllabi and opinions of the court go further and not only do they do so verbally but also logically.

There are many instances where section numbers of the General Code are duplicated under circumstances similar to this—that is, they are printed as such in the compilation of the laws. Whether they both be in force or not in any given instance is another matter, but we cannot presume that the same legislature at about the same time meant to have two separate sections in force as one and under the same number. Where they expressly enacted that the section so numbered shall read as they enacted, and the mere fact that the repealing clause only mentions the original section, whether the same be explained as above or whether it be purely accidental should not have the effect of keeping the provisions of the section in force as it stood in a prior or intermediate enactment. It cannot be said that house bill No. 140 ever went into effect; it cannot be said that it did not; but the intention of the legislature is plain that for it senate bill No. 14 should be substituted. If the governor had vetoed the latter bill, it is true that house bill No. 140 would have become the law, but that is because the latter bill would then have clearly and distinctly had the governor's approval added to the intention of both houses of the legislature. This it never had, except at the same instant that the other bill had which the legislature intended should supersede it. The fact that the senate bill also re-enacted section 6442 also makes clear the intention of the legislature that that act and not the house bill should become the law. Section 6442 is amended by reason of the amendment of section 6455, and naturally by reason of the amendment contained in that section, because section 6455 is expressly mentioned in it, and certainly the 6455 was referred to, which was there included with it.

You are therefore advised that section 6455 as amended in senate bill 14, passed March 21, 1917, is the law to the exclusion of the same section in house bill 140 passed the day before.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—APPEAL LIES FOR REDUCTION—LAY-OFF, ETC.—REDUCTION OF SALARY OF EMPLOYE BY HEAD OF DEPARTMENT—HEAD OF DEPARTMENT MAY REQUIRE SERVICES OF EMPLOYE IN DIFFERENT LOCALITIES.

1. Under the provisions of the civil service law an appeal lies to the civil service commission from orders of reduction, lay-off or suspension. The civil service commission is warranted in sustaining such appeal only when it is clearly and affirmatively shown that such reduction, lay-off or suspension was on account of political or religious affiliation, or was made from other motives not founded upon the efficiency of the administration or the good of the public service. Unless such state of facts be clearly shown,—the presumption in favor of the propriety of official acts requires the dismissal of such appeals.

2. The heads of departments may reduce the salary of an employe in the classified civil service whose position does not fall within any of the groups for which the legislature has established salary schedules, provided such reduction be not made for any of the improper motives prohibited by the civil service law.

3. An employe appointed from a state-wide eligible list is under the control of the head of the department who, in the proper management of the affairs of such department, may require the services of such employe in different localities from time to time as the exigency of public service requires, so long as the transfer is not from one department to another in violation of section 16 of the civil service law.

4. Where a state has been divided into districts by a department for its own administration, employes in one district may be removed to another district by the head of such department without the approval of the civil service commission, but subject to the rules above given as to the reasons for such transfer if the same amount to any discrimination in position against such employes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

Civil Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIRS:—I am in receipt of the following communication from you under date of October 23, 1917:

> "Section 486-17 of the civil service law provides in part:
> 'In all cases of reduction, layoff, or suspension of an employe, whether appointed for a definite term or otherwise, the appointing authority shall furnish such employe or subordinate with a copy of the order of layoff, reduction, or suspension, and his reasons for the same, and give such employe or subordinate a reasonable time in which to make and file an explanation. Such order, together with the explanation, if any, of the subordinate, shall be filed with the commission. Nothing in this act contained shall limit the power of an appointing officer to suspend, without pay, for the purpose of discipline, an employe or subordinate for a reasonable period, not exceeding thirty days; provided, however, that successive suspensions shall not be allowed, and provided further that the provisions of this section shall not apply to temporary and exceptional appointments made under the authority of section 486-14 of the General Code.'
> Paragraph 6 of section 486-7 of the law provides that the commission shall:
> 'Hear appeals from the decisions of appointing officers of persons in the classified service who have been reduced in pay, or position, laid off, suspended, discharged, or discriminated against by such appointing authority.'

Section 486-16 of the law provides in part:

'With the consent of the commission, a person holding office or position in the classified service may be transferred to a similar position in another office, department or institution having the same pay and similar duties; but no transfer shall be made from an office or position in one class to an office or position in another class, nor shall a person be transferred to an office or position for original entrance to which there is required by this act or the rules adopted pursuant thereto, an examination involving essential tests or qualifications, or carrying a salary different from or higher than those required for original entrance to an office or position held by such person.'

Your advice and opinion is respectfully requested as follows:

1. Is paragraph 6 of section 486-7 intended to give the civil service commission jurisdiction for the consideration of appeals from orders of reduction, layoff or suspension, in the absence of specific provision to that effect in section 486-17? If so, what grounds would warrant the commission in sustaining or refusing to sustain a reduction by an appointing officer? In other words, what is the scope of jurisdiction of the civil service commission in cases of reduction, layoff, or suspension, and the method of procedure in such cases?

2. Can the salary of a classified employe whose position does not fall within any of the groups for which the legislature has established salary schedules be reduced by an appointing officer without restriction?

3. Can an employe appointed from a state-wide eligible list to such a position, for instance, as foreman of canals in the department of public works where it is customary to designate the appointment and assignment as foreman of a certain section of the canal system of the state, be transferred from one section of the canal system to another, without the approval of the state civil service commission, or the consent of the employe transferred? If so, can such transfer be made at a reduction in salary? Section 486-16 seems to have provided for transfers from one department to another rather than transfers within a department.

4. Can an appointing officer in a department where the state has been districted for the purpose of administration, transfer an employe who has been appointed from a state-wide eligible list to service in a designated district, from one district to another without the consent of the civil service commission, or the employe transferred? If so, can such transfer be arbitrarily made, or must it be done for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of administration, or for some other good and sufficient reason?"

In answering your questions the various provisions of the civil service act are to be kept in view together and the whole act to some extent considered. It is one entire legislative scheme with a definite and declared object. Its provisions were all enacted at once, and all intended to be operative in that the whole law should have the harmonious operation conducive to said object. This is true in reference to your first question. It is necessary to consider section 7 in connection with section 17, and it seems that you have further taken into consideration section 17-a. The sixth paragraph of section 7 alone would raise no doubt. The whole of said section is upon the powers and duties of the commission and the particular paragraph in question gives them the power and imposes upon them the corresponding duty of hearing appeals of persons in the classified service who have been reduced in pay or in position, laid off,

suspended, discharged, or otherwise discriminated against,

by the appointing authority.

When it is said that there is no doubt of its application what is meant is that there is no doubt of the authority and duty of the commission to hear such appeals when they may lawfully be made. Referring, then, to section 17 we find a prohibition against the exercise of authority by the appointing power in reference to the above list of subjects as applied to religious or political reasons or affiliations.

Construing this portion of section 17 with other paragraphs might raise the inference that the appeal referred to in section 6 is confined to whom the reduction, etc., are connected with such reasons. Such limitation, however, disappears in reading the succeeding portions of section 17, for it is immediately provided that in all cases of reduction, lay-off, or suspension, the appointing power shall furnish the employe with a copy of the order and his reasons, and give a reasonable time for an explanation. This does not expressly apply to a discharge or to any other discrimination than reduction, lay-off or suspension. The reason for omitting a discharge is because that is provided for in detail in the succeeding section—17a. The omission of the other discrimination may have been because it is too indefinite in terms to permit of the exact treatment prescribed for other cases, or it may be the result of mere oversight on the part of the legislature. Your question, however, refers to a reduction, and it may be safely concluded that an appeal lies from such reduction either in pay or in position. The fact that the proceedings and machinery for conducting such appeal are not as definitely provided and prescribed as it is for appeals in the case of discharge is not sufficient to overcome the express authority to hear such appeal in paragraph 4 of section 6 and the requirement of notification of such reduction to the commission by the appointing power found in section 16. And, as above intimated, the reason of your doubt upon the subject probably arises from a consideration of the definite provisions of section 17a in reference to appeals in cases of removals.

The exact method of proceeding in case of appeals for the removal is laid out definitely in the latter section, and no corresponding directions are given in case of appeals from the other actions in which it is permitted. The reason of this is probably because the subject of removal or discharge is of so much more importance than any of the others that it was deemed necessary to provide for a definite proceeding in the case of the removal. It occasions doubt, for instance, as to what time an appeal should be taken from the order of reduction or lay-off when an appeal in the case of discharge is expressly required to be within ten days; but as above observed these considerations are not sufficient to take away the express authority given to hear such appeals. It would happen in most cases of appeal from a lay-off or suspension that before the appeal could be heard the period of suspension would end. This would not apply to a reduction, and if it were necessary to determine when such appeals should be taken in the case of a reduction, the ten-day limitation applied for appeals in the case of removals would have no application and therefore it would either be unlimited or some other limitation would have to be deduced from the logic of the case—a question not here necessary to determine.

It being therefore determined that there is a right of appeal in the case of such reduction in pay or position, the question proceeds as to what grounds would warrant the commission in sustaining or refusing to sustain such reduction. The answer to this question can not be definitely given but must be founded upon general considerations to be drawn from the whole Civil Service law and its evident and declared spirit and intent, and must be governed by a well known rule in reference to the control of official authority. Clearly, if the reduction were on account of religious or political considerations, upon that state of affairs being thoroughly disclosed or undisputed the commission would sustain the appeal, but it would seem that the authority to extend it is not limited to those grounds alone, for as above noticed the provision in reference to religious and political grounds of reduction or discrimination is simply a declaration of a principle, and not a limitation of authority.

Broadly speaking, then, if it be shown clearly or admitted that such reduction is upon any ground not properly connected with the efficiency and good of the public service, at least in a broad sense, the appeal should be sustained. Such a multitude of instances might be imagined that no specific answer can be given as to what ground would warrant the commission in sustaining or refusing an appeal, but the same would have to be governed by the most general considerations applied to particular cases as they might arise. However, such action of the commission should always be in view of the other rule alluded to above governing the control of official conduct, which is in substance that the presumption of right action always prevails in favor of such officer, and the contrary should be clearly shown. In the case of mere difference of opinion official conduct should not be controlled by the civil service commission, but in respect to those matters committed to the commission by the civil service law violations of such law should be clearly established before such interference, by way of maintaining an appeal, should be used.

The presumption is that the head of a department or appointing power in reducing an official in pay or position is acting for the public good, and for the efficiency of the public service, and this presumption should be clearly rebutted by convincing evidence before the commission should sustain an appeal.

Answering your second question, it seems to refer to that class of cases where an appropriation is made for certain service by a department and for the pay of certain employes in that service other than those comprised in the "groups and grades" mentioned in the appropriation act, and with salaries therein provided. The amount appropriated for such employes is intended as a maximum. In this case I know of no limitation upon the heads of departments preventing changes in the compensation of individual employes when in their judgment the same is equitable and just. In such case if a given employe is receiving more than the head of the department considers his services are worth, there seems to be no restriction upon his right to reduce the same. This, of course, is subject to the provisions of the civil service law above mentioned against reduction and discrimination for improper reasons, and in the event of any such improper reason controlling such reduction the appeal would lie as above provided, subject to all that is above stated with reference thereto as to presumptions in favor of the act of the department and otherwise.

The answer to the third question seems to have application to the fourth. so far as the reduction of salary is concerned. As to the transfer of the employes, the opinion expressed by you in your question is correct, that section 16 of the civil service law has reference to transfers from one department to another and not to mere transfers from one position to another in the same department. Therefore, if the department of public works saw fit to change the locality of the activities of a given employe on the canals it would be a matter entirely within his judgment to make such transfer. In so far as such transfer results in a reduction of salary or position, it would be subject to all the considerations mentioned in the answer to the second question above.

Answering your fourth question in like manner upon the same considerations, the state department can make the transfer from one district to another of employes appointed from a state-wide eligible list without authority from the civil service commission, and employes so transferred would be required to comply. Plainly, however, such transfer could not be arbitrarily made, but must be done in the interest of the efficiency of the administration. If such transfer were an unjust discrimination, an appeal might lie therefrom, and in the same manner and subject to the same rules and presumptions indicated above, the appeal could be either sustained or refused by the commission.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 2, 1917, in which you ask me to place a construction upon sections 1187, 2284-1 and 2284-2 General Code with a view to answering nine questions submitted by you. The sections to which you refer read as follows:

> "Section 1187. The state highway commissioner or chief highway engineer, may call upon the county highway superintendent, at any time, to furnish a map or maps of the county showing distinctly the location of any rivers, railroads, streams, township lines, cities, villages, public highways, road improvements, and deposits of road material, together with any other information that may be required by said commissioner or engineer. It shall be the duty of the county highway superintendent to furnish such information in such form as the state highway commissioner may require. A copy of such maps, plats or other information shall be kept on file in the office of the county highway superintendent."

"Section 2284-1. Highway maps shall be published by the state and shall be officially designated as 'Highway Maps of Ohio.' The state highway commissioner is hereby authorized to designate the improved roads by color, and to revise such maps from time to time as the improvement of the roads may justify. He shall secure a copyright of the said maps from time to time then so published. * * * "

"Section 2284-2. An edition of five thousand copies of the highway maps of Ohio shall be published as soon as information regarding the character of improved roads has been compiled and plates showing the same have been prepared. Future editions of not to exceed five thousand copies each, may thereafter be published when ninety per cent. of the last preceding edition has been sold. The commissioners of public printing shall have charge of the printing and binding of the editions of the highway maps of Ohio. They shall be printed upon a suitable quality of paper and shall be bound in such styles and quality of binding as to them may seem advisable. The commissioners shall advertise for bids as provided by law and shall let the contract to the best and lowest responsible bidder. The contract for printing and binding the highway maps of Ohio shall not be considered to be a part of the general contract for printing, and shall not be classed as any one of the classes of public printing but shall be a separate and distinct contract. When such maps are completed they shall be delivered to the secretary of state and shall be sold by him at the cost of the paper, printing, binding and delivering plus twenty-five per cent. additional. The money derived from their sale shall be turned over to the state treasury in the same manner as provided for the payment of other moneys paid into the state treasury."

I will take up your questions in the order in which they are given in your communication and answer them in the same order. Your first question is as follows:

"(1) Has the state highway commissioner a right, under the provisions of section 1187 G. C., to require a county surveyor to furnish the original tracing of a map which is to become the property of the state?"

Section 1187 General Code provides that "it shall be the duty of the county highway superintendent to furnish such information in such form as the state highway commissioner may require." This section also provides that "the state highway commissioner, or the chief highway engineer, may call upon the county highway superintendent, at any time, to furnish a map or maps of the county."

From this provision it is my opinion that the state highway commissioner has a right to require a county surveyor to furnish the original tracing of a map, and this for the reason that the section provides that the latter shall be furnished in such form as the state highway commissioner may require.

Your second question is as follows:

"(2) Has the county surveyor a right to copyright a map which he makes for the state highway commissioner under the provisions of section 1187 G. C.?"

It is my opinion that the county surveyor has no right to copyright a map which he makes for the state. The very fact that the state highway commissioner is authorized and commanded to secure a copyright of the maps furnished by the county surveyors when published would seem to negative the idea that the county surveyor should have authority to copyright the maps of his county; further, the work done by the county surveyor is for the use and benefit of the state and not for his own use; for this work he is paid under the provisions of section 7181 General Code (107 O. L., 110), which section provides as follows:

> "Provided, however, that in no case shall the annual salary paid the county surveyor exceed six thousand dollars. Such salary shall be paid monthly out of the general county fund upon the warrant of the county auditor and shall be instead of all fees, costs, per diem or other allowances, and all other perquisites of whatever kind or description which any county surveyor may collect or receive."

Hence, in view of the fact that the county surveyor receives a full consideration under the provisions of this section, and in view of the fact that the work which he furnishes is to be copyrighted by the state, it is my opinion that the county surveyor has no right or authority to copyright the maps prepared by him.

Your third question reads as follows:

> "(3) Has the county surveyor a legal right to reproduce copies of the map he furnishes the state highway commissioner under the provisions of section 1187 G. C., other than the copy he is required to keep on file?"

The answer to your second question really answers your third. The county surveyor does this work for the state, for which he is paid under section 7181 General Code (107 O. L. 110); the state highway commissioner is then to have the same copyrighted when it is published with the maps of the other counties. This copyright is meant to enure to the benefit of the state, and would prevent any one other than the state from publishing or reproducing the matter or any part of it contained in the completed work.

Hence, it is my opinion that a county surveyor has no right to reproduce copies of maps he furnishes to the state highway commissioner, excepting for use in his own office.

Your fourth question reads as follows:

> "(4) Has the county surveyor a right, under the provision of section 1187 G. C., or any other law, to sell, distribute, or give away, publicly or privately, copies of the map made for the highway commissioner under the provisions of section 1187 G. C.?"

This question is answered by the answer given to your third question, namely, that he has no such right.

Your fifth question reads as follows:

> "(5) Would it be permissible for the state highway commissioner to copyright the uncolored maps made under the provisions of section 1187 G. C., either singly or in separate sets, before all the maps are completed, when it is the intention later to publish such maps in colors showing improvements under the provisions of sections 2284-1 and -2 G. C. after all maps are completed and the improvement information obtained? Or is the copyrighting of maps, made under the provisions of section 1187 G. C. limited by section 2284-1 G. C. to the time when all the maps are completed showing improved roads by color, and ready to be published?"

Section 2284-1 General Code provides:

"Highway maps shall be published by the state and shall be officially designated as 'Highway Maps of Ohio.' The state highway commissioner is hereby authorized to designate the improved roads by color, and to revise such maps from time to time as the improvement of the roads may justify. He shall secure a copyright of the said maps from time to time when so published. * * *"

From the provisions of this section two things are provided for, namely:

1. Highway maps shall be published and designated as "Highway Maps of Ohio."

2. The state highway commissioner shall secure a copyright of said maps from time to time when so published.

From these provisions it is my opinion that there is no authority to copyright the maps, either singly or in separate sets until the time when all of the maps are completed showing the improved roads by color, and are ready for publication as the Highway Maps of Ohio."

Your sixth and seventh questions read as follows:

"(6) Is it permissible for the state highway commissioner to give away prints made from the maps furnished him under the provisions of section 1187 G. C.,

(a) If the map is copyrighted?

(b) If the map is not copyrighted?"

(7) Is it permissible for the state highway commissioner to lend out tracings or negatives made from tracings, for the purpose of permitting prints to be made from the original maps, furnished under the provisions of section 1187 G. C.,

(a) If the map is copyrighted?

(b) If the map is not copyrighted?"

These two questions may be answered together. As I view it, the answer will be the same whether the uncolored maps are copyrighted or not. The fact remains that the maps when colored and completed are to be copyrighted, and under section 2284-2 General Code the profits are to enure to the benefit of the state. Hence, the state highway commissioner would not have authority to distribute the matter that goes into the copyrighted work. The same rule would apply to him as applies to the county surveyor as before stated in this opinion. Furthermore, section 2284-1 General Code specifically states how the first edition of the published maps shall be distributed, and section 2284-2 General Code provides how further editions shall be handled. This seems to negative the idea that there is to be any other distribution of the matter when it becomes the official publication.

Your eighth question reads as follows:

"(8) Would prints of such maps furnished to engineers, division engineers, resident engineers or other employes of this department for departmental business, constitute an exception to your answers to points (6) and (7) above?"

In answering this question it must be borne in mind that section 2284-1 and 2284-2, and section 1187 General Code are not parts of one and the same act. The former sections were enacted into law on April 27, 1910, while the latter section forms a part of the Cass Highway act, and was enacted into law on May 27, 1915. For this reason it cannot be held that the same purpose runs through all of the sections. It is undoubtedly true that the results secured under the provisions of section 1187 General Code are to be used in carrying out the provisions of sections 2284-1 and 2284-2 General Code, but the provisions of section 1187 General Code were also evidently intended to serve another purpose. The state highway commissioner is given authority to ask for the information therein set out from the county surveyors for the use and purposes of his own department.

Hence it is my opinion that you would have authority and be warranted in law in giving the information you secured from the county surveyors to the employes of your department to be used by them in the performance of their official duties.

Your ninth question is as follows:

> "(9) In applying for a copyright for a map, made by the county surveyor under the provisions of section 1187 G. C., what entry is proper to make by this department in blank space (3) of the official form for application for copyright (hereto attached)?"

The answer to this question must be given in the light of a decision rendered by the supreme court of the United States, styled Banks v. Manchester, 128 U. S. 244. The court in this case affirmed the decision of the circuit court of the southern district of Ohio, found in 23 Fed. Rep. 143.

From these two decisions I am of the opinion that you should make application for a copyright in the following words:

> "Clinton Cowen, state highway commissioner for the state of Ohio."

In giving you this answer I am not at all passing upon the question as to the right which the state of Ohio would have under such a copyright, but whatever right the state can secure by virtue of a copyright will be secured, in my opinion under and by virtue of an application such as is above set out. The language in 128 U. S. 244, and on page 253 of the opinion, renders the question as to the right of a public official to secure a copyright of the work performed by him somewhat uncertain. The court in this case rather held that inasmuch as the official draws a salary for the work he performs as a public official, his work should be for the use and benefit of the public and not subject to copyright.

But that court, in another case styled Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 761, rendered a decision more specific in reference to this point. On page 647 of the opinion the court says:

> "Even though a reporter may be a sworn public officer, appointed by authority of the government which creates the court, of which he is made the reporter, and even though he may be paid a fixed salary for his labors, yet, in the absence of any inhibition forbidding him to take a copyright for that which is the subject of a lawful copyright in him or reserving a copyright to the government as assignee of his work, he is not deprived of the privilege of taking out a copyright which would otherwise exist."

This case would seem to hold that a public official, even though he is paid a salary, may secure a copyright upon the product of his labors. The benefit of the copyright will then vest in the state under and by virtue of the provisions of our statutes.

Relative to the copyright referred to in your communication, I desire to suggest that it will be necessary for your department and the county surveyor to be very careful as to the manner in which the copies of the maps are used, for the reason that the courts have been unanimous in holding that if any matter subject to copyright has been dedicated to the use of the public by publishing the same, then the author can no longer have the same copyrighted.

For instance, in 68 L. R. A. 591 the court say:

> "Thus in case of a book, ordinarily the sole practical benefit to the author is in the right to multiply copies. The exhibition or private circulation of the original or of printed copies is not a publication unless it amounts to a general offer to the public. The unrestricted offer of even a single copy to the public implies the surrender of the common law right."

In 212 Fed. Rep. 301, the court say in the opinion:

> "If there be such a dissemination of the thing under consideration among the public as to justify the belief that it took place with the intention of rendering the work common property, then publication occurred."

If publication has occurred, the courts are unanimous that the matter can no longer be copyrighted.

Hence, while your department has the undoubted right to use the maps secured from the county surveyor for the use of the department, yet the maps should be so used and returned to the office and kept there in such a way as in nowise to indicate to the public that the matter contained in the maps has been dedicated to public use.

I would suggest that you stamp upon the maps used by your department something to the effect that they are merely for the use of the department and that there is no intention whatever, upon the part of the department or any one else, to dedicate the same to the use of the public.

It might also be well for the county surveyor, in filing the copy of the map in his department, to indicate upon the same that it is filed merely in compliance with the law and for the use of his department, and is not in anywise for the uses and purposes of the public.

This suggestion I feel to be important and request therefore that you give the same your careful consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—DOES NOT APPLY TO SHARES OF STOCK OF DOMESTIC CORPORATION OWNED BY NON-RESIDENTS —DOES APPLY TO REAL ESTATE—BY WHOM AMOUNT OF TAX DETERMINED—TAX COMMISSION HAS NO JURISDICTION.

The Ohio collateral inheritance tax law does not apply to bequests or intestate successions of shares of stock in domestic corporations passing from the estates of deceased persons residing in other sates (Greves v. Shaw, 173 Mass., 205 contra not followed).

Such laws do, however, apply to devises or intestate inheritances of real estate belonging to the estates of such non-resident decedents when such real estate is located in this state.

Primarily, the auditor of the county in which ancilliary administration is had or the foreign will is probated, and ultimately the probate court of such county determines the amount of the tax on account of such real estate, and the same is payable to the treasurer of said county.

The tax commission of Ohio has no authority or jurisdiction whatsoever over the administration of the collateral inheritance tax law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge your letter of recent date in which you enclosed a letter written on behalf of the executor of the estate of a person who at his death was a resident of the state of New Hampshire. The letter contains a copy of the will of the decedent and a copy of a supplemental inventory of the estate, showing that the testator was the owner of undivided interests in certain tracts of real estate located in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, and of certain shares of stock in a corporation organized under the laws of this state.

You ask the following questions in connection with this letter:

> "Please advise the commission whether any of the property included in the supplemental inventory is subject to inheritance tax in this state.
> If any of this property is subject to inheritance tax in this state, what authority is to determine the amount of the same and to whom is it to be paid?
> What is the jurisdiction of the tax commissioner of Ohio over the administration of the collateral inheritance tax law?"

The first question is devisible on the facts stated into two parts: that relating to the real estate, and that relating to the shares of stock. As to the former no serious question exists. Under all inheritance tax laws, excepting those the scope of which is expressly limited to the taxation of the succession to the property of residents of the state, it has been uniformly held that devises and intestate inheritances of real property located within the state are taxable, though the testator or intestate at the time of his death was a resident of another state.

The express language of section 5331 of the General Code admits of no other answer to this question. It provides as follows:

> "All property within the jurisdiction of this state, and any interests therein, whether belonging to inhabitants of this state or not, and whether tangible or intangible, which pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state, or by deed, grant, sale or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, to a person in trust, or otherwise, other than to or for the use of the father, mother, husband, wife, lineal descendant or adopted child, shall be liable to a tax of five per cent. of its value above the sum of five hundred dollars. Fifty per cent of such tax shall be for the use of the state; and fifty per cent. of such tax shall go to the city, village or township in which said tax originates. All administrators, executors and trustees, and any such grantee under a conveyance made during the grantor's life, shall be liable for all such taxes, with lawful interest as hereinafter provided, until they have been paid, as hereinafter directed. Such taxes shall become due and payable immediately upon the death of the decedent and shall at once become a lien upon the property, and be and remain a lien until paid."

The nature of this part of your first question does not require further comment upon the machinery of collection and assessment of the tax at this time, and I advise without further discussion that the devises of the real estate mentioned in the supplemental inventory submitted to me are subject to the collateral inheritance tax of this state. In so advising I assume, of course, that the devisees are not within the degrees of relationship mentioned in section 5331 and that the value of each separate interest vesting under the will exceeds the sum of five hundred dollars. In passing I point out that though the property in question represents merely undivided interests in real estate, the phrase "any interests therein" as used in section 5331 is broad enough to make the section applicable thereto.

The question as to the taxability of the bequests of the shares of stock mentioned in the inventory is of very different character. It has heretofore been held in this department that shares of stock in an Ohio corporation belonging to the estate of a non-resident decedent are not subject to the collateral inheritance tax. So far as I am advised, the uniform practice of the state in the administration of the collateral inheritance tax law has been in accord with this view. I have felt disposed, however, to re-examine the question with some care in answering your letter and not to dismiss it from consideration on the authority of the precedents available in this department.

It must be admitted that if the question could be considered as one of general law, or as one involving merely the power of the state to impose a tax upon such successions as are involved in the second part of your first question, it would have to be said that the overwhelming weight of authority—indeed the unanimous doctrine of the courts of the several states—would support the exaction and sustain the taxation of the succession to stock owned by a non-resident decedent in a corporation of the state imposing the tax, whether or not the certificates for such stock are or ever have been in the state, and although they have been actually transferred in the foreign jurisdiction before the tax is collected.

Many of these cases can be distinguished on the ground that they arose under statutes substantially different from the Ohio law. One of them, Greves v. Shaw, supra, can not be so distinguished, and is exactly in point so far as the language of the two statutes is concerned, though there may be other distinctions between the cases which will be hereinafter dwelt on. In spite of this imposing array of authorities, however, I regard the question as at least an open one in Ohio, and shall proceed to discuss it as such, developing as the discussion progresses my reasons for the doubt which I entertain and ultimately the conclusions at which I feel obliged to arrive.

The Ohio Constitution, Article XII, section 2, requires that all property shall be taxed, as such, by a uniform rule, and so precludes the double taxation of any thing as property. Nevertheless, inheritance taxes have been sustained in Ohio, as in other states, not as property taxes but as privilege or excise taxes—the word "privilege" referring to the basis of the tax and the word "excise" to the method thereof.

State v. Ferris, 53 O. S., 314;
Hagerty v. State, 55 O. S., 613;
State v. Guilbert, 70 O. S., 229;
Executors of Eury v. State, 72 O. S., 448.

In each of the first two of these cases—the one dealing with the first direct inheritance tax law and holding it unconstitutional for reasons which are not important in the present connection, and the other dealing with the original form of the present collateral inheritance tax law—the court had before it a statute in form like section 5331 of the General Code, which, it will be observed, in terms enacts that "all property within the jurisdiction of this state * * * shall be liable to a tax," etc. So far as the words of the statute were concerned, then, the tax was laid upon property yet the court sustained the tax as against the main objection in both cases on the ground that it was not in substance such a tax, but, as stated, was a tax on a privilege.

Burket, J., in State v. Ferris, supra, used the following language at page 326:

> "It must be conceded that the language used in the statute is upon its face clearly a taxation of the property itself, and not of the right to acquire property. And for myself, I think this is the true construction of the act. Others of the court, however, think that when the operation and effect of the statute are considered, that it may be regarded as taxing the right or privilege rather than the property. Certain it is that the only thing that can be constitutionally taxed is the right or privilege of succession. * * *."

The other two cases cited dealt with the second direct inheritance tax law of the state, since repealed, which in terms imposed a tax, not upon property itself but upon the right to succeed to or inherit property within the jurisdiction of this state "and any interests therein."

We have it, therefore, that despite the language of section 5331, the collateral inheritance tax must be regarded as a tax on a privilege and not as a tax on property.

It seems to me that the next question which obviously arises is as to the nature or identity of the privilege which is taxed. It must be admitted that this is not the usual attitude of the courts of other states in dealing with questions like the one under consideration. They have chosen, in some instances, to ignore this fundamental question and to deal at the outset with the distinct, though also important, question as to what is meant by "property within the jurisdiction of the state." Thus Knowlton, J., in Greves v. Shaw, supra, confines his discussion of the entire question as to the taxability of the succession to shares of stock in Massachusetts corporations belonging to non-residents of the state to the following:

"There can be no doubt that stock in corporations organized under the laws of this commonwealth * * * is property within the jurisdiction of the commonwealth, within the meaning of this statute. * * * Such a corporation, being in a sense a citizen of this state, and having an abiding place here akin to the domicile of a natural person, is subject to the jurisdiction of the commonwealth, and is in fact within the commonwealth. The stockholders are the proprietors of the corporation, which is itself the proprietor of the property owned and used for the ultimate benefit of the stockholders. While the corporation has a full and complete legal title to the corporate property, its ownership is in a sense fiduciary; for on winding up its affairs the surplus, after the payment of debts, must be divided among the stockholders."

Whether or not these propositions of law are correct, it is submitted that they are not enough in themselves to support the court's decision but that it must likewise appear that the privilege taxed, though relating to property within the jurisdiction of the state, is the privilege exercised by the legatee or inheritor of such shares.

Though our own supreme court has held, as I have stated, that the tax rests upon a privilege and that therefore some words must be read into the statute, we have no accurate judicial definition of what the privilege is or recital of what the interpolated words must be. Some things, to be sure, are decided. Thus it is not the privilege of transmitting by will or descent that is taxed but that of receiving or succeeding to.

Burket, J., in State v. Ferris, supra, said:

"Properly understood, it is not the right to transmit, but the right and privilege to receive, that is taxed. * * * .

It is clear that the right is distinct and separate from the property itself, and the state may tax this right to receive property, * * * ."

Again, it is the privilege of succeeding to the property right and not that of acquiring through the machinery of the laws of the state the possession or enjoyment of the thing devised or bequeathed that constitutes the taxable privilege.

Summers, J., in Executors of Eury v. State, supra, said:

"The right so given either to devolve or to succeed to property is subject to the power of the state to tax, and generally is taxed. To use a homely simile it may be likened to the taking of toll from the grist that is sent to the mill, and aside from considerations of convenience it is immaterial whether the whole toll be taken as soon as the grist is received or proportionately as the flour is delivered. Generally, * * * the amount of the tax is measured by the value of the property. Our state, however, * * * has imposed it upon the right of succession, * * *.

But while the tax has been likened to the toll that is taken from the grinding of a grist, it must not be overlooked that it is the right to devolve or to succeed to property that is taxed, and that an additional exaction might be made as is done in some states for the service in passing the property, sometimes, as in England, called probate duties. So that the right of the state to and the liability of the successor for the tax generally arises upon the death of the owner of the property and is not dependent upon the right of succession ripening into possession or enjoyment, * * *."

(Compare State v. Probate Court, supra, in which it was held that the state's power to exact an inheritance tax may rest upon the privilege of taking over and securing the possession or enjoyment of property.)

Again, it is reasonably clear—and indeed it has been decided in Ohio by some of the lower courts—that the succession to which the privilege taxed relates is not the universal succession of the executors or administrators, but the singular succession of the ultimate takers, the value of which, for example, is to be arrived at by determining what they receive, in the case of personality, after the debts are paid and the costs of administration are deducted. The distinction between the two kinds of succession is pointed out by Mr. Justice Holmes, in Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S., 189, and the following definition of one of the two terms is therein framed by the learned justice:

> "Universal succession is the artificial continuance of the person of a deceased by an executor, heir, or the like, so far as succession to rights and obligations is concerned. It is a fiction, the historical origin of which is familiar to scholars, and it is this fiction which gives whatever meaning it has to the saying mobilia sequuntur personam."

The opinion in the case last cited refers to the singular succession throughout the discussion and refers also to what is believed to have been repudiated by the Ohio supreme court as a basis of the privilege taxed by the collateral inheritance tax law, namely, the practical succession by the securing of possession and enjoyment. There may be, and doubtless are, more than one distinct privilege which might be termed the "singular succession" for the purposes of this opinion, and perhaps, inaccurately, the term may be held as definitive of the separate interest of the devisee, legatee or inheritor as distinguished from the estate as a whole or any aggregate part of it.

So far, then, it appears that the Ohio collateral inheritance tax rests upon the privilege of receiving—not transmitting; upon the privilege of acquiring a property right, rather than upon the privilege of securing the possession or enjoyment of the thing to which the right pertains; and upon the separate privilege of each person in whom such rights are ultimately vested, rather than upon the privilege of universal succession as it has been defined.

What possibilities remain? It is suggested that there are at least the following:

(1) That privilege which the law of the taxing state affirmatively confers upon the person whose interest is liable to the tax; and

(2) That privilege which is conferred upon the person whose interest is liable to the tax by the mere fact that the law of the state imposing it recognizes his rights, protects them as property rights and gives effect to the succession.

To be more concrete, the first kind of a privilege is the one that is created directly by the statute of wills or the statute of descent and distribution of the taxing state, in connection with which the inheritance tax law may be conceived of as a sort of exception to such statutes. That is to say, the joint effect of both statutes might be expressed by some such formula as the following:

In the case of the death of a person, a resident of this state, leaving neither wife, children nor parents, his brothers and sisters shall succeed to his personal property, over and above the amount thereof necessary to pay his debts, excepting that the state will take out the tax, if the share of any brother or sister or their representatives exceeds five hundred dollars in value.

The second of these two possible views may be illustrated by supposing the case of personal property located in Ohio, as livestock on a farm, belonging to a nonresident intestate. The law of the state where the intestate resided may provide that the uncles and aunts of a person dying under the circumstances supposed for the purpose of the first illustration shall be preferred to the brothers and sisters of the decedent. That law as a matter of fact will govern, for Ohio does not attempt to regulate the distribution of personal property within its borders, as such. But in case a wrongdoer should get possession of these cattle, a foreign administrator would have to have his title recognized by the courts of Ohio before he could obtain relief in the courts, and in awarding him relief Ohio recognizes and thereby, in effect confers the privilege.

Nay more, Ohio might—though on principles of comity she has not—assume to control the devolution by death of property located within her borders. Therefore, by her acquiescence in the laws of another state she confers the privilege of succession, such acquiescence having the legal effect of an adoption of the foreign law. As put by Mr. Justice Holmes in Blackstone v. Miller, supra:

> "No one doubts that succession to a tangible chattel may be taxed wherever the property is found, and none the less that the law of the situs accepts its rules of succession from the law of the domicile, or that by the law of the domicile the chattel is part of a universitas and is taken into account again in the succession tax there."

In a word then, the two privileges may be described and distinquished from each other by referring to one of them as that which the taxing state affirmatively creates and to the other as that which the taxing state negatively accepts.

As pointed out by Mr. Justice Holmes in the case cited and by the writer of the exhaustive note in 46 L. R. A., n. s., supra, both privileges are within the reach of the taxing power of the state, and though the assertion of that power against both at the same time involves an element of inconsistency, in that in the one case the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam is relied upon and in the other case it is ignored, such inconsistency does not defeat the tax on constitutional grounds.

I think we may without discussion accept the conclusion that the Ohio tax, though directed against what, for purposes of this opinion, has been called the singular succession, does reach in its entirety the first of these privileges, unless qualified by the further language of the section, viz.: "within the jurisdiction of this state." That is to say, if property is within the jurisdiction of this state, in the sense in which that term is to be defined, and it passes by virtue of the statute of wills or by the statute of descent and distribution of this state, the tax is payable on that behalf.

As stated by Burket, J., in the opinion from which quotation has already been made:

> "This right to receive property is under the control of the legislature, and it has the power to regulate and lay such burdens thereon as it may see fit, within the provisions of the constitution."

Again, in State v. Guilbert, supra, Spear, C. J., quotes with approval from Magoun v. Illinois Trust & Savings Bank, 170 U. S. 283, as follows:

> "The right to take property by devise or descent is a creature of the law, and not a natural right—a privilege, and therefore the authority which confers it may impose conditions upon it."

Without at this time determining whether or not tangible personal property, for example, located in another state but belonging to the estate of a deceased resident of this state is subject to our collateral inheritance tax, I assume, then, that generally speaking the proposition just laid down is correct.

But so far as the general nature of the tax is concerned substantially the same justification is found for its application to the second kind or class of privileges as has just been found for its application to the first kind thereof. Indeed so long as the state possesses the unquestioned right, as it does, to determine by its laws the manner in which title to tangible property, both real and personal, within its limits may be acquired and divested, and so long as by its control over the person of the debtor in the manner pointed out by Mr. Justice Holmes elsewhere in his opinion in Blackstone v. Miller, supra, the state can virtually do likewise as to most classes of intangible personal property, such as choses in action, it does seem as if all succession to such property or property rights may be said in the truest sense to owe its existence to the laws of the state, even though those laws consist merely of silent acquiescence in the statutes of wills and descent and distribution of other states. I can not conclude, therefore, that the Ohio law, which it will be observed is silent on the point as to precisely what privilege is intended to be reached by it, discriminates between the two classes of privileges which I have defined by anything that is merely to be implied from the decisions in the Ohio cases which have been cited.

But I must not stop here, for the statute does express some qualifications as to the subject of the tax and these must now be dealt with.

A careful examination of section 5331 of the General Code will disclose two such qualifications:

> "First: The privilege which is taxed must relate to property within the jurisdiction of the state; and
> Second: That privilege must relate to property which passes 'by will or by the interstate laws of this state, or by deed, grant, sale or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor."

For the purposes of this opinion I shall consider these two qualifications in their inverse order.

The latter of them may be merely another way of saying that the privilege taxed is that of succeeding to property by virtue of a will or the intestate laws of this state etc. What is the force and effect of the phrase "of this state" herein found? It can not be ignored, for it is expressed in the statute. Yet it qualifies but one of the three modes of passing title to property, viz.: by intestate laws. The grammatical construction of the sentence in which it is found is such that, strictly speaking, it can not be held to modify anything else in the section. Let it be assumed, then, for present purposes, that we are dealing only with intestate succession (although your question relates to succession by will). It is to be remarked at the outset that many of the decisions which were cited in the opening paragrphs of this opinion were rendered under statutes in which this qualifying clause did not appear or under statutes expressing exactly the opposite meaning. The statute involved in In re Bronson, supra, was described in the opinion of Gray, J., as follows:

> "By section one, a tax is imposed on the transfer of any real or personal property * * * when the transfer is by will or by the intestate laws of this state from a resident decedent; when the transfer is by will or intestate law, of property within the state and the decedent was a non-resident at the time of his death."

Obviously, the New York law thus described does not mean the same thing as the Ohio law now under consideration. There the qualifying words "of this state" applied only in case the transfer was from a resident decedent. They were omitted in dealing with transfers of property within the state when the decedent was a non-resident. This is made clear by the dissenting opinion of Vann J., who agreed with the majority of the court on the point which is of interest to us. His analysis of section 1 is as follows:

"Two classes of cases are thus provided for: 1. The property of residents, passing under the laws of this state, without regard to where the property may be; 2. The property of non-residents, passing under the laws of another state, when the property is within this state."

The statute of Iowa construed in the case of In re Culver read as follows:

"All property within the jurisdiction of this state, and any interests therein, whether belonging to the inhabitants of this state or not and whether tangible or intangible, which shall pass by will or by statutes of inheritance of this or any other state, or by deed, grant, sale or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or in enjoyment, etc., shall be subject to a tax."

I call attention to the remarkable similarity of the Iowa statute to section 5331 of the General Code in all respects save in the use of the italicised language in the Iowa statute. The same thing will be found to be true of all the statutes involved in the other cases cited excepting the Massachusetts act of 1891, interpreted in Greves v. Shaw, supra. That statute was word for word the same as the Ohio law. The Ohio law was passed in 1893 and may be regarded as modeled after the Massachusetts statute. Nevertheless, Greves v. Shaw was not decided until 1898, after the law was adopted in Ohio. Therefore, it is not a controlling decision upon the principle that when the legislature of one state adopts a statute of another state it is deemed to have adopted with it such judicial interpretation of the latter as has been placed upon it by the courts of that state. (See argument of Carter, J., in People v. Griffith, supra).

As I have pointed out, Judge Knowlton in the Massachusetts case ignores whatever effect might be given to the words "of this state," and because he ignores these words the authority of his decision is, I believe, weakened.

Still dealing for the purpose of the argument with the case of intestate succession alone, and observing that the Ohio statute is essentially different so far as such successions are concerned from those of most of the other states, I now inquire what is meant by property passing "by the intestate laws of this state." Putting it in another way, the question may be phrased as follows:

When may property be said to pass by the intestate laws of Ohio?

Obviously, in the case of real property located in Ohio, "the intestate laws of this state" in the narrowest sense in which that phrase might be interpreted govern the devolution or "passing" of such property in case of death. Suppose, however, the question were as to tangible personal property, such as the livestock referred to in the illustration chosen; would such property be held to pass by the intestate laws of this state? I have already pointed out that in a sense the property may be said to pass by or under the sanction of the laws of this state—such laws, for example, as recognize the rights of foreign administrators, or provide for ancillary administration upon such property through the courts of this state. But are such laws "intestate laws?" This, as I see it, is the question which must be answered.

Without pausing to deal with the question of tangible personal property located in this state and passing by intestate laws from a decedent who was at the time of his death not a resident of Ohio, I pass directly to the question which you raise respecting shares of stock in an Ohio corporation, in so far as such shares of stock might pass by intestate laws.

On this point Greves v. Shaw, as I have pointed out, is silent, but Neilson v. Russell, supra, decided under an earlier New Jersey statute, contains pertinent reasoning. I quote somewhat fully from the opinion of Swayze, J., in that case:

"In a case like this the temptation is strong to pass an opinion up on the fundamental and important questions which were exhaustively discussed at the bar, * * *. We prefer, however, to confine our discussion to the exact point presented by the case, which, we think, is the much narrower one of the proper interpretation of the statute. For that purpose we assume that shares of stock in a New Jersey corporation have a situs in this state, and that succession thereto or transfer thereof, may be taxed by our legislature; and that the tax imposed by the act of 1894 is either a legacy or a succession tax and not a property tax. * * *. The question we have to decide is, then, simply whether the statute reaches the present case.

An examination of the act shows that it imposes a tax (1) upon all property which passes by will or the intestate laws of this state from any person * * * while being a resident of the state; (2) upon all property which shall be within this state which shall be transferred by inheritance, distribution, bequest, devise, deed, grant, sale or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after * * * death * * *. The first class obviously affects the succession of residents of this state only. If the present tax is to be sustained, it must be because the succession sought to be taxed comes within the second class.

Our act was modeled after the New York act of 1885, and, if we had made no change in that act, we should be held upon well settled principles to have adopted with the act the construction previously placed thereon by the New York courts * * *. In fact, however, we modified the language of the New York act by inserting at the beginning of the clause the words 'all property' in place of the mere relative 'which' and by adding the words 'inheritance, distribution, bequest, devise.' We are not therefore concluded by that decision.

It is clear that the legislature did not intend to tax all successions of non-residents. If it had meant that, it would have taxed all property within this state which should be transferred from a decedent by will or intestacy. (We disregard as quite inapplicable to the present case, transfers by deed, grant, sale or gift intended to take effect after death.) Instead of using the general language, which was naturally suggested by the use of the words 'by will or by the intestate laws of this state,' employed in the previous clause, the act limits the tax upon transfers of the property of non-residents to transfers by inheritance, distribution, bequest or devise. * * * What is to be taxed, therefore, as far as the present case is concerned, is a transfer by bequest from Mills (the testator) to his legatees, or * * * it is the singular succession of the legatee, not the universal succession of the executors. That this is the true construction of the act is indicated further by the provisions of section 6 * * * authorizing the executors to deduct the tax from the legacy or property for distribution. The tax is not a general charge against the estate, but a charge upon the legacies. * * *"

(In this respect ,of course, the New Jersey law was interpreted by the court in the same way in which the Ohio law has always been interpreted.)

"This succession is a succession under English law, by which the validity and amount of the bequest must be determined. * * * The succession to the legacy is complete only in a foreign jurisdiction, and it would certainly be anomalous to tax that succession here. The case differs from those arising under the New York act of 1892, and statutes modeled thereon, which assume to tax the transfer of property within the jurisdiction; under those statutes it is the situs of the property which justifies the taxation of the transfer. Our statute of 1894 does not undertake to tax all transfers of property within our jurisdiction, but only transfers by inheritance, distribution, bequest or devise. * * * The Massachusetts cases are not in point for a like reason. There the statute imposes a tax on 'all property within the jurisdiction of the commonwealth and any interest therein, whether belonging to inhabitants of the commonwealth or not, and whether tangible or intangible.' Grewes v. Shaw, 173 Mass. 205."

(Of course, as pointed out, the scope of the Massachusetts statute is not accurately indicated by the language quoted by the New Jersey court, but is further limited by a clause ignored alike by the Massachusetts court in reaching its decision and by the New Jersey court in distinguishing the case; which clause is present in the Ohio statute.)

"In short our statute imposes a legacy duty and not a transfer or succession tax. * * *."

(If this were the sole ground of the court's decision it would possibly be distinguishable upon grounds suggested by the decision in Executors of Eury v. State, supra; but more follows in the opinion of the New Jersey court.)

"We reach the same result if we * * * look at this tax as a succession tax. * * *

The ground upon which this extraordinary exaction, * * * is sustained, is, as stated, in the opinion of the supreme court, that 'the rights of testamentary disposition and of succession are creatures of law upon the exercise and operation of which the lawmaker may impose terms.' We think it follows logically that the only law which can impose the terms is the law that creates the right. In this case it is the English law. The title to the stock passed by virtue of the will to the executors from the moment of the testator's death, and probate was operative only as the authenticated evidence, not as the foundation of the executors' title. * * * However convenient it may have been to take out letters testamentary in New Jersey, such a course was not essential under our laws to vest the title in the executor; it was only of consequence as a matter of procedure. * * *."

While the New Jersey statute thus interpreted was, as I have parenthetically pointed out, quite different from the Ohio law, the reasoning of the court is certainly applicable to the phrase "by the intestate laws of this state" as found in our statute. This is the only case I have been able to find in which anything like the question which I have last raised and am now discussing has been carefully considered. As I have shown, there was no occasion to consider such a question in most of the cases.

Was the New Jersey court right in giving to the equivalent of our phrase "by the intestate laws of this state" the restricted meaning which it applied? To hold otherwise would involve, I submit, the following consequences:

It is true that the Ohio law which creates Ohio corporations and gives to them and their stockholders all the rights which they severally may enjoy defines the terms upon which a share of stock may pass from one shareholder to another.. If it does not do this expressly it does it by necessary implication. If it is a part of the law of Ohio that a share of stock shall be regarded as personal property and subject to devolution on death the same as any other personal property; and if the law of Ohio permits such property to pass on death according to the laws of the state in which the intestate decedent resided at the time of his death, then it could be well said that the share of stock passed at intestate death under the laws of Ohio. But to reach a result opposite to that suggested by the reasoning of the New Jersey court would be to hold that the corporation laws of Ohio, both express and implied, are "intestate laws." It seems to me that this would be going too far. We are dealing with a privilege tax, which, however just may be its basis, is in the nature of an extraordinary exaction. Such tax laws are generally supposed to be subject to strict interpretation, though it must be admitted that the attitude of some of the courts toward them has been quite the opposite. But it would not only be a liberal interpretation of the Ohio statute to say that a share of stock in an Ohio corporation belonging to the estate of a deceased intestate resident of another state would pass by the intestate laws of Ohio—it would be indeed a forced and artificial interpretation thereof.

In my opinion, so far as intestate succession is concerned, the general assembly of Ohio by the use of the phrase "of this state" has clearly evinced the intention to limit the privilege taxed to the first of the two kinds of privileges above pointed out. I come, therefore, to the conclusion that if the question which you ask related to an intestate estate the tax would not apply to the shares of stock in question.

But how different is it with respect to property passing by will? As a matter of statutory interpretation, and regardless of the grammatical structure of section 5331 of the General Code, I am of the opinion that the same limitation runs throughout the whole section, and that the Ohio statute is to be interpreted according to the principles set forth in the decision of the New Jersey court.

I am of the opinion, therefore, in answer to the second part of your first question that as a matter of interpretation under section 5331 of the General Code and because of the presence therein of the qualifying phrase "of this state" the succession to the shares of stock in the Ohio corporation in question owned by the non-resident testator is not taxable under said section.

This conclusion does no violence to the phrase "whether belonging to inhabitants of this state or not" in section 5331, because that phrase still has application at least to real property located in Ohio. The conclusion at which I have arrived makes it unnecessary for me to consider the meaning of the phrase "within the jurisdiction of this state" as also used in said section, although if the answer to your question depended upon its interpretation I should be obliged to hold, consistently with all the cases which I have cited, that such shares of stock may be regarded as property within the jurisdiction of this state.

My conclusion on this question is fortified by certain other considerations which are apparent on the face of section 5331 of the General Code and other sections of the inheritance tax law.

In the first place, the machinery of the law makes no express provision for the collection of any such tax. The sections involved are sections 5336, 5339, 5340, 5343, 5344 and 5347 of the General Code. I will briefly abstract the provisions of these sections:

Section 5336 makes it the duty of the administrator, executor or trustee to deduct the tax from the property or collect the tax thereon from the legatee or person entitled to the property.

Section 5339 authorizes such administrators, etc., to sell so much of the estate of the deceased as will enable them to pay the tax in like manner as they are empowered to do for the payment of debts.

Section 5340 begins the machinery of valuation and provides, in substance, that the inventory of the estate filed in the probate court shall be the basis of the appraisal.

Section 5343 provides for judicial proceedings to determine the value, which may be instituted either by the prosecuting attorney of the proper county or by any person interested in the succession to the property.

Section 5344 vests in the probate court, having either principal or auxiliary jurisdiction of the settlement of the estate, jurisdiction to hear and determine all questions relating to the tax.

Section 5347 provides that the probate court shall not accept or allow any final settlement of the account of an executor, administrator or trustee unless it shows and the judge of the court finds, that all taxes imposed by the provisions of the law have been paid.

Nowhere is there any prohibition against the transfer of stock on the books of the corporation without the payment of the tax, and at the very least there is no machinery for the collection of the tax inquired about in the second part of your first question unless there should be ancillary administration in a probate court of Ohio for the purpose of procuring such transfer, or otherwise. It is true that in order that there may be a perfect devolution of personal estate there must be some administration or execution of a will. The question, however, is whether the stock of a domestic corporation requires such ancillary administration or executorship.

Section 8682 of the General Code, which is applicable to shares of stock issued prior to 1911, provides that > "Shares of stock in a corporation shall be personal property, and when fully paid up, be subject to levy and sale upon execution against the owner."

Under this section it has been held that while the share of stock is property distinct from the capital or property of the corporation, and belongs to the stockholder and not to the corporation, and for the purpose of property taxation takes its situs from the domicile of the owner (Bradley v. Bauder, 36 O. S. 28), it is to be regarded as in the possession of the corporation for the purpose of garnishee process and proceedings in aid of execution (Norton v. Norton, 43 O. S. 509; Ball v. Manufacturing Company ,67 O. S., 306). In that state of the law it would seem that despite the doctrine last referred to the legal title of a foreign executor or administrator to the stock for the purpose of further administration would be perfect, though as a matter of choice domestic letters of administration or executorship might be taken out. (See Cook on Corporations, Vol. I, Sec. 329, page 929, Note 5).

On the whole, there may be some doubt as to whether the probate court in which such ancillary administration as might be procured by a foreign executor or administrator for the purpose of securing the proper transfer of the stock, and to protect the same as against, for example, proceedings in aid of execution, were pending would not have adequate machinery under the sections which have been abstracted for the collection of the tax.

But since 1911 the uniform stock transfer law has been in effect in this state (sections 8673-1 to 8673-22, inclusive, of the General Code, 102 O. L. 500.) The provisions of this act virtually reverse some of the decisions referred to. (See section 8673-13 General Code.) True, it is provided by section 8673-2 that > "Nothing in this act shall be construed as enlarging the powers * * * of a trustee, executor or administrator, or other fiduciary, to make a valid indorsement, assignment or power of attorney;"

but this section does not affect the right of a trustee, executor or administrator to acquire legal title to the share of stock.

Section 8673-1 provides, in part, that > "Title to a certificate and to the shares represented thereby can be transferred only,

> * * * * * * * * *

(b) By delivery of the certificate and a separate document containing a written assignment of the certificate or a power of attorney to sell, assign, or transfer the same or the shares represented thereby signed by the person appearing by the certificate to be the owner of the shares represented thereby."

And section 8673-18 provides that

"In any case not provided for by this act, the rules of law and equity, including the law merchant, and in particular the rules relating to the law of principal and agent, executors, administrators and trustees * * * shall govern."

I do not undertake to give an interpretation of this law save to point out that it clearly has some effect upon the inherent nature and location of a share of stock. The certificate of stock, formerly merely evidence of the share, which for some purposes at least was regarded as in the possession of the corporation, has under this act acquired a larger significance, and it seems, though I can not so decide, that domestic administration could no longer be considered as necessary for any purpose to protect the title of the foreign executor or administrator, inasmuch as the interest of the stockholder could not be reached by attachment against the corporation.

It is true, however, that the mere failure of the inheritance tax law to provide express machinery for the collection of the tax as a condition precedent to transferring stock is not of determining force in itself. Other inheritance tax laws have such machinery, but our own law lacks so much essential machinery which has to be supplied in order to make it workable, that if it was the intention of the legislature to impose the tax under the circumstances considered in answering the second part of your first question I would have no difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that such machinery could be supplied. For example, the law provides that an estate liable to the tax shall not be delivered by the executor or administrator to the legatee or inheritor unless the tax has been paid. Should, therefore, the foreign executor or administrator, assuming his power to do so, attempt to secure the transfer on the books of the company to a legatee or inheritor without paying the tax, it might be held that the company would be liable to the state in damages for permitting an unauthorized transfer.

Therefore, I do not feel that I can attach great significance to the mere failure of the law to provide specific and detailed machinery for the collection of the tax under such circumstances as are now being considered. Such failure is at the most but slight cumulative evidense to be considered in connection with the matters already referred to and those to which I shall hereinafter refer.

In the second place, amended section 5331, conformably to article XII, sections 7 and 9 of the constitution as amended September 3, 1912, requires that fifty per centum of the collateral inheritance tax shall "go to the city, village, or township in which such tax originates." The only manner in which this provision of the constitution can be given any effect is to regard the tax as having originated in the taxing district in which the property on which the privilege taxed is predicated has its situs or location. (Opinions of Attorney-General, 1915, Vol. 1, page 132; Report of the Attorney-General, 1914, Vol. 1, page 333.) Unless it be held that such stock is located, or to be regarded as located, at the principal place of business of the domestic corporation within this state for the purpose of this section, I can not see how this paramount and constitutional requirement can be satisfied. While the reasoning in some of the cases cited might support such a conclusion, I entertain grave doubt as to whether, in the absence of positive legislative enactment on the subject, I would be justified in holding that such is the case. Here again we have a consideration which, though not absolutely conclusive in itself, rather tends to support the interpretation of the operative provisions of the law which I have felt obliged to make.

For all of these reasons, then, I am of the opinion that in their present form the statutes of this state do not impose the collateral inheritance tax thereof upon the succession to shares of stock in a corporation organized under the laws of this state and belonging to the estate of a non-resident decedent.

The answer to your second question has been suggested by the citation of the machinery provisions of the statutes. As to real estate located in Ohio, which I have held to be subject to the collateral inheritance tax, it is plain that the probate court of Cuyahoga county, wherein such real estate is located, would have the authority to determine the amount of the tax were any question raised, and that the treasurer of said county is to collect the same. If no question is raised, and an inventory is filed in the probate court of Cuyahoga county in connection with the probate of the will therein, such inventory, in so far as it can be conveniently separated and show the value of the undivided interests in the real estate in question, may be taken as the value of the estate and certified as such by the county auditor to the county treasurer under the provisions of section 5340 of the General Code. If this can not be done, however, or if any question is raised as to the actual market value of the taxable interests, such question, as above pointed out, must be determined by the probate court of Cuyahoga county under sections 5343 and 5344 of the General Code.

Your third question may be answered, first, by the statement that the inheritance tax law itself gives no power or jurisdiction to the tax commissioner respecting the administration of its provisions; nor can I find in the general powers of the tax commissioner enumerated in sections 1465-1 to 1465-36 of the General Code any express provision authorizing the commission to administer the collateral inheritance tax laws or to issue orders and instructions concerning the administration of the same. There is repeated reference in this group of sections to "the laws which the commission is required to administer," but to find out what those laws are one must turn to the specific tax laws of the state. Of those at present in force the following only seem to require consideration:

Section 5623 General Code—Section 70 of the so-called Parrett-Whittemore Law of 1915 (106 O. L. 265):

> "The tax commission of Ohio shall decide all questions that may arise with reference to the construction of any statute affecting the assessment, levy or collection of taxes, in accordance with the advice and opinion of the attorney-general. Such opinion and the rules, regulations, orders, and instructions of the commission prescribed and issued in conformity therewith shall be binding upon all officers, who shall observe such rules and regulations and obey such orders and instructions unless and until the same are reversed, annulled or modified by a court of competent jurisdiction."

Section 5624 General Code, enacted as section 71 of the Parrett-Whittemore Law:

> "The tax commission of Ohio shall, from time to time, prescribe such general and uniform rules and regulations and issue such orders and instructions, not inconsistent with any provision of law, as it may deem necessary, respecting the manner of the exercise of the powers and discharge of the duties of any and all officers, relating to the assessment of property and the levy and collection of taxes. It shall cause the rules and regulations prescribed by it to be observed, the orders and instructions issued by it to be obeyed and the forms prescribed by it to be observed and used."

Section 5624-6:

"The tax commission of Ohio shall compile the laws of the state relating to the assessment of property for taxation and the levy and collection of taxes, with such annotations, instructions and references to the decisions of the courts concerning the same, as it may deem proper. The commission shall cause a sufficient number of copies of the same to be printed and distributed to the several county boards of revision, prosecuting attorneys, county auditors, and county treasurers in the state and to such other officers and persons as the commission may deem proper. The commission shall, from time to time, designate, by order to the supervisor of public printing, the number of copies of the same required by it, and copies shall be printed in the manner provided by law for other public documents and distributed by the commission."

Section 5624-8:

"For the purpose of protecting the public interests, the tax commission of Ohio is authorized to appear and upon its application, entitled to be heard in any court or tribunal, in any proceeding involving the appraisement, valuation or equalization of property for the purpose of taxation, or the assessment or collection of taxes, and it shall be the duty of the clerk of any court of record, to immediately transmit to the commission, by registered letter, a copy of the petition filed in any such action, and charge the fee therefor in the costs."

Section 5624-9:

"The tax commission of Ohio may cause to be instituted proceedings to remedy improper or negligent administration of the taxation laws of the state."

Section 5624-10:

"The tax commission of Ohio may remit taxes and penalties thereon, found by it to have been illegally assessed, and such penalties as have accrued or may accrue, in consequence of the negligence or error of an officer required to perform a duty relating to the assessment of property for taxation, or the levy or collection of taxes. It may correct an error in an assessment of property for taxation or in the tax list or duplicate of taxes in a county, but its power under this section shall not extend to taxes levied under the provisions of subdivision 2 of chapter 15 of title 2, part second of the General Code."

(All these sections were last amended as sections of the Parrett-Whittemore Law, above referred to, and are now in force).

Throughout these sections is found frequent repetition of the phrase "the assessment of property and the levy and collection of taxes." In section 5623 the phrase

"the assessment, levy or collection of taxes" occurs alone, but in all other contexts it occurs in conjunction with language respecting property taxes (except in Section 5624-9).

These provisions were originally found in the Warnes Law of 1913, though some of them go back to the Hollinger Law of 1911 and the Langdon Law of 1910 for their genesis. They have never appeared in acts the scope of which was otherwise broader than property taxes and certain particular excise and franchise taxes. It is my opinion that none of these sections is of broad enough scope to give to the commission any authority to administer in any way the machinery of the collateral inheritance tax laws of the state. So far as deciding actual questions under the law is concerned, there is certainly nothing as specific in any of these sections as is found in section 5344 of the General Code, conferring jurisdiction to decide such questions upon the probate court. There being no express repeal of this section, I am of the opinion that even if the sections which have just been quoted were susceptible to an interpretation broad enough to give to the commission such power as that conferred upon the probate court by section 5344, such sections would have to be otherwise construed.

It is my opinion, therefore, that your third question must be answered by saying that the tax commission has nothing whatever to do with the administration of the collateral inheritance tax laws of the state, nor with the decision of any questions that may arise in connection therewith.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEES—COUNTY AUDITOR AND TREASURER—UNDER SECTIONS 2624 AND 2685—CANNOT BE INCLUDED IN COST OF SPECIAL ASSESSMENT FOR PUBLIC IMPROVEMENT.

The fees provided for collections by the county auditor, under section 2624 General Code, and for the county treasurer, under section 2685 General Code, cannot be included in the cost of a special assessment for a public improvement, to be levied against abutting property owners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of October 23d you submitted the following for answer and opinion:

> "We are referring to you section 3896 G. C. providing what the cost of a special assessment improvement shall include. We also wish to state that the assessment bonds should be paid out fully, if possible, by assessments and interest collected.
> Question.—Can the fees which are deducted for collection by the county auditor under section 2624 G. C. and the fees deducted for the county treasurer under section 2685 G. C. be legally estimated and included in the cost of a special assessment improvement and taxed in the assessment?"

This question calls for construction of the provisions of section 3896 General Code. This section reads as follows:

"The cost of any improvement contemplated in this chapter shall include the purchase money of real estate, or any interest therein, when acquired by purchase, or the value thereof as found by the jury, when appropriated, the costs and expenses of the proceeding, the damages assessed in favor of any owner of adjoining lands and interest thereon, the costs and expenses of the assessment, the expense of the preliminary and other surveys, and of printing, publishing the notices and ordinances required, including notice of assessment, and serving notices on property owners, the cost of construction, interest on bonds, where bonds have been issued in anticipation of the collection of assessments, and any other necessary expenditure."

There is no specific provision in this section covering the cost of collecting a special assessment, where such special assessment has been certified to the county auditor for collection. If the cost of such collection can be included in the cost of the improvement, it must be under the words "and any other necessary expenditure."

The fees charged for the services of the county auditor and the county treasurer, are provided respectively in sections 2624 and 2685 General Code.

Section 2624 General Code provides as follows:

"On all moneys collected by the county treasurer on any tax duplicates of the county, other than the liquor and cigarette duplicates, the county auditor on settlement semi-annually with the county treasurer and auditor of state, shall be allowed as compensation for his services the following percentages:

On the first one hundred thousand dollars one and one-half per cent.; on the next two million dollars five-tenths of one per cent; on the next two million dollars four-tenths of one per cent.; and on all further sums, one-tenth of one per cent. Such compensation shall be apportioned ratably by the county auditor and deducted from the shares or portions of the revenue payable to the state as well as to the county, townships, corporations and school districts."

Section 2685 General Code reads:

"On settlement semi-annually with the county auditor, the county treasurer shall be allowed as fees on all moneys collected by him on any tax duplicates other than the liquor and cigarette duplicates, the following percentages. On the first one hundred thousand dollars, one and one-half per cent.; on the next two million dollars, five-tenths of one per cent.; on the next two million dollars, four-tenths of one per cent.; and on all further sums, one-tenth of one per cent. Such compensation shall be apportioned ratably by the county auditor and deducted from the shares or portions of the revenue payable to the state as well as to the county, township, corporations and school district; and on all moneys collected on liquor and cigarette duplicate, one per cent. on all moneys collected otherwise than on the said duplicates, except moneys received from the state treasurer or his predecessors in office, or his legal representatives or the sureties of such predecessors, and except moneys received from the proceeds of the bonds of the county or of any municipal corporation, five-tenths of one per cent. on the amount so received, to be paid upon the warrant of the county auditor out of the general fund of the county."

It will be observed that the fees of the county auditor and the county treasurer are fixed upon a sliding scale and that it would be difficult to determine in advance the exact cost of making collection of a special assessment.

The question now under consideration has not been determined by the courts, but the supreme court has passed upon the validity of adding the costs of collecting special assessments in three instances.

In the case of Jonas v. City of Cincinnati, 18 Ohio 318, the syllabus reads:

> "The council of the city of Cincinnati are prohibited by their charter from assessing and collecting a tax in 1848, for lighting a street in 1845.
> The city council can create no debts of the kind beyond the fiscal year.
> Were such tax legal, a penalty for collector's fees could not be added to it, nor the costs of the proceedings before the mayor."

The reasons for this holding are given by the court on page 323, where Caldwell, J., says:

> "Another objection has been taken to the adding of three per cent. on the amount of the tax for the collector's fees.
> The city council have no authority for levying and collecting special taxes, except for specific purposes. In this instance, they were only authorized to collect taxes for lighting the city. They must act strictly within the provisions of their charter—they can add nothing to the tax by implication.
> The collector is an officer of the city, and his services may be paid out of the general revenue of the city, unless otherwise provided for by the charter. The same may be said of the mayor's fees. Neither could have been collected, in this way, if the tax had been legal."

It will be observed that in this decision the court held the entire tax illegal, and it was not necessary in order to decide the question at issue to determine the validity of adding the collector's fees. The reasoning of the court, however, is applicable to the question now in hand.

In the case of Butler v. The City of Toledo, 5 O. S., 225, it is held:

> "Where the corporate authorities of a city had, in pursuance of its charter, levied a local assessment on lots bounding on and near certain streets, for the purpose of grading said streets, and from mistake in the preliminary estimate of cost, and extraordinary expense attending the collection of said assessment, the assessment proved insufficient to discharge the cost and expenses; a subsequent amendment of the charter, authorizing a reassessment on the same lots 'sufficient in amount to meet said deficiency, and the cost and expenses of such reassessment, and all other expenses incidental to said improvements' is not in contravention of any provision of the constitution of 1802, and is a valid law, binding on all property within its purview, although the owner may have acquired title intermediate the assessment and reassessment."

This case upholds the right to add to the cost of the improvement and to be included in the amount to be assessed against abutting property, the cost of collecting the assessments. It does not appear from the report whether or not the cost of collection had been definitely ascertained.

After holding that interest might be included in the special assessments, Brinkerhoff, J., says at page 232:

"* * * that the city authorities had a legal right to allow interest, and that it is rightfully included in the reassessment, as one of the 'expenses incidental to said improvement.'

The same may be said with respect to other items—such as costs, attorney's fees, printer's bills and compensation of city officials for superintending the work, making measurements, defending suits instituted to restrain the collection of the assessment, and the levying and collection of the assessment. None of these items would have accrued had it not been for the improvement, and they are, we think, legitimately classed among the 'expenses incidental' to it."

In this case the court holds that the cost of collecting an assessment is a part of the "expenses incidental to said improvement."

This provision is like that contained in section 3896 General Code, supra, where it is provided "and any other necessary expenditure," may be included in the cost of the improvement.

In the case of Spangler v. Cleveland, 35 O. S., 469, the fourth branch of the syllabus reads:

"So, it is error to add to the cost of an improvement an estimated percentage to pay for collecting an assessment placed thereon."

The reason for this holding is given by Johnson, J., on page 472, where he says:

"In these assessments are included an item of one per cent. upon the cost of the improvement to pay for collection.

It is not claimed that this percentage has been or will be paid. It is at least only an estimate, and not an actual expense that has been or will be incurred.

Treasurer's fees are based on a sliding scale, according to amounts collected or disbursed. Whether fees actually paid, or for which the city would be liable under the statute, could be included, we need not determine.

The statute furnishes other modes of collecting such assessments, and this need not be resorted to, and, if not, there is not necessarily any cost for collection.

The amount should be ascertained and fixed, on the supposition that the owner will pay without litigation or other expense. These items must be omitted from the several assessments."

The reason for striking out the percentage paid for collecting is, that it is not claimed that this percentage has been or will be paid. It does not determine, however, that such an expense could be, or could not be included in the cost of the improvement to be assessed against the abutting property owner.

In section 3905 General Code, there is a provision for adding ten per cent. penalty to cover interest and cost of collection. This section, however, does not cover a case where a special assessment is levied, to be paid for in installments, through the office of the county treasurer.

This section reads as follows:

"The council may order the clerk or other proper officer of the corporation to certify any unpaid assessment or tax to the auditor of the county in which the corporation is situated, and the amount of such assessment or tax so certified, shall be placed upon the tax list by the county auditor, and shall with ten per cent. penalty to cover interest and cost of collection be collected with and in the same manner as state and county taxes, and credited to the corporation. Such ten per cent. penalty shall in no case be added unless at least thirty days intervene between the date of the publication of the ordinance making the levy and the time of certifying it to the county auditor for collection."

The other method of collecting a special assessment is provided for in section 3892 General Code, which reads:

"When any special assessment is made, has been confirmed by the council, and bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness of the corporation are issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, the clerk of the council, on or before the second Monday in September, each year, shall certify such assessment to the county auditor, stating the amounts and the time of payment. The county auditor shall place the assessment upon the tax list in accordance therewith and the county treasurer shall collect it in the same manner as other taxes are collected, and when collected pay such assessment to the treasurer of the corporation, to be by him applied to the payment of such bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness and interest thereon, and for no other purpose. For the purpose of enforcing such collection, the county treasurer shall have the same power and authority as allowed by law for the collection of state and county taxes."

The above sections provide for two distinct methods of making collections of special assessments.

This was the holding of Hon. Edward C. Turner, attorney-general, in an opinion to your department, under date of July 21, 1915, and reported in Vol. II, page 1291 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1915.

There is no specific provision for the addition of a penalty where bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness are issued in contemplation of the collection of a special assessment, and such special assessment is certified to the county auditor for collection.

In the case of Longworth v. The City of Cincinnati, 34 O. S. 101, the second branch of the syllabus reads:

"Where the surveying and engineering of such improvement by the chief engineer of the city and his assistants, who were officers appointed for a definite period, at a fixed salary, which the law required to be paid out of the general fund of the city, the reasonable cost to the city, of such surveying and engineering, can not be ascertained and assessed upon the abutting property, as a necessary expenditure for the improvement."

This case holds, that where services are performed by officers of the city, who are paid on a monthly salary, which salary is paid out of the general funds of the city, the reasonable value of such services performed upon a public improvement cannot be included in the cost of such improvement to be levied against abutting property owners.

This situation is similar to the cost of collecting the special assessment. The county auditor and the county treasurer are paid an annual salary and the fees provided for in sections 2624 and 2685 General Code, are the basis of the charge for their services, but such fees are paid into the county treasury to the credit of the fee fund of the respective offices. Furthermore, it is not possible to determine in advance the cost of collecting a special assessment. The cost of such collection in any event must be estimated, and where such cost is estimated, it would come within the holding of the case of Spangler v. Cleveland, supra.

In some cities an option is given to the property owner to pay his amount in full before the same is certified to the county auditor for collection. If the property owner elects to pay such assessment to the treasurer of the municipality there would be no added costs for making such collection.

In view o the holdings of the supreme court and the impracticability of determining the exact cost of making collections, I am of the opinion that the cost of collection cannot be included as a part of the co t o" the improvement which may be assessed against the abutting property owners.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEDERAL ESTATE TAX—AMOUNT PAID ON FEDERAL TAX DEDUCTED FROM VALUE OF ESTATE SUBJECT TO COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—HOW COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX FIGURED.

1. The federal estate tax (Act September 8, 1916, 39 U. S. Statutes at Large 463, 777) attaches to the universal succession or the general privilege of inheritance the Oh o collateral inheritance tax is assessed upon the singular succession or the particular privilege of each inheritor. The amount paid to the federal government on account of t_e former tax is to be treated like debts and costs of administration, and deducted in determining the value of the estate subject to the latter tax.

2. The Ohio collateral inher tance tax should be figured upon the value of the estate at the date of the death of _e decedent, except in case of future interests not vested as of that date.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

HON. BERNARD M. FOCKE, Prosecuting Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—

You have requested my opinion upon the following questions submitted by counsel for the administrator or executor of an estate on the legacies or devises of which collateral inheritance taxes are to be collected:

> "First—Is the amount payable to the federal government as an estate tax exempt from the payment of the state collateral inheritance tax?
> Second—Should the collateral inheritance tax be figured upon the value of the decedent's estate at the time of his death, or upon the value of the property at the time it is distributed?"

The first question that you submit, as it would have been raised under statutes like the war revenue act of June 13, 1898, 30 Statutes at Large 464, repealed April 12, 1902, c. 500, 32 Stat. 97, is discussed in Blakemore and Bancroft on inheritance taxes as follows:

"Sec. 371. FEDERAL INHERITANCE TAX. The federal tax cannot be deducted before appraisal for the state tax in New York. The court reasons that it is not true that the federal taxes are payable primarily out of the estate; and the court finds that the federal tax is exactly the same in nature as the state tax and is a tax not on property but on succession. The federal tax is on the legacy and not on account of the estate. The fact that this may result in great hardship does not alter the rule, but results from the rate of taxation prescribed by the federal statutes.

In Massachusetts the federal tax was to be deducted under the act of 1891, although that act contains no express exception. The court proceeds on the theory that the words of the act most naturally signify the property which the legatee actually would get were it not for the state tax imposed, and that as a matter of justice he would not be taxed for more. The Massachusetts rule would seem to be the fairer and the New York rule the more accurate."

I assume that this discussion is responsive to the question submitted, although the words of the question are:

"Is the amount payable to the federal government as an estate tax exempt," etc.

In other words I assume that the question which is in the mind of counsel is as to whether or not the amount of the federal or state tax can be deducted from the value of the estate in determining the value of the latter for the purpose of the Ohio collateral inheritance tax law.

The nature of the federal tax, about the effect of which under state inheritance tax laws the division of authority, shown by the above quotation, arose was, however, not the same as that of the estate tax imposed by the act of September 8, 1916, 39 Statutes at Large, 463, 777.

The former tax imposed by the federal government (and this is true of all the federal inheritance taxes that had ever been imposed by the federal government prior to 1916) were legacy or succession taxes, the real subject of which was the privilege of inheriting possessed by the individual inheritor. As stated by Mr. Justice Holmes in Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S., 189, this tax, like the majority—if not all— of state inheritance taxes, was imposed on the singular succession of the legatee, heir or distributee rather than upon the so-called universal succession of executors or administrators.

The act of 1916, however, imposes the tax upon the universal succession, or, looking at it in another way, on the privilege of transmitting title to property by death rather than upon the privilege of succeeding to such property at death unless the latter privilege be predicated upon the technical interests of the executors, administrators or trustees. The words of the act are as follows: (Section 201)

"A tax * * * equal to the following percentages of the value of the net estate * * * is hereby imposed upon the transfer of the net estate of every decedent dying after the passage of this act * * * whether the succession provides the gross estate of the decedent to determine the net estate."

This fundamental difference between the act of 1916 and the previous acts, the effect of which upon the application of the state inheritance taxes, was referred to in the text quoted, makes it clear that those cases are not applicable to the present situation.

In contemplation of law two steps take place in the devolution of title to personal property by death whether by distribution or under the statutes of wills, viz.:

1. The immediate vesting of the assets of the estate in the quasi officer who, in theory, steps into the shoes of the decedent and represents his right and succeeds to his liabilities. This step is called the "universal succession."

2. The ultimate vesting of the distinct distributive shares of those who take under the will or under the law as legatees or distributees. This step is known as the "singular succession."

It is, of course, unnecessary to determine which of the two conflicting rules would be correct if the present federal tax were as formerly imposed upon the singular succession. Being imposed, however, upon the universal succession and the effect of its execution being to diminish the assets of the personal estate as a whole, and indeed to make it possible for any real estate belonging to the estate to be sold to satisfy the tax. (Section 208), it is clear that what I have designated as "singular succession" never, in point of law or fact, can take place as to so much of the estate as is diverted. The legal consequences of this principle are not altered by the fact hereinafter referred to that for the purpose of the Ohio collateral inheritance tax law the estate of the ultimate taker vests in contemplation of law as of the death of the testator and its value is to be determined as of that date, for in spite of this provision common to all the inheritance tax laws based on the singular succession, it is universally held that costs of administration and debts of the decedent, which are charged against the estate as a whole—that is to say, are exacted of the universal succession, are to be deducted in appraising the value of the various singular successions.

The principle upon which this is done can be broadly stated as follows: Whatever legal charges exist against the estate as a universal succession and are paid out of it as such can never enter into the singular succession, and therefore are to be deducted in appraising the value of the separate estates which constitute the latter.

Proceeding upon this principle I have reached the conclusion that the amount of the federal estate tax is to be deducted in determining the value of an estate taxable under the Ohio collateral inheritance tax law.

The general question submitted to me does not require me to go into detail as to just how the necessary calculations should be made, nor to attempt to work out the proper assessment in case it has been necessary to sell real estate of the estate specifically devised in order to pay the debts of the estate as a whole or to pay the federal tax.

In answering this question I have, of course, assumed that the federal estate tax about which inquiry is made is that imposed by the act of September 3, 1916. If the estate has been long in settlement and the federal tax actually accrued under the act repealed in 1902, a different result would be reached. I do not pass upon that question in the absence of specific information that such is the case, but I would be inclined to favor the New York rule if it should appear to be so.

I assume also that it is the act of 1916 and not the amendments thereof embodied in the act of October 3, 1917, that is called in question, although section 900 of that act imposes a tax identical in legal significance with that of the act of 1916.

In answering your second question, I beg to advise that it is my opinion that the collateral inheritance tax should be computed upon the value of the estate at the time of the death of the decedent, except in the case of future interests not vested as of the death of the testator, in which event the whole machinery of assessment must be postponed until the vesting of such interests and the value of the estate must be determined as of the latter date.

The controlling principle here is, of course, that the state inheritance tax is a tax upon succession and not upon property. Therefore the value of the estate at the time the property "passes," to use a word found in section 5331 General Code, is the criterion which governs. In all cases, save those of future interests not vested, the property passes, in contemplation of law, as of the death of the testator; and this is true even though for some purposes the personal estate of the decedent remains in law that of his personal representatives until distribution.

See Blakemore and Bancroft, Inheritance Taxes, sections 334-335 and the cases cited.

See, also, section 5331 General Code, providing that the taxes shall be due and payable "immediately upon the death of the decedent;" and,

Section 5333 General Code, providing a method for the valuation of remainders after life estates; both of which show that the Ohio statute is framed upon this general theory.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STREET IMPROVEMENT—SEPARATE RESOLUTION, ORDINANCE, AND ADVERTISEMENT FOR EACH IMPROVEMENT.

In street improvement procedure on the assessment plan there should be a separate esolution, ordinance and legal advertisement for the improvement of each street or combination of two or more streets which are in reality one street or thoroughfare, and there should not be a combination of two or more separate and distinct improvements in one assessment proceeding.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 20, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication in which you submit for my opinion the following request:

> "We submit herewith copy of letter written by a former deputy supervisor of this department as follows:
> 'March 1, 1916.
> Mr. W. R. Hare, Village Solicitor, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.
> DEAR SIR:—Replying to yours of the 28th ult., we believe the resolution of necessity and the ordinance determining to proceed, may contain more than the improvement of one street. In other words, several streets, if the same be enumerated in the caption of the ordinance or preamble of the resolution, may be expressed in one resolution or ordinance.
> (Signed) JOS. T. TRACY.'
> This method saves much expense in legal advertising and like matters, and while we can see no objection to it, we think best to submit to your department:
> Question: Can the ordinance, resolution, and legal advertising connected with the special assessment portion of improvements, be combined so that the ordinance, resolution and advertisement contain two or more improvements so long as each improvement is specifically set forth in detail?"

I presume that your request has reference only to street improvement procedure and I will consider your question only in that connection.

Section 3812 G. C. provides, in part, as follows.

"Each municipal corporation shall have special power to levy and collect special assessments, to be exercised in the manner provided by law. The council of any municipal corporation may assess upon the abutting, adjacent or contiguous or other specially benefited lots or lands in the corporation, any part of the entire cost of an expense connected with the improvement of any street, alley, * * * road, or place by grading," etc.

Section 3814 G. C. provides, in part, as follows:

"When it is deemed necessary by a municipality to make a public improvement to be paid for in whole or in part by special assessments, council shall declare the necessity thereof by resolution, * * *."

Section 3815 G. C. reads, in part, as follows:

"Such resolution shall determine the general nature of the improvement, what shall be the grade of the street, alley, or other public place to be improved, * * *'.

Section 3816 G. C. reads, in part, as follows:

"* * * council shall have on file * * * specifications, estimates and profiles of the proposed improvement, showing the proposed grade of the street and improvement * * *."

Section 3822 G. C. provides as follows:

"When a special assessment for the improvement of a stree' or other public place has been levied and paid, the property so assessed shall not again be assessed for more than one-half the cost and expense of repaving or repairing such street or other public place unless the grade thereof is changed."

Section 3826 G. C. provides, in part, as follows:

"In setting forth specifically the lots and lands abutting upon the improvement and to be assessed therefor, it shall be sufficient to describe them as all the lots and lands bounding and abutting upon such improvement between and including the termini of the improvement, * * *."

Section 3836 G. C. provides, in part, as follows:

"When a petition subscribed by three-fourths in interest of the owners of property abutting upon a street or highway of any description between designated points, in a municipal corporation, is regularly presented to the council for that purpose, the entire cost of any improvement of such street or highway, * * * may be assessed * * *."

It is noted from the foregoing sections, which have reference to street improvement procedure on the assessment plan, that the improvement of a street is always referred to in the singular number. At no place in any of these sections is an improvement referred to as being one of streets, but it is always provided that the improvement is one of a street.

When we turn to some of the other provisions of law for assessments or the doing of other things by a municipality we find that the authorization refers not only to a street but to streets. For example, section 3839 G. C. provides, in part:

> "Municipal corporations may sprinkle with water, sweep, and clean any streets or alleys, or parts thereof, * * *."

Express authority is also found in the statutes for the combining in one ordinance of legislation for sprinkling, sweeping and cleaning several streets. Section 3842 G. C. provides for this and reads, in part, as follows:

> "* * * For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section and of the three next preceding sections, one ordinance may be made to include one or more streets or alleys, or parts thereof, and one or more of the powers granted by such sections."

The following provisions of law are found with respect to the construction of sidewalks on the assessment plan:

Section 3853 G. C. reads, in part:

> "The council of municipal corporations may provide by ordinance for the construction and repair of necessary sidewalks, curbing, or gutters, or parts thereof, * * *."

Section 3861 G. C. reads:

> "In the passage of the resolution declaring that certain specified sidewalks, curbing or gutters shall be constructed or repaired and in all the subsequent procedure necessary to secure the construction or repair of sidewalks, curbing or gutters, and collect the assessment therefor, sidewalks, curbing or gutters, although upon different streets and abutting upon lots or land owned by different persons, may be provided for in the same resolution, notice, contract, and ordinance or other step in such procedure."

The situation, then, is presented where the legislature has provided expressly in certain cases that municipality may provide in one ordinance for sprinkling, sweeping or cleaning several streets and may provide in one ordinance for the construction of sidewalks on one or more streets, and in both of the above mentioned matters has referred to streets in the plural; while in the case of the improvement proper of streets the law is silent as to the right to combine the improvement of two or more streets in one ordinance, and the improvement is always referred to in the statutes as of a single street.

As to the requirement that there shall be an ordinance for each distinct improvement, the following is said in section 1879, volume 4 of McQuillan on Municipal Corporations:

> "Generally speaking, each separate and distinct improvement requires a separate proceeding and ordinance. Thus, under authority to lay out 'any one street' between certain termini, etc., only one street may be included in one proceeding. * * *
> Under the usual charter power, a single ordinance may provide for the improvement of a single street, or a part thereof, or for several streets. * *
> And in the same state (Illinois) it has been held that where streets and parts of streets are similarly situated, and are to be paved in the same manner and with the same material, they may be treated as a single improvement, and hence, such improvement may be authorized by one ordinance."

In The City of Cincinnati v. Corry, 2 W. L. B. 337, 7 O. Dec. 415, it is said in the head note:

"Where a street called Hammond street, laid out by an owner in subdividing, is practically continued by McLean street in another subdivision, there being a jog, or offset of a few feet at their junction, but forming a continuous line of travel, a municipal corporation can proceed to improve them both in the same proceedings as one work, calling it the improvement of Hammond and McLean streets, and an assessment cannot be defeated on that ground."

In Wilder v. The City of Cincinnati et al., 26 O. S. 284, the first branch of the syllabus reads:

"An ordinance to improve a street between designated points may properly except an intermediate portion thereof, which, by any existing contract is to be contemporaneously improved according to the plan and grade established, without expense to the city; and the separated parts may be improved and assessed as if they were contiguous."

In Irwin v. City of Greenville, 1 Iddings Term Rep., 140, it was held:

"Where a council by a single ordinance provides for the improvement of several streets, or parts of streets, said ordinance is nevertheless valid, since it relates to but one subject matter, to wit, the whole improvement."

In City of Springfield v. Green et al., 120 Ill., 269, 11 N. E., 261, it was said by the court:

"The ordinance is also assailed on the ground that it embraces more than one improvement. We do not think this is true in point of fact. While many streets and parts of streets are embraced in the scheme of improvement adopted by the city, yet we regard them all as but parts of the same improvement. The city authorities, in adopting the ordinance, must have found, as a matter of fact, that those streets and parts of streets were so similarly situated with respect to the improvement proposed to be made as to justify treating them as parts of a common enterprise and single improvement, and from the record before us we think they were justified in doing so. They were all to be paved with the same material, and in the same way, and the fact that there was a difference of a few feet in the width of some of them, and that the cost of paving the railway tracks in others was to be excluded from the estimate, should, in our opinion, make no difference in this respect. The similarity of the improvement proposed to be made, and the situation of the property to be assessed, with respect to it, afford a more satisfactory test as to whether they might all be embraced in a common scheme, as one improvement, than their actual connection or physical contact with one another. It is true, expressions are to be found in one or two cases looking in a contrary direction, but these expressions were made in arguenno merely, and not for the purpose of laying down any rule on the subject. So far as the actual decisions of this court go, they support the contrary view, and are in perfect harmony with what is here said. Prout v. People, 83 Ill. 155; People v. Sherman, Id. 167; Ricketts v. Hyde Park, 85 Ill., 110."

In Arnold v. City of Cambridge, 106 Mass. 352, the syllabus reads:

"Under a statute authorizing the mayor and aldermen to construct sidewalks in any street of a city, and assess the expense in just proportion upon the abutters, they have no right to join in a single assessment the expense of constructing sidewalks in different streets."

At page 354 the court says:

"The vote, under which the proceedings in this case have been had, provides for a sidewalk from Harvard square to the end of the bridge connecting Cambridge and Boston. It is treated in all the preliminary proceedings, and in the final assessment, as a continuous and single sidewalk, but it is really a sidewalk part of which is in Harvard and part in Main Street. We do not undertake to decide what weight we should attach to any objection on this account, if it were merely the case of one single street called by different names in different portions of its course or length. But Harvard street and Main street are two entirely distinct and separate highways, which, although they unite at one point, yet form two lines of travel nearly parallel to each other for about two miles. We do not think that the statute was intended to give the mayor and alderman the power to include sidewalks in two different streets in one single assessment. If two streets may be so assessed, it is difficult to see why three or more may not be included in one single assessment, or why all the sidewalks in the city may not be included in one comprehensive assessment.

It was evidently intended by the legislature that the case of each street should be considered separately, and with a view to its own special circumstances. Each estate is liable to assessment, not necessarily for the expense of the edgestones and covering materials laid down on that portion of the sidewalk upon which it adjoins or fronts, but according to a just proportion of the collective amount of all that kind of expense incurred on the same side of the same street. We cannot know that this proportion might not be very different if other streets were to be included in the same assessment. It may be that practically there would be no danger of any injustice or inequality in the assessment; but the legislature have only given to the board of aldermen a limited authority over the subject matter. The power to treat two sidewalks in two distinct streets as one, for the purposes of assessment, is not given by the statute."

Section 4226 G. C. provides in part:

"No ordinance, resolution or by-law shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title. * * *."

Our supreme court had occasion to pass upon a similar provision in Heffner v. The City of Toledo, 75 O. S. 413, and held as follows in the syllabus:

"1. The statutory requirement that 'No by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title,' was intended to prevent the uniting in one ordinance of diverse subjects or measures and effecting its passage by uniting in its support all those in favor of any, and to prevent the adoption of ordinances by the votes of councilmen ignorant of their contents.

2. Whether an ordinance is violative of the statutory requirement that 'No by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title,' is to be determined not by its form, but in the light of the mischief the statute was intended to prevent.

3. An ordinance to provide for the issuing of bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of thirty-two street and sewer improvements, entitled: 'An ordinance to provide for the issue of general street improvement bonds of the city of Toledo, state of Ohio, to pay said city's part of the cost and expense of improving sundry streets and alleys by paving, repaving, grading and macadamizing, and by constructing sewers therein and to pay the said city's part of the cost and expense of constructing such sewers,' is not in conflict with the statutory requirement that 'No by-law or ordinance shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title.' "

In view of the last mentioned decision of our supreme court it would seem that the combining in one resolution or ordinance of the improvement of several streets does not amount to the setting forth of more than one subject in one piece of legislation. It then remains for us to determine whether the provisions of law which authorize the improvement of streets by a municipality on the assessment plan contemplate a separate procedure for each individual street.

The case of Irwin v. City of Greenville, supra, seems to hold that the improvement of several streets may be provided for in one ordinance or resolution, since the action of council relates to but one subject matter, to wit, the whole improvement. However, in the case of City of Cincinnati v. Corry, supra, the court evidently considered that the legislature intended that there should be a separate procedure for each street, since it goes into detail to show that the two named streets that were to be improved in one assessment proceeding were in fact parts of one street, and that in reality the improvement of both together constituted only the improvement of one street.

In Wilder v. City of Cincinnati, supra, reference is made by the court in its opinion to the case of Arnold v. City of Cambridge, supra, and at page 283 it is said:

"The case before us is not similar, and therefore the case cited (Arnold v. City of Cambridge) is not applicable. Here a single street only was to be improved between designated points. An intermediate portion, between the designated termini, under contract with the land-owner, was to be contemporaneously improved according to the established grade, without expense to the city. It was deemed necessary to make the improvement the entire distance named, and the fact that a portion of it would be made without expense to the city, or other abutters, would not render the improvement less valuable to the public or the abutters upon it. Under these circumstances, we think, it was competent for the city, in the ordinance and contracts for the improvement, to except the intermediate portion, for the improvement of which it had made other provisions, and to join the parts thus separated for the purpose of improvement and assessment for the expense of it. If the intervening portion was not to be improved, the case might be different; but as it is, this objection is untenable."

It is noted from the foregoing cases, where the question has been directly raised, that some courts have taken the view, as expressed in the Illinois case, supra, that one improvement may be made up of several streets, and that the legislation for the improvement on the assessment plan of more than one street may be set forth in one ordinance or resolution; while, on the other hand, other courts have taken the view, as expressed by the Massachusetts supreme court in the city of Cambridge case, supra, that the improvement of each individual street required a separate proceeding and that two or more streets could not be provided for in one piece of legislation

Section 3814 G. C., as heretofore quoted, requires that when it is deemed necessary to make an improvement on the assessment plan coumcil shall declare the necessity thereof by resolution.

Sections 3824 and 3825 G. C. provide, in effect, that if council determines that it will proceed with a proposed improvement on the assessment plan an ordinance containing its determination to proceed with the improvement shall be passed.

Section 3833 G. C. provides for the letting of the contract, and reads:

> "The contract for any such improvement shall be let by the director of public service, in the same manner as other contracts, and in case all bids be rejected such director in cities and the council in villages may order a re-advertisement for bids."

Section 3833 has reference in its operation to section 4328 G. C., which provides that contracts involving an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars shall only be let to the lowest and best bidder after there has been a public advertisement of the work to be done, and section 4403 G. C., which provides that if said contract is for an amount in excess of five hundred dollars it shall only be awarded on the approval of the board of control.

In view of all the foregoing, and particularly the fact that the legislature in its various enactments for street improvements on the assessment plan has referred to the improvement in the singular number, as being of a single street, while in speaking of other work to be done on streets on the assessment plan refers to streets in the plural and authorizes expressly the combination of two or more streets in one assessment proceeding, I feel convinced, using the language of the supreme court of Massachusetts in the City of Cambridge case, supra, that "it was evidently intended by the legislature that the case of each street should be considered separately and with a view to its own special circumstances," and therefore advise you, in direct answer to your question, that there should be a separate resolution, ordinance and legal advertisement for the improvement of each street or a combination of two or more streets which are in reality one street or thoroughfare, and that there should not be a combination of two or more distinct and separate street improvements in one assessment proceeding.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—MAY NOT FARM OUT TO PRIVATE CONTRACTING COMPANY COUNTY JAIL PRISONERS—FOR CONSTRUCTION OF INFIRMARY.

It is unlawful for the county commissioners to farm out to a private contracting firm engaged in the construction of a county infirmary the labor of prisoners confined in the county jail for non-payment of fines and costs.

It is also unlawful for the court to suspend the sentences of prisoners sentenced to jail on the condition that they perform labor for some private contracting concern, the firm paying the county so much per day for the labor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 21, 1917.

HON. E. D. FRITCH, Judge, Court of Common Pleas, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 31, 1917, as follows:

"Summit county is the owner of a county farm, consisting of several hundred acres, on which the county commissioners are erecting a new county infirmary. This county infirmary is being erected by a contractor, under a contract with the county commissioners.

The courts of common pleas of this county, in the case of minor offenses, punishable by imprisonment in the county jail or workhouse, or a fine, have imposed sentence in the manner provided by law, and then suspended sentence on condition that the person sentenced would perform a certain number of days' labor, under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners, the prisoner not making any objection, but taking the privilege which was offered to him, of working under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners, as prescribed by the court, instead of serving the penalty prescribed by law. Prisoners whose sentences were suspended in this way were then taken by the county commissioners, to the county farm, and, at the direction of the commissioners, performed work for a contractor, who, by agreement with the county commissioners, agrees to pay to the county commissioners the sum of $2.50 per day, for each day of labor performed by these prisoners. Out of this $2.50 per day, by agreement between the contractor and the commissioners, the commissioners allow the contractor the sum of $1.00 per day, per person, for boarding the prisoners. They are housed in a farm house on the premises.

Under sections 12376 and 12377, persons have also been committed, by the courts, to hard labor in the jail of the county, for non-payment of fines and costs, and in working out the fines and costs, they did so under the same arrangement between the board of commissioners and the contractor. Under section 12377 the sheriff of the county collects from the contractor the proceeds of the labor of such convicts and pays it into the treasury, in the manner provided by law.

The agent of the local building trades council objects to this practice of the local courts, on the ground, as he claims, that it is violation of the laws of this state, and takes the position that the convicts may only be employed at labor directly for the county, notwithstanding that section 12377 G. C. provides that the sheriff shall collect the proceeds of the labor of such convicts and pay it into the treasury.

I desire to get your opinion of this matter.

It seemed to me that where a convict works, as I have indicated, under the jurisdiction of the commissioners of his own volition, under suspension of sentence, no valid objection could be raised, and inasmuch as General Code 12377 provides that the sheriff of the county shall collect the proceeds of the labor of such convicts and pay it into the treasury, the statute contemplates that the convict might be hired by the board of commissioners to someone else, for the benefit of the county. Otherwise, there never would be any case in which the sheriff could collect the proceeds of the labor of such convict and pay it into the treasury."

Sections 2227-1, 2227-2, 2227-3 and 2227-4 of the General Code read:

"Sec. 2227-1. The labor or time of any person confined in any workhouse or jail in this state shall not hereafter be let, farmed out, given, sold or contracted to any person, firm, corporation or association.

Section 2227-2. Such persons so confined may be employed in the manufacture of articles used by any department or public institution belonging to or controlled by the political subdivision or subdivisions supporting or contributing to the support of any such workhouse or jail or to any political subdivision of the state.

Section 2227-3. The board, officer or officers, in charge of any such workhouse or jail may provide, prepare and procure machinery, power and shoproom for the purpose of the manufacture of the articles specified in section two of this act, and employ such persons as may be necessary to instruct persons confined in such workhouses or jails in such manufacture.

Section 2227-4. No other articles than those specified in section 2 of this act shall be manufactured but nothing herein shall prevent the employment of any person so confined, elsewhere than within the jail or workhouse where he has been committed by any political subdivision, nor impair or affect any contract heretofore made."

These sections were originally sections 1, 2, 3 and 4 of an act passed April 16, 1913, entitled "An Act to prohibit the employment under contract to any persons, firm or corporation of any persons confined in any workhouse or jail in this state." It is clear that under section 1 of this act (2227-1 G. C.) the arrangement referred to in your letter is illegal. A claim might be set up that inasmuch as the county is crediting the $1.50 a day to the prisoner, it is not selling his labor to the contractor but simply allowing him to work for such contractor instead of being employed in the jail. However, the fact remains that the county is receiving $1.50 for this labor, which they would probably not receive if the prisoner were engaged in other work, although the county would, nevertheless, be obliged in that instance to credit the prisoner with the proper rate per day for his labor. It will be noted that the provisions of the statutes prohibiting the farming out of convict labor do not only apply to prisoners sentenced to jail, but also to prisoners committed to jail for non-payment of fine and costs. Since the prohibition of section 2227-1 is against the farming out of "the labor or time of any person confined in any workhouse or jail in this state," it may be urged that although section 2227-1 prohibits the farming out of the labor or time of any person confined in any workhouse or jail in this state, it does not prohibit such employment outside of the workhouse or jail. This construction of the statute would, in my opinion, be entirely too narrow, and would be contrary to the views frequently expressed by the courts. It has often been held that a prisoner sentenced to the penitentiary is confined within such institution even when such prisoner is out on parole or working on state farms, upon the theory that in such case the penitentiary walls are extended to the state line.

Following this view it seems clear to me that prisoners under sentence or commitment to the county jail are "confined" in such jail within the meaning of the word as used in section 2227-1 G. C., even though they may be working outside and away from the jail. This conclusion is strengthened by section 2227-4 G. C., which provides that nothing in the act of which these sections are a part shall prevent the employment of any person so confined, elsewhere than within the jail or workhouse where he has been committed by any political subdivision. The words "so confined," used in section 2227-4, refer to the prisoners confined in a workhouse or jail as mentioned in section 2227-1 G.C.U.C. section 2227-4 G.C. though allowing these prisoners to be employed by a political subdivision "elsewhere than within the jail or workhouse" still refers to them as prisoners "so confined," showing clearly that the legislature views jail prisoners as being confined within the jail even in cases where they are being employed on farms or at places away from the jail. In those cases to which you refer, where sentence is suspended, the prisoners are not confined in jail but have been sentenced to jail and then have had their sentences suspended on condition that they perform a certain number of days labor for these private contractors in the construction of the county infirmary, and the county receives the sum of $1.50 per day for their labor. If they had been committed to jail after sentence, these prisoners could not have been so employed. The arrangement you refer to, viz., the suspension of sentence with the condition annexed that the prisoner shall perform such labor in the construction of the county infirmary, is an attempt to do indirectly what the law prohibits being done directly.

Sections 12376 and 12377 G. C., to which you call attention, read as follows:

> Section 12376. "When, under the provisions of law, a convict may be imprisoned in the county jail, the court, upon the recommendation of the prosecuting attorney, may sentence such convict to hard labor therein; and when a person may be committed to jail for the non-payment of fines and costs, the court may commit him to hard labor therein until the value of his labor at the rate of one dollar and fifty cents a day equals such fine and costs, provided that no commitment under this section shall exceed six months, and this section shall not affect the laws relating to workhouses."

> Section 12377. "Persons committed to jail by a court or magistrate for non-payment of fines or costs, or convicts sentenced to hard labor in the jail of the county, which for this purpose is co-extensive with the county, shall perform labor under the direction of the commissioners of the county, who may adopt such orders, rules and regulations in relation thereto, as they deem best, and the sheriff or other officer having the custody of such persons or convicts shall be governed thereby. The sheriff of the county shall collect the proceeds of the labor of such convicts, pay it into the treasury, take the treasurer's duplicate receipts therefor and forthwith deposit one of them with the county auditor."

These sections were passed long before the act of April 16, 1913, above referred to, and therefore could hardly be construed as authorizing any farming out of convict labor when such arrangement is so clearly prohibited in positive terms in the act of April 16, 1913. Neither is it necessary to hold that jail prisoners may be worked on private contracts to give meaning to the provision of section 12377, to which you refer, which reads:

> "The sheriff of the county shall collect the proceeds of the labor of such convicts, pay it into the treasury, take the treasurer's duplicate receipts therefor and forthwith deposit one of them with the county auditor."

Section 7507 G. C. provides that:

> "The state highway commissioner, the county commissioners, or the authorities having charge of the streets of any city or village may provide for the use of prison labor in connection with contracts let to private individuals for the construction, maintenance and repair of such roads and streets. * * *"

This is an exception to the general rule laid down in the statutes that county commissioners cannot contract with private contractors for the employment of convict labor, and according to the terms of the act of which it was originally a part, this special authority is to be strictly construed.

Section 7514 General Code, which was originally enacted along with section 7507 above quoted, provides:

> "Nothing herein shall be held to repeal or modify any other provision of law applying to prisoners, and prison labor."

So that there is some statutory provision for the farming out of convict labor to which section 12377 can still be held to apply, viz.: the provision of section 7507.

In conclusion, therefore, I advise you that it is my opinion that the prisoners you refer to may not be employed in the construction of the county infirmary.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

POLICE CHIEF—DUTY TO SERVE SUBPOENAS IN STATE CASE BEFORE MAYOR—EXPENSES.

It is the duty of the chief of police to serve subpoenas upon witnesses in connection with the preliminary examination before the mayor in state cases, though there is no provision of law allowing the chief of police any fees for such service or expenses incurred by him in making such service in any state cases other than those enumerated in section 13423 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 22, 1917.

HON. J. H. MUSSER, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 29, 1917, as follows:

> "A prosecution was commenced in a state criminal case in the mayor's court in the city of Wapakoneta, about ten days ago, and the defendant demanded a preliminary examination, and thereupon a precipe was filed for witnesses on behalf of the state, and these witnesses were served with subpoenas by the chief of police of Wapakoneta. The witnesses subpoenaed lived about ten or twelve miles from the city, and it was necessary for the chief of police to hire a conveyance in order to obtain service.
> Because of the decision of the case of Haserodt, Clerk of Court, v. State of Ohio, ex rel., E. R. Wilcox, City Solicitor, decided on May 18, 1917, by Judges Middleton, Walter and Sayre, of the court of appeals, the mayor and chief of police have requested that I obtain from you an opinion as to the manner in which the chief of police can be reimbursed for the amount expended by him for vehicle hire in serving these subpoenas, as this amount was paid from his own funds.

The decision above referred to seems to hold that no fees can be allowed the chief of police for serving subpoenas, and I would like to have your opinion as to whether or not he can collect for actual expenditures in making service, or is he compelled to make such expenditures if necessary because of the fact that he holds the office of chief of police?"

Section 4534 of the General Code reads:

"In felonies, and other criminal proceedings, not herein provided for, such mayor shall have jurisdiction and power, throughout the county, concurrent with justices of the peace. The chief of police shall execute and return all writs and process to him directed by the mayor, and shall by himself or deputy attend on the sittings of such court, to execute the orders and process thereof and to preserve order therein, and his jurisdiction and that of his deputies in the execution of such writs and process, and in criminal cases, and in cases of violations of ordinances of the corporation, shall be coextensive with the county, and in civil cases shall be coextensive with the jurisdiction of the mayor therein. The fees of the mayor in all cases, excepting those arising out of violation of ordinances, shall be the same as those allowed justices of the peace for similar services and the fees of the chief of police or his deputies in all cases, excepting those arising out of violations of ordinances shall be the same as those allowed sheriffs and constables in similar cases."

The decision in the case of Haserodt v. State, reported in the Ohio Law Bulletin, August 20, 1917, page 266, to which you refer, held that the chief of police could not collect fees for services in state cases in the police court because of the indefinite provision of section 4581, General Code, to the effect that:

"Other fees in the police court shall be the same in state cases as are allowed in the probate court, or before justices of the peace, in like cases, and in cases for violation of ordinances such fees as the council, by ordinance, prescribes, not exceeding the fees for like services in state cases."

The case you present relates to the fees of the chief of police in the mayor's court, but it is evident from a reading of section 4534, above quoted, that the provision of this section concerning the fees of the chief of police is open to the same objections as that found by the court of appeals to the provision of section 4581, since section 4534 provides that the fees of the chief of police or his deputies should be the same as those allowed sheriffs or constables in similar cases.

In passing I think it proper to refer to section 13436 of the General Code, which provides:

"In pursuing or arresting a defendant and in subpoenaing the witnesses in such prosecutions, the constable, chief of police, marshal or other court officer shall have like jurisdiction and power as the sheriff in criminal cases in the common pleas court, and he shall receive like fees therefor."

It will be noted that this section provides that in certain cases the fees of the chief of police in pursuing and arresting a defendant and in subpoenaing the witnesses shall be the same as the fees of the sheriff in criminal cases in the common pleas court. This provision, it will be noted, is a definite one and not open to the objection raised by the court of appeals in the case of Haserodt v. State, supra. However, it is clear from a reading of section 13423, in connection with section 13436, and an examination of the legislative history of the two sections, that the cases to which section 13436 applies are those enumerated in section 13423. I take it from your communication that the case you present is not such a "case", since you state that the defendant demanded a preliminary examination. The case you refer to then not being one of those enumerated in section 13423, section 13436 will not apply.

I therefore advise you that by reason of the decision in the case of Haserodt v. State, I am of the opinion that there is no authority in law for the payment of any fees to the chief of police for serving subpoenas upon witnesses in connection with the preliminary examination before the mayor in stated cases other than those enumerated in section 13423 General Code, neither do I know of any provision of law allowing the chief of police expenses in connection with the services of such subpoenas.

It being the duty of the chief of police to serve these subpoenas, I am of the opinion that regardless of the fact that no fee has been provided for such service, he is obliged to render the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

NEWSPAPER PUBLICATION—WHEN LAW REQUIRES PUBLICATION IN ONE PAPER AND SAME HAS BEEN PUBLISHED IN MORE THAN ONE PAPER, FUNDS ILLEGALLY SPENT MAY BE RECOVERED—LIABILITY OF OFFICERS AUTHORIZING EXCESS PUBLICATION.

Where the law provides that publication shall be made in a newspaper of general circulation and publication is had in more than one newspaper for the required number of times only in each paper, and said papers have been paid for said publication, HELD:

(1) That said publication in more than one paper is illegal and the amount of money paid out in excess of the cost of the legally required amount of publication is illegally expended within the meaning of section 286 G. C.

(2) That a contract must be made with the publisher for said publication service to make the municipal corporation liable for said publication and if contracts are made with more than one publisher for the same service the first one in point of time would be the legal one and the others would be void ab initio, and any public funds paid out on said void contracts would be illegally expended and could be recovered on the authority of the Vindicator Printing Co. case.

(3) That the officer or officers of the municipality authorizing said excess publication and the city auditor, whose duty it is to refuse to issue his warrant for the expenditure of public funds for an illegal and unauthorized purpose, are liable for said misapplication of public funds and may be held responsible for said illegal payment to the same extent as the publisher receiving same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 22, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication requesting my opinion on the following:

> "Where the law specifies that publication shall be made in 'a newspaper,' as, for illustration, in section 4328 G. C., if a publication is made in more than one newspaper, who should be held liable for the money expended in excess of the proper amount authorized by law, the paper, or papers receiving such money, or the officer authorized to direct such publication?

In case it is held that the newspaper, or newspapers, should be held liable, what method may be used in ascertaining which newspaper was legally entitled to the publication?"

Section 4328 G. C., which is referred to in your communication by way of illustration, provides in part as follows:

"* * * the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

In the case of Vindicator Printing Co. v. State of Ohio, 68 O. S. 362, the first branch of the syllabus reads:

"Where the number of publications of a sheriff's election proclamation or other public notice, is fixed by statute, there is no authority in the board of county commissioners, or other county officer, to contract for publications in excess of the number directed by statute. The board is also without authority to allow a claim for such excessive publications, and the allowance of such claim does not bind the county. Nor is authority to adjudicate and allow such claim given by the fact that with the charge for unauthorized publications there is, on the same paper, a charge for a publication which is authorized by statute."

It is evident from the foregoing case that our supreme court has taken the view that the authority to publish a legal notice is limited to the one provided in the particular statute and no discretion is vested in the publishing authority to give additional notice. In the above mentioned case the Vindicator Printing Co. had printed the notice in question in excess of the number of times provided by statute and had received pay for the excessive publication as well as for the legally required amount. The court permitted a recovery from said printing company for the amount in excess of that due for the publication for the legal number of times, less that portion of excess which had been paid prior to the going into effect of the law which authorized the prosecuting attorney to recover back for the use of the county all such county moneys that have been misapplied or illegally drawn out of the county treasury.

From the holding of the court in the Vindicator Printing Company case two general principles may be drawn as follows:

1. Whenever provision is made in a statute for the number of legal publications it controls and publications in excess of the limit fixed are unauthorized;

2. Whenever the law has provided for the recovery of public money illegally expended any public money paid out for legal publications in excess of the limit fixed by statute may be recovered, even in the absence of fraud or a mistake of fact.

In McCormick v. City of Niles, 81 O. S. 246, it was held in the first branch of the syllabus:

"The liability of a municipal corporation to pay for the publication of ordinances, resolutions and legal notices required by law to be published must rest on an express contract and not upon a mere account for the rendition of such services."

In accordance with the holding of the court in the Niles case it is necessary for the officer authorized to have a legal notice published to enter into a contract with the publisher, and if no such contract is made the municipality is not liable to said publisher even though he may have rendered the service in question. In other words, the duty is placed upon the publisher to see that a valid contract is made by and between himself and the city, represented by the proper officer.

The general principles of law with respect to the power and authority of the officers of a municipality to contract on behalf of the municipality and with respect to the duties of private parties relative to municipal contracts are set forth in Vol. II of Dillon on Municipal Corporations, 5th edition, section 777:

"And it is a general and fundamental principle of law that all persons contracting with a municipal corporation must at their peril inquire into the statutory power of the corporation, or its officers, to make the contract, and a contract beyond the scope of the corporate power granted or conferred by the legislature expressly, or by fair implication, is void, although it be under the seal of the corporation. This principle is more strictly applied, and properly so, than in the law of private corporations. So, also, those dealing with the agent of a municipal corporation are likewise bound to ascertain the nature and extent of his authority. This is certainly so in all cases where this authority is special and of record, or conferred by statute."

Section 284 G. C. provides in part:

"The bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices shall examine each public office. * * *"

Section 286 G. C. provides in part:

"The report of the examination shall set forth, in such detail as may be deemed proper by the bureau, the result of the examination with respect to each and every matter and thing inquired into * * *. If the report sets forth that any public money has been illegally expended * * * the city solicitor shall institute * * * civil actions in the proper court * * * for the recovery of the same and shall prosecute * * * the same to final determination. * * *"

It would seem, therefore, in view of the foregoing that a municipality is not authorized to have a legal publication made in excess of the number of times that is prescribed by statute; and if such legal publication is had and the public money of said municipality is expended therefor the same may be recovered. This would seem to be true particularly in view of the fact that under section 286 G. C. the city solicitor is authorized, in effect, to bring the same kind of a proceeding on a finding made by the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices as the prosecuting attorney is authorized to do on his own initiative under the section in question in the Vindicator Printing Company case.

Under the statement of facts that you present the publication is authorized for not less than two nor more than four times in one newspaper, but there has been a publication made in two or more newspapers for not less than two nor more than four times. In other words, the excess publication has not been in regard to the number of times of insertion but in regard to the number of newspapers used. Under the law, as has been stated, the officer making said publication on behalf of said municipality has authority only to contract with one publisher and if one contract has been made the authority of said officer would then end and he could not bind the municipality by any arrangement made subsequently with another publisher since on the general and familiar principles above quoted from Dillon the later publisher would be required, at his peril, to inquire into the power and authority of said officer to make said contract and the act of said officer in making the original agreement with the first publisher would make him functus officio, as has heretofore been held, and said later contract would therefore be void ab initio. It would follow, then, that any funds of the municipality received by said publisher in accordance with said void contract would be illegally received for an illegal publication and be subject to recovery on the authority of the Vindicator Printing Co. case.

We come now to the question of the liability of the officers of the municipality for the unauthorized and unnecessary publication.

Section 4666 G. C. provides:

> "Each officer of the corporation, or of any department or board thereof, whether elected or appointed as a substitute for a regular officer, shall be an elector within the corporation, except as otherwise expressly provided, and before entering upon his official duties shall take an oath to support the constitution of the United States and the constitution of Ohio, and an oath that he will faithfully, honestly and impartially discharge the duties of the office. Such provisions as to official oaths shall extend to deputies, but they need not be electors."

Section 4667 G. C. provides:

> "The official bonds of all municipal officers shall be prepared by the solicitor. Except as otherwise provided in this title, they shall be in such sum as the council prescribes by general or special ordinance and be subject to the approval of the mayor, except that the mayor's bond shall be approved by the council, or, if it is not legally organized, by the clerk of the court of common pleas of the county in which the corporation or the larger part thereof is situated."

Section 4668 G. C. reads in part:

> "In each such bond, the condition that the person elected or appointed shall faithfully perform the duties of the office shall be sufficient * * *"

The foregoing sections impose upon the officers of a municipal corporation the obligation of faithfully, honestly and impartially discharging the duties of their office. They are also required to give bond for the faithful performance of the duties of their office in such amount as council may prescribe. It seems clear that the duty of faithfully, honestly and impartially discharging their duties would require them to authorize the expenditure of public funds only for properly authorized purposes under the law, and if they should violate their obligation in that respect the law is plain and clear that they would be responsible to the municipality for such breach of duty.

Section 4285 G. C. provides:

> "The auditor shall not allow the amount set aside for any appropriation to be overdrawn, or the amount appropriated for one item of expense to be drawn upon for any other purpose, or unless sufficient funds shall actually be in the treasury to the credit of the fund upon which such voucher is drawn. When any claim is presented to him, he may require evidence that such amount is due, and for this purpose may summon any agent, clerk or employe of the city, or any other person, and examine him upon oath or affirmation concerning such voucher or claim."

It is seen from the latter section that the city auditor is charged with the duty of seeing that funds duly appropriated are only drawn upon for a legal and proper use. He, as well as the authority in the municipality incurring a particular obligation and executing a voucher for its payment, has the obligation imposed upon him of seeing that public funds are expended only for legally authorized purposes.

The principles of law involved in regard to the situation in hand are stated in Vol. II of McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, section 540, as follows:

> "Where funds are disbursed illegally by public officers or upon their authority, they are personally liable therefor. And such an act of a public officer cannot be legalized by the council. * * *
> The fact that funds expended illegally were expended for a useful purpose is no defense to an action for their recovery against the officer who disbursed them wrongfully."

The following cases, among others, are cited as authority for the above proposition:

> Russell v. Tate, 52 Ark. 541, 13 S. W. 130;
> People v. Bender, 36 Mich. 195;
> Blair v. Lantry, 21 Neb. 247, 31 N. W. 790;
> East St. Louis v. Flannigan, 34 Ill. App. 596;
> McCracken v. Soucy, 29 Ill. App. 619.

In view of all the foregoing, then, I advise you that where the law provides that publication shall be made in a newspaper of general circulation and publication is had in more than one paper, for the required number of times only in each paper, and said papers have been paid for said publication, it is my opinion:

(1) That said publication in more than one paper is illegal and the amount of money paid out in excess of the cost of the legally required amount of publication is illegally expended within the meaning of section 286 G. C.

(2) That a contract must be made with the publisher for said publication service to make the municipal corporation liable for said publication and if contracts are made with more than one publisher for the same service the first one in point of time would be the legal one and the others would be void ab initio, and any public funds paid out on said void contracts would be illegally expended and could be recovered on the authority of the Vindicator Printing Co. case.

(3) That the officer or officers of the municipality authorizing said excess publication and the city auditor, whose duty it is to refuse to issue his warrant for the expenditure of public funds for an illegal and unauthorized purpose, are liable for said misapplication of public funds and may be held responsible for said illegal payment to the same extent as the publisher receiving same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—SALE OF STATE LANDS LOCATED IN AKRON, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 22, 1917.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of November 21, 1917, in which you enclose blank form of deed for certain real estate located in Akron, Ohio, and ask my approval of the sale of said lands. In passing upon this matter, I am assuming that the introductory statements set forth in the deed are correct, especially to the effect that the lands were appraised at ten thousand dollars; that they were duly advertised for sale for more than thirty days prior to the date of the sale, in two newspapers of opposite politics and of general circulation in Summit county, and that the grantee, The Robinson Clay Product Company of Akron, Ohio, was the highest and best bidder in making its bid of seventy-five hundred dollars.

I find the proceedings leading up to the making of the deed correct in form and legal in every respect and therefore am endorsing my approval of the same upon the form of deed submitted to me.

I might say the deed is in the nature of a quit-claim and not a general warranty but if the grantee is satisfied with such a deed, there is nothing irregular in this respect.

I am forwarding said deed to the governor of Ohio for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

POLICE CHIEF, ETC.—ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION FOR ARRESTING AND RETURNING TO ANOTHER COUNTY PERSON CHARGED WITH FELONY—SHERIFF'S FEE MUST BE TURNED INTO FEE FUND.

The chief of police, constable or other officer is entitled to receive compensation under section 13493 G. C. for services rendered in arresting and returning to another county persons charged with felony. This compensation may be retained personally by the chief of police or constable, but must be paid by the sheriff into the sheriff's fee fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 23, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of November 9, 1917, as follows:

"We would respectfully request your written opinion upon the following questions:

May the county auditor legally issue his warrant in favor of the chief of police, or other officer, in payment of expenses incurred by them and reasonable compensation in arresting and returning a person charged with a felony under section 13493 General Code?

Is the chief of police, or any other officer, drawing a regular salary, entitled to the compensation in said section in addition to his salary?"

Section 13493 of the General Code reads:

"When a felony has been committed, any person without warrant, may arrest another whom he has reasonable cause to believe is guilty of the offense, and detain him until a warrant can be obtained. If such warrant directs the removal of the accused to the county in which the offense was committed, the officer holding the warrant shall deliver the accused to a magistrate of such county, to be dealt with according to law. The necessary expense of such removal, and reasonable compensation for his time and trouble, shall be paid to such officer, out of the treasury of such county, upon the allowance and order of the county auditor."

This section was originally section 3 of an act entitled "An act defining the duties of sheriffs and coroners in certain cases," passed February 25, 1824, 29 O. L., p. 112. This section reads:

"That if any person or persons, who may be charged with the commission of a crime or offense, made punishable by the laws of this state, shall abscond or remove from the county in which such crime or offense be charged to have been committed, it shall be lawful for any sheriff, constable or other person, to apprehend the person or persons so charged, and forthwith remove him, her or them, to the county in which the alleged crime may be said to have been committed, and deliver such person or persons, to any judge or justice of the peace, in said county; who shall cause the person or person so delivered, to be dealt with as the law may direct; and it shall be the duty of the auditor of the county, to which such removal is made, to allow the officer or other person causing such removal, all necessary disbursements and expenses, together with a reasonable compensation for his time and trouble; and the amount so allowed shall be paid on the order of the auditor aforesaid, out of the county treasury."

On May 6, 1869. an act was passed entitled "an act to establish a code of criminal procedure for the state of Ohio" and found in 66 O. L., p. 287. Section 22 of this act reads: (p. 291).

"Any person not an officer may, without warrant, arrest any person if a petit larceny or offense has been committed, and there has been reasonable ground to believe the person arrested guilty of such offense and may detain him until a legal warrant can be obtained."

In Revised Statutes these two sections were combined and made to read as follows:

Section 7130. "When a felony has been committed, any person may, without warrant, arrest another who he believes, and has reasonable cause to believe, is guilty of the offense, and may detain him until a legal warrant can be obtained; if such warrant directs the removal of the accused to the county in which the offense was committed, the officer holding the warrant shall deliver the accused to some magistrate of such county, to be dealt with according to law; and all the necessary expense of such removal, and reasonable compensation for his time and trouble, shall be paid to such officer, out of the treasury of such county, upon the allowance and order of the county auditor."

They appear in substantially the same form in section 13493 of the General Code, above quoted.

It has been suggested that because the first sentence of the section refers only to "persons," the provision in the last sentence of said section, to the effect that "necessary expense of such removal and reasonable compensation for his time and trouble shall be paid to such officer," might not apply to any one but the persons mentioned in the first sentence of the section. However, the history of this section clearly shows that as originally enacted it compensated officers, and it is my opinion that the compensation provided for in section 13493, therefore, may be paid to officers rendering the services mentioned.

It will be noted that this section only applies to cases where prisoners are removed from one county to another and that the expense of removal is to be paid by the county into which the prisoner is removed. I know of no reason to hold that the chief of police or constable receiving such compensation may not retain the same, but it might be mentioned in passing that any such compensation received by the sheriff is received by him in his official capacity and must be paid into the sheriff's fee fund.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CORPORATION—ORGANIZED UNDER LAWS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA—TO WHICH THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES HAS DELEGATED CERTAIN POWERS—AND WHICH TRANSACTS NO OTHER BUSINESS—NOT SUBJECT TO STATE LAWS RELATING TO FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

A corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia, to which the President of the United States has delegated certain authority reposed in him by acts of congress, and which transacts no other business than that falling within the purview of the authority so delegated, is an agency of the federal government and as such is not subject to state laws prescribing the conditions upon which foreign corporations generally may transact business in the state. The fact that such corporation was organized by the members of a board of officers of the United States under direct authority of congress, and that the United States owns all or a majority of the stock of said corporation, though supporting the same conclusion, need not be considered in arriving at the result.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 24, 1917.

HON. W. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have requested my opinion upon the following question:

The United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation is a corporation organized under the laws of the District of Columbia for the purpose of—

"the purchase, construction, equipment, lease, charter, maintenance, and operation of merchant vessels in the commerce of the United States."

Is the corporation required to comply with the laws of Ohio before pursuing any of those objects in this state, under the following facts?

By act of congress, approved September 7, 1916, entitled:

"An act to establish a United States shipping board for the purpose of encouraging, developing, and creating a naval reserve and a merchant marine to meet the requirements of the commerce of the United States with its territories * * * and for other purposes," there was created (section 3) a board "to be known as the United States Shipping Board," to be composed "of five commissioners to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the senate."

Among the other powers granted to this board was the following:

"Section 11. That the board, if in its judgment such action is necessary to carry out the purposes of this act, may form under the laws of the District of Columbia one or more corporations for the purchase, construction, equipment, lease, charter, maintenance and operation of merchant vessels in the commerce of the United States. The total capital stock thereof shall not exceed $50,000,000. The board may, for and on behalf of the United States, subscribe to, purchase, and vote not less than a majority of the capital stock of any such corporation, and do all other things in regard thereto necessary to protect the interests of the United States and to carry out the purposes of this act. The board, with the approval of the president, may sell any or all of the stock of the United States in such corporation, but at no time shall it be a minority stockholder therein: PROVIDED, That no corporation in which the United States is a stockholder, formed under the authority of this section, shall engage in the operation of any vessel constructed, purchased, leased, chartered or transferred under the authority of this act unless the board shall be unable, after a bona fide effort, to contract with any person a citizen of the United States for the purchase, lease, or charter of such vessel under such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the board.

* * * * * * * *

At the expiration of five years from the conclusion of the present European war the operation of vessels on the part of any such corporation in which the United States is then a stockholder shall cease and the said corporation stand dissolved. The date of the conclusion of the war shall be declared by proclamation of the president. The vessels and other property of any such corporation shall revert to the board. The board may sell, lease, or charter such vessels as provided in section seven and shall dispose of the property other than vessels on the best available terms and, after payment of all debts and obligations, deposit the proceeds thereof in the treasury to its credit. All stock in such corporations owned by others than the United States at the time of dissolution shall be taken over by the board at a fair and reasonable value and paid for with funds to the credit of the board. In case of disagreement, such value shall be determined in the manner provided in section ten."

An appropriation to the President of the United States was made and the President was authorized to expend it as follows:

"The President is hereby authorized and empowered, within the limits of the amounts herein authorized:

(a) To place an order with any person for such ships or material as the necessities of the government, to be determined by the President, may require during the period of the war and which are of the nature, kind and quantity usually produced or capable of being produced by such person.

(b) To modify, suspend, cancel, or requisition any existing or future contract for the building, production, or purchase of ships or material.

(c) To require the owner or occupier of any plant in which ships or materials are built or produced to place at the disposal of the United States the whole or any part of the output of such plant, to deliver such output or part thereof in such quantities and at such times as may be specified in the order.

(d) To requisition and take over for use or operation by the United States any plant, or any part thereof without taking possession of the entire plant, whether the United States has or has not any contract or agreement with the owner or occupier of such plant.

(e) To purchase, requisition, or take over the title to, or the possession of, for use or operation by the United States any ship now constructed or in the process of construction or hereafter constructed, or any part thereof, or charter of such ship.

* * * * * * * * *

The President may exercise the power and authority hereby vested in him, and expend the money herein and hereafter appropriated through such agency or agencies as he shall determine from time to time: Provided, That all money turned over to the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation may be expended as other moneys of said corporation are now expended. All ships constructed, purchased, or requisitioned under authority herein, or heretofore or hereafter acquired by the United States shall be managed, operated, and disposed of as the President may direct.

* * * * * * * * *

All authority granted to the President herein, or by him delegated, shall cease six months after a final treaty of peace is proclaimed between this government and the German Empire."

By executive order under date of July 11, 1917, the President acted as follows:

"By virtue of authority vested in me in the section entitled 'Emergency shipping fund' of an act of congress entitled 'An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations for the military and naval establishments on account of war expenses for the fiscal year ending June thirtieth, nineteen hundred and seventeen, and for other purposes,' approved June 15, 1917, I hereby direct that the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation shall have and exercise all power and authority vested in me in said section of said act, in so far as applicable to and in furtherance of the construction of vessels, the purchase or requisitioning of vessels in process of construction, whether on the ways or already launched, or of contracts for the construction of such vessels, and the completion thereof, and all power and authority applicable to and in furtherance of the production, purchase, and requisitioning of materials for ship construction."

The certificate of incorporation of the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation was dated and filed April 16, 1917. The incorporators and initial trustees therein designated include all the members of the United States Shipping Board and two other persons. The capital stock of the corporation is $50,000,000.00.

The business now being done or about to be done by the corporation in the state of Ohio is that referred to in the executive order above quoted and no other, and the moneys expended by the corporation in doing such business and by way of investment of capital stock (thus far) are moneys appropriated by the congress of the United States and no other.

In answering the question which is submitted, I shall not undertake to define, for the present purposes, the phrase "doing business" as used in the Ohio act, requiring compliance, on the part of foreign corporations, with certain conditions, before exercising their franchises in this state; nor shall I consider the provisions of the Ohio law, with a view to interpreting them as applied to the facts above stated, nor for any other purpose.

I have chosen to disregard what the Ohio law might by any interpretation be held to mean, because as I see it the question which has been submitted to me must be disposed of upon broader grounds. In my opinion, no law, which the general assembly of the state of Ohio could pass, could attach any condition whatsoever to the transaction of the business described, on the part of the corporation referred to, in this state.

Whether or not regard is had to the fact that the incorporators of this company in its organization acted as officers of the United States under direct authority of an act of congress, and whether or not regard is had to the fact that the United States is at least a majority stockholder therein, I am of the opinion that the facts as stated clearly show that the corporation is an agency of the United States, within the meaning of the principle which has been developed by the supreme court of the United States in decisions beginning with McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316, and concluding with Choctaw, etc., R. R. v. Harrison, 235 U. S. 292. The principle is that a state may not tax nor in any way condition the activities of an agency of the United States government, without the express consent of the United States, evidenced by act of congress. The principle is so well established and is so obvious in its implications that I do not feel called upon to quote from the authorities which enunciate it.

In the present case we have it that all the business which the company is doing is done for the federal government, not under contract with the government, but as the direct agent or instrumentality of the government.

The President of the United States has delegated certain of his authority to the corporation, which must be assumed, for the present purposes, to be competent to receive such authority and to act as his delegate. That being the case, nothing further is required to establish the essential fact and it is not necessary to look behind the fiction of corporate personality and observe further that the United States, through its appropriate officers, is really the proprietor and manager of the company.

For the foregoing reasons I deem it best to advise you that the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation is not required to comply with the laws of Ohio applicable to foreign corporations as such.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LEGAL SETTLEMENT—PERSONS NOT PREVENTED FROM OBTAINING BECAUSE CHILDREN ARE MAINTAINED AND SUPPORTED BY COUNTY IN CHILDREN'S HOME.

The fact that the children of parents have been committed to the county children's home and are maintained and supported by the county, would not prevent the parents from obtaining a legal settlement in a county and thus entitle them to the relief provided for in section 2544 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 24, 1917.

HON. E. E LINDSAY, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 24, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "Something like four years ago a family with children residing in an adjoining county had a part of their children committed to the children's home. The county in which they resided at that time had no children's home and they were committed to the children's home of this county under an agreement with the commissioners of the two counties and they have been in custody and under the control of the children's home of this county ever since.
> About three years ago the parents of these children moved to this county and have resided here ever since and the parents are now certified to the county infirmary. The question now arises as to the residence of these parents under the poor laws of our state. Ordinarily they would be residents of this county, having lived here two years or more without public relief so far as they were concerned individually, but during all this time the adjoining county has been maintaining some of their children at the children's home as above set forth. Should these parents now in your opinion be treated as residents of this county or the adjoining county for maintenance at public expense?"

Briefly stated, the facts, as I gather them, are as follows:

1. A father and mother with children formerly lived in a county adjoining Tuscarawas county.
2. Within the time they lived there some of their children were committed to the children's home of Tuscarawas county by agreement, the county in which the family resided not having a children's home.
3. The children are still in the Tuscarawas county children's home, the expense of keeping them there being paid by the county from which they were committed to said home.
4. The parents moved to Tuscarawas county about three years ago and have lived there ever since and supported themselves during this period without any relief whatever, under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor.
5. The parents have lately been certified to the infirmary of Tuscarawas county by the township trustees of the township in which the parents have resided.

The question of law is as to whether the parents are entitled to relief at the expense of Tuscarawas county, or whether the county in which they formerly resided should furnish the relief. This question arises from the fact that while the parents have never been a charge upon Tuscarawas county nor upon any other county during more than twelve months last past, yet their children or part of them have been a charge upon the county in which they formerly resided, during the time the parents have resided in Tuscarawas county.

Under the above facts we will look into the law which controls in such matters.

Section 2544 G. C. reads as follows:

> "In any county having an infirmary, when the trustees of a township, after making the inquiry provided by law, are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall forthwith transmit a statement of the facts to the superintendent of the infirmary and if it appears that such person is legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown, and the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he should become a county charge, they shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution or otherwise, and thereupon the liability of the township shall cease. The superintendent of the infirmary shall not be liable for any relief furnished, or expenses incurred by the township trustees."

Under this section, one condition under which a person is entitled to admission to a county infirmary is that he is legally settled in the township the trustees of which certify him for admission to the county infirmary.

We will now turn to section 3479 G. C. and note the requirements for a legal settlement in a township. Said section reads as follows:

> "A person having a legal settlement in any county in this state shall be considered as having a legal settlement in the township, or municipal corporation therein, in which he has last resided continuously and supported himself for three consecutive months without relief, under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor."

Under this section a person must have a legal settlement in the county before he can obtain a legal settlement in some township of the county. Therefore we will turn to section 3477 G. C., in order to ascertain the conditions under which a person may obtain a legal settlement in a county. Said section reads in part as follows:

> "Section 3477. Each person shall be considered to have obtained a legal settlement in any county in this state in which he or she has continuously resided and supported himself, or herself for twelve consecutive months, without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor * * *."

Under this section, two conditions must obtain before one can secure a legal settlement in a county, namely, (1) he or she must have continuously resided therein for twelve consecutive months, and (2) must have supported himself or herself for twelve consecutive months, without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor.

The question immediately arises whether the parent would be compelled not only to support himself or herself, but also his or her family, during the time mentioned in said section, before he or she could secure a legal settlement in a county. While I do not pass upon this question in rendering this opinion, yet for the purposes of the opinion I am assuming that the parent would be compelled to support his or her family, as well as himself or herself, during the time set out in said section, without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor, before he or she could obtain a legal settlement in a county.

Assuming that the words "himself or herself" would include his or her family as well, it must be noted that this section provides as follows: "without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor." It provides for a particular kind of relief which is "under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor."

Possibly this will be made clearer if we refer to the act as it was passed in 73 O. L., 233, entitled: "An act for the relief of the poor * * * ," section 12 of which act reads as follows:

> "Every person shall be considered to have obtained a legal settlement in any county in this state, in which he or she shall have continuously resided and supported himself or herself for twelve consecutive months, without relief, under the provisions of this act, * * * ."

It will be noted that originally the act was plain to the effect that the relief mentioned in section 12 of the act, which afterwards became section 1492 R. S. and then section 3477 G. C., was such as was provided for in the act itself. And while the language has been modified to read as we now find it in section 3477 G. C., still it is my opinion that the construction to be placed upon the language is the same as that which would have been placed upon the section as it stood in the original act.

Furthermore, the provisions of law relative to county children's homes do not deal primarily or necessarily with "the relief of the poor."

Section 3089 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "The home shall be an asylum for children under the age of eighteen years, of sound mind and not morally vicious and free from infectious or contagious diseases, who have resided in the county not less than one year, and for such other children under such age from other counties in the state where there is no home, as the trustees of such home and the persons or authority having the custody and control of such children, by contract agree upon, who are, in the opinion of the trustees, suitable children for admission by reason of orphanage, abandonment or neglect by parents, or inability of parents to provide for them. * * * "

From this language it is quite clear that a children's home is not primarily an institution designed for the relief of the poor. Furthermore, when the children's home takes charge of the children of a parent, the home, in a measure at least, steps in and takes the place of the parent and assumes the obligations which the parent would otherwise owe to the children, and while under the law the parent is responsible for the care and support of his or her children, yet when the home assumes jurisdiction over them, this duty of the parent for the time ceases. So that even though we assume the words "himself or herself," as found in section 3477 G. C., would include his or her family, the mere fact that his or her children are in the county children's home would not prevent the parents from gaining a legal settlement in a county, for the reason that the relief furnished the children is not furnished them under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the parents to whom you refer in your communication have obtained a legal settlement in the county of Tuscarawas, though the children of the same are confined in the Tuscarawas county children's home and maintained at the expense of the county in which the parents originally resided.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

NOTICE OF ELECTION—BOARD OF EDUCATION—FAILURE TO PUBLISH—WHEN TREATED AS IRREGULARITY ONLY.

1. Failure to publish notice of an election for board of education as required by section 4839 G. C. will be treated as an irregularity only, where there is no showing that the result of the vote would have been in any way changed had publication been made as provided by law.

2. Where there was failure to publish notice of an election for school board and a regular election was held under section 4838 G. C., and where there were three members of the board to be elected and the names of six candidates appeared on the ballot, the three candidates receiving the highest number of votes were duly elected members of the board and are entitled to qualify thereon.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 24, 1917.

HON. ROBERT M. NOLL, Prosecuting Attorney, Marietta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of November 7, you state:

> "The clerk of the board of education of the Matamoras rural school district failed to give notice as required by section 4839 of the General Code of Ohio for the election held on the 6th day of November, 1917.
> There were three members of the board to be elected and six candidates as follows, and each receiving the number of votes set opposite their names:
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | Charles Ellis, | 132 votes |
> | Walter Laufer, | 151 votes |
> | A. W. Reece, | 84 votes |
> | E. May, | 270 votes |
> | Dr. E. J. Gautchi, | 224 votes |
> | Donald Whetstone | 159 votes. |
> The members of the present board whose terms would expire when their successors are duly elected and qualified are Charles True, J. D. Cline and Charles Ellis.
> I would appreciate your advising me whether the present members of the board hold over and if so for what period of time, or if the three candidates receiving the highest number of votes are the newly elected members of the board and entitled to qualify."

From the facts appearing in your communication I take it that about the usual vote was cast in the school district and that there is no complaint that electors sufficient in number to change the result of the election were deprived of an opportunity to cast their ballots, by reason of the failure to give the notice required by the statute.

Your inquiry is to be determined by a consideration of the provisions found in section 4839 G. C. This section reads as follows:

> "The clerk of each board of education shall publish a notice of all school elections in a newspaper of general circulation in the district or post written or printed notices thereof in five public places in the district at least ten days before the holding of such election. Such notices shall specify the time and place of the election, the number of members of the board of education to be elected, and the term for which they are to be elected, or the nature of the question to be voted upon."

Under the above section it was the duty of the clerk of the board of education to publish a notice of the school election in the manner therein provided, and prior to the election he could have been mandamused by any elector to make the legal publication.

State v. Brown, 38 O. S. 344.

But after the election a different situation is presented, especially since section 4838 G. C. provides that all elections for members of boards of education shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in the odd numbered years.

In 15 Cyc. 320, the general proposition is laid down that when the time and place of holding regular elections are prescribed by public law, the rule is that an omission to give the prescribed statutory notice will not vitiate an election held at the time and place appointed by law. The provisions for notice are then considered directory and not mandatory.

In State ex rel., v. Taylor (Scarff v. Foster), 15 O. S. 137, the fourth paragraph of the syllabus reads:

> Though the neglect of a sheriff, by proclamation, to give notice of an election, may be competent evidence, in connection with other circumstances, to prove fraud or conspiracy on the ground of which an election is contested, such neglect is not conclusive of the invalidity of an election."

The same parties were before the supreme court, as found in 15 O. S. 532, and the court found that the attempted election was irregular and invalid under the peculiar circumstances and facts presented.

Brinkerhoff, C. J., at p. 537, uses the following language:

> "In deciding this case, however, we do not intend to go beyond the case before us, as presented by its own peculiar facts. We do not intend to hold, nor are we of opinion, that the notice by proclamation, as prescribed by law, is per se and in all supposable cases, necessary to the validity of an election. If such were the law, it would be in the power of a ministerial officer, by his misfeasance, always to prevent a legal election. We have no doubt that where an election is held in other respects as prescribed by law, and notice in fact of the election is brought home to the great body of the electors, though derived through means other than the proclamation which the law prescribes, such election would be valid."

In Fike v. State, 4 C. C. (N. S.) 81, the circuit court had before it a question arising under the municipal local option law and in the first paragraph of the syllabus adopts the well recognized principle that election laws are to be construed liberally so as to preserve, if possible, and not defeat, the choice of the people as expressed at an election.

Hull, J., at p. 84 says:

> "The general doctrine is that mere irregularities, that do not go to the foundation of the election, will not invalidate the election, although the provisions of the statute have been technically violated, if it appears that there has been a fair election and a comparatively full vote and no fraud or attempt to deceive or mislead."

At p. 86 he quotes from Dishon v. Smith, 10 Ia., 212, as follows:

> "And it has been remarked, further, that the people are not to be disfranchised, to be deprived of their voice, by the omission of some duty by an officer, if an election has in fact been held at the proper time; and that such penalty ought not to be visited upon them for the negligence or willfulness of one charged with similar duties. Upon considerations like these the courts have held that the voice of the people is not to be rejected for a defect, or even a want of notice, if they have in truth been called upon and have spoken. In the present case whether there were notices or not, there was an election and the people of the county voted, and it is not alleged that any portion of them failed in knowledge of the pendency of the question, or to exercise their franchise."

In Libby v. Paul, 17 N. P. (N. S.) 433 and Scrivens v. Paul, an unreported case of the court of appeals, eighth circuit, under date of June 22, 1914, the court had before it the question of the effect of the failure to publish the notice of an election as to a proposed incorporation of a village, for the full ten days required by the statute, and it was decided that such failure would be treated as an irregularity only where there was no showing that the result of the vote would have been in any way changed had publication been made for the full time.

In Libby v. Paul, supra, Estep, J., quotes the language used by Winch, J., in the Scrivens case, as follows:

> "In this case the will of the people was clearly and decisively expressed at the polls, and it should not be thwarted by the courts. Rather is it the duty of the courts to sustain the will of the people on all occasions, unless that will plainly undertakes to override some provision of the constitution or laws duly enacted by the people's representatives."

Following the above quoted authorities, it is my opinion that the failure to give the notice required by section 4839 G. C. is to be treated as an irregularity which does not vitiate nor render invalid the election so held on November 6, 1917, since there is nothing in the facts given that manifests there was not a full vote out at said election or that the result would have been in any way different had the legal notice been given.

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the three candidates who received the highest number of votes for members of said board of education at said election were duly elected and are entitled to qualify for said offices.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ELECTION OFFICER—MUST MAKE RETURNS TO CLERK OF BOARD OF EDUCATION—OF ELECTION FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES—NOT ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION THEREFOR.

Under section 5120 G. C. it is the duty of the election officers of each precinct to make returns, to the clerk of the board of education of the district in which such precinct is situated, of the election for school purposes held therein, but the election officer so making such returns is not entitled to compensation therefor under section 5043 or other sections of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 24, 1917.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 7 you submit for opinion the following question:

> "Union township, Putnam county, Ohio, has six separate and distinct boards of education. At this election elections were held in each of the said school districts for the choosing of members for its boards. Is a judge of election in said township authorized or required to carry the returns to the clerk of said boards of education, and if said returns are so delivered to the clerk of the board of education is the judge carrying the same entitled to compensation of $2.00 for each of the returns so made to the different boards of education?"

Section 5120 G. C. provides:

> "In school elections, the returns shall be made by the judges and clerks of each precinct to the clerk of the board of education of the district, not less than five days after the election. * * *"

Section 5043 G. C. provides:

> "The judge of elections called by the deputy state supervisors to receive and deliver ballots, poll books, tally sheets and other required papers, shall receive two dollars for such service, and, in addition thereto, mileage at the rate of five cents per mile to and from the county seat, if he lives one mile or more therefrom.
> The judge of elections carrying the returns to the deputy state supervisors, and the judge carrying the returns to the county or township clerk, or clerk or auditor of the municipality, shall receive like compensation.
> In cities where registration is required, the chairman selected at the meeting for organization shall receive one dollar for calling for the sealed package of ballots."

In view of section 5120, supra, it is by statute made the duty of the judges and clerks to make returns of the vote in their precinct to the clerk of the board of education.

Section 5043, supra, is the only section that provides for compensation to an election officer for carrying the returns to anybody. In the absence of any statutory provision, an officer performing the duties devolving upon him by law is deemed compensated therefor by whatever salary or compensation the law provides. Our supreme court has repeatedly held that the compensation of public officers can not be enlarged by implication beyond the terms of the statute.

A similar question was considered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in an opinion found in Vol. I, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, p. 253, wherein he decided that no compensation is authorized by law to be paid to election officers for making returns to the clerk of the board of education in school elections.

At p. 254 he says:

> "It may be difficult to suggest a satisfactory reason for the apparent discrimination by the legislature between the duty of carrying the election returns to the clerk of the board of education in one case and to the clerk of the township or clerk or auditor of a municipality in another, but the reason or lack of reason for such discrimination is immaterial. The legislative expression alone will control."

Concurring in the decision of my predecessor, it is my view that the election officers referred to in your inquiry are bound under the law to deliver the election returns to the clerk of the board of education, but they are not entitled to any compensation therefor.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—THE GREAT AMERICAN MUTUAL INDEMNITY COMPANY—MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANIES—KINDS OF INSURANCE THEY MAY TRANSACT.

Under the provisions of the act found in 107 O. L., 647, a mutual insurance company may transact either the first kind of insurance set out in section 6907-2 G. C., contained in said act, or it may transact any or all of the other kinds of insurance therein set out, as it may elect to do.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 24, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 23, 1917, in which you enclose articles of incorporation of The Great American Mutual Indemnity Company of Mansfield, Ohio, and request my approval of the same.

The act under which these articles of incorporation are drawn is found in 107 O. L. 647. Section 9607-2 G. C., contained in said act, provides that:

> "A domestic mutual company may be organized by a number of persons, not less than twenty, to carry on the business of mutual insurance and to reinsure and to accept reinsurance as authorized by law and its articles of incorporation. * * * ."

This same section provides for seven different kinds of insurance, namely:

1. Fire insurance.
2. Liability insurance.
3. Disability insurance.

4. Automobile insurance.
5. Steam boiler insurance.
6. Use and occupancy insurance.
7. Miscellaneous insurance.

This section further provides:

" * * * A mutual or a stock insurance company may transact only the first kind of insurance, or may transact such as it may elect of the other kinds of insurance * * * " (as set out in the section, namely, those above mentioned in this opinion).

The articles of incorporation presented to your department provide that:

"Said corporation is formed for the purpose of insuring and protecting its members against the following risks."

Following this, the articles set out all the different kinds of insurance mentioned in said section and hereinbefore stated, excepting the first kind, viz., fire insurance, the exact languape of the statute being copied into the articles of incorporation. These articles are signed by twenty persons, residents of Mansfield, and there seems to be no question whatever about their regularity and legality, excepting as to one point and that is as to whether a mutual insurance company can elect to transact more than one kind of insurance, as set out in said section and hereinbefore mentioned, provided it elects not to transact the business of fire insurance.

The persons executing these articles of incorporation claim that they have the right to elect to transact as many of the different kinds of insurance set out in said section as they desire, providing they do not wish to transact the business of fire insurance. It has been urged, however, by others high in insurance circles, that a mutual company can, if it so desires, transact the business of fire insurance, being the first set out in the statute, or, if it does not desire to transact the business of fire insurance, it can then elect to transact only one of the other kinds of insurance mentioned in the statute and numbered from two to seven inclusive.

Inasmuch as this is a late enactment of the legislature and those having different views of the construction which should be placed upon the same, relative to the above matter, have urged their views with more than ordinary diligence, I feel that I should give very careful consideration to this question.

Before considering the act as a whole, I will note the exact language used in section 9607-2 G. C., contained in said act, which is as follows:

" * * * A mutual or a stock insurance company may transact only the first kind of insurance, or may transact such as it may elect of the other kinds of insurance * * * (set out in said section)."

In construing this provision, the first thing to which I desire to call attention is the word "only," found in said provision. It is stated that a mutual company may transact only the first kind of insurance. This word is an emphatic one and places emphasis upon the theory that the company is limited strictly to the first kind of insurance, in so far as the first part of the alternative proposition is concerned. When we come to the second part of this alternative proposition, the word "only" is not found, which would seem to indicate that the idea of one kind of insurance is dropped from the latter part of the alternative proposition. If the second part of the proposition were intended by the legislature to have the same construction as would be placed upon the first, then it seems to me the legislature would have provided as follows in the latter part:

"or may transact only one of the other kinds of insurance as it may elect."

There is another word to which I desire to call particular attention, viz., "such" This is an adjective and as it stands in the sentence is an adjective used as a noun. In order to make this sentence complete, we will supply the noun following "such," which would be either the word "kind" or "kinds." If the word "kind" is supplied' then the company would be limited to one of the other kinds of insurance mentioned in the section; but if "kinds" is supplied, it could elect to transact any or all of the other kinds of insurance therein set out.

Which is the correct word in connection with "such," is the question. It is to be noted that "such" always modifies a plural noun, unless it be followed by "a" or "an," in which case it modifies a singular noun. Especially is this the case when the noun which "such" modifies is followed by the pronoun "as;" for example:

You may select such animals as you desire;
You may select such an animal as you desire; or
You may purchase such machines as I select;
You may purchase such a machine as I select; or Such guides as you have chosen will get you nowhere;
Such a guide as you have chosen will get you nowhere.

The rule above set forth, relative to the use of the word "such" is universally true, in the correct use of the language, unless "such" is preceded by an indefinite adjective, such as "all," "some," "few," "many," etc., which is not the case in the language before us.

It seems to me that it is only fair to assume that the legislature intended to use "such" in the same connection in which it is ordinarily used in correct language, and that the noun to be supplied is "kinds" and not "kind." If this be true, the company could elect, as stated before, to transact any or all of the kinds of insurance, other than the first, set out in said section.

However, we are not left entirely to the construction to be placed upon the above mentioned sentence, in order to reach a conclusion as to what the legislature had in mind in the enactment of this law, for in section 9607-5 G. C., contained in said act (107 O. L. 648), we find the following provision:

"No such domestic company shall issue policies or effect insurance until the superintendent of insurance has, by his license, authorized it to do so * * * ."

Then immediately follows this provision:

"nor shall such license be issued or renewed unless the company shall comply, as to each kind of insurance which it shall effect, with the following conditions: * * * ."

The language to which I desire to call attention is the italicised part of the quotation. The words "as to each kind of insurance which it shall effect" would be meaningless, and indeed would be absurd, in the statute, if we were to place such a construction upon the language used in section 9607-2 that the company could transact only the first kind of insurance or might transact only any one of the other kinds therein set out, because if the company under any event could transact only one kind of insurance, what would be the use in providing in section 9607-5 that the company must comply with the conditions set out in said section, as to each kind of insurance which it shall effect? It seems to me that the language used in this section drives one almost irresistibly to the conclusion that a company may engage in more than one of the kinds of insurance named in section 9607-2, provided it does not elect to transact the first therein mentioned.

Along the same line, I desire to call attention to language used in the first condition set out in section 9607-5 G. C., with which each company must comply before a license can be issued to it by the superintendent of insurance. This condition reads as follows:

> "1. It shall hold bona fide applications for insurance upon which it shall issue simultaneously, or it shall have in force, at least twenty policies to at least twenty members for the same kind of insurance upon not less than one hundred separate risks, each within the maximum single risk described herein."

There are two separate and distinct propositions set out in this condition. The one is "it (the company) shall hold bona fide applications for insurance upon which it shall issue simultaneously" "upon not less than one hundred separate risks, each within the maximum single risk described therein." The other proposition is "or it (the company) shall have in force at least twenty policies to at least twenty members for the same kind of insurance."

What is the significance of the phrase "for the same kind of insurance?" As said in reference to the other language above quoted, if we should place such a construction upon section 9607-2 that the company could not transact more than one kind of business, if it elected not to transact the first kind, then the phrase "for the same kind of insurance" would be meaningless and indeed absurd. This language also tends so strongly to the conclusion that the legislature intended that the company might engage in more than one of the other kinds of business set out in subsection 2, that I feel no hesitancy in arriving at such a conclusion and placing such a construction upon the language therein used.

There is one provision in section 9607-5 that might be construed to indicate the intention of the legislature to have been that a mutual company should be limited to the first kind of business or to only one of the other kinds of insurance as it might elect, as mentioned in section 9607-2. This language is found in the third condition therein set out, which reads as follows:

> "3. It shall have collected a premium upon each application, which premium shall be held in cash or securities in which insurance companies are authorized to invest and shall be equal, in case of fire insurance to not less than twice the maximum single risk assumed subject to one fire nor less than ten thousand dollars, and in any other kind of insurance to not less than five times the maximum single risk assumed."

The language to which I call especial attention is:

> "* * * and in any other kind of insurance to not less than five times the maximum single risk assumed."

That is, in case of fire insurance, the company must hold in cash or securities not less than twice the maximum single risk assumed subject to one fire nor less than ten thousand dollars, and in any other kind of insurance the company must hold in cash or securities not less than five times the maximum single risk assumed. "Any other kind of insurance," as used therein, might be construed to indicate that the company could engage in only some one kind of insurance other than fire; but in view of the plain language of the other parts of the act, I do not feel that such a construction should be placed upon said clause. This clause evidently provides that if a company engages in more than one kind of business, other than fire, then it must hold in cash or securities an amount sufficient to be at least equal to five times the maximum single risk in all the kinds of insurance which the company elects to transact. This places a reasonable construction upon said clause and at the same time gives the rest of the statute its full and natural meaning.

While for the purposes of this opinion I am not construing the third condition set out in section 9607-5 G. C., yet it is my view the above is a correct construction to be placed thereon, and, to say the very least, this language ought not to be so construed that it will defeat the plain language of the other parts of the act.

Hence it is my opinion that the articles of incorporation submitted to you by The Great American Mutual Indemnity Company are in every respect in conformity to law, and I am, therefore, placing my approval upon the same, in accordance with the provisions of said act.

In passing I desire to say that in this opinion I am not considering a domestic stock insurance company, but simply a domestic mutual insurance company. I am not passing upon the question as to whether the provisions of the law, found in 107 O. L. 647, would permit a domestic stock insurance company to insure in more than one of the kinds of insurance enumerated in section 9510 G. C. This opinion is limited strictly to the question of the legality of the articles of incorporation of The Great American Mutual Indemnity Company.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—TERM OF PERSON APPOINTED BY TRUSTEES TO FILL VACANCY.

A person appointed by the trustees to fill a vacancy in the office of justice of the peace in May, 1917, will serve until his successor is elected and qualified and until the term for which such successor is to commence. Such successor was properly chosen at the November election, 1917, and will be entitled to a commission for four years, beginning on the 1st day of January, 1918.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 26, 1917.

HON. W. D. FULTON, State Supervisor of Elections, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 10, 1917, I received a communication from Robert H. Zehring, attorney-at-law, Miamisburg, involving the question of the term of office of a justice of the peace elected at the November election. I am addressing an opinion thereon to you and a copy will be sent to Mr. Zehring. His communication reads as follows:

"In May of the current year, the trustees of Miami township appointed the undersigned as justice of the peace to fill the unexpired term of Wm.

Hughes. Mr. Hughes' term expired January 1, 1920. Later it was learned but too late to get a name on the judicial ballot, that the appointment was legal only until the next regular election, which took place a few days ago.

At this election, I had my name written in on the judicial ballot and was elected to the office.

QUESTION: Is my election to the office of justice of the peace for the balance of the unexpired term of Mr. Hughes, towit, to January 1, 1920, or is such election for the term of four years, the statutory term of justice of the peace?"

The appointment to fill the unexpired term of the justice of the peace who had vacated was made under the authority of section 1714 G. C., which reads as follows:

"If a vacancy occurs in the office of justice of the peace by death, removal, absence for six months, resignation, refusal to serve, or otherwise, the trustees within ten days from receiving notice thereof, by a majority vote, shall appoint a qualified resident of the township to fill such vacancy, who shall serve until the next regular election for justice of the peace, and until his successor is elected and qualified. The trustees shall notify the clerk of the courts of such vacancy and the date when it occurred."

It will be noted that such appointee is to fill such vacancy and "shall serve until the next regular election for justice of the peace, and until his successor is elected and qualified." It was therefore proper to have elected a justice of the peace at the November election, to succeed said appointee.

Section 1715 G. C. provides:

"At the next regular election for such office, a justice of the peace shall be elected in the manner provided by law, for the term of four years commencing on the first day of January next following his election."

So the term of the justice of the peace elected at the November election would be for four years, commencing on the 1st day of January next.

In the communication it is said that Mr. Zehring's name was written in on the judicial ballot and that he was elected to the office. There having been no nominations made for this office, it was proper, under section 5071 G. C., for the elector desiring to vote for some one to fill such office, to do so by writing in the name of the person for whom he desired to vote.

Answering the question specifically, then, it is my opinion that the person receiving the highest number of votes for the office of justice of peace on the judicial ballot of said Miami township was elected for the term of four years beginning January 1, 1918; but there could not be an election for the balance of the unexpired term of Mr. Hughes; and that the appointee, having been appointed to the office to serve until the next regular election for justice of the peace and until his successor is elected and qualified, would serve under such appointment until the date at which the term of the successor would commence under the law, towit, January 1st, 1918.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

"TO PROSECUTE" AS USED IN SECTION 13440 G. C. DEFINED—ATTORNEY EMPLOYED BY HUMANE SOCIETY—WHEN ENTITLED TO FEES.

1. The words "to prosecute" as used in section 13440 G. C. embody all the means adopted to bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due course of law, beginning with the affidavit or charge filed against him and ending with the acquittal or conviction of the supposed offender.

2. An attorney employed by the humane society would be entitled to fees for services rendered in matters relating to the progress of the prosecution, beginning with the affidavit or charge and ending with the acquittal or conviction of the accused.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of November 16, 1917, in which you submit the following inquiries:

> "What is meant by the words 'To prosecute,' as used in section 13440, General Code, and what is an attorney required to do in order to be entitled to his fees under the provisions of this section?"

Section 13440 G. C. about which you inquire, provides:

> "A humane society or its agent may employ an attorney to prosecute the following cases, under this section, who shall be paid for his services out of the county treasury in such sum as the judge of the court of common pleas or the probate judge of such county or the county commissioners thereof may approve as just and reasonable:
> 1. Violations of law relating to the prevention of cruelty to animals or children;
> 2. Violations of law relating to the abandonment, non-support or ill-treatment of a child by its parent;
> 3. Violations of law relating to the employment of a child under fourteen years of age in public exhibitions or vocations injurious to health, life or morals or which cause or permit such child to suffer unnecessary physical or mental pain;
> 4. Violations of law relating to neglect or refusal of adult to support destitute parent."

Your communication involves two different questions, viz., (1) what is the meaning of the word "prosecute," and (2) what is an attorney required to do in order to be entitled to his fees under section 13440?

In arriving at an understanding as to the meaning of the word "prosecute," it might be well for us to follow the definition laid down by lexicographers and our courts. Bouvier gives the following definition of the word:

> "The means adopted to bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due course of law."

In State v. Williams, 34 La. Ann. 1198, the court had under consideration the term "prosecution" and used the following language in reference thereto:

"As soon as the affidavit or charge against an accused and other proceedings had in the case before the committing magistrate are forwarded to the proper criminal court, the prosecution must be construed as having been instituted in the latter court."

In the opinion on p. 1199, the court used this language:

"Under our system of criminal law a prosecution has several phases or steps of proceeding: The first being usually an affidavit or charge; next a warrant of arrest, and so on through the hands of the committing magistrate, whose committal transfers the prosecution to the proper criminal court, where it undergoes the other phases of presentment, arraignment, trial and conviction or acquittal. * * * The inception of the prosecution before the criminal court dates from the day that the affidavit and other proceedings coming from the committing magistrate are filed or returned into the criminal court. * * * If the proceedings had before the committing magistrate are not a 'prosecution' in the legal sense, where would be the authority for detaining the accused in legal custody, or what would be the legal value of the bond furnished by the accused for his appearance before the criminal court? It is elementary, in our jurisprudence, that such proceedings are the basis and primary inception of the prosecution."

In Kemper v. State, 138 S. W. 1025, we find the following in the head notes quoted from Words and Phrases:

"A 'criminal prosecution' is the mode of formally accusing offenders or the means adopted to bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due course of law."

While it must always be borne in mind that the court, in placing an interpretation upon a word or words, does so in the light of the statute in which the particular words are used, yet it is my opinion that the above definitions and holdings would apply to the words "to prosecute" as used in section 13440. From the above the following definition might be framed: The term "prosecution" involves all the means adopted to bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due course of law, beginning with the filing of an affidavit or charge before the proper magistrate, and ending with the conviction or acquittal of the supposed offender, either before the proper magistrate or in the court to which he may have been bound over by a committing magistrate.

It will be well for us to also notice that the language used in section 13440 G. C is "to prosecute the following cases." The legislature evidently had in mind that the matter for which the attorney should be employed would be relative to cases pending in some court having jurisdiction over the matter set out in section 13440 G. C. Of course a case could not be pending in the court until some kind of a writing was filed therein, as an affidavit. This simply strengthens the idea that the words "to prosecute" would begin with the filing of an affidavit before the proper magistrate.

Your second question relates to what an attorney would be required to do in order to entitle him to fees under the provisions of said section.

Inasmuch as the prosecution of a supposed offender begins with the filing of an affidavit or a charge against him and ends with the conviction or acquittal of the person charged, an attorney employed by the humane society would be entitled to fees for services rendered in the progress of the prosecution. In other words, it would not be essential that the attorney employed should carry the prosecution through from the beginning of the same to an acquittal or a conviction, but if he rendered services, after having been employed by the humane society, relative to a prosecution as defined above, he would be entitled to such fees as might be allowed him by a judge of the court of common pleas or the probate court of the county, or the county commissioners of the same. To be sure, the amount of the fees which should be allowed would depend entirely upon the amount of work performed by the attorney so employed by the humane society. But in accordance with the construction herein placed upon the words "to prosecute," their being used in connection with the word "cases," it is my opinion that an attorney would not be entitled to be paid for services rendered, unless it should be relative to cases pending before the court of competent jurisdiction.

To be sure, if an affidavit were filed and a case thus begun in a court, the court or the county commissioners might, in fixing the amount that should be paid for services rendered, take into consideration the fact that the attorney gave legal advice and assisted in the preparation of the affidavit. The attorney employed would also be entitled to fees in the prosecution of any error proceedings that might arise in the progress of the case.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—BEXLEY VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Bexley village school district in the sum of $5,000, for the purpose of purchasing lands for play ground purposes.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Bexley village school district relating to the above bond issue and find said proceedings to be in conformity with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to bond form submitted, will, when they are properly signed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—MAY NOT PAY CONTRACTORS THE RETAINED 15% BEFORE COMPLETION OF CONTRACT.

The state highway commissioner would not be warranted in law in paying the retained fifteen per cent. to contractors before the completion of the contracts merely because the federal government has issued an order prohibiting the use of open cars in the shipment of road material.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of November 21, 1917, in which you make the following request for opinion:

> "Several requests have come in from contractors, asking for payment of a part or all of the retained 15% required under the law on contracts in force and operating.
> In every instance these contractors have been stopped from work on account of Priority Order No. 2 of the federal government, denying the use of open top cars for shipments of road materials, and they present the argument that the public is depriving them of the proper handling of their contracts, and, therefore, they are entitled to consideration as an emergency. We are, therefore, requesting your opinion as to whether or not we may legally offer any relief to contractors who are requesting the release by this department of a part or all of the 15% we are retaining on contracts in force."

We will first note the provisions of our statutes relative to the payment of the cost and expense of the construction of an inter-county highway or main market road.

Section 1212 G. C. (107 O. L. 127) reads in part as follows:

> " * * * The payment of the cost of the construction of such improvement shall be made as the work progresses upon estimates made by the engineer in charge of such improvement, and upon approval of the state highway commissioner. Except as hereinafter provided no payment by the state, county or township, on account of a contract for any improvement under this chapter shall before the completion of said contract exceed eighty-five per cent. of the value of the work performed to the date of such payment, and except as hereinafter provided, fifteen per cent. of the value of the work performed shall be held until the final completion of the contract in accordance with the plans and specifications. In addition to the above payments on account of work performed, the state highway commissioner may also, if he deems it proper, allow and pay to a contractor a sum not exceeding eighty-five per cent. of the value of the material delivered on the site of the work but not yet incorporated therein, provided such material has been inspected and found to meet the specifications. When an estimate is allowed on account of material delivered on the site of the work but not yet incorporated therein, such material shall thereupon become the property of the state; but in case such material is stolen or destroyed or damaged by casualty before being used, or for any reason becomes unfit for use, the contractor will be required to replace the same at his own expense. * * * ."

Under this section payment is made, as the work progresses, upon estimates made by the engineer, but no payment shall exceed 85 per cent. of the value of the work performed to the date of such payment, before the completion of the contract, and 15 per cent. of the value of the work performed shall be held until the final completion of the contract, in accordance with the plans and specifications.

You inquire whether you could under the law pay to contractors all or any part of this retained 15 per cent. before the completion of their contracts. You state that the reason contractors are asking that this be done is that the federal government has, through an order issued, forbidden the use of open cars upon all railroads for the delivery of road material, which radically interferes with the progress of the work under contract and works a hardship upon contractors, in that they do not have the use of the money retained for a long period of time.

There is no provision of law which would permit the payment of more than 85 per cent. of the value of the work done from time to time, up until the final completion of the contract, when the retained 15 per cent. shall be paid. There is no stipulation or condition set forth in the contract itself which would warrant the state highway commissioner in paying this retained 15 per cent. before the contract is fully completed. The provisions of the statute are practically read into the contract and such a provision could not legally be placed therein. So if there is any warrant in law for the state highway commissioner's paying this retained 15 per cent. before the contract is fully completed, it must be found elsewhere than in the contract or in the statute.

The contractors undoubtedly have in mind a principle which is well established in the common law, viz., that either party to a contract may be relieved from its conditions and obligations when the government makes it impossible for either or both of the parties thereto to comply with its obligations. I shall therefore note this principle of law in its application to the facts contained in your communication.

In 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 415, in a note, the following proposition is laid down:

> "The authorities are almost unanimous in holding that, where the act contracted for is rendered unlawful by the enactment of a statute before the expiration of the time for performance, the obligation is thereby discharged."

This proposition is undoubtedly sound, and another proposition as equally sound is to the effect that whenever the government renders it impossible to perform the obligations of a contract, the one entering into it is discharged from the performance of the obligations of the same. But the proposition is equally clear and is correctly stated in L. R. A. 1916, F. p. 66, as follows:

> "It should be observed, however, that the rule that non-performance is excused if after the making of the contract, by reason of the change in the law, performance becomes impossible, does not apply where performance is thereby not made impossible but only more difficult."

It must be remembered, however, that in the cases submitted by you the order of the federal government has not in any sense made the contracts entered into illegal; neither has said order made the performance of the contracts impossible. The performance of the contracts may be impossible for an indefinite period only, but they are not rendered wholly impossible of performance.

In Baylies v. Fettyplace, 7 Mass. 325, the court say:

> "The laws of the United States laying an embargo for an unlimited time, and afterwards repealed, did not extinguish a promise to deliver debentures, but operated a suspension only during the continuance of those laws."

On p. 331 in the opinion the court say:

"An embargo, considered as a temporary suspension of commerce, does not operate a dissolution of any mercantile contract. If the embargo enacted by congress in 1807 was to be considered a perpetual prohibition of congress, as for a time it was apprehended to be, I am not satisfied that the defendants would have been, in that event, entirely discharged from their promise. It is true, the law will not compel impossibilities. * * * It may be further observed, that in the case at bar there was nothing unlawful in the contract itself originally; nor was it made unlawful by the embargo."

In Baker et al. v. Johnson, 42 N. Y. 126, the court say:

"In an action to recover damages against the defendants, they having refused to perform the contract. HELD: That performance had not been rendered impossible by the act of the law, and the defendants were not excused.

The fact that performance of the contract is rendered more burdensome and expensive, by a law enacted after it is entered into, has never been held to even exonerate a party from its obligations."

In Hadley v. Clarke et al., 8 T. R. 259, the court say:

"The defendants contracted to carry the plaintiff's goods from Liverpool to Leghorn. On the vessel's arriving at Falmouth in the course of her voyage, an embargo was laid on her 'until the further Order of Council'; HELD: That such embargo only suspended, but did not dissolve, the contract between the parties; and that even after two years, when the embargo was taken off, the defendants were answerable to the plaintiff in damages for the non-performance of their contract."

On p. 263 in the opinion, the court say:

"Therefore, admitting it to be as imperative on the parties as an act of parliament, yet it is not like a general unlimited prohibition, making that unlawful which was before lawful, but at most operated as a suspension only, and not as a dissolution, of the contract. * * * It is true that in a case like this hardships may arise to both parties from the long continuance of an embargo; but when it is considered that it must be known to them at the time of entering into the contract, that an embargo may lawfully be laid in time of war, they must be taken to have made their contract subject to the operation of the law, in that respect."

I am aware that the cases above cited relate to the entire discharge of a party from the obligations of the contract, but the principle is exactly the same in the matter submitted by you, in that the contractors are asking that certain conditions and obligations of the contracts and the law be modified, due to an act of the federal government.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that you would not be warranted in law in paying to contractors the retained 15 per cent. before the completion of the contracts, merely because the federal government has issued an order prohibiting, for the present, the use of open cars for the shipment of road materials.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COMMON PLEAS JUDGE—ELECTION—CONSTRUCTION OF SECTION 1532 AS AMENDED 107 O. L., 164.

The provision of section 1532 G. C., as amended 107 O. L., 164, fixing the dates for holding "the next election" for common pleas judge in the several counties is not to be interpreted as prohibiting an election in any county at a date other than therein fixed if required under Article IV, section 13 of the constitution to fill a vacancy for the remainder of the unexpired term of a common pleas judge.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1917.

HON. EMMET L. SAVAGE, Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, Paulding, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have previously acknowledged receipt of your letter of November 6th requesting my opinion upon the following question which I quote from your letter:

> "At the general election in the fall of 1914, Hon. John S. Snook was elected common pleas judge for this county, for a term of six years, beginning January 1, 1915, as then provided under section 1532 G. C., Page and Adams Supplement; and was duly qualified and entered upon his duties.
> At the general election in November, 1916, said Snook was elected to congress from the fifth district, and in order to accept his new office, he resigned as such common pleas judge on February 19, 1917.
> On the day of his resignation I was appointed by Governor Cox to fill the vacancy thus caused, to serve until my successor was duly elected and qualified. And I have been serving since said date.
> After my appointment and qualification by an act passed March 21, 1917, and approved March 29, 1917, 107 Ohio Laws 164, the legislature repealed said section 1532 G. C. and enacted another section which has been given the same number, providing additional qualifications for common pleas judges.

and providing that the times for the next election of a common pleas judge and for the beginning of his term, 'shall be as follows: In Paulding county, in 1920, one judge, term to begin January 1, 1921.'

Will it be necessary that a common pleas judge be elected in and for Paulding county at the general election in the fall of 1918, or will my appointment of February 19, 1917, continue me in said office until January 1, 1921?"

The act of 1917 to which you refer, section 1532 G. C., was last previously amended in 1914, 104 O. L., 243, and was enacted in its present general form 103 O. L. 673. The purpose of this section as enacted in 1913 and amended in 1914 was to adjust the common pleas judgeships in the state to the requirements of the amendment of article IV, section 3 of the constitution requiring one resident judge of the court of common pleas, and such additional resident judge or judges as may be provided by law, to be elected in each county of the state by the electors of such county, and the schedule thereof. It fixed the times for the "next election of common pleas judges in the several counties and for the beginning of their terms" at dates ranging from 1914 to 1918, inclusive, in the even numbered years, and provided for Paulding county that one judge should be elected therein in 1914, whose term was to begin January 1, 1915. This is the term for which your predecessor was elected.

As you say, section 1532 was amended in 1917 primarily for the purpose of providing additional qualifications for the position of common pleas judge. In making this amendment the legislature might well have repealed the entire schedule showing when the "next election" should be had in the several counties because that part of the section, as I have pointed out, was merely the legislation necessary to carry into effect the change in the constitution, and was in truth in the nature of a schedule and was a completely executed law when the legislature acted in 1917. Article IV, section 12, as amended September 3, 1912, provides for a term of office of six years, and section 13 of the same article provides as follows:

"In case the office of any judge shall become vacant, before the expiration of the regular term for which he was elected, the vacancy shall be filled by appointment by the governor, until a successor is elected and qualified; and such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term, at the first annual election that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have happened."

So that having fixed the starting point for the election of the various county common pleas judges by the legislation of 1913, and the amendment of 1914, any further legislation fixing the time of subsequent elections was wholly unnecessary. Indeed, any legislation fixing the time of elections so as to disturb the succession of terms fixed by the constitution would be beyond the power of the legislature and therefore unconstitutional. So far as Paulding county is concerned the amendment of 1917 but declares the constitutional rule; but if it did not, it would have to yield to the constitution; so that given an initial election in Paulding county in 1914, the term then started would have to last until January 1, 1921, any attempted amendment of the statute by the legislature to the contrary notwithstanding.

Instead, however, of letting the constitution execute itself as it does, the legislature conceived that it was necessary in amending section 1532 to move some of the dates previously fixed therein six years forward, so that the statute might speak from the date of its enactment and so speaking fix the "next election" in each county. As stated, this was wholly unnecessary and in point of fact might be regarded as a mere nullity save in so far as it declares what would otherwise be the law.

Nothing, however, can be predicated of this legislation other than the intention to fix the date for holding what might be termed an election to fill the next succeeding term. This I believe to have been the legislative intention. I do not think that section 1532 fairly interpreted is open to a construction that would forbid the holding of any election for common pleas judge in Paulding county before the fall of 1920. This is because, as I see it, the legislature was considering merely the normal course of events and did not have in mind the possibility of filling vacancies.

But even if we regard section 1532 as an attempt upon the part of the legislature to make it impossible to hold an election for the office of common pleas judge in Paulding county before the fall of 1920, or in any other county therein named before any of the dates therein mentioned excepting the fall of 1918, the same result is reached; for in my opinion the legislature was without power to make it impossible to hold an election for common pleas judge in a given county until a stated date if in accordance with the constitutional provision applicable thereto it should become necessary to fill a vacancy in any judgeship prior to the date so fixed. I have quoted article IV, section 13. In connection with this section of the constitution article XVII, section 1 must be considered. By this article it is provided generally that elections for state and county officers shall be held in even numbered years. In my opinion the effect of the seventeenth amendment to the constitution is to make it impossible to hold an election for common pleas judge other than in an even numbered year. Hence, the word "annual" in section 13 of article IV is now to be read "biennial" in accordance with the controlling purpose of article XVII which is to separate elections of state and county officers including common pleas judges on one hand from municipal, township and school officers on the other hand.

With this implied amendment, however, section 13 of article IV remains in force and is perfectly self-executing. It has the effect in my opinion of making mandatory the holding of an election in an even numbered year to fill a vacancy occurring more than thirty days prior thereto in the office of common pleas judge in any county. Should the legislature attempt to make it impossible to do this by the simple expedient of declaring that the "next election" for common pleas judge in a given county shall be held at a date later than that which under the facts in a particular case would be the date required by the constitution for the election to fill a vacancy, the conflict between the legislative will and the will of the people would be plain; for the only reasoning upon which the impossibility of filling the vacancy at the time suggested by the constitution could be based would be that the act of the legislature in effect prohibited any election at a date earlier than that named by it. We would have it then that the legislature would have attempted to prohibit the doing of a thing which the constitution had commanded. Reduced to these terms the problem solves itself.

There is still another reason, however, for the result at which I have arrived. Section 1532, save in that paragraph thereof now completely executed and obsolete in which provision is made for the filling of a vacancy occurring in the office of any judge of the court of common pleas, in office or elected thereto prior to January 1, 1913, and which was intended to provide for a particular class of cases which can never again arise, does not deal with the filling of vacancies at all. Indeed, the chapter providing for the election and qualification, etc., of common pleas judges is silent respecting the matter of filling vacancies. Section 10 of the General Code makes a general provision for filling vacancies in cases not otherwise provided for. This section, however, does not apply to the present case because article IV, section 13 is self-executing and affords complete machinery for filling such vacancies. But whether the case be regarded as covered by section 10 of the General Code or by section 13 of article IV of the constitution, or by both, it is clear that it is not covered nor was it intended to be covered by section 1532 of the General Code. In other words, aside from the one particular which has been mentioned section 1532 is not to be regarded as dealing in any way with the filling of vacancies. Therefore if we find that a provision for the filling of vacancies apparently conflicts with section 1532, we must regard such provision as stating the exception and section 1532 as embodying the general rule. This is an application of a familiar principle. Of course, in the present instance, as I have pointed out, even a square conflict between article IV, section 13, and section 1532 of the General Code would have to be resolved in favor of the constitutional provision instead of the statute.

For all these reasons, then, I conclude that under the executive appointment referred to by you, you may hold until your successor is elected and qualified; and that his election must take place in November, 1918. Of course when elected and qualified such successor will hold by virtue thereof only until January 1, 1921, at which time his successor, elected in November, 1920, will take office with a term extending to January 1, 1927.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PERSONS ENGAGED IN BUSINESS OF TAKING DEPOSITS FOR TRANSMISSION TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES, ETC.—WHEN BOND IS GIVEN—MAY ESTABLISH BRANCH OFFICES—LIABILITY OF SURETY ON BOND FOR DEFAULTS OCCURRING AT BRANCH OFFICE.

When a bond is given by a person engaged in the business of taking deposits for transmission to foreign countries and in selling transportation to and from foreign countries he may establish offices in as many places as he desires.

Surety on such bond is liable for defaults occurring at a branch office established after bond was given.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 28, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of recent date wherein you ask my opinion as follows:

> "On July 25, 1911, Max Levin, then doing the business of selling steamship and railroad tickets for transportation to and from foreign countries at No. 3336 Woodland Avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, furnished a bond in the sum of $5,000.00 as required by section 291 G. C. Thereafter he opened up a second place of business in the city of Cleveland. He now advises us that his office at No. 3336 Woodland avenue has been closed and he desires to open up a branch office in the city of Akron and makes application for an additional certificate permitting him to do business at that place.
> The law under which these certificates are issued is so vague that we are undecided as to our powers in the matter, i. e., whether the bond given at the time he was doing business in Cleveland could be enforced against him and his sureties for transactions occurring at a branch office in Summit county.
> We desire an opinion from you advising us whether we may issue this further certificate to him authorizing him to do business in Akron without furnishing an additional $5,000.00 bond.
> For your information we hereto attach the form of bond and certificate now in use."

The provisions of the General Code relating to your inquiry are as follows:

"Section 290. No person, firm or corporation shall engage in selling steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, or in the business of receiving deposits of money for the purpose of transmitting the same, or the equivalent thereof, to foreign countries, until it has obtained from the auditor of state a certificate of compliance with the provisions of the two sections next following. The certificate shall be conspicuously displayed in the place of business of such person, firm or corporation."

"Section 291. Such person, firm or corporation shall make, execute and deliver a bond to the state of Ohio in the sum of five thousand dollars, conditioned for the faithful holding and transmission of any money, or the equivalent thereof, delivered to it for transmission to a foreign country, or conditioned for the selling of genuine and valid steamship or railroad tickets for transportation to or from foreign countries, or both if to be engaged in both of such businesses,"

"Section 292. The bond shall be executed by such person, firm or corporation as principal, with at least two good and sufficient sureties, who shall be responsible and owners of real estate within the state. The bond of a surety company may be received, if approved, or cash may be accepted in place of surety. The bond shall be approved by the auditor of state, and filed in his office. Upon the relation of any party aggrieved, a suit to recover on such bond may be brought in a court of competent jurisdiction."

"Section 293. The auditor of state shall keep a book to be known as a 'bond book' wherein he shall place in alphabetical order all such bonds received by him, the date of receipt, the name or names of the principals and place or places of residence, and place or places for transacting their business, the names of the surety upon the bond, and the name of the officer before whom the bond was executed or acknowledged. Such record shall be open to public inspection. The auditor of state shall collect a fee of five dollars for each bond so filed."

Under the above quoted sections of the General Code a person, firm or corporation desiring to engage in the business of taking deposits for transmission to foreign countries or selling transportation to or from foreign countries must give a bond. Thereupon the auditor of state may issue a certificate to such person, firm or corporation showing that he or it has complied with the law governing such business. These sections of the General Code do not limit a person, firm or corporation, so engaged, to transact such business at one particular place, but rather the opposite. Section 293 contemplates that such person, firm or corporation may engage in such business in more than one place. This section provides that "the auditor shall keep a book to be known as a 'bond book' wherein he shall place" the "place or places for transacting their business."

Section 291 provides that such person "shall make, execute and deliver a bond to the state of Ohio in the sum of five thousand dollars."

Section 293, as above pointed out, contemplates that persons may engage in business in more places than one, and if it had been the intention of the legislature to compel a person transacting such business to give a bond for each place where he conducts such business it would have specifically provided for the same. This was not done. The legislature simply said that a person desiring to engage in such business must give a bond.

I am therefore of the opinion that when a person desiring to engage in this business gives a bond to the auditor of state in the sum of five thousand dollars he is complying with the law and may engage in said business in as many places within the state as he desires.

In coming to this conclusion I am not unmindful of an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, found in Vol. I, page 143, Reports of the Attorney-General for 1913, wherein he holds:

> "The statute does not require a separate bond for each place of business run by the principal. It does require that the 'certificate shall be conspicuously displayed in the place of business of such person, firm or corporation.'
> One bond could be made to cover two places of business, but if in the opinion of the auditor of state a bond of five thousand dollars is not sufficient to secure the public, where a person is running two or more places of business, he could require a bond for each place of business or require a larger single bond. The auditor is not required to issue more than one certificate upon one bond, but he may do so."

I agree with the opinion of Mr. Hogan wherein he holds that the law does not require a separate bond for each place of business run by the principal, but can find no authority in law to warrant his holding that the auditor of state, if he deems it necessary, may require a larger bond than five thousand dollars. The statute provides that such person, etc., shall give bond in the sum of five thousand dollars and does not give the auditor any discretion in the matter of fixing the amount of the bond. Therefore, I must disagree with the latter part of Mr. Hogan's opinion above quoted.

Having arrived at the conclusion that upon the execution and delivery of a bond to the state of Ohio in the sum of five thousand dollars a person, firm or corporation is entitled to transact business in two or more places, it will be necessary here to examine the bond form submitted by you to determine whether or not the surety thereon will be liable for transactions occurring at a place subsequently opened by the principal.

It is a well recognized principle of law that the liability of a surety is never to be extended beyond the strict letter of his obligation. The blank form submitted by you is as follows:

"BOND

Although the above bond form has a space for the name of the principal's place of business (and I presume in the bond furnished by Mr. Levin he has named 3336 Woodland avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, as his place of business), the condition of the bond makes no mention of the place where the principal is to transact his business and does not limit his business to any particular place. The statement at the beginning of the bond that the principal is engaged in business at a certain place has no effect whatever on the condition in said bond. It is merely descriptive of the person for whom the surety is signing.

In the case of Kellogg, et al. v. Farquhar, et al., 8 N. Y. Supp., 208, the defendant became surety for an agent who engaged to sell goods for plaintiff. The bond recited that the agent was to sell goods in the territory of New York and Brooklyn. A letter from the principal to plaintiff, enclosing the bond, stated that the latter was to sell no goods that would conflict with the principal's trade in New York and Brooklyn or Jersey City, or in competition with him, and the principal agreed to handle no other goods but plaintiff's. Held: "There is nothing in the agreement which restricted the sales made by Farquhar to any locality whatever. In the absence of a positive restriction thereon the surety is not in any position to interpose the objection now, that his obligation was not to answer generally for the failure of Farquhar to pay for the several shipments at ninety days."

Applying the rules of law laid down in the above case to the facts presented in your inquiry I am led to the conclusion that the surety on the bond furnished by Mr. Levin to the state of Ohio is liable for any default of the principal occurring at any place of business he may see fit to establish within this state. The bond in this case, as in the case above cited, does not limit the business to any particular place. Therefore the surety on this bond is liable generally for any default of the principal.

The case of Helt v. Whittier, 31 O. S. 475, although not exactly in point on the proposition here submitted, lays down a rule which I think can well be applied to this case. The court therein held:

> "Suit may be maintained against a surety, when his liability is shown to be within the terms of his agreement; and the contract must be construed in connection with the statutes, if any, relating to the same matter."

The statutes applicable to the subject matter here, as above pointed out, give the principal the right, upon furnishing a bond, to engage in said business at as many places as he may see fit. Therefore, construing the contract of suretyship in the present case in connection with the above statutes, according to the rule laid down in the case just quoted we must come to the conclusion that the contract was made to cover any default of the principal occurring while engaged in such business within this state regardless of the place where the default occurs.

Therefore, answering your question specifically, I advise you that there is no authority in law by which you may require Mr. Levin to furnish an additional bond of five thousand dollars to establish a branch office in another city and that the bond given at the time he was doing business in the city of Cleveland can be enforced against him and his sureties for any default occurring in the transaction of his business in another county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—SALE OF STATE LANDS—IN CLEVELAND TO C. H. GALE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 30, 1917.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of November 24, 1917, in which you enclose a record of proceedings leading up to the sale of certain state lands located in the city of Cleveland, Ohio, to C. H. Gale, for the sum of $4,320.00.

The proceedings relative to the sale and the sale of said lands to C. H. Gale are made under and by virtue of a special act of the general assembly found in 107 O. L. 620. This act gives the superintendent of public works the authority to sell the lands set out in the record of proceedings, to C. H. Gale, at private sale, at the appraised value thereof, and in fixing the appraised value the fact that it is now encumbered by a lease to C. H. Gale is not to be taken into consideration.

I have carefully examined said record of proceedings which lead up to the sale of this property and find the same correct in form and in conformity to the provisions of said act. I note that you have appraised the same at $4,320.00, which sum is satisfactory to me. I have therefore endorsed my approval upon the said proceedings and am forwarding the same to the Governor of Ohio for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONSTABLE, ETC.—POLICE CHIEF, ETC.—FEES—STATE CASES BEFORE MAYOR, ETC.

A constable, chief of police, marshal or other court officer is entitled to the same fees for services in pursuing or arresting a defendant, and in subpoenaing the witnesses in those state cases enumerated in section 13423 brought before the justice of the peace, police judge or mayor, as the sheriff receives in criminal cases in the court of common pleas.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of November 14, 1917, as follows:

"On September 19, 1917, this department issued circular No. 347, calling attention to the decision of Middleton, Walters and Sayre, judges of the fourth district, sitting by designation, in the place of Grant, Carpenter and Leighley, judges of the eighth district, in the case of Edmund B. Haserodt, Clerk of Court of Common Pleas, etc., et al., Plaintiff in Error, v. The State of Ohio, ex rel., E. R. Wilson, City Solicitor, etc., Defendants in Error, in which the court held that because of the uncertainty and indefiniteness of the sections of the General Code, purporting to permit fees to be taxed for chiefs of police in state criminal cases, that no fees could be taxed in police courts. Because of the same defect in sections 4387 and 4534, General Code, the bureau held that there could be no fees legally taxed for marshals or chiefs of police in mayors' courts in state criminal cases. The bureau is of the opinion that the court's decision and the bureau's attitude is correct as to ordinary state criminal cases, but we wish to call your attention to the provisions of section 13436, General Code, which reads as follows:

'In pursuing or arresting a defendant, and in subpoenaing the witnesses in such prosecutions, the constable, chief of police, marshal, or other court officer shall have like jurisdiction and power as the sheriff in criminal cases in the common pleas court, and he shall receive like fees therefor.'

If the words 'such prosecutions' as used in this section have reference to any of the offenses enumerated in section 13423, General Code, we are of the opinion that marshals and chiefs of police can have legally taxed for them sheriff's fees for the two classes of service mentioned in section 13436, General Code, viz.: 'For pursuing or arresting a defendant and in subpoenaing the witnesses.'

We respectfully address this letter to you for the purpose of calling your attention to certain kinds of state criminal cases in which we believe that chiefs of police and marshals have their fees definitely fixed for the particular services mentioned, and we would like to have your opinion as to the correctness of our view in this matter.

We refer you to opinion of Attorney-General Hogan to be found in the annual reports of attorney-general for 1912, Vol. 1, page 258."

Section 13423, as amended in 103 O. L., 539, reads:

"Justices of the peace, police judges and mayors of cities and villages shall have jurisdiction, within their respective counties, in all cases of violation of any law relating to:

1. Adulteration or deception in the sale of dairy products and other food, drink, drugs and medicines.

2. The prevention of cruelty to animals and children.

3. The abandonment, nonsupport or ill treatment of a child by its parent.

4. The abandonment or ill treatment of a child under sixteen years of age by its guardian.

5. The employment of a child under fourteen years of age in public exhibitions or vocations injurious to health, life or morals, or which cause or permit it to suffer unnecessary physical or mental pain.

6. The regulation, restriction or prohibition of the employment of minors.

7. The torturing, unlawfully punishing, ill treating, or depriving anyone of necessary food, clothing or shelter.

8. The selling, giving away or furnishing of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, or keeping a place where such liquor is sold, given away or furnished, in violation of any law prohibiting such acts within the limits of a township and without the limits of a municipal corporation.

9. The shipping, selling, using, permitting the use of, branding or having unlawful quantities of illuminating oil for or in a mine.

10. The sale, shipment or adulteration of commercial feed stuffs.

11. The use of dust creating machinery in workshops and factories.

12. The conducting of a pharmacy, or retail drug or chemical store, or the dispensing or selling of drugs, chemicals, poisons or pharmaceutical preparations therein.

13. The failure to place and keep in a sanitary condition a bakery, confectionery, creamery, dairy, dairy barn, milk depot, laboratory, hotel, restaurant, eating house, packing house, slaughter house, ice cream factory, or place where a food product is manufactured, packed, stored, deposited, collected, prepared, produced or sold for any purpose.

14. Offenses for violation of laws in relation to inspection of steam boilers, and of laws licensing steam engineers and boiler operators.

15. The prevention of short weighing and measuring and all violations of the weights and measures laws."

Section 13436 G. C. reads:

"In pursuing or arresting a defendant and in subpoenaing the witnesses in such prosecutions, the constable, chief of police, marshal, or other court officer shall have like jurisdiction and power as the sheriff in criminal cases in the common pleas court, and he shall receive like fees therefor."

The provisions now contained in section 13423 and 13432 to 13440 were originally found in section 3718-a of the Revised Statutes. On May 10, 1902, an act was passed entitled "An act to amend section 3718-a of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, 95 O. L. page 517, which read in part:

"Section 1. That section 3718-a of the Revised Statutes of Ohio be amended so as to read as follows:

"Section 3718-a. Any justice of the peace, police judge, or mayor of any city or village, shall each have jurisdiction within his county, in all cases of violation of the laws to prevent the adulteration of food and drink, the adulteration or deception in the sale of dairy products, or any other foods, and drugs and medicines, and any violation of the law for the prevention of cruelty to animals or children, or under section 3140-2, 4364-24, 4364-25, 6984, 6984a of the Revised Statutes of Ohio. In any such prosecution where imprisonment may be a part of the punishment, if a trial by jury be not waived, the said justice of the peace shall, not less than three nor more than five days before the time fixed for trial, certify to the clerk of the court of common pleas of his county that such prosecution is pending before him. Thereupon said clerk shall proceed to draw, in the presence of representatives of both parties, from the jury wheel or box containing the names of persons selected to serve as petit jurors in the court of common pleas in said county, twenty ballots or names, whfch shall be drawn and counted in the same manner as for jurors in said court of common pleas. * * *

In all cases prosecuted under the provisions of this act, no costs shall be required to be advanced or be secured by any person or persons authorized under the law to prosecute such cases; and if the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody, by nolle or otherwise, or if he be convicted and committed in default of paying fine and costs, all costs of such case shall be certified by said justice of the peace under oath to the county auditor, who, after correcting any errors in the same, shall issue a warrant on the county treasury, in favor of the person or persons to whom such costs and fees shall be paid. * * *

In pursuing or arresting any defendant and in subpoenaing the witnesses, the jurisdiction and powers of the constable or other court officer acting in such capacity, in all such cases, shall be the same as that of the sheriff of the county in criminal cases in the common pleas court and he shall receive the same fees therefor as are allowed said sheriff. Jurors in all such cases and witnesses subpoenaed in all such cases shall be entitled to like mileage and fees as are allowed in criminal cases in the court of common pleas, and in all other respects, in so far as the same may be applicable, the procedure provided for in criminal cases in the common pleas court not otherwise inconsistent herewith, shall be followed. * * *"

The codification commission carried into section 13423 G. C. the various offenses which were enumerated in the first paragraph of section 3718a Revised Statutes, and into section 13436 G. C. that part of section 3718a R. S. relating to jurisdiction, powers and fees of constables and chiefs of police, marshals or other court officers, in such prosecutions.

It is clear from a reading of section 3718a that the provision now contained in section 13436 G. C. clearly referred, in the Revised Statutes, to the cases enumerated in the first paragraph of section 3718a R. S., which are now found in section 13423 G. C. While section 3718a R. S. has been subdivided into several sections of the General Code, some of which have been placed in separate chapters, yet there is nothing to show any intent to affect the relation of the provisions of the various sections. I am convinced, therefore, that the provisions of section 13436 G. C. apply to all the cases enumerated in section 13423 of the General Code. This conclusion is the same as that reached by former attorney-general in an opinion rendered to your bureau and found in Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, Vol. 1, page 258, to which you call my attention. Mr Hogan held:

"From the arrangement of the statutes before their codification, the intent is clear that the words 'such prosecution,' as they appear in section 13436 General Code, making fees of constables, chiefs of police and marshals similar to those of sheriff's fees in criminal cases * * * refer to all cases coming under the jurisdiction of justice of the peace, police judges and mayors, as enumerated in section 13423 General Code."

In the opinion of the court of appeals, to which you refer (Haserodt v. State, decided in the court of appeals on May 8 1917, Ohio Law Bulletin Aug. 20, 1917, page 266) the court held that the chief of police was not entitled to any fees for services rendered in state cases in the police court because the provisions of section 4581 G. C, concerning such fees, were too indefinite. This section provided:

> "Other fees in the police court shall be the same in state cases as are allowed in the probate court, or before justices of the peace, in like cases, and in cases for violation of ordinances such fees as the council, by ordinance prescribes, not exceeding the fees for like services in state cases."

The court was of the opinion that in effect this section attempted to provide that the fees of a chief of police should be the same as those of a sheriff or constable in the probate court or before justices of the peace. This provision the court thought too indefinite and therefore held that no fees could be collected by the chief of police.

It will be noted that section 13436 General Code, above quoted, provides:

> "The constable, chief of police, marshal or other court officer shall have like jurisdiction and power as the sheriff in criminal cases in the common pleas court, and he shall receive like fees therefor."

It will be seen at once that this provision of the statute, allowing the constable, chief of police, marshal and other court officers, fees in the state cases enumerated in section 13423, when tried before the justice of the peace, police judge and mayors of cities and villages, is not open to the objection found by the court in the case of Haserodt v. State, supra, since the provision of section 13436 is definite and certain in that the fees there allowed are to be the same as received by the sheriff in criminal cases in the common pleas court. The court in the Haserodt case did not consider this statute.

From a consideration of the above sections I am of the opinion that the constable, chief of police, marshal or other court officer is entitled to the same fees as the sheriff in criminal cases in the common pleas court for services rendered before a justice of the peace, police judge or mayor of a city or village, in pursuing or arresting a defendant and in subpoenaing the witnesses in all the fifteen classes of state cases enumerated.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL BONDS—WHEN ALLOWANCE MADE TO BOND FIRM FOR ATTORNEY FEES, ETC., WITH INTENT TO CIRCUMVENT THE LAW AND EFFECT A SALE OF SUCH BONDS AT LESS THAN PAR AND ACCRUED INTEREST—RECOVERY MAY BE HAD AGAINST SAID BOND FIRM.

Where a bond firm has offered at least par and accrued interest to date of delivery for a particular municipal bond issue and is the highest bidder, and its offer has been accepted by said municipality and said firm has paid for said bonds in accordance with its bid, but it was understood by said bond firm and by the officers of said municipality who had charge of said sale, that, indirectly, said bond firm was to receive a rebate through the payment of a certain amount to said firm for attorney fees and for other fees for effecting the sale of said bonds to itself and an exorbitant price for furnishing the printed bonds, and that the allowances for said attorney fees and said other fees for making the sale and of said exorbitant price for printing the bonds were only a subterfuge and were made by said municipal officers and accepted by said bond firm with the plain purpose and intent of circumventing the law and effecting a sale of the bonds for less than par and accrued interest.

HELD: That findings for recovery should be made against said bond firm for said allowances that have been made and received by it for said attorney fees and for said fees in making sale of said bonds to itself, and for the difference between the exorbitant price paid for the printing of said bonds and the reasonable market price of having them printed and furnished, since said amounts have been expended out of the public funds without authorization of law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3. 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication submitting for my opinion the following matter:

> "In view of the laws providing that municipal bonds cannot be sold for less than par and accrued interest, together with section 2295-3 G. C., providing for the transcript which must be furnished bidders, and opinions of the attorney-general that the municipality may not pay any other fees for preparing such transcripts nor for passing upon the legality of such bonds, we have found in our work that a certain bond firm of this state has been purchasing bonds from small municipalities and has induced the officers of such municipalities to allow them a discount upon the par value of such bonds and to pay them attorneys' fees and other fees for passing upon the legality of the bonds, and has charged exorbitant prices for furnishing printed bonds, which could be purchased at a very moderate price, with the plain purpose and intent of circumventing the law and thus obtaining the bonds for less than par and accrued interest. We have made a number of findings for recovery against this firm in cases of this nature, but it seems to have no effect upon their procedure.
> Question: Can any action be taken by this department against such firm for such procedure?"

In addition to the facts contained in your request your Mr. Blau has advised me verbally that the bond firm in question in bidding for said particular bond issues has offered at least par with accrued interest to date of delivery, as the law provides, and that said offers have been accepted by the various municipal councils issuing said bonds and said firm has paid for said bonds in accordance with its bid; but that it was understood by said bond firm and by the officers of said municipalities who were selling the bonds, that, indirectly, said bond firm was to receive a rebate through the payment of certain amounts to said firm by said municipalities for the fees of attorneys who were to pass upon the legality of the bond proceedings and of certain amounts for other fees for effecting the sale for said municipalities, which said allowances for attorney fees and for other fees were only a subterfuge, but were made by said municipal officers and accepted by said bond firm with the plain purpose and intent of circumventing the law and thus, in effect, amounting to a sale of the bonds for less than par and accrued interest.

Under date of May 2, 1912, one of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, in an opinion found in Volume I of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for the year 1912, at page 249, considered the following question contained in one of your requests:

> "1. In the issuance and sale of bonds by a city, is it a legal expense of the municipality to furnish the purchaser a transcript of the proceedings leading up to the sale of the bonds?"

At page 250 in said opinion it is said:

> "The statutes concerning the issue and sale of bonds for municipal street improvements, and the duties of the various city officers in relation thereto, do not diclose that the bond buyer is entitled, as a matter of right, to receive, without payment therefor, a copy of such transcript, or that any officer or department of the city government is in duty bound to furnish the same and receive compensation therefor from the city treasury in addition to his regular salary. The successful bidder at a bond sale takes the bonds at his own risk, and if he deems it necessary to have a transcript of the proceedings, in order to determine their validity, the expense thereof must be borne by himself.
> I conclude, therefore, in answer to your first question, that it is not a legal expense, chargeable against a city, to furnish a transcript to the purchaser of municipal bonds."

It was evidently considered by the legislature that the conclusion reached in this opinion that a municipality was not authorized at its own expense to furnish a transcript of the proceedings of a bond issue to the purchaser of said bonds, was correct, since in the following year, in 103 Ohio Laws, page 179, it provided, in what is now section 2295-3 General Code, that a certified transcript of the proceedings of a bond issue should be furnished by the proper officers of the municipality to the successful bidder. Said section reads as follows:

> "Section 2295-3. That it shall be the duty of the clerk, or other officer having charge of the minutes of the council of any municipal corporation, board of county commissioners, board of education, township trustees, or other district or political subdivisions of this state, that now has or may hereafter have, the power to issue bonds, to furnish to the successful bidder for said bonds, a true transcript certified by him of all ordinances, resolutions, notices, and other proceedings had with reference to the issuance of said bonds, including a statement of the character of the meetings at which said proceedings were had, the number of members present, and such other information from the records as may be necessary to determine the regularity and validity of the issuance of said bonds; that it shall be the duty of the auditor or other officer, having charge of the accounts of said corporation or political subdivision, to attach thereto a true and correct statement certified by him of the indebtedness, and, of the amount of the tax duplicate thereof, and such other information as will show whether or not said bond issue is within any debt or tax limitation imposed by law."

Under date of March 9, 1914, my said predecessor, Mr. Hogan, in an opinion addressed to Hon. L. C. Brodbeck, city solicitor of St. Marys, Ohio, (found in Annual Report of the Attorney-General for the year 1914, Volume I, page 338) considered the question of the authority of a municipality to reimburse a successful bond bidder for fees paid out by it to attorneys for services rendered in passing upon the validity of the particular bond issue. In concluding this opinion Mr. Hogan said:

"Nowhere in the statute is the municipality given any authority to reimburse the bidders for fees paid to attorneys by them in passing upon the validity of the bonds, and this department has frequently held that this may not be done. Accordingly, it is my opinion that the city of St. Marys is without authority to pay the sum of two hundred and sixty dollars to Spitzer-Rorick & Company for the services rendered by the attorneys to whom they submitted transcript of the proceedings in connection with the issue and sale of the bonds."

It is noted ther, that this department has held heretofore that there was no authority on the part of a municipality, prior to the enactment of the enabling act by the legislature, to expend public funds for the purpose of furnishing to the successful bidder for a municipal bond issue, a transcript of the proceedings in connection therewith, and that there is no authority to appropriate public funds and pay them out to a successful bidder to reimburse him for expenses that he has been put to in employing attorneys to pass upon the validity of proceedings in regard to said bond issue.

These conclusions were reached on statements of facts in which there was no showing of bad faith or intent to violate the provisions of law, which require that public bonds shall not be sold for less than par with accrued interest. However, in the case that you present you state there was a plain intent to circumvent the law and that the allowance of said sums for attorney fees was only a subterfuge and was not in reality for that particular service. As to the amounts that were paid to said bond firm for effecting a sale to itself, it is clear on the face that the payment for this particular purpose was a plain intent to violate the provisions of the statute and would amount to fraud per se.

I am aware that the supreme court of Tennessee, in the case of Miller et al. v. Park City et al., 150 S. W., 90, has held in the first branch of the syllabus as follows:

"1. The prohibition, under Priv. Acts, 1911, c. 127, against sale of funding and street improvement bonds of Park City at less than par, was not violated by a sale of $25,000 bonds at their par value and accrued interest to the date of delivery, though an allowance of $1,000 for attorney's fees and other expenses incident to the sale, such as printing, lithographing the bonds, postage, etc., was made to the purchaser; it not appearing that the allowance was a subterfuge to cover an unlawful sale."

The court in reaching its conclusion in the above mentioned case considered that the particular municipality had implied power to use all reasonable means and incur all proper and necessary expenses to effectuate a sale. However, I do not believe that the view of the law as taken by the Tennessee supreme court, that a municipality has implied power to expend public funds for reimbursing the bond purchaser for expenses incurred by it in paying its own attorneys for services rendered in passing on the bond issue proceeding, would be good law in Ohio, since it would amount to the expenditure of public funds for a private purpose.

However, in regard to a case where there is bad faith, as in the one referred to by you, the court in the above case said: (Page 92.)

> "It is needless to say that if charges of this kind (attorney's fees, etc.) are sought to be made the cover for an actual sale at less than par, or if they are grossly unreasonable and attended by marks of bad faith, the court would not hesitate to declare such transaction fraudulent and void."

You also state in your communication that the amounts paid for the printing of said bonds by said municipalities to said bond firm were for grossly exorbitant prices and that same were allowed by the officials in bad faith and with the intent thereby to sell the bonds in reality for less than par. Such transactions, then, as far as printing of said bonds is concerned are tainted with fraud and show bad faith on the part of both the officials and the bond firm.

Section 286, General Code, as amended 103 Ohio Laws, 506, authorizes you to make an examination of the affairs of a municipality, and provides that if your report shows that any public money has been illegally expended the city solicitor of a city shall institute, and the mayor of a village shall cause to be instituted, a civil action in the name of the political subdivision or taxing district to which said public money is due for the recovery of same, and shall prosecute, or cause to be prosecuted, the same to final determination. The mayor of a village is authorized in this section to employ counsel, and the village is obligated to pay same, even if the council refuses to appropriate money or levy funds therefor.

I therefore advise you that it is my opinion, on the facts as presented by you, that findings should be made against said bond firm for said public funds that have been illegally expended and received by said bond firm for said attorney's fees and for said fees in making sale of said bonds to itself, and for the difference between the exorbitant price paid for the printing of said bonds and the reasonable market price of having them printed and furnished

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—MAY NOT EMPLOY INSPECTORS TO ASSIST COUNTY SURVEYOR.

Under section 2411 G. C. the county commissioners can not employ inspectors to assist the county surveyor in the work of his office, the regular office force of the county surveyor being provided for by sections 2787 and 2788 G. C. (107 O. L., 70).

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1917.

HON. JOHN L. CABLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 27, 1917, asking me to place a construction upon section 2411 G. C., relative to the matter therein set out, as follows:

"The local surveyor, on account of the amount of work to be performed, namely, an extraordinary amount of road construction, has need of additional inspectors than those appointed by him by virtue of section 2788, General Code.

Kindly advise if in your opinion, section 2411 G. C. permits the county commissioners, upon the written request of the county surveyor, when, on acount of the amount of work to be performed, such board deems it necessary they may employ inspectors without first employing a competent engineer?

In event the court refuses an additional allowance to a surveyor, under section 2787, would the commissioners then have a right to employ inspectors without first employing an engineer?"

It will be necessary for me to note the provisions of three sections of the General Code. One of course is section 2411 G. C., which reads as follows:

"Section 2411. When the services of an engineer are required with respect to roads, turnpikes, ditches or bridges, or with respect to any other matter, and when, on account of the amount of work to be performed, the board deems it necessary, upon the written request of the county surveyor, the board may employ a competent engineer and as many assistant engineers, rodmen and inspectors as may be needed, and shall furnish suitable offices, necessary books, stationery, instruments and implements for the proper performance of the duties imposed on them by such board."

Another is section 2787 G. C. (107 O. L. 70), which reads in part as follows:

"Section 2787. On or before the first Monday of June of each year, the county surveyor shall file with the commissioners of such county a statement of the number of all necessary assistants, deputies, draftsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes in his office for the year beginning on the first Monday of September next succeeding and their aggregate compensation. The county commissioners shall examine such statement and, after making such alterations therein as are just and reasonable, fix an aggregate compensation to be expended therefor for such year. Provided, however, that if at any time any county surveyor requires an additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, such county surveyor may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas of the county wherein such county surveyor was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application, and if upon hearing the same said judge shall find that such necessity exists he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salaries of such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or other employes as may be required. * * *"

And section 2788 G. C. (107 O. L. 70) reads in part as follows:

"Section 2788. The county surveyor shall appoint such assisstants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, and fix their compensation, but compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed therefor by the county commissioners or allowed by a judge of the court of common pleas of the county. After being so fixed such compensation shall be paid to such persons in monthly installments from the general fund of the county upon the warrant of the county auditor. * * *"

Section 2787 G. C. provides that on or before the first Monday of June of each year the county surveyor must file with the commissioners of the county a statement setting forth the number of all necessary assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes in his office for the year beginning on the first Monday of September next succeeding and their aggregate compensation. Then the county commissioners, upon this statement being filed, shall fix an aggregate sum, within which sum the county surveyor must keep, in the appointments he makes for the year beginning on the first Monday of September.

Section 2788 G. C., above quoted, provides that the county surveyor shall appoint such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, but the compensation paid to these employes must not exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed by the county commissioners.

The third provision to be noted is that if the county surveyor at any time requires an additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, then he may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas of his county for an additional allowance, and if the judge finds the necessity to exist, he may allow such additional sum as he deems necessary.

These two sections were evidently meant to take care of all the regular office help of the county surveyor. His application to the county commissioners so states. The amount fixed by the county commissioners is fixed with this end in view, and the only exception that is made is the one that the court may grant an additional allowance for assistants to the county surveyor.

Section 2411 G. C. merely holds that when, on account of the amount of work to be performed, the board of county commissioners deems it necessary, upon the written request of the county surveyor, it may employ a competent engineer and as many assistant engineers, rodmen and inspectors as may be needed to perform the duties imposed upon them by such board of county commissioners.

Under section 2411 G. C. the assistants employed are not really assistants to the county surveyor at all, but they are assistants to the engineer employed under section 2411. They are not employes of the county surveyor in any sense, but employes of the county commissioners.

In an opinion rendered August 7, 1917 (No. 500) to Hon. Robert P. Duncan prosecuting attorney, Columbus, Ohio, I held as follows:

> "The engineer is employed for some specific matter or duty in reference to roads, turnpikes, ditches or bridges. He is employed for some particular work on account of the inability of the county surveyor to perform the same due to the amount of work which he already has on hand to perform. Further, the county surveyor must make a written request for assistants. The engineer so selected upon the request of the county surveyor has certain duties imposed upon him, as is evidenced by the latter part of the section, which provides that he shall be furnished with suitable offices, necessary books, stationery, instruments and implements for the proper performance of the duties imposed on him by such board of county commissioners.
> In other words, he is the employe of the county commissioners at the request of the county surveyor to perform some certain specific duties. He is a sort of assistant to the county surveyor, selected not by the county surveyor but by the county commissioners."

Further along in said opinion I held as follows:

> "In my opinion section 2411 General Code was enacted for the purpose merely of taking care of an emergency. For all the ordinary help which the county surveyor needs he himself appoints assistants and deputies, but when an emergency arises for which his ordinary office help is not sufficient, the county commissioners may, upon the request of the county surveyor, appoint assistants to take care of the emergency. Hence the engineer and the assistants provided for in section 2411 General Code are practically assistants to the county surveyor selected not by himself under section 2788 General Code, but by the county commissioners."

That is, in my opinion section 2411 G. C. was not intended to cover the general office help of the county surveyor, but merely to take care of an emergency which might exist at any particular time in reference to the work which the county surveyor had to do.

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that section 2411 would not permit the county commissioners to employ additional inspectors to assist the county surveyor in the work he has to do, but that inspectors provided for in section 2411 G. C. are to be assistants in the performance of some particular work which the county surveyor found it impossible for him to do. My view is that this would hold even in a case where the court would refuse to allow additional compensation under section 2787 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—BOARD OF EDUCATION OF LIBERTY UNION VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"IN RE:—Bond issue of Liberty union village school district, in the sum of $60,000.00, for the purpose of purchasing a site for erecting, constructing and equipping school building for elementary grades and high school in said school district. "

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Liberty union village school district relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue according to the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TAX—ROAD IMPROVEMENT—WHERE SAME SHOULD BE PAID * * * TOWNSHIP TREASURER—FEES * * * COMPENSATION—LIMITATION.

Where a township tax has been levied by the county commissioners to cover the township's share of the cost of the construction or improvement of a county road, such money should be collected and paid into the county treasury to meet the bonded indebtedness assumed by the county. No fees can be paid the township treasurer for paying this money over to the county treasurer, even though such money has, in some manner, gotten into the township treasury and been paid by the township treasurer over to the county treasurer upon the order of the township trustees.

Where the township trustees levied a tax under the Cass highway act to pay the township's proportion of the cost of the improvement of an inter-county highway, such money was rightfully paid into the township treasury and then paid out of the township treasury into the county treasury upon the order of the township trustees, and in such case the township treasurer was entitled to the two per cent. allowed him in section 3318 General Code.

The limitation on the township treasurer's compensation, found in section 3318, as amended in 107 O. L. 651, apply to the payment of such moneys raised by a tax levy under the Cass highway act only since the amendment of the section has become effective.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1917.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 12, 1917, as follows:

"Section 3318 G. C. provides in part that 'the treasurer shall be allowed and may retain as his fees for receiving, safe keeping and paying out moneys belonging to the township treasury, two per cent. of all moneys paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees.'

"Is the township treasurer entitled to any fees for moneys which are first collected by the county treasurer from taxes derived by a levy made on all the property of the township to provide for the township's share of a road improvement, and which money is turned over to the township treasurer and then turned back to the county treasurer and used by the county to pay the bonded or other indebtedness incurred or assumed by the county for such improvement?

Is such moneys 'moneys paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees' as mentioned in section 3318, even though the trustees make an order to the township treasurer to pay such money over to the county?

The bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, in a letter of date of March 16, 1917, holds 'it is the opinion of this office that on moneys of this nature which are simply turned over to the county treasurer, the township treasurer is not entitled to any fees whatever.' "

Section 3318 G. C. reads:

"The treasurer shall be allowed and may retain as his fees for receiving, safe keeping and paying out moneys belonging to the township treasury, two per cent. of all moneys paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees, but in no one year shall he be entitled to receive from the township treasury more than one hundred and ffity dollars, except that in a township wherein a city is located and such city ia a part of such township, a township treasurer shall be entitled to receive from the township treasury not more than three hundred dollars in one year."

I assume that the case you have in mind arose prior to the enactment of the White-Mulcahy law (107 O. L. 69) and while the Cass highway act was in effect. I shall therefore in this opinion consider the statutes as they read prior to the enactment in 107 Ohio laws.

Section 6906 as enacted in 106 O. L. p. 574, read:

"The board of commissioners of any county shall have power, as hereinafter provided, to construct a public road by laying out and building a new public road, or by improving, reconstructing or repairing any existing public road or part thereof by grading, paving, draining, dragging, graveling, macadamizing, resurfacing or applying dust preventives, or by otherwise improving the same. The county commissioners shall have power to alter, vacate or widen any part of such road in connection with the proceedings for such improvement."

Section 6907 G. C. provided that a petition might be presented to the board of commissioners in any county, asking for the improvement.

Section 6927 G. C. reads:

"For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the proportion of the cost and expenses of such improvement to be paid by the township or townships interested, in which such road may be in whole or part situated, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy a tax not exceeding three mills in any one year upon all the taxable property of such township or townships. Such levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for road purposes, but subject to the limitation on the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force."

It is evident from these sections that where a petition was presented to the county commissioners and the road constructed by them the township's share of the expense was met by the levy upon the taxable property of the township by the county commissioners. In such case the township treasurer has no duty at all in connection with the collection of such taxes. Taxes are levied by the county commissioners to meet a county indebtedness and when collected are to go into the county treasury and not the township treasury.

The Cass highway act, found in 105-106 O. L. 575, provided in section 215, page 641, that:

"For the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the proportion of the cost and expense to be paid by the township or townships for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter, the township trustees are authorized to levy a tax, not exceeding two mills, upon all taxable property of the township in which such road improvement or some part thereof is situated; such levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for township purposes and shall be outside of the limitation of two mills for general township purposes, but subject, however, to limitation upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force."

Section 216 of the Cass law provided in part:

> "The county commissioners, in anticipation of the collection of such taxes or assessments * * * are hereby authorized to sell the bonds of any such county in which such construction, improvement or repair is to be made to an amount necessary to pay the respective shares of the county, township or townships, and the lands assessed for such improvement. * * *"

Section 209 of this same act provides:

> "The township trustees shall certify the assessments so made to the county auditor, who shall place them upon the tax duplicate against the several properties benefited as shown by said assessment list. The county treasurer shall collect such assessments in the same manner as other taxes are collected. The township trustees shall pay to the county the portion of the cost and expense apportioned to the township, in the same manner as other claims against the township are paid."

It will be noted that section 209 of the Cass Highway act, last quoted, provides that the "township trustees shall pay to the county the portion of the cost and expense apportioned to the township, in the same manner as other claims against the township are paid." From this provision it is clear that the money raised by taxation by the township trustees for the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the township's proportion of the cost and expense of the improvement is paid into the township treasury and then paid out of the township treasury to the county upon order of the township trustees, the same as other township moneys, and it is therefore my opinion that the township treasurer was entitled, under the former law, to the two per cent of this money paid out by him on the order of the trustees.

Section 3318 of the General Code was amended in 107 O. L., page 652, to read as hereinbefore quoted.

On August 27, 1917, this department held in opinion No. 565 that:

> "When the amendment relating to the compensation of the township treasurer went into effect, it immediately applied to the compensation of the township treasurers then in office."

Attention might therefore be called in passing to the fact that while the limitation placed upon the compensation of the township treasurer by this section, as amended, would not apply to the case to which you refer, yet it does apply to all payments made by the township treasurer to the county of money raised by taxation for the purpose in question, since the amendment referred to has become effective.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ADOPTION—FOSTER PARENTS ESTOPPED FROM ASSERTING THAT PROCEEDINGS HAD IN NEW YORK WERE NOT VALID BECAUSE THEY WERE NON-RESIDENTS.

1. The record of an adoption proceeding in New York is conclusive as to the status of the child and foster parents in this state.

2. Such adoption can not be invalidated except by clear proof that the proceedings were irregular in some essential particular.

3. Where the foster parents appeared personally before tha surrogate in Erie county, New York, made application to adopt a child, and alleged that they were residents of said county and state, they are estopped from asserting a claim lhal the adoption was invalid because they were not residents of such county and state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1917.

HON. HECTOR S. YOUNG, Prosecuting Attorney, Marion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On August 13, 1917, you made the following request for my opinion:

"On September 10, 1907, a child was born to an inmate of the Marion county infirmary. Its mother's name was E. R. and its reputed father was V. D. On April 6, 1909, the child was committed to the Marion county children's home by the infirmary directors under the name of J. H. R. A few days after the child was committed it was indentured by the home officials to J. E. C., a professional man and a resident of Marion, Ohio. In October of 1912, Mr. C. took a vacation and went with his wife on a trip through some of the eastern states, taking the child with them. While on the trip they stopped a few days in Buffalo and while there they went before the surrogate of Erie county, N. Y., to adopt the child. Immediately after the proceedings before the surrogate they returned to Marion, Ohio, where they have resided ever since. The proceedings in Buffalo were bona fide both on the part of J. E. C. and the home officials, the proceedings being had in Buffalo to escape publicity. Circumstances are now such that Mr. C. wishes to return the child to the home. The home officials want to know the status of the child.

I wish to submit to your office for an opinion thereon the question as to the status of the child, that is whether or not the child was adopted.

My opinion to the board of trustees of the Marion county children's home, together with a copy of the proceedings before the surrogate of Erie county, New York, are enclosed herewith."

The copy of the record of the proceedings before the surrogate of Erie county, New York, submitted by you, is as follows:

"Whereas, an application is about to be made to Hon. Louis B. Hart, surrogate of Erie county, for an order allowing the adoption of D. H., a minor child who is under the age of twelve years, by J. E. C. and D. M. C., his wife, pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided.

Now, therefore, we, the children's home of Marion county, Ohio, the corporation having the care and custody of said child as appears from the attached consent of said children's home, and J. E. C., the person adopting said child, and D. M. C., his wife, do hereby consent to such adoption, and we, the said J. E. C. and D. M. C. do hereby agree to adopt and treat the said

D. H. as our own child at all times in consideration of the consents hereto, the premises stated and the order of the judge or surrogate hereupon to be made, assuming and undertaking the duties and obligations which shall flow from this act of adoption upon the order being made allowing the same.

In witness whereof, we, the persons whose consent and agreements are necessary hereto, have hereunto set our hands and seals this 3rd day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twelve.

J. E. C. (L. S.)
D. M. C. (L. S.)

State of New York,
Erie County, ss.

Before me, the undersigned, this 3 day of Oct., A. D. 1912, personally appeared J. E. C. and D. M. C., his wife, and being by me examined and evidence having been taken by me, and the several persons being made known to me to be the same persons described in and who executed the foregoing consent and agreement, and each having acknowledged that he executed the same before me, I do hereby certify to the said fact, and that the said D. H., minor child, appears to be of the age stated in said instrument, and that the birthday of said minor as near as can be ascertained is September 10, 1908.

LOUIS B. HART,
Surrogate. (Seal.)'

"Whereas, application is about to be made to Hon. Louis B. Hart, surrogate of Erie county, state of New York, for an order allowing the adoption of D. H., a minor child, who is of the age of 4 years, by J. E. C. and D. M. C., his wife, now therefore, we the Waddell children's home of Marion county, Ohio, the institution having lawful custody of said child by virtue of its having been born out of wedlock in said institution and surrendered to said institution by its mother, do hereby consent to the adoption of said minor child by said J. E. C. and D. M. C., his wife, and do hereby by these presents surrender all rights to said child to said parties and consent that an order of adoption may be granted in any court having proper jurisdiction without notice to us.

Witness our hand and seal of said institution at Marion, Ohio, this first day of October, 1912.

M. WADDELL,

Subsdribed before me this 1st day of October, A. D. 1912.

W. W. KLINEFETTER,
Clerk of Court.

State of Ohio,
County of Marion, ss.
City of Marion.

On the first day of October, in the year 1912, before me personally came M. Waddell, president board of trustees Marion county Ohio children's home, to me known, who, being by me duly sworn, did depose and say that he resides in city of Marion, Marion county, Ohio; that he is the president of the board of trustees of Marion county Ohio children's home, the corporation described in and which executed the above instrument; that the said corporation has no seal; that he signed his name thereto by order of the board of directors of said corporation.

W. W. KLINEFETTER,
Clerk of Court.'

(Seal.)

"There having appeared before me, this day D. H., a minor child under the age of twelve years, and J. E. C. and D. M. C., his wife, and the children's home of Marion county, Ohio, having the lawful custody of said child, by virtue of said child having been born out of wedlock and surrendered to said home by its mother, and they, the said J. E. C. and D. M. C. and the children's home of Marion county, Ohio, having signed the acknowledged instruments containing the consents and agreements required by statute in such case made and provided, and an application having been made to me for an order allowing the adoption of said minor child by said J. E. C. and D. M. C., his wife, and I having examined such persons and heard the proofs and taken evidence offered before me on such application, it appearing that the said foster parents reside in the county of Erie, and the further facts following appearing as reasons for allowing said adoption, viz:

That said child was a waif, I, therefore, after due deliberation had it appearing that the moral and temporal welfare of D. H., the said minor, will be promoted by his adoption by said J. E. C. and D. M. C., under the statute do, by virtue of the authority conferred upon me,

Order that the said adoption be allowed and do hereby confirm the adoption as aforesaid and do further order and direct that the said D. H. shall henceforth be regarded and treated as the child of the said J. E. C. and D. M. C., and shall henceforth be known as D. C.

Let this order and the accompanying consent and agreement endorsed by me, be recorded by the county clerk of Erie county.

LOUIS B. HART,
Surrogate. (Seal.)"

I understand that it is now claimed that this adoption is void for the following reasons:

(1) That the child was adopted under the name of D. H. and not J. H. R. This is immaterial if there is no question of identity, as, by the order of the surrogate, the child, from the date of said order, was to be known as D.C.

(2) That the consent given by the children's home for the adoption was not certified to in the manner required by the statutes of New York.

If the record given discloses all the acknowledgment, it is only defective because no certificate is attached as to the official character and genuineness of the signature of the officer taking the acknowledgment. It was taken before the clerk of courts of Marion county, an official authorized to take such acknowledgments by the laws of New York, and if accepted by the surrogate without the certificate which might have been required, that is the end of it, as there is no contention but that the acknowledgment was genuine.

It is also claimed that the consent to the adoption was not properly given. It seems that the laws of New York clearly contemplate the adoption of a child which is in the custody of an institution in another state.

Section 112 of the chapter of domestic relations in the New York Code, as quoted by you, provides:

"1. The foster parents or parent, the minor and all the persons whose consent is necessary under the last section, must appear before the county judge or the surrogate of the county where the foster parent or parents reside, and be examined by such judge or surrogate, except as provided by the next subdivision.

2. They must present to such judge or surrogate an instrument containing substantially the consents required by this chapter, an agreement on the part of the foster parent or parents to adopt and treat the minor as his, her, or their own lawful child, and a statement of the age of the child, as nearly as the same can be ascertained, which statement shall be taken as prima facie true. The instrument must be signed by the foster parent or parents and by each person whose consent is necessary to the adoption and severally acknowledged by said persons before such judge or surrogate; but where a parent or person or institutuion having the legal custody of the minor resides in some other country, state or county, his or their written acknowledged consent, or the written acknowledged consent of the officers of such institution, certified as conveyances are required to be certified to entitle them to record in a county in this state, is equivalent to his or their appearance and execution of such instrument."

You will note that the consent in this case is signed by the president of the board of trustees, purports to be the consent of the home, and shows that the president signed it by order of the board of directors; and while the form of the consent and certificate may be subject to criticism, it is clear that it fully complies with the requirement of the New York law—that it be the "acknowledged consent of the officers of such institution." The question as to whether or not consent was given to an adoption is always material, and the requirement that it must be given is strictly enforced—but here is no rule to the effect that the form of the consent must be followed with the certainty that is required in an indictment. If the instrument fairly complies with the statute it is sufficient. Thus it has been held, under a statute requiring such consent to be signed by the "principal officer" of an institution, that the consent by a matron of such institution was a substantial compliance with the statute (Fisher v. Gardner, 183 Mich. 660).

(3) It is further contended that the proceeding in New York was void because the foster parents at the time of said proceedings before the surrogate were not residents of Erie county, New York, but were residents of Marion county, Ohio.

The judgment, or order made by the surrogate, and of record in that court, recites that the surrogate heard the proof and took the evidence upon the application made by said foster parents, and it appeared that "the said foster parents reside in the county of Erie." This finding is conclusive as to said foster parents who made the application and had it granted by the court on their representation that they were residents of Erie county, New York—they are forever estopped from disputing this finding. Nor can it be collaterally attacked—if any of the facts found by the court were not true, correction should have been made in that court. It may be that the minor is not barred from contesting the regularity of the proceeding, but so far as every one else is concerned the determination of all facts within its jurisdiction is conclusive. If the court had no jurisdiction its action would be void—but neither of the foster parents, nor the children's home of Marion county can deny such jurisdiction, nor the regularity of the proceedings.

Gray v. Field, 19 Bull. 121;
Barclay v. People, 132 Ill. App. 338.

Aside from the doctrine of estoppel, the foster parents, having appeared personally before the court, made the application, and signed all necessary papers, would be held to have invoked the jurisdiction of the court and to have taken an active part in the proceeding, and would be bound by the order. Salmond et al. v. Price et al., 13 Ohio, 368, wherein it is held:

"Where a void decree is made by a Virginia court, for the sale of Ohio lands, one of the heirs who assents to the decree and the sale, and acts as commissioner to carry it into execution, passes his own title."

The proceeding in New York recites all jurisdictional facts, and, unless it discloses on the face of the record defects which render it void, is conclusive as to this adoption. No such defect appears, and, as the foster parents can not be heard to dispute any facts alleged by them and found by the court (even if they were not bound by invoking the jurisdiction, appearing personally, and taking in the proceeding) the adoption must be regarded as having been legally consummated; and therefore fully effective in this state.

Simpson v. Simpson, 9 C. C., n. s., 137.
Jassey v. Brown, 47 S. E., 350.

In addition to the statutory adoption, the foster parents entered into an agreement, or contract, of adoption, by signing the consent and agreement provided by the New York statute. It will be noted that they > "do hereby agree to adopt and treat the said D. H. as our own child at all times in consideration of the consents hereto the premises stated and the order of the judge of surrogate hereupon to be made, assuming and undertaking the duties and obligations which shall flow from this act of adoption upon the order being made allowing the same."

Such contracts are generally held to be valid, but it is not necessary to discuss this phase of the question for the reason that, for the present, the adoption must be regarded as regular and effective.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CIVIL SERVICE—ERRONEOUS RESIDENCE QUALIFICATIONS—STATUS OF APPOINTEE UNDER SUCH ELIGIBLE LIST—STATUS OF PERSON REMOVED BY REASON THEREOF.

Where a state department has divided the state into districts for the purpose of its administration and erroneously assumes that residence in such district is a necessary qualification for holding positions therein, and where the civil service commission coincided in such erroneous opinion and furnishes eligible lists only from such districts for the purpose of filling positions therein, the incumbent of such position so filled from such insufficient eligible list gains no standing or status under the provisions of the civil service law, and under such circumstances, when by the judgment of the court an incumbent of such position is restored to the right to hold the same from which he had been unlawfully deprived by the head of the department, in contemplation of law he has remained in the service during the interval in which he was not actually employed, and the head of the department may select which of the other incumbents holding as above described may be displaced in order to accomplish such restoration.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 3, 1917.

Civil Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On September 21, 1917, you made the following request for an opinion from this department:

"Your opinion and advice is respectfully requested on the following case which has come before the state civil service commission.

The organization of the state agricultural commission for the year 1915 included four positions under the title of 'Drug Inspector.' On January 12, 1915, Wm. L. B. Brittain was appointed by the state agricultural commission to the position of drug inspector in the dairy and food division from an eligible list certified by the state civil service commission. Under date of October 9, 1915, Mr. Brittain received a letter from the state board of agriculture in part as follows:

'The report of the dairy and food committee to the board recommended that Mark Kidd of Dayton, Ohio, be appointed to succeed Mr. Wm. L. B. Brittain as drug inspector. Moved by Mr. Williamson, seconded by Mr. Myers, that the report of the committee be adopted and that Mark Kidd be appointed as drug inspector and Mr. Wm. L. B. Brittain be dropped.'

Upon roll call all members voted 'Yes.'

I am sending you at this hour the following message: 'at meeting, board of agriculture, October 4th, you were dropped as drug inspector in department, effective October 9th.'

Your opinion and advice is requested as follows:

Who is Mr. Brittain's successor?"

This request has attached to it a rather extensive statement of facts showing the succession of appointments from the time of Brittain's disconnection with the service down to the present time with a view to determining which particular member of the force occupies the position formerly held by Brittain. It is unnecessary to repeat this statement, but it is referred to hereinafter.

It shows, however, that at a time subsequent to Brittain's disconnection with the department, the agricultural department itself divided the state into four districts, and that thereafter that department and the civil service commission acted upon the theory that residence in each district was a requisite for appointment as drug inspector in that particular district; that your commission prepared eligible lists accordingly from each district, and that upon occasions where there was not such list or not sufficient names on the list, that to the names on the list from the particular district you added names from the eligible list from the state at large.

The controlling circumstance in answering your inquiry is the fact that by the decision of the court as it stands at present Brittain is reinstated, and it follows from the decision in like manner that he has been all the time, in legal contemplation, in the service of the state in his former position, and in as much as the whole personnel of the force has changed, it follows that unless the subsequent appointments have been according to law Brittain not only still has title and right to his position, but he is the only drug inspector whose position is legal beyond question.

It further follows, if he were at all times a member of the force, that when there were only three such inspectors actually in the service, as happened for a portion of the time, that there were, in legal contemplation, all four positions occupied, which being so, if a fourth man were appointed such appointment was illegal and conferred no rights on the appointee, so that if all appointments at all times were legal and valid, each time more than four including Brittain were on the force,the last appointment was illegal.

The above information would be sufficient for you to determine the proper answer to your question. It is exceedingly doubtful, however, whether any of the drug inspectors, save Brittain, has any proper right to hold his position, or is other than a de facto incumbent thereof.

In opinion 501 rendered to you on August 7, 1917, you are advised that the heads of departments have no lawful authority when creating administrative districts for their purposes to provide that residence in such districts shall be an essential qualification for appointment to a position therein. See page 14 of said opinion.

It is intimated or advanced in said opinion that your commission may, under certain circumstances, fix such residence in a district as a necessary qualification to appointment therein by a finding on your part that such residence is essential to fitness for the position. In recognizing these districts established by the department of agriculture, however, you did not act upon that theory, but recognized the existence of the districts, and prepared an eligible list from such district only because the department of agriculture has seen fit to create the district. It is set out in the opinion that the various departments may, for the purposes of their own administration, create such districts, and they may prescribe by regulation that the incumbent of the position in such district must reside in the district while performing the duties thereof, but as above stated, they cannot fix the original selection and appointment as confined to such district.

This being so, and in view of the general provisions of the civil service act, the positions in the state service shall be bestowed as a result of competitive examinations, which shall be open and free to all, with certain limitations to be fixed by the commission, and these limitations not having been fixed by the commission, but by the board in question your eligible list confined to such district was not in compliance with the civil service law; no more than was an eligible list which was partly made up from the district but filled out by members from the state at large. Some of these positions were held as provisional appointments under section 486-14. Such provisional appointments under the terms of the section came to an end when, by reason of a certification from your department, the incumbent was regularly appointed. The following portion of said section provides for this case:

> "but such provisional appointment shall continue in force only until regular appointment can be made from the eligible list prepared by the commission, and such eligible list shall be prepared within ninety days thereafter."

From the above state of facts a situation has arisen where none of the drug inspectors but Brittain hold their positions in accordance with and under and by virtue of the civil service law. In the appointment of none of them has the law been complied with. The department, therefore, strangely finds itself in the position not only where the rejected employe is still entitled to his office but where he is the only inspector who is regularly and lawfully employed.

"The stone which the builders refused is become the head stone of the corner."

If I am right in this conclusion it would seem that the secretary of agriculture may drop whomever he pleases as none stands upon a foundation which gives him any right or title to his position, except Brittain. This opinion, of course, is based upon the present situation in reference to the case. If the decision of the court of appeals be reversed in the proceedings in error proposed by the secretary of agriculture the converse would be true and Brittain would have no title whatever.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

JUVENILE COURT—JURISDICTION—BASTARDY PROCEEDINGS.

> The word 'delinquent' does not appear in the affidavit or in any of the other papers in the case."

Sections 12110, 12115, 12122, 12123, 12124, 1639, 1642, 1644, 1654 and 1659 of the General Code of Ohio provide:

> "Section 12110. When an unmarried woman, who has been delivered of or is pregnant with a bastard child, makes a complaint in writing, under oath, before a justice of the peace, charging a person with being the father of such child, he thereupon shall issue his warrant, directed to any sheriff or constable of the state, commanding him to pursue and arrest such accused person in any county therein, and bring him forthwith before such justice to answer such complaint.

If, in person or by counsel, the accused confesses in court that the accusation is true, if the jury find him guilty, he shall be adjudged reputed father of the bastard child, and stand charged with its maintenance in such sum as the court orders, with payment of costs of prosecution. The court shall require the reputed father to give security to perform such order.

If he neglects or refuses to give it, and pay the costs of prosecution, he shall be committed to the jail of the county, there to remain, except as provided in the next following section, until he complies with the order of the court.

Section 12124. After having been confined in prison for three months, for failing to comply with the order provided for in the next preceding section, such putative father shall be entitled to the benefits of the law relating to insolvent debtors, in like manner as persons imprisoned for debt. But before he shall be entitled thereto, he must give at least three day's notice to the complainant or her attorney of his intention to apply therefor."

Section 1639. Courts of common pleas, probate courts, and insolvency courts and superior courts, where established shall have and exercise, concurrently, the powers and jurisdiction conferred in this chapter. The judges of such courts in each county, at such times as they determine, shall designate one of their number to transact the business arising under such jurisdiction. When the term of the judge so designated expires, or his office terminates, another designation shall be made in like manner.

The words, juvenile court, when used in the statutes of Ohio shall be understood as meaning the court in which the judge so designated may be sitting while exercising such jurisdiction, and the words 'judge of the juvenile court' or 'juvenile judge' as meaning such judge while exercising such jurisdiction. * *

Section 1642. Such courts of common pleas, probate courts, insolvency courts, and superior courts within the provisions of this chapter shall have jurisdiction over and with respect to delinquent, neglected and dependent minors, under the age of eighteen years, not inmates of a state institution, or any institution incorporated under the laws of the state for the case and correction of delinquent neglected and dependent children, and their parents, guardians, or any person, persons, corporation or agent of a corporation, responsible for, or guilty of causing encouraging, aiding. abetting or contributing toward the delinquency, neglect or dependency of such minor, and such courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any charge or prosecution against any person, persons, corporations, or their agents, for the commission of any misdemeanor involving the care, protection, education or comfort of any such minor under the age of eighteen years.

Section 1644. 'DELINQUENT CHILD DEFINED.' For the purpose of this chapter, the words 'Delinquent child' includes any child under eighteen years of age who violates a law of this state, or a city or village ordinance, or who is incorrigible; or who knowingly associates with thieves, vicious or immoral persons; or who is growing up in idleness or crime; or who knowingly visits or enters a house of ill repute; or who knowingly patronizes or visits a policy shop or place where any gambling device or gambling scheme is, or shall be, operated or conducted; or who patronizes or visits a saloon or dram shop where intoxicating liquors are sold; or who patronizes or visits a public pool or billiard room or bucket shop; or who wanders about the streets in the night time; or who wanders about railroad yards or tracks, or jumps or catches on to a moving train, traction or street car, or enters a car or engine without lawful authority, or who uses vile, obscene, vulgar, profane or indecent language; or who is guilty of immoral conduct; or who uses cigarettes, cigarette wrapper or substitute for either, or cigars or tobacco; or who visits or frequents any theater, gallery, penny arcade or moving picture show where lewd, vulgar or indecent pictures, exhibitions or performances are displayed, exhibited or given, or who is an habitual truant; or who uses any injurious or narcotic drug. A child committing any of the acts herein mentioned shall be deemed a juvenile delinquent person, and be proceeded against in the manner hereinafter provided.

Section 1654. Whoever abuses a child or aids, abets, induces, causes, encourages or contributes toward the dependency, neglect or delinquency, as herein defined, of a minor under the age of eighteen years, or acts in a way tending to cause delinquency in such minor, shall be fined not less than ten dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisonment not less than ten days nor more than one year, or both. Each day of such contribution to such dependency, neglect or delinquency, shall be deemed a separate offense. If in his judgment it is for the best interest of a delinquent minor, under the age of eighteen years, the judge may impose a fine upon such delinquent not exceeding ten dollars, and he may order such person to stand committed until fine and costs are paid.

Section 1659. When a minor under the age of eighteen years is arrested such child, instead of being taken before a justice of the peace or police judge, shall be taken directly before such juvenile judge; or, if the child is taken before a justice of the peace or a judge of the police court, it shall be the duty of such justice of the peace or such judge of the police court, to transfer the case to the judge exercising the jurisdiction herein provided. The officers having such child in charge shall take it before such judge, who shall proceed to hear and dispose of the case in the same manner as if the child has been brought before the judge in the first instance."

It is evident from a reading of sections 1644 and 1654 that the juvenile court, after it assumes jurisdiction and finds a minor to be delinquent, can only commit him to a proper institution or fine him in an amount not to exceed $10.00. In other words, the specific penalty imposed for the particular offense or act of misconduct of which the minor has been found guilty is disregarded and the juvenile court imposes a fine or commits the child to a proper institution, not for the specific offense or act of misconduct, but because the child has been found to be delinquent. This power of the juvenile court is clearly not sufficient to answer the purposes of this case.

The purposes of the juvenile court act is well stated by Sater, J., in the case of In re Januszewski 10, O. L. R. 151, at page 156:

"The purpose of the statute is to save minors under the age of seventeen years from the prosecution and conviction on charges of misdemeanors and crimes, and to relieve them from the consequent stigma attaching thereto; to guard and protect them against themselves and evil-minded persons surrounding them; to protect them and train them physically, mentally and morally. It seeks to benefit not only the child, but the community also, by surrounding the child with better and more elevating influences and training it in all that counts for good citizenship and usefulness as a member of society. Under it, the state, which, through its appropriate organs, is the guardian of the children within its borders (Van Walters v. Board, 132 Ind., 569), assumes the custody of the child, imposes wholesome restraints and performs parental duties, and at a time when the child is not entitled, either by the laws of nature or of the state, to absolute freedom, but is subjected to the restraint and custody of a natural or legally constituted guardian to whom it owes obedience and subjection. It is of the same nature as statutes which authorize compulsory education of children, the binding of them out during minority, the appointment of guardians and trustees to take charge of the property of those who are incapable of managing their own affairs, the confinement of the insane and the like. The welfare of society requires and justifies such enactments. The statute is neither criminal nor penal in its nature, but an administrative police regulation. (State v. Marmouget). A consideration of the acts enumerated which respectively constitute delinquency precludes the thought that it was the legislative intent that they or any one of them, when committed by infants within the specified age, should for correctional purposes be treated as a crime such purposes, as regards such minors, being the only ones contemplated by the statute. The intent to dissociate juvenile from criminal cases is evidenced by the provision of section 1649 that the former shall not be heard, if it can be avoided, in a room used for the trial of the latter, and by the prohibition against the detention of any delinquent child in the county jail pending the disposition of its case (section 1652). It was not, therefore, necessary that the petitioner should be presented or indicted by a grand jury before he was placed on trial."

In the case of State v. Ward, 8 O. M. P. (n. s.), page 561, it was held:

"An indictment charging a defendant with having rescued another who was in the lawful custody of a constable under a warrant issued by a justice of the peace in bastardy proceedings, is insufficient under section 6903 Revised Statutes, because the person so rescued was not charged with an 'offense.' "

In discussing the nature of a bastardy proceeding the court said:

"On page 718 of Vol. I of Words and Phrases Judicially Defined it is said:

'Bastardy proceedings are to be regarded as essentially a civil action, accompanied by the extraordinary remedy of arrest and imprisonment for the purpose of enforcing judgment rendered in the case.'

And on the same page it is said:

'Proceedings in a case of bastardy may not be considered as penal but only as a means to enforce the discharge of legal obligations.'

In the case of Devinney v. State, in Wright's Report, p. 565, Judge Wright uses this language:

'This prosecution (meaning a bastardy proceeding), is quasi criminal, but not strictly so, and if conducted in the name of the state at all it should appear to be on the relation of complaint of the real party. We think it would be more proper to carry on the suit in the name of the party complaining.'

And in the same case it is said that the state is in no way interested in it, that the prosecuting attorney is not bound to attend such suits, etc.

Now bearing in mind what Judge Wright has said, that it would be more proper to carry on the suit in the name of the party complaining and that the state is not interested in the suit and that it is at most only quasi criminal, we refer to section 20 of article IV of the constitution of Ohio, which provides that all prosecutions shall be carried on in the name and by the authority of the state of Ohio; and section 1273 of the Revised Statutes provides that the prosecuting attorney shall prosecute on behalf of the state all complaints, suits and controversies in which the state is a party, thus clearly showing that a bastardy proceeding is not a criminal proceeding.

In the case of Perkins v. Mobley, 4 O. S., 673, the supreme court say:

'In many of the states begetting a bastardy child is made an offense, and punished by indictment; but in this state it is not so. The proceeding here is not strictly civil or criminal. It neither punishes a crime nor gives redress for a civil injury. It is simply a statutory remedy to enforce a high moral duty; and the moral duty is enforced to prevent a burden which ought to rest upon the father from falling upon the public. It may be instituted upon the complaint of the mother, or if she neglects it, or fails to prosecute to effect, by the proper public authorities. At one point in the proceedings a settlement may be made,' etc.

In the case of Carter v. Krise, 9 O. S., 405, it is said:

'It is certainly true that none of the forms and modes of proceeding under our bastardy act are analogous to proceedings in criminal cases. And yet most of the incidents to such a proceeding are such as belong to proceedings strictly civil. It is or may be prosecuted in the name of a private party only, the mother of the child, or the township trustees. On a bond of indemnity being given that the child shall not become a public charge, the proceedings may be compromised and discharged by the mother of the child. It is prosecuted neither by information or indictment. The defendant after conviction is entitled to all the benefit of the act for the relief of insolvent debtors; and I suppose it will not be claimed that at any stage of the proceedings he can be the subject of pardon by the executive. But, after all, this question can properly be determined only by looking into the essential nature, aim, and object of the proceeding. Does it aim to punish the defendant? Or is it in its nature simply a remedy to enforce the discharge of a civil and moral duty. It is clearly the latter and that only. It is the duty of every man who becomes the father of a child to contribute to its support and to save the public from the burden of its maintenance. This duty the statute aims to enforce. There is nothing punitive about it. If any crime be involved in the accusation against the defendant, it must consist in the act of illicit intercourse by which the bastard child was begotten; and of this crime the parties are equally guilty, whether paternity do or do not result; and yet by our laws there is no crime where there is no paternity, unless the parties live and cohabit in a state of adultery or fornication, and then they may be prosecuted under another statute, by information or indictment, and punished by fine and imprisonment.'"

From these decisions it is evident that the purpose of the act is to enforce a moral duty to the end that the state may not have thrust upon it the burden of supporting the child. Nothing is clearer than that the juvenile court, in exercising the jurisdiction conferred upon it, is powerless to afford the relief which the bastardy statutes were enacted to grant, and it is, therefore, my opinion that the proceedings under that act must be had in the court of common pleas even in cases where the mother of the child and the putative father are under 16 years of age.

Neither do I think that section 1659, providing that "when a minor under the age of eighteen years is arrested, such child, instead of being taken before a justice of the peace or police judge, shall be taken directly before such juvenile judge; or, if the child is taken before a justice of the peace or a judge of the police court, it shall be the duty of such justice of the peace or such judge of the police court, to transfer the case to the judge exercising the jurisdiction herein provided," applies to bastardy cases. While it is true that the defendant in bastardy cases is "arrested," yet I am of the opinion that section 1659 G. C. was meant to cover cases where the arrested minor has been arrested for the commission of an offense as is usually the case.

I might say, in passing, that the juvenile court could probably find the child delinquent upon the facts developed in the basratdy proceedings, since under section 1644 G. C. a finding that the child has been guilty of immoral conduct would justify a finding of delinquency. This was hinted at in the case of Carter v. Krise, 9 O. S. 405 supra, where the court said:

"If any crime be involved in the accusation against the defendant, it must consist in the act of illicit intercourse by which the bastard child was begotten; and of this crime the parties are equally guilty, whether paternity do or do not result; and yet, by our law there is no crime where there is no paternity, unless the parties live and cohabit in a state of adultery or fornication, and then they may be prosecuted under another statute by information or indictment, and punished by fine and imprisonment."

While, as the court said in this case, no "crime" could be predicated upon the single act of intercourse, yet, since the enactment of the juvenile court law, a finding of delinquency could be based thereon as above indicated.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY CLERK—MAY RETAIN FEES FOR SERVICES AS LICENSING AGENT.

County clerks may retain personally the fees allowed them for services as licensing agents under appointment of the director of the bureau of mines, department of the interior, under authority of explosives law passed by congress on October 6, 1917.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1917.

HON. JOHN D'ALTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 29, 1917, as follows:

"We are in receipt of a letter from William F. Renz, clerk of courts, of this date, which is as follows:

'Under date of October 22, 1917, the director of the bureau of mines sent me a communication deputizing me to accept applications for vendor's, purchaser's and foreman's licenses under an act to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use, and possession of the same, and for other purposes. (See enclosed copy of act.)

Section 11 of said law provides that the officer issuing such licenses shall receive a fee of twenty-five ($0.25) cents for each license issued. Will you kindly advise me whether this fee of twenty-five ($0.25) cents is to go into the clerk's fee fund or whether it belongs to him?

Kindly return enclosed letter and copy of act.

Yours truly,
Wm. F. Renz, Clerk of Courts.

As the matter inquired about by our clerk of courts is of interest to every clerk throughout the state, we respectfully request that you furnish us an opinion upon this matter.

The act of congress referred to is entitled, 'Public—No. 68—65th congress (H. R. 3932) an act to prohibit the manufacture, distribution, storage, use and possession in time of war of explosives, providing regulations for the safe manufacture, distribution, storage, use and possession of the same, and for other purposes.' "

The explosive law, passed by congress during its last session, found at page 432 of the Federal Reporter, November 15, 1917, provides in part:

"Section 3115⅛i. (Act. October 6, 1917, c. ....., Section 1.) Manufacture, distribution, storage, use or possession of powder, explosives, blasting supplies, etc., regulated when United States at war.

When the United States is at war it shall be unlawful to manufacture, distribute, store, use, or possess powder, explosives, blasting supplies, or ingredients thereof, in such manner as to be detrimental to the public safety, except as in this act provided.

"Section 3115⅛f. (Act October 6, 1917, c. ....., Section 11.) Licenses; persons entitled to; refusal; revocation; appeal to council of national defense.

The director of the bureau of mines shall issue licenses, upon application duly made, but only to citizens of the United States of America, and to the subjects or citizens of nations that are at peace with them, and to corporations, firms, and associations thereof, and he may, in his discretion, refuse to issue a license, when he has reason to believe, from facts of which he has knowledge or reliable information, that the applicant is disloyal or hostile to the United States of America, or that, if the applicant is a firm, association, society, or corporation, its controlling stockholders or members are disloyal or hostile to the United States of America. * * *.

Section 3115⅛ff. (Act October 6, 1917, c. ....., Section 12.) Applications for licenses; contents; to whom made; fees for granting licenses; records of licenses granted; blanks.

* * * * * * * * * *

Applications for vendor's, purchaser's, or foreman's licenses shall be made to such officers of the state, territory, or dependency having jurisdiction in the district within which the explosives or ingredients are to be sold or used, and having the power to administer oaths as may be designated by the director of the bureau of mines, who shall issue the same in the name of such director. Such officers shall be entitled to receive from the applicant a fee of 25 cents, for each license issued. They shall keep an accurate record of all licenses issued in manner and form to be prescribed by the director of the bureau of mines, to whom they shall make reports from time to time as may be by rule issued by the director required. The necessary blanks and blank records shall be furnished to such officers by the said director. Licensing officers shall be subject to removal for cause by the director of the bureau of mines, and all licenses issued by them shall be subject to revocation by the director as provided in section eleven."

You advise me that the clerk of courts of your county has been appointed licensing agent by the department of the interior, bureau of mines, under this act, and an examination of the papers discloses a letter from F. S. Peabody, assistant to the director in charge of explosives, bureau of mines, department of the interior, notifying Mr. Renz, your clerk of courts, of his appointment.

It will be seen from the sections of the federal act, above quoted, that it is within the authority of the bureau of mines to make this appointment.

The duties of the clerk of courts are set out in our statutes and the various provisions of these statutes do not thrust any such duty as is here referred to upon the incumbent of that office. The clerk of the courts is free to accept or refuse the appointment of the bureau of mines. If he accepts the appointment and proceeds with the work, it cannot be said that he is performing any official act as clerk of courts. He is acting in the capacity of licensing agent of the federal bureau of mines.

In an opinion rendered by this department, No. 330, under date of June 2, 1917, it was held that in cases where the sheriff is appointed receiver, he may retain the fees allowed him for acting as receiver instead of paying them into the fee fund. Reference was had in that opinion to an opinion by former Attorney-General Turner, found in page 601 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, in which Mr. Turner held that when the sheriff is appointed by virtue of section 13195 of the General Code to make a sale of real estate thereunder, the fees received by the sheriff are personal and not payable into the fee fund. In that opinion Mr. Turner said:

> "If under this authority the court appoints as such 'suitable person or persons' the individual or individuals who are serving as sheriff or other county officers, the compensation allowed for the making of such sale will be payable to such person or persons as individuals and not in their official capacities. Therefore, such compensation is the property of the person or persons making the sale and is not subject to be paid into the fee fund provided for in said section 2977 G. C."

The same reasoning that was resorted to in these opinions applies in the case you submit and I am therefore of the opinion that the fees paid to your clerk of courts for services rendered in acting as licensing agent for the bureau of mines, department of the interior, on issuing licenses under the explosive act, may be retained by the clerk personally.

In arriving at this conclusion I have not been unmindful of the cases of State ex rel., v. Horner, 16 O. N. P., n. s., page 449, and Talbott v. State, ex rel., Houston, 5 Ohio App. Rep., p. 262. In the first named case the court held:

> "The county clerk is not entitled ,under the present Ohio salary law, to retain as an emolument of his office one-half of the fees up to $3,000.00 received for services in matters pertaining to naturalization, but he must account to the state for such fees in the same manner as for fees received for services rendered under the laws of the state."

In the second case the court considered the Ohio salary act of March 22, 1906 (98 O. L., 89), relating to county officers, as it was originally enacted and as it stood prior to the enactment of the General Code of 1910. In both these cases the clerk of courts was performing a duty thrust upon him by a law of the United States. In the question you present the clerk of courts is not acting as licensing agent of the department of the interior, bureau of mines, because of any statutory duty, but simply by virtue of appointment from that department. This being so the holding of the courts in the two cases referred to cannot affect the question.

It might be well to remark in connection with this opinion that inasmuch as the clerk of courts is performing this work, not as clerk of courts but as an individual appointed as licensing agent, he would not be entitled to the services of the deputy clerks in the performance of the work imposed upon him by the appointment. The appointment is purely personal with the clerk, and while the clerk is allowed the compensation, the county could not be asked to share any portion of the expense.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

FEEBLE MINDED INSTITUTION—ADMISSION OF CHILDREN UNDER FIFTEEN YEARS OF AGE AND PUBLIC CHARGES OVER FIFTEEN YEARS OF AGE—COMMITMENT—PHYSICIANS' FEES.

Where a child not over fifteen years of age, or a person over fifteen years of age and a public charge, is admitted to the institution for the feeble minded, no commitment by the probate court is necessary and no fees to physicians for mental examination can be allowed.

However, if the child is over fifteen and not a public charge, such child shall be committed to the institution by the probate court, as provided in section 1902 General Code, and in that case the physicians making the mental examination and the required certificate shall be allowed each the sum of $5.00 and witness fees as allowed in the court of common pleas.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 5, 1917.

HON. B. O. BISTLINE, Probate Judge, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 12, 1917, as follows:

"I find the statutes silent in regard to the amount allowed to physicians called to conduct an inquest in a proceeding to commit a child to the institution for feeble minded.

Will you kindly give us an opinion as to the amount that should be allowed in such cases and by whom it should be paid?"

Section 1891 G. C. reads:

"The trustees of the institutions for feeble minded youth, may admit thereto all youth of this class not over fifteen years of age who have been residents of the state for one year, and are not capable of receiving instruction in the common schools."

Section 1892 G. C. reads:

"The trustees shall prescribe and publish instructions and forms for the admission of pupils, and may include in them such interrogatories as they think necessary or useful. Such instructions and forms shall be furnished to any person applying therefor, and also be sent in sufficient numbers to the probate judges in the several counties."

Section 1895 G. C. reads:

"The custodial department shall be entirely and especially devoted to the reception, detention, care and training of idiotic and feeble minded children and adults, regardless of sex or color, and shall be so planned as to provide separate classifications of the numerous groups embraced under the terms idiotic and imbecile or feeble minded. Cases afflicted with paralysis shall have a due proportion of space and care in the custodial department."

Section 1901 G. C. reads:

"The trustees shall receive as inmates of the custodial department, feeble minded children, residents of this state, under the age of fifteen years, who are incapable of receiving instruction in the common schools of the state, and adults of the same class, over this age, who are public charges. The trustees shall prescribe, and cause to be printed, instructions and forms of application for their admission, include therein interrogatories and require answers thereto, under oath, showing facts needed for their information. Such instructions and forms shall be furnished to applicants for the admission of any person or patient, in whole or in part as a state beneficiary, and be endorsed by the probate judge of the county in which he resides at the time of making the application."

Section 1903 G. C. (103 O. L., 245), reads:

"Feeble minded persons of such inoffensive habits as to make them proper subjects for classification and discipline in the institution may be admitted, on pursuing the same course of legal commitment as governs admission to the state hospital for the insane."

It will be noted from these sections that a child under fifteen years of age is admitted into the institution for feeble minded by virtue of the provisions of section 1891 and 1892, above quoted, under such rules and regulations as the Ohio board of administration (which board succeeded to the powers and duties of the board of trustees of the institution for feeble minded) prescribes.

In an opinion rendered by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, found in volume 1 of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, p. 311, I find the following statement:

"Under authority of section 1892 General Code, the board of administration, who succeeded to all the duties of the board of trustees of the institution for feeble minded youth, may provide the terms and requirements for admission of pupils to this institution. No medical examination is required. The statute does not provide that applicants should first be examined as to their mental condition, but authorizes the board to prescribe and publish instructions and forms for the admission of pupils; and they may include therein such interrogatories as they may think necessary or useful to have answered.

This view is sustained by the case of Doran v. Fleming, 17 Circuit Decision 737.

Section 1893 General Code provides for the admission of pupils over fifteen years of age. It is as follows:

'If the capacity of the institution allows the reception of pupils besides those above described, the trustees may admit persons of greater age, and persons not resident in the state. For all who are not residents of the state for the required time, the trustees shall charge and receive for the institution a fair rate of compensation, to be fixed by them.'

I have already held in an opinion addressed to Dr. E. J. Emerick, of the date of September 25, 1911, that feeble minded persons over fifteen years of age, who are not public charges, can only be admitted to the institution by commitment by a probate judge, after witnesses are subpoenaed, hearing had, and a certificate signed by two medical witnesses; that persons who are public charges may be admitted upon simple application.

So that, answering your question specifically, two medical witnesses are not required to admit persons under fifteen years of age, eligible to be admitted to the institution for feeble minded youth; and two witnesses are not required to admit persons over fifteen and under twenty-one years of age, who are public charges, and who are admitted under authority of section 1893 General Code, but two medical witnesses are required for persons over fifteen years of age and under twenty-one years of age not public charges, who are admitted to the institution.

Coming now to your second question, section 1902 provides as follows:

'Feeble minded adults of such inoffensive habits as to make them proper subjects for classification and discipline in the institution may be admitted, on pursuing the same course of legal commitment as govern admission to the state hospital for the insane.'

Proceedings for admission of the insane are found in section 1953 et seq. General Code. To admit patients to a hospital for the insane requires the certificate of two medical witnesses, who are allowed, under section 1981 General Code, five dollars each for making the examination and certificate. Section 1902, above quoted, provides: Feeble minded adults may be committed to the institution for feeble minded youth on pursuing the same course of legal commitment which governs admission to state hospitals for the insane. It therefore requires the testimony and certificate of two medical witnesses to commit feeble minded adults to the institution, and they are entitled to five dollars for making the examination and certificate, as provided in section 1981 General Code."

This followed, as will be seen from the statement quoted, an opinion rendered by Mr. Hogan to the superintendent of the institution for feeble minded, found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1911-1912, Vol. 2, page 980. In that opinion he stated:

"The trustees are empowered to accept without legal commitment persons over the age of fifteen years, incapable of receiving instructions in the common schools, who are public charges. For such admission the formalities prescribed in section 1901 are sufficient. On the other hand, the trustees must admit into the custodial department, feeble-minded adults committed by proceedings under sections 1903 et seq. General Code, if the trustees are satisfied that they are of such inoffensive habits as to make them proper subjects of classification and discipline in the institution."

This opinion was approved by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, Vol. 2, page 1460, in which he held:

"An adult person of feeble mind, who is a public charge, may be admitted to the custodial department of the institution for feeble-minded youth under the provisions of and in accordance with the formalities prescribed by section 1901 G. C., but an adult person of feeble mind who is not a public charge may only be admitted to said institution as provided by section 1902 G. C. as amended 103 O. L. 245."

From a consideration of the statutes quoted and the opinions referred to, I think it is clear that sections 1891, 1892 and 1901 General Code authorizes the admission upon rules prescribed by the board of administration of children not over fifteen years of age who have been residents of the state for one year and who are not capable of receiving instruction in the common schools, and authorizes as well the admission into the custodial department of the feeble minded institution children under the age of fifteen who are incapable of receiving instruction in the common school and who are residents of the state, and adults of the same class over fifteen years of age who are public charges. In the admission of such persons to the institution for feeble minded youth no commitment by the probate court is necessary, nor is the testimony of any medical witnesses required. If the person to be committed is over fifteen years of age and not a public charge, then section 1902 applies. This section adopts the same method of legal commitment to the feeble minded institution as is provided by statute for admission to state hospitals for the insane. Proceedings for admission to insane hospitals are found in sections 1953 et seq. of the General Code.

It was held by Mr. Hogan in an opinion found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, Vol. 1, page 310, above quoted, that in these cases the testimony and certificate of two medical witnesses is required to commit feeble minded adults to the institution and they are entitled to $5.00 for making the examination and certificates, as provided in section 1891 General Code.

You do not state in your communication whether or not the person to be committed to the institution for feeble minded is under or over fifteen years of age. You do, however, inquire as to the proceeding to commit a child to the institution for feeble minded.

With the statutes and authorities quoted in mind, I advise you that if the child referred to is not over fifteen years of age, or is over fifteen years of age and a public charge, no commitment by the probate court is necessary and no fees to physicians for examination can be allowed. If, however, the child is over fifteen years of age and not a public charge, such child should be committed to the institution by the probate court, as provided in section 1902 General Code, and in that case the physicians examining the child and making the certificate required, shall be allowed each the sum of $5.00 "and witness fees as allowed in the court of common pleas."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRUANT OFFICER—WOMEN CANNOT BE APPOINTED.

The position of truant officer, as provided for under section 7769 General Code, is a public office, and women cannot be appointed to, or qualify for such position.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 5, 1917.

HON. EARL K. SOLETHER, Prosecuting Attorney, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 19, 1917, you submit the following to this department for answer:

> "One of the school boards of this county has put up to me the proposition of whether or not a woman can serve as truant officer as provided in section 7769 and the following sections of the General Code. I wish you would give me your advice in the matter.
> This question comes from the school board of Rossford, in this county, where there is a large foreign population. It seems that they have a district nurse there whom they wish to designate as a truant officer, and I believe if this could be done it would be a great help to the school board."

The question for determination is whether or not a woman can hold the position of truant officer. The first thing to be determined is whether the position of truant officer may be considered as a public office or merely as a public employment. This question must be determined from the duties of the position rather than from the name that might be applied thereto.

Section 7769 General Code, authorizes the appointment of a truant officer and the sections following prescribe the duties of such position. Section 7769 General Code provides:

> "To aid in the enforcement hereof, truant officers shall be appointed as follows: In city districts the board of education must appoint and employ a truant officer and may employ such assistants to such truant officer as may be deemed advisable; in village and rural districts the board of education may appoint a constable or other person as truant officer. The compensation of the truant officer and assistants shall be fixed and paid by the board appointing them."

Section 7770 General Code reads:

> "The truant officer and assistants shall be vested with police powers, and the authority to serve warrants, and have further authority to enter workshops, factories, stores and all other places where children are employed, and do whatever may be necessary, in the way of investigation or otherwise, to enforce this act. He also may take into custody any youth between eight and fifteen years of age, or between fifteen and sixteen years of age when not regularly employed who is not attending school and shall conduct such youth to the school he has been attending, or which he rightfully should attend."

Section 7771 General Code reads as follows:

> "The truant officer shall institute proceedings against any officer, parent, guardian, person, partnership or corporation, violating any provisions of this chapter, and otherwise discharge the duties described therein, and perform such other service as the superintendent of schools or the board of education may deem necessary to preserve the morals and secure the good conduct of school children, and to enforce the provisions of this chapter. The truant officer shall keep on file the name, address and record of all children between the ages of fifteen and sixteen to whom age and schooling certificates have been granted who desire employment, and manufacturers, employers or other persons requiring help of legal age shall have access to such files. The truant officer shall co-operate with the industrial commission in enforcing the conditions and requirements of the child labor laws of Ohio, furnishing upon request such data as he has collected in his reports of the children from eight to sixteen years of age and also concerning employers, to the industrial commission and to the superintendent of public instruction. He must keep a record of his transactions for the inspection and information of the superintendent of schools and the board of education; and make daily reports to the superintendent during the school term in districts having them, and to the clerk of the board of education in districts not having superintendents as often as required by him. Suitable blanks for the use of the truant officer shall be provided by the clerk of the board of education."

The above section prescribes the main duties to be performed by a truant officer, and while he has other duties to perform the above provisions are sufficient to determine whether or not the holding of such position is a public office.

It will be observed that section 7770 General Code, gives to the truant officer, police power with authority to serve warrants. Under the provisions of section 7771

General Code such officer is authorized to institute proceedings against any officer, parent, guardian, person, partnership or corporation violating any provisions of the chapter pertaining to compulsory education.

The powers herein granted to the position of truant officer are clearly a part of the sovereignity of the state.

The rule by which a public officer may be distinguished from a public employment is stated in the case of state ex rel. v. Jennings, 57 Ohio State, page 415, where one of the branches of the syllabus reads:

> "To constitute a public office against the incumbent of which quo warranto will lie, it is essential that certain independent public duties, a part of the sovereignity of the state, should be appointed to it by law, to be exercised by the incumbent, in virtue of his election or appointment to the office, thus created and defined, and not as a mere employe, subject to the direction and control of some one else."

On page 429 of the above opinion, Minshall, J., says:

> "But the character of an office cannot be attached to a position by a name merely. Whether it be an office or not, will depend upon the nature and character of the duties attached to it by law."

While the name "officer" is attached to the position of truant officer, and it is designated in section 7769 General Code that the board of education "must appoint and employ a truant officer," the use of the terms "officer" and "employe" are not conclusive as to the nature of the position.

The duties which are placed upon the position of truant officer are independent and are to be exercised by the incumbent of such position and the incumbent is not subject to the direction and control of some one else. Furthermore, the powers granted to the truant officer are powers which are derived directly from the sovereign powers of the state. The powers herein granted, are similar to those exercised by a patrolman of a city. In the case of State ex rel. v. City of Painesville the first branch of the syllabus reads:

> "A duly appointed patrolman of the police department of a city is an officer within the meaning of the laws of Ohio."

This is substantially the holding in the case of Feathergill v. State ex rel. 33 Ind., App., 683, wherein it is held:

> "A truant officer under section 6033-d, Burns 1901, is a public officer, and must qualify as provided by section 7533, Burns 1901, before assuming the duties of the office."

On page 685 of the opinion Roby, J., says:

> "Following that part of section 2, above quoted, and carried into section 3, his (truant officer) duties are specified, the power conferred upon him, while it is confined within limits is a part of the power possessed by the state and inherent to sovereignity."

Upon examination of the provisions of section 6033-d, Burns 1901, referred to in the above opinion, it is found that the duties therein prescribed for the truant officer are not as broad as those granted to the truant officer in this state. The part of the above section applicable to the duties of the truant officer reads as follows:

> "The truant officer shall see that the provisions of this act are complied with, and when from personal knowledge or by report or complaint from any resident or teacher of the townships under his supervision, he believes that any child subject to the provisions of this act is habitually tardy or absent from school, he shall immediately give written notice to the parent, guardian or custodian of such a child that the attendance of such child at school is required and if within five days such parent, guardian or custodian of said child does not comply with the provisions of this section, then such truant officer shall make complaint against such parent, guardian or custodian of such child in any court of record for violations of the provision of this act."

It is apparent from the duties placed upon the position of truant officer, and the decisions above cited, that the position of truant officer is a public office.

The sections of the General Code authorizing the appointment of a truant officer do not specifically provide that such officer must take an oath of office. It is provided, however, by section 2 of the General Code that each person chosen or appointed to an office shall take an oath of office. This section reads as follows:

> "Each person chosen or appointed to an office under the constitution or laws of the state, and each deputy or clerk of such officer, shall take an oath of office before entering upon the discharge of his duties. The failure to take such oath shall not affect his liability or the liability of his sureties."

The question now arises as to whether a woman can fill the position of truant officer. There is no specific provision of statute which authorizes the appointment of a woman for that position.

Women were granted the right to vote and to hold the position of member of the board of education by the provisions of section 4862 General Code, which section reads:

> "Every woman born in the United States or who is the wife or daughter of a citizen of the United States, who is over twenty-one years of age and possesses the necessary qualifications in regard to residence hereinafter provided for men shall be entitled to vote and to be voted for member of the board of education and upon no other question."

It is specifically provided herein that a woman shall not be permitted to vote upon any other question.

In an opinion by Honorable Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, under date of April 3, 1913, and reported in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for the year 1913, Vol. 1, p. 466, the right of a woman to be elected as clerk or treasurer of the board of education was under consideration. It was held therein that a woman did not have such right except where the statutes specifically provided that she could hold such position as it did so provide in authorizing the election of a member of the board of education to elect one of its members as clerk of said board. At page 469 of the above report Mr. Hogan says:

> "By virtue of section 4747 General Code, boards of education in all districts, except in township districts, may elect one of their own members as clerk of said board of education. It follows, therefore, that if a woman is a member of such board she can be elected clerk thereof by virtue of said section. There is no statutory provisions where a woman other than a member of such board of education can be elected clerk thereof, and inasmuch as the legislature has not yet seen fit by legislative enactment to grant the right to women to be elected clerk other than to such woman as happen to be elected as members of school boards of village, city and special school districts, it is my opinion that a woman who is not a member of such board of education cannot be elected clerk thereof. The statute is to be strictly construed in this regard and goes no further than its plain terms purport."

He applies the same principle to the position of treasurer of the board of education and the same principle of law will apply to the position of truant officer.

The above principle is based upon the provisions of the constitution of the state of Ohio, section 4, article XV, which section reads as follows:

"No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector; provided that women who are citizens may be appointed as members of boards of, or to positions in, those departments and institutions established by the state or any political subdivisions thereof involving the interests or care of women or children or both."

This section is subject, however, to the provisions of Article VI of the constitution, which article covers the subject of education. Section 2 of said article VI reads as follows:

"The general assembly shall make such provisions, by taxation, or otherwise, as, with the income arising from the school trust fund, will secure a thorough and efficient system of common schools throughout the state; but no religious or other sect, or sects, shall ever have any exclusive right to, or control of, any part of the school funds of this state."

Section 3 of said article reads:

"Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state supported by public funds; provided, that each school district embraced wholly or in part within any city shall have the power by referendum vote to determine for itself the number of members and the organization of the district board of education, and provision shall be made by law for the exercise of this power by such school districts."

These sections give to the general assembly authority to legislate as to the organization, administration and control of the public school system.

Section 3 was adopted September 3, 1912, and section 2 has been substantially a part of the constitution of Ohio since 1802.

In the case of State ex rel. v. City of Cincinnati, 19th Ohio, page 178, the supreme court had under consideration an act of the legislature which authorized the trustees of a township and other named officers "to create one or more school districts, for colored persons, in every such township, city, town or village."

The second section of the act authorized "the adult male colored tax payers residing in the districts to meet and choose their school directors." The court sustained the validity of this article and also held that the act impliedly authorized the selection of colored persons as members of the school board.

On page 197, Hitchcock, C. J., says:

> "So far as the elective officers of the state, county or township are concerned they must be white men. They can be elected only by white men. White men alone are legal voters at state, county, and township elections. Beyond this the court does not prescribe. Nor does it even go thus far with respect to all county and township officers.
> Now a school director, although in some respects a public officer, is not even a township officer. He is merely the officer of a school district—a political organization unknown to the constitution—the mere creation of legislative enactments. And it seems to the court that the person creating the political organization might well define the qualifications of its officers, if in so doing they do not violate an express provision of the charter under which they themselves act."

This case recognizes the right of the legislature to create a school district and to authorize persons who have not a constitutional right to vote to choose members of the board of directors of a school district and to be members of such board.

The next case to be considered is that of State ex rel. v. The Board of Elections, etc., 9th circuit court, page 124. In this case, what is now known as section 4862 General Code, supra, granting the right to women to vote for members of the board of education, was under consideration. The validity of that section was sustained. The syllabus of this case reads as follows:

> "The act of April 24, 1894, conferring upon women the right to vote and be voted for at any election held for the purpose of choosing any school director, member of the board of education or school council under the general or special laws of the state is valid, it being within the power to provide for the establishment and maintenance of common schools which the constitution confers upon the general assembly, and not within the limitation contained in section one of article five."

This decision follows that of State ex rel., v. City of Cincinnati, 19th Ohio, 178, supra, and was affirmed without report upon authority of the above case in Mills v. City Board of Elections, 54 O. S., 631.

This case also recognizes the right of the legislature to determine the qualifications of electors at elections for school districts and the qualifications of persons who may hold offices in a school district.

In the case of Cline v. Martin, 94 O. S., 420, the validity of the act creating county school districts was under consideration and the act was held to be constitutional. Judge Donahue, in the opinion of the court, reviews the former holdings of the supreme court above cited. On pages 427 and 428 he says:

> "If there were any doubt about the correctness of the ruling of this court in the case of Mills v. City Board of Elections et al., supra, that doubt is entirely removed by the amendment to the constitution of September 3, 1912, which amendment supplements sections 1 and 2 of article VI. There is now no other possible construction of these sections than that given them by this court in the case of Mills v. City Board of Elections et al., supra, in so far as they affected the decision in that case.
> That judgment of the circuit court was affirmed without report, upon the authority of State ex rel., v. City of Cincinnati, 19 Ohio, 178. In that case this court expressly recognized the distinction between a member of the board of education of a township school district and a township officer. In the opinion of Hitchcock, C. J., at page 197, it is said: 'Now a school director, although in some respects a public officer, is not even a township officer. He is merely the officer of a school district—a political organization unknown to the constitution—a mere creature of legislative enactment.'

It would appear from these decisions that the question whether or not a member of a board of education is a township, county or municipal officer is no longer an open one in this state."

The effect of the above holdings of the supreme court is that an office in a school district is not a constitutional office and that the general assembly under the authority of sections 2 and 3, of Article VI of the constitution has full power to legislate as to the qualifications of the persons who may hold positions in a school district.

Coming now to the particular position under consideration here the general assembly has not legislated so as to permit women to hold the position of truant officer. Until the legislature passes such legislation a woman cannot hold such position.

In conclusion, the position of truant officer, as provided for under section 7769 General Code, is a public office, and a woman cannot be appointed to, or qualify for, such position.

Since the above opinion was written you have submitted a further inquiry as follows:

"Can a lady school teacher act as truant officer, and what effect would the fact that she is a nonresident of the school district in which her appointment as truant officer has been made, have upon the question?"

In view of the conclusion above reached, the above question must be answered in the negative, that is, that a lady school teacher can not hold the position of truant officer. It is not necessary therefore to consider the effect of such teacher's being a nonresident of the school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW—WHO ENTITLED TO PROTECTION —INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

1. Every person who employs five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, trade, profession or occupation, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, is entitled upon compliance therewith, to the protection afforded by the workmen's compensation act.

2. Any person who enters into a contract with an independent contractor may, upon compliance with the workmen's compensation act, obtain the protection of said act for himself and the employes of said independent contractor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 7, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication in which you request my opinion upon the following:

> "Are the persons employed under the saleman's and dealer's contracts enclosed employes of J. J. M.?
> Since Mr. M. has paid his premium into the state insurance fund with the understanding that such employes were protected, may compensation be paid in case of injury if you find that they are not employes of Mr. M?"

The first contract is what is commonly known as a "dealer's contract" with a distributor. According to its terms the distributor employs the dealer to sell certain merchandise upon a commission. It is unnecessary to go into this contract, as it is clearly a contract of employment, and by its terms the dealer is required to give to the distributor a bond for the faithful performance of his duties as specified in said contract of employment.

The second contract is made between the dealer and a salesman, the dealer obtaining his right to make such contract under the contract between his and the distributor first noted. In the second contract the dealer employs the salesman to sell certain merchandise, and it is provided in this contract that the salesman must give a bond for the faithful performance of his duties, which bond runs in favor, not only of the dealer, but also of the distributor, and the main company with which the distributor has his contract. The bond provided for in the contract between the dealer and the distributor also runs in favor of both the distributor and the company with whom the distributor has his contract.

The contract between the salesman and the dealer also contains a provision that the contract is a personal one between the salesman and the dealer, and that neither the distributor nor the company are to be held responsible for payment of commissions or charges falling due under the contract; and that all claims of liability of any kind against the distributor or the company are waived.

I call your attention to the above as showing that both of these contracts are contracts of employment. Under the first the relation of employer and employe expressly exists between the distributor and the dealer; in the second contract a provision is embodied under which the distributor may, as against a claim made by the salesman, assert the claim that the salesman is the employe of the dealer and not of the distributor. This provision can undoubtedly be waived by the distributor and he may regard the salesman as his employe if he cares to do so.

Our statute defining the term "employe" and thus specifying what persons come under the protection of the compensation act, was amended by the last legislature

(section 1465-61, 107 O. L. 159) and the second and third paragraphs of said act now read:

> "2. Every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also including minors who are legally permitted to work for hire under the laws of the state, but not including any person whose employment is but casual and not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer."
> 3. Every person in the service of any independent contractor or sub-contractor who has failed to pay into the state insurance fund the amount of premium determined and fixed by the industrial commission of Ohio for his employment or occupation, or to elect to pay compensation direct to his injured and to the dependents of his killed employes, as provided in section 1465-69 General Code, shall be considered as the employe of the person who has entered into a contract, whether written or verbal, with such independent contractor unless such employes, or their legal representatives or beneficiaries elect, after injury or death, to regard such independent contractor as the employer."

You will note that the second paragraph is very broad and my opinion is if the distributor employs five or more persons under contracts of employment similar to those submitted by you, regularly in the same business, he is undoubtedly entitled to enter the state insurance fund and to be given protection; and further that if he makes application for insurance of persons employed as salesmen, under contracts between such salesmen and a dealer who has a contract with him, and lists such salesmen as his employes and pays the premiums provided, such persons must be regarded as his employes under contemplation of the workmen's compensation act, and that he is entitled to take out state insurance for his and their benefit.

Even if the dealer could be regarded as an independent contractor in his contract with the salesman, the distributor could be held at the option of the salesman under paragraph 3 of section 1465-61 above quoted.

For the reason that the workmen's compensation law should be given a liberal construction to accomplish the purposes for which it was enacted, and the fact that the last amendment to section 1465-61 G. C. shows clearly the purpose of the legislature to extend the protection of the act to all employes so far as possible; and that it has attempted so far as the employe is concerned to make it immaterial whether the employe is employed by an independent contractor or by the person who entered into the contract with the independent contractor, it is unnecessary to consider whether in the question submitted by you the dealer is to be regarded as an independent contractor; as the distributor by the statute is made liable, he certainly can insure against this liability.

My answer, therefore, to your first question is in the affirmative.

This makes it unnecessary to answer your second question.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

EMPLOYE—OF INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR—WHO HAS FAILED TO PAY INTO STATE INSURANCE FUND OR ELECTED TO PAY COMPENSATION DIRECT—HOW COMPENSATION PAID.

An employe of an independent contractor who has failed to pay into the state insurance fund the amount of premium determined and fixed by the industrial commission of Ohio, or to elect to pay compensation direct under section 1465-69 G. C. if he (such employe) makes claim for compensation, is to be considered as the employe of the person who entered into the contract with such independent contractor. If such person has paid into the state insurance fund the required premiums compensation must be made out of the fund; if such person has elected to pay compensation direct under section 1465-69 G. C., compensation must be made under that section; if such person has failed to pay into the state insurance fund the required premiums, or to elect to pay compensation direct under section 1465-69 G. C., then the employe may claim and be awarded compensation in the manner provided by section 1465-74 (section 27*) G. C.*

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 7, 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have submitted the following request for my opinion:

"Paragraph 3 of section 1465-61 of the amended workmen's compensation act, reads as follows:

'Every person in the service of any independent contractor or sub-contractor who has failed to pay into the state insurance fund the amount of premium determined and fixed by the industrial commission of Ohio for his employment or occupation, or to elect to pay compensation direct to his injured and to the dependents of his killed employes, as provided in section 1465-69, General Code, shall be considered as the employe of the person who has entered into a contract, whether written or verbal, with such independent contractor unless such employes, or their legal representatives or beneficiaries elect, after injury or death, to regard such independent contractor as the employer.'

We should like to have your advice on the following points:

1. If an employe of an independent contractor is injured and elects to consider himself an employe of the person or corporation who entered into the contract with such independent contractor, and such person or corporation not having included such employe in his payroll report, would the industrial commission recognize such claim?

2. If the industrial commission would not recognize such claim, would it then be up to the injured employe, should he still consider himself an employe of the employer entering into such contract to seek means of collecting damages which may be due him for injuries received?

3. If the industrial commission does recognize such claim and pays to such injured workman the damages growing out of his injuries, would such payments be charged up to the risk of the employer entering into such contract with the independent contractor?

4. What application has the foregoing section to the condition where an employer, such as a mercantile establishment, has contractual relations with a firm other than building or construction contractors where such firm is amenable to, but has not complied with, the Ohio workmen's compensation act?"

Answering your questions in order:

(1) If the employer has complied with the act and paid in his premiums the payment must be made out of the fund. If the employer misrepresents the amount of his payroll, or the payroll on which his premium is based, he should be prosecuted under section 1465-97 of the General Code. The commission must recognize the claim if made; it was the intent of the legislature by passing this amendment to protect employes of independent contractors who had not complied with the act. If the person who made the contract with the independent contractor has not complied with the act, nevertheless the employe is, by this amendment, to be considered as his employe and can make claim under section 27 (section 1465-74 G. C.).

(2) The commission must recognize the claim if made—either as an ordinary claim of an employe whose employer has complied with the act; or under section 27 (Sec. 1465-74 G. C.) if the employer has not complied with the act.

(3) Yes.

(4) It applies to all cases where the relation of employer and employe exists as contemplated in paragraph 2 of section 1465-61 G. C., which reads:

> "2. Every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also including minors who are legally permitted to work for hire under the laws of the state, but not including any person whose employment is but casual and not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer."

The test is: does the relation of employer and employe exist between the independent contractor and the employe; if it does, and the independent contractor has not complied with the law, the employe may treat the person who entered into the contract with the independent contractor as his employer.

As stated above, it was the intent of the legislature to protect employes of independent contractors. By this amendment the person who makes a contract with an independent contractor is liable as employer to the employes of the independent contractor if the independent contractor does not pay into the state fund the premium he should pay, or does not elect to pay compensation direct under section 1465-69 G. C.

If the independent contractor does not pay such premiums or elect to pay direct, then the person who entered into the contract with him is an "employer" under the contemplation of the act and his employes are entitled to compensation from the fund, if he has paid his premiums, and under section 27 (Sec. 1465-74 G. C.) if he has not.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE LAW—NOT APPLICABLE TO ESTATES PASSING BY VIRTUE OF WILL OF TESTATOR WHO DIED BEFORE LAW BECAME EFFECTIVE.

The collateral inheritance tax law does not apply to estates passing by virtue of the will of a testator who died before the law became effective, though such estates did not vest until after such date.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 7, 1917.

HON. F. G. ROBERTS, Probate Judge, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I regret that your letter of November 8th did not receive the immediate attention of this department. The question which you ask was confused with other questions pertaining to the application of the collateral inheritance tax law which have been under consideration here for some time.

You inquire whether the present collateral inheritance tax law, which was passed in 1893, applies to a bequest passing to collateral heirs under the following circumstances:

H. died testate August 3, 1883. Her will created a trust in the Portsmouth Reading Room Association. Said association has recently been dissolved and the funds which were the subject of the trust have been turned over to the administrator with the will annexed for distribution under the residuary clause of the will to persons who are not within the exemption provisions of the inheritance tax law.

This precise question was determined under the direct inheritance tax act of 1904, in the case of Executors of Eury v. The State, 72 O. S., 448. In that case the claim of the state to the tax was predicated upon the contention that the estates created by the will there involved did not vest until after the tax law became effective. The court did not decide whether the estates therein involved were vested as of the date of the death of the testator or were contingent or executory, becoming vested only at a later date and after the law went into effect. After expressing the view that if it were necessary to determine that question "we probably should conclude that they were vested though some of them were defeasible." Summers, J., says, page 454:

> "But the occasion of the tax being the devolution of property it ought to attach to such interests only as arise by reason of a death subsequent to the act, and such clearly appears to have been the legislative intent, for not only is the act not expressly made retroactive but its words are all prospective. The right to inherit shall be taxed. The tax shall become due and payable immediately upon the death of the decedent, and shall at once become a lien upon said property, and if not paid within one year after the death of the decedent interest at six per cent. is to be collected, * * * Other provisions that would be difficult of application of the act is retroactive are contained in it, so that it would be unreasonable to conclude that the legislature, in the absence of any suitable provisions for a retroactive operation of the act, intended it so to operate."

While this reasoning is far from convincing in that there is nothing retroactive about the making an inheritance tax law apply to interests that do not vest until after it goes into effect though by virtue of a death occurring before it goes into effect, yet the court passed squarely upon the question, and though another statute was involved, the phraseology of that act was so similar to that of the collateral inheritance tax law now in force that the case can not be distinguished.

I am therefore of the opinion that even if the residuary bequest referred to by you should be regarded as executory or contingent and as not having vested as of the death of the testator, yet the present inheritance tax, which did not go into effect until after that death occurred, does not apply to the estates arising therefrom.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—AMENDMENT TO THE ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE GREAT AMERICAN MUTUAL INDEMNITY COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December, 7, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 4, 1917, you submit for my approval amendment to the articles of incorporation of The Great American Mutual Indemnity Company, the original articles of which company were approved by me under date of November 24, 1917. By the amendment the company has elected to transact two of the kinds of business, other than fire insurance, authorized by the provisions of section 9607-2 G. C. (107 O. L. 647.) In the opinion above referred to I held that a mutual insurance company, organized under the provisions of the act above noted, may lawfully elect to transact more than one of the kinds of business therein specified, other than fire insurance, and inasmuch as the certificate with respect to the amendment of the articles of incorporation seems to be otherwise in conformity with the provisions of law applicable to the amendment of articles of incorporation of corporations, the same is hereby approved.

I herewith return you check for six dollars, drawn to your order, by Mr. Endly, secretary-treasurer of the company.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

INDEPENDENT AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY—HOW DEPRIVED OF RIGHT TO SECURE PUBLIC FUNDS FROM COUNTY TREASURER.

Failure to comply with the provisions of section 9882 General Code, or the payment of dividends to its members, will deprive an independent agricultural society of the right to secure public funds from the county treasurer under the provisions of section 9880-1 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 7, 1917.

HONORABLE WALTER BECK, Prosecuting Attorney, Lisbon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in which you submit the following inquiry for answer:

> "We have in Columbiana county a fair association known as 'The East Palestine Fair Co.,' which was organized in 1906, under the provisions of section 9880 G. C., and subsequent sections.
> "Following the enactment of section 9880-1 (105-106 Ohio Laws, 273) this agricultural society filed its report with the board of agriculture of Ohio and received a certificate authorizing the treasurer of Columbiana county to pay this independent agriculture society the sum of $800.00.
> "This agricultural society has paid dividends to its members, and admits that they have not complied in any way with provisions of section 9882 G. C.
> "Under these conditions, I should like to have your opinion as to whether or not this independent society can make claim to being entitled to this allowance."

The first question presented is whether an agricultural society can secure aid from the county without complying with the provisions of section 9882 General Code. The effect of paying dividends to the members of the association will also be considered in this opinion.

The association seeking money from the county is an independent society, and such society is governed by the provisions of section 9880-1 General Code, which provides as follows:

> "When thirty or more persons, residents of a county or of contiguous counties not to exceed three, are organized into an independent agricultural society that has held annual fairs for agricultural advancement previous to January 1, 1915, in a county wherein is located a county agricultural society, and when such independent society has held an annual exhibition in accordance with the three following sections, and made proper report the state board, then, upon presentation to the county auditor of a certificate from the president of the state board attested by the secretary thereof, that the laws of Ohio and the rules of the board have been complied with, the county auditor of the county, if the fair board be residents of one county, shall draw an order on the treasurer of the county in favor of the president of the independent agricultural society for a sum equal to the amount paid to the county fair and the treasurer shall pay said order. If the fair board of the independent agricultural society be residents of more than one county, the auditors of such counties shall draw orders on their respective treasurers for their proportionate share of an amount equal to an average amount paid to the several county fair boards to be divided according to population of the counties according to the last federal census. The treasurer or treasurers shall pay such order or orders from the county funds."

This section prescribes the conditions upon which it can secure aid from the county and one of those conditions is,

"when such independent society has held an annual exhibition in accordance with the three following sections."

Section 9881 General Code provides:

"The several county or district societies formed under the provisions of the preceding section, annually shall offer and award premiums for the improvement of soils, tillage, crops, manures, implements, stock, articles of domestic industry, and such other articles, productions, and improvements, as they deem proper, and may perform all acts they deem best calculated to promote the agricultural and household manufacturing interests of the district and of the state. They shall regulate the amount of premiums, and their different grades, so that small as well as large farmers may have an opporunity to compete therefor. In making their awards special reference shall be had to the profits which accrue, or are likely to accrue from the improved mode of raising the crop, or improving the soil, or stock, or of the fabrication of the articles thus offered, so that the premium will be given for the most economical mode of improvement."

Section 9882 General Code reads:

"Persons offering to compete for premiums on improved modes of tillage, or the production of crops or other articles, before such premium is adjudged, shall deliver to the awarding committee a full and correct statement of the process of the mode of tillage or production, and the expense and value thereof, with a view to showing accurately the profits derived or expected to be derived therefrom."

From the statement contained in your letter, it appears that the agricultural society in question has not complied with the provisions of section 9882 General Code. The statute, however, requires that the provisions of said section shall be complied with.

The failure therefore to comply with that section would not meet the conditions prescribed by statute for the payment of money from the county treasury.

The rule of construction of such condition is stated in 2 Corpus Juris, 990, at section 7, as follows:

"Under some of the statutes, agricultural societies upon compliance with certain conditions are entitled to receive appropriations from the public treasury for their support and advancement; and acts authorizing appropriations of public money in their behalf are not unconstitional, although such appropriations to private corporations are forbidden. Under some statutes the number of societies in each state or county entitled to aid is not limited, while under others only the society first duly organized. The power to aid must be strictly construed, the society must have been duly organized, and must have performed all the conditions prescribed by the statute."

In an opinion by Honorable Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, under date of July 16, 1912, and reported in volume II, page 1412, of the report of the attorney-general for the year 1912, he had under consideration questions involving an agricultural society, and he says, on page 1414:

"In order for such an association to secure aid from the county, it must comply with the conditions of the statute."

In the case of State ex rel. v. Reed, 12 O. D. (N. S.) 415, it is held:

"A court in construing section 3697 Revised Statutes in determining an amount for which the auditor shall draw his warrant on the county treasurer to pay county agricultural societies, cannot be influenced by the construction put upon it by the agricultural societies or other county auditors, or by the wisdom of the act, the operation thereof or hardship imposed thereby."

A case in point is that of the Nemaha Fair Association v. Thummel, 47 Kan., 182, wherein it is held:

"In order to entitle a county or district agricultural society to representation in the state board of agriculture, the reports prescribed in section 2, of the act for the encouragement of agriculture must have been made; and unless these reports have been made at the time and in the manner required, such society is not entitled to demand an appropriation of the public monies of the county, such as is provided for in section 8 of the act mentioned."

In this case the agricultural society in question had complied with all requests of the secretary of the state agricultural society, and it was therefore contended that it was not necessary for it to comply with the provisions of the statute. This construction, however, was overruled by the court and the court held that the provisions of the statute must be complied with and that they could neither be ignored nor modified by the state secretary.

The legislature of Ohio has prescribed that the provisions of section 9882 General Code must be complied with before an independent agricultural society can secure aid from the county under the provisions of section 9880-1 General Code. Failure to comply with said section 9882 General Code will deprive such society of the right to secure money from the public treasuries.

The effect of paying dividends to the members of an agricultural society calls for a consideration of the provisions of sections 4 and 6 of article VIII of the constitution of Ohio.

Section 4, article VIII of the constitution provides as follows:

"The credit of the state shall not, in any manner, be given or loaned to, or in aid of, any individual association or corporation whatever; nor shall the state ever hereafter become a joint owner, or stockholder, in any company or association in this state, or elsewhere, formed for any purpose whatever."

Section 6, article VIII, reads:

"No laws shall be passed authorizing any county, city, town or township, by vote of its citizens, or otherwise, to become a stockholder in any joint stock company, corporation, or association whatever; or to raise money for, or to loan its credit to, or in aid of, any such company, corporation, or association; provided, that nothing in this section shall prevent the insuring of public buildings or property in mutual insurance associations or companies. Laws may be passed providing for the regulation of all rates charged or to be charged by any insurance company, corporation or association organized under the laws of this state or doing any insurance business in this state for profit."

Under the provisions of section 4, of said article VIII, supra, the credit of the state cannot be given in aid of any individual association or corporation whatever, and under the provisions of section 6, of said article VIII the general assembly is prohibited from authorizing any county or other political subdivision to raise money for any joint stock company, corporation or association whatever.

The question of the constitutionality of section 9880 General Code, authorizing payment from the county to agricultural societies, was under consideration in the case of County Commissioners v. Brown, Auditor, 1 O. N. P. (N. S.), 357. The first branch of the syllabus of said case reads as follows:

"The aid extended to agricultural societies under section 3697 is not in the nature of loans to corporations, or of assistance to private enterprises carried on for the benefit of individuals, but was intended from an early period in the history of the state to promote the agricultural resources of the state, and is therefore not violative of section 4 of article VIII of the constitution, which prohibits the state from loaning its credit to or becoming a joint owner or stockholder in any company or association in the state."

After quoting the provisions of sections 4 and 6 of article VIII of the constitution above cited, Collings, J., says at page 358:

"If the provisions made in the statute under consideration can be said to be a loan to the corporation, or if it is in aid merely of a private enterprise carried on for the benefit of the individual members of the corporation, I should say, as would anyone else, that the statute is violative of this section of the constitution. But from the history of legislation on the subject, and in view of the fact that from a very early period in the history of the state, it has been Ohio law to promote and encourage the development of the agricultural resources of the state, I doubt whether this statute was intended to or does in effect aid any private enterprise. On the contrary, I rather take the legislative intention to be, and the effect of the statute to be, the offering of a premium to the formation and carrying on of agricultural societies to the end that agriculture may be fostered and promoted. This is at least a tenable view, and if a correct one, the statute should stand, at least so far as this section of the constitution is concerned. The statute is not so clearly violative of it as requires a court of inferior jurisdiction to hold it unconstitutional."

The principle upon which this act is held to be valid is that agricultural associations are not organized for the benefit of the individual members of the association. This would not be true in cases where such associations pay dividends to their members. In such a case, the association would be carried on for profit, and it would come within the prohibitions of sections 4 and 6 of article VIII of the constitution above cited.

What constitutes a corporation not for profit was under consideration in the case of Snyder v. The Chamber of Commerce, 53 Ohio State, 1. Shauck, J., says at page 11 as to the corporation then under consideration:

"The corporation though authorized to own or lease real estate for its general purposes, was not authorized to deal therein, nor could it transact any business out of which profits given as dividends could be realized."

He further says:

"Corporations for profit within the meaning of the statute are those which are formed for the prosecution of business enterprises with a view to realizing gains to be distributed as dividends among the share holders in proportion to their contribution to the capital stock."

Where an agricultural society pays dividends to its members, it cannot be said that such society is organized not for profit. It would under such circumstances be a corporation for the benefit of its individual members and could not therefore secure aid from the county to carry on its business. To give public aid by the contribution of money to such an association would be the giving or loaning of the credit of the county to an association in violation of the provisions of section 6 of article VIII of the constitution of Ohio.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

ROADS — CONSTRUCTION WITHIN OR THROUGH MUNICIPALITY — METHOD FOR APPORTIONING COST—ASSESSMENTS.

1. In cases where the county commissioners construct a road into, within or through a municipality, they must either select one of the four methods set out in section 6919 G. C. (107 O. L., 98), for apportioning that part of the cost and expense of the improvement not borne by the city, or the township trustees and county commissioners must enter into an agreement by virtue of which each assumes a certain part of the cost and expense of said improvement, not borne by the city, unless the county cares to assume the total cost and expense.

2. If one of the methods set out in section 6919 G. C. is selected, then that part of the cost and expense of the improvement not assumed by the city, which is to be assessed against property owners, must be assessed in the manner provided in sections 6919, 6920, 6922, 6923 and 6925 G. C.

3. The council of the municipality may assess, against the abutting property owners, any or all of that part of the cost and expense of the improvement assumed by it.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 7, 1917.

HON. J. H. MUSSER, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of November 17, 1917, requesting my opinion as follows:

> "I wish that you would please apply these sections (referring to sections 6951-1, 6919, 6920, 6922, 6923, 6924 and 6925 G. C.) and any related sections to the following facts:
> "The city of Wapakoneta has part of a street known as West Auglaize street, which is a continuation of a main market road and intercounty highway within said city, and which intercounty highway and main market road extends from Wapakoneta to St. Marys. It is desired that West Auglaize street be improved from a point where it is now paved to the west corporation line to connect with that part of the highway lying without the municipality. The city is willing to pay, under section 6949, sixty per cent of the costs of the improvement which they intend to assess on the abutting property as far as possible, and the city asks that the county and the township, in which the municipality lies, pay the balance of the cost, or forty per cent. It is possible that the commissioners would be willing to pay twenty-five per cent thereof and I would like to have your opinion as to whether or not there is a method by which the township can be required to pay fifteen per cent of the cost without an agreement between the township trustees and the commissioners to that effect."

I will note the general plan or scheme of road building by county commissioners. This is set forth in sections 6906 to 6953 inc. G. C. (107 O. L. 95-109), so far as your inquiry is concerned.

Sections 6949 to 6953 inc. form a part of the general scheme of road building by county commissioners and apply particularly to those proceedings connected with the improvement of roads lying within a municipality, running into the same or passing through it.

However, it must be borne in mind that sections 6906 et seq. apply just as well to improvements lying within a municipality, performed under sections 6949 to 6953 inc., in so far as the powers and duties of the county commissioners are concerned.

The following is a brief statement of the steps which would have to be taken in the matter about which you inquire:

(1) The city of Wapakoneta should adopt an ordinance giving its consent to the county commissioners to construct the improvement, in which ordinance the city could agree to assume whatever part of the cost and expense of the improvement it might desire, which you suggest is sixty per cent.

(2) The county commissioners would then adopt a resolution under section 6910 G. C., declaring the necessity for making the improvement, in which resolution they must specify which one of the methods of apportioning the cost and expense of the improvement they desire to follow, as set out in section 6919 G. C.

(3) They would then order the county surveyor to make plans, specifications, etc., in accordance with section 6911, which plans and specifications must be approved by the county commissioners.

(4) These plans, specifications, etc., would then be submitted to the council of Wapakoneta, for its approval, under section 6950.

(5) Then, if the council of Wapakoneta approves the plans, specifications, etc., submitted to it, it would proceed to give notice as provided in section 6950.

(6) The county commissioners would let the contract for the improvement under sections 6945 and 6952 G. C.

Coming now to the apportionment of the cost and expense of the improvement:

As you suggest in your letter, Wapakoneta will, in its agreement with the county commissioners, as shown by an ordinance duly adopted, assume sixty per cent of the cost and expense of the improvement. This leaves forty per cent to be otherwise assumed. As before stated, when the county commissioners pass the resolution of necessity for the improvement, they must set forth the method of paying the cost and expense of same, which must be one of the methods set out in section 6919 G. C. The county commissioners can select one of the four methods therein mentioned, but whichever one is selected must be followed to the exclusion of all other methods, even to the particular division of the cost and expense set out in the method adopted. The township trustees have nothing to do with the method to be adopted by the county commissioners. This matter is up to the sound discretion of the county commissioners.

You make particular reference to section 6951-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 108), which reads in part as follows:

> "The board of county commissioners may provide for an improvement within a municipality by levying against the property benefitted in the same manner as is herein provided for in sections 6919, 6920, 6922, 6923 and 6925 of this act and as provided in section 6924 of the General Code. * * *"

This provision has nothing to do with the cost and expense of the improvement, other than that part of the same which is to be assessed against property owners; that is, the part of the cost and expense of the improvement which is to be assessed against property owners, the amount of which depends upon which one of the methods set out in section 6919 is selected by the commissioners, may be assessed in the manner provided by sections 6919, 6920, 6922, 6923 and 6925 G. C. Section 6924 is also mentioned, but this section was repealed at the last session of the legislature and therefore its provisions no longer apply.

A part of the cost and expense of the improvement, irrespective of which one of the four methods named in section 6919 G. C. is selected, must be assessed against property owners; that is, a part of the forty per cent not borne by the city of Wapakoneta must be borne by the property owners, without regard to which method is adopted, this amount being assessed in the same manner as is provided in the sections above mentioned.

It appears from your letter that it is the desire of those interested in the improvement that the forty per cent not borne by the city of Wapakoneta shall be assumed by the county commissioners and the township trustees, and that none of it be assessed against property owners. This cannot be done, as hereinbefore stated, if one of the methods set out in section 6919 G. C. is selected by the county commissioners, and they must select one of those methods. This is true unless the county commissioners and township trustees of the township in which Wapakoneta is located decide to follow section 6921 G. C. This section provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners, or joint board thereof, upon a unanimous vote, may without a petition therefor, order that all the compensation and damages, costs and expenses of constructing any improvement be paid out of the proceeds of any levy or levies for road purposes on the grand duplicate of the county, or out of any road improvement fund available therefor, or the county commissioners or joint board thereof, may enter into an agreement with the trustees of the township or townships in which said improvement is in whole or part situated, whereby said county and township, or one or more of them may pay such proportion or amount of the damages, costs and expenses as may be agreed upon between them."

Under this section the county commissioners may assume the whole of the cost and expense of the improvement, which in this case would be the forty per cent not assumed by the city of Wapakoneta; or the county commissioners and township trustees may enter into an agreement by virtue of which each shall pay such proportion of the damages, costs and expenses as may be agreed upon between them.

If the county commissioners and township trustees can agree as to the proportion of this forty per cent each shall assume, then before the county commissioners adopt a resolution of necessity for the improvement, the township trustees should adopt a resolution agreeing to assume a certain percentage of the said forty per cent, and the county commissioners should adopt a resolution agreeing to assume the balance of said forty per cent not borne by the city of Wapakoneta. If this is done, then in the resolution of necessity, as provided by section 6910 G. C., instead of setting out one of the methods mentioned in section 6919, there should appear the agreement as entered into between the county commissioners and the township trustees. But unless this agreement can be made or unless the county commissioners care to assume the entire cost and expense over and above that borne by the city, as provided in section 6921 G. C., then one of the said methods set out in section 6919 G. C. must be followed.

You state it is the desire of the city of Wapakoneta to assess as much of the sixty per cent of the cost of the improvement, assumed by it, on the abutting property owners, as is possible.

Section 6950 G. C. (107 O. L. 107) provides in part as follows:

> "* * * The council of said municipality may assess against abutting property owners all or any part of the proportion of the cost and expense of said improvement and the compensation and damages to be paid by it. * * *"

So this provision gives the municipality power to assess against the abutting property owners all or any part of the cost and expense of the improvement assumed by the city.

I might say in passing that inasmuch as this is an intercounty highway and main market road, and is an improvement over which the county commissioners are assuming jurisdiction, it would be well for them to submit the plans and specifications to the state highway commissioner, in accordance with section 1203 G. C. (107 O. L. 125).

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the county commissioners, in making the improvement mentioned in your communication, would be compelled to follow one of two courses:

(a) To select one of the methods set out in section 6919 G. C., for apportioning the cost and expense of the improvement, in any one of which a part of the cost and expense would be assessed against property owners, under sections 6919, 6920, 6922, 6923 and 6925 G. C.; or

(b) The township trustees and county commissioners would have to enter into an agreement in which each would assume a certain part of the cost and expense of the improvement, not otherwise borne by the city of Wapakoneta. Of course under the provisions of section 6921 G. C. the county commissioners could assume, if they so desired to do, the total cost and expense of the improvement, over and above that borne by the city.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL COAL YARD—NOT A PUBLIC UTILITY—MUNICIPALITY MAY SUPPLY COAL DURING EMERGENCY—NON-CHARTERED MUNICIPALITIES DO NOT POSSESS GENERAL POLICE POWERS.

A municipal coal yard is not a public utility within the meaning of article XVIII, sections 4, 5 and 12 of the constitution.

During periods of emergency, when private enterprise breaks down as a means of supplying the needs of the people for a commodity like coal, the police power of any subdivision to which it has been adequately delegated is sufficient to enable the subdivision temporarily to engage in the retailing of coal during the existence of the emergency.

Municipal corporations in Ohio, which have not framed and adopted a charter for their own government do not, however, possess general police power, even in local matters, under the decision of the supreme court in State ex rel. v. Lynch, 88 O. S., 71. Such municipalities may not, therefore, operate municipal coal yards.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 7, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of several communications from city solicitors of the state requesting my opinion on the right of a city to establish, maintain and operate a municipal coal yard.

Inasmuch as these requests concern a matter of state wide interest and importance, I am taking the liberty of expressing my views with respect to same in an opinion addressed to the bureau. The questions presented in said requests for my opinion amount, in substance, to the following:

> Are either charter or non-charter cities authorized and empowered under the constitution and statutes to establish, maintain and operate a municipal coal yard for the purpose of buying coal and selling it in a retail way to the citizens of said city, and to expend public funds therefor?

Neither the constitution nor the statutes of the state of Ohio contain any express provision granting to cities the power to establish, maintain and operate a municipal coal yard for the above mentioned purpose.

If such power exists at all it is contained in and must be implied from some general grant of power. The constitutional and statutory provisions to which my attention has been directed in this regard are as follows:

> Article XVIII:
> "Section 2. General laws shall be passed to provide for the incorporation and government of cities and villages; and additional laws may also be passed for the government of municipalities adopting the same; but no such additional law shall become operative in any municipality until it shall have been submitted to the electors thereof, and affirmed by a majority of those voting thereon, under regulations to be established by law."
> "Section 3. Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws."

"Section 4. Any municipality may acquire, construct, own, lease and operate within or without its corporate limits, any public utility the product or service of which is or is to be supplied to the municipality or its inhabitants, and may contract with others for any such product or service. The acquisition of any such public utility may be by condemnation or otherwise, and a municipality may acquire thereby the use of, or full title to, the property and franchise of any company or person supplying to the municipality or its inhabitants the service or product of any such utility."

"Section 5. Any municipality proceeding to acquire, construct, own, lease or operate a public utility, or to contract with any person or company therefor, shall act by ordinance and no such ordinance shall take effect until after thirty days from its passage. If within said thirty days a petition signed by ten percentum of the electors of the municipality shall be filed with the executive authority thereof demanding a referendum on such ordinance it shall not take effect until submitted to the electors and approved by a majority of those voting thereon. The submission of any such question shall be governed by all the provisions of section 8 of this article as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission."

"Section 7. Any municipality may frame and adopt or amend a charter for its government and may, subject to the provisions of section 3 of this article, exercise thereunder all powers of local self-government."

"Section 12. Any municipality which acquires, constructs or extends any public utility and desires to raise money for such purposes may issue mortgage bonds therefor beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law; provided that such mortgage bonds issued beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law shall not impose any liability upon such municipality, but shall be secured only upon the property and revenues of such public utility, including a franchise stating the terms upon which, in case of foreclosure, the purchaser may operate the same, which franchise shall in no case extend for a longer period than twenty years from the date of the sale of such utility and franchise on foreclosure."

"Section 13. Laws may be passed to limit the power of municipalities to levy taxes and incur debts for local purposes, and may require reports from municipalities as to their financial condition and transactions, in such form as may be provided by law, and may provide for the examination of the vouchers, books and accounts of all municipal authorities, or of public undertakings conducted by such authorities."

Section 4206 G. C.:

"The legislative power of each city shall be vested in, and exercised by a council, composed of not less than seven members, four of whom shall be elected by wards and three of whom shall be elected by electors of the city at large. * * *"

Section 4227-1 G. C.:

"Ordinances and other measures providing for the exercise of any and all powers of government granted by the constitution or now delegated or hereafter delegated to any municipal corporation, by the general assembly, may be proposed by initiative petition. Such initiative petition must contain the signatures of not less than ten percentum of the electors of such municipal corporation. * * *"

Section 4324 G. C.:

"The director of public service shall manage and supervise all public works and undertakings of the city, except as otherwise provided by law, and shall have all powers and perform all duties conferred upon him by law. He shall keep a record of his proceedings, a copy of which, certified by him, shall be competent evidence in all courts."

Section 4326 G. C.:

"The director of public service shall manage water, lighting, heating, power, garbage and other undertakings of the city, parks, baths, playgrounds, market houses, cemeteries, crematories, sewage disposal plants and farms, and shall make and preserve surveys, maps, plans, drawings and estimates. He shall supervise the construction and have charge of the maintenance of public buildings and other property of the corporation not otherwise provided for in this title. He shall have the management of all other matters provided by the council in connection with the public service of the city."

In so far as I have been able to ascertain, the above quoted sections contain the only grants of power from which the power in question might be implied. These provisions in their application to the matter in hand refer to two things, viz: (1 powers of local self-government, and (2) public utilities. In order that the right of a municipality to establish and operate a municipal coal yard in the manner above mentioned may be considered to exist, it must be first shown that the doing of that thing amounts to the exercise of a power of local self-government or to the establishment and operation of a public utility.

In the face of the absence of express authority granted by the legislature to a non-charter city to do the thing about which inquiry is made, it is obvious that the enterprise must be classified either as a governmental one or as a public utility before the application of the general constitutional provisions which have been quoted may be made.

The two kinds of enterprises are rather sharply distinguished in the constitution itself; so that for the purposes of this opinion I feel justified in assuming that a given enterprise cannot at the same time be a governmental one and a public utility, but must be one or the other.

In the dissenting opinion by Donahue, J., in State ex rel. v. Lynch, 88 O. S. 106, this distinction is not made, but it is argued that anything which a municipal corporation may appropriately be authorized to do is necessarily governmental. Reference is made therein to such activities as owning and operating a municipal power, lighting and heating plant; provisions for water supply; the ownership and maintenance of public grounds, parks and recreation centers; the establishment of municipal lodging houses, public baths and bath houses; the establishment of public libraries and reading rooms; and the maintenance of public band concerts.

It is submitted that all these activities do not fall within the same class for the purpose of our present discussion. Clearly enough the ownership and operation of a lighting or water plant is a public utility; but with equal clearness it seems to me that the maintenance of free band concerts and free libraries is not a public utility. One distinction which will at once assert itself between the two classes as exemplified by these instances is that in the case of a municipal water or light plant a charge is made for the service furnished by the municipality; while in the case of the libraries and band concerts the service is furnished free.

Now both classes of activities might constitute "public purposes" within the constitutional limitations upon the power of taxation resulting from provisions like article I, section 19 of the Ohio constitution, or the limitations inherent in the nature of the taxing power itself. Thus, it is conceded that the power of taxation can be constitutionally exerted only for a public purpose, yet there may be more than one kind of public purpose, and here we are forced to assume that there are two distinct kinds of such purposes.

The argument of Donahue, J., appears to me to be responsive to the general question as to what constitutes a public purpose, but on the point on which it is actually made, viz: as to whether or not the maintenance of a municipal moving picture show is a governmental activity as distinguished from a public utility—that is to say, falls within what might be termed the police activities of the municipality or within the proprietary functions thereof, the argument, as I have stated, does not appeal to me as satisfactory.

What then is the distinction between a public utility and a governmental enterprise other than a public utility? It seems that the only satisfactory approach to this distinction lies in an adequate definition of the phrase "public utility." Without quoting authorities and indeed without referring to any except Prof. Bruce Wyman's work on public service companies, section 50, let me say that I am satisfied that a single and certain test can be laid down for the determination of this question. A public utility is a calling or service which is inherently monopolistic in character. A calling or service becomes monopolistic in character when it responds to an obvious public need and there are natural limitations upon the ability of private individuals freely to supply the need. Such limitations may surround the source of the supply of the raw material required; though at this date it would probably be unsafe to say that a limitation on the supply of raw material makes the supplying of the commodity, however necessary it may be to the public in a given state of civilization, a "public calling." More frequently and certainly more obviously an inherent limitation upon the rendition of the service or the supplying of the commodity because of the nature of the medium of distribution required is sufficient to make the calling a public utility. Thus, though it must be admitted that the decisions are not all in harmony, it seems clear to me that a waterworks is a public utility, not because the people need water, but because pipes are necessary to transport it; so that the supplying of water by means of wagons, or by some such means, would not be a public calling unless indeed the person engaged in it had a natural monopoly on the source of supply of pure water. If that source were equally open to all it is difficult to see how supplying water in bottles, transported by means of wagons, or other vehicles, to the premises of the consumer, could be regarded as a public utility upon any grounds that are not common to practically all occupations engaged in furnishing commodities of common public consumption. Clothing, milk, bread, meat—all these things are no less necessary than water and unless all the clothing is made in one place; unless some one owns all the cows there are in the immediate neighborhood; unless some such circumstance varies the ordinary condition of affairs, I do not see that furnishing any such necessary commodity can be a public utility in and of itself. Many cases apparently overlook this obvious distinction. Seemingly such a distinction was overlooked in Laughlin v. City of Portland, 111 Me. 486, 51 L. R. A. (n. s.) 1143, sustaining the constitutionality of a statute expressly authorizing a municipality to maintain a public yard for the sale of fuel to its inhabitants at cost as against the objection that it involved an unconstitutional extension of the taxing power.

The same oversight is even more palpable in Holton v. Camilla, 134 Ga., 560, 31 L. R. A. (n. s.) 116.

These decisions, from which there is a great temptation to quote at length, set forth with great ability and learning the history of the growing recognition by the courts of the broad scope of what constitutes a "public purpose," but in my opinion their reasoning does violence to the principle which I have tried to state and which I believe to be sound.

On the other hand there are many cases which I believe to be sustained by the better reasoning which hold that a purely business activity of a municipal corporation in which the municipality comes into competition with private enterprise cannot be sustained unless the activity amounts to a public calling.

State v. Toledo, 48 O. S. 112-137;

Opinion of the Justices, 155 Mass. 601, 15 L. R. A. 10.

It must be admitted that a very strong argument is made by the Maine court in the Portland case, supra, to sustain its position in that case, which is directly in point. Upon careful examination of the opinion it will be found that the court does not deny the distinction which I have laid down but merely attempts to apply the principles for which I have contended to the coal business by asserting that the existence of a monopoly in the coal business is a fact of which the court should take judicial notice. I find myself unable to follow the Maine court to the conclusion reached by that court for the reason that though it be admitted that there is a monopoly in the production of coal in the sense in which the Maine court defined the term "monopoly," yet it does not follow that there is any inherent or natural monopoly in the distribution of coal to the ultimate consumer. In other words, the reasoning of the court goes no further than to support the conclusion that the business of mining coal is a public calling. The court reaches this difficulty when it comes to deal with the argument that if selling coal to public consumers is a public calling, then the operation of a grocery store or meat market or bakery is likewise a public calling. It seems to me that the production of coal and its distribution to the markets is not characterized by monopolistic conditions in this country at the present time to a greater degree than the business of supplying meat, for example. Whatever doubt there may be on this score the decision of the supreme court of this state in State v. Toledo seems to me to foreclose further discussion of the question. In that case the court expressed the following dictum:

> "It is inquired, why do not municipalities also purchase coal mines and issue their bonds therefor, and embark in the business of mining and selling coal to private consumers? An obvious reply is, that coal and other fuel may be carried to the consumer by the ordinary channels of transportation, and at comparatively moderate expense, while in conveying natural gas, streets must be opened, pipes laid, works erected, fixtures and machinery purchased, and other expenses incurred, beyond the enterprise and capital of an individual."

I think it is obvious that under the sections of the constitution above quoted, which purport to confer upon any municipality the power to construct and operate public utilities, there must be some limitation. The term "public utility" must be capable of definition in the nature of the case. The authorities —even the Maine case, in which the result is opposed to the conclusion which I have reached—sustain the definition which I have suggested and which makes monopoly the test. The Maine case is in my opinion erroneous, first, because the monopolistic conditions surrounding the coal business therein referred to are artificial and illegal instead of natural, and, second, because such conditions pertain to what might be termed the production end of the business instead of the supplying end of the business.

Again, the present need for public coal yards which I assume to exist is temporary in its character. More will be said on this point in dealing with the next branch of the question. At the present time it is sufficient to state that in my opinion the power granted by sections 4 et seq. of article XVIII of the constitution is to conduct such operations as through a period of years and under normal conditions constitute public utilities. An enterprise which today calls for governmental operation but tomorrow in normal times will not stand in need of governmental control cannot in my judgment be termed a public calling.

I conclude, therefore, on the first branch of the question that a service rendered by a municipality to its inhabitants, conducted as a business and, indeed, capable of being operated at a profit, is a public utility if it supplies a public necessity and there is a natural limitation upon its rendition; but where such limitations upon the rendition of a particular service as may exist at a given time are temporary or artificial and in normal times no such limitation exists, the service is not a public utility. The need which the public may have for such service at such time is one that government broadly considered is not powerless to supply, but the activity would not be a public utility under such circumstances but would rather embody an exertion of the police power which is to be sharply distinguished from the operation of a public utility. The business of supplying coal to domestic and industrial consumers in a city is not normally one with respect to which there is any natural or inherent limitation of a monopolistic character, whatever may be said respecting the business of mining coal. Therefore such business is not a public calling and a municipal coal yard would not be a public utility.

Coming now to a consideration of whether or not, though a municipal coal yard is not a public utility such an enterprise may be justified under present abnormal conditions as a governmental one. On this point we have the opinion of the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court in re Municipal Fuel Plants, 182 Mass. 605, 60 L. R. A. 592, the head note in which is as follows:

"Municipalities have authority to provide fuel for paupers; but they cannot be given power by the legislature to buy and sell fuel in competition with private enterprise, although it is scarce and high in price and the cost to consumers may be thereby reduced, unless there is such a scarcity as to create a general and widespread distress in the community which cannot be met by private enterprise."

I think I am able to say on the basis of the experience of this office during the past few months that private enterprise has most assuredly broken down at this time as a means of supplying the great and pressing public need for coal. The conditions suggested by the Massachusetts court seem to be satisfied and if this decision is sound it would follow that to avoid public suffering and quite apart from such service as a municipality might render in the relief of the poor, a municipal corporation, if it possesses the general police power, may temporarily and during the existence of the emergency enter the business of retailing coal.

The idea that the police power must be held adequate to meet all emergencies and therefore may be called into practical operation by a given emergency towards ends to which it would not relate did the emergency not exist is expressed in the recent case of Wilson v. New, 37 Supreme Ct. Rep. 298. In this case the supreme court of the United States held that the Adamson law, by which congress attempted a temporary regulation of the wages of the employes of interstate railroads, was within the power of congress to regulate commerce. It was admitted that the power to regulate wages was ordinarily no part of the power to regulate commerce; but it was laid down broadly that when a dispute between employers and employes respecting wages threatened to paralyze interstate commerce congress was not to be held powerless to take such action as would put an end to the dispute and keep commerce moving.

On this reasoning it would seem that if the conditions laid down by the Massachusetts case were satisfied and if the only way in which the inhabitants of a municipality could obtain an adequate supply of coal would be through the entry of the municipality into the business of selling coal, the police power of the municipality, to the extent such power were possessed by the corporation, might be invoked to sustain the enterprise during the existence of the emergency conditions. The principle is that the police power may avail itself of any method which the necessities of the case require. As has been suggested the power may be likened to the individual right of self defense. Both are alike at all times limited by the rule of necessity, but so far as present considerations are concerned by no other rule. Therefore, if a municipal coal yard is directly and immediately necessary to preserve public health, safety and economic welfare, I know of no principle on which the power to establish such an enterprise could be denied. The same would be true respecting the distribution of milk, groceries, meats and other public necessities.

This conclusion, with which I am satisfied, brings me to the consideration of the question as to whether a non-charter municipality has adequate police power. Prior to the adoption of article XVIII of the constitution it would probably have to be conceded that municipalities did not have any inherent local police power and that they possessed such powers only as were expressly or by necessary implication granted to them by the legislature. It may be argued that the adoption of article XVIII did change the law in this respect. Sections 2 and 3 of that article have been quoted. The first of them enjoins upon the general assembly the duty of passing general laws for the government of municipalities. I think it must be conceded that whatever is provided by those general laws is binding upon municipalities which do not adopt charters or avail themselves of special laws passed for the government of municipalities adopting the same. In other words, whatever may be the inherent powers of non-charter cities they are certainly subject to the general laws.

Section 3 of the article in terms applies to all municipalities. It gives to them "all powers of local self-government" and the power to adopt and enforce such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with general laws.

Looking only to the face of the constitution it might be contended that the effect of section 3 upon non-charter cities is to reverse the presumption that formerly existed with respect to the powers of municipalities in the governmental field, so that now if section 3 is to be given any effect it means that municipalities have all governmental powers which are not taken away from them by general laws instead of being limited to such powers as were affirmatively conferred upon them by general laws, as formerly. To be sure, we should have to find in the general laws appropriate vehicles for the exercise of such powers as might be deemed to be granted to municipalities by the self-executing provisions of section 3, but when reference is had to the sections of the general code relative to the powers of council and the director of public service and to the powers of the electors to be exercised through the initiative, it would seem that no difficulty is to be encountered here. Council has all the legislative powers of the municipality. The director of public service is the officer who has to administer all of the public undertakings of the municipality; and those undertakings are not enumerated exhaustively but include such as may be established by council, in addition to those expressly provided by law. The electors have the right to initiate any measure within the power of the municipality under the constitution.

Construing the sections as they are, then, one might have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that local police power is fully granted to all municipal corporations in this state regardless of their classification as charter or non-charter cities, and that it may be exercised by council, and in the case under consideration its administration may be conferred upon the director of public service. However, we now come face to face with the decisions of our own supreme court in State ex rel. v. Lynch, supra, and in Billings v. Railway Co., 92 O. S. 478. In these cases, especially the first of them, it was apparently held that article XVIII, section 3, is not self-executing and that the only way a municipality may avail itself of the grant of power therein would be to adopt a charter under section 7 et seq. of the same article. The remarks of the judges delivering the opinions of the court in these cases on this point were not strictly necessary to the decisions in each case; but it would seem that they embody the law as it has been decided.

In the Lynch case it was held that a non-charter municipality might not point to article XVIII, section 3, as its authority for operating a municipal moving picture show. This decision was clearly right; for a municipal moving picture show would not be an activity referable to the police power in any sense; nor could it be justified as a public utility. It would have exactly the same standing as a municipal coal yard would have in ordinary times. Indeed, three members of the court in the Lynch case agreed that the enterprise was open to condemnation for this reason in addition to the other one suggested.

In Billings v. Railroad Co. it was held that a municipality which had adopted a charter was thereby exempted from the operation of general laws prescribing the conditions upon which franchises to operate street railways might be granted by municipal corporations generally. The inference from this decision and from the case of Carpenter v. Cincinnati, 92 O. S. 473, is that a city which has not adopted a charter remains subject to the general laws in such matters. This, as I have pointed out, is correct for the reason that a non-charter city is at all times subject to control both with respect to its frame work of government and with respect to the extent of its powers by the legislature, but it does not follow from these last two decisions that the old rule of strict construction of municipal powers still obtains in this state.

The opposing argument would be that article XVIII, section 3 is self-executing in the sense in which I have described the effect of that section. That is to say, under it the powers of a municipality are original, not derivative. They are subject, however, to control; to dimunition, not addition; to regulation, not creation. They may be diminished or regulated by the general laws of the state, if such general laws apply to them, or by the locally adopted charter, but when either the general laws or the charter are silent the power springs directly from the constitution.

Section 2 of article XVIII provides for the passage of general laws for the organization and government of municipal corporations. Article XIII, section 6, which formerly governed this subject matter, provided that "the general assembly shall provide for the organization of cities and incorporated villages by general laws * * *." The difference in phraseology is not without significance. Formerly there was no necessity of governing municipalities because municipalities had no inherent powers. When article XVIII was framed, however, it was seemingly contemplated that municipalities should have some inherent or natural rights or powers which would call for government or regulation.

Again, section 3 is not limited by any of its phraseology to non-charter cities. Indeed, as I read the opinion in State v. Lynch, supra, this concession is made. It is there argued that section 3 may apply to all cities but that it does not effectually operate as to non-charter cities because if a given power is claimed under it the claimant must trace the power not only to the municipality, but also to some proper organism within the municipality such as council or the people.

I quote the following from the opinion of Shauck, C. J., in State ex rel. v. Lynch, supra (page 92):

> "By the first and second sections municipalities are classified as cities and villages, and the legislature is peremptorily required to pass general laws for their organization and government. On the 15th of November, when the article took effect, such laws were already in force, and they continued to be in force, operating upon every municipality in the state until a change should be effected in some mode authorized by the amendment. This conclusion results necessarily from the familiar doctrine of Cass v. Dillon, 2 O. S. 607, where it was held that the new constitution of the state (that of 1851) created no new state. It only altered in some respects the fundamental law of a state already in existence; and even this was done pursuant to the prior constitution, under whose provisions the convention was called and the new constitution framed. * * *
> It is also to be observed that questions respecting the self-executing capacity of constitutional provisions usually relate to the necessity for legislative action to make them effective. This article provides two modes of securing the permitted immunity from the operation of the uniform laws which the legislature is required to pass. * * *

A fundamental defect in the relator's case is that it assumes that a power conferred upon a municipality is conferred upon its council, although every provision of the amendment with respect to this body merely authorizes it to make provisions for ascertaining the will of the electors. * * *

It seems, therefore, to be entirely beyond doubt that since the city of Toledo had not by a vote of its electors approved any additional law passed by the general assembly, and that its electors had not adopted a charter, the municipality and all of its departments have only such powers as were conferred by the general law; that is, such power only as it had prior to the 15th of November."

The following is quoted from the concurring opinion of Wilkins, J. (page 99):

"It cannot be argued that an agent of the municipality, chosen before the state granted to municipalities all this local governmental power, may exercise a power not within the scope of the agency when the agency was created. There is no pretense that the principal (the people of the city) has done anything since the council was elected to enlarge the authority of the agent (the council). The action of this council is based solely upon the first clause of section 3, article XVIII. And the argument of the relator is that the clause shall be interpreted to read thus: Municipal councils shall have authority to exercise all the powers of local self-government."

It might be contended that under the present municipal code all that is necessary effectually to confer a power upon the municipality thereunder is to grant the power to the municipality as such. It then becomes vested in the legislative sense in the council and in the administrative sense in the appropriate administrative department. If in the abstract all municipalities possess all powers of local self-government and if the power to establish a municipal coal yard in the face of an emergency, which is a police power, is a power of local self-government (which last I think needs no argument) then the principle of the Lynch case is the only reason which could be urged against the authority of the council to pass appropriate legislation looking to the exercise of this power.

As I see it, then, the central thought in the dicta in the Lynch case lies in the assumption that it is impossible to grant power to a municipality organized under the municipal code and subject thereto without also specifying that such power may be exercised by the council of the municipality or otherwise distributing its exercise through the various municipal organs of government.

In this connection I may point out that it was at all times competent for the general assembly prior to the adoption of article XVIII of the constitution effectually to confer a new power upon a municipality by the enactment of some such section as is found in title 12, division 2, chapter 1, part first of the General Code, which purports to enumerate the powers of municipal corporations. (See for example section 3647-1 G. C., adopted in 1911.)

In short, while conceding the correctness of the actual decisions in both the cases cited, one might easily disagree with the reasoning underlying the first paragraph of the syllabus in the Lynch case. But inasmuch as this language states the law of Ohio, I feel obliged to come to the conclusion that a municipal coal yard may not be operated by a non-charter city at the present time.

Limiting my answer, therefore, to non-charter cities I am of the opinion that even in the face of the present great emergency the council or the electors of a city, if it is deemed greatly necessary for the public health, safety and welfare to enter the retail coal business, may not do so. In short, the thing inquired about cannot be undertaken even as a police measure.

I take it that all those who have inquired of me about this subject are familiar with the poor laws and that it is assumed that a municipality as the local subdivision for the relief of the poor may purchase coal and distribute it to the needy under the same conditions as have always obtained.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

POLICE CHIEF—MARSHAL—FEES—TRANSPORTING PRISONERS TO OHIO REFORMATORY FOR WOMEN—WHEN SENTENCED BY MAYOR OR POLICE JUDGE.

There is no authority for the payment of any fees to marshals and chiefs of police for transporting prisoners to the Ohio reformatory for women in cases where they have been sentenced to such institution by the mayor, police or municipal judge. When prisoners have been sentenced to the reformatory for women by the justice of the peace, the constable may receive a fee of forty cents for serving the mittimus and the mileage as provided for in section 3347 G. C. He may also be reimbursed for the expense incurred in transporting and sustaining a prisoner such sum as may be allowed by the justice of the peace, from the county treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of September 26, 1917, as follows:

> "Sections 2148-5 and 2148-6 G. C. provide for sentence to the Ohio state reformatory for women by courts having jurisdiction. In view of the fact that there seems to be a general confusion of ideas on this point, the juvenile judge of Butler County has issued a warrant to convey in one case to a probation officer; the municipal court of Hamilton has issued one warrant to convey to the bailiff of the municipal court; the municipal court of Cincinnati has issued one warrant to convey to the humane officer; and many people are of the opinion that the warrant to convey should be issued to the sheriff of the county, for which service the sheriff is entitled to the same fees as are provided for by law for commitment to the Ohio state reformatory. See sections 2148-1, 2148-5 and 2134 G. C."
> Question. "To what officer should the commitment be issued to convey a woman to the Ohio state reformatory for women, and to what fees is such officer entitled therefor?"

"We have carefully looked over your opinion No. 427, rendered to the auditor of state under date of July 5, 1917, and we would say that while this opinion most thoroughly covers the conveyance by sheriffs, together with costs and transportation in felony cases, and in misdemeanor cases by sheriffs when committed from a common pleas or probate court, together with transportation under section 2997 G. C. and also in delinquency cases, we do not quite see that it covers sentences from police courts or municipal courts, both of which have jurisdiction under the laws of the Ohio state reformatory for women."

From your statement I take it that what you wish to know at this time is as to what officer should the commitment be issued to convey a woman to the Ohio reformatory for women, when such woman is sentenced to such institution by a mayor, justice of the peace, police court, and to what fees is such officer entitled for transporting such prisoner.

It is the duty of the constable to execute the orders of the justice of the peace, the marshal or chief of police to execute the orders of the mayor, the chief of police to execute the orders of the judge of the police court or municipal court, and it seems clear to me that in cases where these different courts sentence women to the Ohio reformatory for women, the prisoner should be transported to such institution by these officers.

No provision is made in the statutes relating to the Ohio reformatory for women for transportation of prisoners to the institution and if any fees are allowed constables, marshals or chiefs of police for this service, authority must be found elsewhere in the General Code.

Section 3347 G. C. provides in part:

"For services rendered, duly elected and qualified constables shall be entitled to receive the following fees: For services and return of copies, orders of arrests, warrant, attachment, garnishee, writ of replevin, or MITTIMUS, forty cents each, for each person named in the writ; * * * mileage, twenty cents for the first mile, and five cents per mile for each additional mile * * * transporting and sustaining prisoners, allowance made by the magistrate, and paid on his certificate; * * * ."

When a constable conveys a woman to the Ohio reformatory for women, he must have with him the mittimus or certificate of commitment and deliver the same to the superintendent of the Ohio reformatory for women. For rendering this service he may charge the fee allowed in the above section for the service of a mittimus, viz., forty cents, and may receive the mileage provided for in said section. This mileage, however, simply covers his own travel and not that of the prisoner. However, the provision of this section allowing the constable to be re-imbursed for transporting and sustaining prisoners in such sum as the magistrate allows, I think, is broad enough to cover this case and it is my opinion that the constable may receive reimbursement for transporting and sustaining a prisoner conveyed by him to the Ohio reformatory for women at Marysville such sum as may be allowed by the magistrate, and this sum when so allowed must be paid to such constable on the magistrate's certificate from the county treasury. The mileage and fee for serving the mittimus are to be paid out of the costs of the case. The fees of the marshal and chief of police for conveying the prisoner to the Ohio reformatory for women are fixed, if at all, by section 4387 with respect to marshals and section 4534 with respect to chiefs of police, respectively. Both provide that in the one case the marshal and in the other case the chief of police shall receive "the same fees as sheriffs and constables in similar cases." The fee of the sheriff for serving writs to the first named is seventy-five cents for the first name on the writ and twenty-five cents for each additional name and in addition thereto eight cents per mile going and returning (section 2845 G. C.). As will be seen, the fees allowed the sheriff for this service are quite different from the fees of the constable allowed in section 4375 G. C. Therefore, the sections which attempt to prescribe the fees of the marshal and chief of police as the same as those allowed to sheriffs and constables for similar services are meaningless.

Haserodt v. State, decided May 8, 1917, Court of Appeals, Ohio Law Bulletin Ed., Aug. 20, 1917, page 266.

It is therefore my opinion that no fees may be allowed the marshal or chief of police for conveying prisoners to the Ohio reformatory for women and I know of no statute authorizing the payment of any expenses incurred by them in such service, either on behalf of themselves or the prisoners.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—TRANSFERRING TERRITORY—CREATING NEW DISTRICTS OUT OF OLD DISTRICT—APPORTIONMENT OF INDEBTEDNESS—TUITION PAID BY ONE DISTRICT TO ANOTHER—UNDER MISTAKE OF FACT— RECOVERY.

1. In creating new districts out of any old district or parts thereof, or in transferring territory from one district to another, the county board of education should equitably apportion the indebtedness of the original district or districts to the districts newly formed or created.

2. Where money is paid by one school district to another in the way of tuition, under a mistake of fact, the district so paying it may recover the same from the district to which it is paid or from the district for the use and benefit of which the money was paid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 8, 1917.

HON. OTHO W. KENNEDY, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication fully setting out certain matters on which you desire my opinion. The facts, briefly stated, are as follows:

In Crawford county two townships, Cranberry and Auburn, join, Auburn lying on the east. Some fifteen or sixteen years ago the two boards of education of these townships transferred certain territory from Auburn township district to Cranberry township district, and made their records so show, but the clerks of the boards failed to notify the county auditor of the transfer.

Since said time the pupils of this supposed transferred territory have been attending school in Cranberry township district, without any question being raised as to tuition. Certain high school pupils from this supposed transferred territory have been attending school at the village of New Washington, which village lies in Cranberry township district, and the Cramberry township board of education has been paying their tuition on the theory that said territory was actually transferred from Auburn township district to Cranberry township district.

Further, a short time ago the county board of education created, out of a part of Auburn township district and parts of other districts, together with Tiro, a school district known as Tiro consolidated school district, the rest of Auburn township district forming North Auburn school district. A part of the supposed transferred territory lies in the North Auburn school district and a part in Tiro consolidated school district.

To your request you attach a map which makes the state of facts very plain. Upon these facts you ask two questions:

> 1. As a matter of law can the present North Auburn district and the present Tiro consolidated school district pay to Cranberry district the amount of money which it paid to the New Washington board of education for the education of high school pupils?
> 2. If the same can be so paid, how should the same be divided between North Auburn district and the Tiro district?"

We will consider the statutes as they existed fifteen or sixteen years ago, at the time the supposed transfer was made.

Section 3890 R. S. at that time read as follows:

> "Each organized township, exclusive of any of its territory included in a city, village or special district, shall constitute a school district, to be styled a township district."

Section 3893 R. S., which related to transfer of territory from one district to another, read in part as follows:

> "A part or the whole of any district may be transferred to an adjoining district, by the mutual consent of the boards of education having control of such districts; but no transfer shall take effect until a statement, or map, showing the boundaries of the territory transferred, is upon the records of such boards; nor, except when the transfer is for the purpose of forming a joint subdistrict, until a copy of such statement or map, certified by the clerks of the boards making the transfer, is filed with the auditor of the county in which the territory so transferred is situated; and any person living in the territory so transferred may appeal to the county commissioners, as provided in section thirty-nine hundred and sixty-seven, and the commissioners, at their first regular meeting thereafter, shall approve or vacate such transfer; * * * ."

Under this section no transfer could take effect until, among other things, a copy of the statement or map, certified by the clerks of the boards making the transfer, was filed with the auditor of the county in which the territory so transferred was situated. The right to appeal from the action of said boards to the county commissioners was also given.

From the provisions of this section it is plainly evident that the action taken by the Cranberry district and the Auburn district was of no force or effect whatever, in law, and the boundary line of the two township districts continued as it was prior to the attempted transfer, and, as set out in the facts, each township district received the taxes upon the property on either side of the line, as it had done prior to the supposed transfer.

We will briefly note the provisions of section 4022a R. S., relative to the attendance of pupils in a district other than that in which they reside. This section provided that if children of school age resided further than one and one-half miles from the school where they had a legal residence, they might attend the nearest subdistrict school and have their tuition paid by the board of education of the district where they had a legal residence. This section applied to pupils in grades below the high school and the provisions thereof have remained very much the same up to the present time.

Sections 7747 to 7751 G. C. provide for the tuition of pupils attending a high school. While for the purpose of this opinion I am not passing on the question as to whether all the pupils attending high school at New Washington, from the strip of territory in question, are entitled to have their tuition paid under sections 7747 to 7751 inc. G. C., yet it is quite clear, from said sections, that as to those who are so entitled to have their tuition paid the New Washington board of education would have to look to the Auburn township board for the same, because the strip of territory, as said before, was never in reality transferred from the Auburn school district to the Cranberry school district.

While the Auburn township board of education was in law compelled to pay the tuition of all pupils from this strip, entitled to attend the New Washington high school, under sections 7747 to 7751 inc. G. C., the Cranberry township board of education paid the tuition, on the theory that this strip of territory had been transferred from Auburn township district to Cranberry township district, and that Cranberry township district was receiving the taxes levied upon the property in said strip of territory. In other words, the Cranberry township board of education paid said tuition under a mistake of fact. If this money was paid to the New Washington board of education under a mistake of fact, what is the status of the three boards concerned relative thereto? In considering this we will note the following general propositions:

> "A mistake of fact is said to take place either when some fact which really exists is unknown or some fact is supposed to exist which really does not exist."
> "To authorize a recovery the mistake must be as to a material fact, but need not be mutual."

The facts about which you inquire come within these two statements and therefore we can draw the following conclusion:

> "A payment made by mistake of fact which the party is not by law obliged to make, under ignorance of the facts or in misapprehension in regard thereto, may be recovered back."

The above principles are set forth in 30 Cyc. 1316-1318.

Hence we are safe in drawing the conclusion that the Cranberry township board of education would be entitled in law to recover from the New Washington board of education the amount of money so paid to it under the mistake of fact.

However, a simpler way of adjusting this matter would be to consider that the Cranberry township board of education has paid money under mistake of fact, but for the use and benefit of Auburn township board of education, and for which payment said Cranberry board should be reimbursed by the Auburn township board, or rather the districts which have been formed from Auburn township.

With this conclusion, we will go one step further. As said before, a part of the territory of Auburn township, including a part of the strip which was supposedly transferred to Cranberry township, together with parts of other townships and Tiro village, were united by the county board of education to form the Tiro consolidated school district, and the northern part of Auburn township district, which includes a part of the strip supposedly transferred, was made part of the North Auburn district.

The question arises as to what proportion of the amount due Cranberry district should be paid by the two newly formed districts, namely, North Auburn school district and Tiro consolidated school district.

From the facts stated by you, I am not sure as to whether your county board, in forming these two districts, proceeded under section 4692 or section 4736 G. C. If it proceeded under section 4692, we find this provision relative to the transfer of territory:

> " * * * The county board of education is authorized to make an equitable division of the school funds of the transferred territory either in the treasury or in the course of collection. And also an equitable division of the indebtedness of the transferred territory."

If your board proceeded under section 4736 G. C., we find this provision therein made:

> " * * * The county board of education is authorized to appoint a board of education for such newly created school district and direct an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness belonging to the newly created district * * * ."

While the language used in these two sections is not very clear, yet it is my opinion that the legislature had in mind that the county board of education, in forming a district out of parts or the whole of other districts, or in transferring territory from one district to another, would make an equitable division of the indebtedness, existing against the original districts, between the newly formed districts; that is, in the case under consideration the county board of education, in creating the North Auburn school district out of parts of the Auburn district, and joining the rest of Auburn district to the Tiro consolidated school district, would make an equitable division of the indebtedness subsisting against Auburn district as it originally stood, between North Auburn school district and Tiro consolidated school district. If the county board of education has not already done this, it is my opinion it is still warranted in law in equitably dividing the one hundred and thirty-five dollars, which was a valid and subsisting obligation against Auburn township district, between North Auburn school district and Tiro consolidated school district.

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the county board of education should equitably divide the indebtedness of one hundred and thirty-five dollors between the North Auburn school district and the Tiro consolidated school district, and that after this is done the two districts would be warranted, and authorized in law, in paying to the Cranberry district the amount so apportioned to each by the county board of education.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—NOT LIABLE FOR TUITION OF PUPIL IN ADJOINING DISTRICT WHEN THE PARENT OF PUPIL OWNS PROPERTY IN SAID DISTRICT.

A rural board of education which is liable for the payment of tuition under section 7747 G. C. for a pupil who attends a high school in an adjoining district can take advantage of section 7683 G. C. on the ground that the parent of the pupil or such pupil owns property in the district maintaining the high school to which the child is sent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 10, 1917.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your communication for my opinion reads as follows:

"Can a rural board of education which is liable for the payment of tuition under section 7747 G. C., having a pupil attending high school in an adjoining district, take advantage of section 7683 G. C. on the ground that the parent of the pupil owns property in the district maintaining the high school to which the child is sent?

"I ask this question for the reason that Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, in his opinion for the year 1912, page 1421, answered it in the negative. However, in a recent opinion of our supreme court, to wit: State ex rel Nimberger, et al, v. Bushnell et al, Board of Education et al, 95 Ohio State 177, as found in the Ohio Law Reporter for June 25, 1917 the court at page 185 says:

"'Any district which is required to pay the tuition of a pupil residing therein, but attending school in another district, is entitled to the benefits of the provisions of section 7683 General Code and should be credited with the amount of school taxes paid upon property owned by the pupil or his parent in the district wherein is located the high school attended. Such credit should be made no matter who pays the tuition.'

"This statement by the court appears to be obiter dictum. However, in the face of the same would you feel justified in agreeing with the opinion of Mr Hogan above referred to."

Section 7683 G. C., to which you refer, reads:

"When a youth between the age of six and twenty-one years or his parent owns property in a school district in which he does not reside, and he attends the schools of such district, the amount of school tax paid on such property shall be credited on his tuition."

The history of said section is noted in the opinion of former Attorney General Hogan, to which you refer, and that I may draw my deductions I shall also note such history briefly.

The substance of what is now section 7683 was enacted first in 1873, 70 O. L., 195-215. Section 71 of said act reads in part:

> "Boards of education of city, village or special districts shall also have power to admit, without charge for tuition, persons within the school age, who are members of the family of any freeholder whose residence is not within this district, if any part of such freeholder's homestead is within such district."

That is, under said provision when any member of the family of any free-holder, who resided outside of the district of the city, village or special district attended school in such district and if any part of such free-holder's homestead is within such district, then the board of education had the power to admit such members of such family within the school age "without charge for tuition," it being evidently the intention and purpose of the legislature to permit the board, in the exercise of said power, to consider the taxes paid upon said property so located within the city, village or special district, to act as an offset against any tuition which would be chargeable to the pupils, children of such free-holder. Said section was amended in 1880, 77 O. L., 196, to read in part as follows:

> "The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age,who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district; and such youth may also be admitted free if they are members of the family of a free-holder whose residence is without but whose homestead is partly within such district. Each board of education may admit other persons of like age upon such terms or upon payment of such tuition as it may prescribe; provided that in all counties which do not contain a city of the first grade of the first class, in such case there shall be credited on the tuition so charged the amount of school tax in such district for the current school year, which may be paid by such non-resident pupil or a parent thereof * * * ."

Under said amended section, where a free-holder owned a homestead located in a school district, but the residence portion thereof was located without, said district, the children of such free-holder were permitted to attend the schools of the district even though such residence was located without, and instead of limiting the classes of districts to city, village and special, the amended section provided that the condition of the credit of tuition should apply to all cases where a city of the first grade of the first class was not located within the county, and instead of the board exempting the pupil from tuition, as was provided when the section was first enacted, the last amended section provides for the crediting on the tuition so charged the amount of the school tax. Said section was next amended in 1887, 84 O. L., 69, to read as follows:

> "The schools of each district shall be free to all youths between six (6) and twenty-one (21) years of age, who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district. * * * Each board of education may admit other persons of like age upon such terms or upon payment of such tuition as it may prescribe; provided, that in all counties which do not contain a city of the first grade of the first class, in such case there shall be credited on the tuition so charged the amount of school tax in such district for the current school year, which may be paid by such non-resident pupil or a parent thereof * * * ."

No material change is found in said amendment as far as the crediting of tuition is concerned.

The next amendment is found in 87 O. L., 317. but no change in substance was made by said amendment.

Material change, however, was made when the section was next amended in 97 O. L., 360. Said amendment read as follows.

"The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district, * * * . Each board of education may admit other persons upon such terms or upon the payment of such tuition as it may prescribe; provided, that when a youth between the age of six and twenty-one years or the parent of such youth owns property in a school district in which he does not reside and said youth attends the schools of said district, the amount of school tax paid on such property shall be credited on the tuition of said pupil."

In each of the prior enactments the tuition, or the payment thereof, was made a personal matter of the pupil or the parent, but here for the first time general language is used so that instead of the tuition which may be paid by such pupil or parent being the language used, it is not "credited on the tuition of said pupil," and whatever tuition would be charged to said pupil must receive a credit of the school tax upon the land owned by such pupil or his parent. The language is practically the same now, for it provides that the amount of the school tax paid on such property "shall be credited on his tuition."'

Section 7747 G. C. provides in part:

"The tuition of pupils who are eligible for admission to high school and who reside in village or rural districts in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence * * * ."

The above is a means provided for the payment of the tuition of high school pupils, the payment to be made by the board of education of the residence of such high school pupils and the pupil being entitled to a credit when property is owned in such district either by himself or parent. Only such tuition would be chargeable to him which is over and above any taxes so paid and it seems clear, therefore, that it would make no difference who would pay the tuition the credit could not help but follow. This is the view taken by the Supreme Court in State ex rel Nimberger, et al, v. Bushnell, et al, 95 O. S. 177-185, wherein the following language is used:

"Any district which is required to pay the tuition of a pupil residing therein, but attending school in another district, is entitled to the benefits of the provisions of section 7683 of the General Code and should be credited with the amount of school taxes paid upon property owned by the pupil or his parent in the district wherein is located the high school attended. Such credit should be made no matter who pays the tuition."

Answering your question, then, I advise you that a rural board of education which is liable for the payment of tuition under section 7747 G. C., having a pupil attending a high school in an adjoining district, can take advantage of section 7683 G. C. on the ground that the parent of the pupil owns property in the district maintaining the high school to which the child is sent.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

REGISTRATION OF LAND TITLES— WITHDRAWAL —SECTIONS 8572-26 AND 8572-86 OF TORRENS LAWS AMENDED OR REPEALED BY IMPLICATION—"ALL DEEDS AND MORTGAGES" AS USED IN SECTION 8572-64a—RECORDER—DUTIES UPON APPLICATION FOR WITHDRAWAL—FEES.

Section 2 of the Act of March 8, 1915, 106 O. L., 24, relating to the registration of land titles, permits the withdrawal from registration of any registered land title, whether the same was registered in the course of proceedings to sell real estate or partition, or not; said section is inconsistent with sections 8572-26 and 8572-86 of the "TORRENS LAW" and amends or repeals them by implication.

The phrase "all deeds and mortgages" occuring in said section should be interpreted so as to include all instruments required to be recorded under the general recording acts.

It is the duty of the recorder, upon an application for withdrawal from registration, to select the documents necessary to be recorded.

No fee is chargeable by the recorder for the service of entering a withdrawal of registration; but he is entitled to usual fees for recording the instruments required to be recorded by section 2 of the act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 10, 1917.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 18, 1917, requesting my opinion upon certain questions relating to the construction of the act of March 8, 1915, amending certain provisions of the Land Title Registration Law, (106 O. L., 24). These questions, which are submitted by the recorder of Cuyahoga county, are as folows:

"1. Section 4 of this amendment specifically repeals section 8572-64 only. Sections 8572-26 and 8572-86 of the act both contain very plain provisions that land once registered can never be withdrawn. Are these sections repealed by this amendment? The recorder is in doubt and hesitates to act on a recent request for withdrawal from registration until advised.

"2. In case it is held that the above mentioned sections are repealed and that land can be withdrawn from registration, what is the meaning of the words in section 2 of the amendment: 'and thereafter said title shall be considered the same as if it had never been registered?'

"When titles are registered the common pleas court renders two decrees—one 'settling and determining the title' (the quieting of title part of the proceeding) and the other, the decree of registration. If the recorder can withdraw lands from registration this gives him power to set aside a decree of the common pleas court, the decree of registration, at least. Does this act also set aside the decree 'settling and determining the title?' If this decree can be thus set aside, then do all clouds and title defects which were removed by the registration proceedings, automatically reattach?

"3. In the course of the registration proceedings the adjoining owners have their day in court and the title boundaries of the land are determined and fixed, sometimes after a special survey has been made by order of the court. If land can be withdrawn from registration, does this annul the establishment of the title boundaries so that after withdrawal they shall be 'the same as if the title had never been registered?'

"4. Section 2 of the amendment provides that 'all deeds and mortgages heretofore filed conveying registered lands, the registration certificate of which has been surrendered as herein provided for, shall be recorded according to law.' You will note that the above provides for record of deeds and mortages only. Various other documents affecting the title to registered lands are filed and are necessary to a proper determination of the title. Are these to be left unrecorded or shall the words 'deeds and mortgages' be construed as including all documents filed with the recorder which affect the title to the lands which are withdrawn?

"5. In the case of a complicated title, especially where only a part of the lands is to be withdrawn from registration, and where various documents are on file, some affecting all and some only various parts of the land, who is to determine just which documents are necessary to be recorded—the recorder or the applicant?

"6. If withdrawal from registration is permitted by the aforesaid amendment, what fees or fee, if any, must the recorder charge for his services in connection therewith, other than the usual fees for recording the deeds and mortgages provided for in section 2 of the amendment?"

In order to consider these questions it will be necessary to make the following quotations from the amendatory act referred to:

"AN ACT.

"To amend section 8572-64 of the General Code, to make optional the registration of title of land sold in partition or in suits brought by an assignee or other officer appointed by a court, and to cure defects in such proceedings.

"BE IT ENACTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF OHIO:

"Section 1. That section 8572-64 of the General Code be amended to read as follows:

Sec. 8572-64. In all suits to sell an estate in fee in the whole of unregistered land * * * and in all suits to partition unregistered land held in fee, proper allegations and parties necessary to a decree for original registration of the title to said estate may be made in the petition, the said allegations to be included in a separate cause of action, and said title * * * may, with the approval of the court * * * be registered * * * . Upon any such sale or partition and confirmation thereof the title may be transferred to and registered in the name of the purchaser * * * . And if such land is not so sold the person entitled thereto may procure a transfer and certificate therefor * * * . The court may, for good cause shown, in any case provided for in this section, enter an order dispensing with registration or permit the withdrawal of the application to register.

"Section 2. (designated as section 8572-64a) No decree or order of sale or partition heretofore or hereafter made in any suit, action or proceeding, mentioned in said section 8572-64, and no sale, conveyance or partition or decree confirming the same made in any such suit, action or proceeding shall be held void or in any wise affected by want of conformity of such suit, action or proceeding to the requirements of said section.

"Any person owning real estate the title to which is registered may surrender his certificate to the county recorder, who shall thereupon cancel said certificate of record, and thereafter said title shall be considered the same as if it had never been registered. All deeds and mortgages heretofore filed conveying registered lands, the registration certificate of which has been surrendered as herein provided for, shall be recorded according to law, and thereafter the lands conveyed therein shall be considered the same as if they had never been registered.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

"Section 4. That said original section 8572-64 of the General Code be, and the same is hereby repaled.

* * * * * * * * * * * *"

The title of this act, and a comparison of section 8572-64 with the original act of 1913 (103 Ohio Laws, 914-945) makes it obvious that the controlling purpose of the legislature was to dispense with the imperative necessity of procuring registration in case of proceedings to sell or partition. If there were doubt about the interpretation of any of the separate provisions of the act it would be proper to resolve such doubts by interpreting them in accordance with this controlling purpose. But such reasoning is not permissible in this case. The separate provisions are on their face of plain and unmistakable import, although they are not within the general purpose as thus ascertained. For the constitutional provision (Article II, Section 16) that:

> "No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title," is, as has been frequently held, merely directory, so that if in the body of a law appears subject matter that is not expressed in the title thereof, the matter is none the less the law on that account.

The second paragraph of section 2, as I have above quoted it, clearly goes beyond the scope of the title and applies to and authorizes the surrender of a certificate of registration in any case. It is not limited on its face to the surrender of a certificate of registration on the part of the owner of real estate which had been theretofore registered in proceedings to sell or to partition.

I find myself unable, therfore, to reach the conclusion that the fact that the remaining provisions of the act relate solely to registrations in the course of such judicial proceedings is enough upon which to predicate the conclusion that the paragraph of section 2 now under consideration is likewise to be so limited. However, the question is not to be resolved by the consideration of section 2 of the amendatory act alone, but as the communication of the recorder suggests the fact that section 4 may be inconsistent with certain mandatory sections of the act as first passed must be taken in to consideration on the other side. Moreover, whatever inference might arise from this fact is strengthened by the fact that the act of 1915 expressly amended one of the sections of the land title registration law, thus tending to exclude the inference that any implied repeal or amendent was contemplated.

I am thus brought to the consideration of sections 8572-26 and 8572-86 of the General Code, referred to by the recorder. The first of these provides, in part, as follows:

> "Sec. 8572-26. The obtaining of a decree of registration and receiving a certificate of title shall be deemed as an agreement running with the land and binding upon the applicant and the successors in title that the land shall be and forever remain registered land and subject to the provisions of this act (G. C. Sec. 8572-1 to 8572-118) and of all acts in amendment thereof * * * ."

The second of these sections is even more explicit and provides as follows:

> "Sec. 8572-86. No land once brought under and made subject to the provisions of this act (G. C. 8572-1 to 8572-118) shall ever be with drawn therefrom."

The only way in which the second sentence of section 2 of the amendatory act can be reconciled with these explicit provisions of the prior law is to read into it a qualification which is not expressed therein. As before suggested, such qualification would make the sentence read something as follows:

> "Any person owning any real estate the title to which is registered, in a suit to sell real estate or in a suit to partition real estate, may surrender his certificate to the county recorder * * * and thereafter said title shall be considered the same as if it had never been registered."

The following considerations would tend to support such an interpretation, if admitted at all:

1. Implied repeals and amendments are not favored, and where it is possible to reconcile a later act with a former act that has not been expressly repealed such reconciliation is to be preferred to an implied repeal or amendment.

2. It must be assumed that the general assembly considered the extent of the repeal which it intended to make, in as much as it did make an express repeal in section 4 of the act; therefore, whatever repealing or amendatory effect the act has it will not reach beyond section 8572-64, which deals with registration in proceedings to sell and partition.

3. All the considerations already discussed in dealing with the question from the viewpoint first adopted come in here and may be considered again in connection with the circumstances as now revealed.

In my opinion none of these considerations is weighty enough to permit that qualification to be read into the statute. The legislature was plainly trying to change the law in some particulars. In other words, it was making a new law and not merely revising or correcting the old law. There is, to be sure, a presumption that it did not intend a more radical change in the law than the fair import of the new law may require, yet, after all allowances are made for the considerations which have been mentioned, the fact remains that the second sentence of section 2 of the act of 1915 is not ambiguous.

The first and most important rule of statutory interpretation is that where a statute is clear on its face the function of judicial interpretation or construction, or whatever it may be called, is not even invoked. The court must administer the law as it finds it.

Slingluff et al. v. Weaver, 66 O. S., 621.

Here we have the statement that:

> "Any person owning real estate, the title of which is registered, may surrender his certificate * * * and thereafter said title shall be considered the same as if it had never been registered."

Section 86 of the original act is exactly the opposite. I cannot escape the conclusion that it is impossible to reconcile these provisions without doing violence to the fair meaning of the one last enacted.

I must conclude therefore that in spite of the failure of the legislature specifically to repeal section 86 of the original act or to amend section 26 thereof, and in spite of the fact that the legislature did actually amend and repeal by expression when it was passing the act of 1915, an implied repeal has taken place and section 86 and the first sentence of section 26 of the original act are no longer the law.

In this connection, however, let me observe that too much significance should not be given to the fact that the legislature did expressly repeal section 8572-64 General Code. This repeal was made because section 8572-64 was being expressly amended, and in deference to the requirement of section 26 of Article II of the constitution to the effect that whenever a statute is amended the original shall be repealed and the amending act shall set forth the whole section as amended. In other words, the repealing section of the act of 1915 goes, as it were, with section 1 and completes the legislative act started in section 1, viz: the express amendment of section 8572-64. It has nothing to do therefore with sections 2 and 3 of the act, which relate to matters other than the amendment of the section in question.

The first question, therefore, is answered by saying that the recorder has authority to entertain an application for the withdrawal of a title from registration, though the title was originally registered otherwise than in a partition proceeding or in a proceeding to sell real estate.

The second question as raised by the recorder does not, it seems to me, raise an issue in which the state has an interest within the meaning of the statute authorizing the attorney-general to formulate and express an official opinion (section 343 General Code). Of course, it has been the policy of this department to advise as to all matters in which the duties of public officers may be involved, because of the desirability of uniform practice to be observed under the guidance of the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices. The recorder's second question, however, raises an issue exclusively of private right. The statute, as I have interpreted it, authorizes a withdrawal of the registration, but the effect of such withdrawal on land titles previously registered, and more particularly upon decrees of courts ordering registration is a matter about which I do not feel authorized to advise.

The same remark applies to the third question submitted by the recorder.

It is otherwise with respect to the recorder's fourth question. Having regard to the manifest intent and purpose of the second paragraph of section 2 of the amendatory act, I would be inclined to hold that the phrase "deeds and mortgages" as therein used should be broadly interpreted to mean all documents requiring record in the office of the county recorder. In fact nothing else could result from the mandate of the law that in case of registration "said title shall be considered the same as if it had never been registered," for if such is the case then the general laws requiring the recordation of instruments like leases, etc., would come into play and operate, possibly even without the last sentence of section 2. However that may be, I am of the opinion that the effect of a withdrawal of registration is to bring into play the general recording acts and to make them applicable to all instruments which otherwise would have been subject thereto, and which have been filed during the life of the registration. Whether or not recordation, when it takes place, shall be, as it were, a nunc pro tunc is a question which is not submited, and which has not been considered.

In answer to the recorder's fifth question, I am of the opinion that the recorder is to decide which documents are necessary to be recorded. The language of the second sentence is mandatory upon him. That is to say, the law commands him to record the necessary conveyances which are in his possession and are a part of the files of his office. Therefore, without any express order from the applicant for withdrawal, and as a result of the application itself, it is his duty to select the instruments requiring record and record them. I do not believe, however, that he would have the authority to refuse to record a particular document because he might not think that its recordation was necessary. On the other hand, if the general recording acts do not authorize him to record a particular instrument he would, of course, be at liberty to refuse to record it.

In answer to the recorder's sixth question, I beg to advise that the recorder is not permitted to charge any fee for cancelling a certificate of registration, but, in my opinion, he is entitled to the usual fee for recording the various instruments which are required to be recorded by the last sentence of section 2.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHICH MAINTAINS HIGH SCHOOL CONTRACT WITH ANOTHER BOARD FOR SCHOOLING PUPILS—WHEN NOT COMPELLED TO PAY TUITION OF PUPILS OF DISTRICT.

A board of education which maintains no high school, but which has entered into an agreement with a board of education in the same or an adjoining township which does maintain a high school for the schooling of the high school pupils of the first named board, is not compelled to pay the tuition of pupils of such school district who live more than four miles from the school maintained by the board and who attend high schools other than the one with which the board has the contract, unless the school such pupils attend is a nearer high school.

December 10, 1917.

HON. GEORGE C. VON BESELER, Prosecuting Attorney, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads in part:

"About the most difficult question I have tried to answer is whether a board of education of a rural school district, which does not maintain a high school of its own, must pay the tuition to some other high school elected by a student who lives more than four miles from the high school with which the board of education has entered into an agreement for the schooling of its pupils.

"The facts in the case here further are, that the board of education of the village of Willoughby, a first grade high school, charges the board of education of the township of Willoughby $47.50 tuition per year, while the board of education of the city of Cleveland, to which some students are going, charges the board of education of Willoughby rural school district the sum of $180.00. The question is, can pupils who live more than four miles from the high school in the village of Willoughby elect to go to the high school in Cleveland and obligate the board of education of Willoughby rural school district to pay what seems to them an exorbitant tuition. Willoughby rural board has a contract with Willoughby village board."

Pertinent to your inquiry are sections 7747, 7748 and 7750 of the General Code.

Section 7747 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L. 625, reads as follows:

"The tuition of pupils who are eligible for admission to high school and who reside in village or rural districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month. No more shall be charged per capita than the amount ascertained by dividing the total expenses of conducting the high school of the district attended, which may include charges not exceeding five per cent. per annum and depreciation charges not exceeding five per cent. per annum, based upon the actual value of all property used in conducting said high school by the average monthly enrollment in the high school of the district. The district superintendent shall certify to the county superintendent each year the names of all pupils in his supervision district who have completed the elementary school work, and are eligible for admission to high school. The county superintendent shall thereupon issue to each pupil so certified a certificate of promotion which shall entitle the holder to admission to any high school. Such certificates shall be furnished by the superintendent of public instruction."

Section 7748 G. C. reads as follows:

"The board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year. Should pupils residing in the district prefer not to attend such third grade high school the board of education of such district shall be required to pay the tuition of such pupils at any first grade high school for four years, or at any second grade high school for three years and a first grade high school for one year. Such a board providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year: except that a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when the maximum levy permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the further provisions thereof, residing more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from the said high school, maintained by the said board of education to said high school. Where more than one high school is maintained, by agreement of the board and parent or guardian, pupils may attend either and their transportation shall be so paid. A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a rural district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a resident pupil of such district."

Section 7750 G. C. provides:

"A board of education not having a high school may enter into an agreement with one or more boards of education maintaining such school for the schooling of all its high school pupils. When such agreement is made the board making it shall be exempt from the payment of tuition at other high schools of pupils living within three miles of the school designated in the agreement, if the school or schools selected by the board are located in the same civil township as that of the board making it, or some adjoining township. In case no such agreement is entered into, the school to be attended can be selected by the pupil holding a diploma, if due notice in writing is given to the clerk of the board of education of the name of the school to be attended and the date the attendance is to begin, such notice to be filed not less than five days previous to the beginning of attendance."

Applying the above to your case, we have the following situation: There is no high school located in Willoughby rural school district, but the board of education of said rural district has entered into an agreement with the board of education of the Willoughby village district, wherein a high school is located, for the schooling of all the high school pupils of the Willoughby rural district at the Willoughby village high school. Some of the pupils of the Willoughby rural district reside more than four miles from the Willoughby village high school and the question is, can such pupils elect to attend a high school other than the one at Willoughby village, which has been provided by the board, and compel the board of education of the Willoughby rural school district to pay their tuition?

A school can be selected by pupil holding a diploma and the board of education charged with the tuition only in one of two ways:

First. If no high school is maintained by a board of education and no agreement is entered into between such board of education and a board of education maintaining a high school for the schooling of its high school pupils, then a pupil who resides in a district which maintains no such high school and which has entered into no such agreement may select a high school and give notice in writing to the clerk of the board of education of the name of the school so selected and the date the attendance is to begin, and the board of education will thereby be bound to pay the tuition of such pupil at such school so selected, or,

Second. If a board of education provides a high school and a pupil resides more than four miles therefrom by the most direct route of public travel, and such pupil attends a nearer high school, then the board of education must pay the tuition of such pupil at such nearer high school.

But where a board of education which has no high school enters into an agreement with a board of education which maintains a high school for the schooling of its high school pupils, then such board of education cannot be charged with the tuition of pupils who attend other high schools, because the entering into of the contract between the board of education which maintains no high school and the board of education which maintains a high school for the schooling of the high school pupils of the first named board, is a "providing" of a high school by the board of education as far as the schooling of high school pupils is concerned. It is urged, though, on account of the language contained in section 7750,—"when such agreement is made the board making it shall be exempt from the payment of tuition at other high schools of the pupils living within three miles of the school designated in the agreement, if the school or schools selected by the board are located in the same civil township as that of the board making it, or some adjoining township,"—that where pupils live more than three miles the exemption mentioned in the above quoted language would not apply. That reasoning, however, does not follow, for before tuition of a pupil can be paid by a board of education there must be a statute specifically authorizing that same may be paid. It was held in Board of Education v. Board of Education, 10 O. D., 459, that:

"The constitutional guaranty of 'an efficient system of common schools throughout the state' does not impose an obligation upon township boards to pay the tuition of a few pupils who elect to enjoy the advantages of a high school outside the township of their residence, either in the same or an adjoining county."

That is, before a board of education can be charged with the tuition of high school pupils, there must be a specific statute granting the right therefor. In other words, tuition is not had as a matter of right, but only as a matter of statute. So that, what the provision of section 7750 G. C., in relation to the three mile limit, does mean is that where a board of education, which has no high school, enters into an agreement with a board of education which maintains a high school for the schooling of the high school pupils, then any pupil who lives within three miles of the high school so designated shall not attend another high school at the expense of the board, provided, of course, that the agreement is entered into with a board of education of the same or an adjoining civil township.

In School District v. Harrison Twp., 14 O. D., 62-63, it is held:

"The clause which gives the pupil the right to select the school of his attendance and to charge the tuition upon the township by giving notice in writing, applies only where no high school is maintained by the township and where no agreement has been made with the board of education in the same or adjoining township, but does not apply to a case of a pupil residing more than three miles from the township high school attending a nearer high school, for in such case there is no right of selection by the pupil."

This department held in Opinion No. 260, rendered to Hon. Charles H. Jones, under date of May 12, 1917, that the high school pupil who resides more than four miles from the high school of his district must attend a nearer high school before the board of education of the district in which he resides is required to pay his tuition, and what applies to the attendance in a district where a school is maintained would, as noted above, apply to a district where a contract is entered into. If, then, the pupils who live more than four miles from the Willoughby high school attend a nearer high school, that is, if the Cleveland high school is nearer to their residence, then the Willoughby rural district board of education must pay their tuition, but if the Cleveland high school is not nearer to the residence of such pupils who live more than four miles from their own high school, then the Willoughby rural district board of education is not compelled to pay the tuition thereof.

So that, answering your question, I advise you that a board of education which maintains no high school, but which has entered into an agreement with a board of education in the same or an adjoining township, which does maintain a high school for the schooling of the high school pupils of the first named board, is not compelled to pay the tuition of pupils of such school district who live more than four miles from the school maintained by the board, other than the one with which the board has the contract, unless such pupils attend a nearer high school.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BONDS—FAIRFIELD COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December, 12, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

"GENTLEMEN:—IN RE: Bonds of Fairfield county, Ohio, in the sum of $38,000.00, in anticipation of assessments apportioned to said county for the improvement of Rush creek, petitioned for by J. E. Purvis and others.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings relating to the above bond issue. These bonds are issued by the board of county commissioners of Fairfield county, Ohio, in anticipation of the collection of that part of the total assessments for the improvement above mentioned, conducted by the board of county commissioners of said county and the board of county commissioners of Perry county under the provisions of law relating to the improvement of joint county ditches. The proceedings relating to this improvement have been extensive and somewhat involved, and the examination of the transcript has entailed a great deal of work and careful attention on the part of this department.

The only question, however, that has given me any concern with respect to the validity of this bond issue is one touching the authority of the boards of county commissioners of said counties to entertain the petition for the improvement and conduct the proceedings therefor. As to this the transcript shows that when the petition for the improvement of Rush creek, which is a stream of living water, located in both counties, was presented to the board of county commissioners of Fairfield county and to the board of county commissioners of Perry county said boards, in joint session, refused to entertain the petition on the ground that they had no authority to entertain said petition, inasmuch as it calls for the improvement of a living stream of water, which they claimed they had no authority to improve under the provisions of sections 6536 et seq. of the General Code relating to the improvement of joint county ditches. Thereupon, Purvis and others, petitioners for said improvement, brought an action in mandamus in the court of appeals of Perry county, Ohio, praying for a peremptory writ of mandamus directing said boards of county commissioners to entertain said petition and to determine whether or not said improvement should be granted. The court sustained the petition of the relators and issued a peremptory writ of mandamus to the board of county commissioners of Fairfield county and to the board of county commissioners of Perry county, directing them to entertain said petition and to determine whether said improvement should be granted as prayed for in the petition. It does not appear that this case was taken to the supreme court. On the contrary, upon receipt of the writ of mandamus the boards of county commissioners of said counties met and considered said petition and, having found the facts alleged in said petition with respect to the necessity of said improvement to be true, directed the same to proceed; and this and subsequent proceedings of the boards of county commissioners of said counties seem to be in all respects regular and in conformity to the provisions of the statute relating to improvements of this kind.

Inasmuch as the bonds in question are issued in anticipation of the collection of assessments, the question naturally arises whether or not the judgment of the court finding that said boards of county commissioners had authority to entertain jurisdiction of the petition for said improvement is conclusive on the persons assessed for the cost and expense of the improvement. As there is some question with respect to the correctness of the court's decision relative to the authority of the said boards of county commissioners to entertain jurisdiction of the petition for said improvement, the question just suggested is one of some concern.

There is very little in the way of authority in this state on this question.

In the case of State ex rel. v. Mitchell, 31 O. S. 592, it appears that the city of Columbus instituted an action in mandamus against Mitchell and others, commissioners for the improvement of north High street in said city under a special law applying to said city. The relief prayed for was a writ requiring those commissioners to levy an assessment for the cost and expense of said improvement. By way of defense to the petition the commissioners for said improvement set up the unconstitutionality of the law authorizing the improvement. The court held that the law was unconstitutional as a special grant of corporate power to the city of Columbus, but further held that all persons to be assessed for the cost and expense of the improvement participating in said improvement, either in the petition therefor or by taking part in the election for the commissioners, were estopped to contest the constitutionality of the law. In its decision in this case, however, the court in sustaining the petition of the relator for a writ of mandamus stated that the action of the commissioners in levying the assessment would not conclude the lot owners from contesting their liability, and that if there were any who were not estopped by their conduct they might make their defense when the assessment was sought to be enforced against them. This case was decided in 1877.

In the case of City of Columbus v. Sarah Schneider et al., decided by the circuit court of Franklin county in 1895, 14 C. C. R. S., 312, the same being a case relating to the same improvement in question in the Mitchell case, the court held as follows:

> "Actions brought by the proper parties against a municipality to enjoin the collection of a street improvement assessment, where submitted on the issues and decided against the plaintiffs by the upholding of the assessment, amount to a conclusive adjudication of the validity of the assessment, in an action brought by the city against other parties to enforce the collection of assessments against other property for said improvement."

This case was affirmed by the supreme court without opinion in 54 O. S. 617.

In the case of Ashton et al. v. City of Rochester, 133 N. Y., 187, the plaintiffs were the owners of property assessed for a local street improvement, and the action was one in their own behalf and in behalf of all other persons having property fronting on the street and assessed for the improvement for the purpose of obtaining a judgment declaring the assessment null and void. The court in its opinion in this case affirming a judgment of the lower court dismissing the petition says (p. 192):

> "The record shows that upon the application of certain of the property owners on the street other than the plaintiffs, liable to be assessed for the improvement, the supreme court at special term awarded a mandamus against the executive board, commanding it to proceed upon the resolution and to award a contract for the performance of the work. That, acting in obedience to this command, the board did award the contract in accordance with the provisions of the character prescribing the powers and duties of the board. The decision upon the application for the mandamus was a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. It adjudged that the resolution of the common council was in full force, notwithstanding the motion to reconsider, and that it was the clear legal duty of the executive board to proceed and let the contract. This judgment could not thereafter be questioned collaterally by any of the parties, nor anyone else who was represented in the proceeding. They might attack it directly by appeal or motion to set aside, or for a rehearing, but so long as it remained unreversed and not set aside, it bound everyone who was a party, or represented in any subsequent collateral action or proceeding. It is quite clear that it bound the property owners who applied for the writ, the executive board and the city. The only question is whether it bound these plaintiffs who were not parties by name. But the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction will sometimes operate as an estoppel and a former adjudication against persons who were not named in the proceeding and who were not parties to the record by name. It is enough if they were represented in the action or proceeding which resulted in the judgment, or were entitled to be heard. When a judgment is rendered against a county, city or town in its corporate name, or against a board or officer who represents the municipality, in the absence of fraud or collusion, it will bind the citizens and taxpayers. This is upon the principle that they are represented in the litigation by agencies, authorized to speak for them, and to protect their interests. (Herman on Estoppel, vol. 1, p. 166, Clark v. Wolf, 29 Iowa, 197; Lyman v. Faris, 53 id. 498; Tredway v. Soux City & P. R. Co., 39 id. 663; Freeman on Judgments, Sec. 178; Robbins v. Chicago, 4 Wall. 657; S. C., 2 Black, 418; Preble v. Supervisors, 8 Biss. 358.)"

The court in its opinion in this case further says:

"When a judgment is rendered by a competent court awarding a writ of mandamus against a board of supervisors or other body or officers having power to audit claims against a county or other municipality, commanding them or him to audit a claim or demand against the county or municipality, and it is audited in obedience to such command, the validity of the claim cannot be questioned subsequently by the tax-payers in any collateral action or proceeding. Their remedy is to appeal from the judgment awarding the writ or move for a rehearing. So also a receiver of a corporation, appointed in an action by the people for dissolution, represents the creditors, and a judgment that would estop him estops them also. (Herring v. N. Y. L. E. & W. R. R. Co., 105 N. Y., 340).

We are not aware of any reason for holding that the plinciple does not apply to the plaintiffs in this case. True this is not a general tax but a special and local assessment. But it is nevertheless an exercise of the taxing power and its validity as well as the right of the plaintiffs to question or assail it in the courts rests on the same principles as are applicable to an assessment or tax for general purposes. If the expense of the improvement was to be paid out of the city treasury there would then be little doubt that an adjudication upon an application for a mandamus, involving as this did the validity of the proceedings up to that time, would have bound all the taxpayers. Is the rule any different when a small part or even the whole of the expense is to be paid by the property owners within a certain district? Is the principle changed because the area over which the tax was distributed is contracted? The executive board laid the matter on the table and, in effect, refused to act, treating the resolution as rescinded by the common council. They were brought into court and the very question involved was whether the board had authority to contract for the execution of the work, and the court held, upon full argument and against the contention of the board, that they had. The question was whether they had power under the proceedings to make a contract and incur an expense which was to be paid by the property owners, and it adjudged that they had, and that it was their duty to do so. When the executive board was before the court on that application they represented and spoke, not only for themselves and the city, but also the property owners who were to be bound by the contract, and whose property was to be assessed for the expenditure which the work embraced in the contract involved. When the court directed the board to make the contract the effect of its judgment was to direct the imposition of a tax upon the plaintiffs' property. On that question the plaintiffs could have been heard, and on their application were entitled to a hearing and to be made parties to the proceeding and to appeal from the decision. This was a right that no court would have denied to them had they demanded it."

The case last cited is quite persuasive to my mind to the point that the judgment of the court of appeals of Perry county in the mandamus case is conclusive on the persons assessed for this improvement with respect to the question of the authority of the boards of county commissioners of Fairfield and Perry counties to entertain jurisdiction of the proceedings relating to the improvement, including the matter of the assessment. When the court directed the boards of county commissioners of said counties to entertain jurisdiction of the petition presented for the improvement, the effect of its judgment was to direct the imposition of an assessment upon benefited property in case said boards of county commissioners determined in favor of said improvement. In this state the action of mandamus is a civil action, having all the essential attributes of such action, and I doubt not that the owners of property liable to be assessed for this improvement could, on their application, have been made parties defendant with a right to be heard upon the question whether said peremptory writ or mandamus should issue.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the judgment of the courts of appeals Perry county in the mandamus case against the boards of county commissioners of Fairfield and Perry counties is conclusive upon the owners of property assessed with respect to the question there adjudicated.

The bonds in question, though issued in anticipation of the collection of assessments on property specially benefited by the improvement, are nevertheless bonds issued by the county of Fairfield, as such; and the more immediate question is perhaps whether the judgment of the court of appeals of Perry county in the mandamus case is conclusive upon the counties with respect to the question involved in that case. If in proceedings of this kind boards of county commissioners could be said to represent the county and the citizens and taxpayers thereof, no difficulty would be encountered in holding in this matter that said counties of Fairfield and Perry were bound by said adjudication, even if our conclusion were otherwise with respect to the owners of property specially assessed for the improvement.

As said by the court in the case of Ashton v. City of Rochester, supra,

> "When a judgment is rendered against a county, city or town in its corporate name, or against a board or officer who represents the municipality, in the absence of fraud or collusion, it will bind the the citizens and taxpayers. This is upon the principle that they are represented in the litigation by agencies, authorized to speak for them, and to protect their interests."

Further on this point the court in the case of Bear v. Commissioners, 122 N. C., 434, says (p. 436-437):

> "A judgment against a county or its legal representatives, in a matter of general interest to all its citizens, is binding upon the latter, though they are not parties to suit. Every taxpayer is a real though not a nominal party to such judgment, and cannot relitigate any of the questions which were litigated in the original action against the county or its legal representatives, and, if the county board fail, to avail itself of legal defences, the people are concluded by the judgment. If such failure comes from negligence or corruption, the taxpayer has a remedy on both the criminal and civil dockets of the courts, and, if from incompetency, the taxpayer's remedy is the ballot box. Such judgments must be conclusive unless impeached for fraud or mistake. They must be conclusive or not admissible at all. This doctrine is supported by able authorities. Freeman on Judgments, Section 178; Black on Judgments, Section 583; State v. Rainey, 74 Mo.,

229; Clark v. Wolf, 29 Iowa, 197; Harmon v. Auditor, 123 Ill., 122; City of Cairo v. Campbell, 116 Ill., 305. A judgment against a city, county or school district, in matter of general interest, is binding upon all its citizens, though not made parties by name. 1 Herman on Res Judicata, Section 155, 128; * * * ."

In the case of Atlas National Bank v. Columbia Tp., 13 O. Dec., 472, it was held that when an act of the general assembly directing township trustees to issue bonds to pay for winding and extending a street, has been judically declared, in an action by taxpayers in mandamus against the trustees to compel the trustees to proceed under the provisions of the act, to confer power upon the trustees to issue the bonds, and the bonds are issued in the manner provided by the act and are held by innocent purchasers for value and the proceeds spent on the improvement, the trustees are estopped in an action against them on the bonds to deny their power to issue them, although the bondholders were not directly parties to the suit in which the validity of the bonds was established.

The court in this case, referring to the decision in the mandamus case directing township trustees to proceed under the provisions of the act above noted, says (p. 486):

"The decision of the circuit court was not valuable to the taxpayers and the trustees unless there was some one who would take the bonds which the court said the trustees could legally issue. Those parties were not seeking the settlement of a mooted question merely. The decision of the court compelled the trustees to issue the bonds and sell them to whomsoever would buy. The act of the legislature and the decree of the court necessarily contemplated the fact that there would be purchasers of the bonds. By the decision the declaration came to every one who took the bonds issued by virtue of it that the trustees and power to issue them. The only title the trustees had, as it now appears, existed by virtue of the decision. They transferred all they had no more, no less, to the purchaser. If they had a right to sell the bonds, the same decree, which necessarily contemplated a purchaser, gave the purchaser the right to take the bonds. If this is not so the decree was a vain thing, available to the trustees only for the purpose of working a fraud upon the innocent persons who might be victimized by it The title which the trustees could convey, the power they had to sell, could not it is conceded, be relitigated by them nor by any taxpayer in the township. That title necessary passed to the purchasers. If they are not strictly parties to the suit, they are indirectly so by reason of their relation to their vendors. Justice, good faith, the protection of the business community, and the dignity of the courts and of judicial decree require that this court hold that the bondholders were, at least, privies to that decree, and that the trustees are estopped to deny their power to issue the bonds sued upon."

Some embarrassment in the application to the question at hand of the principles noted in the foregoing cases is presented by the consideration that in applications for ditch improvements boards of county commissioners represent the petitioners for the improvement rather than the county in those cases where the improvement is of more or less local interest only and the cost and expense is assessed wholly against the lands benefited; and it is only where the finding is that the improvement is of sufficient importance to the public to justify the payment of damages and compensation, in whole or in part out of the county treasury, that the board of county commissioners represents the county and not exclusively the petitioners.

Board of County Commissioners v. Gates, 83 O. S. 19.

However, it is likewise true that proceedings with respect to county ditch improvements are proceedings in rem, and in the present case when the boards of county commissioners of Fairfield and Perry counties, acting under directions of a peremptory writ of mandamus issued by the court of appeals of Perry county, entertained jurisdiction of the petition for this improvement, I am inclined to the view that the status of the proceedings and the relation of the said boards of county commissioners thereto were fixed as to all the world, and that for this reason the bonds issued as a part of said proceedings are to be deemed valid.

Moreover, section 5630-1 General Code provides that bonds issued by county commissioners in the manner provided by law in anticipation of the collection of special assessments levied against the property abutting upon a proposed improvement or to be benefited thereby, shall be full, general obligations of the county, for the payment of the principal and interest of which when due the full faith ,credit and revenues of the county shall be pledged.

Having arrived at the conclusion that the judgment of the court of appeals of Perry county in the mandamus case above noted is conclusive upon the owners of property specially assessed for the improvement with respect to the question there adjudicated, and having found that the proceedings of the boards of county commissioners with respect to this improvement were substantially regular, I am of the opinion that under the provisions of section 5630-1 General Code these bonds, when properly signed and delivered, will constitute valid and binding obligations of Fairfield county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Ohio:

Sec. 7722-1.

Section 1. That it shall be lawful for the principal or superintendent of any public schools or schools in the state of Ohio, or for any person designated for that purpose by the board of education or other school authority under which such school shall be, to collect once a week, or from time to time, small amounts of savings from the pupils of said school, the same to be deposited by said principal or superintendent or designated person on the day of collection in some savings bank, or building and loan associations, trust company, state or national bank, located in the district and having an interest department. These moneys shall be placed to the credit of the respective pupils from whom the money shall be collected, or, if the amount collected at any one time shall be deemed insufficient for the opening of individual accounts, in the names of said principal or superintendent or designated person, in trust, and to be by him eventually transferred to the credit of the respective pupils to whom the same belongs. In the meantime, said principal or superintendent, or designated person shall furnish to the bank or institution a list giving the names, signatures, addresses, ages, places of birth, parents' names, and such other data concerning the respective pupils as the savings bank or institution may require, and it shall be lawful to use the words 'system of school savings banks' or 'school savings banks,' 'system of school savings' in circulars, reports and other printed or written matter used in connection with the purposes of this section.

Section 2. The board of education shall provide by resolution for the giving of bond by the principal or superintendent of any public school or schools in the state of Ohio, or any person designated for the purpose of making the collections, as provided for in section 1, and also may require the depositary to give bond. If a bonding company or other corporate surety is offered on said bonds, the premium therefor may be paid by the board of education."

The two questions asked above may be discussed in a more brief and orderly manner by reversing the order, as the question last asked concerns the very nature of the institution created by the statute, if, indeed, it be entitled to be called one. It is rather a means of utilizing some institution already in existence with more facility to a class not now understood to be generally availing themselves of its benefits. The very first words of the above act are permissive. It is doubtful whether any one may be required or compelled by law to do anything whatever under this act. The legislature simply contented itself by declaring that a certain course shall be lawful. It is extremely doubtful whether any school board could be compelled to designate any person to make the collections provided for in the act. It is equally doubtful whether, if they did so, they could compel a given person to enter upon the performance of the duty, and absolutely certain that nobody would be required to deposit any money. In no sense is a bank created, or anything in the nature of a bank. The mere permission is extended to use certain words in circulars, reports and printed and written matter in connection with the affair. The bank that is involved is one already in existence and already under the control of some department of the federal or state government. This bank, when selected as this depository, acquires no new character and assumes no new duty. It simply receives deposits in the manner in which it already is engaged in doing. In other words, simply secures some more customers. It is true that the person acting as a "go-between" from the depositor to the bank may be required to furnish the bank certain information if the bank wants it. This the bank could impose as a condition without statutory provision therefor, for, like everybody else, the bank is not required or compelled to do anything whatever in connection with it; could refuse or accept these deposits at its pleasure.

It is perfectly plain, therefore, that this scheme imposes no new duty upon the state banking department and only possibly may create a slight amount of additional attention or supervision of the banks, all of which existed independently of this proposed institution. The superintendent of banks certainly would not have anything to do with it if the deposit were made in a national bank or in a building association, and this is sufficient to illustrate and prove that it is not such institution as may come under his supervision.

The superintendent, principal or person designated, becomes little more than a messenger, nothing more in fact, except that he keeps some accounts of the money he carries. A similar question was answered to the superintendent of banks by this department on April 16, 1917, in Opinion No. 194, in which the same conclusion was reached with reference to an institution known as "The Young Men's Business Club of Springfield, Ohio." This club was a voluntary organization, and proceeding under a plan of its own, having the same general characteristics of that provided in this statute, but being much more elaborate as to details.

You are, therefore, advised that the banking department has nothing to do directly with the so-called "School Savings Banks."

As to the obligee in the bond required, the question seems to be disposed of by section 6 of the General Code, which is as follows:

> "A bond payable to the state of Ohio, or other payee as may be directed by law, reciting the election or appointment of a person to an office or public trust under or in pursuance of the constitution or laws, and conditioned for the faithful performance, by such person, of the duties of the office or trust, shall be sufficient, notwithstanding any special provision made by law for the condition of such bond."

The position in question is not an office. It may, however, be properly classed as a public trust under and in pursuance of a law, that is, the statute above quoted. Section 6 uses the word "appointment;" the other statute uses the word "designated." It is not conceived, however, that this could make any material difference, and the bond in this case might properly be in accordance with the provisions of section 6 General Code. The enactment is that such bond should be sufficient. Of course, in drawing such bond it would be good practice to go further than the mere requirements of this section and recite the facts and the law under which the same is given, thus showing expressly that it is for the benefit of those who are or may become depositors.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

GAME WARDENS—NOT ENTITLED TO FEES—COSTS.

There is no authority for the payment of any fees to deputy game wardens and none can be charged or collected. This being the case no fees can be taxed for the deputy warden in the costs in any of these cases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 12, 1917.

HON. A. C. BAXTER, Acting Chief Warden, Bureau of Fish and Game, The Department of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 14, 1917, as follows:

> "This department is having several inquiries from game wardens in regard to section 1394 which was amended at the last session of the legislature.

Under the former statute this reads 'In addition to the salaries and compensation herein provided, each warden shall be entitled to receive the same fees as sheriffs are allowed for like services in criminal cases.'

Under the present section this clause has been entirely dropped and the compensation of deputy wardens shall be fixed and paid in the same manner as in section 1087 of the General Code.

Can deputy wardens in addition to their salaries and compensation, collect costs in a case? If not, what disposition should be made of the costs?"

Section 1394 General Code, prior to the enactment in 107 O. L., and as amended in 106 O. L., page 170, read:

"The board of agriculture may allow the chief warden, each special warden and each deputy state warden such compensation as it deems proper and his necessary expenses. In addition to the salaries and compensation herein provided, each warden shall be entitled to receive the same fees as sheriffs are allowed for like services in criminal cases. The salaries and expenses of the chief warden and each special warden and the compensation allowed each deputy state warden shall be paid by the state upon the order of the board."

In an opinion rendered by former Attorney-General Turner, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. 2, p. 1901, I find the following statement:

"Deputy game wardens are now appointed by the state board of agriculture under the provisions of section 1391 G. C., as amended in 106 O. L. 170. They hold their office for the term of two years, are required to give bond for the faithful discharge of their duties and are charged generally with the enforcement of all laws for the protection, preservation and propagation of birds, fish, and game within this state. They are paid such compensation as the appointing power may allow and deem proper and in addition thereto are entitled to the same fees sheriffs are allowed for like services in criminal cases."

Section 1394 G. C. was amended in 107 O. L., page 467, to read:

"The compensation of the chief warden, deputy state wardens and special wardens shall be fixed and paid in the same manner provided for in section 1087 of the General Code for the compensation of other agents of the secretary of agriculture. They may also be allowed and paid in the manner provided in section 1087 all necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties."

Section 1087 G. C., as amended in the same act, reads in part:

"The board of agriculture is authorized to elect a secretary with the approval of the governor, who shall be known as the secretary of agriculture. * * * He shall appoint all heads of bureaus, experts, inspectors, wardens, clerks, stenographers and all other assistants and employes and shall fix their compensation within the limits prescribed by law. All of such appointees shall be entitled to receive from the state their actual and necessary expenses incurred while traveling on the business of the department. * * *"

It will be seen that the compensation of the deputy game wardens is now fixed by the secretary of the board of agriculture.

In section 1394, as amended, the provision of the section as it formerly stood, to the effect that "in addition to the salaries and compensation herein provided, each warden shall be entitled to receive the same fees as sheriffs are allowed for like services in criminal cases," does not appear.

There is, therefore, no longer any authority for the payment of any fees to the deputy wardens and none can be charged or collected. This being the case no fees can be taxed for the deputy warden in the costs in any of these cases.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CIVIL SERVICE—RESIDENCE IN COUNTY NOT QUALIFICATION FOR POSITION IN COUNTY SERVICE—PERSONS MAY NOT BE TRANSFERRED FROM STATE SERVICE TO COUNTY SERVICE—NOR APPOINTED TO COUNTY SERVICE FROM STATE ELIGIBLE LIST.

Residence in a county is ordinarily not a qualification for a position in the civil service of such county aside from the elective offices, but in providing eligible lists for the service of such county, the state civil service commission has power to hold the examinations in such county and advertise the same therein.

The state civil service commission has not power to permit transfers from the county service to the state service or from the state service to the county service.

Neither is it permissible to make appointments to a county position from the state eligible list, even though the applicant be a resident of the county in which the appointment is to be made.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 12, 1917.

Civil Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of October 19, 1917, you submit the following for an opinion from this department:

"Article XV, sec. 10 of the constitution of Ohio provides that:

'Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties, and cities, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examination.'

Sec. 486-8 of the civil service law provides in part as follows:

'The civil service of the state of Ohio and the several counties, cities, and school districts thereof shall be divided into the unclassified service and the classified service.'

'The unclassified service shall comprise the following positions which shall not be included in the classified service, and which shall be exempt from all examinations required in this act.'

Thereafter certain specific exemptions from examination are provided for the state, the county and the municipal service.

Sec. 486-10, in providing for publicity for examinations, says:

'In case of examinations limited by the commission to a district, county, or city, the commission shall provide in its rules for adequate publicity of such examinations in the district, county or city, within which competition is permitted.'

Throughout the civil service law we find constantly recurring the phrase, 'the classified service of the state, counties, cities and city school districts.'

From this wording of the constitution and law we assume that it was the intent of both the framers of the constitution and the legislature to clearly differentiate between the civil service of the state, counties, cities and city school districts, and that the civil service of the counties is to be treated as separate and apart from the civil service of the state.

Sec. 486-13 of the civil service law provides in part as follows:

'In the event that an eligible list becomes exhausted, through inadvertence or otherwise, and until a new list can be created, or when no eligible list for such position exists, names may be certified from eligible lists most appropriate for the group or class in which the position to be filled is classified.'

Your advice and opinion is respectfully requested as follows:

1. In conducting examinations to create eligible lists for certification to positions in the classified service of the various counties, must the commission limit competition for positions in any county to legal residents thereof?

2. Within the provisions of Sec. 486-16 of the civil service law, may the commission permit transfers from the county service to the state service, or vice versa?

3. In the absence of an eligible list created for certification to a county position in the classified service which may be vacant, can the commission make certification under the provisions of Sec. 486-13, above quoted, from a state list as appropriate, using the names of the three persons standing highest on such state list who are residents of such county?

It frequently happens, especially in the case of clerical positions, that the commission has a large number of eligibles who have passed examination for clerical positions in the various state departments and who are residents of a county in which a vacancy occurs in a clerical position of the same grade as that of the state positions for which the eligible list was created."

In addition to the statements in the above inquiry you have personally, upon request, communicated to this department the present situation and practice with reference to the matters above referred to, which personal communication is taken into consideration along with your written inquiry.

Nothing will be added here to what is expressed in former opinions upon the subject of qualification for office and the power of your commission with reference thereto.

The questions you ask are not definitely and expressly settled in the civil service law itself, so that some construction thereof is necessary, and the present and former opinion and practice of the people of the state in reference to the subject of residence in connection with qualification for office may be properly taken into account in disposing of the questions presented.

Except as to elective offices there is, generally speaking, no requirement that deputies and employes in the county offices should be residents of the county, but it has been the general, but not the universal, practice that they be so. The great mass of county employes are now and have at all times been residents of the county in which they are respectively engaged. In occasional instances where special qualification is required, or for some other reason, county officers have appointed and employed persons residing outside the county to fill various positions. This, however, has been the exception, and a rather rare exception. It is, however, sufficient to show that residence in the county has not been regarded by the public as an absolute and positive qualification for position in the public employment of the county.

There is no express language in the civil service act requiring a change of this general practice either the one way or the other. The great purpose of the act is to promote efficiency in the public service by eliminating partisan and personal considerations from the selection of those who are to carry it on. The purpose of the act is rather an imposition of an additional system and scheme of legislation upon the law and practice already in existence than a radical or essential change in that practice itself, so that in reference to the subject of these inquiries it is proper to interpret the civil service law and give it operation and effect accordingly, recognizing existing institutions and existing conditions and practices, and superadding thereto the restraints, requirements and regulations of the statutes.

You have quoted in your inquiry the different provisions of these statutes necessary to the disposition of the questions you ask, and interpreting those provisions of the act in connection with the principles above stated.

Your first question should be answered as follows: Residence in a county is not a necessary qualification for the holding of positions in the public service of such county. Section 10 of the law, however, without expressly so enacting, assumes power on your part to limit examinations to a county. You are correct in your assumption that the act regards the county service as in a sense distinct from the state service, or, to speak with more certainty, the act recognizes the existing condition that such county service is distinct from the state service. This distinction is not intended to be eliminated by dividing the public service into state and municipal service. The provision merely places county service under the jurisdiction of the state commission instead of creating an independent county commission or one for each separate political unit.

Combining the two doctrines above mentioned it is therefore undoubtedly within your power to limit the examinations of a county without fixing an absolute qualification of residence in the county for the proposed office or position. This you may do, and it is not going too far to say that you should do, as already indicated by the expression of your own opinion by holding an examination in a county in which you are required to furnish an eligible list and by advertising the same in that county only but without expressly excluding those who are non-residents of the county from taking such examination. There is reason to believe that this course would have the oractical effect of preserving the present practice and that it would be in conformity with the present public ideas upon the subject. Non-residents of the county should not generally desire to take such examinations or attempt to intrude themselves into such positions except in such cases as they were desired in such positions in the same manner as they heretofore been. This practice would not be outside the limit of the law and would certainly be within its spirit and undoubtedly have the effect of conferring all the benefits of the civil service law upon the county service without disturbing the existing opinions and practice with reference thereto.

As to your second question, the answer should be in the negative, for the following reason:

A transfer from the county service to the state service would intrude one into the latter service who had not competed with all those entitled to seek the same position, but who had only competed against those in the same one of the eighty-eight counties in which he took the examination.

This would be a direct infraction of the extension of the civil service embodied in the provisions of section 10 of the act, that the examination shall be free for all, for by this method far the greater number would be excluded. The converse of this is not quite so apparent, yet it seems to present a proper case for the application of the old-fashioned maxim that, "It is a poor rule that does not work both ways;" besides which it would introduce irregular practice and unsatisfactory conditions if the county service were partly made up of those who had competed in a county examination and partly of those who had done so in a state examination, and would therefore afford an opportunity for unfair discrimination or cause groundless suspicion of such examinations.

It is necessary to answer your third question in the same way, having found a line of cleavage between the state and county service the same should be observed, and if one on the state eligible list wishes to enter the service in his own county, he should compete in a county examination in order that there may be uniformity and equality, and that all may enter the county service upon the same basis of equal opportunity. Where there is no county eligible list resort should be had to temporary or provisional appointment just as in other cases.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—IMPROVEMENT UNDER SECTION 6919 G. C.—WHAT LANDS MAY BE ASSESSED—STATE AID.

1. Under the provisions of subdivision 4 of section 6919 G. C. (107 O. L. 99) the lands which may be assessed to provide for a part or all of the cost and expense of the improvement are confined to those lying on either side of the improvement, within one-half mile, one mile or two miles thereof, and within lines drawn at right angles with the termini of the improvement.

2. There is no provision of law whereby the state may furnish a part of the cost and expense of an improvement over which the county commissioners have assumed jurisdiction under sections 6906 et seq. G. C. (107 O. L. 95.) To secure aid from the state, relative to the improvement of intercounty highways, application must be made for state aid under sections 1178 et seq. G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 12, 1917.

HON. HUGH F. NEUHART, Prosecuting Attorney, Caldwell, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of November 22, 1917, in which you ask me to place a construction upon section 6919 G. C., with a view to answering the following questions:

"May real estate within two miles of the termini of the improvement be assessed on the theory that it comes within the provisions of this section by being within two miles of either side thereof, providing, of course, that said real estate is benefited by the improvement?

May the state join with the county in an improvement of an intercounty highway under the above provision (referring to subdivision 4 of section 6919 (G. C.) for two mile assessment plan, or must any portion of an improvement made on an intercounty road, as above, be controlled exclusively by the county commissioners, and any portion thereof which the state may desire to improve in conjunction with a portion of any improvement as made above by the county be made separately by the state?"

Your first question relates to assessing a part of the cost and expense of an improvement against the benefited property owners, as set forth in subdivision 4 of section 6919 G. C. (107 O. L. 99), said subdivision reading as follows:

"4. All or any part thereof shall be assessed against the real estate abutting upon said improvement, or against the real estate situated within one-half mile of either side thereof, or against the real estate situated within one mile of either side thereof, or against the real estate situated within two miles of either side thereof, according to the benefits accruing to such real estate and the balance thereof, if any, shall be paid out of the proceeds of any levy or levies for road purposes upon the grand duplicate of all the taxable property in the county or from any funds in the county treasury available therefor."

The first alternative provision in this subdivision is that all or any part of the cost and expense of the improvement shall be assessed against the real estate abutting upon said improvement. In reference to this provision it could hardly be considered that lands abut upon the terminus of an improvement, but under this part of the alternative provision only the lands which touch either side of the improvement could be assessed.

The other alternatives are:

"or against the real estate situated within one-half mile of either side thereof, or against the real estate situated within one mile of either side thereof, or against the real estate situated within two miles of either side thereof."

I believe this language should be construed in connection with the language used in the first alternative, to the effect that it embodies lands lying immediately back of the lands abutting on either side of the improvement, to the depth of one-half mile, one mile or two miles.

This construction would also be in harmony with the general understanding in reference to the word "distance." When we speak of any object being a certain distance from a line, we mean that distance is to be measured by a line drawn perpendicularly to the line in reference to which the object is located.

The statute reads:

"the real estate situated within two miles of either side thereof."

The sides of course would not include the terminus. Hence the lands that may be assessed to pay the cost and expense of the improvement would be those lands included in a rectangle on either side of the improvement, on which the side thereof would form one dimension, and a line two miles, one mile or one-half mile, as the case may be, the other dimension.

Further, this construction seems to be in harmony with the evident intention of the legislature. Section 6919, as found in the Cass highway law, provided eight methods of taking care of the cost and expense of an improvement, and the eighth method more nearly corresponds with the fourth method named in section 6919 of the White-Mulcahy law, than does any other method contained in said Cass highway law.

The eighth method in the Cass law read as follows:

> "The county commissioners may assess the total cost and expenses of the improvement against the owners of real estate located within one mile or two miles, as the petitioners may request, from either side or terminus of said improvement, according to the benefit resulting to such real estate; or they may assess not to exceed one-half of the cost and expenses of such improvement upon the owners of real estate situated within one-half mile of either side or terminus of said improvement, in proportion to the benefits accruing to such real estate as determined by said commissioners, while the remainder of the cost and expenses shall be paid out of the proceeds of any levy or levies for road purposes upon the grand duplicate of the county."

The legislature in this subdivision 8 provided that the measurement might be "from either side or terminus of said improvement."

However, when we come to consider the language in subdivision 4 of section 6919, in the White-Mulcahy law, we find legislature omitted the words "or terminus." This would indicate that the legislature did not intend that measurements made relative to assessment districts should be made from the terminus of the improvement, but only from either side thereof. This is in harmony with the holdings of our courts in reference to statutes embodying much the same language as that found in the section upon which you ask me to place a construction.

In Lear v. Halstead, 41 O. S. 566, the court say, in the first branch of the syllabus:

> "Under amended section 8 of the act authorizing county commissioners to lay out and establish free turnpike roads (73 Ohio Laws, 98), the provision that, 'extra taxes when levied shall be on all real and personal property within one mile on each side of said free turnpike road,' does not include land within one mile as measured from the end of the road, but only as measured from either side of the road and between the termini of the same."

On page 569 in the opinion the court uses the following language:

> "The provision in this section which requires that extra taxes shall be levied on real and personal property within one mile on each side of the turnpike road, does not, we think, embrace lands within one mile as measured from the end of the road, but only as measured from either side of the road and between the termini of the same. The lands therefore, situated beyond the terminus of the turnpike, and lying outside of the line drawn from the terminus at right angles with the last course of the road, were not subject to taxation. The legislative intent seems plain. If it had been designed to extend the tax limits, so as to include territory and personal property beyond the end of the turnpike, the legislature, it is presumed, would have made it manifest by appropriate language. It did not fail to do so in the act commonly known as the two mile road improvement law, which provided in amended section 4 (71 Ohio Laws, 94), that no lands should be assessed which did not lie within two miles of the proposed improvement, and that such distance of two miles might 'be computed in any direction from either side, end or terminus of said road.'"

In Kasson v. County Commissioners, 15 C. C. (N. S.) 460, the court in the syllabus lays down the following proposition:

"Under the one mile road assessment act, the taxing district is confined to one mile of the improvement within a line drawn at right angles with the termini thereof."

The particular language upon which the court in this case was placing a construction was found in section 4670-14 R. S., as follows:

"That when a majority of the resident owners of any real estate lying and being within one mile of any public road, shall present a petition," etc.

From all the above it is my opinion that the conclusion hereinbefore reached by me is correct.

Your second question is as to whether the state highway commissioner could join with the county commissioners in an improvement, the cost and expense of which is based upon one of the methods found in section 6919 G. C., and more particularly the fourth method therein set out. It must be remembered that sections 6906 et seq. G. C. relate particularly to those improvements over which the county commissioners assume jurisdiction. There is no provision whatever made in these sections, which permits the state highway commissioner to join in the making of the improvement.

I desire to call your attention to section 1214 G. C. (107 O. L. 129). Sections 1178 to 1231-11 inc. G. C., deal particularly with the improvements over which the state highway commissioner exercises jurisdiction. Section 1214, which is one of this group of sections, provides as follows:

"Sec. 1214. * * * Provided, however, that the county commissioners by a resolution adopted by unanimous vote may increase the per cent of the cost and expense of the improvement to be specially assessed and may order that all or any part of the cost and expense of the improvement contributed by the county and the interested township or townships be assessed against the property abutting on the improvement; and provided further, that the county commissioners by a resolution passed by unanimous vote may make the assessment of ten per cent or more, as the case may be, of the cost and expense of improvement against the real estate within one-half mile of either side of the improvement or against the real estate within one mile of either side of the improvement. * * *"

So that while the state could not join in an improvement, a part or all of the cost and expense of which is to be assessed upon property owners to a distance of two miles on either side of the improvement, yet under section 1214, supra, provision could be made whereby the property owners on either side of the improvement, to a distance of one mile, might be assessed for all or a part of the cost and expense of same, which is to be contributed by the county and the interested township or townships under the agreement of the county with the state. In order to do this, it would be necessary for the county commissioners to make application to the state highway department for state aid, relative to the construction of intercounty highways, provisions for which are made in sections 1178 to 1231-11 inc. G. C.

Hence answering your second question specifically, there is no provision of law by virtue of which the state could assume a part of the cost and expense of an improvement over which the county commissioners are assuming jurisdiction under sections 6906 et seq. G. C. However, application for state aid might be made to the state highway commissioner under sections 1178 et seq. G. C., under the provisions of which sections the state could furnish aid as might be agreed upon between the state highway commissioner and the county commissioners.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—MAY NOT EMPLOY LABORERS, TEAMS, ETC., WITHOUT AUTHORITY OF COMMISSIONERS—WHEN CERTIFICATE OF AUDITOR REQUIRED IN SUCH CASES—WHEN COMMISSIONERS ENTER INTO CONTRACT WITHOUT CERTIFICATE OF AUDITOR—CONTRACT NOT VALIDATED BY CERTIFICATE ISSUED LATER—OBLIGATION NOT BINDING ON COUNTY—NO AUTHORITY TO ISSUE NOTES OF COUNTY TO PAY SAME—LIABILITY OF COMMISSIONERS.

1. Under the provisions of section 7198 G. C. (107 O. L. 115), the county surveyor cannot act in reference to the matters therein set out until he is authorized so to do by the county commissioners.

2. If acts are performed under section 7198 G. C. by the county surveyor without the authority of the county commissioners, they would be void and the county commissioners could not validate the same after they were performed by the county surveyor; neither could they pay the obligations arising under said acts.

3. The provisions of section 5660 G. C. in reference to the certificate of the county auditor do not apply to contracts entered into by the county surveyor under section 7198 G. C., but they do apply to the county commissioners in ordering the payment of claims which arise out of contracts so entered into.

4. In cases where contracts are entered into by the county commissioners contrary to the provisions of section 5660 G. C., the fact that the county auditor issues his certificate after the contract is entered into and the work thereunder performed would not validate the contract.

5. Contracts entered into contrary to the provisions of section 5660 G. C. are not legal obligations against the county. County commissioners have no authority to recognize moral obligations.

6. The provisions of section 5656 G. C. cannot be resorted to in order to take care of claims arising under void contracts, for the reason that the obligations must be valid and binding obligations of the county as set forth in section 5658 G. C.

7. Neither can the provisions of section 5656 G. C. be resorted to in order to replenish some fund which is depleted, but the same are limited to those cases in which the county cannot meet obligations when they mature.

8. The county commissioners would have no authority to issue the notes of the county in payment of claims arising under contracts entered into by them contrary to the provisions of section 5660 G. C.

9. The county commissioners are not personally responsible for the payment of claims arising under contracts entered into in violation of the provisions of section 5660 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 12, 1917.

HON. MELL G. UNDERWOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, New Lexington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 24, 1917, in which you set forth nine separate and distinct questions upon which you desire me to express an opinion. Instead of setting forth the communication in full I shall take these questions up in the order in which they are given in your communication and answer them in the same order.

Your first question is as follows:

"Under the provisions of section 7198 G. C., as amended in 107 Ohio Laws, can the county surveyor do the acts mentioned therein without first being authorized by the county commissioners to do so, and thereby create contractual obligations that bind the county for their payment?"

On April 19, 1917, I rendered an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, in which I placed a construction upon this said section in reference to the same matters about which you inquire. The section which was in force at that time read somewhat differently than the section does at present, and this will make it necessary for me to note the provisions of the section as it stood under the Cass act, and as it stands under the White-Mulcahy act.

Section 7198 under the Cass act, and upon which I placed a construction in said opinion, read as follows:

"The county highway superintendent may, with the approval of the county commissioners or township trustees, employ such laborers, teams, implements and tools, and purchase such material as may be necessary in the performance of his duties."

This section under the act as it now stands is found in 107 Ohio Laws, page 115, and reads as follows:

"The county surveyor may when authorized by the county commissioners employ such laborers and teams, lease such implements and tools and purchase such material as may be necessary in the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance or repair of roads, bridges and culverts by force account."

In placing a construction upon the section as it formerly read I arrived at the following conclusion:

"Hence, answering your inquiry specifically, it is my opinion that the approval mentioned in section 7198 G. C. precedes the purchase of material and the employment of labor by the county highway superintendent."

The section as it now reads, instead of providing that the county highway superintendent may act with the approval of the county commissioners or township trustees, provides that the county surveyor may when authorized by the county commissioners act, as provided in said section.

The word "authorized" is much stronger than the word "approval" when we come to consider the proposition as to whether the authority must be given before the act is done or whether it may be given after the act is done. Authority cannot be given after an act is done. The authority to do an act must be given before the act itself is done. Hence, from reason and from the authority of the opinion from which I have quoted, it is my opinion that the authority of the county commissioners must be given to the county surveyor before he acts in the matter of employing laborers and teams as set out in section 7198 G. C.

Your second question reads as follows:

"In case the county surveyor does the acts mentioned under the provisions of the foregoing section, and you should hold that it is necessary for the authorization to precede the making of said contracts, can the county commissioners validate his acts by their subsequent approval after the same are performed?"

In the same opinion above noted, namely, No. 202, rendered April 19, 1917, I touched upon this question also. To be sure, it was construed at that time with reference to the word "approval" rather than with reference to the word "authorized."

In placing a construction upon said section as it formerly stood, I arrived at the following conclusion:

> "I might say in passing that if the county highway superintendent employed labor, etc., and purchased material, without the aproval of the county commissioners, and the county commissioners afterwards should see fit to place their O. K. upon the acts of the county highway superintendent and allow the bills so made by him, the acts of the county highway superintendent could be considered as having the approval of the county commissioners from the beginning. * * * But the statute contemplates in my opinion that the approval should be given before the employment of labor and the purchase of material, and the county commissioners should not adopt the course of giving their approval and consent after the county highway superintendent has acted."

But as said before, in answer to your first question, the word "authorized" is much stronger than the word "approval," when it is considered with a view as to when the approval and authority are to be given, that is, whether before the act is performed or afterwards. It is possible for one to approve a course of conduct, but it is difficult to see how one could authorize a course of conduct after it has once been taken. In fact it is my opinion that the same cannot be done.

Hence answering your second question specifically, it is my opinion that if the county surveyor proceeds under section 7198 G. C., without authority from the county commissioners, his acts are void and cannot be validated by the county commissioners after they are performed, and therefore the county commissioners would have no authority to pay claims arising upon contracts so entered into by the county surveyor.

Your third question reads as follows:

> "Where the provisions of section 7198 G. C. are carried out by the county surveyor upon the authorization of the county commissioners, is the certificate of the county auditor under section 5660 necessary?"

This question was also answered in said opinion No. 202, above noted, and as I went into the matter very fully in said opinion, I am going to enclose a copy of the same with this opinion. You will note that I arrived at the conclusion in said opinion that while the county highway superintendent might enter into contracts provided for in section 7198 without the certificate of the county auditor, yet the county commissioners could not make the order for the payment of the bills so made by the county highway superintendent until the county auditor had certified that the money is in the treasury to the credit of the proper fund. This conclusion would also apply to the section as it now stands. Upon this question the following cases throw some light:

> State ex rel. v. Ballot Box Co., 3 C. C. 626.
> State ex rel. v. McConnell, Auditor, 28 O. S. 589.

Your fourth question reads as follows:

"The former board of commissioners of this county wilfully and knowingly ignored the provisions of sections 5660 and 5661 G. C., making numerous contracts in violation thereof, especially bridge contracts, knowing at the time that said contracts were made, that the funds out of which they were to be paid were in a depleted condition, and that there would not be any money available in said funds out of which to pay said contracts, several of those mentioned as being made without the certificate of the auditor that there were available funds to pay the same are honest obligations, with the exception that the law in this respect was not complied with by the commissioners, while others entered into under the same condition are of a questionable character, being made for extravagant sums far above what the work mentioned in the contract was reasonably and actually worth. Can the auditor after the work has been fully performed and the bill presented for payment, certify to the same, in case money should become available for the payment of the obligations that are not questionable, that the money is in the particular fund out of which it is to be paid, and thereby enable the present board of commissioners to pay the parties who hold honest claims against the county?"

This question, briefly stated, is as to whether the county auditor could after the contract is fully completed—which contract was entered into without complying with the provisions of section 5660 G. C.—make his certificate to the effect that the money is in the treasury, and by so doing make the contract effective as it would have been if the certificate had been made before the contract was entered into. In order to answer this question it will be necessary for us to note the language used in section 5660. In so far as it applies to your question, said section reads as follows:

"The commissioners of a county, * * * shall not enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, * * * unless the auditor * * * first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn. * * *"

It will be noted that the provision of this section is that the auditor must first certify that the money is in the treasury. Section 5661 G. C. provides that

"All contracts, agreements or obligations * * * entered into * * * contrary to the provisions of the next preceding section, shall be void. * * *"

From this section we note that if a contract is entered into contrary to the provisions of section 5660 G. C. it is void. It naturally follows that if the contract is void the issuance of the certificate by the county auditor after the work is done or performed could not make the same valid.

Hence, answering your fourth question specifically it is my opinion that in a case where a contract is entered into by the county commissioners without the county auditor first certifying that the money is in the treasury, the county auditor could not make the same valid by issuing his certificate after the contract is let and the work performed.

Your fifth question reads as follows:

"Are contracts made under the foregoing conditions in wilful violation of the provisions of section 5660, and in view of section 5661, either legal or moral obligations of the county?

"If they are not legal obligations, is there any duty resting on the present board of commissioners to settle the same as moral obligations of the county?"

As said in answer to your fourth question, section 5661 G. C. provides that all contracts entered into contrary to the provisions of section 5660 G. C. shall be void. But in order to understand fully the principles which should be applied to this question it might be well for us to note two decisions of our supreme court.

In State v. Fronizer, 77 O. S. 7, the court found in the syllabus as follows:

"Section 1277, Revised Statutes, which authorizes a prosecuting attorney to bring action to recover back money of the county which has been misapplied, or illegally drawn from the county treasury, does not authorize the recovery back of money paid on a county commissioners' bridge contract fully executed but rendered void by force of section 2834b, because of the lack, through inadvertence, of a certificate by the county auditor that the money is in the treasury to the credit of the fund, or has been levied and is in process of collection, there being no claim of unfairness or fraud in the making, or fraud or extortion in the execution of such contract for such work, nor any claim of effort to put the contractor in statu quo by a return of the bridge or otherwise, the same having been accepted by the board of commissioners and incorporated as part of the public highway."

And in the opinion, on page 16, the court reasons as follows:

"This court is of opinion that such recovery is not authorized. The principle applicable to the situation is the equitable one that where one has acquired possession of the property of another through an unauthorized and void contract, and has paid for the same, there can be no recovery back of the money paid without putting, or showing readiness to put, the other party in statu quo, and that rule controls this case unless such recovery is plainly authorized by the statute. The rule rests upon that principle of common honesty that imposes an obligation to do justice upon all persons, natural as well as artificial, and is recognized in many cases."

Let us keep in mind now that this was a case in which the county commissioners had entered into a contract without the county auditor first having made the certificate provided for in section 5660 G. C. (then section 2834b R. S.), and the work had been fully completed and the county had paid the consideration set forth in the contract. Under these facts, the court held that the county could not recover the money so paid from the contractor.

With this principle in mind let us turn to Buchanan Bridge Co. v. Campbell et al., 60 O. S. 406. The court in the syllabus lays down the following proposition of law:

"A contract made by county commissioners for the purchase and erection of a bridge in violation or disregard of the statutes on that subject.

is void, and no recovery can be had against the county for the value of such bridge. Courts will leave the parties to such unlawful transaction where they have placed themselves, and will refuse to grant relief to either party."

In the opinion, on page 419, the court lays down the following proposition:

"Whatever the rule may be elsewhere, in this state the public policy, as indicated by our constitution, statutes and decided cases, is, that to bind the state, a county or city for supplies of any kind the purchase must be substantially in conformity to the statute on that subject, and that contracts made in violation or disregard of such statutes are void, not merely voidable, and that courts will not lend their aid to enforce such a contract directly or indirectly, but will leave the parties where they have placed themselves. If the contract is executory, no action can be maintained to enforce it, and if executed on one side, no recovery can be had against the party of the other side."

And in the opinion, on page 425, the court reasons as follows:

"The statutes are notice to the world as to the extent of the powers of the commissioners, and the bridge company is bound by that notice. It knew, and was bound to know, that the commissioners had no power to thus enter into a contract, and that a contract thus attempted to be entered into would be null and void and would not bind either party.

It is necessary to so construe the statutes, in order to prevent the evils which induced the enactment of them. If such statutes could be evaded, there would always be found some public servants who would be ready and willing to join in transactions detrimental to the public, but favorable to themselves or some favored friend; and if public officers should be ever so honest, some persistent agent or salesman would impose upon them, and obtain more out of the public treasury than is justly due. When the provisions of the statute are followed, and all is done openly and publicly, the public interests are best conserved, and even then there is often complaint to the effect that some one has been favored."

This case embodies the same facts as are embodied in the matters about which you write.

Upon the authority of this case and many others which might be cited to the same effect, it is my opinion that there is no legal obligation resting on the present board of county commissioners to settle for the work done under contracts entered into in violation of section 5660 G. C.

You further ask, in your fifth question, as to whether there is any duty resting on the present board of commissioners to settle the said claims against the county, under the theory that they are moral obligations of the county. I will say, in answering this question, that while there are certain conditions under which the question of moral obligation may be considered, yet those conditions are not such as would warrant your county commissioners in paying said claims, on the theory that they are moral obligations.

In order that this principle may be understood, it might be well for us to consider the matter briefly. This principle is sometimes applied to legislative enactment. It is well established that the legislature has the power to make binding and legal an obligation against a municipality or a county, which otherwise could not have been enforced against the municipality or the county.

In O'Neil, Extrx. v. Mayor et al., 72 N. J. L. 67, the court say:

> "When under a contract for compensation entered into with some public agency a private party has rendered service or expended money in an enterprise which is beneficial to a particular municipality, and for which the legislature might in the first instance have made that municipality chargeable, it is competent for the legislature to discharge the original agency and fix the obligation to pay the compensation on the municipality itself."

In Sinton et al. v. Ashbury, 41 Calif. 525, the court say:

> "The legislature has the constitutional power to direct and control the affairs and property of a municipal corporation for municipal purposes, and may for such purposes so control its affairs by appropriate legislation as ultimately to compel it out of the funds in its treasury or by taxation to pay a demand which in good conscience it ought to pay, though there be no legal liability to pay it."

In Lycoming v. Union, 15 Pa. St. 166, the court used the following language in the opinion on page 169:

> "That the legislature might have made provision by the original act for the payment of costs by each of the counties interested, will not admit of cavil. Ingenuity, the most astute, though sharpened by interest, fails to suggest any plausible foundation for such a cavil. We are then reduced to the simple inquiry whether after the work is done, the services rendered, and the benefit enjoyed, the legislature may provide for its compensation and furnish a means for enforcing it."

The court in this case drew the following conclusion:

> "Where a moral obligation exists the legislature may give it legal effect."

In New Orleans v. Clark, 95 U. S. 644, the court laid down the following proposition:

> "It is competent for the legislature to impose upon a city the payment of claims just in themselves, for which an equivalent has been received, but which from some irregularity or omission in the proceedings creating them cannot be enforced in law."

For Ohio cases of similar import, see:

> Board of Education v. McLandsborough, 36 O. S. 227.
> Insurance Co. v. Commissioners, 106 Fed. 123.

From all the above it will be seen that the power to recognize a moral obligation is essentially legislative. It might be going too far to say that it cannot be delegated, but I am certain that it has not been delegated to county commissioners. Their power to allow claims against the county is limited to legal claims (Jones v. Commissioners, 57 O. S. 189). I am aware that there are some lower court decisions in this state, declaring that the power to recognize a moral obligation exists in respect of certain agencies such as boards of education. While frankly acknowledging that I doubt the correctness of such holdings, I point out that they cannot be applied to county commissioners, in the face of the Jones case, supra.

There is another principle into which the question of a moral consideration or obligation enters, viz., that a moral consideration or obligation may sustain a promise to do that which without the promise could not be enforced. This principle is stated in Elliott on Contracts, section 211:

> "It is well settled that a moral consideration alone is not sufficient to give an original cause of action if the obligation on which it is founded was never enforceable at law."

However, it is quite evident that this principle could not be made to apply to the question about which you inquire, because in your case there never was a legal and valid obligation against the county and hence there is nothing upon which a promise of the county commissioners could be based, under the theory that there is a moral obligation against the county.

Your sixth question reads as follows:

> "In case your opinion should be that contracts made in violation of section 5660 are moral obligations of the county, can the county commissioners borrow money under authority of section 5656 et seq. G. C. for the purpose of paying the same?"

This possibly does not require an answer in view of the answers that I have given to the former questions, but in passing let me say that section 5656 G. C. does not cover transactions such as those mentioned in your communication. Note the reading of this section:

> "* * * the commissioners of a county, for the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation such * * * county is unable to pay at maturity, may borrow money or issue the bonds thereof," etc.

Even though the provisions of section 5656 G. C. could be made to apply to obligations as set out in your communication, we would further be compelled to consider the provisions of another section, namely, 5658 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "No indebtedness of a * * * county shall be funded, refunded or extended unless such indebtedness is first determined to be an existing, valid and binding obligation of such * * * county by a formal resolution of the * * * commissioners thereof. * * *"

As said before, the claims about which you inquire are not valid obligations. Hence, the provisions of section 5656 G. C. could not be resorted to in order to postpone the time of settling the same.

Your seventh question reads as follows:

> "If the county commissioners cannot borrow money under the provisions of the section above mentioned to pay said obligations, is there any way in which they could legally transfer money from one fund to another and thereby create a deficit in the fund from which they make the transfer and fund said deficit under the provisions of the aforesaid mentioned section 5656 G. C.., thereby enabling them to pay obligations made in violation of section 5660 of the General Code?"

This question has to do with the transfer of money from one fund to another. An answer to this question is really rendered unnecessary by virtue of the answers that have been given to your previous questions, but in passing let me say that the answer to your sixth question answers this question.

The provisions of section 5656 G. C. were not intended to make provision for a deficit in a certain fund, but were meant simply to take care of those obligations which could not be met at maturity, due to the fact that the county is unable to pay the same.

Your eighth question reads as follows:

> "Where the commissioners have knowingly violated section 5660, in the making of contracts, can they bind the county for the same, by giving the party who holds the contract the county's note for the payment of the amount due under the contract?"

In view of all that has been said heretofore, this question will require no extended discussion. If the contract which is entered into contrary to the provisions of section 5660 G. C. is void, as is provided in section 5661 G. C., then this contract could not be used as a consideration for the entering into by the county commissioners of another contract which would be legal. In other words, if there is nothing due the contractors under the first contract, there would be no consideration by virtue of which the county commissioners could enter into another contract agreeing to pay an obligation some time in the future.

Your ninth question reads as follows:

> "Can the county commissioners be held personally responsible on their official bonds for the payment of bills contracted in violation of the plain provisions of the law, when they have knowingly violated the statutes regulating the making of said contracts?"

The principle of law which controls in this case might be stated as follows:

> "Action on the part of an officer in excess of his legal authority will not have the necessary effect of imposing upon him a personal liability on the contract which he has signed, since those with whom he is dealing cannot be deceived by him. For the extent of his authority may be ascertained by an examination of the law."

This principle is taken from Cyc. and is substantiated by the cases cited therein as authority.

In Newman et al. vs. Sylvester, 42 Ind. 106, the court lays down the following proposition:

> "If the party contracts as a public officer, and in that capacity acts honestly, he will not ordinarily be personally liable. If his authority to act is defined by public statute, all who contract with him will be presumed to know the extent of his authority, and cannot allege their ignorance as a ground for charging him with acting in excess of such authority, unless he knowingly misled the other party."

In Sanborn vs. Neal et al., 4 Minn. 126, the following is laid down as a correct principle of law:

> "Where a person contracts for another without authority, or exceeds the scope of his authority, he is held personally liable; but when public agents in good faith contract with parties having full knowledge of the extent of their authority, or who have equal means of knowledge with themselves, they do not become individually liable, unless the intent to incur a personal responsibility is clearly expressed; although it should be found that, through ignorance of the law, they may have exceeded their authority."

In McCurdy v. Rogers, 21 Wis. 197, we have the following:

> "In the case of a public agent, where his authority, or that of his principal, to contract, is derived from a public statute, the party contracted with is presumed to know the limitations of such authority; and the doctrine that an agent, by contracting for his principal, affirms his authority, does not apply."

In all the above I had in mind your statement to the effect that the board of county commissioners wilfully ignored the law in entering into many of the contracts; but if they wilfully entered into these contracts undoubtedly those who contracted with them entered into the same just as wilfully.

Hence, in view of all the above, it is my opinion in answer to your ninth question that the county commissioners could not be held personally liable for the claims arising under contracts entered into contrary to the provisions of section 5660 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1917.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 23, 1917, you ask an opinion upon the following state of facts:

On September 5, 1917, John Wagner, the holder of a liquor license, properly filed application with his local county board for a renewal. On September 15, 1917, which was the last day of the application period, said John Wagner died and on the same day another party, John Schenz, filed an original application for a saloon license.

One of the members of Wagner's family qualified as administrator and as provided by the license law took over the management of the Wagner saloon, and was in control thereof as such administrator on the date provided for the announcement of the names of persons to whom licenses would be granted or whose applications for renewals would be granted.

Upon consideration of the two applications, the local board announced that it would grant the application of Schenz for original license, and that it would reject the application theretofore filed by Wagner, now deceased, stating as its grounds for such rejection that the quota for that wet unit had been filled.

The administrator of Wagner has appealed to the state licensing board, from the decision of the local board rejecting the application of his decedent for a renewal of his said license. You further state that the sole question raised by the record is whether or not the right of renewal for saloon license survives the death of the licensee and inures to the benefit of his estate or successors, or whether such right of renewal is a personal one granted to the licensee and which ceases with his death.

The question presented is a new one under our license law, and as far as I have been able to learn this is the first time the exact matter has been raised. Its determination is important for I can well see that property interests might be involved, dependent upon the answer to the conclusion arrived at.

It may be well to consider what a license to traffic in intoxicating liquors is, and then more particularly consider what is a license to so traffic under the liquor licensing act of this state. A license, generally speaking and probably in its proper sense, is a permit to do business that cannot be done without it.

As defined by our supreme court in State v. Frame, 39 O. S. 399, a license is essentially a grant to those to whom it is given or extended.

Again, the court in State v. Hipp, 38 O. S. 199, defined license as "permission granted by some competent authority to do an act which without such permission would be illegal."

Licenses to traffic in intoxicating liquors may be divided into two general classes: One where the granting authority is given plenary power and is authorized to issue liquor licenses in such number and to such persons as in his discretion is determined. The laws pertaining to this kind of liquor license usually provide for both petitions on the part of the applicant and remonstrators who desire to protest against the granting of such license. The other general class of liquor licenses are those where the granting power does not possess the authority to grant the licenses at will but where licenses are obtainable by such applicants as properly qualify under the law. In this class any person possessing the qualifications prescribed is entitled to the liquor license.

As I have said, while there are two general classes, still all liquor licenses do not fall within one of the two general classes, for there are liquor licenses which partake in varying degrees of the character of a license in both of the general classes. This is the case of the liquor license under the Ohio law. The constitution and the law provides that licenses shall not be granted to a person who is not a citizen of the United States or who is not of good moral character.

The law further provides that no saloon license can be issued to any person who has not been a resident of Ohio for more than one year preceding the date of his application. Further provision is made by virtue of the constitutional requirement that not more than one saloon shall be licensed in any township or municipality of less than five hundred population.

The constitution provides that license to traffic in intoxicating liquors should be granted, and then proceeds to inhibit the issuance of licenses to certain persons and to limit the number in particular districts.

So the license granting authority is possessed of some wide discretion in determining the proper qualifications of the applicants. Yet the liquor licensing boards have not the plenary power that is given the license issuing authorities under some of the liquor laws of other states.

Woollen & Thornton on Intoxicating Liquors, section 319, says:

> "A license to sell intoxicating liquor is granted to the recipient of it because of his personal fitness to receive it and act thereunder. It is a personal trust not transferable, and not, because of its non-transferability, an asset of his estate on his decease or assignment in bankruptcy."

Citing in re Buck's Estate, 185 Pa. St. 57, and other cases.

The above quotation found in the text of Woollen & Thornton, supra, is true as a general proposition, but we must look to the specific statutes providing for the license systems of the various states, to determine whether it has full application. It is well settled that in the absence of statute the grant of the license, being a personal trust, is not transferable; but some of the states have seen fit to specifically provide for the assignment and transfer of liquor licenses.

A liquor license law is a regulatory law affecting the traffic. Ever since the first general statute passed by the British parliament in 1552, being the act of the fifth and sixth parliament of Edward VI, Chap. 5, p. 391, Eng. Stat. at Large, 1540 to 1552, various schemes of regulating this traffic have been prescribed by law by the legislative bodies of the different commonwealths. This legislation has been upheld as an exercise of the police power of the state, a governmental power under which permits are obtained by virtue of the laws enacted thereunder. These permits or licenses are not contracts and the licensee does not acquire any contractual interest. The license is taken with the tacit condition of the power of the sovereign at any time to impose different or additional restrictions. In some jurisdictions it has been held that liquor licenses are not property—at least they are not property in any legal constitutional sense.

If the Ohio law merely provided for the grant of a liquor license and made no provision whatsoever for a transfer or assignment of such license, nor any provision for survivors in interest of such license, I would have no difficulty in determining that it was a right inuring solely to the person to whom the license was granted, and that all the privileges pertaining thereto ceased upon the death of the holder of such license. However, our legislature has seen fit, as have the legislatures of some other states, to make provision for the transfer and assignment of liquor licenses.

In considering this question, it will be necessary to refer to the following sections of the General Code.

Section 1261-52 G. C. provides in part:

> "Upon the death of a licensee * * * the interest of the decedent shall be disposed of by the administrator * * * under the direction of the probate court without delay. The surviving member or partner * * * (or if there be no survivors in interest then the relict of the deceased, or if there be no relict then the child or children), paying to the said administrator * * * such an amount * * * shall have the right to assume the interest of said decedent providing said notice is given of such intention to the probate court within thirty days after the death of the decedent. If a license or an interest therein shall pass by descent or otherwise to one who cannot qualify under the law as licensee, or if the survivor or relict or child or children, as the case may be, shall not in the time prescribed elect to assume said decedent's interest in the license, or if said survivor or relict or child or children, as the case may be, does not comply with the terms fixed by the court, the probate court shall order the license as a whole sold, without delay but after proper notice given by publication, and shall order the proceeds distributed to the survivors in the ownership of the license, if there be such, and the executor or administrator of the decedent, according as their interest may appear, providing, however, that the purchaser of the license shall be duly qualified under the law, and provided further that the said purchaser shall have filed the application required by law of an original applicant for a license.
> If all the conditions have been complied with, and if the applicant is qualified by law, the county licensing board shall, upon proper certificate from the probate court and without fee, transfer the license to the purchaser thereof for the remainder of the license year. The said purchaser shall have all the rights and obligations of the original licensee under said license.

Pending the settlement in the probate court, the executor or administrator may continue the business upon notice to the county licensing board that such is his intention, but within three days said executor or administrator must file an application in all respects as is required of an original applicant, except that no fees shall be required. And if said executor or administrator does not possess the qualifications required by law, the probate court may appoint some person who has such qualifications to serve as trustee of the license pending said settlement. If there are survivors in interest in the license, said survivors shall have the privilege of continuing said business until the settlement in the probate court has been effected.

* * * * * * *

So far as applicable, and so far as is not inconsistent herewith, the laws of Ohio concerning the disposition of the personal estate of a deceased person shall be applied."

Section 1261-35 G. C. (107 O. L. 23), providing where and how applications shall be filed and when same shall be considered under the new license year as in the amended act provided, reads in part as follows:

"* * * except that in the case of applications for the intermediary license period hereinbefore provided for no application for a saloon license filed with the said county board before the first day of September, 1917, and after the fifteenth day of September, 1917, may be considered by the board until after the fourth Monday in November, 1917."

Section 1261-43 G. C. (107 O. L. 23) reads in part as follows:

"* * * Where the number of applications is greater than the number of licenses allowed by law, the applicants who were engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors prior to the fourth Monday of May, 1912 (or their bona fide successors in title), as evidenced by the payment of the assessment for the preceding period under section 6071 of the General Code shall be preferred, provided they are otherwise qualified by law. * * *."

Section 1261-47 G. C. (107 O. L. 25), provides, among other things, that on the expiration of each of said licenses, the said license shall be renewed upon the application of the licensee, subject to the same conditions, qualifications and limitations applying to a new applicant for license, and that no applicant for a renewal of license shall be refused a license unless the said applicant has not met the qualifications required by law.

Under section 1261-52, supra, upon the death of the licensee Wagner, his interest should be disposed of by the administrator under the direction of the probate court, and it is therein provided that decedent's wife, if he has one, and if not, then his child or children, is entitled to assume the interest of the decedent in said license, paying to the administrator the sum determined and complying with the provisions of the statute in reference to qualifications. This section contains an inference that the existing license may pass by descent to one who could not qualify as a licensee, and makes provision for such a case. Likewise, if there is no election to assume the interest of the decedent in the license, provision is made for the sale of the license, the proceeds of such sale to be paid to the administrator or "to the survivors in the ownership of the license," according as their interests may appear. It will be noted of course that the continual provision is made that the person to whom the license finally goes shall possess the qualifications of a licensee as provided by the constitution and the law.

This section in terms makes it the duty of the county licensing board, upon certification from the probate court, to transfer such license to the purchaser thereof for the remainder of the license year, and grants to the purchaser all the rights and obligations of the original licensee under said license.

As I understand the facts in the present case, the administrator has under the law continued the business, having been found to possess the qualifications necessary therefor. But attention is directed to the fact that even if the administrator could not have so qualified, the probate court was authorized to appoint a qualified person to serve as trustee of the license, pending settlement in the probate court.

Your attention is further called to the concluding provision of the section which makes, so far as applicable and so far as is not inconsistent with the section, the laws of Ohio applicable concerning the disposition of the personal estate of a deceased person.

I think it is plain and beyond any possible controversy that at least pending the settlement in the probate court and during the existent license year, the administrator held the license with all the rights and liabilities exactly as the original licensee. I take it that it was his duty to conserve the value of this license the same as he would the assets of the estate coming into his hands, and that the proceeds arising from the sale or transfer of such license would be treated as assets of the estate.

Now, could it be that the legislature, in imposing this specific duty upon the administrator, intended that all duties devolving upon the administrator should cease by reason of the expiration of the then current license year? If such were the intention, would not the law-makers have confined the provisions of section 1261-52 G. C. to the license year of decedent's death?

In 14 N. S. Wales Law Rep. 430, in the case of Dunlop v. Uhr, the supreme court of New South Wales was considering the authority of an assignee in bankruptcy on the question of renewal of a liquor license. The court held that the assignee might carry on the business of such licensee until the expiration of the license, but that he could not renew the license. Innes, J., at page 433, as well as the concurring justice, Stephen, bases his conclusions upon the express language of the licensing act (section 15 of 45 Vic. No. 14), which states:

> "If any licensee shall die or become insolvent before the expiration of his license, his executors or administrators or his official assignee, as the case may be, may by an agent specially authorized in writing by the licensing magistrate, carry on the business of such licensee, until the expiration of his license."

The court further says that in its opinion it required the express authorization of the legislature to allow an assignee to sell liquor as the publican could.

I am of the opinion that in the absence of a limitation to the current license year, the authority given by our licensing act to the administrator is a general authority, limited only by the provisions of the section and the orders of the probate court.

At the time our state constitution was amended so as to provide for the granting of liquor licenses, it was further provided that the granting of saloon licenses should be limited according to population. At that time it was well known that in many of the license units a greater number of saloons were doing business than such unit would be entitled to under its quota. Then too, recognition was given to the fact that many persons were engaged in the traffic of intoxicating liquors, a recognized business under the Ohio laws and the liquor taxation system then existing, and the legislature, in the enactment of statutes carrying into effect the constitutional amendment, sought to give a priority of right to license to applicants who had been engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors.

In section 28 of the act, section 1261-43 G. C., express provision was made that when the number of applications is greater than the number of licenses allowed by law, those applicants who were engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors prior to the fourth Monday of May, 1912, or their bona fide successors in title, as evidenced by the payment of the assessment for the preceding period under section 6071 G. C., should be preferred, provided they are otherwise qualified by law. This probably would have been regarded as an executed law and only applicable at the time of the first granting of the licenses under the new licensing act but for the fact that the last legislature has seen fit to re-enact it and section 1261-43 G. C., supra, contains the same language. This section so enacted continues the preferential right given to applicants, tracing their title as therein provided.

I have heretofore stated that authorities have held that a liquor license does not constitute property in the constitutional sense. The Ohio courts have not decided either that such a license is property or otherwise.

In Horrigan v. Mendelson, 18 N. P. (N. S.) 596, it was held:

> "A saloon license is not personal property in this state, in the sense that it is subject to levy and execution."

Laeghley, J., calls attention to the authorities supporting the claim that this license is property and also to the adjudications holding the license not to be property subject to levy on execution. While the question before the court, and which was finally decided, was whether or not a saloon license was personal property in the sense that it is subject to levy and execution, the reasoning of the court, as well as its opinion that such a license was a mere privilege and that a holding that the license was property would present many anomalous situations, indicates the trend of mind of the court upon what it conceded to be a difficult question.

I would follow the decision that a saloon license is not personal property in the sense that it is subject to levy and execution, but with all due respect I am constrained to hold that it is more than "a mere privilege."

In 2 N. B. N. Rep. 245; 98 Fed. 407, in the case of In re Becker, the court says:

> "The statutes of the state permit a license to be transferred, subject to the approval of the court of quarter sessions; and I regard it, therefore, as so far property, 'which, prior to the filing of the petition, a bankrupt could by any means have transferred,' that the right to sell it (I do not say the right to exercise it) will pass to the trustee. No doubt there is a clearly visible distinction between a right to property and a mere personal privilege; but I see no abstract reason why some personal privileges may not also come to have qualities belonging usually to property rights alone—such, for example, as capacity to be transferred, and sufficient attractiveness to make other persons willing to pay money for the opportunity to acquire them. Where, as in the case of a license to sell liquor, these qualities are found to exist in fact, it seems to me the privilege has ceased to be a privilege merely, and has become, in some sense, and in some degree, property also. It can hardly be sound to hold that a bankrupt's creditors may not avail themselves of the fact that money can be had for the chance of stepping into the licensee's place, but that the bankrupt himself may make the same bargain, and put the money safely into his pocket. The license court may or may not accept the buyer as the bankrupt's successor. That is the buyer's affair, and is not decisive upon the point now being considered. He buys a contingency, and buys it with his eyes open; but, in my opinion, the trustee has the contingency to sell, and the bankrupt is bound to execute the instrument necessary to carry out the sale."

See also Re Brodbine, 93 Fed. 643.

And the same conclusion is reached by the circuit court of appeals in Fisher v. Cushman, 51 L. R. A. 292, C. C. A. 381, 103 Fed. 860.

In Deggender, Receiver, v. Seattle Brewing & Malting Co., 83 Pac. 898, the Washington supreme court held as shown by the first paragraph of the syllabus, which reads as follows:

"A license to sell intoxicating liquors, which, under the terms of the statute, is transferable, and therefore has a money value, is an asset of the estate of the licensee to which a receiver for the benefit of his creditors is entitled."

Mount, C. J., uses the following language:

"Under statutes which do not permit transfers of the license from one person to another, and where the right is a personal privilege only, we think the rule stated is undoubtedly correct. But where the statute recognizes the right of transfer from one to another, and where the right is a valuable right, capable of being surrendered and reduced to money, a different rule prevails. In such cases the license or right to do business becomes a valuable property right, subject to barter and sale. It is property with value and quality. The United States courts have held that liquor licenses issued under statutes authorizing a transfer are assets of an estate, under the bankruptcy act. Fisher v. Cushman, 51 L. R. A. 292, 43 C. C. A. 381, 103 Fed. 860; Re Becker, 98 Fed. 407; Re Fisher, 98 Fed. 89; Re Brodbine, 93 Fed. 643; Re Gallagher, 16 Blatchf. 410, Fed. Cas. No. 5,192. Mr. Black, in discussing these cases and the question involved in this action, in this note appended to the case of Fisher v. Cushman, 43 C. C. A. 392, says: 'If these questions (referring especially to franchises to collect tolls and the like) should again arise, it is probable that they would be decided in accordance with the rule laid down in regard to liquor licenses; the true test being found in the question whether the franchise or right is actually transferable, with the consent of the authorities and without any practical difficulty, and whether it has a market value and can be disposed of by sale.' This, it seems in reason, must be the correct rule. If a license to sell liquors is transferable, valuable, and is subject to sale, it is certainly not merely a personal privilege, but it has all the attributes of property, except tangibility, and must be treated as property."

In 19 Vict. Law Rep. 66, the supreme court of Victoria, construing their licensing act, which is somewhat similar to ours, where a widow of a licensee carried on the business for a time until the administrator was appointed, who nominated the widow as his agent to carry on the business and subsequently sold the business, making application to the licensing court to transfer the license to his transferee under a section empowering the licensing court to transfer licenses "to any person of whom the court may approve upon the application of the holder of the license and the proposed transferee jointly;" held: That were it not for the provision of section 115 of the licensing act, the license would be a personal privilege, coming to an end on the death of the licensee. But since said section provided that in case of the decease of the licensee before the expiration of his license, his administrator by agent might be specially authorized to carry on the business, it was apparent that the legislature had made this provision to protect the license and that said license is kept in existence as a part of the estate and becomes the legal property of the administrator, passing to him, he becoming the owner thereof for the benefit of the persons beneficially interested in the estate.

In In re Peck v. Cargill, 167 N. Y. 391, on an appeal from an order revoking and cancelling a liquor tax certificate, O'Brien, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

> "These certificates are recognized by the statute under which they are issued as a species of property transferable from one to another. They are the evidence of a right or privilege to carry on a certain kind of business issued by the state to the individual and hence a thing of pecuniary value."

Martin, J., in concurring in this opinion says:

> "While it has been said that a tax certificate possesses some of the elements of property and to an extent may be so regarded, still it is at most a qualified property subject to all the provisions of the statute, and may be cancelled or destroyed in the manner specified."

That a liquor license can be considered as some species of property appears from a statute of the state of Connecticut which has a provision giving the right to attach liquor licenses. It provides a way for the attachment and levy of execution upon liquor licenses.

In Quinnipiec Brewing Co. v. Hackbarth, 50 Atl. Rep. 1023, the supreme court of errors of Connecticut was called upon to construe that portion of their liquor licensing act which provides that "the license and all right and interest therein" may be attached, etc., and that such attached license "should be holden to respond to execution in the same manner and for the same length of time as personal property attached." The attaching officer took the certificate into his custody.

The court says at p. 1024:

> "* * * He attached and levied upon something more than a worthless piece of paper which his hands rested upon. He attached and levied upon a 'license'—speaking after the manner of common speech and the statutory meaning given to the word—upon the valuable intangible right conferred upon the licensee, of which the paper was the recognized token and representative. Holding the paper, he held the embodiment of the liquor selling franchise—a valuable thing—to respond to a judgment * * *."

In that case also it appears that the license was the subject of replevin proceedings.

I cite this case merely to show that this intangible right or interest in a license has been treated in some cases as if it possessed some attributes of property.

In Bonnie & Co. v. Perry, Trustee, 78 S. W. 208, the court of appeals of Kentucky held:

> "Under Ky. St. 1903, section 4203 et seq., relative to liquor licenses which contemplate that a license be given to a definite person to sell at a definite place, although section 4198 allows (but does not compel) the authorities to renew a license in case of the death or transfer of the business by the licensee to his personal representative or the purchaser, a license is a mere personal privilege and is not transferable, and any attempt by an insolvent licensee to transfer his license to a creditor does not render the creditor who accepts it liable to pay anything for the license to the licensee's trustee in bankruptcy."

The court in this case held that the Kentucky statute did not compel the authorities, although it permitted them to renew the license to the personal representative, etc., and stated that such a license was—

> "an intangible privilege without vendible value or quality. It might be abandoned by its owner or be revoked at any time for certain causes by the public authority granting it. It is not transferable. The fact that the city council and county court are allowed to transfer it without additional charges, upon the application of the owner, does not give him the right to transfer it."

The court further found that as a matter of fact in that case the license did not appear to have been really transferred by either the city or county authorities. Such transfer had only been effected or attempted to have been done by the licensee himself.

I do not think this Kentucky decision is authority in the instant case. Under our statute the license is transferable. Further, the provisions of section 1261-52, supra, unlike the Kentucky statutes, appear to make it mandatory upon the county licensing board to transfer the license to a purchaser thereof for the remainder of the license year upon compliance with all the conditions and a finding that the transferee is qualified by law.

From all the foregoing, I am inclined to the view that the legislature in its enactment of the liquor licensing law, particularly section 1261-52 G. C., intended to confer more than a mere personal privilege upon the holder of such a license. True, it may not be subject to sale or execution, because I can well see that the execution officer would not be in a position to transfer the full title to the purchaser, but it might be possible for a diligent creditor to realize upon its value by way of some proceeding in aid of execution.

Under the facts in the case we are called upon to consider, the administrator has followed the express terms of the statute. There, of course, is and could be no question but that he held the liquor license for the estate during the period of the existing license year. Had he been able to close up that portion of the estate prior to the date when announcements would be made by the licensing board of those to whom it intended to grant licenses, and a transfer had been made of such license to the purchaser thereof, it is my view that such purchaser would have succeeded to all the rights of the original licensee, would have been the successor in title as contemplated in section 1261-43 (107 O. L. 23), and should have been preferred, provided he was otherwise qualified by law.

I do not believe the situation is changed by the fact that the administrator has not as yet closed up that portion of the estate in the probate court in the manner prescribed by the liquor licensing act. While of course it must be conceded that a renewal license could not have been granted to the deceased, it is my opinion that such renewal license could be granted to the administrator who stands, on behalf of his decedent's estate, in the place of the decedent, succeeding to all his rights as well as his liability.

Under the authority of section 1261-31 G. C., county liquor licensing boards among other things are authorized to renew as provided by law, all licenses to traffic in intoxicating liquors in the county wherein the board is situated.

Under section 1261-43 as amended (107 O. L. 23), where the number of applications is greater than the number of licenses allowed by law, the applicants who are engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors prior to the fourth Monday of May, 1912 (or their bona fide successors in title), as evidenced by the payment of the assessment for the preceding period under section 6071 G. C., shall be preferred, provided they are otherwise qualified by law.

Section 1261-47 as amended (107 O. L. 25), which re-enacts, with some amendments, section 32 of the original license act, expressly authorizes the renewal of licenses and specifically provides that:

> "* * * no applicant for a renewal of license shall be refused a license unless the said applicant has not met the qualifications required by law. * * *"

The word "renew" etymologically contemplates something more than passivity and suffering the estate to continue as it was. The renewel of a note, for instance, consists of a distinct contract for the period of time covered by the renewal or under the same terms and conditions. The renewal of a policy of insurance likewise constitutes a separate and distinct contract for the period covered by the renewal under the same terms and conditions. The renewal of a lease is an extending of the term under the same conditions, importing the giving of a new lease like the old one, with the same terms, stipulations and covenants. A lease might be made for a year, renewable annually for ten years, at the option of the lessee. If the lessee had a right to assign the lease, the right of renewal would follow and adhere to the lease.

The right to renew a liquor license is conferred by the statute. This right inures to the applicant by reason of the fact that he is a licensee, and it is my view that this right of renewal follows the license, and that the person who at the expiration of the annual period holds the license, with it possesses the right of renewal. True, throughout the entire license statute runs the provision that no one can be a licensee unless he possesses the qualifications required by law.

In State ex rel. v. Steimer, 151 N. W. 256, the supreme court of Wisconsin was construing certain provisions of their liquor licensing law, which in some respects is similar to ours. The first paragraph of the syllabus reads as follows:

> "In St. 1913, Sec. 1565d, forbidding the issuance of retail liquor dealers' licenses beyond the proportion of one for every 250 inhabitants, except in certain cases, where there was such a license issued and in force on or prior to June 30, 1907, the conjunction 'or' is not to be read 'and,' but the exceptional applies where a license for the year 1907 had been issued to one who died during the year, and whose business was conducted by his administratrix till the end of the year, when it was taken over by another, who procured a renewal of the license."

In this case one, McGarty, held a retail liquor license for the year ending June 30, 1907. He died on October 5, 1906, and his widow and administratrix conducted, for his estate, this retail liquor business from the time of his death up to and including June 30, 1907. After that time, other persons, to whom retail liquor licenses were issued, continued the business as tenants of the premises in question, and this continued every year thereafter until the year 1914, when such a license for this place was issued to the respondent Steiner.

On June 30, 1907, and every year since, the city in which the business was conducted, counting the licensed premises in question, had more than one license for each two hundred and fifty inhabitants or fraction thereof.

The circuit court held that the license of Steiner expiring June 30, 1915, was valid, and gave judgment accordingly, dismissing the complaint.

At page 257 the court says:

"The appellant contends that on the death of McGarty on October 5, 1906, his license expired, and did not pass to his administratrix or authorize her to continue the retail sale of liquors to be drunk on the premises, consequently there was no license in force for the premises in question on June 30, 1907, and that a proper reading of the statute * * * forbade the issue of retail liquor licenses beyond the proportion of one for every 250 inhabitants or fraction thereof, except in certain cases where there was such a license issued and in force on and prior to June 30, 1907."

The supreme court affirmed the judgment of the circuit court and held that within the meaning of the statute there was a license in force on or before June 30, 1907. This case in effect held that since the license of the deceased passed to the administratrix and authorized her to continue the business, there was a license in force for the year ending June 30, 1907, and that the successive renewals protected the license of Steiner, and that his license expiring June 30, 1915, under such renewals was valid.

I am inclined to the view that the right of renewal given by the statute follows the license, and that since the legislature has seen fit to make the license a right in or to property as hereinbefore set out, there has also been superadded another right; that is, upon the filling of the qualifications by the applicant, the further right to have a renewal of the license.

From the facts contained in your communication, I gather that after the death of the licensee, Wagner, his administrator following the law, was authorized to and did continue the business of his decedent. If this were so, the county liquor licensing board at that time recognized the administrator as standing in the place of the deceased licensee. His complying with the statute in order to continue the business, constituted him an applicant, at least under section 1261-32 G. C., which provides that the administrator must file an application in all respects as is required of an original applicant, except that no fees shall be required. If the foregoing be true, then the board has already recognized the standing of the administrator as the successor of the deceased licensee.

The administrator standing in the place of the deceased licensee and by his qualifications being an applicant, even though in a representative capacity holding the license of one who was himself or by succession entitled to preference, it is my opinion that said administrator possessed all the rights of the original licensee, including the right to renewal, and the county liquor licensing board in question was in error in concluding that the right of renewal ceased with the death of the licensee.

Under the Pennsylvania statute, while the law itself is silent upon the subject, the decided weight of authority, as stated by the court in McOmber's License, 3 Pa. Dist. Rep. 431, is that:

> "In the event of the death of an applicant for a retail liquor license pending the proceedings for the granting of the same, the license may be issued to the successor of or the substitute for the original applicant."

The above case shows that liquor licenses are granted by the common pleas judges and that when it is made to appear to the license court that the applicant has died, it merely makes an order directing that the name of the applicant be stricken out and that of the new party substituted therefor. Of course, under the Pennsylvania law, the court decides upon the qualifications of the persons seeking license.

You are no doubt familiar with the provision of our civil code which permits on suggestion that the party has died, the substitution of the name of his personal representative in lieu of his own.

It strikes me that analogous to such provisions, that upon the suggestion of the death of the applicant the administrator ought to be permitted to be substituted in the place of the decedent.

I am fully mindful of the dicta or expressions of our highest courts, both state and federal, that the right to engage in the retail traffic of intoxicating liquors is not an inherent or inalienable right, but, as found in the text of Woollen & Thornton on Intoxicating Liquors, section 323, and also in Sopher v. State, 169 Ind. 177, these expressions invariably occur in connection with the unregulated traffic in such liquors and not as an argument to defeat laws regularly adopted for the purpose of licensing and regulating the sale of such liquors. No matter what one's individual ideas are upon the ever present liquor question, the matter presented to us must be determined solely in view of our constitutional and statutory enactments.

Coming then to answering your specific question, it is my opinion that under our liquor licensing law a license is more than a mere personal privilege, and that it does not cease with the death of the holder thereof; that under the facts in this case and by virtue of section 1561-52, supra, the administrator representing the estate, as the successor in interest of the deceased licensee, succeeds to all the rights and privileges of said licensee; that when a licensee dies after having made application for a renewal and before such application is finally passed upon, the administrator stands in the place of his decedent, and upon complying with all provisions of law and being duly qualified therefor, can hold said liquor license; that such administrator possesses the same right of renewal that would have belonged to his decedent had he still lived, and is entitled to like preference under the law, and that under the facts of this case, when an application for renewal is rejected upon the ground that the quota for the wet unit has been filled, the administrator of the decedent licensee is the proper party to prosecute the appeal from such order.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BRIDGES—HOW SAME MAY BE REPAIRED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—STATE OFFICERS—MAY EMPLOY MEN, ETC.—IN FURTHERING CONSTRUCTION OF STATE BUILDINGS—FORCE ACCOUNT DEFINED.

1. The commissioners of a county are not authorized to construct bridges by what is known as force account. However, in the repair of bridges the county commissioners may thus proceed.

2. The commissioners are authorized to secure the necessary equipment to enable them to repair the bridges of the county; but the word "equipment," as used in section 7200 G. C. (107 O. L. 115), is not broad enough to include the item of boots, whether the same be the ordinary knee or hip boots.

3. Under the provisions of the act found in 107 O. L. 453, state officers, boards or other authorities may employ men and purchase material in furthering the construction, etc., of state buildings and public works, which is in the nature of force account.

4. The term "force account" implies that the department officer or board having work to do, instead of entering into a contract for the performance of the work, assumes a direct oversight of the same, employing men with teams, purchasing material and paying for the same without reference to any contract whatever.

5. The authority to perform work under what is termed force account would not include authority to a department, board or officer to enter into a contract with another, giving him as consideration a certain percentage of the entire cost of the work.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 26, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to five questions. I will consider them in the order in which they are set out in said communication.

Your first question is as follows:

> "(1) Are the commissioners of a county legally empowered to construct bridges, or repair the same, by force account?"

This question embodies two distinct matters, the one being the construction of bridges, and the other the repairing of the same, and I will consider them separately.

I will note a number of sections as found in the White-Mulcahy act, in order to reach a conclusion as to whether the county commissioners are legally empowered to construct bridges by force account.

Section 6948-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 107) reads as follows:

> "If the county commissioners deem it for the best interest of the public they may, in lieu of constructing such improvement by contractor, proceed to construct the same by force account."

The particular part of this section to which our attention must be given is:

"may, in lieu of constructing such improvement by contractor, proceed to construct the same by force account."

The main question is as to what the words "such improvement" refer. To answer same we will note the Cass highway act and the manner in which it was divided and subdivided. Chapter 6 of said act was headed "Road construction and improvement by county commissioners" and embodied the sections of the General Code from 6906 to 6956. From this it is quite evident that the words "such improvement," used in section 6948-1 G. C., above quoted, refer to road construction provided for in sections 6906 to 6947 inc. G. C. (107 O. L. 69).

In noting sections 6906 and 6907 G. C., in this chapter, we find that the same relate to the construction, improvement or repair of any public road, or part thereof. The question then arises as to whether the word "public road" would include a bridge which is located on the same, for if the words "public road" include bridges, then section 6948-1 supra would apply to bridges, and the county commissioners might construct the same by force account, if they should deem it for the best interest of the public.

In an opinion rendered by me on September 28, 1917 (No. 668), to Hon. Joseph T. Micklethwait, prosecuting attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio, I discussed at considerable length the question of the construction and improvement of bridges in general. In this opinion I proceeded on the theory that the word "road" would not in and of itself include the word "bridge." I am still of the opinion that this conclusion is correct.

Section 1226 G. C. seems to lend considerable force to this view and reads in part as follows:

"The word 'highway' as used in this chapter (G. C. Secs. 1178 to 1231-3), includes an existing causeway or bridge, or a new causeway or bridge, or a drain or watercourse which forms a part of a road authorized by law. * * *"

It will be noted that in this chapter, which relates to the powers and duties of the state highway department in the matter of road construction, the word "highway" is made to include bridges or causeways, but nowhere else in the Cass highway act, nor in the White-Mulcahy act, do we find this provision or anything like it. The very fact that this provision is made in the chapter relating to the duties of the state highway department and is not made in the chapter in reference to the construction and improvement of roads by county commissioners, goes strongly to the point that the legislature did not intend that the word "road," as it applies to the powers and duties of township trustees and county commissioners, should include bridge or bridges. If this be correct, then section 6948-1, hereinbefore quoted, would not apply to bridges.

With this in mind we will turn to the provisions of another section which requires construction. Section 7198 G. C. (107 O. L. 115) reads as follows:

"Sec. 7198. The county surveyor may when authorized by the county commissioners employ such laborers and teams, lease such implements and tools and purchase such material as may be necessary in the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance or repair of roads, bridges and culverts by force account."

This section at first sight would seem to confer the power upon some one, at least, to construct bridges and culverts by force account, either upon the county surveyor himself or upon the county commissioners. In examining this section carefully it will be seen that it is to the effect that the county surveyor may, when he is authorized so to do by the county commissioners, employ such laborers and teams, etc., "as may be necessary in the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance or repair of roads, bridges and culverts by force account." This section does not confer power upon either the county surveyor or the county commissioners to do anything by force account. However, it does confer authority upon the county surveyor, when authorized by the county commissioners, to employ laborers, lease implements and purchase material for the construction, etc., of roads, bridges and culverts by force account. This makes it necessary for us to look elsewhere for the power and authority to construct by force account, and when we do this we find no other provision, permitting of the construction by force account, than section 6948-1 supra, and this goes no further than to permit the construction of roads by force account.

My views, as hereinbefore set out, are considerably strengthened by the fact that the legislature, in enacting the White-Mulcahy law, did not in any respect seek to repeal the provisions of section 2352, 2353 and 2354 G. C.

Sections 2333 to 2361 inc. G. C. relate to the construction of county buildings and bridges.

Section 2352 G. C. provides:

> "* * * the county commissioners shall give public notice in two of the principal papers in the county having the largest circulation therein, of the time when and the place where sealed proposals will be received for performing the labor and furnishing the materials necessary to the erection of such building, bridge or bridge structure. * * *"

Section 2353 G. C. provides that when the estimated cost of a bridge or bridge substructure does not exceed one thousand dollars, then the advertisement, as provided in section 2352 G. C., may be dispensed with, but notice of the letting must be given for fifteen days by posting on a bulletin board or writing on a blackboard in a conspicuous place in the county commissioners' office, showing the nature of the letting, etc.

Section 2354 G. C. provides that if the estimated cost of the bridge or bridge substructure does not exceed two hundred dollars, it may be let at private contract without publication or notice.

These three sections include all bridges, irrespective of the cost of constructing the same, and these sections are clearly against the idea that the county commissioners may proceed by force account to construct bridges, regardless of the cost of the same. Hence it is my opinion that there is no authority given in law which would warrant the county commissioners in constructing bridges by force account.

In reference to the other part of question one, that is, whether the county commissioners might repair bridges by force account, I will call attention to an opinion rendered to your bureau by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, and found in Vol. I, Opinion of the Attorney-General for 1916, p. 882. In this opinion Mr. Turner held that under and by virtue of sections 7214 and 7198 G. C., the county commissioners might proceed with the maintenance and repair of highways under force account, and that they would not be compelled to advertise for bids in the purchase of material or the hiring of laborers and teams. Inasmuch as section 7214 G. C. includes bridges as well as roads, the same principle would apply to the repairing of bridges as applies to the repairing of roads, and I am of the opinion that Mr. Turner's reasoning is correct, and that the county commissioners might repair bridges by what is known as force account. This would apply to all cases of repair, regardless of the cost of the same. It must be kept in mind that sections 2352, 2353 and 2354 G. C. relate merely to the construction of bridges.

Your second question reads as follows:

> "(2) May the commissioners also provide equipment for doing such work, and can rubber boots, whether ordinary or hip, be considered as equipment to be paid for from the public treasuries of any taxing district?"

In the same opinion above referred to, Mr. Turner held that the county commissioners themselves would have authority, or they could authorize the county highway superintendent, now the county surveyor, to purchase or lease the necessary machinery, teams, etc., for the repair of the roads of the state. I am of the opinion this would apply to the repair of bridges and, therefore, that the county commissioners themselves could, under section 7200 G. C., purchase the necessary equipment to enable them to repair the bridges which come under their jurisdiction, or they could under section 7198, supra, authorize the county surveyor to purchase the same.

Section 7200 G. C. (107 O. L. 115) reads in part as follows:

> "The county commissioners may purchase such machinery, tools or other equipment for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of the highway, bridges and culverts under their jurisdiction as they may deem necessary, which shall be paid for out of the road funds of the county. * * *"

You also ask in your second question as to whether this equipment could include rubber boots coming either to the knees or to the hips. In answering this question it will be well for us to note the provisions of section 7200 above quoted. The language therein used is as follows:

> "The county commissioners may purchase such machinery, tools or other equipment for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of the highway, bridges and culverts. * * *"

The question arises as to whether rubber boots could be brought within the term "other equipment." It is my opinion that they cannot be so brought within this term. While I will not go into this to any extent for the purposes of this opinion, yet the rule is well established in law that where a general term follows specific and definite terms, the meaning of the general one must be fixed with a view to the meaning of the specific and definite terms.

In the provision just quoted the specific terms are "machinery" and "tools," and the general term which follows these specific ones is "other equipment." Hence, in view of the above rule of law, "other equipment" would be held to include only those things which would be similar in nature to "machinery" and "tools;" that is, such things as would be used by a workman in the building of roads, bridges and the like, which could hardly be said to include articles of wearing apparel, irrespective of whether they be hip or ordinary boots. Therefore, it is my opinion that the county commissioners would have no authority to purchase boots, as suggested, and pay for the same from the proper fund of the county.

Your third question reads as follows:

> "(3) Are any state departments other than the state highway department authorized by law to do work by force account?"

This question is somewhat indefinite, but I will say that there is no other department of the state given the same extensive powers, in the way of doing work under force account, as are given to the state highway department.

In 107 O. L. 453 is an act which radically amends the sections of the General Code relating to the construction, alteration and improvement of state buildings and public works and the installation of equipment therefor. The provisions of this act apply to all officers, boards or other authorities of the state upon whom devolve the duty of constructing, erecting or altering state buildings and public works and the installation of equipment therefor. Hence, this act is broad enough to include all state departments, but there is no provision therein made, whereby work may be done strictly under force account. However, under sections 2328 and 2329 G. C., in said act, the department is authorized to give notice to the contractor to push the work along more speedily than he has been doing up to any particular time, and if the contractor fails to heed the notice within fifteen days, the department may employ upon the work additional force or supply the special materials or such part of either as it deems proper. This is in a sense completing the work or assisting in the completion of the same by force account.

Of course it must be remembered that the act above noted relates to those contracts which involve an expenditure of more than three thousand dollars, as is set out in section 2314 G. C., in said act. So that there is nothing in the act which provides for the manner of erecting or constructing buildings or structures, or the purchase of material for the same when the cost is less than three thousand dollars. Undoubtedly in such cases the board or other authority in charge of said matters might do the work under force account, if they felt it to be for the best interests of the public, unless it is otherwise provided by law.

Your fourth question reads as follows:

> "(4) Please define the legal meaning of the term 'force account.'"

There is no definition of the term "force account" set out in the General Code. When we come to examine the dictionaries we also find that there is no definition given to this phrase, and the decisions of our courts rarely contain any definition or discussion as to this term. So that one has but little precedent or guide in the matter of legally defining this term.

In Hottel v. Poudre, etc., Co., 41 Colo. 370, the court on p. 378, in the opinion, used the following language, in referring to said term:

> "It was done under what the parties called force account. That is, compensation therefor was not in accordance with the prices specified in the contract, but Temple & Company hired men and teams to do the work by the day and paid therefor on the basis of time they were employed."

This possibly gives the correct idea of the term "force account." In doing the work under force account, the department having authority to perform the work, instead of entering into a contract with some certain party to do said work, itself takes charge of the work, employs men with teams, purchases material and oversees the men performing the work, and pays for the same on the basis of the length of time they are engaged in said work. It is my opinion that no contract involving the work as a whole enters into the performance of the same under force account.

Your fifth question reads as follows:

> "(5) Is there legal authority for letting a contract on the basis of the entire cost thereof plus a certain percentage of such cost as a consideration, and if so would such contract legally be termed as a force account?"

The answer to this question depends altogether upon the wording of the statute which relates to improvements or constructions of any kind. There are some sections in the General Code which give such broad authority that the department having charge of the matter would have authority to enter into such a contract. For example, section 1209 G. C. (107 O. L. 126) provides in part as follows:

> "* * * the state highway commissioner shall have full power and authority to enter upon and complete said improvement either by contract, force account or in such manner as he may deem for the best interest of the public. * * *"

The latter part of this quoted matter is possibly broad enough to enable the state highway commissioner to enter into a contract such as you suggest. What you have in mind, as I view it, is this, would the department, officer or board have power to enter into such a contract as you suggest, in those cases in which the department, officer or board is given authority to do the work under force account? From the definition I have given you of the term force account, it is my opinion that the authority given to perform work under force account would not include the authority to enter into such a contract as that which you suggest in your fifth question. As stated,, in answer to your fourth question, the term force account does not involve the idea of a contract, but on the other hand the particular work is done under the direct supervision and oversight of the department, officer or board. This probably covers your fifth question, if I understand what you have in mind.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—HOW ASSESSED AND COLLECTED IN FOLLOWING CASE—TESTATOR DEVISED HIS FARM TO COLLATERAL RELATIVE FOR LIFE, DIRECTING HIS EXECUTOR TO SELL FARM AFTER SAID RELATIVE'S DEATH AND FROM PROCEEDS TO PAY $10,000 TO A FOREIGN EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTION AND DIVIDE REMAINDER SHARE AND SHARE ALIKE "WITH MY LAWFUL HEIRS."

A testator devised his farm to a collateral relative for life directing his executor to sell the farm after said relative's death and from the proceeds to pay $10,000 to a foreign educational institution and divide the remainder share and share alike "with my lawful heirs."

As to the assessment and collection of inheritance taxes on the estates created by the above items, HELD:

1. The value of the life estate should be determined by analogy according to the rule prescribed by section 5333 of the General Code.

2. The interest of the foreign educational institution is to be treated as a specific legacy charged on the remainder. Hence, it is to be valued as of the date of the death of the testator at its present worth determined by the expectancy of life of the life tenant, unless such present worth should exceed the value of the remainder after the life estate, determined according to the analogy of section 5333 G. C., in which event the value of said interest is the value of said remainder.

If upon interpretation of the will the interests of the "lawful heirs" be regarded as vested, they are to be valued at the difference, if any, between the present worth of $10,000 and the value of the remainder after the life estate, divided into such parts as the number of vested interests dictates; if, however, such interests are contingent, then the probate judge before whom the matter is pending should not fix any value for them as of the death of the testator, but the value of the remainder after the life estate is to be used only for the purpose of showing whether or not the legacy to the educational institution is to be valued at the full amount of its present worth. In such event the valuation of the interests of said "lawful heirs" should be postponed until those interests vest.

The lien of the state for the tax attaches on account of interests whether vested or contingent. The tax on the interest of the college is due at the death of the testator and if not paid within one year interest at the rate of eight per cent is chargeable thereon; whether or not the taxes on the interests of the "lawful heirs" are due at the death of the testator depends upon whether or not they are vested; if they are contingent the tax is not due until they vest. If the taxes are not sooner paid the executor or administrator with the will annexed must pay them before paying the specific legacy to the college or paying any part of the net proceeds to the "lawful heirs" out of the funds in his possession remaining after the sale of the real estate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1917.

HON. LEWIS F. HALE, Prosecuting Attorney, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of December 4th received here December 6th. I should have been glad to have answered so that you would have had my reply on the 7th, but this would of course have been impossible. Some of the questions submitted by you have required careful consideration and I hasten to give you my reply at the earliest possible moment.

In your letter you enclose copy of the will of B. G. and request my opinion upon several questions relating to the collateral inheritance taxes due upon legacies therein, as follows:

> "1. After finding tax due from the life tenant, there is a remainder, on which tax is due. When should tax on remainder be paid and how is it to be determined?
> "2. Ten thousand dollars goes to a foreign institution after the death of life tenant. When is tax due on this and if due now is penalty attached?
> "3. The remainder of proceeds arising from sale of this farm will go to legal heirs all of whom are collateral, and no person can now tell how many there will be nor what amounts each will receive. When is tax due on legacies to these legal heirs? Is it a lien on the farm? Will penalty attach?
> "4. In case life tenant pays the tax on life estate, and dies within next few months, then after paying the ten thousand dollars to the foreign institution in place of remainder being $5,000 for legal heirs, it would be $10,000.
> "How shall we arrive at the amount of tax due? How shall we proceed to collect it? From whom and from what fund shall it be paid?"

These questions all have relation, I take it, to the tenth and eleventh items of the will, which are as follows:

> "Item 10. All my real estate consisting of about 200 acres in survey No. 9988 in Richland township, Logan county, Ohio, I give and devise to my brother A. F. G. for and during his natural life time, and at his death said land shall be sold by my executor in a body or in pieces, at such price and on such terms as he may think will be disposing of it to the best advantage; and the proceeds of said sale, after deducting all expenses and $1,000 compensation to be paid to my executor in full for all of his claims for his services as such executor, and $10,000 to the trustees of Cooper college located at Sterling, Rice county, Kansas, to be made a part of the endowment fund of said Cooper college.
> "Item 11. Any residue to be divided with my lawful heirs share and share alike."

The questions themselves are inter-related and it will be more convenient, I think, to consider and discuss them as a whole than to take them up one at a time.

Evidently you have construed these somewhat ambiguous paragraphs as meaning that after the death of the brother, who has a life estate in the farm, the real estate should be sold and ten thousand dollars of the proceeds paid into the endowment fund of Cooper college, and the remainder of said proceeds, less one thousand dollars and expenses, be "divided with my lawful heirs share and share alike," i. e., among the lawful heirs of the testator, share and share alike.

I think this interpretation is proper.

Though the land is to be sold at the expiration of the life estate therein and the proceeds divided, generally speaking, between the college and the heirs, the fact that it is to be converted into cash does not change the character of the ultimate estates which will be treated for the purposes of the inheritance tax law just as if they were remainders in specified interests in the land itself. The general rule is stated in Blakemore & Bancroft on Inheritance Taxes as follows:

"It is the general rule in this country that the doctrine of equitable conversion cannot be invoked to affect the imposition of the inheritance tax so * * * an absolute direction to sell real estate will not transform it to personal property for the purposes of the tax."

Citing:

Connell v. Crosby, 210 Ill. 380;
McCurdy v. McCurdy, 197 Mass. 248;
In re Curtis, 142 N. Y. 219;
In re Dows, 167 N. Y. 227;
Orr v. Gillman, 183 U. S. 278.

In other words, the interest of the "lawful heirs" is to be treated, for the purpose of the tax, as if it were a remainder in the land, on which, however, the executor's compensation, the expenses and the bequest to the college are charged.

The interest of the college may be described as a legacy payable out of the remainder after the life estate and therefore not to take effect in possession and enjoyment until that time. Nevertheless, this interest is clearly vested. It depends upon no contingency whatsoever, except a contingency that may effect its value. An extreme view of the case might be taken which would make the estate contingent in that it would never exist if the proceeds of the sale should be less that one thousand dollars plus expenses. However, you state that the farm is appraised at $21,350.00. The better view seems to me to be that the interest is regarded as vested and taxable at the present time. The problem is, however, as to how to arrive at its value. It has been previously held by this department that remainders, after taxable life interests, are to be valued according to the analogy of the rule suggested by section 5333 of the General Code for the appraisement of taxable remainders following exempt life estates. This rule is that "the value of the prior estate shall be appraised, * * * and deducted, together with the sum of five hundred dollars, from the appraised value of such property."

In other words, where the estate is vested the rule is not to take the present worth of its value computed on the expectancy of life of the taker of the life estate, but rather to tax it on its entire value after subtracting that of the life estate.

Of course, in the case of a long expectancy of life it might well happen that the value of the life estate, computed according to the so-called actuaries' combined experience tables and five per cent compound interest, would consume by far the greater part of the value of the whole and leave the remainder subject to a comparatively small tax by virtue of section 5333 of the General Code.

In the case submitted by you the strict application of the rule of section 5333 would produce another peculiar result, for if the estate of the college is to be treated as vested, in accordance with the suggestion above outlined, and if it will at all events be ten thousand dollars; and if in addition the expectancy of life of the brother should prove to be large, then the application of the rule of section 5333 to the case might well result in placing such a value upon the life estate so created as to leave a theoretical value for the entire remainder of less than ten thousand dollars, in the event that the value of the interest of the college be placed at ten thousand dollars, that is fixed without any dimunition, there will be nothing at all left to represent the interest of the "lawful heirs" whether their estate be regarded as vested or contingent. Obviously, therefore, the method above outlined should not be applied.

The only alternative which occurs to me is to apply the rule of section 5333 to obtain the value of the entire farm as it will be at the death of the brother. This would be obtained by subtracting from the appraised value of the farm as now found the value of the life estate, then from the remainder so ascertained I would suggest a subtraction, not of the entire sum of ten thousand dollars, but of the present worth of that sum payable at the end of the brother's expectancy of life computed at five per cent. compound interest. The remainder would represent the aggregate value of the estates of the "lawful heirs." This method would give effect to the conclusion that the legacy to the college is to be treated as a money legacy at a theoretical future date and a charge upon future interests, but the interest in which is now vested.

In the short time during which I have had your question under consideration I have found no precedents for a case of exactly this kind. On the whole, however, I am satisfied that no better method could be devised for the assessment of the taxes than that which I have outlined.

Repeating, that method is as follows:

From the entire value of the farm as now appraised deduct the appraised value of the life estate, which is not in question. The remainder represents the value of the entire remainder in the farm. To get the value of the interest of the college, take the present worth of the sum of ten thousand dollars payable at the end of the expectancy of life of the taker of the life estate, using five per cent interest. If this sum is greater than the entire remainder, then the amount of the entire remainder is to be regarded as the value of the interest of the college and the interest of the "lawful heirs" is reduced to nothing. If, however, the present worth of ten thousand dollars, payable at the end of the expectancy of life of the brother is less than the value of the entire remainder as ascertained in accordance with the rule analogous to that of section 5333 of the General Code, then the difference over and above the sum of five hundred dollars for each taker represents the aggregate value of the legacies of the "lawful heirs."

This leaves but one question in the case so far as computing the tax is concerned, and that is the question suggested by your third inquiry. The answer to this question depends upon whether or not the estates of the "lawful heirs" are vested or contingent. If these remainders are vested as of the death of the testator, then the five hundred dollars exemption is to be deducted from each vested remainder; but if they are contingent then there is no possible way to assess the tax as to this portion of the estate until the contingency happens.

Whether the interests are vested or contingent depends upon the interpretation of the will. If the will be construed as meaning that those who are the lawful heirs of the testator, that is, those who sustain that relation to him as of the date of his death, are to enjoy the benefits of the division of the residuary estate after the death of his brother, so that if they themselves are not then in life, their heirs are to receive, per stirpes, then the several estates are vested and can be now appraised. If, however, the meaning of the testator was that the residuary estate should be divided share and share alike, i. e., per capita among those persons, in life at the death of his brother, who then sustained to him (the testator) the relation of heirs, it is manifest that the amount which will pass to each will depend upon a contingency, viz., the number of such persons who happen to be in being at the death of the brother. If such is the interpretation of the will, then it is my opinion, following numerous holdings of this department, that the tax upon that part of the estate, if any, representing the aggregate interests of the "lawful heirs" cannot now be determined and of course is not now payable.

The tax on the estate to be taken by the college is payable now, however, as this estate depends upon no contingency whatsoever; was due as of the death of the testator, and if the period of time referred to in section 5335 has elapsed, interest at the rate of eight per cent should be charged and collected thereon. The statutes authorize no further "penalty" therefor. If, however, the period of one year referred to in said section has not elapsed, then under favor of the same section a discount of one per cent per month may be allowed on the amount of taxes payable by the college.

In my opinion the state has a lien though the amount thereof is undetermined and though the tax itself is subject to be defeated, upon the farm, not only for the payment of the tax due from the life tenant on account of his interest and that due from the college on account of its interest, but also that to become due from the "lawful heirs" on their separate interests, even if they are to be regarded as contingent.

As to the collection of the deferred taxes (if the interests of the "lawful heirs" be regarded as contingent) the following machinery provided by the statute seems to be available:

> "Sec. 5336. An administrator, executor, or trustee, having in charge, or trust, property subject to such law, shall deduct the tax therefrom, or collect the tax thereon from the legatee or person entitled to the property. He shall not deliver any specific legacy or property subject to such tax to any person until he has collected the tax thereon.
> Sec. 5337. When a legacy subject to such tax is charged upon or payable out of real estate, the heir or devisee, before paying it, shall deduct the tax therefrom and pay it to the executor, administrator, or trustee, and the tax shall remain a charge upon the real estate until it is paid. Payment thereof shall be enforced by the executor, administrator, or trustee, in like manner as the payment of the legacy itself could be enforced."

It would be the duty of the executor, under section 5336, not to pay over to the "lawful heirs" their several legacies after the death of the brother until he had collected the tax thereon, and under section 5337 it would become his duty, in paying the legacy payable out of the land to be sold at the death of the brother, to deduct the tax therefrom. The amount of the tax as then to be ascertained would in my opinion not be foreclosed by the appraisement already had. The probate court in the present proceeding should decline to fix a value upon that part of the estate. This in my judgment will prevent his present determination from having the effect of settling and determining the value of the remainder. There is no precedent in Ohio which would justify me in holding positively that there will be power to order an additional appraisement upon the complaint of the prosecuting attorney or the executor when the time comes to settle the estate. This question involves an interpretation of section 5343 of the General Code, which provides for an appraisement. Whether more than one appraisement can be held under this section for one universal estate where different singular successions in the nature of the case would have to be appraised at different times is not clear. I do not feel like expressing any very positive opinion upon the question, but will suggest that it would be advisable for the prosecuting attorney, then in office, to raise the question, if the executor does not do so, by petition for a supplementary appraisement at that time.

Where the statutes expressly provide for a supplementary appraisement in case of postponed interests, it has been held that the value of the interests then vesting as of the date on which they actually do vest is the criterion.

In my opinion the eight per cent interest referred to in section 5335 of the General Code is not chargeable in the event that the assessment and collection of the tax is necessarily postponed.

Answering your questions, then, in the order in which they are submitted, beg to state that:

(1) Your first question is a general question which is not susceptible of direct answer.

(2) The tax is due on the interest of the college at the death of the testator. The value of this interest is to be appraised at its present worth, unless that present worth exceeds the remainder arrived at by deducting from the appraised value of the whole estate the value of the life estate plus the present worth of one thousand dollars and expenses. No penalty in the strict sense is chargeable on account of delinquencies in the payment of collateral inheritance taxes. If such taxes due at the death of the testator are not paid for one year thereafter they will bear interest at the rate of eight per cent from and after the expiration of said year. If they are paid before the end of such year, a discount of one per cent a month is allowable.

(3) The answer to your third question depends upon whether the will is construed as creating in the "lawful heirs" vested or contingent interests, i. e., whether the persons who take under the will are now ascertainable so that at the death of the brother they, or their representatives claiming through them, will receive the fund. If so, the tax is now due and their interests are subject to valuation in the manner above described. If not, the tax is not due, the eight per cent will not begin to run at the end of one year from and after the death of the testator and the whole process of assessment will have to be postponed. In either event, however, in my opinion the lien of the tax attaches to the farm on account of these interests, though the amount thereof is undetermined.

(4) In the event that the will is interpreted as creating contingent or unascertainable interests in the "lawful heirs," i. e., in the event that the identify of such "lawful heirs" cannot be ascertained until the death of the brother, then the value of their several estates or interests for the purpose of the collateral inheritance tax cannot be now ascertained but must be postponed until the contingency which determines their number and identity has occurred. At the present time, then, the probate judge should not assume to fix the value of these interests if he regards them as contingent.

Leaving the question of the power of the probate judge in office at the time of the death of the brother to determine the value and complete the assessment open, and assuming the collectibility of these taxes upon the hypothesis that the interests taxable are contingent, the taxes themselves would have to be paid by the executor, or the administrator with the will annexed, as the case might be, from the fund produced by the sale of the real estate in accordance with the terms of the will before paying any part of said fund to any of the "lawful heirs."

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

LEASE—FOR FIVE YEARS MADE TO THE STATE—VALIDITY.

A lease of lands made to the state of Ohio for a period of five years, rentals payable annually, is not a valid and binding lease unless the obligation upon the part of the state to pay rentals is made subject to the general assembly's making appropriation every two years to take care of the rentals.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14 ,1917.

Board of Agriculture of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

Attention Mr. N. E. Shaw, Secretary.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of recent date in which you enclose a lease, in duplicate, of certain lands located in Pike county, Ohio, to the state, in which William B. Lee and Mary W. Lee are grantors, and you ask my approval of the same.

Generally speaking, I might say that the form of the lease is correct and the matters therein contained are fully and legally set out. However, there is one provision of the lease to which I desire to call your attention, viz., that the lease is made to cover a period of five years from the date of the same. I will not go into the matter fully, but will call your attention to the case of The State v. Medbery et al., 7 O. S. 522. The matter before the court in that case involved contracts which were to run for a period of five years. The court on p. 540 say:

> "These contracts run for five years. The general assembly existing when these contracts were made, provided no revenue and made no appropriations to meet the gross amount."

That statement applies to the leases presented to me for approval. The court on p. 531 used the following language:

> "The question before us is, whether a contract binding the state to pay specific sums of money at a future period, without revenue provided or appropriations made to meet it, is such a contingent liability as may be entered into under this financial system, and the provisions of the constitution relating to debts?"

Without going into the case any further, the court held that the contracts were not binding upon the state for the reason that no appropriation had been made to meet the gross liability of the state set out in the contracts, and that the contracts could not bind the general assemblies which would meet from time to time and thus compel them to make appropriations to meet the specific amounts becoming due under the contracts from year to year.

I am not unmindful of the fact that the last general assembly appropriated moneys which might be used for this purpose. The specific provision is found in section 1423 G. C. (107 O. L. 488) and reads as follows:

> "* * * which (license fees) shall be paid into the state treasury to the credit of a fund which is hereby appropriated for the use of the secretary in the preservation and protection of birds, game birds, game animals and fish. * * *"

This appropriation is made for the preservation and protection of fish, among other things. The question is whether these two terms are broad enough to include propagation of fish. Even admitting they are broad enough to include the proposition which you have in mind in the leasing of the lands, yet the appropriation therein made could not be for a longer period than two years from the taking effect of the act of which section 1423 G. C. is a part, for the reason that the constitution limits appropriations of any general assembly to a period of two years. However, it is my opinion that the words "preservation and protection of * * * fish," as used in said section, are not broad enough to include the propagation of fish.

From all the above it is quite evident that the contract of lease which you have entered into does not comply with the principles of law set forth in State v. Medbery, et al., supra.

However, I am of the opinion that under later decisions of our supreme court the lease submitted, in so far as it is defective, could be cured by the insertion of a clause somewhat as follows:

> "It is agreed and understood by and between the parties to this lease that the lessee is not bound under and by virtue of the terms of the same, relative to the payment of the rentals thereunder, excepting in so far as and to the extent that the legislature from time to time shall make specific appropriations for the payment of said rentals herein set out."

If the lessors see fit to permit such a provision to be inserted in the lease, it is my opinion the same would conform to the constitution and the decisions of our courts. To be sure, I am not at all passing on the question of the two hundred and seventy-five dollars which is now due under and by virtue of a verbal lease, but simply upon the validity of the written lease which dates from December 1, 1917.

In passing I might also suggest that the legislature appropriated for fish propagation and distribution the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars. While, as said before, I do not believe that the matter you have in mind would be along the line of propagation and distribution of fish, yet under section 4 of the appropriation act (107 O. L. 350). the controlling board might make provision for your taking care of the rental under the contract, either for a period of one year, or five years if the gross amount is paid in advance, under the following provision:

> "* * * Said board may authorize the expenditure of monies appropriated in sections 2 and 3 of this act within the purpose for which the appropriation is made, whether included in the detailed purposes for which such appropriations are distributed by 'items' in said section, or not. * * *"

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SUPERVISOR OF PUBLIC PRINTING—WITHIN PROVISIONS OF STATE PURCHASING AGENT ACT.

The supervisor of public printing comes within provisions of state purchasing agent act (107 O. L. 422).

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14, 1917.

HON. W. A. EYLAR, Supervisor of Public Printing, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to this department the following request for opinion:

> "After reading the law creating the purchasing department, 107 O. L. 422, we are not certain whether the department of public printing comes under its provisions or not.
> We would be pleased to have an opinion from your department covering this point at your earliest convenience."

The law creating the state purchasing department is found in 107 O. L. 422. Section 196-4 G. C., being section 4 of the act, provides, in the last sentence thereof, as follows:

> "Nor shall this act apply to or affect the educational institutions of the state or the commissioners of public printing."

Unless, therefore, your department can be considered as within the purview of the term "commissioners of public printing" such department would be within the purview of the state purchasing department.

The department of public printing specified by you is undoubtedly the department over which you have control as supervisor of public printing. The commissioners of public printing are the secretary of state, auditor of state and attorney-general. An examination of sections 745 to 787 G. C. inclusive, and sections 163 to 170 G. C. inclusive, shows that your department is in no sense under the jurisdiction of the commissioners of public printing. It is true that in the purchase of paper for state uses, under section 163 et seq. you, together with the commissioners of public printing, ascertain and fix the amount and grade of paper necessary, and that under the provisions of section 751 G. C. the supervisor of public printing is required to cause duplicate bills to be made of property purchased and file one with the secretary of state for the use of the commissioners of public printing. However, there is nothing in the language of the sections of the General Code to which my attention has been directed that in any way connects the supervisor of public printing with the commissioners of public printing in such manner as to bring your department within the exception contained in section 196-4, hereinbefore referred to.

I am therefore of the opinion that your department does come within the law creating the state purchasing department.

Of course, the paper that is furnished by the state to state contractors, who hold contracts for state printing, under the provisions of section 755 et seq., does not come within the provisions of the state purchasing act for the reason that such paper when purchased is delivered to the secretary of state, who in turn, under the provisions of section 752, delivers the same to you, to be in turn delivered to the various contractors as provided in section 764 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DOG LAWS — CONSTITUTIONALITY — DEPUTY SHERIFF — APPOINTMENT—COMMISSIONERS MUST PROVIDE FUNDS TO PAY SAID OFFICER—HUMANE OFFICER—JURISDICTION.

1. The provisions of the act of March 27, 1917, requiring the county commissioners to provide for the appointment of a deputy sheriff to enforce the dog laws is a requirement upon the commissioners to provide means for the sheriff to pay for the services of such deputy as may be necessary to enforce the law, and does not change the manner of the selection of the deputy sheriffs.

2. The said act is not unconstitutional.

3. It is mandatory upon the county commissioners to provide the funds to comply with the requirements of the act.

4. A humane officer employed by a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals may not as such perform the duties of such deputy, the statutes only permitting such society to provide the necessary dog pound and dispose of the dogs not properly registered. The statute makes no change in the manner of apportioning funds of the county, but the necessary money for carrying the provisions of the law into effect are to be paid out in the same manner as has been heretofore done in like cases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1917.

HON. PERRY SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—November 23, 1917, you sent the following communication to this department:—

> "I would like to have you interpret house bill No. 4 to amend section 5652 of the General Code, and especially I would like you to interpret section 5652-8 and answer what this means.
>
> 'County commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provision of this act.'
> 1. Is the law as amended constitutional?
> 2. Is it mandatory upon the county commissioners to provide money to comply with this amendment?
> 3. If there is a society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals organization, etc., can the county commissioners appoint a humane officer to perform the duties of dog catcher under this law?
> If there is any money in the treasury how can the county commissioners appropriate sufficient money under this section?"

The statute which is the subject of your inquiry is the act of March 21, 1917 (107 O. L. 534), and is an amendment of section 5652 General Code and is supplemental thereto, consisting of fifteen sections, followed by amendment of a number of other sections upon the subject of animals.

Section 5652 provides for a registration of dogs and a fee therefor, taking the place of the dog tax; and sub-section 1 provides a like registration and fee for the owner of a kennel of dogs in addition to the fee upon each individual unless the same be confined in the kennel; subsection 3 provides for a certificate of registration and a record thereof; section 4 provides for a tag to be worn by the dog; section 6 requires each dog to wear a tag and provides for his impounding, sale or destruction if he does not. Section 7, among other things, enacts that in a proceeding therein provided the sheriff of the county shall seize and impound dogs with respect to which the statute is not complied with. Section 8, from which you partly quote, after the language quoted by you, requires the commissioners to > "provide a suitable place for impounding dogs, and make proper provision for feeding and caring for the same, and shall also provide humane devices and methods for destroying dogs. Provided, however, that in any county in which there is a society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals, incorporated and organized as provided by law, and having one or more agents appointed in pursuance of law, and maintaining an animal shelter suitable for a dog pound and devices for humanely destroying dogs, county commissioners shall not be required to furnish a dog pound, but the sheriff shall deliver all dogs seized by him to such society for the prevention of cruelty to animals and children at its animal shelter, there to be dealt with in accordance to law, and the county commissioners shall provide for the payment of reasonable compensation to such society for its services so performed out of the county general fund."

This seems as far as it is necessary to quote the act in reference to the questions asked by you. The beginning of your inquiry is as to the meaning of the phrase quoted by you, which is the first part of sub-section 8 of the act. You do not state in what respect the meaning appears uncertain to you nor direct attention to any particular ambiguity, or difficulty of application of the language. The question arising in your mind is probably the meaning of the word "provide," and it is sufficient in this connection to say that "provide" does not mean "appoint."

The whole provision with reference to the sheriff and his duties means the sheriff himself, and requires him to seize and impound dogs, to give notice and to do all acts necessary to effect the purpose of the law. Therefore, the requirement that the commissioners shall provide him with deputies would necessarily mean that they should provide him with the means of employing such additional deputies as might be rendered necessary by the provisions of these new duties. The sheriff himself selects his deputies.

Section 2830 provides that he may appoint one or more such deputies, in writing, requires the approval of the written appointment by a judge of the court of common pleas to be endorsed thereon, and that it should be filed with the clerk and entered on the journal of the court. There is nothing to indicate that the requirement upon the commissioners to provide deputies necessary to carry out the provisions of this act means anything other than deputies in their ordinary character that the sheriff has for the performance of his general duties.

Some question might arise under section 2980-1 as to whether the limitation of 30 per cent, etc., of the amount of fees collected by the office would still apply or whether the amount rendered necessary by complying with this act would be in addition thereto. It will be time enough to meet that question when it is presented, and the foregoing seems to be sufficient to answer your inquiry as to the meaning of the sentence quoted in the inquiry, at least until some further practical question as to such meaning presents it.

In addition to the above you make three other inquiries:

"1. Is the law as amended constitutional?"

This department held in opinion No. 612, rendered to the tax commission of Ohio, September 14, 1917, that the act is not unconstitutional as being in violation of article XII, section 2, being the so-called "uniform rule" provision, and that the imposition of this registration fee is rather an exercise of the police power of the state. You do not indicate in what respect you are doubtful of its constitutionality and the question is not apparent in any other respect.

2. The duty imposed by this act upon the county commissioners to provide the means to carry it into effect is undoubtedly mandatory.

3. Under the provisions above quoted with reference to a society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals no power is given to appoint any officer of such humane society to carry out the provisions of this act, although it is not meant by this that the sheriff could not appoint him a deputy. The incorporation of such society is only provided for when the society has a dog pound and devices for humanely killing dogs, in which case the sheriff may farm out this duty to the society instead of the commissioners' supplying such pound and devices.

You ask a further question as to the meaning of "appropriating money." There is nothing in the act indicating that the appropriation is to be made otherwise than in the usual manner.

Sub-section 10 of the act provides for the collection of costs in prosecutions by the county treasurer, and section 12 makes them a part of the general fund. Section 13 makes the registration fee a special fee known as the "dog and kennel fund;" and section 5653 General Code as amended, and other sections amended in the act provide for the payment of claims for stock injured by dogs and authorize the county commissioners to appropriate funds to the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, provided that any surplus left after the above purposes are accomplished shall be transferred to the county board of education at the direction of the county commissioners.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PLEA OF GUILTY——MAY NOT BE ENTERED ON BEHALF OF ONE CHARGED WITH AN OFFENSE, WHO FAILS TO APPEAR ACCORDING TO THE CONDITIONS OF HIS BOND.

Where one, who is accused of an offense, has given bond for his appearance and absconds and fails to appear according to the conditions of his bond, no one may appear and enter a plea of guilty on his behalf in order to permit the judge, by giving him a nominal fine, to relieve his surety from the obligation of the bond.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your request for an opinion from this department, dated November 14, 1917, is as follows:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter. We are referring you to section 13508 et seq. G. C.:
> QUESTION:
> A recognizance is given for the appearance of the accused in court upon a certain day. The accused failed to appear. Is there any authority of law which will permit the judge of a police or municipal court to allow the bondsmen of the accused or attorney for the accused, or any other person other than the accused to come into court, plead guilty and then such judge give a nominal fine and cost, thereby doing away with the recognizance?"

The answer to the above question is "NO."

It is too plain to require any discussion that the course above suggested cannot be taken. It would simply be a bald evasion of the law and an unwarranted release of the surety on the bond. A defendant in such case by absconding and concealing himself may create a strong inference that he is guilty, but in no sense can it be construed as a plea of guilty on his part or authority to anyone to enter a plea of guilty for him, if, indeed, he could under any circumstances extend such authority or plead guilty otherwise than by doing so personally in open court.

It is enacted in section 13676 General Code that a person indicted for a misdemeanor may, upon request in writing, subscribed by him, be tried in his absence, and that no other person shall be tried unless personally present. This seems to leave no question whatever, as it is a perfectly plain enactment forbidding, except as therein set out, that any person be tried in his absence. If it be claimed that the plea of guilty is not a trial and therefore not within the meaning of this section the inherent impossibility of such plea by one who is not there disposes of the question.

In addition to this, the supreme court has decided the exact question. See Truman v. Walton, 59 O. S. 517. The decision in this case is that the mayor cannot proceed to trial, convict and sentence. It is equally apparent that he could not impose such sentence on a pretended plea of "not guilty" entered by someone other than the accused.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS—MUST HAVE APPROVAL OF BOARD OF STATE CHARITIES TO ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—TO BE LEGALLY INCORPORATED—SEE OPINIONS No. 773 AND 865.

Under the decision of the circuit court of Cuyahoga county it is necessary for a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals in that county to have the approval of the board of state charities to its articles of incorporation in order to be legally authorized as a corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1917.

The Ohio Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your communication of September 17, 1917, is as follows:

"Our attention has been called to The Cleveland Animal Protective League, which we have reasons to believe is the successor to The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, of Cleveland, which was ousted by the state of Ohio on relation of Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, by proceedings in the circuit court of Cuyahoga county, known as No. 5197.

The Cleveland Animal Protective League was first incorporated on June 9, 1917, by filing with the secretary of state a copy of the proceedings of the meeting of such league, as provided by section 10068 of the General Code.

On June 29, 1917, an amended statement of purposes for such league was filed at the office of the secretary of state. Neither the original articles nor the amendments thereto were submitted to the board of state charities as seems to be required by section 1352-2 of the General Code.

We believe that because of section 10063 and other connected sections of the chapter specifically provide that any society or organization incorporated in the manner set forth in section 10068 has the right by virtue of the laws covering such corporations to receive and care for children. We, therefore, call this matter to your attention, and if it is deemed in order, we suggest that you take such steps for ouster proceedings as is customary in such matters.

I am attaching hereto copies of records in the office of the secretary of state and also of the journal entry in case No. 5197 of the circuit court of Cuyahoga county."

The answer to your inquiry seems of necessity to involve nothing further than an examination of the records of the case referred to by you, and of the final entry of which you enclose a copy. The petition in that case sought the ouster upon the exact ground now made by you—that the proposed articles of incorporation, or rather the amendment thereto, was not submitted to your department and had not the proper certificate from you authorizing the secretary of state to record such amendment or issue the certificate therefor.

The statute in question is now numbered 1352-2, but it is substantially and almost verbally the same as former section 1670, which was originally section 35 of the act of April 20, 1908, 99 O. L. 201, which reads as follows:

"No association whose objects embrace the care of dependent, neglected or delinquent children shall hereafter be incorporated unless the proposed articles of incorporation shall first have been submitted to the board of state charities, and the secretary of state shall not issue a certificate of incorporation unless there shall first be filed in his office the certificate of the secretary of the board of state charities that he has examined the said articles of incorporation, and, in his judgment, the incorporators are reputable and respectable persons, that the proposed work is needed and the incorporation of such association is desirable and for the public good. Amendments proposed to the articles of incorporation of any such association shall be submitted in like manner to the board of state charities, and the secretary of state shall not record such amendment or issue his certificate therefor unless there shall first be filed in his office the certificate of the secretary of the board of state charities that he has examined the said amendment, that the association in question is, in his judgment, performing in good faith the work undertaken by it, and that the said amendment is, in his judgment, a proper one, and for the public good."

No suggestion is made here as to the correct interpretation of this statute as to whether or not it contemplates such society as the one in question, nor is the soundness of the decision cited questioned. It is enough to say that it is a binding authority in this instance, and so, without discussion, you are answered that The Cleveland Animal Protective League, by reason of the facts stated by you and under the above decision, is not a lawfully organized corporation for the objects and purposes for which it purports to be organized.

In regard to your suggestion as to ouster proceedings, it would seem that at present such course is not necessary for the reason that if, as appears to be likely, this association is simply engaged in caring for unfortunate animals and conducting a home for them, there is no necessity for invoking the power of the law against it, as there are ample means whereby this department or the prosecuting attorney of the county may prevent any unlawful expenditure of public money by them or for them.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS—MUST HAVE APPROVAL OF BOARD OF STATE CHARITIES TO ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—TO BE LEGALLY INCORPRATED—SEE OPINIONS NOS. 773 AND 864.

Under the decision of the circuit court of Cuyahoga county it is necessary for a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals in that county to have the approval of the board of state charities to its articles of incorporation in order to be legally authorized as a corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1917.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your inquiry of September 14, 1917, is as follows:

"I have your valued communication of September 6, containing your opinion concerning the right of the county commissioners to contribute funds to The Cleveland Animal Protective League. Since the receipt of your opinion, I have been in conference with members of The Cleveland Humane Society, and I am told by them that The Cleveland Animal Protective League at the time that it amended its charter did not receive the approval of the state board of charities.

It seems that under section 1352-2 of the General Code, as recently amended, that an association whose object may embrace the care of dependent, neglected or delinquent children or the placing of such children in private homes, must receive the approval of the state board of charities before it can receive a charter from the secretary of state.

I am enclosing a letter from The Cleveland Humane Society, giving its views on this question, together with a journal entry in a case decided by the circuit court, in a matter that appears to be quite similar.

It is the contention of The Cleveland Animal Protective League that it does not come within the provisions of this statute for the reason that its function as respects children is only to protect them from cruelty and abuse, and not to take care of them or provide homes for them.

At the time I submitted to you my request for an opinion as to the right of The Cleveland Animal Protective League to receive a part of the sheep fund, I was not aware of this phase of the matter, and consequently did not include it in my letter to you.

Kindly give me the views of your department on this question."

In the first place attention is called to the former opinion rendered to you on November 10, 1917, No. 773, to correct an error not in the conclusion of the opinion but as to some of the reasoning leading up to it.

It is there stated or assumed that it is necessary for this society to file articles of incorporation complying with the same statutory requirements as other general corporations do in compliance with section 8625. An examination of section 10068 General Code seems to establish that this is not necessary. That section is as follows:

"The secretary or clerk of the meeting must make a true record of the proceedings thereat, and certify and forward it to the secretary of state, who shall record it. This record shall contain the name by which such association is to be known, and from and after its filing, the directors and associates, and their successors will be invested with the powers, privileges, and immunities incident to incorporated companies. A copy of such record, duly certified by the secretary of state, shall be taken in all courts and places in this state, as evidence that such society is a duly organized and incorporated body."

This section gives an independent means for the incorporation of these societies somewhat different from the general provisions above referred to.

The question as to the necessity of the approval of the Ohio board of state charities seems to be foreclosed by the decision in the case of State ex rel. Hogan, Attorney-General, v. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. An opinion upon this same subject is this day sent to the board of state charities, and in order to avoid repetition a copy thereof is herewith enclosed to you, in which it is found that by reason of the binding effect of this decision the corporation is not properly organized and has no right to exercise its franchise. If, notwithstanding this, it assumes privileges to which it is not entitled, and secures or seeks to receive public money, proper measures can be taken either to prevent its unlawful acts or to forfeit its alleged franchise.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOL BUILDINGS—WHEN BUILDING CONDEMNED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF INSPECTION, DIVISION OF WORKSHOPS, FACTORIES AND PUBLIC BUILDINGS—EMERGENCY—HOW LEVY MADE.

Where two school buildings have been condemned by the chief deputy, department of inspection, division of workshops, factories and public buildings, and the board of education determines to build a new school building instead of the one condemned, and enlarges the other one, and money cannot be raised under sections 7625, 7626, 7627, 7628 and 7629 G. C. because of the limitations of taxation, such an emergency exists as will permit the levy to be made under section 5649-4 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1917.

HON. MILTON HAINES, Prosecuting Attorney, Marysville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion on the following facts:

> "I enclose you printed circular issued by the board of education of Union township, Union county, Ohio, containing copies of letters received from Hon. Frank W. Miller, superintendent of public schools, also one from Hon. T. P. Kearns, chief deputy, department of inspection of the industrial commission of Ohio. Upon receipt of these letters the board proceeded to arrange for an election to determine whether an issue of $65,000 worth of bonds should be issued for the purpose of building a new school building at Milford Center and enlarging the one located at Irwin in said township.
> The bond issue carried and new buildings were built or enlarged. While Milford Center is an incorporated village, the schools of the village are under the control of the township board, and because of the great amount of indebtedness and the limitations of the tax rate, the school board is unable to secure sufficient funds to run their schools and are continually in debt, having to borrow money to pay the teaching force and their haulers.
> The question I would like for you to answer is as follows: Can this election, issuing of bonds be considered as an emergency, as provided under an act passed by the state legislature and found on page 527 of Vol. 103 O. L.?"

In the circular which you enclosed with your letter is copied a letter from Hon. T. P. Kearns, chief deputy, department of inspection, division of workshops, factories and public buildings, industrial commission of Ohio, in which letter said inspector ordered the use of said school houses for their intended purposes prohibited. You also advised me orally that the board of education then ascertained that it was without sufficient funds which were applicable to the purpose of repairing or rebuilding such school houses or to construct a new school house for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district, and that it was not practicable to secure the funds for such purposes under sections 7625, 7626, 7627, 7628 and 7629 because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district, and that the board did, subject to the provisions of sections 7625, 7626 and 7627 submit the question of issuing $65,000 worth of bonds to the electors of the district, and that said election carried in favor of the issue of said bonds, and your question is, can this state of facts be considered an emergency?

Section 7630-1 G. C. reads as follows:

> "If a school house is wholly or partly destroyed by fire or other casualty, or if the use of any school house, for its intended purpose is prohibited by any order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and the board of education of the school district is without sufficient funds applicable to the purpose, with which to rebuild or repair such school house or to construct a new school house for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district, and it is not practicable to secure such funds under any of the six preceding sections because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district, such board of education may, subject to the provisions of sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven, and upon the approval of the electors in the manner provided by sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-five and seventy-six hundred and twenty-six issue bonds for the amount required for such purpose. For the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds and on bonds heretofore issued for the purposes herein mentioned and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, such board of education shall annually levy a tax as provided by law."

Your statement of facts seems to bring your case directly within the terms of the above quoted section, that is, you say that the chief deputy in the department of inspection, division of workshops, factories and public buildings, prohibited by an order the use of the school buildings at Milford Center and at Irwin, and that the board of education then determined that it was without sufficient funds which were applicable to the purpose of re-building or repairing such school houses or to construct a new school house which would properly accommodate the schools of the district, and that on account of the limits of taxation it was not practicable to secure sufficient funds under the six sections preceding section 7630-1, and that the board called an election as provided by sections 7625, 7626 and 7627, at which election was submitted to the electors of the district the question of issuing $65,000 worth of bonds, which would be the amount required for the purpose of repairing, re-building or building a new school house for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district. Nothing it seems to me could come more squarely within the terms or provisions of said section, and we must therefore advise you that the same can be considered an emergency.

It was held in Opinion No. 602, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, volume 2, page 1715, that:

> "Where the industrial commission and its deputies in charge of the department of workshops, factories and public buildings condemn the use of a public school building for school purposes, the order must be complied with and an emergency is created.
> If bonds are issued by the board of education, with the approval of a majority of the electors at a special election, the tax levies necessary to carry these bonds may be made outside of the limitations of the Smith one per cent law. Such is the effect of the amendment of section 5649-4 G. C."

It was also held in Opinion No. 888, Annual Report of the Attorney-General, volume 1, page 548, under date of April 24, 1914, that:

> "Where the inspector of workshops and factories prohibits the use of a school house until certain repairs are made, but the board of education decides to erect a new school building instead, and the electors vote for a $25,000 bond issue for the construction thereof, but cannot levy sufficient taxes to pay bonds and maintain school, there would be an emergency within the meaning of section 5649-4, General Code, and the necessary taxes for the retirement of bonds required for the purpose might be levied outside of all limitations of law."

Following the above opinions, then, I advise you that where the chief deputy of the department of inspection, division of workshops, factories and public buildings, prohibits the use of school houses for their intended purpose, and the board of education is without funds to re-build or repair same, or to build a new school house for the proper accommodation of the school youth, and that the funds for said purposes cannot be raised under the provisions of sections 7625, 7626, 7627, 7628 and 7629 G. C., because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district, then if under the provisions of sections 7625, 7626 and 7627 G. C. bonds are sold, such an emergency exists as will permit the levy of taxes to pay the bonds and the interest thereon outside of any limitations of the Smith one per cent law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PORTABLE STEAM BOILERS—INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION—HAS NO AUTHORITY TO COMPEL INSPECTION WHEN USED IN CONSTRUCTION, ETC., OF STREETS—PUBLIC ROADS DEFINED.

1. Under the provisions of section 1058-7 G. C., the Industrial Commission has no authority to compel the inspection of portable steam boilers used in the construction of and repair to the public streets of a municipality and railroads and bridges lying within a municipality.

2. The words "public roads" as used in said section would include public streets lying within a municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

Attention Mr. Robert S. Hayes, Sec'y.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of November 27, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "The enclosed copy of minutes from the record of the Industrial Commission of Ohio is explanatory.
> Will you please advise this department whether it has the right by general order to insist upon inspection of the portable steam boilers referred to, and further to construe the phrase 'public road?'"

To this communication you attached copy of minutes containing the resolution referred to by you. Your inquiry relates to section 1058(7 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "Sec. 1058-7. All steam boilers and their appurtenances, except boilers of railroad locomotives subject to inspection under federal laws, portable boilers used in pumping, heating, steaming and drilling, in the open field, for water, gas and oil, and portable boilers used for agricultural purposes, and in construction of and repairs to public roads, railroads and bridges, boilers on automobiles, boilers of steam fire engines brought into the state for temporary use in times of emergency for the purpose of checking conflagations, boilers carrying pressure of less than fifteen pounds per square inch, which are equipped with safety devices approved by the board of boiler rules, and boilers under the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be thoroughly inspected, internally and externally, and under operating conditions at intervals of not more than one year, and shall not be operated at pressures in excess of the safe working pressure stated in the certificate of inspection hereinafter mentioned. And shall be equipped with such appliances to insure safety of operation as shall be prescribed by the board of boiler rules."

In the resolution referred to, your commission has adopted a certain general order relative to the inspection of portable steam boilers, which order reads as follows:

"All portable steam boilers and their appurtenances within the limits of municipalities within the State of Ohio, except boilers of railroad locomotives subject to inspection under federal laws, boilers of automobiles, boilers of steam fire engines brought into the state for temporary use in times of emergency for the purpose of checking conflagations, boilers carrying pressure of less than fifteen pounds per square inch, which are equipped with safety devices approved by the Board of Boiler Rules, and boilers under the jurisdiction of the United States, shall be thoroughly inspected, internally and externally, and under operating conditions at intervals of not more than one year, and shall not be operated at pressures in excess of the safe working pressures stated in the certificate of inspection issued by the Industrial Commission of Ohio; and shall be equipped with such appliances to insure safety of operation as have been prescribed by the Board of Boiler Rules; all such boilers installed after January 1, 1915, must be Ohio Standard."

We will first note the provisions in section 1058-7 G. C. in reference to the inspection of steam boilers. They state that all steam boilers shall be inspected except:

1. "Boilers of railroad locomotives subject to inspection under federal laws;
2. Portable boilers used in pumping, heating, steaming, and drilling, in the open field, for water, gas and oil;
3. Portable boilers used for agricultural purposes;
4. And in construction of and repairs to public roads, railroads and bridges;
5. Boilers on automobiles;
6. Boilers of steam fire engines brought into the state for temporary use;
7. Boilers carrying pressure of less than fifteen pounds per square inch, which are equipped with safety devices;
8. Boilers under the jurisdiction of the United States."

We will now note the provisions of the resolution, relative to the inspection of boilers. This resolution provides that:

"All portable steam boilers and their appurtenances within the limits of municipalities within the State of Ohio, except * * * (here the resolution, in almost the exact language of the statute, excepts boilers enumerated in the statute which are above set out in classes 1, 5, 6, 7 and 8, in the analysis of section 1058-7 G. C.), shall be thoroughly inspected, internally and externally."

But the boilers excepted in the statute and enumerated in classes 2, 3 and 4 in the above analysis of said section, are not excepted in said resolution. Classes 2 and 3 enumerated in the statute above analyzed relate to portable boilers used in drilling for water, gas and oil, and also for agricultural purposes. These seem to be involved in the particular question which you submit to me for consideration. Possibly it would not frequently occur that boilers would be used for drilling for water, gas and oil in the open field and for agricultural purposes, and yet be within a municipality, although this condition is possible, inasmuch as cultivated land is included within the limits of municipalities.

This leaves for consideration class 4, above enumerated, wherein it is stated that portable boilers used in construction of and repairs to public roads, railroads and bridges are excepted from inspection, but nothing is stated as to the location of the public roads, railroads and bridges, whether in municipalities or not.

The resolution of the Industrial Commission provides that all portable steam boilers in municipalities must be examined, with certain exceptions, which exceptions do not include portable steam boilers used in construction of and repairs to public roads, railroads and bridges. In other words, said resolution virtually provides for the examination of portable steam boilers used within the limits of municipalities in the construction of and repairs to public roads, railroads and bridges; while the statute specifically exempts portable boilers used in the construction of and repairs to public roads, railroads and bridges, making no distinction whatever as to whether the same are used within or without municipalities.

This raises the question as to whether the orders of the Industrial Commission are broader and more inclusive than the statute itself, on which the orders must be based.

Do the streets of a municipality come within the term "public roads"? There is nothing in the original act, nor in the act as amended, to indicate what the legislature had in mind when using said words. Section 23 of the act (103 O. L. 652) provides:

> "Whoever being the owner, or operator of any steam boiler, herein required to be inspected, * * * shall be fined * * * ."

Section 23 afterwards become section 1058-28 G. C.

From this section it is evident that no owner or operator is required to have boilers inspected unless the requirement is found in the act itself.

Section 3 of the act (102 O. L. 494) gives the board of boiler rules, now the industrial commission, authority to make rules and regulations relative to certain matters connected with its duties, but there is no indication whatever that the legislature intended the rules should in any way extend the effect of the statute further than the statute itself provides.

In order to ascertain the meaning of the words "public roads" as used in section 1058-7 G. C., we might refer to other acts of the legislature, wherein these words are used, but this is a dangerous course to pursue, in placing a construction upon a statute, and would afford but little evidence as to the intention of the legislature in the use of said words in the section now under consideration. We are therefore driven to assuming they were used in their common and accepted meaning, as defined by our standard lexicographers.

Webster defines "road" as follows:

> "The word is generally applied to highways, and as a generic term it includes highway, street and lane."

Webster defines "street" as follows:

> "A paved way or road; a city road."

In the Century Dictionary we find "street" defined as follows:

> "A public way or road, whether paved or unpaved, in a village, town or city * * * and having houses or town lots on one or both sides."

The same work defines "road" as follows:

> "A public way for passage or travel."

Bouvier gives the following definition of "street:"

> "A public thoroughfare or highway in a city or village."

From all the above it seems clearly evident the word "road" would include highways, whether located outside of or within a municipality. There is one provision of section 1058-7 G. C. which throws some light upon the question and seems to tend in the same direction, as to the meaning of the words "public roads". The language in the exception is:

> " * * * and portable boilers used for * * * and in construction of and repairs to public roads, railroads and bridges * * ."

It could hardly even be claimed that portable steam boilers, used in building bridges or railroads, or in repairing the same, must, in order to be excepted under the statute, be used on bridges and railroads outside of municipalities merely, and not on bridges and railroads inside of municipalities. There is nothing whatever in the section to warrant such a conclusion. This being the case, we can not consistently hold that the term "public roads" should be limited in its meaning to include only roads outside of municipalities, and not roads within same.

Another part of section 1058-7 G. C. which seems to throw a little light upon this question is found in this language:

> "except * * * portable boilers used in pumping, heating, steaming and drilling, in the open field, for water, gas and oil."

In this exception the legislature made it clear that in order to be excepted, the boiler must be used "in the open field;" that is, outside of and beyond a thickly settled community, such as a municipality. However, there is no such language found in the exception to which we are directing our attention.

Another thing to be kept clearly in mind, in placing a construction upon this phrase, is that the provisions of section 1058-7 G. C. partake very much of a criminal nature. Section 1058-28 G. C., above referred to, provides that any owner or operator of a steam boiler required to be inspected, who operates the same in violation of the provisions of the act, shall be fined not less than twenty dollars nor more than five hundred dollars.

It is a familiar rule that in placing a construction upon a criminal statute, it shall not be made to include anything other than that which the plain language of the act itself includes.

In view of all the above, it is my opinion that the term "public roads," as found in section 1058-7 G. C., includes the streets of a municipality used by the public, as well as the highways lying outside the limits of the municipality and used by the public for travel. Of course if this construction be correct, the resolution adopted by the commission is broader than the terms of the statute upon which it is based, and hence could not be enforced in reference to the particular matter about which you inquire.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FISH AND GAME CASES— COSTS—COUNTY NOT LIABLE WHEN AFFIDAVIT NOT APPROVED BY PROSECUTING ATTORNEY OR ATTORNEY GENERAL WHERE OFFENSE NOT COMMITTED IN PRESENCE OF WARDEN.

The costs in a fish and game case must be paid by the county auditor when certified to him under oath by the justice, if the defendant has been acquitted or discharged from custody, or if he has been convicted or committed in default of payment of fines and costs, subject to the following rule:

But where the offense was not committed in the presence of the game warden, the affidavit must have been approved by the prosecuting attorney or the attorney-general, otherwise the costs should not be paid by the county auditor for the reason that in such cases the game warden is not "a person authorized by law to prosecute the case" as referred to in section 1404 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 15, 1917.

HON. TOM A. JENKINS, Prosecuting Attorney, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of the following communication under date of November 27, 1917, from W. H. Crawford, County Auditor of Lawrence County:

> "In the last few months the deputy game warden of our county has instituted proceedings against people charged with violating the fish and game laws and the defendants have been acquitted or discharged because the state could not make a case against them.
> The costs in these cases have been certified to us for payment and the justices and game warden claim that the auditor must pay these costs without waiting to be authorized to do so by the county commissioners.
> We have referred this matter to the prosecuting attorney for advice as to our duty in the matter, but he does not wish to take the responsibility of directing us in the matter and advised us to write you for instruction. He also wished us to write for the reason that it does not look right to him for the county to bear the expense of all cases which are lost by the state when the fines collected for such offenses are sent to the state authorities and not turned into the county."

Section 1404 of the General Code reads:

> "A person authorized by law to prosecute a case under the provisions of this chapter shall not be required to advance or secure costs therein. If the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody, or if he be convicted and committed in default of payment of fine and costs, such costs shall be certified under oath by the justice to the county auditor who shall correct all errors therein and issue his warrant on the county treasurer payable to the person or persons entitled thereto."

It will be noted that this section provides that when the defendant is acquitted or discharged from custody, or when he is convicted and committed in default of payment of fines and costs, such costs shall be certified under oath by the justice to the county auditor, who shall correct any errors found and issue his warrant on the county treasurer, payable to the person or persons entitled thereto. In these fish and game prosecutions, therefore, a county auditor must issue his warrant on the county treasurer covering the costs incurred. It is not necessary that any authorization be had by him from the county commissioners. It might be well, however, to call your attention to section 1397 of the General Code, which reads:

"Sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables and other police officers shall enforce the laws for the protection, preservation and propagation of birds, fish and game and for this purpose they shall have the power conferred upon the wardens and receive like fees for similar services. Prosecutions by a warden or other police officer for offenses not committed in his presence shall be instituted only upon the approval of the prosecuting attorney of the county in which the offense is committed or upon the approval of the attorney general."

In an opinion rendered under date of January 3, 1912, found in Annual Report of the Attorney-General for that year, page 1075, former Attorney-General Hogan held as follows:

"If the approval of the prosecuting attorney or the attorney-general is not obtained by a warden or other police officer before instituting a suit, when the offense is not committed within his presence, the county auditor is in no event compelled to issue warrants on the county treasury for costs.

A blanket authority from the attorney-general or the prosecuting attorney is not sufficient."

In that opinion it was said:

"You will note that said section 1397 provides in substance that prosecutions, by wardens or other police officer, for offenses not committed in his presence, shall be instituted only upon the approval of the prosecuting attorney of the county wherein the offense was committed, or upon the approval of the attorney-general.

Section 1404 provides in substance that any person authorized by law to prosecute a case under the provisions of this chapter shall not be required to advance or secure costs, and further provides that if the defendant be acquitted or discharged then such costs shall be certified under oath by the justice to the county auditor.

I am of the opinion that a warden or other police officer is not authorized by law to prosecute a party for a violation of the fish and game laws not committed in their presence without the approval of the prosecuting attorney of the respective county wherein the offense is committed, or the attorney general. Therefore it follows that if the approval of the prosecuting attorney or the attorney-general is not obtained before instituting a suit by a warden or other police officer when the offense is not committed in his presence, and the defendant is discharged either on motion or upon the merits, then the county auditor is not compelled to issue warrants on the county treasury in payment of the costs.

For similar reasons I am of the further opinion, in answer to your second question, that when the approval of the prosecuting attorney or attorney-general is not obtained in such cases, as provided in section 1397 of the General Code, the auditor is not required to issue a warrant for said costs as provided in section 1303 of the General Code, as above quoted.

In answer to your third question, it is my opinion that the following provision 'prosecutions by warden or other police officers for offenses not committed in his presence shall be instituted only upon the approval of the prosecuting attorney of the county in which the offense is committed, or upon the approval of the attorney-general' as contained in section 1397, means that in such cases authority must be obtained in each individual case, so that either the prosecuting attorney of the county wherein the offense is committed, or the attorney-general may pass upon the sufficiency or insufficiency of the evidence in each individual case of violation of the fish and game statutes not committed in the actual presence of a game warden or other police officer. Said section would utterly fail to accomplish this purpose if a blanket authority were given indiscriminately to the game warden to prosecute all such violations."

A similar opinion was rendered by Mr. Turner, as found in opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, Vol. 2, page 1601. I would therefore advise you that the costs in a fish and game case must be paid by the county auditor when certified to him under oath by the justice, if the defendant has been acquitted or discharged from custody, or if he has been convicted and committed in default of payment of fines and costs, subject to the following rule.

But where the offense was not committed in the presence of the game warden, the affidavit must have been approved by the prosecuting attorney or the attorney-general, otherwise the costs should not be paid by the county auditor for the reason that in such cases the game warden is not "a person authorized by law to prosecute the case" as referred to in section 1404 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—INTEREST WHEN CHARGEABLE ON SAME.

Testatrix directed her executors to dispose of her entire estate, appraised at $30,000, including both real and personal property, to pay debts and funeral expenses out of the proceeds, to pay three specific bequests and to divide the net balance into ten equal shares, giving them three years within which to make such disposition with authority to manage the real estate;

HELD: Under these facts the interests in the ten shares vested as of the death of the testatrix and should be appraised as of that date and not as of the date on which final distribution is made. Interest at the rate of eight per cent per annum from and after one year after the death of the testatrix is chargeable on the inheritance taxes payable under these circumstances. The costs of administration might have been estimated for the purpose of settling the tax and avoiding interest.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1917.

HON E. A. BROWN, Probate Judge, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 1st in which you submit for my opinion a question relative to the assessment of the collateral inheritance tax, upon the following facts:

"Mrs. S. died testate November 4, 1915 (more than two years ago), leaving real and personal property which amounted to the sum of about $30,000.00. Under her will the executors were given the period of three years within which to dispose of her real property and convert it into money, and until it is sold, the executors are authorized to lease same and collect the rents. Real estate consisted of two farms of about one hundred and sixty and eighty acres, respectively, and small tract of land, twelve acres adjoining corporation of Circleville and two houses and lots in city.

After the payment of debts, funeral expenses and costs of administration, and three bequests of $500.00 each, the net balance under will of testatrix was divided into ten shares, which she bequeathed to eight brothers and sisters, or their legal representatives, and two friends, in ten equal parts.

The executors have disposed of all the real estate and also the personal property, except the present year's crops, which will also be converted into money by the first of March, 1918. Executors have made a partial distribution on the basis of $1,800.00 to each of the ten distributees. The balance, coming to these distributees, cannot be ascertained until they have settled their final account, which will be about March 1st, 1918. The attorney and I agree that the entire estate is subject to tax (none of the legatees or distributees being exempt), after deducting the exemption of $500.00 each.

General Code, section 5335, provides as follows:

'If such taxes are not paid within one year after the death of the decedent, interest at the rate of eight per cent shall be thereafter charged and collected thereon * * *.'

> The question is, under the foregoing facts, will they be liable for the payment of the eight per cent interest on their several distributive shares in view of the fact that at the expiration of the year, the property had not been converted into money, and the real estate not sold, until the present summer, so that the amount could not have been ascertained even approximately, until it will have been ascertained what the net balance will be in the hands of the executors for distribution."

If the facts as you state them would justify the conclusion which you express to the effect that the value of the ten separate interests could not be ascertained until the sale of the real estate, payment of debts and funeral expenses and costs of administration and the bequests charged on the farm, I would be of the opinion that the eight per cent interest should not be charged, but I find myself, with deference, unable to accept the view that this is a case where the amount of the tax could not be ascertained until distribution.

From your statement I take it that the ten bequests were in every sense vested as of the death of the testatrix. That being the case they represented interests in all the property of the deceased passing at her death. To be sure the real estate was to be converted into money and in equity the whole would be regarded as personal property. The principle, however, as stated by Blakemore & Bancroft on Inheritance Taxes is that > "the doctrine of equitable conversion can not be invoked to affect the imposition of the inheritance tax so * * * an absolute direction to sell real estate will not transform it to personal property for the purposes of the tax."

Citing:

Connell v. Crosby, 210 Ill., 380;
McCurdy v. McCurdy, 197 Mass., 248;
In re Curtis, 142 N. Y., 219;
In re Dows, 167 N. Y., 227;
Orr v. Gillman, 183 U. S., 278.

Thus, if the real estate had been situated in another state it could not, under the above authorities, have been regarded as personal property and therefore subject to the Ohio collateral inheritance tax law simply because in equity the interest of the beneficiaries would have been treated as personal property. Another way of putting the same thing is to say that the testamentary disposition of the real estate amounts to a devise of it to the executors with power of sale and direction to pay the proceeds to the ultimate beneficiaries. The executors take, not in their capacity of executors, strictly speaking, but in reality as testamentary trustees. But whatever technical view be taken of this question, it is at least clear that by the will beneficial interests in the entire estate, both real and personal, were created in the ten legatees as of the death of the testatrix. The value of those interests should be appraised then as of that date and it is not necessary, nor is it proper to wait until the sale is actually made to ascertain what that value is. Thus, if the aggregate value of the estate be, as you state, thirty thousand dollars, then despite the three year period the interest of each of the ten legatees would be one-tenth of the sum to be ascertained by deducting from thirty thousand dollars, fifteen hundred dollars for the three specific bequests and the amount of the debts, funeral expenses and costs of administration. The income received after the death of the testatrix from the management of the farm is not property included in the appraisment.

Hopper v. Bradford, 178 Mass., 95;
In re Vassar, 127 N. Y., 1;
In re Miller, 5 Pa. Co. Ct., 522.

If the sale should actually produce either more or less than the amount of the appraisement, this fact would be immaterial as it would be conclusively assumed that the estate had either appreciated or depreciated in value after the death of the testatrix so far as the inheritance tax is concerned.

There is but one reason therefore justifying the postponement of the assessment in the case you have mentioned and that is the fact that the debts of the decedent, the funeral expenses and the costs of administration are properly to be deducted from the appraised value of the estate. It might be argued that so long as an estate remains in process of administration or settlement the tax should not be regarded as payable and the eight per cent interest should not be charged because the amount of the tax cannot be ascertained until the amount of the costs has been ascertained and that cannot be done until settlement is effected.

The statute providing for the charging of the eight per cent interest will not, however, permit this view. Its language is as follows:

> "Sec. 5331. * * * All administrators, executors and trustees, * * * shall be liable for all such taxes, with lawful interest as hereinafter provided, until they have been paid, as hereinafter directed. Such taxes shall become due and payable immediately upon the death of the decedent * * * ."
> "Sec. 5335. Taxes imposed by this subdivision of this chapter shall be paid into the treasury of the county in which the court having jurisdiction of the estate or accounts is situated, by the executors, administrators, trustees, or other persons charged with the payment thereof. If such taxes are not paid within one year after the death of the decedent, interest at the rate of eight per cent shall be thereafter charged and collected thereon and if not paid at the expiration of eighteen months after such death, the prosecuting attorney of the county wherein said taxes remain unpaid, shall institute the necessary proceedings to collect the taxes in the court of common pleas of the county, after first being notified in writing by the probate judge of the county of the non-payment thereof. The probate judge shall give such notice in writing. If the taxes are paid before the expiration of one year after the death of the decedent, a discount of one per cent per month for each full month that payment has been made prior to the expiration of the year, shall be allowed on the amount of such taxes."

Now the legislature must have been deemed to have taken cognizance of the fact that all estates, especially those passing by will, would require sometime for settlement. Nevertheless, no express exception was made in these statutes which would have the effect of postponing the due date of the tax until settlement could be made. Therefore, I think it is clear that if the delay in the settlement of this estate had occurred otherwise than because of the express directions of the will we should be driven to the conclusion that despite the practical impossibility of settling the tax before the expiration of one year the interest would have to be charged. Is the case altered by the fact that under the terms of the will the executors had power to manage the estate for a period of three years? I think that the answer to this question is in the negative for the following reasons:

(1) In the first place the postponement in the settlement of the estate is for the benefit of the legatees. As we have seen it amounts to a testamentary trust. No doubt the testatrix's intention was that the debts and costs of administration would be covered by the profits of the management of the estate during the three-year period.

(2) The practice of estimating expenses of administration, where it is necessary to pay the tax at an earlier date in order to avoid the accumulation of interest or penalties, has been approved and in my opinion the provisions of the Ohio law are broad enough to justify such a practice. (See section 361, Blakemore & Bancroft Inheritance Taxes and cases cited; sections 5334 and 5347 G. C.).

(3) As has been seen, the postponement of the settlement is for the benefit of the legatees and amounts strictly to a testamentary trust. That being the case all expenses connected with it, i. e., all those growing out of the postponement itself and incidental to it, are not strictly speaking costs of administration at all but rather expenses of the trust. (See Blakemore & Bancroft, Sec. 369; State v. Probate Court, 101 Minn. 485; In re Gihon, 169 N. J., 443).

While it would perhaps be very technical to separate the expenses of administration in the case at hand, yet the fact that a part of them at any rate are voluntarily incurred for the benefit of the ultimate takers tends to destroy the supposed injustice of charging eight per cent from and after the expiration of a year after the death of the testatrix on the sole ground that the incurring of these expenses made it impossible to determine the amount of tax the sooner.

I answer your question therefore by saying that in my opinion the eight per cent interest is chargeable on the several distributive shares of the ten legatees, but that the value of such shares should be appraised as of the death of the testatrix instead of being determined by the amount in the hands of the executors after all had been converted into money.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

PRIVATE ACADEMY—WHICH HAS ENTERED INTO A CONTRACT WITH A BOARD OF EDUCATION FOR HIGH SCHOOL FACILITIES—RIGHTS OF RECOVERY FOR TUITION FOR NON-RESIDENT PUPILS.

Neither a contract entered into under section 7991 of the General Code between a board of education and the trustees of a private academy nor the making of a levy for the support of a private academy by the board of education of a school district under sections 7673 and 7674 of the General Code, as amended 107 O. L., 548, is effectual to constitute the private school with which such agreement or arrangement is made the high school of the district within the purview of the section authorizing the recovery of tuition for the attendance of non-resident pupils.

Even if this were not so, any right of recovery on account of such tuition would be limited to the board of education of the district making such agreement or arrangement and would not exist as against the board of education of any other district in favor of the management of the academy.

The rights, if any, of the academy against the board of education making the arrangement or agreement referred to would not be in the nature of a claim for tuition, but would be predicated upon the agreement in the one instance and the making of the tax levy in the other.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1917.

HON. F. J. BISHOP, Prosecuting Attorney, Jefferson, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date enclosing letter received by you from Mr. E. W. Hamblin, principal of Grand River institute, which appears to be a private educational institution located at Austinburg, Ohio. You request my opinion upon the inquiries submitted by Mr. Hamblin, which are as follows:

> "Will you kindly secure for me an opinion from the attorney-general as to how I may be able to collect Boxwell-Patterson tuition from townships which claim to be unable to pay it because of small tax duplicate? Is there not a provision whereby state aid may be invoked in such cases so that neither the school will lose the tuition nor the parent be obliged to pay it?
> I am referring specifically to the townships of Colebrook and Windsor which claim to be unable to pay such tuition."

So far as the inadequacy of tax levies as a defense to the payment of what is designated in the letter as "Boxwell-Patterson tuition" is concerned, I may advise that such facts when established do constitute a defense to a claim for such tuition under certain circumstances pointed out in section 7748 of the General Code as amended 104 O. L., 125. Said section provides that:

> "A board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when the maximum levy permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district."

In other words, if the townships named by Mr. Hamblin are townships which maintain second or third grade high schools, then under the circumstances mentioned they are not required by the earlier provisions of section 7748 to pay the tuition for the full course (if the school is a third grade high school) or for the one year (if the district maintains a second grade high school) in order to afford four full years of high school education. If, however, the board maintains no high school at all, then upon compliance with the conditions of section 7747 the board of education of the district may be charged with the payment of tuition for the full period of four school years (section 7748). If the board of education provides a high school by contract with another district, entered into under section 7750 of the General Code, exemption from the payment of such tuition is thereby obtained as to pupils residing within three miles of the school designated in the agreement; but if such school, or where a high school is maintained, the school so maintained is located more than four miles from the residence of a given pupil, the obligation to pay tuition exists, but only in case the pupil attends a nearer high school; and such obligation may be discharged by paying for the transportation of such pupil to the high school which is maintained by the board, if such high school is maintained.

These are the general conditions upon which the board of education of one district may be liable for the payment of tuition of those who are eligible to admission to high school. I am, of course, unable to advise whether Colebrook and Windsor township rural boards of education are actually liable to pay the tuition of their eligible pupils at other high schools and as to whether or not their alleged inability to pay such tuition on account of their tax duplicates is sufficient to discharge their liability. I point out that if the tuition claimed is that payable under the first three sentences of section 7748, such inability is sufficient to discharge all obligations which would otherwise exist provided the maximum levy permitted by law for the district has been reached; but that if tuition is due under section 7747, or otherwise under the provisions of section 7748, then such inability would not be a defense and the board of education of the district would remain liable for the tuition.

I have, however, not discussed these questions in great detail because I am at a loss to understand upon what theory a private institution claims tuition from a public school district.

The "Boxwell-Patterson" law, so-called, has been repealed in so far as the requirement for an examination and the issuance of a certificate to successful applicants is concerned. See 104 O. L., 100-125. The whole subject is now regulated by section 7747, which was put into its present general form in 1914, though it has been since amended. Without quoting that section, suffice it to say that there is no provision that a pupil eligible for admission to high school may attend a private school and have anything paid to that school under said section by way of tuition. The phrase "high school," as used throughout the related sections, in my opinion means a public high school conducted by the board of education of a school district existing under the laws of the state. Grand River institute appears to be "a home school for boys and girls." There is nothing on the face of the correspondence to indicate that it is a public high school.

I have made inquiry at the office of the superintendent of public instruction and find the following to be the interesting history of this "institute:"

It was organized as a private institution, but some years ago the board of education of the district in which it was located assumed to enter into an agreement with the management of the institution for its maintenance as a high school, paying a certain sum annually to the management of the school. The only authority for such an arrangement existing prior to 1917 was that found in section 7991 of the General Code, which formerly provided as follows:

> "The trustees of any school heretofore established under the provisions hereof, and in no way connected with any religious or other sect, and the board of education of the district in which such school is situated, may make contracts whereby such trustees receive into the school pupils from such district, who shall receive such instruction as is, or may be, provided by law for public schools in this state. In consideration of such service by such trustees, such board, under the general restrictions of the law relating to common schools, in so far as they are applicable and not inconsistent herewith, may contribute to the maintenance of such school, and pay such part of the costs of the erection of additional buildings, and upon such conditions, not inconsistent with the deed, devise or gift under which the school is established, as is agreed upon by such board and such trustees."

This section was amended in 107 O. L., 548, in an immaterial particular.

It is clear to me that an agreement entered into under the above quoted section did not have the effect of constituting the private school the high school of the district in the sense contemplated by the tuition law. As to the pupils of the district in which the school was located, they of course would be entitled, after the making of such an arrangement, to attend the academy free of charge; and the academy would be entitled to the consideration agreed upon by the board of education making the arrangement; but this would not be tuition in any sense of the word and I am firmly of the opinion that pupils from other districts would have no right to charge the boards of education of their districts with tuition of any kind for attendance at such a private school.

In 1917 the legislation of this character was supplemented by the amendment of sections 7673 and 7674 of the General Code, which now read as follows:

> "Sec. 7673. The school board of any village or rural school district or the joint boards of any union of districts for high school purposes, in which is located a university, college, or academy organized or existing under the laws of this state, as an institution of learning not for profit, and under the management of a board of trustees, or the board of any district adjoining that in which such institution is located, may levy a tax not exceeding two mills annually, upon all taxable property within such district for the support of such university, college or academy.
> Sec. 7674. In the event such levy is made; all holders of a high school diploma obtained from such district high school shall have the right to attend such university or college for the period of two years, free of tuition, and all holders of a certificate from the eighth grade elementary schools of each district in which such tax is levied shall have the right to attend such academy for the period of four years, free of tuition."

Here again we have special provision for the pupils of a district, the consideration for whose free attendance at the academy is the receipt of the proceeds of the levy by the academy, but the institution remains a private one and does not become the high school of the district for the purpose of charging tuition to pupils of other districts who happen to attend the school. So that even if action has been taken under the act of 1917, which does not appear, such action could not be the basis of the recovery of tuition by the academy from the boards of education of any other districts than the one in which it is situated; nor would the right of the academy against the district in which it is situated be for the recovery of tuition as such.

But even if I am in error in my opinion that the making of an agreement under former section 7991, or an arrangement under sections 7673 and 7674 made since said sections as amended went into effect, would not have the effect of making the academy with which the agreement or arrangement was made the high school of the district or districts making the arrangement; and even if a contrary answer be returned to this question, this would not give the academy the right to recover tuition from the boards of education of other districts. As the statute quoted and referred to in dealing with the subject of tuition show, the attendance of a pupil at high school in a district other than that in which he resides may give rise to a right on the part of the board of education maintaining or providing the high school to recover tuition from the board of education of the district in which the pupil resides; but this right is limited to the board of education. So even if the academy be regarded as the high school of the district for the purpose of the statutes under discussion, Mr. Hamblin, or the institution which he represents, is without any right to recover for tuition for pupils of other districts attending the academy; whether the board of education of the district or districts making the arrangement with the academy are entitled to recover such tuition or not.

If Mr. Hamblin means by his inquiry to ask how he can recover from the districts with which the academy has made an arrangement, I can only say that he is in error in supposing that the academy is entitled to recover anything by way of "tuition" from such townships. If the arrangement was under sections 7673 and 7674, then the academy was not obliged to admit the pupils of the district free of tuition unless the levy had been made; and if they were admitted before the levy was made, any right of recovery for tuition which the academy may have exists against the pupils or their parents or guardians and not against the district. If the arrangement was made under section 7991, then if the boards of education entering into the agreement have not complied with their agreement and the academy has done so, the latter may recover from the former as upon a breach of contract; or, waiving the breach, may possibly sue for the reasonable value of the service performed, which last might be with some appropriateness called tuition. In the vindication of any such rights, however, the academy would be acting in a private capacity and I do not feel called upon to advise its officers in the premises.

I have tried to cover every possible angle which may be involved in Mr. Hamblin's brief inquiry, excepting the supposition that an arrangement may have been entered into between the academy and the board of education of the district which was wholly unauthorized by law. Of course, if such was the case, the results suggested would even more palpably follow.

I conclude therefore that upon no imaginable hypothesis could Mr. Hamblin, or the institution which he represents, have a right to recover anything from the boards of education of any districts with which the academy had not entered into contracts or agreements under the sections noted; and if the districts which he names are those with which the academy has valid agreements under section 7991, or has entered into arrangements under sections 7673 and 7674 of the General Code, then the academy may have a private right of recovery for breach of contract in the one event, or may be entitled to recover from the pupils, their parents or guardians in the other event; but in no case can "tuition" as such be recovered from the boards entering into such agreements or arrangements by virtue thereof.

I do not mean to pass upon any of the questions which I have suggested respecting the rights of the academy against the district or districts with which a lawful agreement has been made under section 7991. As to section 7674, I am satisfied that no formal contract is contemplated by this and the preceding section as amended in 1917 and that boards of education are without authority to agree to make a levy as provided in section 7673. They may make the levy or not as they choose. If they make it their pupils are entitled to attend the academy free of tuition. If they do not make it, the officers of the academy are not bound to receive the pupils free of tuition. If the levy is made it belongs, of course, to the academy, if it has complied with the conditions of the law and a plain remedy is available for its collection. If it has not been made and pupils from the districts have nevertheless been admitted on the faith of a supposed understanding that it would be made, the academy is the loser because its management has assumed the risk of the performance of an official function which the officers involved were not obliged by contract or otherwise to perform. I have suggested a recovery from the pupil, the parents or guardians, but do not mean to pass an opinion upon this point.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONJURING—INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION HAS NO AUTHORITY TO PAY FOR SUCH SERVICES UNDER SECTION 1465-89 G. C.

One who claims to have cured by "conjuring" not entitled to compensation under section 1465-89 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Through Mr. Hamm, director of claims, you have submitted the following request for my opinion:

"We attach hereto copy of a communication addressed to the commission by our chief medical examiner. The same is self-explanatory.

I have been instructed by the commission to request from you an opinion as to whether the fee bill covering the services described in the communication next attached can legally be paid for by the commission from the state insurance fund. The alleged treatment for claimant's injury was given by J. C. C., * * *"

The statement of facts contained in the communication of your chief medical examiner (referred to in your request) is as follows:

"Attached you will find attending physician's report and fee bill in the case of G. N., employed by the G. G. Co., and injured on July 26, 1917.

The injured is 67 years of age. He was first attended by J. C. C., who signs himself as the attending physician on July 29, 1917. He has made a diagnosis of bone erysipelas. Treatment—'conjuring, no medicine given.' The conjurer further says he was working on a track; in taking out track jack it slipped and struck him on the left leg.

The first notice of injury in this case was received on September 18th, properly signed by the employer and the claimant. The attending physician's report blank was received September 24th. The fee bill also was received September 24th. In this fee bill he has charged for conjuring services on July 29th, 'also service about two times per week from July 29th to September 22d, inclusive,' charging a fee of $20.00. He reports the claimant ready for work September 24th."

The "attending physician's report and fee bill," referred to, were not submitted to me; but it is not necessary to consider them.

It appears from the above statement that we still have with us, in person, the conjurer. I had thought they had all vanished with the Indians.

A conjurer, as defined by Webster, is "One who practices magic arts; one who pretends to act by aid of supernatural power."

Among several definitions given by the same authority for the verb "conjure" the following is selected as most appropriate for the operation referred to in your request:

"To affect or effect by conjuration; to call forth or send away by magic arts; to excite, bring about, get or convey as if by magic or by aid of supernatural powers."

It appears from the statement that the work of this particular conjurer was very effective; to cure a case of "bone erysipelas" caused by being struck on the left leg by a track jack would seem to require expert treatment; and when the patient was a man sixty-seven years of age and the cure was effected in less than sixty days, by conjuring, it must be admitted that the services were valuable and one would expect a large fee to be charged. However, it appears that for this remarkable cure the only remuneration asked is twenty dollars, being for "service about two times per week from July 29th to September 22, inclusive;" a calculation shows that this is at the rate of $1.25 per visit —certainly not an exorbitant charge. Considering the results obtained the charge is most reasonable, and the conjurer is entitled to his money. But, unfortunately for him, there is no way in which your commission can pay him.

Section 1465-89 G. C. authorizes your board to pay certain amounts for "medical, nurse and hospital services;" it allows no payment to be made for "conjuring services;" in fact, makes no mention whatever of conjurers. As the conjurer in this case does not claim to be a physician, makes no charge for "medical services," and disclaims giving any medicine, there is nothing upon which to base an allowance to him.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL COURT (ALLIANCE)—JUDGE HAS POWER TO APPOINT BUT ONE BAILIFF—DUTIES OF SAID BAILIFF.

Under the provisions of the act creating a municipal court for the city of Alliance (107 O. L. 660-670), the judge of said court has the power and authority to appoint but one bailiff, whose duties are those usually performed by the sheriff of the court of common pleas and the constable of courts of justices of the peace. Any further duties necessary to be performed in said court must be performed by deputy bailiffs provided in section 29 of said act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1917.

HON. MILTON C. MOORE, Judge of the Municipal Court, Alliance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 4, 1917, in which you call my attention to an act found in 107 O. L. 660-670, which creates a municipal court for the city of Alliance. You ask me to place a construction upon sections 29 and 30 of said act, relative to bailiff, especially with a view to deciding whether the judge of said court may appoint more than one bailiff.

The first part of section 29 of said act reads as follows:

> "The bailiff shall be appointed by the judge of such court and hold office during the pleasure of the court, and may be removed at any time by the judge of the municipal court. * * *"

It is evident from this language that the legislature had in mind that the judge of the court should appoint but one bailiff; that the term "bailiff" has some fixed, definite and specific meaning, and that the person occupying said position has some definite and fixed duties to perform. In so far as this section is concerned, there are no duties given to the bailiff to perform, no salary fixed and no qualifications for office prescribed.

However, section 30 of said act reads as follows:

> "One bailiff shall be designated as hereinafter provided for in this act. He shall perform for the municipal court, services similar to those usually performed by the sheriff for courts of common pleas and by the constable of courts of justices of the peace. Such bailiff shall receive such compensation not less than six hundred dollars per annum payable out of the treasury of the city of Alliance in monthly installments as the council may prescribe. Before entering upon his duties, said bailiff shall make and file in the office of the clerk of the city of Alliance, a bond in the amount of not less than two thousand dollars. The terms and sufficiency of said bond shall be subject to the approval of the judge of the court. The said bond shall be given for the benefit of the city of Alliance and of any person who shall suffer loss by reason of the default of any of the conditions of said bond."

This language might be held to indicate that the legislature intended that there should be more than one bailiff, inasmuch as provision is made that "one bailiff shall be designated as hereinafter provided for in this act." But inasmuch as section 29 prescribes no duties for the bailiff and section 30 does prescribe his duties, fix his salary and prescribe his qualifications, I do not think this construction can be given to said language.

In connection with section 30 of said act, it will be well for us to note the latter part of section 29, which reads as follows:

> "Every police officer of the city of Alliance shall be ex-officio a deputy bailiff of the municipal court and the chief of police shall assign one or more such police officers from time to time to perform such duties in respect to cases within the jurisdiction within said court as may be required of them by said court or the clerk thereof."

Under this provision deputy bailiffs are provided for, in that every police officer of the city of Alliance is ex-officio a deputy bailiff, and these police officers are to perform such duties as may be assigned to them as deputy bailiff.

It is clear that the word "bailiff," appearing in section 30 of the act, has no reference to a deputy bailiff, else the title deputy bailiff would have been used. Inasmuch as section 29 provides for a bailiff, but assigns him no duties, fixes no salary and prescribes no qualifications, and section 30 makes provision for a bailiff, assigns his duties, fixes his bond and prescribes his qualifications, it is my opinion that the legislature intended there should be but one bailiff and that his duties should be such as those set out in section 30, and his salary and qualifications be as therein described, and that any other necessary services in connection with said court should be performed by the deputy bailiffs, who shall perform such duties as may be required of them by the court or by the clerk thereof.

The term "bailiff" has no definite, distinct and specific meaning. A bailiff may be merely a court attendant, which is ordinarily the case at the present time. But this term is used in connection with the duties of the sheriff and the deputies in his office are frequently denominated deputy bailiffs or bailiffs. It is my view that it was this latter meaning the legislature had in mind when enacting sections 29 and 30 in the act above referred to. Section 30 clearly indicates this.

There is but one other provision in this act which throws any light upon what the legislature had in mind when using the term "bailiff," and it is found in section 9, wherein it is provided that when the appraised value of property sought to be recovered or sold exceeds one thousand dollars, the case shall be certified to the court of common pleas of Stark county by the municipal court, and "the bailiff (of the municipal court) shall turn over the property in his possession to the sheriff of Stark county, to be by him held as in like cases originating in the court of common pleas."

It is clear that the duties of the bailiff were to be more than those of a mere court attendant. The legislature intended them to be such duties as are ordinarily performed by a sheriff.

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the judge of the municipal court of Alliance has the power and authority to appoint but one bailiff, and that the duties of the bailiff so appointed are those set out in section 30 of the act, and his salary and qualifications such as those therein specified, and that whatever additional help the court may need will have to be furnished by the deputy bailiffs provided in section 29.

I am aware that these two sections are so drawn that it is difficult to arrive at an understanding as to what the legislature had in mind, but it is my view that the above is the correct construction to be placed thereon.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CHIEF INSPECTOR OF MINES—NO RIGHT TO FURNISH COPIES OF MAPS AND PLANS OF MINES, EXCEPT UPON REQUEST OF OWNER, ETC.

Under the terms of section 904 General Code, the chief inspector of mines has no right to furnish copies or to permit any other person to make copies of the maps and plans of mines in his possession, except by request of the owner, lessee or agent of the mine to which such maps, plans, records and papers pertain.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under recent date you asked an opinion of this department as to the interpretation of section 904 of the General Code of Ohio.

The question submitted is as to the authority of the chief inspector of mines to furnish copies of maps and plans of mines in his possession, or to permit persons to make tracing or copies thereof as authorized by said section 904 General Code. This section reads as follows:

> "The chief inspector of mines shall have an office at the seat of government, in which he shall keep the maps and plans of all mines in the state, and all records, correspondence, papers, apparatus, and other property belonging to the state, pertaining to his office, in accessible and convenient form for reference by persons entitled to examine them, all of which he shall deliver to his successor in office. The persons entitled to examine maps, plans, records and papers of a mine, shall be the owner, lessee or agent of such mine; the persons financially interested in such mine; the owner or owners of land adjoining such mine; the owner, or owners, of land adjacent to such mine; the owner, lessee or agent of a mine adjacent to such mine; and the authorized representatives of the employes of such mine. The chief inspector of mines shall not permit such maps, plans, records and papers to be removed from his office, and shall not furnish copies thereof to any persons, except by request of the owner, lessee or agent of the mine to which such maps, plans, records and papers pertain. Each district inspector shall keep his office in such place in his district as is central and convenient."

Section 935 General Code specified what the maps and plans in question are to contain, and section 969 General Code authorizes certain persons therein named to make surveys of certain mines. In neither of these sections is there any provision for making or securing copies of such maps, plans or surveys from the chief inspector of mines, or from or through his office. It is not necessary, therefore, to quote from these sections.

Section 904 General Code contains a specific provision that the chief inspector of mines "shall not furnish copies thereof, to any persons, except by request of the owner, lessee or agent of the mine to which such maps, plans, records and papers pertain." There is a specific prohibition against the furnishing of copies of such maps and plans by the chief inspector of mines, and he can only furnish copies thereof upon the conditions therein provided, that is, upon request of the owner, lessee or agent of the mine.

In the case now in question it appears that a request was made to permit the making of tracings or copies of the maps desired. While the statutes do not specifically prohibit the right of any one to make tracings or copies of the maps, yet to permit the making or tracing of copies of the maps would be doing indirectly what the statute says cannot be done directly. It is a well established principle of law that what is prohibited directly cannot be done indirectly.

It is my opinion, therefore, that under the terms of Section 904 General Code the chief inspector of mines has no right to furnish copies or to permit any other person to make copies of the maps and plans of mines in his possession, except by request of the owner, lessee or agent of the mine to which such maps, plans, records and papers pertain.

Section 11552 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Either party, or his attorney, in writing, may demand of the adverse party an inspection and copy, or permission to take a copy, of a book, paper, or document in his possession, or under his control, containing evidence relating to the merits of the action or defense, specifying the book, paper, or document with sufficient particularity to enable the other party to distinguish it. If compliance with the demand within four days be refused, on motion and notice to the adverse party, the court or judge may order the adverse party to give the other, within the time specified, an inspection and copy, or permission to take a copy, of such book, paper or document. On failure to comply with such order, the court may exclude the paper or document if offered in evidence, or, if wanted as evidence by the party applying, may direct the jury to presume it to be such as such party, by affidavit, alleges it to be. This section shall not prevent a party from compelling another to produce any book, paper, or document when he is examined as a witness."

Whether or not the request of the owner of the mine can be enforced through the provisions of the above section is not passed upon.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ASSESSMENTS—FOR MUNICIPAL STREET IMPROVEMENTS—WHEN BONDS, ETC., ARE ISSUED IN ANTICIPATION OF COLLECTION—NOT PAID WHEN DUE—INTEREST—PENALTY—HOW COLLECTED—ASSESSMENTS AGAINST DELINQUENT LANDS—PENALTY—INTEREST—HOW COLLECTED—RIGHT OF COUNTY TREASURER TO ACCEPT GENERAL TAXES WITHOUT ASSESSMENTS.

1. When special assessments are made for municipal street improvements, etc., and bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness are issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, the several installments of such assessments, if not paid when due, bear interest until the payment thereof at the same rate as the bonds, and when such assessments are certified to the county auditor for collection by the county treasurer on the tax duplicate, such installments, if not paid when due, are subject to a penalty of ten per cent thereof.

2. The interest and penalty referred to cannot be charged or collected unless the installment is not paid when due. The date at which any given installment falls due is to be fixed by the council in the assessment ordinance. It is competent for council to fix the date of the next ensuing semi-annual collection of taxes as the date when the first installment of the assessment shall be payable; and if the clerk of council has not certified the assessment to the county auditor for collection by the county treasurer prior to that date, said installment is payable to the city treasurer. If not paid to him, the installment bears interest at the rate carried by the bonds; but there is no authority to charge a penalty of ten per cent until the assessment is certified to the county auditor. If such installment with the remainder of the assessment is subsequently certified to the county auditor before it is paid, it reaches that officer in a state of delinquency and it is his duty to charge the interest and penalty at the same time he places the installment on the duplicate (provided that thirty days intervene between the date of the publication of the assessment ordinance and the time of certifying it to the county auditor for collection).

3. Under section 9 of the act of March 21, 1917 (107 O. L. 735) delinquent assessments charged against delinquent lands are to be included in the amount of the delinquent land tax certificate. If the penalty has accrued and been charged on the delinquent assessment, such penalty also enters into the amount of the certificate. Interest at the rate of eight per cent is chargeable on the entire amount of the certificate, including such delinquent assessment and penalty therefor, and takes the place of interest at the rate carried by the bonds in case the assessment is one made by a municipal corporation and anticipated by the issuance of bonds, notes, etc.; under section 10 of said act, assessments subsequently accruing against delinquent lands and the penalties thereon bear interest from the date of delinquency at the rate of eight per cent in lieu of interest at the rate of five per cent on the principal sum of the assessment.

4. Land does not become delinquent under said act of 1917 for non-payment of assessments only, but the general taxes must be unpaid and the land returned as delinquent, as provided by law, before it can be placed upon the delinquent list.

5. The act of 1917 in no wise changes the law respecting the authority of the county treasurer to accept payment of general taxes without payment of assessments charged against the land; nor does it affect the necessity on the part of the owner of the land charged with an assessment of enjoining the treasurer from collecting such assessment.

6. If land becomes delinquent, then all duplicate charges against the land in the nature of assessments, whether for past years or not, must be included in the delinquent land tax certificate.

7. Delinquent taxes and assessments charged against forfeited lands may be collected by action under section 2667 et seq. of the General Code to foreclose the lien.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 17, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a letter from you with which you enclose communications directed to you by the city auditor of Lima and the city solicitor of Steubenville, respectively, making certain inquiries respecting the matter of interest and penalty on special assessments, and requesting my opinion on certain questions respecting same. The communication of the city auditor of Lima and the questions asked by you thereon are as follows:

> "The city auditor certifies special assessments to the county auditor for collection in April and September, each year.
> If the assessing ordinance was not passed by council in time to certify the first assessment to the county auditor, in April, so that the county treasurer could collect in June, it being necessary to hold before certifying until September, should interest be added to the first assessment for the period elapsing between April and September?
> It is my further understanding that under section 3817 of the General Code, if such assessment or any installment thereof is not paid when due, it shall bear interest until the payment thereof at the same rate as bonds issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, and the county auditor shall place upon the tax duplicate the penalty and interest. Please advise.
>
> Question 1. Can interest in this case be added to the first assessment for the period elapsing between April and September?
> Question 2. Can the county auditor place upon the tax duplicate penalty and interest? If so, what penalty and what interest?"

From the form of the auditor's inquiry I assume that the special assessments referred to in his letter and in the questions asked by you are assessments for municipal street and sewer improvements for which bonds or certificates of indebtedness have been issued. In this connection section 3892 G. C. provides as follows:

> "When any special assessment is made, has been confirmed by council, and bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness of the corporation are issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, the clerk of the council, on or before the second Monday in September, each year, shall certify such assessment to the county auditor, stating the amounts and the time of payment. The county auditor shall place the assessment upon the tax list in accordance therewith and the county treasurer shall collect it in the same manner as other taxes are collected, and when collected pay such assessment to the treasurer of the corporation, to be by him applied to the payment of such bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness and interest thereon, and for no other purpose. For the purpose of enforcing such collection, the county treasurer shall have the same power and authority as allowed by law for the collection of state and county taxes."

Section 3896 G. C. provides, among other things, that when bonds have been issued in anticipation of the collection of assessments, interest on such bonds shall be included in the cost of the improvement for which the assessment is made, and similar provision is made by section 3817 G. C., which provides further as follows:

"* * * If such assessment or any installment thereof is not paid when due, it shall bear interest until the payment thereof at the same rate as the bonds issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, and the county auditor shall annually place upon the tax duplicate the penalty and interest as therein provided."

Under the provisions of this section it is clear that no interest can be charged on any assessment or installment certified to the county auditor under section 3892 G. C. until after such installment becomes due; but that after such time interest is to be charged thereon at the rate carried by the bonds.

With reference to the matter of penalty on special assessments, I note that my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in an opinion addressed to you under date of July 21, 1915, held that no penalty can be added or collected for default in the payment of assessments certified under section 3892, but that where bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness have not been issued in anticipation of the collection of such assessments, the municipal officers have the option, in the event such assessments are unpaid and delinquent, of collecting the same by suit, together with interest and a penalty of five per cent added, as provided in section 3898 G. C., or of certifying the same to the county auditor for collection, as taxes under section 3905, in which event the assessment certified becomes subject to a ten per cent penalty to cover interest and the cost of collection.

In the case of State ex rel. v. Sanzenbacher, 13 C. C. (n. s.) 356, the circuit court of Lucas county, apparently going beyond the conclusion reached by Mr. Turner, held that there is no statutory provision for imposing a penalty on unpaid assessments against real property for public improvements and that mandamus will lie to compel a county treasurer to accept such assessments without the penalty added.

The opinion by Kinkade, J., reads in full as follows:

"This is an action in mandamus brought in this court to require the county treasurer to accept the assessments that are due without collecting the penalty on the assessment. There is no occasion to review all the statutes that were mentioned by counsel here in argument. We have gone over the situation very thoroughly and we are satisfied there is no authority in the statutes of Ohio for affixing the fifteen per cent on the assessments the same as it is fixed upon taxes. The statute, General Code 2608 (Revised Statutes 1053), provides that such penalty must be placed upon delinquent taxes; must be audited, I should say, on delinquent taxes. We find no statute so directing as to assessments, and for that reason we think the placing of it there is not warranted, and the relief prayed for here must be granted. We do not find any authority, I should have said, for the placing of any penalties on assessments such as are placed for taxes."

I find difficulty in bringing myself to the view expressed by either Mr. Turner or by the circuit court in the case above cited. Clearly the decision in the case of State ex rel. v. Sanzenbacher is stated too broadly if the same had reference to special assessments for municipal street or sewer improvements, for certainly as to some of such special assessments, as pointed out by Mr. Turner, a penalty of five per cent is imposed in actions by the municipality to recover such special assessments under section 3898 General Code, and a penalty of ten per cent is imposed where such unpaid assessments are certified to the county auditor by the clerk or other proper officer on order of the council under section 3905 G. C.

In point of fact an examination of the case of State ex rel. v. Sanzenbacher, supra, would show that the only question before the court was as to the right to charge on assessments the fifteen per cent penalty provided for in the case of delinquent taxes. The treasurer in that case had charged no other penalty and the question was as to whether or not he could refuse to accept payment of the assessments without the penalty which he had charged. The actual decision of the court was, of course, correct on this question.

Mr. Turner, in the opinion above referred to, held in effect that neither the penalty authorized by section 3898 nor that authorized by section 3905, applied to special assessments certified to the county auditor under section 3892 General Code. It is clear that the penalty provided for in section 3898 General Code has no application to assessments certified under section 3892, for no power is conferred upon a municipality to bring suit to recover such assessment. I am not persuaded, however, that the penalty provided for in section 3905 General Code does not apply to such assessments.

Said section 3905 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The council may order the clerk or other proper officer of the corporation to certify any unpaid assessment or tax to the auditor of the county in which the corporation is situated, and the amount of such assessment or tax so certified, shall be placed upon the tax-list by the county auditor, and shall, with ten per cent penalty to cover interest and cost of collection, be collected with and in the same manner as state and county taxes, and credited to the corporation. Such ten per cent penalty shall in no case be added unless at least thirty days intervene between the date of the publication of the ordinance making the levy and the time of certifying it to the county auditor for collection."

The provisions of section 3905 G. C., prior to the enactment of the municipal code of 1902, and thereafter until the adoption of the General Code of 1910, comprised section 2295 of the Revised Statutes. Section 3892 General Code was originally enacted as section 94 of the Municipal Code of 1902, and this section, among other things, provided that all assessments provided for in the act of which said section 94 is a part should be subject to the provisions of section 2295 R. S. (3905 G. C.), as far as the same might be applicable, and that such section should remain in full force and effect.

The statutes in their present form are, to be sure, far from clear. Section 3905 was a part of a scheme of things to which present section 3892 was entirely foreign. Moreover, it speaks of the ten per cent penalty as being "to cover interest and cost of collection," whereas, as we have seen, interest is specifically provided for by section 3817 of the General Code. However, section 3817 itself directs that a penalty be charged, and as there is no authority for charging any penalty other than the ten per cent penalty referred to in section 3905, and as section 3905 was expressly continued in force by the provisions of section 94 of the municipal code of 1902, I incline to the view that as a general proposition the ten per cent penalty provided in section 3905, together with interest at the rate carried by the bonds, is properly chargeable upon due and unpaid installments of assessments certified to the county auditor under section 3892 of the General Code.

But while these propositions are generally true, it does not directly follow that they furnish answers to your questions. In truth, the facts stated by the city auditor are far from complete. The auditor does not show, for example, when the first installment of the assessment was due. This, as I have pointed out, is a very material consideration. If the first installment was not due until the December or June following the certification to the county auditor, then manifestly neither interest nor penalty could be charged or collected on account of said first installment. If, however, council by accident or design made the first installment payable in June, as seems fairly inferable from the auditor's letter, then an entirely different question is presented. Assuming the authority of the council to make the first installment payable before it would be possible to certify it to the county auditor for collection, it would follow, of course, that so much of said first installment as would remain unpaid at date of certification would be certified in a state of delinquency so that the auditor should place the interest and penalty on the duplicate along with the original charge. The ultimate question, therefore, is as to whether or not council may lawfully provide for the collection of an assessment in installments and fix the period of the first payment at a date too early for collection through the county treasurer's office. This question involves a consideration of section 3892, already quoted, in connection with sections 3893 and 3897 of the General Code.

Section 3893 provides as follows:

> "In all other cases, such assessment shall be paid to and collected by the treasurer of the municipality, and in any event the clerk of the council, when the receipt is presented to him by the owner, showing the payment of an assessment on his property, shall enter such receipt on the margin of the record of the assessment."

Section 3897 provides in part as follows:

> "Special assessments shall be payable by the owners of the property assessed personally, by the time stipulated in the ordinance providing therefor, and shall be a lien from the date of the assessment upon the respective lots or parcels of land assessed. * * * ."

I am able to apprehend no sufficient reason for holding that these sections can not be applied to assessments when bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness have been issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, but the date of certification has not yet arrived. The phrase "in all other cases" in section 3893 should not in my opinion receive such an interpretation as to mean cases other than those in which bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness have been issued in anticipation of assessments; rather it means in my opinion cases other than those in which, under the preceding section, the unpaid assessments have been certified for collection to the county auditor. An assessment is, under section 3897, a lien from the date thereof. It would be most unjust to create such a lien and prevent its discharge by the owner of the property at any time after it is created. The statutes should not receive such an interpretation but in my judgment should be so construed as to permit the payment of the assessment at any time after it is levied. This payment is to be made to the treasurer of the muncipality under section 3893, and if it is possible for the owner of the property to discharge his personal obligation and the lien against his property by paying the assessment before certification, I know of no reason why the council may not fix the date of the payment of the first installment at such time that collection must take place through the office of the treasurer of the municipality. Therefore, without the necessity of holding that section 3897 applies to assessments when bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness have been issued, I arrive at the conclusion that council has the power to fix the date for the payment of the first installment of an assessment so early as to preclude its collection through the county treasurer's office. In my opinion, however, section 3897 is of general application and applies to all assessments. Like section 3905, previously referred to, this section as section 2285 R. S. was specifically retained in full force and effect by section 94 of the Municipal Code and was a part of the very same context in which present section 3892 first made its appearance.

In other words, section 3892 is not a new and distinct method of collecting assessments when bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness have been issued in anticipation thereof, to the exclusion of all other provisions of law; rather it affords new machinery, exclusive when it begins to operate but not before, and to be fitted into the existing statutes where it is not inconsistent with them.

I therefore conclude that it is lawful for a municipal corporation to fix the due date of the first installment of an assessment too early for its collection through the county treasurer's office; that when the date is so fixed the installment becomes payable at the city treasurer's office on that date and if not then paid becomes delinquent. True, after the date of delinquency and before certification there is no authority to collect any penalty, for under section 3905 and section 3817 as well a penalty is only collectible when it is charged on the duplicate. The interest, however, provided by section 3817 would be collectible at the city treasurer's office until the certification to the county auditor. At certification, however, the installment would be delinquent and it would be the duty of the county auditor immediately to charge a ten per cent. penalty and interest at the rate carried by the bonds on the duplicate along with the principal sum of the installment then delinquent.

In passing permit me to remark that the word "therein" as used in section 3817, and which as it there appears might support the view that the penalty referred to in that section is to be provided for in the assessment ordinance, is evidently a clerical error. In original section 51 of the Municipal Code the phrase was "the penalty and interest herein provided for." The mistake took place when the section was amended in 97 O. L., 121. The mistake is, however, in my judgment a palpable one and reading the word as "herein" instead of "therein" makes clearer the correctness of the conclusions which I have reached.

In your first question you inquire whether interest can be added for the period elapsing between April and September. This question may be answered broadly in the negative. Interest can not be added for the period from April to September under any circumstances because there is nothing to indicate that the assessment would draw interest commencing at any time in April. If, however, the first installment was payable in June at the city treasurer's office and was not then paid, interest from the date of payment to September and thereafter until paid should be added to such installment when it is placed on the duplicate by the county auditor. If, however, the installment was not due and unpaid when certified to the county auditor, then he would have no authority to add interest to it until it should become due and remain unpaid.

Answering your second question, I beg to advise that the county auditor would be without authority to place any penalty on the duplicate unless the instalment when certified to him were past due and unpaid. As previously pointed out, if such were the case however, he should add a penalty of ten per cent together with interest at the rate carried by the bonds.

The letter of the solicitor of Steubenville is quoted by you as follows:

> "I am taking the privilege of writing you, asking that you secure for me an opinion of the attorney-general upon two questions: First, in this city we have done considerable improving in the way of paving, sewering and putting down sidewalks; the assessments for the paving of said improvements by the property owners are all certified to the county auditor for collection. It has been and it is the custom with property owners to pay their regular taxes and to permit the assessments to go over, and pay them whenever they are ready, the result is that there is always from $25,000.00 to $35,000.00 of due and unpaid assessments which are delinquent. The certificates of indebtedness, or bonds, and interest naturally must be paid when due, by the city, and the result is that the city is losing 5 or 6 per cent interest on the amount of their delinquent assessments.

I have insisted that the county auditor place the penalty and interest against these delinquent assessments, which he has refused to do, claiming that the law and decisions of the court do not permit him to do this.

The loss to the city of Steubenville each year in interest charge amounts to $1,500.00 to $1,800.00."

In connection with this letter you submit the following questions:

"Question 3. In the above case, can the county auditor place the penalty and interest against these delinquent assessments, and if so, what interest and what penalty?

Question 4. Under section 10 of the act of March 21, 1917 (107 O. L. 735), in making up certification of delinquents, may the county auditor place the same penalty and interest on the assessments as he does on the unpaid general taxes?

Question 5. In the event that the general taxes are paid, and an assessment only is delinquent, does the county auditor under this act make certification of the property against which the assessment is delinquent in the same manner as he would where both taxes and assessments were delinquent?

Question 6. Under the provisions of this law, is it not now incumbent upon an individual who wishes to refuse to pay a special assessment, to enjoin the treasurer from collecting same?

Question 7. In every county of the state of Ohio the tax duplicates carry delinquent special assessments of former years. True, some of these are involved in injunction proceedings and other litigation concerning their payment, but where such assessments of former years are not in litigation, will it be the duty of the county auditor to merge them into the certified delinquencies under this act?

Question 8. This act does not amend any of the sections in the chapter of the General Code regarding forfeited lands, although under the operation of this act there will be no forfeitures to the state in the future. Almost every county of the state has forfeited lands on their duplicates in the name of the state, which, under the provisions of law, must be advertised for sale every two years, and experience has proven that very few sales are made from these offerings. This department has been asked how to dispose of the forfeitures now on the tax duplicates. It is, undoubtedly, a waste of public moneys to pay for the publication of the forfeited lists, and we are of the opinion that the best procedure to attempt to clear up these old lists is for the county treasurer to proceed under the provisions of section 2667, et seq., General Code, and subject them to foreclosure proceedings. Are we right in this view?"

Your third question is fully answered by the answers which I have given to your first and second questions.

Coming now to your fourth question: I note the following provisions of the act referred to by you, being parts of sections 9 and 10 thereof, therein designated as sections 5712 and 5713 of the General Code respectively:

"Section 5712. Section 9. The county treasurer * * * and the county auditor * * * shall * * * make * * * a certificate to be known as a delinquent land tax certificate, for each tract of land, * * * on which the taxes, assessments and penalty have not been paid, describing each tract of land * * * and the amount of taxes, assessments and penalty thereon due and unpaid, and stating therein that the same has been certified to the auditor of state as delinquent, * * * Interest at the rate of eight percent. per annum shall be charged on the duplicate against the delinquent lands, * * * certified by the county auditor on such certificate.

Section 5713. Section 10. The state shall have a first and best lien on the premises described in said certification, for the amount of taxes, assessments and penalty, together with interest thereon at the rate of eight per cent. per annum, from the date of delinquency to the date or (of) redemption thereof, and the additional charge of twenty-five cents for the making of said certification, and sixty cents for advertising. * * *"

I do not know that I correctly understand your fourth question. If you mean to inquire thereby whether, for example, the same penalty of fifteen per cent. chargeable under sections 5678 and 5679 of the General Code can now be computed upon and added to delinquent assessments by reason of anything found in the above quoted sections, or elsewhere in the act referred to, my answer is in the negative. The only charges authorized by the act are the charges of eight per cent. interest and certain fees. Authority to charge the penalties referred to in the act must be found elsewhere in the statutes as in the sections cited. Said sections 5678 and 5679, which I need not quote, authorize the imposition of a penalty of fifteen per cent. upon delinquent taxes, but not upon delinquent assessments. (State ex rel. v. Sanzenbacher, supra.) It is true that section 2 of the act found in 107 O. L. 735, therein designated as section 5705 of the General Code, provides that "Delinquent lands as defined in this act shall mean all lands upon which the taxes, assessments and penalties have not been paid for two consecutive semi-annual tax paying periods."

The exact effect of this section will be considered in answering some of your other questions. At the present time, however, it is sufficient to state that while it defines "delinquent lands" it does not purport to define "delinquent taxes" and therefore does not have the effect of making "delinquent assessments" "delinquent taxes" either for its own purpose or for the purpose of any other section of the General Code and thus amending such other sections by implication. The meaning of the phrase "delinquent taxes" is just the same now as it always has been.

So far as the penalty is concerned, then, I beg to advise that authority elsewhere in the General Code than in the act of 1917 must be found for the imposition thereof on delinquent assessments. Such authority exists as to assessments which have been anticipated by the issuance of bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness, as I have pointed out in dealing with the questions raised by the auditor of Lima. Whether or not like authority exists in the case of other assessments is a point not necessary to be considered in answering your fourth question.

Your question, however, relates also to interest. As pointed out the act of 1917 authorizes the charging of eight per cent. interest while the sections considered in answering the questions of the auditor of Lima authorize and require that due and unpaid installments of assessments which have been anticipated by the issuance of bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness shall bear interest at the same rate carried by the bonds, in addition to the penalty of ten per cent. An inspection of the whole act of 1917 shows that there are some circumstances in which delinquent assessments are to be treated as a part of the delinquencies for the collection of which its procedure is available. The second section of the act has already been quoted and the ninth and tenth sections, which have also been quoted, repeat the frequently reiterated phrase "taxes, assessments and penalties" which is found in almost every section of the act. A complete answer to your present question would require me first to determine under what circumstances the delinquency of assessments may be made the predicate of the delinquency of the lands. Inasmuch, however, as this is the identical question which you next submit, I shall postpone discussion of it until dealing with that inquiry. It is at least clear that when the status of delinquency has been acquired by the land itself and it has been certified as such under section 9 of the act of 1917, section 5712 G. C., the amount of delinquent assessments, if any, enters into the amount of the delinquency of the land. Thus the question is raised as to whether when the land against which the assessment has been levied has become delinquent and has been certified as such, the amount on which the eight per cent. interest referred to in section 5712 and that referred to in section 5713 of the General Code, being sections 9 and 10 of the act of 1917 respectively, is to be computed is to include the amount of any delinquent assessment that may be charged against the land.

Of course in the case of a great many assessments an affirmative answer to this question would be very easily reached. Assessments for state and county road improvements, for example, are not required by any law other than the act of 1917 to bear interest after delinquency; therefore no conflict arises. But in the case of municipal assessments in anticipation of which bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness have been issued, we have the distinct requirement of the statutes considered in answering the question of the auditor of Lima to the effect that such assessments when delinquent shall bear interest at the rate carried by the bonds, which would in every case be less than eight per cent; while the act of 1917, if interpreted so as to impose the interest of which it speaks upon delinquent assessments as well as upon delinquent taxes, would seem to conflict with such other requirement in the instance in which it would have operation.

In reality there are four possible solutions of the question now under consideration. They are:

> "(1) That when delinquent assessments form a part of the amount for which lands are certified as delinquent, or when assessments become delinquent against land which has been certified as delinquent, the eight per cent interest referred to in sections 9 and 10 of the act of 1917 respectively is chargeable upon the whole amount of the delinquencies to the exclusion of any other interest, but not to the exclusion of any penalties which might thereafter accrue.
> (2) When such circumstances exist the eight per cent interest is chargeable in lieu of any other interest that delinquent assessments might carry and also in lieu of penalties which might otherwise be charged against delinquent assessments.
> (3) Under such circumstances the eight per cent interest is chargeable on the total amount of delinquent charges including assessments in addition to such penalty and interest as is authorized to be charged under other sections.
> (4) The eight per cent provided for in sections 9 and 10 of the act of 1917 is not to be computed at all on so much of the delinquency as represents unpaid assessments for which other penalties and interest are provided by law, as municipal assessments which have been anticipated by the issuance of bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness."

I must admit that this question, together with some of the others which you ask, has greatly puzzled me. So far as the present question is concerned the leading characteristics of the act seems to be expressed by the statement that its draftsman has taken the word "assessments" and inserted it in each of the sections along with the words "taxes and penalties" in utter disregard of the other statutes of the state respecting the collection of assessments. But much as we may criticise such legislation as this, we must give it a meaning if possible. The difficulty, however, is to ascertain what that meaning is as we are without any very definite clues in the act itself.

I think it is possible to eliminate some of the alternative meanings which I have suggested. For example, the third of them, which is to the effect that delinquent assessments as a part of the total amount of delinquent charges against delinquent land would bear both the eight per cent. and the five per cent. interest at the same time, may be rejected. While such a solution would not be exactly impossible, yet it is very improbable that the legislature intended that two kinds of interest should run concurrently against the same charge or that interest at eight per cent should be charged upon interest at five per cent for example. I therefore put this interpretation out of view.

Nor on careful consideration do I think that the fourth interpretation can stand. At first blush it would seem necessary to avoid conflict between the statute requiring interest at the rate carried by the bonds and the statute requiring eight per cent interest. As a matter of fact, however, the eight per cent statute provides for a special case, that is, interest chargeable when the lands themselves have become delinquent, while the other sections considered in answering the questions of the auditor of Lima provide for the charging of interest when the assessments are delinquent. As pointed out there is a wide distinction between delinquent assessments or taxes and delinquent lands. This distinction will be further elaborated upon in this opinion. I think therefore that when the lands have become delinquent and assessments have accrued, or thereafter accrue, against such lands, the interest chargeable against such assessments as a part of the principal sum of the delinquency is, by virtue of sections 9 and 10 of the act of 1917, eight per cent. instead of the rate carried by the bonds.

These eliminations narrow the choice down to the first two of the suggested solutions.

Though the question is not free from doubt as I have hinted, I incline to accept the first suggested interpretation. That is, to say, the eight per cent interest is in my opinion chargeable upon the whole amount of the delinquencies to the exclusion of any other interest such as that provided for by the section of the municipal code which has been under consideration; but it is not in lieu of the ten per cent. penalty provided for by said statute. There is nothing in the act of 1917 to indicate that the eight per cent interest is to be regarded as a substitute for the ten per cent penalty. In fact, if it were so regarded then the assessments accruing against land that has acquired the status of delinquency and remaining unpaid after their accrual, would involve a lighter exaction from the redeeming taxpayer than would have been required if the land had not been delinquent at all. This fact, together with the lack of any express provision in the statute, leads me to the conclusion which I have reached.

Fully answering your fourth question, then, I am of the opinion that in making up certification of delinquencies under section 9, the county auditor should charge no new or different penalties on account of the delinquent assessments than he is authorized to charge by other statutes such as those which have been discussed; and in no event may he charge the fifteen per cent penalty which applies to general taxes which are delinquent. The assessments, as well as the taxes and penalties, however, bear interest at the rate of eight per cent on the amount certified and assessments accruing subsequently and while the land is in a state of delinquency are, if unpaid when due, to bear interest at the rate of eight per cent. instead of the rate borne by the bonds and to have charged against them the ten per cent. penalty hereinbefore discussed or any other penalty that may be chargeable against delinquent assessments, as such, which said penalty also bears eight per cent. interest; but no penalty of fifteen per cent is to be charged.

Your fifth question presents the most difficult problem of all. As I have intimated its solution is really involved in your fourth question, but I have purposely eliminated any discussion of this point except in connection with the query now under consideration.

In my opinion there is not enough in the way of express provision in the act of 1917 to enable me to hold that land can acquire the status of delinquency through non-payment of assessments only. I answer your question therefore, generally, in the negative.

In arriving at this result I have not been unmindful of the provisions of section 2 of the law of 1917, which has been quoted. For convenience I repeat the quotation of that section here:

> "Section 2 (Sec. 5705 G. C.) Delinquent lands as defined in this act shall mean all lands upon which the taxes, assessments and penalties have not been paid for two consecutive semi-annual tax paying periods."

One of the possible meanings of this section is that land shall become delinquent unless the "taxes, assessments and penalties" have been paid; that is to say, it will take the payment of all three kinds of charges in order to keep it from assuming or becoming susceptible of assuming the status of delinquency. However, the whole act must be fitted into the statutory scheme for the collection of taxes as it exists in the sections which have not been amended or repealed. The act cannot stand alone but rests upon a foundation composed of the other sections referred to. This is apparent from several of the sections of the act itself. In the first place section 3 sets forth the substance of the delinquent tax certificate which is to be published in a newspaper, as provided in section 1 of the act. Said notice in part is as follows:

> "The lands, lots and parts of lots returned delinquent by the treasurer of ---------- county, with the taxes and penalties charged thereon agreeable to law, are contained and described in the following list, viz.: * * * ."

Section 5, designated as section 5708, provides as follows:

> "Before advertising such list of delinquent lands and lots, the county auditor shall compare it with the duplicate in the office of the county treasurer, and strike therefrom all lands or town lots upon which the taxes, assessments and penalty of the preceeding year, with the taxes and assessments of the current year, have been paid, and advertise the remainder as provided in this chapter."

Section 6, designated as section 5709, provides as follows:

> "The county auditor, on or before the day of certification to the auditor of state, mentioned in such notice, shall insert, at the foot of the record, on the delinquent list, a copy of the notice, and certify on the record immediately following such notice, the name of the paper, and the length of time such list and notice were published therein."

Section 7, designated as section 5710, provides as follows:

"If a county auditor, by inadvertence or mistake, omits to publish the delinquent list of the county, as required by law, he shall charge the lands and town lots with the taxes, assessments and penalty, if such taxes, assessments and penalty with which the lands and town lots therein stand charged have not been paid before the tenth day of August of the next succeeding year. He shall also charge them with the taxes and assessments of the current year, and record, certify and publish them as part of the delinquent list."

Section 23, designated as section 5726, provides as follows:

"When any tract of land, city or town lot is returned delinquent for non-payment of taxes or assessments, and placed on the duplicate of the succeeding year, the owner or person liable to pay taxes therefor produces the receipt of the treasurer for such taxes and assessments of the preceding year, the county auditor or treasurer shall not make the deduction from the duplicate, of such taxes, assessments, penalty and interest but it shall be chargeable to the treasurer as if such receipt had not been produced. The treasurer shall receive such receipt in discharge of the tax or assessment for the year it is returned delinquent, with the penalty and interest and the auditor of the county shall credit such treasurer with the amount and shall forthwith collect such taxes."

With the exception of one perhaps unintentional slip in the form of delinquent tax notices the draftsman of the above section evidently thought that land could be "returned delinquent for non-payment of taxes or assessments," as he has expressed it in section 23. The whole action of the auditor under the first seven sections of the law is predicated upon an actual list of delinquent lands and lots which has been returned by the treasurer. This, moreover, is not altered by the fact that in the first line of section 1 the word "the" has been changed to "a" so that instead of reading "Each county auditor shall cause the list of lands to be published" it now reads "Each county auditor shall cause a list of delinquent lands in his county to be published." That no change is effected is apparent when reference is had to the frequent mention of the list returned by the treasurer. Indeed, section 6 refers expressly to "the delinquent list."

Again, the sections quoted show that it was the supposition of the legislature in passing this act that when an assessment, as well as a tax, was not paid before the twentieth of December following the last delinquency, the assessment of the following year is immediately payable. This is true of general taxes by virtue of sections 5678 and 5679 of the General Code.

But while these assumptions are made in the statute of 1917, there is not a syllable outside of remote inferences to be drawn from section 2 which authorized the return of land as delinquent on account of non-payment of assessments; and certainly nothing which authorizes delinquent assessments to become payable prior to the time fixed in the ordinance levying them, as is the case with general taxes.

The mere fact that the legislature enacts one law upon the palpable supposition that another law with which it must articulate contains a given provision, is not enough to read into that other law a provision which is not there.

When we turn to the sections of the General Code dealing with the return of delinquent lands and the charging of delinquent taxes, we find that these apparent suppositions are both erroneous. The delinquent list is provided for by sections 2601 and 2608 of the General Code. These sections are as follows:

"Section 2601. During the month of August of each year, the auditor shall make and record, in a book provided for that purpose, a list of all lands and town lots returned by the treasurer delinquent at the preceding settlement, describing them as described on the tax duplicate, charging thereon the unpaid taxes for the year next preceding, together with the penalty thereon, and also the taxes of the current year. He shall certify the correctness of such list and the date at which it was recorded, and sign it officially."

"Section 2608. The delinquent list shall not be returned to the office of the auditor of state but shall be recorded by the county auditor immediately after his semi-annual settlement with the county treasurer, an abstract of which, in such forms as the auditor of state prescribes, shall be sent to his office in August, with the settlement sheet of the county treasurer. No taxes returned delinquent shall be paid into the state treasury, except by the county treasurers, and in making out the duplicate of each year, all tracts of land and lots returned delinquent or forfeited to the state, shall be again entered on the duplicate, and the taxes on such tract or lot, including the taxes of the current year, shall be charged thereon, with fifteen per cent penalty on the amount charged on the duplicate of the preceding year."

These sections must be construed together with sections 5678 and 5679 of the General Code. (White v. Woodward, 44 O. S. 347.) Those sections provide as follows:

"Section 5678. If one-half the taxes charged against an entry of real estate is not paid on or before the twentieth day of December, in that year, or collected by distress or otherwise prior to the February settlement, a penalty of fifteen per cent thereon shall be added to such half of said taxes on the duplicate. If such taxes and penalty, including the remaining half thereof, are not paid on or before the twentieth of June next thereafter, or collected by distress or otherwise prior to the next August settlement, a like penalty shall be charged on the last half of such taxes. The total of such amounts shall constitute the delinquent taxes on such real estate to be collected in the manner prescribed by law.

Section 5679. If the total amount of delinquent taxes and penalty as provided in the next preceding section, together with one-half of the taxes charged against such real estate for the current year, is not paid on or before the twentieth day of December, of the same year, the delinquent taxes and penalty, and the whole of the taxes of the current year, shall be due, and be collected by the sale of the real estate, in the manner authorized by law. If the first half of the taxes charged upon any real estate is paid on or before the twentieth day of December, as provided by law, but the remaining half thereof is not paid on or before the twentieth day of June next thereafter, or collected by distress or otherwise, prior to the next August settlement, as provided by law, a like penalty shall be added to such unpaid taxes, and they shall be treated as delinquent taxes, and, with the taxes of the current year, collected by the sale of such real estate, as aforesaid."

The joint effect of all four of these sections is limited to taxes. Lands against which unpaid assessments alone are charged may not be included in the list of delinquent lands, nor is there any authority for imposing the fifteen per cent penalty. (State ex rel., v. Sanzenbacher, supra.)

In spite, therefore, of the language of section 2 of the Act of 1917, and having regard to the provisions of the other sections of that act, I am led to the conclusion that the act of 1917 does not in reality define delinquent lands at all, but that the definition of that term remains the same as it was before the amendments embodied in that act. That definition is briefly land which has been returned delinquent by the county treasurer and has found a place upon the delinquent land list.

What then is the meaning of section 2 of the act? Some meaning must be given to it and I am not disposed to ignore it entirely. In my opinion the effect of this section in addition to the frequent repetition of the phrase "taxes, assessments and penalties" and that of "taxes and assessments" as it is found throughout the other provisions of the act, is to make the machinery of the act available for the collection of unpaid assessments as well as for the collection of unpaid taxes. That is to say, while land can acquire the status of delinquency only through failure to pay the general taxes as formerly, yet when once it has acquired that status the amount of the delinquency will include unpaid assessments as well as unpaid taxes, and the whole machinery of the act may be employed to collect the assessments as well as the taxes. A similar provision, for example, is found in sections 2667 et seq., referred to in one of your questions. Here is a provision for the collection of delinquent charges by the county treasurer by action to foreclose the lien. By express provision the action which the county treasurer may bring under this section is for the collection of assessments as well as taxes. The only difference between section 2667 and the delinquent land act of 1917 in this respect is that the treasurer has the option of collecting assessments along with the general taxes under section 2667, whereas the inclusion of delinquent assessments in the amount to be collected under the act of 1917 is automatic.

In answer to your sixth question I may say that I know of no reason why it is any more incumbent upon an individual who wishes to refuse to pay a special assessment to enjoin the treasurer from collecting same under the provisions of the act of 1917 than it ever has been in the past. Assuming, but not deciding, that it is lawful for the treasurer to accept the general taxes without accepting an assessment charged against the same land, in the absence of an injunction against the latter. The law in this respect is not in any wise changed by the delinquent land act of 1917, for as I have pointed out lands can become delinquent under that act as formerly only through nonpayment of taxes and penalties.

Answering your seventh question I am of the opinion that where assessments of former years are unpaid and not in litigation it will be the duty of the county auditor to merge them into the certified delinquencies under the act of 1917. This is but an application of what I have said in dealing with your fifth question. Though the nonpayment of assessments alone does not make lands delinquent, yet if lands are properly returned delinquent for nonpayment of taxes and there are charged against such lands unpaid assessments, though constituting an accumulation of several years prior to the enactment of the act of 1917, it will be the duty of the county auditor in making up his list under section 9 of the act to include the amount of said unpaid assessments, together with all other duplicate charges against the land, in his certification thereof.

Your eighth question is answered by provision of section 2670 of the General Code, which expressly provides that:

> "When the lands or lots stand charged on the tax duplicate as forfeited to the state, it shall not be necessary to make the state a party, but it shall be deemed a party through and represented by the county treasurer."

This shows that the machinery of section 2667 et seq. is available for the collection of taxes and assessments due on forfeited lands. This is the only question of law involved in your eighth inquiry. I would not express any opinion as to the expediency of the procedure you suggest, although it seems clear to me that the remedy is section 2667 et seq. is the best one for the collection of the taxes upon forfeited lands. In this connection permit me to point out that by virtue of section 2673 of the General Code the action referred to in section 2667 of the General Code may be brought upon the direction of the auditor of state, even though the county treasurer refuses or neglects to bring it.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION—NOT AUTHORIZED TO FIX STANDARD OF SCHOOL ESTABLISHED BY OHIO UNIVERSITY —TEACHERS IN SUCH SCHOOL NOT REQUIRED TO HOLD TEACHERS' CERTIFICATES.

1. The Ohio University is not authorized in law to establish a school, although it may be designated a high school, and have its standard fixed by the superintendent of public instruction as a high school and receive a certificate from him as to the standard of such school.

2. This school so established by the Ohio University not being a part of the public school system of the state, the teachers therein would not be required to hold teachers' certificates before being qualified to teach.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 19, 1917.

HON. F. B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter to which you attached communication received by you from the Ohio University. Said communication of the university reads as follows:

> "A new secondary school having recently been founded at Ohio University, the question arises as to whether it may be classified and chartered by your office under the powers conferred by law to examine and classify the high schools of the state. To enable you to determine the legal status of this new school with a view to your passing upon an application for inspection of it, the following facts are set forth:
>
> The school is known as the John Hancock High School, and it is supported out of funds appropriated by the state legislature in the name of the Ohio University. The principal and teachers are appointed by the president of the university with the approval of the board of trustees. Students in the university who are preparing to teach make use of the classes of this high school, under proper regulations, as means of satisfying university requirements in observation of teaching and practice teaching. The school is open to pupils resident outside of the Athens city school district; and for the present a nominal tuition fee is charged.
> In view of these facts—
> 1. May the school be chartered by your office as a high school of first grade, if it is found on inspection to meet the standards upon which the classification of schools of this grade is determined?

2. Will the teachers of this school be required to be holders of teachers' high school certificates?"

In your letter you request that I answer the two questions propounded by the university. In passing upon same I will not have in mind the oft debated question as to whether or not the Ohio University is one of the educational wards of the state and therefore entitled to the financial support of the state. This question does not enter into the matter under consideration. So far as this opinion is concerned, it may be assumed that the Ohio University is a ward of the state and entitled to financial aid and support from the state.

What we have to decide is as to whether this university has such characteristics as would entitle it to establish a high school and then have said high school brought within the provisions of the law relating to high schools, in connection with the matters about which inquiry is made.

In order to reach a correct conclusion we will note the provisions of a number of sections of the General Code. We may thus be able to learn the spirit and general idea which seems to prevail in the provisions relative to high schools.

Section 7662 G. C. reads as follows:

"Section 7662. No school shall be considered a high school that has not furnished the information and received a certificate as provided above, nor be entitled to the privileges and exceptions provided by law for high schools."

Under this section no school shall be considered a high school unless it furnishes certain information and receives a certificate as provided for in the law.

In order to ascertain what information is referred to in section 7662 G. C., we will turn to section 7660 G. C., which reads as follows:

"Section 7660. The clerk of the board of education of each district in which a high school is established and maintained shall furnish to the superintendent of public instruction definite and accurate information concerning the length of time necessary for the completion of the high school curriculum or curriculums, the courses of instruction offered therein, and such other information as the superintendent of public instruction requires in relation to the high school work of the district, and in the form and manner he prescribes. Such information shall be filed when high schools are established or any changes made in curriculums."

It will be noted that the desired information is to be furnished by the clerk of the board of education of each district. In order to decide what certificate is referred to in section 7662 G. C., we will refer to section 7661 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

"Section 7661. Upon examination of the information thus filed, or after personal inspection of work done if he deems this advisable, or both, the superintendent of public instruction shall determine the grade of each such high school and, under the seal of his office, certify to the clerk of the board of education his finding as to the grade of the high school maintained by such board. * * *."

Under this section the certificate is given by the superintendent of public instruction to the clerk of the board of education.

We find in section 7663 G. C. the authority given for the establishment of high schools, which reads as follows:

> "Section 7663. A board of education may establish one or more high schools, whenever it deems the establishment of such school or schools proper or necessary for the convenience or progress of the pupils attending them, or for the conduct and welfare of the educational interests of the district."

Under said section the authority to establish high schools is given to the board of education.

All of these sections seem to indicate that the high school for which provision is made are a part of the public school system of the state, are located in the school districts of the state and established by the boards of education thereof.

The necessary requisites which will entitle a school to be called a high school are set forth in section 7752 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "Section 7752. No board of education shall be entitled to collect tuition under this chapter unless it is maintaining a regularly organized high school with a course of study extending over not less than two years and consisting mainly of branches higher than those in which the pupil is examined. The standing or grade of all public high schools in the state shall be determined by the superintendent of public instruction and his finding in reference thereto shall be final."

In this section boards of education are mentioned and high schools are designated as public high schools—that is, high schools connected with the public school system of the state.

When we turn to the provisions of the statutes relative to the inspection of high schools by the superintendent of public instruction, we find this general idea and theory running through them, viz., that the high schools provided for in the statutes are schools connected with the public school system. The sections covering inspection are sections 7753 to 7754 inc. G. C.

From all the above it is my opinion that high schools provided for by the laws of this state must be connected with the public school system of the state and be managed by the boards of education of the public schools, and that therefore the Ohio University would not be authorized in law to establish a high school and have it recognized by the officers of the state as such.

The communication from the Ohio University states that the school established by said university and called the John Hancock [High School is managed entirely by the trustees of the university. Then too, this high school is supported out of funds appropriated by the legislature of the state for the use and purpose of the Ohio University, which is contrary to the general idea under which the public schools of the state are maintained, viz., by taxation.

Again, this school seems to be established and maintained on the principle that those attending the school shall pay tuition, whether large or small in amount. This is not in harmony with the idea of the public school system of the state.

There is a provision relative to the Ohio State University which may throw some light upon this matter. In section 7950-1 G. C. provision is made that a high school may be established on the campus of said university. This section states that the Ohio State University and the board of education of the city school district in the city of Columbus, Ohio, may by agreement establish such a high school, and that the high school established shall be used as an observation and practice school by the college of education of the Ohio State University, upon the terms and conditions agreed upon by the board of trustees of said universiy and said board of education. This seems to a certain extent at least to indicate that the legislature felt it to be necessary to grant the power and authority to establish a high school to be used in connection with the Ohio State University. The legislature not only gives authority to establish it, but outlines the manner in which it may be established and the purposes which it may serve.

While this is not at all conclusive upon the proposition before us, yet it assists us in determining the legislative intent relative to high schools.

From all the above it is my opinion that the school established by the Ohio University, although denominated a high school, would not be such a school as could be chartered by the superintendent of public instruction as a high school of the first grade and be certified as such.

If this conclusion be correct, we can readily arrive at an answer to the second question submitted, which would be to the effect that the teachers of this school would not be required to be holders of teachers' high school certificates. The examinations provided for by statute and the certificates granted upon said examinations relate to to the public school system of the state, and if this high school is not a part of said system, the teachers thereof would not be required to hold high school certificates, but would be under the control, management and direction of the trustees of the university.

I might call attention to section 7829 G. C., relating to teachers' certificates which reads as follows:

> "Section 7829. Three kinds of teachers' certificates only shall be issued by county boards of school examiners, which shall be styled respectively 'teacher's elementary school certificate,' valid for all branches of study in schools below high school rank, 'teacher's high school certificate,' valid for all branches of study in recognized high schools and for superintendents and 'teacher's special certificate,' valid in schools of all grades, but only for the branch or branches of study named therein."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—NOT AUTHORIZED TO HIRE SHERIFF'S MACHINE FOR USE OF SHERIFF ON OFFICIAL BUSINESS.

County commissioners have no authority to hire the sheriff's machine for the use of the sheriff in the performance of his official duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 19, 1917.

HON. CHESTER PENDLETON, Prosecuting Attorney, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of November 16, 1917, wherein you request my opinion as follows:

> "Calling your attention to your opinion numbered 631 and dated September 19, 1917, to the effect that the county commissioners may enter into a contract for the hire of a machine owned by the county surveyor for the use of said surveyor and his assistants in the performance of their official duties, I wish to ask whether the same reasoning does not apply to the sheriff and whether the county commissioners may not enter into a contract for the hire of a machine owned by the sheriff for the use of the sheriff and his deputies in the performance of their official duties."

There is quite a distinction between the case presented by you and the one presented by Harry S. Core, to whom opinion No. 631 was rendered, arising from the fact that section 7200 G. C. gives the county commissioners authority to hire an automobile for the use of the county surveyor, whereas in the case presented by you there is no authority given the county commissioners under the statutes to hire an automobile for the use of the county sheriff and his deputies. In the former case the real question to be determined was whether or not the principle of public policy prohibited the commissioners from hiring the surveyor's machine for the use of said surveyor and his assistants in the performance of their official duties, whereas in this case it is unnecessary to decide that question, as the commissioners have no authority to hire a machine from any one for the use of the sheriff.

I might in this connection call your attention to section 2997 of the General Code, which reads in part as follows:

"In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff * * * and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office."

The question of whether or not this section of the General Code would include automobile hire was passed upon in the case of State ex rel. Sartain, as sheriff of Franklin county, Ohio, v. Sayre, as auditor, etc., 12 O. N. P. 61. The syllabus in said case reads as follows:

"It is within the discretion of county commissioners to make an allowance to the sheriff for automobile hire, incurred in and necessary to a proper administration of the duties of his office in the service of writs and processes or in pursuing or transporting persons who are wards of the state or are charged with crime."

This question was passed upon by my predecessor, in an opinion rendered July 20, 1915, found in the Reports of the Attorney-General for the year 1915, Vol. 2, page 1276, wherein he held as follows:

"While section 2997 contains the word 'maintaining' and does not contain the word 'operating,' it would undoubtedly follow that said section authorizes the allowance of all expenses incident to the use of the automobile in public business, and would include oil and gasoline, as well as necessary repairs to tires and parts.

"The county commissioners may, therefore, make an allowance to the sheriff for the expenses of maintaining and operating his automobile when used in the proper administration of the duties of his office. * * * Just what proportion of the expenses may be charged against public funds will depend upon the facts in each particular case and is more a matter of policy than of law."

I agree with the opinion above quoted and am of the opinion that section 2997 authorizes the commissioners to make an allowance to the sheriff of expenses incurred by said official for the use of his own machine in the discharge of his official duties.

If, however, said machine is not used exclusively by the sheriff for public business, it will be necessary for the commissioners to make some arrangement for the division of the expense of maintaining and operating said machine, but in no case can such arrangement include any item of compensation for the use of said machine.

Answering your question specifically, therefore, I advise you that the reasoning used in opinion 631 cannot be extended to apply to any county official except the county surveyor, and that the county commissioners have no authority to hire the sheriff's machine for the use of the sheriff in the performance of his official business, but that the commissioners, under authority of section 2997 may make allowances to the sheriff to reimburse him for the expense of using his own machine for public business.

I might in passing call your attention to section 2412-1 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., p. 585, which reads:

> "That, whenever the county commissioners are of the opinion that it is expedient to purchase one or more automobiles or other vehicles for the use of the county commissioners and county sheriff, in order to facilitate the transaction of public county business, they shall adopt a resolution to that effect, and shall file an application in the court of common pleas, setting forth the necessity for such purchase, together with a statement of the kind and number of vehicles required and the estimated cost of each such vehicle. Ten days' notice of the time of hearing such application shall be published in a newspaper of general circulation in the county. If upon such hearing of said application the court shall find that it is necessary and expedient to purchase one or more of such vehicles, it shall so order, and shall fix the number and kind of such vehicles, and the amount to be expended for each."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—BY WHOM SUCCESSOR TO MEMBER WHOSE TERM EXPIRES THE DAY PRECEDING THE THIRD SATURDAY IN JANUARY IS APPOINTED.

The member of the county board who is elected to succeed the member whose term expires the day preceding the third Saturday in January in each year, must be elected by the presidents of the boards of education, which presidents are themselves elected on the first Monday in January each year.

The appointing power cannot forestall the rights and prerogatives of their own successors by appointing successors to office expiring after their power to appoint has itself expired.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 19, 1917.

HON. C. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads as follows:

> "Under section 4729 of the General Code, as amended in Vol. 104 O. L. 136, should the member of the county board of education whose term begins the third Saturday in January, 1918, be elected by the present presidents of the rural boards, or should he be elected by the presidents of the boards as they will be constituted after the first Monday in January, 1918?

"Was the election of a member of the county board, term to begin in January, 1918, at a meeting of the presidents held in August, 1917, upon call of the county superintendent, legal? Or, should not the meeting for this purpose be called after the first Monday in January, and before the third Saturday in January, 1917?"

Section 4728 G. C. provides that each county school district shall be under the supervision and control of a county board of education which is composed of five members, each of whom shall be elected by the presidents of the various village and rural boards of education in such county school district.

Section 4728-1 G. C. provides that all school districts other than village and city school districts within a civil township shall be jointly entitled to one vote in the election of members of the county board of education; that is, that the presidents of the boards of education of all such districts in a civil township shall meet for the purpose of choosing one of their number to cast the vote for members of the county board of education and if no such meeting is held wherein the person is chosen to cast such vote, then the president of the board having the largest tax valuation shall represent all such districts of the civil township at the election of the county board member.

Section 4729 G. C. provides that the term of office of the members of the county board of education shall begin "on the third Saturday of January" and shall extend for a period of five years. Section 4730 G. C. provides that the call of the various presidents of the boards of education for the election of the county board member shall be issued by the county superintendent, that the meeting shall organize by electing a chairman and a clerk, and that the result of the election of such county board member shall be certified to the county auditor by the chairman and clerk of the meeting.

Section 4732 G. C. provides that:

"Each county board of education shall meet * * * on the third Saturday of March of each year * * * and shall organize by electing one of its members president and another vice-president, both of whom shall serve for one year," and that the county superintendent shall act as secretary of the board.

Section 4745 G. C. provides:

"The term of office of members of each board of education shall begin on the first Monday in January after their election and each such officer shall hold his office for four years * * * and until his successor is elected and qualified."

The above refers to the members of boards of education of the various school districts and does not refer to the members of the county board of education.

Section 4747 G. C. provides:

"The board of education of each city, village or rural school district shall organize on the first Monday in January after the election of members of such board. One member of the board shall be elected president, one as vice-president and a person who may or may not be a member of the board shall be elected clerk. The president and vice-president shall serve for a term of one year and the clerk for a term not to exceed two years. * * *"

This last quoted section provides for the organization of the various boards of education of school districts, except the board of education of the county school district.

Section 4838 G. C. provides:

> "All elections for members of boards of education shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in odd numbered years."

This section refers to members of boards of education of city, village and rural school districts, but does not include the members of the county board of education.

From the above, then, you will note that the term of office of the members of the boards of education, except the county board of education, shall begin on the first Monday in January after such members have been elected and that the election of such members is to be in odd numbered years and at the time of the holding of the general election, viz., the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November thereof. Such boards of education, except the county board of education, shall meet and organize on the day the terms of the newly elected members begin, that is, the first Monday in January every other year. In other words, the organization of the board of education occurs every year and a period of one year from and after the first Monday of January in each year. As also above noted, the presidents of the boards of education of the various districts of the county school district, that is, the boards which have a vote in the selection of a county board member, shall compose the electing body for the selection of the members of the county board. The term of office of the county board member shall begin on the third Saturday in January and shall extend for a period of five years. So that the end of the term of a member of the county board of education would be at the end of the day preceding the third Saturday in January, five years after the time at which such member began the term, and no vacancy would exist and no term would terminate until that date.

Your question resolves itself, then, into the following:

> Does the election of such new members fall to the presidents who are elected on the first Monday in January next preceding such third Saturday in January at which the county board members term begins, or can such county board members be elected by the presidents of the various boards prior to such first Monday in January?

It is a well established principle of law that:

> "The appointing power cannot forestall the rights and prerogatives of their own successors by appointing successors to office expiring after their power to appoint has itself expired."

In opinion No. 495 this department held that a county board of education had no authority to elect a county superintendent to succeed one whose term did not begin during the term of all the members of the board seeking to so elect such county superintendent. In that opinion was cited the case of State v. Sullivan, 81 O. S. 79-92, wherein the following language is used:

> "It admittedly is the well established general rule of law that an officer clothed with authority to appoint to a public office, cannot, in the absence of express statutory authority, make a valid appointment thereto for a term which is not to begin until after the expiration of the term of such appointing officer.

Mechem in his work on Public Offices and Officers, at section 133, cites the general rule as follows:

'The appointing power cannot forestall the rights and prerogatives of their own successors by appointing successors to office expiring after their power to appoint has itself expired.' The author then quotes with approval the language of Buchanan, J., in Ivy v. Lusk, 11 La. An., 486, where he says:

'That an appointment thus made by anticipation has no other basis than expediency and convenience, and can only derive its binding force and effect from the supposition that there will be no change of person, and consequently of will, on the part of the appointing power, between the date of the exercise of that power by anticipation, and that of the necessity for the exercise of such power by the vacancy of the office.'

Throop on his treatise on Public Officers, section 92, says:

'But it has been held that where an office is to be filled by appointment by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, the governor and senate cannot forestall their successors, by appointing a person to an office, which is then filled by another, whose term will not expire until after the expiration of the terms of the governor and senators. And that an outgoing board of free-holders of a county cannot lawfully appoint a person to an office which will not become vacant during their official terms.' The correctness and soundness of the rule and doctrine as above enumerated, so far as investigation has disclosed to us, is not opposed by any of the authorities, but is supported by many, among which are State ex rel. Bownes v. Mechan, 45 N. J. L. 189; The People, ex rel. Sweet, v. Ward, 107 Cal. 236; Ivy v. Lusk, 11 La. An., 486."

In that case it was urged that the board was a continuing body and that only one member was being changed and that therefore the personnel of the board would only be changed in part, and for that reason it could not be considered a new board. But the court held in State ex rel. Attorney General v. Thompson, 6 O. C. D. 106-110, that:

"At the time of the attempted appointment of the defendant by the commissioners it was known that when the office should become actually vacant, the personnel of the board would be changed by the expiration of the term of Mr. Cassidy. For that reason, in addition to the others I have stated, the board had no power to make his appointment."

In this case it cannot be determined until after the organization of the various boards of the county just how many changes there will be in the electing body, but it is only fair to assume that on account of the election of new members to the various boards there will be some changes and that the electing body will have a different personnel after the first Monday in January than what it has had this time.

Following the above authorities, then, I must advise you that a member of the county board of education who is elected to succed the member whose term expires on the day preceding the third Saturday in January, 1918, must be elected by the presidents of the various boards of education of the county school districts who are elected on the first Monday in January, 1918, or who are serving until their successors are duly elected and qualified. That is to say, it will be for the new electing body and not the old to select such successor.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WITNESS FEES—BEFORE GRAND JURY—LIMITED TO $1.00 PER DAY—REGARDLESS OF THE NUMBER OF CAUSES HE APPEARS IN—UNLESS OTHERWISE SPECIALLY ORDERED BY THE COURT—RECOVERY MAY BE HAD AGAINST WITNESS FOR EXCESS FEES.

A witness subpoenaed to appear before a grand jury is limited to the one witness fee of $1.00 per day regardless of how many causes he appears in before the grand jury during the day, unless the court otherwise directs by special order.

The court may, by reason of section 3014 G. C., if it sees fit, allow a witness a witness fee for his appearance before the grand jury on any one day, which allowance shall be made by special order, as provided by statute.

Where a witness has been paid more than one witness fee for appearing on any one day, without special order from the court, recovery can be had against the witness receiving the excess fees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 19, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of November 12, 1917, as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following questions:

(1) May a witness, who has been subpoenaed to appear before a grand jury, say at 9 a. m., at 2 p. m. and at 3:30 p. m., of the same day, be legally paid a witness fee for each appearance, or is he limited under the provisions of section 3014 G. C. to only one dollar?

(2) May a court under the circumstances set forth make a sepcial order granting a witness a fee for each appearance before a grand jury?

(3) If you should hold that witnesses can only be paid one witness fee, can findings for recovery be made against witnesses who have received more than one fee for any one day's appearance for attendance before a grand jury, or when testifying in more than one cause?"

Section 3014 of the General Code reads:

"Each witness attending under recognizance or subpoena, issued by order of the prosecuting attorney or defendant, before the court of common pleas, or grand jury, or other court of record, in criminal causes, shall be allowed the following fees: For each day's attendance one dollar, and five cents for each mile, the same as in civil causes, to be taxed in only one cause, when attending in more causes than one on the same days, unless otherwise directed by special order of the court. When certified to the county auditor by the clerk of the court, fees under this section shall be paid from the county treasury."

It will be noted that this section provides that the witnesses may receive "for each day's attendance, $1.00, and five cents for each mile, the same as in civil causes, to be taxed as in only one cause when attending in more causes than one on the same days, unless otherwise directed by special order of the court." This provision makes it clear that the witness is limited to the one witness fee of $1.00, regardless of how many causes he appears in before the grand jury in one day, unless the court otherwise directs by special order. This answers your first question.

Answering your second question I would advise that the court may, if it sees fit, allow a witness a witness fee for each appearance before the grand jury on any day since the statute vests that discretion in the court, provided such appearances are on separate matters.

Answering your third question, I would advise you that where witnesses have been paid more than one witness fee for appearing on any one day, without any special order from the court, recovery might be made against witnesses receiving the excess fees, since the payment of these excess fees to them is payment not warranted by law.

Vindicator Printing Company v. State, 68 O. S., 362.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRANSPORTATION—OF PERSONS TO HOSPITAL FOR THE INSANE—ALLOWANCE OF SHERIFF FOR SAME GOVERNED BY SECTION 2997 G. C.—SECTION 1982 REPEALED BY IMPLICATION.

The act of March 22, 1906, found in 98 O. L. 89, section 19 of which contained originally the provisions of section 2997 General Code, repealed by implication section 1982 G. C., in so far as that section related to the method of transportation of persons to the hospital for the insane.

The allowance to be made the sheriff, therefore, for his expenses incurred in transporting and conveying persons to such hospitals is now to be governed entirely by section 2997 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of November 22, 1917, as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following questions:

(1) Can a sheriff convey an insane patient to a state hospital in a county other than his own county by automobile and be reimbursed for the expense of such commitment under the provisions of section 2997 G. C., or does the provision of section 1982 G. C. govern as to the method of commitment so far as the use and expense of a conveyance is concerned?

(2) Should you hold that the conveyance must be by railroad and not by automobile, may the examiners of this department make a finding for recovery against a sheriff, who has made such commitment in an automobile, for the difference in cost, the cost by the automobile being three times as much as it would have been by rail?"

Section 1982 G. C. reads:

"When it appears at the time of conveying such person to the hospital that the condition of the patient so requires, a conveyance may be provided from the nearest railroad station, or in counties where state hospitals are located, from the county seat to the hospital,and the expense thereof and the costs and expenses specified in the preceding section shall be paid from the county treasury upon the certificate of the probate judge."

Section 2997 General Code reads:

"In addition to the compenastion and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sherlff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as provided by law, for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses, in conveying and transferring persons to and from any state hosiptal for the insane, the institution for feeble-minded youth, Ohio hospital for epileptics, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, county homes for the friendless, houses of refuge, children's homes, sanitariums, convents, orphan asylums or homes, county infirmaries, and all institutions for the care, cure, correction, reformation and protection of unfortunates, and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. The county commissioners shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes and subpoenaing witnesses in civil and criminal cases, and may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office. Each sheriff shall file under oath with the quarterly report herein provided a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses, including railroad fare, street car and livery hire mentioned in this section before they shall be allowed by the commissioners."

Section 1959 G. C. reads:

"When advised that the patient will be received, the probate judge shall forthwith issue his warrant to the sheriff, commanding him forthwith to take charge of and convey such insane person to the hospital. If the probate judge is satisfied, from proof, that an assistant is necessary, he may appoint one person as such. If the insane person is a female, he shall appoint a suitable female assistant to accompany the sheriff and such insane person to the hospital."

Section 1982 G. C. originally appeared in an act passed April 29, 1891, entitled "an act to amend section 719 of the Revised Statutes." Up to the passage of this act the sheriff was only entitled to certain mileage for transporting persons to the asylum, but no provision was made concerning the hiring of any conveyance. In the act above referred to the following provision was read into section 719 R. S.:

"Provided that in counties containing a city of the first class, second grade, when it shall be made to appear to the probate judge that the condition of the patient makes the same necessary, he shall make an order authorizing the sheriff to provide a conveyance for said patient, and the same shall be taxed in the bill of costs and paid as other costs in the case."

In 93 O. L., page 198, section 719 of the Revised Statutes was again amended and the provision above referred to was made to read:

"The costs specified shall be paid out of the county treasury upon the certificate of the probate judge, provided that when it appears necessary to the sheriff at the time of conveying said person to the hospital, the condition of the patient requires the same, he shall be authorized to provide a conveyance for said patient from the next railroad station, except that in counties where state hospitals are located the sheriff may provide a conveyance from the county seat and the costs of the same shall be taxed in the bill of costs and paid as other costs in the case."

This section was again amended in 95 O. L., 286, but the provision referred to remained practically the same and was carried in that form into the General Code as section 1982.

Section 2997 G. C. was originally section 19 of an act passed March 22, 1906, 98 O. L., page 89-96, and read substantially as we now find it in the General Code.

From the above it will be seen that section 2997 of the General Code is a later enactment than section 1982 of the General Code. It also appears that section 2997 G. C., in providing that the county commissioners may allow the sheriff his actual and necessary expenses incurred "in conveying and transferring persons to and from any state hospital for the insane" covers the same subject matter as section 1982 of the General Code. It is evident, too, from a reading of both sections that section 2997 G. C. is inconsistent with section 1982 G. C. in that the expenses of the sheriff in conveying and transporting persons to the state hospital are to be allowed by the county commissioners under section 2997 and under section 1982 G. C., are to be paid from the county treasury upon the certificate of the probate judge.

In Goff et al. v. Gates, et al., 87 O. S., 142, it was held:

> "An act of the legislature that fails to repeal in terms an existing statute on the same subject matter, must be held to repeal the former statute by implication if the latter act is in direct conflict with the former, or if the subsequent act revises the whole subject-matter of the former act and is evidently intended as a substitute for it."

In view of the above I am of the opinion that the act of March 22, 1906, found in 98 O. L., page 89, section 19 of which contained originally the provisions of section 2997 G. C., repealed by implication section 1982 G. C. in so far as that section related to the transportation of insane persons to the state hospital.

The allowance to be made the sheriff, therefore, for his expenses incurred for transporting and conveying persons to the state hospital is now to be governed entirely by section 2997 G. C. There may be many cases where it might be unwise to attempt to transport insane persons by rail and if the sheriff conveys them by automobile and the county commissioners are of the opinion that his action, in so doing, is proper, I am of the opinion that they may allow him the automobile expense thus incur ed. Of course there may be cases when the authority to empower the sheriff to so transport persons may be abused, but whether or not such abuse is in evidence in any certain case is a matter for the county commissioners to determine.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE BOARD OF EMBALMING EXAMINERS—WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO RETURN FEES TO APPLICANT FOR REGISTRATION, EXAMINATION OR LICENSE—APPLICANT MUST PAY SAME FEE FOR SECOND EXAMINATION—NO POWER TO REFUSE LICENSE BY AFFIDAVIT TO QUALIFIED PERSON—AFFIDAVIT IN CRIMINAL PROSECUTION—HOW SAME SIGNED—LIABILITY OF PERSON WHO SIGNS SAME.

1. The state board of embalming examiners is without authority to return fees which have been properly received for registration, examination, license by affidavit or for reciprocal license.

2. An applicant who fails at an examination and takes a second or re-examination, must pay the same fee as is charged at the first or original examination.

3. The state board of embalming examiners has no power to refuse a license by affidavit to a person who qualifies under the provisions of section 1343 G. C.

4. The secretary-treasurer cannot sign an affidavit in a criminal prosecution in an official capacity. The same must be signed by him personally and in his own private capacity.

5. The person who signs the affidavit is not liable in damages unless the action is brought without probable cause or unless he acts maliciously.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1917.

The State Board of Embalming Examiners, B. G. JONES, Secretary-Treasurer, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—My opinion is requested upon the following questions:

"1. I respectfully ask for your opinion as to whether this board has the authority to return for any cause fees received for registration, examination, licenses by affidavit or reciprocal licenses.

2. Also if an applicant registers and takes an examination and fails to receive the necessary passing grade and applies to the board again for an examination, what is the fee that the law requires of him. In other words, does this applicant have to again pay the registration and the examination fee or will the payment of the examination fee be sufficient?

3. Has this board the power to refuse a license by affidavit, even if the provisions of the General Code have been complied with, if the board has knowledge that the applicant is not a proper person to have a license?

4. Can the secretary-treasurer sign a warrant for the arrest of an offender in his official capacity or must he sign it personally?

5. If he signs it personally, is he (secretary-treasurer) not liable for damages providing the case is decided against him?"

Registration fees for persons who desire to take examinations for a license as embalmer in this state are provided for by section 1342 G. C., which reads as follows:

"Every person desiring to engage in the practice of embalming or the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation, in the state of Ohio, shall make a written application to the state board of embalming examiners for registration, giving such information as the said board may, by regulation, require for such registration. Each application must be accompanied by a fee of one dollar * * * If the said board shall find the facts set forth in the application to be true, the said board shall issue to said applicant a certificate of registration. * * * ."

Examination fees for applicants who desire to become licensed embalmers in the state of Ohio are provided for in section 1342 G. C., as follows:

" * * * All applications for a license to practice embalming and the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation in this state, must be made to the state board of embalming examiners in writing and contain the name, age, residence and the person or persons with whom employed, the name of the school attended, together with a certificate from two reputable citizens that the applicant is of legal age and of good moral character, also a certificate under oath when required by the said board from the president or dean of the embalming school or college he or she has attended, that the applicant has complied with the requirements of said school or college or a certificate under oath when required by said board, from the licensed embalmer under whom he or she has worked as an apprentice, that he or she has complied with the requirements of apprenticeship as set forth in this section. Each application must be accompanied by a fee of ten dollars and the certificate of registration. * * *."

License by affidavit fees are provided for in section 1343 G.. C. as follows:

" * * * This section and the two preceding sections shall not apply to any person * * * engaged in the practice of embalming or the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation prior to January 1, 1903, provided that he or she has had at least three years practical experience, if such person, prior to January 1, 1918, makes application to the state embalming examiners for a license accompanied by a fee of $25.00, and an affidavit certifying that he or she was in such practice before January 1, 1903, and thereupon the state board of embalming examiners shall issue a license to such applicant. * * * ."

Reciprocal license fees are provided for in section 1343-1 G. C. as follows:

"The state board of embalming examiners may grant without examination an embalmer's license to a duly licensed embalmer of another state, who shall have been examined by a regular board of embalming examiners on substantially the same subjects and requirements demanded by the board of this state, and shall have obtained an average grade of not less than seventy-five per cent in such examination. Such license shall be known as a reciprocal license. * * * Each applicant for a reciprocal license shall pay a license fee of twenty-five dollars. * * * "

Section 24 of the General Code reads in part as follows:

"On or before Monday of each week every state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, * * * shall pay to the treasurer of state all moneys, checks and drafts received for the state, or for the use of any such state officer, state institution, department, board, commission, * * * during the preceding week, from taxes, assessments, licenses, premiums, fees, penalties, fines, costs, sales, rentals or otherwise, and file with the auditor of state a detailed verified statement of such receipts. * *"

I know of no provision of law which permits the return of fees which are received by the board of embalming examiners and which are paid into the state treasury to be returned or refunded and I therefore advise you that your board has no authority to return fees received for registration, examination, licenses by affidavit or reciprocal licenses. It should be said, however, in relation to the fees for a reciprocal license, that while the same is paid for the license, yet I am informed that such fee usually accompanies the application or request for such license. Reciprocal licenses are granted, if at all, without an examination being had therefor and only after the board has determined that the applicant is a regularly licensed embalmer of another state and has been examined by a regular board of embalming examiners on substantially the same subjects and requirements as are demanded by the board of this state and that such applicant shall have obtained an average grade of not less than seventy-five per cent in such examination. If the fee accompanies such application or request for such reciprocal license and is held by the board or an officer thereof while the investigation as to the qualifications of such applicant is being made, such fee is so held by the board or an officer thereof not in any official way, but simply as agent of the applicant during the time of such investigation and subject to be returned to him at his request in case he fails to qualify or to be received officially by the board if the applicant's qualifications are found to be proper; and at such time as it is so officially received it should then be paid into the state treasury as other fees and cannot then be returned or refunded.

Coming now to your second question, you will note again that part of section 1342, which is first above quoted and which provides that before a person may take an examination before the board of embalming examiners he must receive a certificate of registration, and if the board finds the facts set forth in the application to be true, the board shall issue to such applicant a certificate of registration. There is nothing in the statute which provides that a new certificate must be issued before each examination and I can conceive of no good reason why the same should be done. The filing of the application for a certificate of registration gives the board an opportunity to investigate the applicant and his credentials and the fact that he does not pass the examination does not, it seems to me, argue that his qualifications as to moral character, age and general education shall again be inquired into. In other words, it seems to me it would be presumed that there would be no further investigation to be made prior to another examination, and I therefore advise you that the examination fee of $10.00 is all the fee that is required of an applicant who desires to take a second examination.

Coming now to your third question. Attention is called again to that part of section 1343, above quoted, in which it is provided that section 1343, section 1342 and section 1341 of the General Code shall not apply to those persons who were engaged in the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation, prior to January 1, 1903, provided that such person has had at least three years practical experience, and provided further that such person, prior to January1, 1918, makes an application to the state board of embalming examiners for a license and accompanies such application with a fee of $25.00 and a certificate that he or she was engaged in such practice before January 1, 1903. The statute then provides "and thereupon the state board of embalming examiners shall issue a license to such applicant." Moral character, age, general education, etc., which are made qualifications in the other sections referred to, do not seem to apply to persons who are able to secure a license by affidavit. Such person, however, would be amenable to the provisions of section 1343-2, which reads:

> "The state board of embalming examiners may revoke and void a license obtained by fraud or misrepresentation, or if the person named therein uses intoxicants or drugs to such a degree as to render him unfit to practice embalming, or has been convicted of a felony subsequent to the date of his license, such revocation may be vacated, reversed or set aside for good cause shown at the discretion of the board."

Answering your third question, then, I advise you that the board cannot refuse a license to one who applies by affidavit under section 1343 G. C. if all the provisions of the General Code have been complied with Coming now to your fourth question, I advise you that the person who occupies the position of secretary-treasurer of the board cannot sign an affidavit for the arrest of an offender in any official capcaity. If he signs and makes oath to an affidavit, he must do the same in his own personal capacity. In order to identify him there is nothing wrong, except that it is a mere matter of surplusage, to say in the body of the affidavit that such person is the secretary-treasurer of the state board of embalming examiners, and it adds nothing to the affidavit, and in signing the same it must be signed and sworn to personally.

In your fifth question you ask if such secretary-treasurer signs the affidavit personally whether or not he is liable for damages providing the case is decided against him. In answer thereto I advise you that where a person signs an affidavit which is regular and proper in form, and which covers the facts in reference to the complaint, and which is filed before a magistrate having jurisdiction of such matter, and the proper person is arrested, the person who so signs such affidavit is not liable in damages for false imprisonment or malicious prosecution simply because he signs such affidavit, even if there is a failure in such prosecution.

It is held in 19 Cyc., 329, that:

"The law recognizes no distinct privilege on the part of persons who procure the arrest of others; but in the interest of the administration of justice it does not treat the mere giving of information or the executing or filing of a complaint concerning an offense justifying arrest or punishable by imprisonment as causing an unlawful detention so as to impose responsibility in false imprisonment."

In Cooley on Torts, Vol. 1, page 314, the author says:

"One who merely states the facts to a magistrate and signs and swears to a complaint embodying such facts is not liable for false imprisonment."

But in Truesdall v. Combs, 33 O. S. 186, the court holds:

"Where a justice of the peace, without authority of law, issues a warrant of arrest, both he and the person at whose instance he acts are liable in an action for false imprisonment at the suit of the party illegally arrested by virtue of such warrant."

This latter case, however, was disapproved in Robertson v. Parker, 99 Wisc., 659; 67 Am. St. Rep., 889; 75 N. W., 423; wherein the court held that a municipal judge was not liable for erroneously assuming to commit one to prison unless he acted wilfully, maliciously or corruptly in exercising such jurisdiction.

It is held in Cooley on Torts, Vol. 1, page 320, that:

"It is a duty which every man owes to every other not to institute proceedings maliciously which he has no good reason to believe are justified by the facts and law. Therefore an action, as for tort, will lie when there is a concurrence of the following circumstances: First, a statute or proceeding has been instituted without any probable cause therefor; second, the motive in instituting it was malicious; third, the prosecution has terminated in the acquittal or discharge of the accused."

So that if there has been probable cause in instituting the suit or proceeding and no malice entered therein, there can be no action for damages even though the prosecution terminates in the acquittal or discharge of the accused.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BONDS—VILLAGE OF SOUTH NEWBURGH.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of the village of South Newburgh, Ohio, in the sum of $30,000, for the purpose of paying the village's share of the cost and expense of improving certain determined streets in said village.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the village council and other officers of the village of South Newburgh, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said village.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE BOARD OF EMBALMING EXAMINERS—HOW VOUCHERS OF MEMBERS APPROVED.

Vouchers of members of the board of state embalming examiners shall be approved by the board or by the secretary-treasurer under authority so to do having been granted by the board, and shall be countersigned by the secretary-treasurer of the board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1917.

HON. B. G. JONES, Secretary-Treasurer, the State Embalming Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—My opinion is requested by you on the following matter:

> "Who should approve the vouchers of members of this board for traveling expenses and per diem. For your information it has been customary for the secretary-treasurer to approve them upon receipt of the board members,daily report."

General Code section 1338 G. C., after providing that on the second Tuesday of July of each year the state board of embalming examiners shall organize and elect from their number a president and a secretary-treasurer, further provides that the secretary-treasurer shall serve during the pleasure of the board and keep a complete record of the transactions of the board, collecting all money and performing any other duties required by the board. It is further provided in the same section that the board shall from time to time make and adopt rules, regulations and by-laws for its government, not inconsistent with the laws of this state and the United States. Two members shall constitute a quorum at a meeting of the board.

General Code section 1339, as found in 107 O. L., page 655, reads:

> "Each appointed member of the state board of embalming examiners except the secretary-treasurer shall receive ten dollars per day and their reasonable and necessary traveling expenses while discharging the actual duties of their office. The secretary-treasurer shall receive an annual salary which shall be fixed by said board, and such necessary expenses as are incurred in the performance of his duties as secretary-treasurer. The fees received under the provisions of this chapter shall be paid into the state treasury to the credit of a special fund. The salaries and expenses incurred by the board and the members thereof in the discharge of their duties shall be paid by the state auditor on vouchers counter-signed by the secretary-treasurer, and the state of Ohio shall not be liable for same or be at any expense in this connection beyond the amount received as fees."

Section 242-1, as found in 107 O. L., p. 639, reads in part:

"* * * Whenever in any statute the word 'voucher 'is used, the same shall be held to mean such order and invoice, and the provisions of section 242-1, section 242-2 and section 243 of the General Code shall apply thereto. All orders and invoices shall be approved by the officer, board, commission or trustee of an institution issuing the same, but such trustees, board or commission may by resolution or order filed with the auditor of state designate either a chief executive or the secretary or a clerk of such trustees, board or commission to approve the same."

Section 243 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., 640, provides in part:

"* * * The auditor of state shall examine each invoice presented to him, or claim for salary, of an officer or employe of the state * * * and if he finds it to be a valid claim against the state and legally due and that there is money in the state treasury duly appropriated to pay it, and that all requirements of law have been complied with, he shall issue thereon a warrant on the treasury of state for the amount found due and file and preserve the invoice in his office. * * * "

So that when a member of the state board of embalming examiners files a claim for his per diem and his reasonable and necessary expenses incurred while discharging the actual duties of his office, the first that must be done is that the same must be approved, either by the board or by some one duly authorized by the board to approve the same in its place and stead. The board may, under the provision of section 242-1 G. C., above quoted, designate the secretary of the board to approve such vouchers on behalf of the board and if such designation is so made and the approval is so given by the secretary-treasurer of the board, that act then in effect is the act of the board approving such vouchers. If, however, no rule is made by the board authorizing the secretary-treasurer to approve said vouchers for and on behalf of the board, then I am of the opinion that such per diem and expense accounts are to be presented to the board and should be approved by the board, no less than two of whose members shall be present at a meeting at which such approval takes place. But even though the voucher is approved by the board, or if it is approved by the secretary-treasurer, after being authorized so to do by the board, the secretary-treasurer must still countersign the voucher, as is provided by section 1339 G. C., above quoted. When the same is approved by the board, or is approved by the secretary-treasurer under an authorization by the board, the same then goes to the auditor of state, who shall examine the same and ascertain if it is a valid claim against the state and if it is legally due and if there is money in the state treasury duly appropriated to pay, and if all requirements of law have been complied with, and if the auditor of state finds each and all of the above requirements complied with, then he shall issue a warrant on the state treasurer for the amount thereof and shall file and preserve the invoice, which in this case is the voucher, in his office.

Answering your question then I advise you that the board shall approve all vouchers for per diem and traveling expenses, but under the provisions of section 242-1 G. C. the board may authorize the secretary-treasurer to approve same for and on behalf of the board, and after the same are approved they shall be countersigned, as is provided by section 1339 G. C., by the secretary-treasurer of the board before they are presented to the auditor of state for his examination and warrant.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—BONDS—STRATTON VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT OF JEFFERSON COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE: Bonds of Stratton village school district of Jefferson county, Ohio, in the sum of $25,000.00, to purchase site for and erect a school house in said school district.

I am herewith returning without approval transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Stratton village school district relating to the above bond issue. An examination of the said transcript discloses the following defects relating to said proceedings:

1. The date of the meeting of the board of education of said school district at which the resolution was adopted submitting to the electors of said school district the proposition of said bond issue appears only by way of recital in the notice of election, which is set out in said transcript, but there is nothing whatever in said transcript to indicate the character of said meeting. If it be claimed that said meeting was a regular meeting, so much of the minutes in the record of the board of education at some legal meeting should be set out as show the adoption by the board of a rule fixing the dates for the regular meetings of the board as provided by section 4747 of the General Code.

If it be claimed that this meeting was a special meeting, then such facts should be stated in the transcript as affirmatively show that notice of said meeting was given in the manner required by section 4751 General Code.

The transcript shows that apparently all of the members of the board of education were present at this meeting, and this fact probably cures any defect in the legal character of the meeting at which this resolution was adopted, However, a transcript of the proceedings of the board of education relating to a bond issue should set out such facts as will affirmatively show the character of the meeting at which the board of education took action relating to such bond issue.

2. The transcript contains a certificate signed by the clerk of the board of supervisors of elections of Jefferson county certifying the result of the election on the bond issue, and stating that twenty-eight votes were cast in favor of the proposition and eight votes were cast against the same. There is nothing, however, in the transcript to show that the board of education ever made a canvass of the votes cast at such election in the manner required by section 5120 of the General Code. I am inclined to the view that the provisions of this section, insofar as it designates the time at which the board of education shall make such canvass, are directory rather than mandatory. I am equally convinced, however, that under the provisions of said act it is the duty of the board of education to make such canvass and enter the result thereof on the records of the board, and that the board is not authorized to take any further steps relating to said bond issue pursuant to said election until such canvass has been made and the result thereof so entered on its records.

3. I find nothing in the transcript to indicate the date or character of the meeting of the board of education at which it adopted the resolution providing for the issue of the bonds, and what I have said above with respect to the meeting of the board at which it adopted resolutions submitting the proposition of the bond issue to the electors of the school district applies as well to the meeting at which the issue of bonds was provided for.

The transcript likewise reveals that at this meeting all the members of the board were present.

4. The resolution providing for the issue of bonds is fatally defective in this, that it does not contain any provision for an annual tax levy on the taxable real and personal property in said school district for the purpose of paying interest on said bonds and to create a sinking fund for the payment of said bonds at maturity as required by section 11 of article XII of the state constitution.

5. The resolution providing for the issue of bonds recites that there is but there is nothing in the transcript to indicate whether or not the school district now has an outstanding bonded indebtedness which calls for the appointment of a board of commissioners of the sinking fund of such school district as required in such cases by section 7614 General Code.

"no trustee of the sinking funds for the taxing district issuing such bonds."

6. In addition to the foregoing the transcript is defective in not making a complete statement of the fiscal affairs of said school district, such as would be indicated by a statement of the tax duplicate valuation of taxable real and personal property in said school district, the tax rate for school and other purposes and the manner in which said rates are affected by the limitations of the Smith one per cent. law, etc.

Some of the defects above noted may be corrected on further information. However, in my opinion, the second and fourth objections above noted are fatal to the validity of this bond issue so far as the present legislation of the board of education is concerned, and I am compelled to advise you not to purchase the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 21, 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication in which you state:

> "Sections 912, 944 and 953 of the General Mining Code of Ohio, in our opinion, very much conflict with section 13002 governing the employment of minors in and around the mines of this state.
> Owing to these conflicting sections of the General Code many arguments and differences of opinion have arisen resulting in much confusion at the mines in the past, especially where operators and miners have felt inclined to violate the child labor law.
> We have just finished reading proof and have it prepared for the state printer to print 5000 copies of the mining laws.

In order to prevent past experiences we would be pleased to have you advise us in the form of an explanatory note which could be inserted at the head of the above named sections so that they may be the more readily understood by the men at the mines."

The sections, or parts thereof, which must be considered in answering your question are as follows:

"Section 912. * * * The district inspector of mines shall examine the record kept by the mine foreman, of boys under sixteen years of age employed in each mine, and report to the chief inspector of mines, the number of such persons employed in and about each mine, and enforce the provisions of this act relative to their employment.

Section 944. The owner, lessee or agent of a mine shall not employ, or permit to work therein, any boy under fourteen years of age; nor employ or permit to work therein, any boy under fifteen years of age during a term of the public schools, in the district in which he resides. * * *.

Section 953. * * * He shall keep a record of the boys under sixteen years of age employed by him, or by any other person, giving the name, age, place of birth, name and residence of parents, and character of employment. He shall require written evidence from the parent or guardian of each of said minors, that the requirements of the school laws have been complied with. * * *."

It will be noted that none of the above provisions permit the employment of minors.

Section 912 G. C. provides that the district inspector of mines shall examine the records kept of boys under sixteen years of age.

Section 953 G. C. makes it the duty of the mine foreman or the assistant mine foreman, when acting for the mine foreman, to keep a record of boys under sixteen employed by him or by any other person, but neither of the sections expressly authorize such employment. The question whether or not minors of the age mentioned can legally be employed, must be determined from an inspection of other statutes on the subject.

Section 944 supra prohibits the employment of boys under fourteen at any time, and particularly the employment of boys under fifteen, during a term of the public schools in the district in which he resides. Here again is a prohibitive statute, and nothing permissive is therein found. In the absence of any other legislation, it might well be argued that since the prohibition was against boys of a certain age being employed or permitted to work, it would be lawful for boys over the prohibitive age to be so employed.

Sections 912, 944 and 953 are part of an act found in 101 O. L. 52, passed April 5, 1910.

Section 13002 G. C. provides:

"No child under the age of sixteen years shall be employed, permitted or suffered to work in any capacity * * * (11) nor in, about or in connection with any mine, coal breaker, coke oven, or quarry; * * * ."

This section is found in 103 O. L. 864, at p. 909, and was passed on April 28, 1913.

Inasmuch as the section, a part of which was just quoted, is the last expression of the legislature upon the subject of the employment of minors in mines, it is controlling. And even if the provisions of sections 912, 944 and 953 G. C. in any manner authorized or made legal the employment of minors, those sections would have to give way in favor of the later enactment of the general assembly.

It is my view, therefore, that in order to prevent the recurrence of the past experiences of which you speak, it would be well to insert a foot note to each of the various sections inquired about, as follows:

> "Section 13002 G. C. prohibits any child under the age of sixteen years from being employed, permitted or suffered to work in any capacity in, about or in connection with any mine, coal breaker, coke oven or quarry."

It is therefore my opinion that the provisions of sections 912, 944 and 953 do not permit the employment of children under sixteen years of age in, about or in connection with any mine, but that such employment is governed by the provisions of section 13002 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COSTS—INCURRED IN TRANSPORTING PRISONER FROM ONE CITY TO WORKHOUSE IN ANOTHER CITY—HOW PAID.

There is no authority in law for the payment of costs for transportation of prisoners from one city to the workhouse of another city in the same county, where these prisoners have been convicted of a violation of an ordinance. If the prisoner so transported has been convicted of a violation of a state law and a conviction has been had in a justice of the peace court, the county must reimburse the constable for his expense in transporting such prisoner, by virtue of section 3347 G. C. This reimbursement, however, is to include only the expense incurred in the transportation of the prisoner. The constable's personal expense must be paid by him out of his mileage. If the conviction was had in the mayor's court or police court, there is no authority for the payment of the cost of such transportation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of November 10, 1917, as follows:

> "We are referring you to an opinion of Attorney-General Edward C. Turner, rendered under date of August 5, 1915, recorded in Annual Reports for 1915, Vol. 2, page 1404. We beg to advise you that Stark county has a county work house situated at Canton, Ohio, and in cases wherein prisoners are sent to this work house from Alliance, Ohio, we respectfully request your written opinion upon the following questions:
> (1) In cases for violation of statutes, is the cost of transportation to be paid by the county? And in cases for violation of ordinances, is the cost of transportation to be paid by the city of Alliance?
> (2) May such transportation, above referred to, include both the cost of transportation of the prisoner together with the actual cost of the conveying officer?"

Section 4132 of the General Code reads:

"The officer having the execution of the final sentence of a court, magistrate, or mayor, shall cause the convict to be conveyed to the workhouse as soon as practicable after the sentence is pronounced, and all officers shall be paid the fees therefor allowed by law for similar services in other cases. Such fees shall be paid, when the sentence is by the court, from the county treasury, and when by the magistrate, from the township treasury."

In the opinion to which you refer (Opinions for 1915, Vol. 2, page 1404), Mr. Turner said:

"Your question is general, but you mention mayors and marshals in stating the same. In order to cover your questiion fully, therefore, it is necessary to deal further with one peculiarity of section 4132 which has not thus far been mentioned. This section is placed in the Municipal Code and properly so because though originally one of the Revised Statutes of general application, it has always been found in a group of sections relating to the powers and duties of municipal officers. Section 4132 itself begins by referring to 'the officer having the execution of the final sentence of a court, magistrate or mayor.' There is an evident discrimination here among the court, the magistrate and the mayor, so that a mayor is, in this connection at least, not regarded as either a court or a magistrate. Yet when the section comes to provide for the payment of the fees, there is provision for the method of payment when the sentence is by the court and provision when the sentence is by the magistrate, but if the mayor be, for the purposes of the section, neither a 'court' nor a 'magistrate' then there is no provision for the payment of fees when the sentence is by the mayor. I am informed that the practice has been to regard the mayor as a 'court' and in misdemeanor cases, at least, to allow fees to be paid out of the county treasury. The above cited case of Ketter v. Commissioners, does not afford any assistance in this connection because that was a case involving the fees of the sheriff, and evidently the convictions had been had in the common pleas court.

The exact question thus raised is as to the fees of the marshal and chief of police for execution of a sentence of the mayor's court in misdemeanor cases. These fees are fixed, if at all, by section 4387 with respect to the marshal and by section 4534 with respect to the chief of police, respectively. Both provide that in the one case the marshal and in the other case the chief of police shall receive 'the same fees as sheriff and constables in similar cases.' The fee of the sheriff for serving writs is seventy-five cents for the first name on the writ and twenty-five cents for each additional name and in addition thereto eight cents per mile going and returning. (Section 2845 G. C.) The fees of the constable for similar services are different. (See section 3347 G. C.) Therefore, the sections which attempt to prescribe the fees of the marshal and chief of police as the same as those allowed to sheriffs and constables for similar services are meaningless. In the case of State ex rel Ribble vs. Kleinhoffer, recently decided by the supreme court, analogous language in the statutes relative to the fees of agents of a humane society was held void for uncertainty, and in view of this decision I am of the opinion that no fees are legally taxable to a chief of police or to a marshal in a misdemeanor case, for the services referred to in section 4132 G. C. It seems therefore unnecessary to consider the significance of the omission of the word 'mayor' from the last clause of the section in the face of its inclusion in the first clause thereof. Were it necessary to do so, however, I would be of the opinion that such omission would make it impossible to pay any fees thereunder out of the county or township treasury when the conviction has been had in a mayor's court."

As was said by Mr. Turner, the fees to constables for services rendered under section 4132 are provided for in section 4337 General Code. That section provides in part:

> "For services rendered, duly elected and qualified constables shall be entitled to receive the following fees: For service and return of copies, orders of arrest, warrant, attachment, garnishee, writ of replevin, or mittimus, forty cents each for each person named in the writ; * * * transporting and sustaining prisoners, allowance made by the magistrate, and paid on his certificate; * * * ."

Under this section a constable may charge the fee allowed therein for serving a mittimus, viz., forty cents, since he must have with him the mittimus or certificate of commitment to serve the same upon the superintendent of the workhouse. He may also receive the mileage provided for in said section. This mileage, however, simply covers his own travel and not that of the prisoner. The provision of the section allowing the constable to be reimbursed for transporting and sustaining the prisoner in such sum as the magistrate allows, I think, is broad enough to cover this case and it is my opinion that the constable may receive reimbursement for transporting and sustaining prisoners conveyed by him from one city to a workhouse in another city of the same county, and such sum may be allowed by the magistrate. This sum when so allowed must be paid to such constable from the county treasury.

In the opinion rendered August 5, 1915, above noted, this department held that no fees could be allowed marshals or chiefs of police for services in transporting prisoners from one city to a workhouse in another city in the same county, neither do I know of any provision of law authorizing the payment of any transportation of such prisoners when conveyed by the marshal or chief of police to such workhouse.

When prisoners are sentenced to the workhouse for the violation of village ordinances, they must be conveyed by either the chief of police or marshal, depending upon whether or not the conviction has been had in the police court or the mayor's court.

In view of the statement above, to the effect that there is no provision of law for the payment of any fees to these officers for this service or any provision of law covering the payment of transportation of prisoners to the workhouse by them, I would advise you that in cases of violation of ordinances I know of no authority for the payment of cost of transportation of prisoners from the city of Alliance to the workhouse in Canton, Ohio. If the prisoner had been convicted of a violation of a state law and the conviction has been had in the justice of the peace court, the county must reimburse the constable for his expense in transporting such prisoner by virtue of section 3347, above quoted. If the conviction was had in a mayor's or police court, I know of no authority for the payment of any transportation.

Answering your second question, I beg to advise, as stated above, there is but one instance when the transportation of prisoners from Alliance, Ohio, to the Canton workhouse may be paid, viz., when conveyed by the constable in state cases. Section 3347 G. C., upon which this authority is based, provides that the constable may receive for "transporting and sustaining prisoners the allowance made by the magistrate and paid on his certificate." This, to my mind, includes only the expenses incurred in the transportation of the prisoner and the constable's expenses must be paid by him out of his mileage.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—TERM OF PERSONS ELECTED TO FILL VACANCIES.

Under section 4748 G. C., in cases where the board of education elects persons to fill vacancies, these persons so elected will hold office for and during the term for which the members, in whose places they were appointed, would have held under their election. In such cases section 10 G. C. does not apply.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1917.

HON. CHARLES G. WHITE, Prosecuting Attoruey, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communications of November 21 and December 3, 1917, containing certain facts upon which you ask my opinion as to the law. The facts, briefly stated, are as follows:

> "In November, 1915, two men were elected as members of the school board at Edenton, Ohio, one of said members elected being Arthur Wolf, who at the time of his election was not a resident of said school district, but afterwards became a resident by virtue of a transfer of territory from one district to another.
> At the January meeting of the board, before Mr. Wolf qualified, the board of education declared a vacancy because of the fact that Mr. Wolf could not have been elected when not a resident of the district. The said board then proceeded to elect Mr. Wolf to fill the vacancy.
> The other member elected in 1915 qualified, but later resigned, and one by the name of Cramer was appointed to fill the vacancy which occurred more than thirty days prior to the election in November, 1917.
> In the fall of 1917 the ballots called for the election of three members of said board of education, but no names were printed on the ballots. There was a lively contest in this election and many voters voted for five members of the board, three for the long term and two presumably to take the place of Messrs. Wolf and Cramer."

The question arises as to whether the two men elected for the short term, as it was called, will be entitled to qualify on the first Monday in January next, or whether these men, viz., said Wolf and Cramer, will continue to be members of the board until the first Monday in January, 1920.

In order to arrive at the correct answer, we will note the provisions of two sections of the General Code.

Section 10 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "When an elective office becomes vacant, and is filled by appointment, such appointee shall hold the office until his successor is elected and qualified. Unless otherwise provided by law, such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term at the first general election for the office which is vacant that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have occurred. * * * ."

Under this section the successors to Wolf and Cramer would be elected at the November, 1917, election for terms to expire the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1920; that is, the two members who were voted for at the last election for a short term would be the proper ones to qualify at the meeting of the board in January.

However, it must be noted that this provision of the section would apply unless there is some other provision of law relative thereto. The language "unless otherwise provided by law," as found in section 10, makes it very evident that said election was intended by the legislature to be general and to apply only in those cases in which there is no special provision in reference to the matters therein set out.

The question then is, is there any other provision of law as to how long appointees upon a board of education, to fill vacancies, shall hold their positions, or, in other words, when shall their successors be elected?

Section 4748 G. C. provides as follows:

> "A vacancy in any board of education may be caused by death, non-residence, resignation, removal from office, failure of a person elected or appointed to qualify with in ten days after the organization of the board or of his appointment, removal from the district or absence from meetings of the board for a period of ninety days, if such absence is caused by reasons declared insufficient by a two-thirds vote of the remaining members of the board, which vote must be taken and entered upon the records of the board not less than thirty days after such absence. Any such vacancy shall be filled by the board at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term. A majority vote of all the remaining members of the board may fill any such vacancy."

In this section we find the provision that:

> "Any such vacancy shall be filled by the board at its next regular or or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term."

Here we find a provision different from that which is found in section 10 G. C.—a provision which especially applies to members of a board of education. Hence it is clearly evident that it must control. The provision in said section 4748 is clear to the effect that said Wolf and Cramer, being appointed or elected by the board to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of one member of the board and a vacancy declared relative to another member, were appointed or elected by the board of education to fill out the terms for which the two men were elected in 1915; that is, to the first Monday in January, 1920.

Hence there were no short terms to be filled in November, 1917, because the terms of Wolf and Cramer had not yet expired and would not expire until the first Monday in January, 1920; and the only persons duly elected were the three who received the highest number of votes at the election, who with Wolf and Cramer will constitute the board on and after the first Monday in January, 1918.

The above is clearly the law as applied to the facts in the case before us.

There are two matters to which I might call attention in passing. One is that the question might be raised as to whether a board of education has the authority in law to declare a vacancy to exist in the board. The proposition might be advanced that if Wolf was not elected as a member of the board of education in November, 1915, and therefore did not qualify for said position, under section 4745 G. C. one of the members whose term would have expired on the first Monday of January, 1916, would hold over, because of the fact that no one had been elected and qualified to take his place. Section 4745 G. C. provides that members of the board of education shall begin their term on the first Monday in January after their election and shall hold office for four years and until their successors are elected and qualified. Therefore if Wolf was not elected in 1915 and did not qualify under this section, one of the members in office at the time of the election would hold over until some successor was elected and qualified.

However, inasmuch as no member of the old board presumed to hold over and as every one acquiesced in the action of the board in declaring a vacancy and in electing Wolf to fill the vacancy, Mr. Wolf is, to say the least, a de facto officer and the opinion hereinbefore stated is therefore correct. At any rate, the suggestion I have just made, relative to section 4745 G. C., would not in any event inure to the benefit of the two men who were voted for at the election in 1917.

The second matter to which I desire to call attention is that if there were five men voted for in November, 1917, without any designation as to whether they were voted for to fill a short or long term, the three men receiving the highest number of votes would be the newly elected members of the board. But if three men were voted for to fill a long term and two men for a short term, the three men voted for to fill the long term would be elected, irrespective of whether they received a greater or less number of votes than did the two men for the short term. But I gather, from reading between the lines of your communications, that the three men who were presumably running for the long term received the highest number of votes, and therefore would be the newly elected members of the board.

On September 6, 1917, I rendered an opinion to Hon. Henry W. Cherrington, prosecuting attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio. (No. 596), in which I discussed matters somewhat similar to the one under consideration, and am therefore enclosing a copy thereof to you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNCIL—MAY COMPEL MUNICIPAL GAS OR ELECTRIC PLANT TO FURNISH GAS OR ELECTRICITY TO MUNICIPALITY FREE OF CHARGE.

It is within the discretion of council of a municipality to require a gas or electric plant owned and operated by such municipality, to furnish gas or electric current free of charge to such municipality for any and all municipal purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under recent date you submit the following statement of facts and question:

> "Section 3963 General Code plainly provides what water shall be furnished by a municipal water works without charge. We are conversant with the opinion of the attorney-general which holds that a municipal electric light plant may either furnish current for street lighting purposes without charge against the corporation, or if council deems fit, council may appropriate moneys in payment of same.
> QUESTION: May a municipally owned electric light or gas plant furnish current or gas free of charge for any other municipal purposes over and above street lighting?"

The opinion to which you refer was given to your department by me under date of March 20, 1917, and is opinion No. 128. The question therein considered was as to the right of the board of trustees of public affairs of a village, which owns and operates a municipal lighting plant, to furnish current for street lighting without charge. It was held that the trustees had such right.

The opinion referred to applied only to villages and to the lighting of streets. Your present question applies to all municipal purposes and to cities as well as to villages.

Section 3963 General Code, to which you refer, provides the purposes for which water may be furnished without charge by a waterworks plant owned by a city or village. It does not apply to gas or electric plants owned by a municipal corporation.

The statutes covering the question now asked and authorities were considered in the above opinion and need not be quoted or cited herein. The conclusion of that opinion is as follows:

> "The principle seems to be well sustained that a municipality owning a water works system may furnish water for municipal purposes free of charge.
> There would not seem to be any reason why the same rule should not apply to municipal light plants.
> In view of the foregoing statutory provisions and of the general principles of law applicable to the furnishing of free service by a municipal utility to the municipality itself, I am of the opinion that the board of trustees of public affairs of villages which own and operate municipal lighting plants should furnish current for street lighting without charge, if the council of said village requires the same to be done, and that the village council in the exercise of its discretion may require all the expenses of the municipal lighting plant, both for service furnished the municipality itself and private consumers therein, to be paid out of funds received as electric light rentals from private consumers."

This conclusion is broad enough to, and does, answer the question now submitted.

It is therefore within the discretion of council of a municipality to require a gas or electric plant owned and operated by such municipality, to furnish gas or electric current free of charge to such municipality for any and all municipal purposes.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CHILDREN'S HOME—HOW EXPENSE OF EDUCATION OF INMATES THEREOF, WHO ARE NOT RESIDENTS OF SCHOOL DISTRICT IN WHICH HOME IS LOCATED, IS PAID.

1. In complying with the provisions of section 7678 G. C. (107 O. L. 61), the auditors of the various counties, other than the one of the county in which the children's home is located, will deduct from the amounts to be credited to the various school districts of the county any amount that may be due for educating the children in the home who were residents of said district for the six months immediately preceding the semi-annual settlements, and then will forthwith draw their warrants, in favor of the auditor of the county in which the home is located, for the amounts that may be due said district.

2. However, if the certified statement is received after the auditor has made his semi-annual distribution to the various school districts, then he will hold said statement until the next semi-annual distribution, at which time he will deduct the proper amounts for so educating the children in the home, and forthwith draw his warrant in favor of the proper auditor for the amount so due the district in which the home is located.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1917.

HON. T. F. HUDSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have a communication addressed to you by Hon. R. W. McKinney, auditor of Clark county, in which he asks for a construction of section 7678 G. C. (107 O. L. 61), and especially with reference to the word "forthwith."

In order to more fully understand section 7678, we will consider the provisions of sections 7676 and 7677 G. C., in the same act, and also section 2602 G. C.

Section 7676 provides in part as follows:

> "The inmates of a county, semi-public or district children's home shall have the advantage of the privileges of the public schools. * * * ."

The section then provides that this education must be given them either in the home or in the schools of the district in which said home is located.

Section 7677 reads as follows:

> "On or about the first day of February and of August the superintendent of the school district in which the inmates of a county, semi-public or district children's home is located shall furnish the county auditor a detailed report showing the average per capita cost, of conducting a school at such home, or the average per capita cost, except for improvement and repairs, of all the elementary schools in such district in case such inmates attend such a school, for the preceding six months. Such report shall also give the names and former residence of all inmates in attendance at school, the duration of attendance, and such other information as the county auditor may require to carry out the provisions of the next section."

Section 7678 G. C., also in said act, of which a construction is asked, reads as follows:

> "Section 7678. A child who is an inmate of a county, semi-public or district children's home and who was previously a resident of the school district in which such home is located shall be entitled to an education at the expense of such school district, but any child who was not a resident of such school district shall be educated at the expense of the school district of its last residence. Any child who was not a resident of the school district within which such home is located prior to admission or commitment to such home, shall be educated at the expense of the district of its last residence. The county auditor upon receipt of the above report from the board of education shall, before making a semi-annual distribution of taxes collected, estimate the amounts chargeable to the various school districts for tuition of inmates of such home, and shall transfer to the proper school funds such amounts. In case there are inmates from another county, the county auditor of the county in which the home is located shall certify the amount to the auditor of the county of such children's residence who shall forthwith issue his warrant on treasurer of the same county for such amount, and shall proceed to apportion the proper amounts to the various school districts of such county in the manner described above."

It will be seen, from the provisions of the last quoted section, that the cost and expense of educating the children of a home must be paid by the district in which the children were residents at the time they were committed or admitted to the home. The method of doing this is set out in said section 7678, which provides that the county auditor, before making a semi-annual distribution of taxes collected, shall estimate the amounts chargeable to the various school districts for tuition of inmates of such home, and shall transfer such amounts to the proper school funds. This provision has reference to the cost of educating the children of the home who are residents of the same county in which the home is located.

It is further provided in said section, in case there are inmates from another county, that the auditor of the county in which the home is located shall certify the amount to the auditors of the county of such children's residence, and then said auditors shall proceed to apportion the proper amounts to the various school districts of their respective counties "in the manner described above," that is, in the manner in which the auditor of the county in which the home is located apportions the amounts to the various school districts of that county. Provision is also made that the auditors of these counties shall forthwith issue their warrants on the treasurers of these counties, for whatever amount is due from the counties.

Section 2602 G. C. reads in part as follows:

"The auditor shall open an account with each township, city, village, and special school district in the county, in which, immediately after his semi-annual settlement with the treasurer in February and August of each year, he shall credit each with the net amount so collected for its use. * * * ."

With these sections in mind, we will now map out the course to be followed relative to paying the cost and expense of the education of children committed or admitted to county, semi-public or district children's homes.

1. On or about the first day of February and August the superintendent of the school district in which the home is located must give a detailed report to the county auditor in reference to the cost, the number of pupils, their names, their residences, and all the information that may be needed to enable the county auditor to compute the cost and expense of educating the children in the home.

2. In so far as the cost and expense of the children who were residents of the same county as that in which the children's home is located, at the time they were admitted or committed to the home, is concerned, the county auditor would proceed as follows:

When he gives credit to each of the school districts of the county for the amount of money collected for its use, he will deduct from the amount which is due the respective districts of the county the amount, if any, which was expended for the education of the children in the home who were residents of the district at the time they were committed or admitted to the home, and the total of these various amounts he will place to the credit of the district in which the home is located; that is, he will do this every six months. This will balance the accounts of the various school districts located in the county.

3. In taking care of the cost and expense of educating the children of the home who were residents of counties other than the one in which the home is located, the county auditor will certify to the auditor of each county the amount of money spent in the education of the children in the home who were residents of said county at the time they were committed or admitted to the home. Then the auditors of these counties will proceed in the same manner and apportion the cost and expense as did the auditor of the county in which the home is located; that is, each county auditor, in February and August, in crediting the different school districts of the county with the amount of money collected for their use, will deduct from each district the amount, if any, expended for the education of the children of said district who are residents of the home, and place these amounts to the credit of the district in which the home is located.

4. The auditors of the various counties shall then draw their warrants for such amount, on the treasurers of the counties, and forward the same to the proper officer of the county in which the home is located.

Mr. McKinney's questions are:

> "Does the word 'forthwith' mean after the semi-annual settlement has been made? I have at hand requisitions from the auditors of Madison and Logan counties, made upon us after the last settlement. Shall I issue warrants for the same, charging the amounts against the proper school districts of this county, thus creating over-drafts, or shall I hold these vouchers until the time of the next semi-annual apportionment of taxes?"

The evident intention of the legislature, in enacting the above quoted sections, was to the effect that the various auditors of the counties other than the one in which the home is located would receive the certified statement from the auditor of the county in which the home is located, as to the amount of tuition due from each county, in time to enable them to deduct the amounts due from each school district of their counties at each August and February settlement for the tuition expenses of educating the children of the various districts for the six months preceding the first of August and the first of February.

If the certified statement is received in time to enable the auditors so to do, then the auditors of the various counties must deduct the proper amounts from the amounts to be credited and distributed to the districts of the county, and immediately or forthwith draw their warrants in favor of the auditor sending the certified statement. In other words, as soon as the auditors of the different counties have deducted the various amounts, for the education of the children of the districts of their counties, prior to making their semi-annual distribution, they must immediately draw their warrants for the said amounts in favor of the auditor of the county in which the home is located.

But suppose the auditor of the county in which the home is located sends his certified statement to some county auditor so late that the auditor of the county does not get it until after he has distributed the amounts due the various school districts of his county; then what shall he do? Shall he draw his warrant forthwith in favor of the auditor sending the statement, or shall he wait until the next semi-annual distribution of funds among the school districts of his county?

The statutes above quoted are clear to the point that the money necessary to take care of the education of the children in the home shall not come from any fund of the county other than that to which the school districts of the county are entitled from taxation each half year.

Hence it is my view that if the certified statement covering the tuition for any six months, or such part thereof as represents the school attendance, is not received by any auditor in time to enable him to make the proper deductions at any semi-annual distribution for the six months immediately prior to said distribution, he will hold the statement until the next semi-annual distribution, at which time he will make the proper deductions, and then immediately or forthwith draw his warrant in favor of the proper auditor.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ANESTHETICS—ONE WHO RECEIVES BOARD, LODGING, ETC., FOR ADMINISTERING—IS IT TO BE CONSIDERED PRACTICING MEDDICINE.

One who receives board, lodging, laundry, instruments, uniforms, and sometimes allowances for incidental expenses for administering anesthetics is to be considered practicing medicine under General Code section 1286.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1917.

HON. HOWELL WRIGHT, Member 25th Senatorial District, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion as follows:

> "In opinion No. 528 you held that 'the practice of medicine as defined by our laws, applies to any person who uses the words and letters above mentioned (Doctor, etc.) or who administers for a fee or compensation, a drug or medicine.', but in opinion No. 377 you held that: 'The receipt of board, lodging, laundry, uniforms, instruments or allowance for incidental expenses by holders of intern appointments' cannot 'be considered as a practice of medicine within the meaning of section 1286 General Code.'
> You define a fee or compensation as used in that section to be 'something more than merely repaying one for the expense he has been put to in the service of another, or given him with a view of saving him from expense while in the service of another. A fee or compensation implies a net gain of something of value, money, over and above such expense.'
> I desire to ask your opinion whether a nurse receiving merely board, lodging, laundry, instruments, uniforms and sometimes allowance for purely incidental expenses, for administering an anesthetic, is practicing medicine under General Code section 1286."

In your inquiry answered by my opinion No. 377, you ask:

> "Can board and lodging or board and lodging plus any one of the items enumerated in my letter of January 12th, given to an intern in exchange or return for his services rendered in a hospital as such, be properly considered a fee or compensation of any kind, direct or indirect?"

That part of your letter of January 12th, in which you refer to "items enumerated," reads as follows:

> "Hospitals have different plans for compensating interns for services rendered. Practically all hospitals give board and lodging and laundry. In addition some provide a stipulated number of white uniforms each year. Some make cash allowances for incidental expenses, while certain others give in addition to board and lodging certain instruments such as a stethoscope, hammer, scissors, etc."

In the last above quotation you admit that whatever is received by an intern from the hospital is received by way of compensation, when you use the language "hospitals have different plans for compensating interns for services rendered," and then proceed to enumerate the different articles which a hospital furnishes to such interns. Upon consideration, however, of the question as to whether or not such articles would be considered a fee or compensation, I held in said opinion that:

> "Board, lodging, laundry, instruments, uniforms and allowance for incidental expenses, given to holders of intern appointments, cannot be construed to be salary under the resolution of the state medical board, or the receipt of the above mentioned items cannot be considered as a practice of medicine within the meaning of section 1286 G. C."

That is to say, in the rendition of said opinion I took into consideration the fact that there were many, many duties which would be performed in and about a hospital by interns, which, while they would not be considered prescribing, advising and recommending to patients, yet would be administering or dispensing appliances, applications, treatments, etc., but I did not conceive then, neither can I now conceive, how those persons who manage and operate a hospital could entrust to unskilled assistants, who simply work for board and lodging, the performance of such serious matters as administering anesthetics, performing surgical operations or doing those things which require special skill and much learning. I am taking it that each particular case must be decided upon its own facts; that is to say, if in one hospital the nurses and interns are permitted to perform services which require particular skill and learning of that degree necessary to secure a certificate from the state medical board, and the only fees or compensation received are allowance for incidental expenses, uniforms, instruments, laundry, lodging and board, and if the same is being done with the apparent purpose of evading the law, then and in that case I would have no hesitancy in saying that the articles and incidentals received would be considered a fee and compensation for the performance of such services. On the other hand, if in another hospital an intern or nurse is permitted to do only those things which require only a small amount of schooling and of that degree not necessary to secure a license to practice medicine and surgery in the state, and for such services such intern or nurse would receive board, lodging, laundry, instruments, uniforms and allowance for incidental expenses, then and in that event I would hold the same were not fees and compensation as required by section 1286 G. C.

In opinion No. 528 I held that the giving of the various drugs, to produce anesthesia when surgical operations are being performed, constitute the practice of medicine under the provisions of the medical laws of this state and I herein and hereby re-affirm the conclusion reached in said opinion. If when the legislature enacted the statutes in relation to the practice of medicine it intended to exempt interns and nurses in hospitals who were employed and compensated with only board, lodging, laundry, instruments, uniforms and sometimes allowances for incidental expenses, then the legislature could have said so when it enacted section 1287, which provides that the chapter shall not apply to a commissioned medical officer of the United States army, navy or marine hospital service in the discharge of his professional duties, or to a regularly qualified dentist, when engaged exclusively in the practice of dentistry, or when administering anesthetics or to a physician or surgeon residing in another state or territory who is a legal practitioner of medicine or surgery therein, when in consultation with a regular practitioner of this state, nor shall this chapter apply to a physician or surgeon residing on the border of a neighboring state and duly authorized under the laws thereof to practice medicine and surgery therein, whose practice extends within the limits of this state; nor as provided by section 1288, that the chapter shall not apply to osteopaths.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that if a nurse receives board, lodging, laundry, instruments, uniforms, and sometimes allowances for purely incidental expenses for administering anesthetics, it is to be considered a practicing of medicine under General Code section 1286 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNCIL—MAY ISSUE NOTES—TO EXTEND TIME OF PAYMENT OF OBLIGATION OF MUNICIPALITY—WHEN IT FIRST DETERMINES BY RESOLUTION THAT SUCH OBLIGATION IS VALID AND BINDING —NOTES PAYABLE FROM SINKING FUND.

The council of a municipality may borrow money and issue notes of the municipality for a period of one year or longer, under authority of section 3916 General Code, to extend the time of payment of an obligation of the municipality, when council first determines by resolution that such obligation is a valid and binding obligation of the corporation as provided in section 3917 General Code.

Where a municipal corporation has borrowed money and issued notes extending the time of payment of an indebtedness of such corporation under authority of section 3916 General Code, such notes are payable from the sinking fund of such corporation provided for under authority of section 4506 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under recent date you asked for an opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Can a municipality legally issue notes for a period of one year or longer, under authority of section 3916 General Code?

2. If so, are such notes legally payable by the sinking fund?"

Section 3916 General Code to which you refer reads:

> "For the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may issue bonds of the corporation or borrow money so as to change but not to increase the indebtedness, in such amounts, for such length of time and at such rate of interest as the council deems proper, not to exceed six per cent per annum, payable annually or semi-annually."

This section authorizes council to "issue bonds or borrow money." In the commercial world when a private individual borrows money his liability is usually evidenced by a note executed by him.

The above section was under consideration by Hon. U. G. Denman, attorney-general, in an opinion to Hon. Frank A. Baldwin, under date of July 25, 1910, and reported in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1910-1911, page 938. After quoting from said section 3916, he says:

> "It is not necessary under this section, as is apparent from the express terms thereof, to issue bonds. Notes may be issued to take up the notes previously issued, and which have become due."

In an opinion rendered by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, under date of April 5, 1913, to Hon. G. T. Thomas, Vol. II of the Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, page 1485, the syllabus reads:

> "Under sections 3916 and 3917 General Code when council has validly entered into an agreement of compromise of a claim against the city and has issued bonds for the purpose of paying such claim which bonds they are unable to pay on account of taxation limitations, they may either issue notes or bonds for the purpose of extending the time of payment of such indebtedness."

After consideration of the provisions of sections 3916 and 3917 General Code I agree with the above conclusions of my predecessors.

Section 3916 General Code authorizes council to issue bonds or borrow money "for such length of time" as it deems proper.

The council of a municipality may borrow money and issue notes of the municipality for a period of one year or longer, under authority of section 3916, General Code, to extend the time of payment of an obligation of the municipality, when council first determines by resolution that such obligation is a valid aad binding obligation of the corporation as provided in section 3917 General Code.

Your second question is as to the authority of the trustees of the sinking fund to pay such notes issued under authority of section 3916 General Code.

Section 4506 General Code provides:

> "Municipal corporations having outstanding bonds or funded debts shall, through their councils, and in addition to all other taxes authorized by law, levy and collect annually a tax upon all the real and personal property in the corporation sufficient to pay the interest and provide a sinking fund for the extinguishment of all bonds and funded debts and for the payment of all judgments final except in condemnation of property cases, and the taxes so raised shall be used for no other purpose whatever."

The sinking fund provided for herein is "for the extinguishment of all bonds and funded debts." A debt the time of payment of which has been extended by the issuance of notes under authority of section 3916, General Code, would be a funded debt of the municipality within the terms of section 4506 General Code.

Section 4507 General Code provides in part:

> "In each municipality there shall be a board, designated as the trustees of the sinking fund, which shall have the management and control of such sinking fund. * * * ."

Section 4517 General Code provides:

> "The trustees of the sinking fund shall have charge of and provide for the payment of all bonds issued by the corporation, the interest maturing thereon and the payment of all judgments final against the corporation, except in condemnation of property cases. They shall receive from the auditor of the city or clerk of the village all taxes, assessments and moneys collected for such purposes and invest and disburse them in the manner provided by law. For the satisfaction of any obligation under their supervision, the trustees of the sinking fund may sell or use any of the securities or money in their possession."

This section apparently limits the authority of the sinking fund trustees to the "payment of all bonds issued by the corporation, the interest maturing thereon and the payment of all judgments final," except in condemnation cases.

Under section 4506 General Code, supra, the sinking fund is created, among other purposes, for the payment of the "funded debts" of the municipality, and by virtue of section 4507 General Code the trustees of the sinking fund "shall have the management and control of such sinking fund." It is clearly the intent of these sections that funded debts should be paid from the sinking fund and that the trustees of the sinking fund should have the management and control of such fund. The mere failure to insert the words "funded debts" in section 4517 General Code will not deprive the trustees of the sinking fund of authority to pay the funded debts of the municipality from the sinking fund.

Where a municipal corporation has borrowed money and issued notes extending the time of payment of an indebtedness of such corporation under authority of section 3916 General Code such notes are payable from the sinking fund of such corporation provided under authority of section 4506 General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TEACHER—WHO HAS TAUGHT IN STATE 35 YEARS AND IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF COUNTY 11½ YEARS AND CONTRIBUTED TO PENSION FUND—ENTITLED TO TEACHER'S PENSION.

A teacher who has taught in this state for thirty-five years and in the public schools of a county eleven and one-half years and has contributed to the teachers' pension fund in the district where such fund is created for seven years and eight months, is entitled to a teacher's pension under section 7891 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1918.

HON. PERRY SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of recent date you submit for my opinion the following statement of facts:

> "Professor W. C. B. has been engaged, continuously, as superintendent of the Zanesville schools from January 1, 1910, to August 31, 1917.
> He was not re-employed by the board of education and during May of this year the board of education employed another person to take up the duties of said superintendent beginning September 1, 1917. Mr. B. was applicant for the re-employment and did not resign and his application was before the board at the time they re-employed the other party.
> The city of Zanesville is in Muskingum county, Ohio, and there is a school teacher's pension fund in said district created by the resolution of the board of education of said district and Mr. B. was a contributor to this fund continuously from the time it was established. Mr. B. has been teaching school in Ohio continuously for 35 years next preceding this date and has taught in public schools of Muskingum county, including his services in the city of Zanesville eleven and one-half years.
> Mr. B. is claiming the same under General Code 7891 and other sections of the same act. From this statement of facts I would like to have your opinion whether Mr. B. is entitled to pension or not."

Your inquiry involves the determination of the conditions under which a teacher may receive pension, if at all, when such teacher fails to be re-employed by a board of education.

Teachers' pensions are provided for in Chapter IX, Title V, part 2 of the General Code.

Section 7858 thereof provides that when the board of education of a school district, by resolution, which resolution must be adopted by a majority vote of the members of such board, declares that it is advisable to create a school teachers' pension fund for that school district, such pension fund shall then be so created and shall be under the management and control of a board to be known as "a board of trustees of the school teachers' pension fund" for such district.

Section 7877 G. C. provides that when the board of education of a school district has so declared the advisability of creating a school teachers' pension fund, its clerk shall notify each teacher in the public schools and high schools, if any, of the school district, by notice in writing of the passage of such resolution, and shall require the teachers to notify the board in writing within thirty days from the date of such notice whether they consent or decline to accept the provisions of law for creating such a fund.

Section 7880 G. C. provides:

"Such board of education of such school district, and a union, or other separate board, if any, having the control and management of the high schools of such district, may each by a majority vote of all the members composing the board on account of physical or mental disability, retire any teacher under such board who has taught for a period aggregating twenty years. One-half of such period of service must have been rendered by such beneficiary in the public schools or high schools of such school district, or in the public schools or high schools of the county in which they are located, and the remaining one-half in the public schools of this state or elsewhere."

Section 7881 G. C. provides:

"The term 'teacher,' in this chapter, shall include all teachers regularly employed by either of such boards in the day schools, including the superintendent of schools, all superintendents of instruction, principals, and special teachers, but in estimating years of service, only service in public day schools or day high schools, supported in whole or in part by public taxation, shall be considered."

Section 7882 G. C. reads:

"Any teacher may retire and become a beneficiary under this chapter who has taught for a period aggregating thirty years. But one-half of such term of service must have been rendered in the public schools or in the high schools of such school district, or in the public schools or high schools of the county in which the district is located, and the remaining one-half in the public schools of this state or elsewhere."

Section 7883 G. C. provides:

"Each teacher so retired or retiring shall be entitled during the remainder of his or her natural life to receive as pension, annually twelve dollars and fifty cents for each year of service as teacher, except that in no event shall the pension paid to a teacher exceed four hundred and fifty dollars in any one year. Such pensions shall be paid monthly during the school year."

Section 7884 G. C. provides:

"No such pension shall be paid until the teacher contributes, or has contributed, to such fund a sum equal to twenty dollars a year for each year of service rendered as teacher, but which sum shall not exceed six hundred dollars. Should any teacher retiring be unable to pay the full amount of this sum before receiving a pension, in paying the annual pension to such retiring teacher, the board of trustees must withhold on each month's payment twenty per cent thereof, until the amount above provided has been thus contributed to the fund."

Section 7891 G. C. provides:

"A teacher who resigns, upon application within three (3) months after such resignation takes effect, shall be entitled to receive one-half of the total amount paid by such teacher into such fund. If at any time a teacher who is willing to continue in the service of the board of education is not re-employed or is discharged before his term of service aggregates twenty years, then to such teacher shall be paid back at once all the money he or she may have contributed under this law. But if any teacher who has taught for a period aggregating twenty years is not re-employed by the board of education, such failure to re-employ shall be deemed his retiring, and such teacher shall be entitled to a pension according to the provisions of this act."

By the above quoted sections three conditions may arise under which teachers may receive pensions. If the board of education of the school district which has created a pension fund by a majority vote thereof, retires any teacher who has taught for a period of twenty years on account of physical or mental disability, then such teacher may receive a pension provided for in said chapter, if one-half of said period of twenty years' service has been rendered by such teacher in the public schools or high schools of such school district, or in the public schools or high schools of the county in which such district is located, and the remaining one-half in the public schools of this state or elsewhere; that is to say, if a teacher is found by a board of education to be disabled, either physically or mentally, the board of education may retire such teacher and if such teacher has taught for twenty years in the public schools, one-half of which time shall have been spent in the public schools of the county in which such district is located and the other half in the schools of this state or elsewhere, then such teacher may receive pension as provided in said chapter.

In your case no physical or mental disability exists. The teacher was an applicant for a re-employment and without any such finding of physical or mental disability such teacher failed to be re-employed. Another teacher was employed in his stead and it cannot be said that on account of the failure of the board to so re-employ said teacher that it therefore follows, as a matter of law, that such teacher is physically or mentally disabled.

It is held in Venable vs. Schaffer, 7 O. C. C., (n. s.) 337, that:

"All terms should be given a fair interpretation, without favor, and where one does not come within the express terms, there is no reason to strain them to include such person."

In your case it would be necessary to strain the facts to bring the teacher within the provisions of section 7880, and hence I must conclude that he could not receive pension under the provisions of said section.

Section 7882 G. C. provides that any teacher may retire and become a beneficiary under this chapter who has taught for a period aggregatiug thirty years and it is suggested that if the teacher in your case does not come within the provisions of section 7880, then such teacher might be considered within the terms of section 7882 because he has taught in the schools of Ohio continuously for thirty-five years next preceding the date of your letter.

Said section 7882 provides that one-half of such term of thirty years' service must have been rendered in the public schools or in the high schools of the school district from which such teacher expects to receive pension, or in the public schools or high schools of the county in which such district is located, and the remaining half in the public schools in this state or elsewhere. Only seven years and eight months time was served by said teacher in the schools of the district and eleven and one-half years in the county in which said district is located. Manifestly, then, said teacher cannot receive pension under the provisions of said section 7882.

So that, I advise you that the teacher not being able to come within the provisions of either section 7880 or 7882, is not entitled to a teacher's pension as far as those two sections are concerned.

Section 7891 G. C. provides if at any time a teacher who is willing to continue in the service of the board of education is not re-employed or is discharged before his term of service aggregates twenty years, then to such teacher shall be paid back at once all the money he or she may have contributed under this law, and that if any such teacher, who has taught for a period aggregating twenty years, is not re-employed by the board of education, such failure to re-employ shall be deemed his retiring and such teacher shall be entitled to a pension according to the provisions of this act. Nothing is said in said section that the teaching experience necessary to make up the term of twenty years shall have been rendered in the district in which the failure to re-employ occurred, and from the fact that the amount of service to be rendered in the district is mentioned in sections 7880 and 7882 before a teacher is entitled to pension, it is to be presumed that it was intentionally omitted from section 7891 G. C. It is entirely within the province of the board of education to ascertain the length of time a person has taught school prior to the time such person is employed by such board and if a board employs a person who has taught a long number of years, and, as in your case, fails to re-employ such person, I take it the legislature intended that a failure to re-employ shall be deemed to stand in the place of a finding of disability, as provided by section 7880, and such teacher is then entitled to the provisions of said chapter. In your case the teacher has taught more than twenty years and the board did fail to re-employ such teacher, but instead of re-employing him said board employed another. Nothing, it seems to me, could bring said teacher clearer within the provisions of section 7891.

I therefore advise you that under the statement of facts in your letter the teacher, W. C. B., is entitled to pension as provided by said chapter.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BONDS—SHAKER HEIGHTS VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 27, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Shaker Heights Village school district, in the sum of $250,000.00, for the purpose of purchasing a site for and erecting and furnishing school house thereon and purchasing real estate for playgound for children.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Shaker Heights village school district relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in accord with the essential requirements of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

The only irregularity of any kind in the proceedings is that presented by the fact that the board of education of this school district canvassed the vote of the electors on the proposition of issuing said bonds and entered the result thereof on its records at a regular meeting of the board held November 7, 1917, said date being the day after the election on said bond issue proposition. Section 5120 General Code provides that in school elections the board of education shall canvass the vote of such election on the second Monday after the election. I am of the opinion that the provision of the section of the General Code just noted, in so far as it prescribes the time when the board of education shall canvass such vote, is directory rather than mandatory and that the proceedings are not fatally defective, notwithstanding the board may canvass such vote at a legal meeting other than one held at the time prescribed in said section.

Finding said defect in these proceedings not to be fatal to the validity of the bond issue, and not finding any other objection of any kind to the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of the school district relating to this bond issue, I am of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

I have not been able to approve in all respects the bond form submitted as a part of the transcript and have on my own initiative prepared a bond form covering this bond issue which I am mailing to the legal counsel of said school district with instructions to have same printed at once.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—MAY PERMIT THE USE OF SCHOOL PROPERTY FOR HOLDING GRANGE MEETINGS.

A board of education has a right upon request and upon the payment of the proper janitor fees to permit the use of any school house and the rooms therein and the grounds and other property under its control, when not in actual use for school purposes, for the use of holding grange meetings. The fact that the grange holds secret sessions will not prevent the above general proposition of section 7622-3 from applying.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 27, 1917.

HON. MILTON HAINES, Prosecuting Attorney, Marysville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your statement of facts upon which you ask my opinion is as follows:

"On page 607 of the Laws of Ohio, Vol. 107, we find the following law passed by our last legislature:

'Section 1. That section 7622-3 of the General Code of Ohio be amended to read as follows:

Sec. 7622-3. The board of education of any school district shall, upon request and the payment of the proper janitor fees, subject to such regulation as may be adopted by such board, permit the use of any school house and rooms therein, and the grounds and other property under its control, when not in actual use for school purposes, for any of the following purposes:

1. For giving instructions in any branch of education, learning or the arts.

2. For holding educational, civic, social or recreational meetings and entertainments, and for such other purposes as may make for the welfare of the community. Such meetings and entertainments shall be non-exclusive and open to the general public.

3. For public library purposes, as a station for a public library, or as reading rooms.

4. For polling places, for holding elections and for registration of voters, for holding grange or similar meetings.

Sec. 2. That original section 7622-3 of the General Code be and the same is hereby repealed.'

In our county there is a grange organization that claims under the provisions of this act they are entitled to the right of holding their regular secret sessions in the auditorium of the school building. Being much in doubt as to whether the clause 'shall be non-exclusive and open to the general public' applies to and affects such a meeting, I am writing you for an opinion and construction of this law."

Inasmuch as you have quoted the entire section in which the language is found upon which you desire a construction placed, it will not be necessary to repeat it in its entirety, and I shall refer to only those parts which need special consideration.

When section 7622-3 was amended in 107 O. L., 607, there were two changes made. First, the word "may" was changed by the amendment to "shall" in the phrase "the board of education * * * shall, etc.," and the other phrase is a new one which appears in the amended section for the first time and reads:

"Upon request and the payment of the proper janitor fees."

Said section 7622-3 in substance provides that the board of education of any school district shall permit the use of any school house and the rooms therein and the grounds and other property under its control, for certain purposes outside of school work. The section also provides that a request must be made of the board for such use and that the proper janitor's fees must be paid, that such use can only take place at such time as the same is not actually used for school purposes and that the certain uses are restricted to those things set out in said section.

One of the uses to which said property may be subjected is "for holding grange or other similar meetings," and opinion No. 168, rendered by this department to Hon. D. M. Cupp, prosecuting attorney of Delaware county, which opinion was rendered, April 5, 1917, will be found of assistance in arriving at a conclusion to your question.

After reviewing the legislation which led up to the enactment of said section, as it appeared prior to the last amendment referred to by you, and making it plain that I was not passing upon the constitutionality of the law in its entirety, I reached in said opinion No. 168 the following conclusion:

> "I can gather but one intention from said language and that is that it was the intention of the legislature to permit the board of education of any school district, subject to such regulation as might be adopted by the board, to permit the use of any school house and rooms therein and the grounds and property under its control, when not used for school purposes, to be used for holding grange meetings."

When said opinion was rendered said section 7622-3 read in part: "The board of education * * * may," but as amended in 107 O. L., 607, as above noted, it now reads in part: "The board of education * * * shall." The effect of the change from "may" to "shall" is ordinarily to change the statute from being directory to that of being mandatory.

Lewis' Sutherland on Statutory Construction, Vol. 2, page 1155, says:

> "The word 'shall' in its ordinary sense is imperative. When the word 'shall' is used in a statute and a right or benefit to any one depends upon giving it an imperative construction, then that word is to be regarded as peremptory."

In speaking of the word "shall," the author says:

> "As used in statutes the word is generally mandatory."

and it would seem to me that where the only change in the statute is the changing of directory language to language which is mandatory that the legislature must necessarily have meant that the statute should have such mandatory construction.

Answering your question, then, I advise you that following said opinion No. 168, a copy of which I am enclosing to you herewith, and from the fact that the language of of said section 7622-3 was changed from that which is directory in its nature to that which is mandatory in its nature, I must advise you that the grange organization of your county has a right, under the provisions of said act, to hold their regular sessions in the auditorium of the school building and that the clause "shall be non-exclusive and open to the general public" does not so modify or change the effect of said mandatory language in reference to grange meetings as to prevent the same. As stated in opinion No. 168, I hereby again advise you that I am not passing upon the constitutionality of the act in its entirety.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—MAY NOT EXTEND A TEACHER'S CONTRACT FOR ONE OR MORE YEARS—WHEN BOARD MAY EMPLOY TEACHER—"MAJORITY VOTE" DEFINED.

A board of education of a village school may not extend a teacher's contract one or more years, but may enter into a new contract not to exceed three years, by agreement between the board of education and the teacher, and the new contract will stand in the place of and be a substitute for the old one.

The present board of education cannot enter into a contract with a teacher, extending the present term, because the term must begin within four months after the date of the appointment.

A board of education may employ a teacher only after such teacher has been nominated therefor by the district superintendent of the supervision district in which the school for which such teacher is employed is located, except by a majority vote.

"Majority vote" in this instance means a majority of the full membership of the board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 27, 1917.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of November 21, 1917, you request my opinion on the following:

> "In the matter of employing teachers for the grades and high school in a village school district, may the board of educatoin, with authority under the law, extend the contract one or more years by agreement of the board of education and the teacher?
> May the present board of education enter into a contract with the teacher, extending their present contract one year, making the same binding upon the board of education taking office January 1, 1918?"

General Code section 7705 reads in part:

> "The board of education of each village, * * * school district shall employ the teachers of the public schools of the district for a term not longer than three school years, to begin within four months of the date of appointment. The local board shall employ no teacher for any school unless such teacher is nominated therefor by the district superintendent of the supervision district in which such school is located except by a majority vote. In all high schools and consolidated schools one of the teachers shall be designated by the board as principal and shall be the administrative head of such school."

That is, under the above quoted section the board of education of the village school district to which you refer has the right to employ the teachers of the public schools of such district and "public schools," as therein referred to, would include the grade schools and the high schools referred to by you. But, it is provided that the term must begin within four months of the day of the appointment and the term shall not extend for a period of more than three years. Section 7691 G. C. provides that no person shall be appointed as a teacher for a term less than one year except to fill an unexpired term and that the term shall begin within four months of the date of the appointment. Section 7689 G. C. provides that the school year shall begin on the first day of September each year and shall close on the 31st day of August of the succeeding year, and I am of the opinion that the one year referred to in section 7691 and the three years referred to in section 7705 mean school years instead of calendar years and that the term of employment is meant to begin at the beginning of the school year. Manifestly, then, a teacher whose term would begin on September 1st in any year, to be hired within four months of that date would have to be hired after May 1st of the calendar year in which the term would begin.

If, then, a teacher has been hired for a term of three years and is serving the first year of his term, I am taking it that you intend to inquire if such teacher could enter into a contract within the year, or say after May 1st of the calendar year, for a term to begin the first day of the following September and for a term of three years from that time. That is, can a new contract be substituted for the old one? It is perfectly proper for the parties to a contract to change the terms of such contract as long as the change is not in any manner a violation of law. If the board of education and a teacher, for instance, desire the term to be three years from the first day of the following September instead of two years, they have a right to enter into a new contract covering the three year period, which new contract would be an abrogation or abandonment of the old contract and a substituting of the new. It would not be proper to change the salary, even during the term, without there be a new consideration.

It was held in Ward vs. Board of Education, 21 O. C. C., 699, that:

> "Although Revised Statutes section 4017 (General Code 7690) authorizes boards of education to increase the salaries of public school teachers during the term for which they are appointed, where a teacher has been appointed for a definite term at a fixed salary, an increase of such salary during such term without a change of duties and with no new contract, will not give such teacher a right of action to recover therefor."

That is, it would be necessary to substitute a new contract for the old one in order that any change in salary be effected and that simply permitting the term to remain the same and endeavoring to increase the salary, without a change in the duties, would be such a change as would be ineffective, because there would be no consideration for the change. But I do not understand that your question falls in that class. I am taking it that you desire first to inquire if a new contract can be entered into which will be a substitute for and stand in the place of the old one and which new contract changes the term of the old one. In answer thereto I advise you that the same can be done.

Secondly, I understand that you mean to inquire whether the board of education which is now in power can make such new contract or can make such extension of the term. This manifestly cannot be done because the length of time which is required by the statute when the term shall begin after the same is entered into is such as will prohibit the present board from entering into the new contract which in effect extends such period of time. In other words, it will be necessary for the board of education which is in power on May 1st of the calendar year in which the term begins to make such change, if any change is so made.

It must also be remembered that section 7705 G. C. provides "that the local board shall employ no teacher for any school unless such teacher is nominated therefor by the district superintendent of the supervision district in which such school is located, except by a majority vote." That is, before the local board of education and the teacher are permitted to enter into a contract of employment, whether it be for an original term or it amounts to an extension of an existing term, the district superintendent of the supervision district must first nominate such teacher for the position covered by the proposed employment contract. If such district superintendent refuses to make such nomination, "majority vote" as used in this instance means the majority of the full membership of the board of education and not merely the majority of those members who happen to be present at the particular meeting at which such agreement is sought to be entered into.

Answering your questions, then, in the order in which you ask them, I advise you that a board of education of a village school may not extend teacher's contracts one or more years, but may enter into a new contract the term of which shall not exceed three years, and this may be done by agreement between the board of education and the teacher, and the new contract will stand in the place of and be a substitute for the old one.

The present board of education cannot enter into a contract with a teacher, extending the present term, because the term must begin within four months after the date of the appointment.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CLERK—OF MUNICIPAL COURT OF ZANESVILLE—APPOINTED BY JUDGE OF SAID COURT.

1. The clerk provided for in the act of the legislature creating a municipal court of the city of Zanesville, Ohio, (107 O. L. 722 et seq.) must be appointed by the judge of said court.

2. The mayor of the city of Zanesville has no authority under the provisions of section 218 of the Zanesville charter, to appoint the clerk of the municipal court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 29, 1917.

HON. PERRY SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in which you ask an opinion upon the following state of facts:

> "The municipal court of the city of Zanesville goes into effect January 1, 1918, and there is some doubt as to whether the mayor elect of the city of Zanesville or the judge elect of said court has the power of appointing the clerk, but the statute (Vol. 107, section 24, page 728), states that the clerk shall be chosen without stating who shall appoint, but gives the judge of said court the power to fill vacancies therein."

The act establishing a municipal court for the city of Zanesville, Ohio, and fixing the jurisdiction thereof, providing for a judge thereof and other necessary officers, and defining their duties, is found in 107 O. L. 722 et seq.

Section 1 ofthe act reads as follows:

"That there be, and hereby is created a court of record for the city of Zanesville, Muskingum county, Ohio, to be styled 'The Municipal Court of the City of Zanesville, Ohio,' with jurisdiction as herein and hereinafter fixed and determined."

Section 2 of said act provides the qualifications, term and salary of the judge.

The succeeding sections in detail specify the jurisdiction and procedure in such court.

Section 24 provides:

"A clerk for said municipal court shall be chosen and shall receive such compensation payable out of the treasury of the city of Zanesville as the city council may prescribe. Deputies to the clerk shall be designated as hereinafter provided in this act."

Section 25 prescribes the powers and duties of the clerk.
Section 27 provides for a bailiff who "shall be appointed by the judge of such court."

Sections 33, 34, and 35 of said act provide:

"Section 33. Whenever the incumbent of any office created by this act shall be temporarily absent or incapacitated from acting, the judge shall appoint a substitute who shall have all the qualifications required of the incumbent of the office. Such appointee shall serve until the return of the regular incumbent, or until his incapacity ceases. In case said judge shall be incapacitated from sitting in any case, or by reason of absence or inability be unable to attend sessions of said court, the mayor of the city may appoint some attorney having the qualifications required by this act, to act in his stead until said judge is able to resume his said position.

Section 34. The municipal court shall be the successor of the police court of the city of Zanesville, and the courts of any justices of the peace for Zanesville, and all proceedings, judgments, executions, dockets, papers, moneys, property and persons subject to the jurisdiction of said police court of the city of Zanesville and said courts of any justice of the peace for Zanesville township on December 31, 1917, shall be turned over to the municipal court herein created; and thereafter the cause shall proceed in the municipal court as if originally instituted therein, the parties making such amendments to their pleadings as required to conform to the rules of said court.

Section 35. The judge of the municipal court shall be subject to the same disabilities and may be removed from office for the same causes as the judges of the court of common pleas. The vacancies arising from any cause shall be filled as prescribed for the filling of vacancies of police courts."

Under this act the legislature has seen fit to create "a court of record for the city of Zanesville, Muskingum county, Ohio," and styled it "The Municipal Court of the City of Zanesville, Ohio," and the provisions of the act are similar in many respects to the provisions of like acts creating municipal courts in other municipalities of the state, except that no provision is expressly made prescribing how the clerk of said court is to be chosen.

Some of the legislative acts creating municipal courts expressly provide for the election of the clerk, fixing his term, etc., while some few place the appointment of the clerk in the hands of the judge or some other appointing power. The legislature did enact that a clerk of said court "shall be chosen," but did not prescribe the manner of his choosing.

In the charter adopted by the city of Zanesville on November 2, 1915, will be found certain sections seeking to establish a municipal court.

Section 212 of the charter reads:

> "There is hereby created and established a municipal court of the city of Zanesville, and the offices of the judge and clerk of said court. Said court shall be styled the 'Municipal Court' and shall be a court of record."

Section 213 of said charter prescribes the jurisdiction of the court.
Section 214 prescribes the qualifications and term of the judge of said court.
Section 215 fixes his salary and further provides that:

> " * * * All fines prescribed as a penalty for the commission of any offense, and all costs assessed, whether in said municipal court or in any other court of record to which such offender may be bound and in which he is finally tried, shall be paid into the city treasury to the credit of such fund as may be directed by the city council."

Section 216 prescribes how a vacancy in the judgeship should be filled.
Section 217 provides for the duties of the clerk.
Section 218 reads as follows:

> "The clerk of the municipal court shall be chosen by the mayor, from the eligible list of the classified service under the civil service provisions of this charter."

Section 225 of said charter, which is the last section of the subdivision entitled "Municipal Court," reads as follows:

> "The municipal court shall be established, and the offices of judge and clerk thereof shall be created upon the conferring by the general assembly of Ohio upon said municiapl court, of all the powers and jurisdiction of justices of the peace and the police court of the city of Zanesville, together with all rights of appeal and error from said tribunals."

Under the terms of section 225 of said charter, the establishment of the municipal court, as well as of the offices of judge and clerk thereof, was to be subject to the conferring by the general assembly upon said municipal court of all the powers and jurisdiction of justices of the peace and the police court of the city of Zanesville, together with all rights of appeal and error from said tribunals.

Now, the municipal act as found in 107 O. L. 722 et seq., did not purport to impose any powers or jurisdiction upon a proposed charter municipal court of the city of Zanesville. The act in question was, as before stated, similar to like enactments creating municipal courts in other municipalities, and no reference is found in the legislative act referring in any manner to the proposed municipal court under the charter provisions.

True, the legislative municipal court is made the successor of the police court of the city of Zanesville. Under section 3 of the above act the court is given the same jurisdiction in criminal matters and prosecution for misdemeanor or violation of ordinances as heretofore had by the police court of Zanesville and any justice of the peace, and in addition thereto certain civil jurisdiction. But it appears to me that if the legislature intended in any way to vivify or give life to said municipal court, under the charter, by some sort of enabling act, reference would have been made in the act to such charter court.

I might say in passing that the provisions of section 213 of the charter, giving jurisdiction in all criminal cases to the charter court, would be in conflict with the holding of Judge Smith of the court of appeals, First district, in a recent case where the constitutionality of the Middletown charter municipal court was in question.

It is my view that the provisions of the charter of the city of Zanesville, regarding the municipal court therein provided for, are each and all of no effect, because the legislature as yet has not attempted to do the very thing that section 225 of the charter makes a prerequisite to the establishment of the municipal court and the offices of judge and clerk thereof.

So it is my holding that section 218 of the charter, prescribing that the clerk of the municipal court shall be chosen by the mayor, is no authority to the mayor in the present case.

An examination of the various sections of the legislative act evidences a legislative intent of giving certain powers of appointment to the judge of the court established. The title of the act is:

> "To establish a municipal court for the city of Zanesville, Muskingum county, Ohio, and fix the jurisdiction thereof, provide for a judge thereof and other necessary officers, and define their duties, * * * ."

The judge is given the power to appoint the bailiff. He is likewise given the power to appoint a substitute for the incumbent of any office created by this act, who is temporarily absent or incapacitiated from acting.

Under the reasoning of our supreme court, in a case involving the right of that court to appoint its clerk, it can well be argued that the judge, owing to the powers and duties specifically prescribed by the act creating the court, is authorized to appoint the clerk, who shall be chosen for such court. In said case, styled State ex rel. v. Graves, 91 O. S. 23, Shauck, J., speaking of the clerk of that court, says at p. 24:

> "He is vested with no discretion in any respect. He is only an arm of the court for issuing its process, entering its judgments and performing like duties which the court itself might perform. His services are employed only for the more convenient performance of those functions of the court which are clerical in their nature. It is only in an arbitrary or secondary sense of the word 'officer' that it can be applied to him. From the nature of his duties and his relation to the court, the power to appoint a clerk when necessary to the convenient and efficient exercise of its functions is inherent in the court, as are the like powers to punish for contempt, to appoint and remove members of the bar and to grant ancillary injunctions in the exercise of its jurisdiction in order that the status of a subject in controversy may remain unchanged, so that its jurisdiction when exercised will be effective. These powers inhere in the court without special grant, either in constitution or statute, because they are all implied in every conception of a court when courts are created by the constitution."

True, the learned judge was speaking of the clerk of that particular court, which is the court of last resort in Ohio. Yet the rule is not limited, for Cyc., Vol. II, at p. 723, lays down the general proposition that a court, as a court of record, possesses the inherent right to provide such attendants and assistants as are a necesssary means of conducting its business with reasonable dispatch.

In State ex rel. v. Graves, supra, at p. 25, will be found the following language, referring to the clerk of the supreme court:

> " * * * the duties of the clerk of the court are the duties of the court itself and embraced within the grant of judicial power. This is obvious, not only from the character of his duties and his relation to the tribunal, but from the practice in the federal courts and the courts of the states where the subject is not affected by special provisions. * * * ."

Then the court refers to the claim that the constitutional provision found in Art. IV, Sec. 16 included the clerk of the court in question. This section reads as follows:

> "There shall be elected in each county, by the electors thereof, one clerk of the court of common pleas, who shall hold his office for the term of three years, and until his successor shall be elected and qualified. He shall, by virtue of his office, be clerk of all other courts of record held therein; but, the general assembly may provide, by law, for the election of a clerk, with like term of office, f or each or any other of the courts of record, and may authorize the judge of the probate court to perform the duties of clerk for his court, under such regulations as may be directed by law. Clerks of courts shall be removable for such cause and in such manner as shall be prescribed by law."

Concerning this contention, Judge Shauck, at p. 26 of the opinion in State ex rel. v. Graves, supra, says:

> "The subject of this provision obviously is courts of the counties. * * * The phraseology of the provision is doubtless affected in part by the provisions of the constitution of 1802, which made the supreme court a court in every county of the state by the express provision that it should in every year hold a session in each county of the state."

The opinion concludes with the observation that the court has ample authority without any aid from the legislature, to appoint a clerk "in the absence of valid provisions providing for his selection in another mode."

The direct question whether or not the clerk of the court of common pleas is by virtue of his office clerk of a municipal court was raised in the case of O'Malley v. De Vald & Dietz Co., 57 W. L. B. 158. In this case it appeared that by legislative act a municipal court was provided for Cleveland, the act providing that the clerk of said court should be elected. The claim was made that the clerk so elected was not the clerk of the court, on the ground that the legislative provision for the election of a clerk was in contravention of Art. IV, Sec. 16, supra. The first paragraph of the syllabus in this case reads:

> "While the municipal court of Cleveland is a court of record, yet Art. IV, Sec. 16, of the constitution, which provides that the clerk of the court of common pleas shall hold his office for a term of three years and shall be, by virtue of his office, clerk of all other courts of record held in his county, refers only to county courts and does not make him the clerk of the municipal court."

At p. 159 Beebe, J., says:

> "Manifestly, the first part of Art. IV, Sec. 16, of the constitution, was never intended to apply to city or municipal courts. A special grant of authority to provide by law for the election of clerks of other courts of record is authority to provide for clerks of 'such other courts inferior to the supreme court as the general assembly may from time to time establish' under Art. IV, Sec. 1, of the constitution, and is part of the same general scheme.
> Nor is there any reason that appeals to us why the clerk of the municipal court and the common pleas court should be the same person. If this were so, we should be confronted by the freak situation of a clerk of a county court, resident perhaps of the village of Bedford, elected by the electors of Bedford and other townships, holding the office of clerk of the municipal or city court of Cleveland. This surely was not the intent of the framers of the constitution and is entirely contrary to the policy of the constitution and laws of Ohio."

This case seems to have gone no further than the court of trial, which was the municipal court of Cleveland, but the reasoning therein found I think is conclusive upon the question.

At p. 161 in the last mentioned citation, the court uses the following language:

> "Given the power to create courts, there is, by necessary implication, full authority to provide for such machinery and officers as are necessary to carry on the business of such courts, and to enable them to perform the functions for which they are created.
> A clerk to issue papers and perform the ministerial acts of a court is as necessary to the existence of a court as is the judge. The very nature of claim set up in this opinion—that there being no legally elected and acting clerk, the court has no jurisdiction to entertain and try this action—shows how vital a part of a court the clerk is. The claim reduced down to the fewest words is: 'No legally elected clerk; no court.'
> Instead of that, the converse of the proposition is true. Authority to create a court; authority to provide for a clerk for same."

I have no hesitancy in concurring with the court in the above case on the propositions therein decided.

The legislature in the act creating the Zanesville municipal court of course could have provided for the election of a clerk of that court and fixed the term of his office. It had full authority so to do. But reading the act in question from its four corners, an intent appears that the clerk of the municipal court so created shall be chosen by some one, instead of being elected, and to my mind there is sufficient in the act, read in its entirety, to conclude that the appointing power was the judge of the court so created.

In section 11 of the act (107 O. L. 726) it will be noted that the judge of this m nicipal court has conferred upon him:

> " * * * all powers which are now or may hereafter be conferred upon the court of common pleas or the judge thereof, * * * or are necessary for the exercise of the jurisdiction herein conferred and for the enforcement of the judgments and orders of the court."

The general assembly in other acts creating municipal courts has placed the appointment of the clerk of said court sometimes in the hands of the judge of the court and at another time in the hands of some other appointing power.

Assuming the right of the legislature to provide for the appointment in the manner that it has in some instances done, I do not think that even an entire absence to make provision under the act creating the Zanesville court could possibly leave the court without a clerk.

Under the doctrine laid down by our supreme court in State ex rel. v. Graves, supra, the court would have an inherent right to appoint its clerk.

Coming then to your specific question, from all the foregoing it is my opinion that the clerk provided for under the act of the legislature creating the municipal court of the city of Zanesville (107 O. L. 722 et seq.) must be appointed by the judge elect of said court, and that the mayor of the city of Zanesville has no authority to make said appointment.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEE—WHEN CANDIDATE FOR SAID OFFICE, WHO RECEIVES LARGEST VOTE, DIES ON ELECTION DAY—DUTY OF JUSTICE OF THE PEACE TO APPOINT QUALIFIED PERSON.

1. Where M., who was serving as township trustee and whose term of office would have expired on January 1, 1918, was a andidate for re-election at the November, 1917, election, but died on the day of the election, having received a sufficient number of votes to elect him to the office for which he was a candidate, it was the duty of the justice of the peace holding the oldest commission in the township to appoint a qualified person to fill out the unexpired term.

2. Such appointee will be the incumbent at the time the new term would have begun had M. lived, with a right to remain until his successor is elected and qualified.

3. Such successor will be elected at the regular election for trustee in November, 1919.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 29, 1917.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you submit the following facts for an official opinion:

> "M, who was serving as township trustee and whose term of office expired January 1, 1918, was a candidate for re-election at the election held November 6, 1917, but died on the day of election about an hour after the opening of the polls. He received the third highest number of votes, receiving more votes than G, who was the fourth highest of the candidates, there being three to be elected.
> The justice of the peace who held the oldest commission appointed a person to fill out the unexpired term of M. Another justice of the peace on January 1, 1918, will have the oldest commission.
> Will there be a vacancy in the office of trustee on January 1, 1918, at which time the new term of M, had he lived, would begin, or will the appointee for the short term hold over until the general election in November, 1919?"

Section 3262 G. C. provides as follows:

> "When for any cause a township is without a board of trustees or there is a vacancy in such board, the justice of the peace of such township holding the oldest commission, or in case the commission of two or more of such justices bear even date, the justice oldest in years, shall appoint a suitable person or persons, having the qualifications of electors in the township to fill such vacancy or vacancies for the unexpired term."

Under the above section, the vacancy occurring by reason of the death of M on November 6 was properly filled by the justice of the peace who held the oldest commission, and the person so appointed under that section is to fill such vacancy "for the unexpired term."

Since M died on election day and received the third highest number of votes and would have been elected had he lived, as to the office for which M was voted for, there was no election.

The sole question, as stated by you, is, will there be a vacancy in the office of trustee on January 1, 1918, the beginning of the new term, or will the appointee, appointed by reason of the death of M on November 6, 1917, hold over until his successor is chosen at the general election in November, 1919?

I think the case cited by you, of State ex rel. v. Speidel, et al., 62 O. S. 156, is decisive of the question. The first paragraph of the syllabus reads:

> "When the candidate for an office for whom a majority or plurality of votes was cast at the election, dies on the election day and before the polls are closed, the candidate for the same office receiving the next highest number of votes is not thereby elected; nor has he thereby acquired any right to be inducted into the said office."

In this case Buvinger was a candidate for re-election to the office of sheriff, and died on election day. Walker was appointed for the unexpired term of Buvinger. Speidel was appointed by the commissioners on the supposition that there would be a vacancy in said office on the first Monday of January.

The court at p. 160 says:

> "In order that we may not be misunderstood, it may be added that there was no vacancy in the office of sheriff of Clermont county on the first Monday in January, 1900. The death of Buvinger did not create a vacancy in his term which would have begun in January, 1900, assuming that he was duly elected, because he did not live to be installed in his second term. State ex rel. v. Dahl, et al., 55 Ohio St. 195. Walker was the incumbent at the time when that term would have begun had Buvinger lived, with the right to remain until his successor was elected and qualified. There could be no vacancy then, unless Walker should die, resign, or be lawfully removed for cause. State ex rel. v. Wright, 56 Ohio St., 540. Therefore ,the county commissioners, in appointing Speidel, acted altogether without authority; and Speidel can have no right to act as sheriff."

Under the authority of the above case it is my opinion that there will be no vacancy in the office of trustee on January 1, 1918, and that the appointee now filling the remainder of the old term of M will hold the office until the successor is elected and qualified at the election to be held in November, 1919.

I agree with you that the opinion found in Vol. I of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, p. 354, seems to be at variance with the ruling of the supreme court in State ex rel. v. Speidel, supra. That case seems not to have been considered and the opinion is based on the provision of section 2561 G. C., on the theory that it makes provision otherwise and so comes within the exception in section 8 G. C. No similar provision is found referring to trustees. Section 3265 G. C., providing what shall be deemed a declination of the office of trustee, only applies after a person receives notice of his election or appointment.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEE—BOND—WHEN THERE IS NO JUSTICE OF THE PEACE TO APPROVE SAME—MAY ENTER UPON HIS DUTIES UPON FILING SAME WITH TOWNSHIP CLERK.

1. In case there is no justice of the peace to approve the bond of a township trustee, he should enter into a bond with two good and sufficient sureties and file the same with the township clerk for record. By so doing said trustee would be authorized to enter upon the the duties of his office and no vacancy would be created in said office.

2. In case there were justices elected at the last election to fill the vacancies in the office of justice of the peace, the same principle as set out in branch one hereof would apply.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 29, 1917.

HON. J. L. HEISE, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 8, 1917, which reads in part as follows:

> "Section 3269 G. C. provides that the bond of a township trustee shall be approved by a justice of the peace of the township in which the bond is given. One township of this county has no justice of the peace now serving and none was elected this fall. What official can approve the bonds of the trustees of this township?
> Another township of this county has no justice of the peace serving at the present time, but two justices were elected in that township this fall. What official can approve the trustees' bonds in this township?"

Before answering your questions directly, I would like to suggest that there ought to be no vacancy in the office of justice of the peace of any township in your county.

Section 1714 G. C. provides as follows:

> "If a vacancy occurs in the office of justice of the peace by death, removal, absence for six months, resignation, refusal to serve, or otherwise, the trustees within ten days from receiving notice thereof, by a majority vote, shall appoint a qualified resident of the township to fill such vacancy, who shall serve until the next regular election for justice of the peace, and until his successor is elected and qualified. The trustees shall notify the clerk of the courts of such vacancy and the date when it occurred."

Under this section the trustees of any township of your county, in which there is a vacancy in the office of justice of the peace, ought to proceed to fill the same by appointing some qualified resident of the township for said office, and this would be my advice.

Inasmuch as there is a vacancy in the office of justice of the peace in one or more of the townships of your county, at this time, and as this state of affairs may continue to exist up to the 1st day of January, 1918, I will consider your question upon its merits.

Your communication really embodies two separate and distinct matters, one in which there is a vacancy existing in a certain township of your county, for which office no justice of the peace was elected at the last election, and the other in which there is a vacancy existing at the present time, but for which vacancy two justices of the peace were elected at the last election and will therefore presumably take their office on the 1st day of January, 1918.

We will first consider the question relative to the township in which there is a vacancy and for which no justice of the peace was elected at the last election.

Section 3269 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "Before entering upon the discharge of his duty, each township trustee shall give bond * * * . Such bond shall be approved by a justice of the peace of the township in which the bond is given."

Section 3270 G. C. provides in part as follows:

> " * * * Such original bond or new bond shall be deposited with the township clerk and recorded by him."

Section 3265 G. C. provides as follows:

> "If after receiving notice of his election or appointment, a person elected or appointed to a township office fails to take the oath of office and give bond within the time required by law, he shall be deemed to have declined to accept, and the vacancy shall be filled as in other cases."

The question is as to the course a trustee ought to pursue under the sections above quoted, in a case where there is no justice of the peace in a township and therefore no one to pass upon the sufficiency of the bond of said trustee. So far as I know, there is no provision of law which will take care of a situation such as you suggest; that is, in the event there is no justice of the peace to pass upon the sufficiency of the bond, there seems to be no other officer designated who can perform this duty which devolves upon a justice of the peace. Neither do I know of any decision of the courts in which a question of this kind has been judicially determined.

However, in State ex rel. Ackerman v. Dahl, 65 Wis. 510, there is a decision which to some extent at least would bear upon the matter now under consideration. The fourth branch of the syllabus reads:

> "The wilful and unjust refusal of the officer required to approve the official bond of a person elected or appointed to an office, to give it his approval, can not deprive such person of his office or create a vacancy therein."

In the opinion on p. 521, the court reasoned as follows:

> "The person who has been elected or appointed to an office and who does all that is required of him by law to enable him to hold the office, can not be deprived of such office by any wilful or unjust refusal of the person or officer, who is required to approve his bond, to give it his approval. If such a rule is to prevail, then the officer whose approval of an official bond is required may in any case by such wilful and unjust refusal create a vacancy in an office."

At the time this decision was rendered there was a provision of law in Wisconsin as follows:

"The neglect or refusal of any officer elected or appointed or reelected or reappointed to any office to give or renew his official bond or to deposit the same in the manner and within the time prescribed by law" shall create a vacancy.

The court used the following language in reference to this provision:

"Under this provision, when the officer has done all he can possibly do to comply with the law in this respect, it can hardly be said that he has neglected or refused to give and deposit his bond when he has been prevented from so doing by an unlawful act or wilful refusal on the part of some other officer to perform a duty imposed upon him in regard to such official bond."

It seems to me the reasoning of the court in this case could be made to apply to the facts in the case under consideration. If the township trustees elected to office at the last election do all in their power to comply with the law, they would be justified in entering upon the duties of their office and no vacancy could be said to exist; that is, if they give a bond and are not able to have the same approved because there is no justice of the peace in the township, they would be warranted in filing the same with the clerk of the township, and by so doing there would be no vacancy in the office and they would be authorized in law to enter upon the discharge of the duties of their office.

There is a case reported in 25 O. S. 567, styled Kelly et al. v. State of Ohio, which tends in the same direction as the holding in the Wisconsin case. In the second branch of the syllabus the court held as follows:

"The provision of the statute requiring the indorsement of the certificate of the prosecuting attorney upon the bond of the treasurer is merely directory, and the want of such indorsement does not invalidate the bond."

On p. 577 in the opinion the court say:

"The objection that the bond was not accepted and approved is not founded in fact. It was oral y accepted by two of the commissioners, and that in our judgment is sufficient. The better practice undoubtedly is to put the acceptance in writing, or to enter it on the journal, but we know of no law making it indispensable.

The law requiring the certificate of the prosecuting attorney to be indorsed on the bond is merely directory, and the want of such a certificate by no means avoids or invalidates the bond."

From all the above it is my opinion that if the township trustees elected did all in their power to comply with the law, namely, entered into a bond with two good and sufficient sureties, resident of the township, and file the same with the township clerk, they will be authorized to enter upon the duties of their office and there could be no vacancy declared in the same.

However, I desire to suggest in passing that in the event there should be a justice appointed to fill the vacancy in said township at any time during the terms of office for which the township trustees were elected, they should then have said justice approve the bonds in accordance with the provisions of section 3269 G. C., above quoted.

Answering your second question, namely, what the township trustees elected should do in a township in which there is no justice of the peace, but for which office two persons were elected at the last election, I will advise as follows:

It is my opinion that the principles above set forth should also control in this case; that is, the trustees elected should file their bonds with the clerk in accordance with law. Then in the event either of the justices elected should qualify, the bonds should be taken to him for approval and then refiled with the clerk of the township.

It might be well, in both of the above cases, for the clerk to note on the bonds the reason they are filed without approval, viz., that there is no justice of the peace in the township to approve same.

While the question is not directly connected with the matters about which you inquire in your communication, yet it might be asked whether the sureties and the principal on a bond not approved by the proper officials would be liable in case of a default in the principal; or, in other words, is the approval of the bond such a vital part of the same that the persons signing the bond are not liable unless the approval of the proper officials is stamped thereon? I will briefly consider this question.

Throop in his work on Public Officers, Section 183, lays down the following proposition:

> "But as respects the sureties' liability, the approval is not deemed in law a part of the bond; and, in an action upon the bond, the sureties are not entitled to oyer of the approval."

This proposition laid down by Throop seems to be well substantiated by the decisions of the courts.

In Clark et al. v. State, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 570, the court say:

> "In debt on a sheriff's bond, the defendants are not entitled to oyer of the approval of the bond by the judges; such approval being no part of the bond."

In the opinion on p. 571 the court say:

> "The approval by the judges is no part of the bond. That was a collateral matter wholly independent of the execution of the bond, and equally accessible to the defendants as to the plaintiff."

In The People v. Edwards, et al., 9 Calif. 286, the court say:

> "The defect in the approval of a sheriff's bond can not be set up as a defense in an action on said bond against the sureties. The object of the law in requiring the approval is to insure greater security to the public, and it does not lie in the obligors to object that their bond was accepted without proper examination into its sufficiency by the officers of the law."

In Eustis v. Kidder, 26 Me. 97, the court say:

> "The constable does not incur such penalty by serving a writ, if he has conformed in all respects to the provisions of Revised Statutes, chapter 104, section 35, relative to giving bond, saving that the approval of the selectmen of the town has not been endorsed thereon, that provision being merely directory to them."

On page 100 in the opinion the court say:

"It is not essential to the validity of the bond that the approval of the selectmen should be endorsed upon it. That provision is directory to them and intended to be beneficial to the constable by affording evidence that his sureties have been adjudged to be sufficient and also to those who might become interested in the bond, by showing that such adjudication had been formal and deliberate. A provision merely directory can not constitute a part of the contract, which may be enforced, should the officers required to perform such duty neglect it."

In Westerhaven v. Cline, 5 Ohio Rep. 136, our own supreme court touched upon this matter in its opinion, although it did not directly decide it. In the opinion on p. 139 the court say:

"The law requires that a constable shall give bond with sureties, to be approved of by the trustees of the township. This law ought to be complied with, but we are not prepared to say that if a bond be delivered to a township clerk and by him filed away, that such bond would not be obligatory, without proof of its having been approved by the trustees."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONTAGION HOSPITAL—RIGHT OF A MUNICIPALITY TO PURCHASE LAND AND ERECT BUILDING FOR SUCH PURPOSE—HOW SAME SHOULD BE OPERATED—LEGALITY OF RESTRICTION IN DEED.

1. A municipal corporation has no authority in law, either express or implied, to lease lands upon which to erect a contagion hospital, excepting as set out in the second branch of the syllabus. The lands must be secured by purchase.

2. A ninety-nine year lease, renewable forever, partakes so much of the nature of a deed of purchase when considered with a view to the objects and purposes for which the lands are leased, as to make the same legal.

3. A municipality would have no authority to erect a contagion hospital upon land secured by it in conformity with the first and second branches of the syllabus herein and then to contract with a private institution for the operation and management of the same.

4. A condition in the deed of purchase to the effect that the lands so purchased shall revert to the grantor when no longer used for the purposes of a contagion hospital would be legal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of recent date to which you attach a letter received by you from the city solicitor of Lorain, Ohio, in which he asks an answer in reference to four queries which he sets forth in his letter. Your communication reads as follows:

"We are enclosing herewith communication from the city solicitor of Lorain, Ohio, which contains a statement of facts, and a number of questions, as well as a brief of the solicitor's opinion upon such questions. In keeping with the same, we respectfully request your written opinion upon the questions Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, as herein contained."

The letter from the city solicitor sets out the facts fully upon which the questions are based, but for the purposes of this opinion the statement of the questions themselves will be sufficient. They read as follows:

"1. Has the city of Lorain the right to construct a permanent building for a contagious hospital on leased land?

2. Would the term of years of the lease have anything to do with the city's right, as above stated, as to whether for one or ninety-nine years?

3. Has the city the authority to construct such a building either on leased land or on real estate purchased by it for such purpose and contract with any private institution for the proper operation thereof?

4. Has the city the right to purchase a portion of the land in question with a condition in the deed that in the event such land is not used as a contagious hospital then the same shall revert to the grantors?"

Before answering your questions specifically it will be well for us to note the general propositions which underlie the questions submitted by you. Section 3646 General Code contains the general grant of power to municipalities to do the things about which the city solicitor inquires in his communication. This section reads as follows:

"To provide for the public health, to secure the inhabitants of the corporation from the evils of contagious, malignant and infectious diseases, and to purchase or lease property or buildings for pest houses, and to erect maintain and regulate pest houses, hospitals and infirmaries."

There is not much in the history of this section which will aid us in arriving at the conclusion as to what answer should be given to the queries submitted, yet it might be well to note the history of this section briefly.

In 96 O. L. 24, the matter which afterwards became the above quoted section read as follows:

"To provide for the public health; to secure the inhabitants of the corporation from the evils of contagious, malignant and infectious diseases, and to erect, maintain and regulate pesthouses, hospitals, and infirmaries."

In 97 O. L. 507, this section was made to read the same as it now stands in the General Code with the exception that the semi-colon was dropped after the word "health," and a comma substituted therefor. It will be noted that the only change made in the section was that the following new matter was added:

"and to purchase or lease property or buildings for a pesthouse."

In looking over the provisions of this section it is fairly evident that the phrases "to provide," "to secure," "to purchase or lease" and "to erect" are phrases which are separate and distinct, each one defining a specific grant of power by the legislature to the municipality.

Let us first note the language which was later added to the said section as follows:

"to purchase or lease property or buildings for pest houses."

It is my opinion that notwithstanding the use of the general word "property" in this phrase it was undoubtedly the intention and understanding of the legislature that this was a specific grant of power in addition to those grants already given and was merely for the purpose of enabling the municipality either to lease or purchase the necessary property for pesthouses, the property being already in condition for use without the necessity of erecting buildings thereon. In other words, the municipality is given power to lease or to purchase buildings suitable for pest houses. Hence this phrase does not embody the idea of building or construction.

The next phrase found in said section reads as follows:

"to erect, maintain and regulate pesthouses, hospitals and infirmaries."

This is a grant of power, as said above, entirely separate and distinct from the grant of power immediately preceding it. This phrase does not say "erect thereon," which would evidently have been the language had the legislature meant to give the municipality the right to lease land or purchase the same with the intention of erecting thereon pesthouses, hospitals and infirmaries.

While this section mentions hospitals and infirmaries, yet it seems evident that the legislature in enacting the latter part of said section had in mind more particularly "pest houses." This is important to keep in mind in view of the further discussion of this question in which I desire to point out that the legislature seems to have distinguished between pest houses and contagion hospitals. Before leaving the question however, of the general powers given to municipalities in the matter of purchasing and leasing ground, I desire to call attention to the provisions of section 3615 General Code, which provides that each of the municipal corporations may acquire property by purchase, gift, devise, appropriation, lease, or lease with the privilege of purchase, for any municipal purpose authorized by law; also to section 3631 General Code, which provides that a municipal corporation shall have power to acquire by purchase, lease, or lease with the privilege of purchase, gift, devise, condemnation or otherwise, and to hold real estate or any interest therein, and other property for the use of the corporation.

Of course it is quite evident that under the provisions of these two sections a municipal corporation would have the power either to purchase or lease land for any municipal purpose whatever that might be authorized by law. But it must be kept in mind that these are general grants of power and are therefore very broad and inclusive.

With this in mind let us turn to the provisions of section 4452 General Code, which reads as follows:

> "The council of a municipality may purchase land within or without its boundaries and erect thereon suitable hospital buildings for the isolation, care or treatment of persons suffering from dangerous contagious disease, and provide for the maintenance thereof. The plans and specifications for such buildings shall be approved by the board of health."

This section seems to be dealing with the exact question you have in mind, namely a contagion hospital, and in this section the legislature in giving power to acquire land upon which to erect such a hospital limits the power of a municipality to the mere matter of purchase and not of leasing.

It is my opinion that the provisions of this section should govern in the matter you have in mind rather than the provisions of section 3615 or 3631, which as said before are general grants of power, and therefore are very broad and inclusive, while in these particular sections we have a specific grant of power for a particular purpose, and the only power that is granted is to purchase real estate.

While it might be held that under the general grant of power given to municipal corporations, and under the grant of power given in section 3646 General Code that a municipal corporation would have power to lease lands upon which to erect a pest house, yet when it comes to erecting a contagion hospital proper it does not occur to me that a municipal corporation has power to do anything other than purchase land for said purpose.

As said before, it seems that the legislature had in mind a distinction between a pest house and a contagion hospital. It is true that when we come to examine the definitions given by lexicographers of these two terms it is pretty difficult to draw a distinction between the two, yet in the common understanding of them there evidently is a marked difference. A pest house is used only for the most virulent kinds of diseases and when we speak of a pest house we generally think of smallpox; while a contagion hospital is used for all persons afflicted with all kinds of contagious and infectious diseases.

That the legislature seemed to have this distinction in mind is clearly evident from the provisions of sections 4370 and 4454 of the General Code. Under the provisions of section 4370 General Code the director of public safety is given the authority to manage, and make all contracts in reference to pest houses; while under the provisions of section 4454 the buildings that are erected as contagion hospitals are placed under the care and control of the board of health. It provides:

> " * * * The board shall appoint all employes or other persons necessary to the use, care and maintenance thereof and regulate the entrance of patients thereto and their care and treatment."

From all the above it is my opinion in reference to the matter which your city has in mind, it would be limited to the matter of purchasing real estate and not of leasing the same.

The second question submitted is as follows:

> "Would the term of years of the lease have anything to do with the city's right, as above stated, as to whether for one or ninety-nine years?"

If the principles above enunciated are sound, then it is my opinion that the city would have no authority to lease land under which lease the time is definitely fixed or is determinable at the option of the lessor. If it were a lease for ninety-nine years, renewable forever, the same would partake so much of the nature of an outright purchase of land that I would see no principle of law which would interfere with such a lease unless the word "purchase" as found in section 4452 would be construed very strictly. If this were done it would exclude the idea of a lease, even though it were for ninety-nine years and renewable forever. But it is my opinion that a court would not place such a strict interpretation upon the word "purchase" as that would exclude a ninety-nine year lease renewable forever.

Therefore, it is my opinion that such a lease would be legal under the provisions of the said two above quoted sections.

The third question submitted is as follows:

> "Has the city the authority to construct such a building either on leased land or upon real estate purchased by it for such purpose and contract with any private institution for the proper operation thereof?"

Of course, in view of the principles above stated, the city would have no authority to erect a building on leased land and contract with a private institution for the proper operation thereof.

The question remaining as whether the city could so erect the building upon purchased ground and turn the management of the same over to a private institution under contract. This matter of managing a contagion hospital is one of the governmental functions of the city, and the courts do not look with very much favor upon farming out or delegating its governmental functions to private individuals. Of course in those matters which are purely done in a proprietary way there is no particular objection to such a procedure, but this would not be done by the municipality in its proprietary capacity, but rather in its governmental capacity, and therefore upon principle I would hold that the management of the institution could not be turned over under contract to a private institution.

Further, section 4454 General Code seems indirectly to be against such a proposition because in this section the board of health is given complete authority over a building erected for the purpose of a contagion hospital, said board being given authority to appoint all employes or other persons necessary to the use, care and maintenance thereof and regulate the entrance of persons thereto and their care and treatment.

From this the legislature seems to have intended that the municipal corporation should manage the contagion hospital through the agency of the board of health of the municipality.

Of course I do not desire to be understood as holding that the board of health could not appoint from a private institution employes or persons necessary to take care of the patients who would enter the hospital, but I am of the opinion that the city would have no authority to enter into a general contract with a private institution to run the hospital for and on behalf of the city.

The fourth question submitted reads as follows:

> "Has the city the right to purchase a portion of the land in question with a condition in the deed that in the event such land is not used as a contagious hospital then the same shall revert to the grantors?"

I know of no provision of law which would prevent such a condition being placed in a deed of purchase. The land is purchased presumably for a specific and definite purpose—namely, to carry out the powers granted under section 3646 General Code, and if the time comes when it is no longer necessary to carry out said powers or when they can be carried out to better advantage in some other manner, than through buildings erected upon the land so purchased, then, in my opinion, no principle of law would be violated in making a provision that the land should revert to the grantor after the same is no longer needed for the purpose for which it was purchased.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BLANKET CERTIFICATE—NOT IN COMPLIANCE WITH SECTION 3806 GENERAL CODE.

A blanket certificate, therefore, without specifying any amount therein, will not be in compliance with the provisions of section 3806 General Code. Such certificate should show the amount of money in the treasury which may be subject to the payment of the particular contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of December 5th, 1917, you submit the following inquiry:

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

"A contract was let in a municipality of the state of Ohio which was worded in such manner as to make the cost of the contract when completed so indefinite that the amount thereof could not be determined at the time of certification by the auditor, who made a certification in blanket form without specifying any amount. After the work was completed it was found that sufficient funds were not on hand to meet the unpaid portion of the contract.

Question—In the certification required under section 3806 G. C. is a blanket certification legal, or is it necessary, in full compliance with said law, that the amount of money should be definitely set forth in such certification as a maximum?"

Section 3806 General Code, to which you refer, reads as follows:

"No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board of officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, first certifies to council or to the proper board, as the case may be, that the money required for such contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded. The sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force."

It is provided in this section that "the sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated." Unless there was a specific sum set aside for each particular contract, it would be difficult and practically impossible for the city auditor to determine the amount of money which may be unappropriated in any certain fund.

In the case of Village of Carthage v. Diekmeier, 79 O. S., 323, the first branch of the syllabus reads:

"Where a municipal corporation, by sale of its bonds, creates a fund for the improvement of certain streets, and takes the necessary steps to receive and accept bids and to contract separately for the improvement of said streets, the following certificate filed by the clerk of corporation at the time the bid is accepted and the contract executed, to wit: 'I hereby certify that there is money in the village treasury in the fund from which the above fund is proposed to be drawn for the payment of the village portion of the improvement and not appropriated for any other purpose sufficient to pay for the same. L. Hall, Village Clerk'—is not in compliance with section 2702 (old number) Revised Statutes, in that it is not certified that a specific sum of money required for the contract to improve the streets 'is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose.'"

In this case bonds had been issued and a fund created from which the cost of a number of improvements was to be made. On page 341 of the opinion, Price, J., says:

"Whatever may be the correct view as to the meaning of this statute where a single contract is let, it seems to be a reasonable construction that there be a definite sum certified for each contract where there are several of the same species entered into at the same time to be paid from a theretofore gross fund. It would seem conducive, if not necessary to the safety of each contractor, that a definite sum be certified, because it is on the performance of that act by the village clerk that money to discharge the obligation is set apart and appropriated, and which 'shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated, etc."

It does not appear from the question as to whether or not bonds had been issued to pay for the particular contract or not. Your question is a general one and will apply to all contracts whether paid from a fund created for a single purpose or for a number of purposes.

It is my opinion that section 3806, General Code requires in each instance that a specific sum be designated in the certificate of the auditor of a city or the clerk of a village. Where an amount is not specified, it could hardly be said that there has been a sum certified.

A blanket certificate, therefore, without specifying any amount therein will not be in compliance with the provisions of section 3806 General Code. Such certificate should show the amount of money in the treasury which may be subject to the payment of the particular contract.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ORDINANCE—WHEN REFERENDUM PERIOD BEGINS WHEN SAME HAS BEEN PASSED OVER MAYOR'S VETO.

Under the provisions of section 4227-2 G. C., (104 O. L. 238), the thirty days referendum period for an ordinance or resolution, which has been passed or adopted by the council of a city and presented to the mayor for his approval or disapproval, and vetoed by him, and later reconsidered by said council and passed over the mayor's veto, begins with the date the ordinance, or resolution was originally filed with the mayor after its first passage or adoption.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1917

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—We have your recent communication in which you submit for my opinion the following matter:

"We are referring you to an opinion of the Attorney-General recorded in the Annual Reports of 1913, page 345, rendered on section 4227-2 G. C., previous to the amendment of said section as recorded in 104 O. L. 238.

In view of the amended section as it now stands, the council of a municipality on November 22, 1915, passed an ordinance fixing the salary of the members of council. The ordinance was vetoed by the mayor on December 2, 1915, and passed over the mayor's veto December 25, 1915.

Question 1. Does the thirty day I. & R. period begin with the date the ordinance was originally filed with the mayor?

Question 2. If not, when does the I. & R. period begin?"

Section 4227-2, as amended 104 O. L. 238, provides in part as follows:

"Any ordinance, or other measure passed by the council of any municipal corporation shall be subject to the referendum except as hereinafter provided. No ordinance or other measure shall go into effect until thirty days after it shall have been filed with the mayor of a city or passed by the council in a village, except as hereinafter provided.

When a petition signed by ten per cent of the electors of any municipal corporation shall have been filed with the city auditor or village clerk in such municipal corporation, within thirty days after any ordinance, or other measure shall have been filed with the mayor, or passed by the council of a village, ordering that such ordinance or measure be submitted to the electors of such municipal corporation for their approval or rejection, such city auditor or village clerk shall, after ten days, certify the petition to the board of deputy supervisors of elections of the county wherein such municipality is situated and said board shall cause to be submitted to the electors of such municipal corporation for their approval or rejection, such ordinance, or measure at the next succeeding regular or general election, in any year, occurring subsequent to forty days after the filing of such petition. * * * ."

As a general proposition the foregoing section in the first paragraph provides that no ordinance or other measure of a city shall go into effect until thirty days after it shall have been filed with the mayor. The purpose of this provision is disclosed by an examination of the second paragraph of said section, which requires a submission of an ordinance or other measure to the electors of a city for their approval or rejection, when a petition signed by ten per cent of the electors of said city is filed with the city auditor within thirty days after said ordinance or other measure has been filed with the mayor. The purpose of said provision then is to fix a certain period of time in which an ordinance or other measure shall be inoperative and within which the electors may be afforded an opportunity by proper action on their part to have said ordinance or other measure submitted to them for their approval or rejection.

It seems clear that this period of time commences at the time said ordinance is filed with the mayor by the city council.

Section 4234 G. C. reads:

"Every ordinance or resolution of council shall, before it goes into effect, be presented to the mayor for approval. The mayor, if he approves it, shall sign and return it forthwith to council. If he does not approve it, he shall within ten days after its passage or adoption return it with his objections to council, or if council is not in session, to the next regular meeting thereof, which objections council shall cause to be entered upon its journal. The mayor may approve or disapprove the whole or any item of an ordinance appropriating money. If he does not return such ordinance or resolution within the time limited in this section, it shall take effect in the same manner as if he had signed it, unless council by adjournment prevents its return. When the mayor disapproves an ordinance or resolution, or any part therof, and returns it to the council with his objections, council may, after ten days, reconsider it, and if such ordinance, resolution or item, upon such reconsideration is approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the members elected to council, it shall then take effect as if signed by the mayor. The provisions of this section shall apply only in cities."

This section requires that every resolution or ordinance of council shall, before it goes into effect, be presented to the mayor for his approval or disapproval. This section also provides that if the mayor disapproves an ordinance or resolution, or any part thereof, he shall return it to council with his objections, and council may after ten days reconsider it, and if such ordinance, resolution or item, upon such reconsideration, is approved by the votes of two-thirds of the members elected to council, it shall then take effect as if signed by the mayor.

An examination of this section discloses the fact that an ordinance or resolution is only presented to the mayor or filed with him on one occasion, and that is after its original passage or adoption, and if the mayor vetoes or disapproves the ordinance or resolution he shall return it to council, and if said council upon reconsideration approves it by the required vote, said piece of legislation takes effect as if signed by the mayor.

There is no occasion or requirement made for any additional presentation or filing with the mayor.

It seems clear, then, that the thirty day period in which an ordinance or resolution subject to referendum is inoperative and within which a proper petition may be filed for the submission of said ordinance or resolution to the electors of said city, dates from the time said ordinance or resolution is originally filed with the mayor of said city for his approval or disapproval, and it makes no difference whether said ordinance or resolution is vetoed by the mayor and later reconsidered by the city council and passed over his veto insofar as said thirty day period is concerned.

I, therefore, advise you in answer to your first question that the thirty day referendum period for an ordinance or resolution which has been passed or adopted by the council of a city and presented to the mayor for his approval or disapproval, and vetoed by him, and later reconsidered by said council and passed over the mayor's veto, begins with the date the ordinance or resolution was originally filed with the mayor after its first passage or adoption.

The answer to your second question is taken care of by my answer to your first inquiry.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.
