The second element is that there must be an intent to defraud. Such an intent means a design, resolve or determination in the mind of the physician to defraud, and its presence must be ascertained from a consideration of the surrounding facts and circumstances, unless the same is admitted to be true by the accused. I shall not attempt to pass upon the sufficiency of the facts that might be shown to prove the intent to defraud in the particular case. However, if you should feel convinced that the physician in question made the false statement with the intent thereby to obtain an allowance for medical services to which he knew he was not entitled under the law, you would be justified in considering that the second element of the offense was present.

The third element refers to the necessity of such false representation being relied upon by the party from whom something of value was obtained. It would seem to be true from the facts you have stated that the industrial commission did rely upon said doctor's statement, since he was given a warrant for an amount sufficient to cover the services rendered by him, and such warrant was issued, as you state, on the basis of the report which he filed with the industrial commission and which stated that his patient was injured in the course of his employment.

The obtaining of something of value, which is called "anything of value" in the statute, is defined by section 12369 G. C., which reads, in part, as follows:

> "In the interpretation of part fourth the term 'anything of value' includes * * * orders, * warrants, checks, * given for the payment of money. * * *"

A warrant for the sum of $11.00 was obtained by said physician from said industrial commission in accordance with the report that he filed, and such receipt by him of same meets the fourth requirement that something of value must be obtained thereby.

I advise you, therefore, that if a physician makes a false statement of facts to you as to the cause of the disability of an employe under the provisions of the workmen's compensation act, with the intent thereby to receive an allowance for medical services to which he knows he is not entitled under the law, and such false and fraudulent representations are relied upon by you and by reason thereof the said physician obtains an allowance for medical services and receives a warrant therefor, said physician is guilty of the crime set forth in section 13104 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE—IS STATE OFFICER—POWER OF SECRETARY AND BOARD—CIVIL SERVICE.

The secretary of agriculture as created by the act of March 21, 1917, is a state officer. He is ex officio secretary of the board of agriculture, but has functions and performs duties independently of their authority, and in such capacity has much of the power of the department of agriculture.

The provisions in said act, in section 1087-2, do not have the effect of increasing or extending the classified civil service of the state, but simply provide for the continuous application of the civil service law and the continuous authority of the civil service commission to the department of agriculture during and after the change effected by the act.

The acts of the secretary in his capacity as secretary of the board of agriculture are under the authority and require the approval of the board, but his independent acts as secretary of agriculture, in pursuance of the sections of the act not giving the board express authority over the same, are not subject to any approval by the board.

Different sections of the act give authority to the board of agriculture to adopt rules and regulations while other sections confer the same power upon the secretary. In each case each authority acts independently of the other.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 25, 1917.

HON. W. E. SHAW, Secretary of Ohio Board of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On June 27th you submit the following for my opinion thereon:

> "House bill No. 115 becomes a law July 1st, and your opinion is respectfully requested on the following questions, relative to certain provisions of this act and the powers and duties of the board of agriculture and the secretary of agriculture.
> "Will you define the specific duties of the board of agriculture and the secretary of agriculture under the statutes with the addition of the new sections and amendments effective July 1, 1917?
> "Do the provisions of section 1087-2 stating that 'none of the present employes of the present board of agriculture shall be removed, discharged, suspended, reduced in pay or otherwise discriminated against, except in accordance with the provisions of the civil service laws of the state,' apply to those not appointed from lists certified by the civil service commission?
> "Must official transactions of the secretary of agriculture have the approval of the board of agriculture before being entered on the records?
> "Must rules, regulations, quarantines, etc., be adopted by the board of agriculture, or has the secretary of agriculture the power to adopt such measures?"

An answer to the first of your four inquiries would be of very considerable extent, as the new act you mention contains thirty-five pages of the annual volume of laws, and many sections are still in force of the previous law governing the department, so that the duties about which you inquire are found scattered through several hundred sections of the statutes. It appears, however, from a conversation with you that you do not mean this request to be so extensive, but only desire your duties and those of the board defined in a general way, and more especially with reference to the division of such duties between the secretary and the board.

It is apparent from an examination of this act that it was intended to substitute the secretary for the board as to the conduct of the principal activities of the department, not in the capacity of a subordinate or as carrying out details of general instructions, but as an original delegation of power. The evidences of this legislative intent are so numerous and so extensive that it is much easier to pick out and ascertain the powers remaining in the board of agriculture than to enumerate those transferred from it to the secretary.

One important section not repealed is section 1082, which provides that:

> "The board of agriculture shall succeed to and be possessed of the rights, authority and power now exercised by the agricultural commission, unless otherwise specifically provided by law. It shall also succeed to and be in control of all records, lands, moneys, appropriations and other property, real or personal, now or hereafter held for the benefit of said agricultural commission. * * *"

An examination of the whole act, however, shows that this section, while not expressly repealed, is considerably affected by the provisions of the new act. The most important function of the board under the express provisions of the new law is found in section 1087, which reads as follows:

> "The board of agriculture is authorized to elect a secretary with the approval of the governor, who shall be known as the secretary of agriculture, and who shall be a man actively identified with agriculture. He shall hold office for two years and until his successor is elected and qualified. But the board of agriculture may remove him any time for cause. He shall be the chief executive officer of the department. He shall appoint all heads of bureaus, experts, inspectors, wardens, clerks, stenographers and all other assistants and employes and shall fix their compensation within the limits prescribed by law. * * *"

This section gives the board authority, with the approval of the governor, to make the appointment of the secretary and remove him, but being appointed it, with other sections, transfers to him the most important duties formerly devolved upon the board.

Subsection 1 of this section is as follows:

> "From and after the taking effect of this act, the secretary of agriculture shall do all work now performed as the duties which, by any of the laws of the state, are placed upon the agricultural commission, and wherever the words 'agricultural commission' are found in the laws of the state, they shall be construed to refer to the secretary of agriculture."

There is nothing for this section to operate on. Section 1082 as amended in 106 O. L. 143, transferred all the power of the commission to the board and left nothing over to give to the secretary in this manner.

In many of the sections the secretary is substituted for the board, in others the authority is left to the board and is also conferred upon the secretary. In such cases it would be possible for a conflict of authority to arise, but such need not be anticipated as it will be sufficient to consider it when the time comes.

vide a uniform method for the election of directors and officers of agricultural societies receiving support from the state or counties, and to provide rules and regulations under which such societies shall be conducted, and in the same section the board is required to meet with the authorized delegate of such local society for the purpose of consultation upon the wants, prospects and condition of agriculture. This function is confined to the board without any interference by the secretary.

Section 1095-1 of the General Code authorizes the purchase of real estate by the secretary, but the same must be approved by the board; but by section 1096 of the General Code the board or secretary, or authorized representatives, may confer and meet with the officers of other states and officers of the United States on any matter pertaining to their official duties. It will be noticed that this is in the disjunctive—that it is the board or secretary, and presents a case of possible conflict above alluded to.

Section 1100 of the General Code authorizes the board or secretary to conduct investigations, inquiries or hearings for the purposes contemplated in the act, and gives each of them power to administer oaths, certify to official acts, take depositions, issue subpoenas, compel the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, etc.

Section 1101 gives both to the board and to the secretary the right to inspect private books and documents and examine persons under oath, including officers or employes of corporations and partnerships. The secretary is permitted to designate other persons to perform the same duty.

Section 1102 further authorizes the board or the secretary to hold hearings, issue subpoenas, enforce the production of documents, and provides a penalty for refusing to comply with the orders.

Section 1103 provides that in the making of any such investigation, the secretary of agriculture may appoint an agent and prescribe his duties, and confers upon such agent the same inquisitorial powers given to the board and to the secretary.

Section 1119 permits the secretary to appoint a state veterinarian, and in case of an outbreak of disease to appoint temporarily such additional number of assistants as the board of agriculture may approve.

Section 1115 in providing for the killing of infected animals, and appraising and paying for them, provides a review of such action by the board of agriculture at the next regular meeting.

These sections are referred to not as an entire or complete enumeration of the powers left in the board, but as constituting the principal powers and authority left in the board without adverting to the subject of particular bureaus, and while there is no general or well defined plan or idea in the division of the powers of the department these are sufficient to show that the great body of its power is conferred upon the secretary. It is significant that the latter official is not merely the secretary of the board. He is that, but he is principally the secretary of agriculture, a distinct office, and while the enumeration of his powers and the conferring of his authority are found commingled in the same act and in the same sections with those of the board of agriculture, it is nevertheless in most cases found distinct and independent, and without discussing this subject further it is left for future inquiry, should the same be necessary, as to details that may hereafter arise.

Your second inquiry refers to the standing of the employes of the present board. Section 1087-2 G. C. provides as follows:

> "All appointments made by the secretary of agriculture under and by virtue of the provisions of this act shall be made with the approval of the board of agriculture, and none of the assistants and employes now in the employ of the present board of agriculture shall be removed, discharged, suspended, reduced in pay, or otherwise discriminated against, except in accordance with the provisions of the civil service laws of the state."

This section is plainly intended to retain in the department all present employes of the board, but as it apparently goes further and while giving the secretary the power of appointment seeks to control its exercise, I do not now express an opinion on its effect in this respect.

It is, however, not intended by its terms to affect those in the unclassified service of the department, if there be any, who are in the unclassified service.

Your third inquiry is:

The answer is that in so far as he acts as secretary of the board of agriculture he is not different from the ordinary secretary of boards in general. It is his duty to record the acts of the board, which duty he would perform under their control, and they would, after the manner of such bodies, have the approval of their minutes before the same become permanent records. As to his official transactions, however, in his independent capacity of secretary of agriculture the same thing is not true. He acts independently of the board in such cases and their approval is not necessary to give validity either to his acts or to the record evidence of them. As each case arises it will probably be easy to determine from the statute in which capacity he acts.

The records of the board are controlled by section 1099 and section 1105 is amended to provide for stationery for the secretary, thus in a manner indicating that it is necessary for him to use different blank books, etc. His records as to those acts which he does independently of the board should be kept separate from the board's.

Your fourth and last question is:

"Must rules, regulations, quarantines, etc., be adopted by the board of agriculture, or has the secretary of agriculture the power to adopt such measures?"

The answer is found in various sections providing for such regulations, etc. Some of them are committed to the board; most of them to the secretary. It is not considered necessary to go through the entire law and separate the different classes as they be readily distinguished as occasions arise by reference to the different sections under which action is carried on. In one instance that may be cited they are conferred upon the board of agriculture, or retained by it, section 1092 providing:

"* * * The board of agriculture shall provide a uniform method for the election of the directors and officers of all agricultural societies receiving any support whatsoever out of the state or county treasuries, and provide general rules and regulations under which such agricultural societies shall be conducted. * * *"

This is cited merely as one instance in which the board may make rules without the co-operation of the secretary.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

LIQUOR LICENSE—CHANGE OF NAME OF CORPORATION—TRANSFER FEE NOT PROPER.

(1) Section 1261-50 General Code (Sec. 35 of the liquor license law) provides for a transfer of a liquor license from one person or corporation to another and for the payment of a license fee.

(2) Where the business of John Doe and Sons was purchased by Richard Roe and others, a part of the consideration being that after a certain length of time the name of John Doe should be dropped from the corporation name, and the corporation has filed the proper certificate with the secretary of state changing the name of the concern from The John Doe and Sons Co. to The Richard Roe Company, no transfer of license is necessary or authorized, neither is any transfer fee collectible under the statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 25, 1917.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of July 10, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "Section 35 of the license law provides for the transfer of a license from one person to another upon the payment of a fee of $50. We have the following situation:
> "Some years ago the business of John Doe and Sons was purchased by Richard Roe and others, a part of the consideration being that after a certain length of time the name of John Doe should be dropped from the firm name. The business has been conducted by the John Doe and Sons corporation and the time has arrived when the name must be changed. The corporation filed the proper certificate with the secretary of state changing the name of the concern from John Doe and Sons Company to Richard Roe Company. There is no change in the ownership and there is no change among the stockholders. Under these circumctances, will it be necessary for a transfer fee of $50 to be paid or may the change of name simply be noted upon the license certificate?"

The liquor licensing act, which was passed to carry into effect the constitutional amendment, provides, among other things, for the issuing of a license to applicants found by the board to possess the qualifications prescribed by law. The license is wholly personal. It is a permit to the particular individual or applicant to engage in the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors under the conditions imposed by the laws of this state on the subject. In most states, being thus a permit to one found to be personally qualified to engage in this business, it has been held that as a matter of right such license was not transferable or assignable, and, in the absence of statutory provision, such is the case. Our liquor licensing law expressly provides for a transfer of the license.

Section 1261-50, General Code, reads:

> "Upon the application of any licensee who desires to sell or transfer his business to another, joined with the application of the latter, and upon the payment of a fee of fifty dollars the county licensing board shall, unless the proposed purchaser or transferee shall not have the qualifications required by law of a licensee, endorse upon the license certificate of the original applicant the words: 'Transferred to----------,' inserting the name of the transferee with the date, and the person to whom the said license is transferred shall hold the license for the remainder of the said license year, and shall have all the privileges and obligations of the original licensee under the license. The said fee so paid to the county licensing board shall be immediately transmitted to the secretary of the state board, in the same manner as application fees heretofore provided for herein, together with a report of the transfer thereof.

"The said transferee must, however, in the application for transfer, set forth all the facts required to be set forth by an original applicant. The said transferee shall be in all respects qualified by law as is an original applicant.

"Before transfer shall be allowed the applicant must first have presented to the board a sworn statement showing the list of his unsecured creditors, together with their address and the amounts owing. Said statement must also set forth that each one of said creditors has been notified of the application, personally or by registered mail, at least ten days before the application is made. If thereupon complaints are made by the said creditors against the transfer the board shall grant a hearing, after due notice to the applicant as well as to the creditors complaining, and if in the judgment of the board the applicant is intending to avoid the payment of his just debts transfer may be refused."

This is the provision for the transfer of a license where one holding the same makes a sale thereof, complying with the provisions of the section.

Section 1261-52 G. C. provides for a different situation than the one spoken of in your communication. It has application when a licensee has died and in the settlement of his estate there is a disposition of the license under order of the probate court.

I find no other provision of law pertaining to the transfer of a license. It will be noted that section 1261-50 provides for the payment of a fee of $50.00, which is in the nature of a transfer fee and is payable before a licensee can, with the consent of the license board, transfer his license to another person. The section provides that such transferee shall be in all respects qualified by law as is an original applicant. This section certainly implies that when a person or a corporation holding a license, and for some reason desiring to dispose of same, makes the proper application to the license board to sell or transfer his business to another, and upon the board finding that he is properly qualified and consenting thereto, the license theretofore held by such person or corporation is duly transferred to the other person or corporation joining in the application for said transfer.

To transfer property or other right imports that the right, title and interest of one person is surrendered up and turned over to another person. The very word itself means "carrying across." Now in the case you present there is no change of persons. The identity is just the same. The right that they had prior to the change of name was to the same persons at that time that it is after the name has duly been changed. The case of the corporation cited is the same as if the board would issue a license to Ella Smith and soon thereafter she would marry. Certainly it would not be contended that the female was a different or other person because her married name was different from her maiden name. As I understand the case cited, the corporation has merely, by amendment to its articles, changed its name. It remains the same corporation, the same artificial person, possesses the same identity, and, in my opinion, there not only is no necessity, but there is no authority for the transfer of a license that it held under the original name to the newly acquired one.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that under the circumstances cited in your communication there is no authority to exact the transfer fee, nor is there any necessity for a transfer of the license. The licensee continues on the same after as before the change of name. I might suggest that in order to keep your records straight it might be well to note both upon your records and the records of the county board the fact of the change of name. This is merely for convenience.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION—LEASING LAND BY BOARD OF CONTROL.

(1) *The sections of our statutes which provide for the Ohio agricultural experiment station (*1170 to 1173 G. C., inclusive) give no express power to the board of control of said station to lease lands for its uses and purposes, but it might have the implied power to so lease lands if this is necessary to enable it to carry out the purposes for which the station was established and to perform the duties which have been conferred upon it.

(2) In leasing lands the board of control of the Ohio agricultural experiment station could not make such terms as would create an obligation against the state due and payable on and after the period of two years for which the present general assembly has appropriated money, namely, on and after July 1, 1919.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 25, 1917.

Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, MR. W. H. KRAMER, Bursar, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 6th, in which you enclose a certain lease and ask if this lease is properly made out and legal. The lease is too lengthy to quote in full, but for the purposes of passing upon the same it will be sufficient to note that it is a lease made by Mary Viola Mowery of certain lands therein described to the state of Ohio for the use of the agricultural experiment station, for a period of five years commencing on the first day of April, 1917, and ending on the thirty-first day of March, 1922, at an annual rental of $345.00 during the continuance of this lease, said rental to be paid on the thirteenth day of September of each year.

In answering your question I will first notice the lease as to form, and, secondly, will consider the question as to whether the Ohio agricultural experiment station has authority to enter into such a contract as is embodied in the instrument enclosed by you.

So far as the form of the lease is concerned, I am of the opinion that it is correct and embodies all the provisions that are necessary to protect the rights of the state thereunder. Of course, I am assuming that Adam Mowery died intestate and left no person entitled to his property or any interest therein other than Mary Viola Mowery, his widow. I am also assuming that his obligations have all been paid or that there is sufficient personal property to pay the same; otherwise, the interest which he had in the real estate herein leased might be subject to be sold for the payment of debts.

The more serious question involved in the matter of this lease is as to whether the said experiment station has authority in law to enter into a contract such as that set out in the instrument enclosed.

The sections of our statutes which have to do with the said experiment station are 1170 to 1173 G. C., inclusive. Section 1170 G. C. reads as follows:

> "There shall be a state agricultural experiment station for the benefit of practical and scientific agriculture and the development of the agricultural resources of the state. It shall be known as the 'Ohio agricultural experiment station.'"

Section 1171 provides for a board of control of said station consisting of five members.

Section 1171-3 enumerates the powers of the board, and reads as follows:

> "The board of control of the Ohio agricultural experiment station shall be a body corporate, with power to sue and be sued, to contract and be contracted with, to make and use a seal and to alter it at its pleasure. It may receive and hold in trust for the use and benefit of the station a grant, or devise of land, or a donation or bequest of money or other personal property to be applied to the general or special use of the station as directed by the donor."

In looking over the sections of our statutes which have to do with the station I find no express power given anywhere therein to the board to lease lands for the uses and purposes of the station.

Section 1172 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The title of all lands for the use of experiment station shall be conveyed in fee simple to the state, but no title shall be conveyed for such purposes unless the attorney general is satisfied that it is free from defects and incumbrances."

The provisions of this section are to the effect that when lands for the use of the experiment station are conveyed to the state they shall be conveyed in fee simple; and section 1171-3 G. C. provides that the board may receive and hold in trust for the use and benefit of the station a grant or devise of land. The provisions of these two sections would seem to negative the idea that the board has the authority to lease lands for the uses and purposes of the station. If the said board has this power it must be an implied power necessary to enable the station to carry out and perform the duties which are expressly conferred upon it by law. The question is well settled that the grant of a specific power or the imposition of a definite duty confers, by implication, authority to do whatever is necessary to execute the power or perform the duty. Section 1170 G. C. sets forth the object of the agricultural experiment station, which is "for the benefit of practical and scientific agriculture and the development of the agricultural resources of the state." Hence, if your board should find as a matter of fact that, in order to perform the duties thus expressly imposed upon it, it is necessary for it to lease lands for the uses and purposes of the station, then it would have the power so to lease lands; but as a matter of law I cannot say that such implied powers are necessary to enable your board to carry out the purposes for which the agricultural experiment station was established and to perform the duties which have been imposed upon it.

In reference to the power of the board to enter into a contract of lease such as is enclosed for my consideration, I desire to call attention to the fact that this is a lease for five years, the consideration for which being $345.00, payable each and every year on the 30th day of September during the existence of the lease.

Even though the board has the implied power to lease lands for the uses and purposes of the station, has it the power and authority to lease lands under such terms and conditions?

Section 3 of article VIII of the Constitution provides:

> "Except the debts above specified in sections one and two of this article, no debt whatever shall hereafter be created by or on behalf of the state."

Section 2 to which section 3 refers provides that the state may contract debts to repel invasion, suppress insurrection, defend the state in war, or to redeem the present outstanding indebtedness of the state. Section 1 to which reference is made provides that the state may contract debts to supply casual deficits or failures in revenues, or to meet expenses not otherwise provided for. But with these two exceptions the state cannot create a debt, nor can any one on behalf of the state create a debt, and in the two exceptions enumerated the debts must not exceed the sum of seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

It is quite evident that the amount to be paid under and by virtue of the contract of lease enclosed by you does not come within the exemptions as set out in sections 1 and 2 of article VIII. But the question naturally arises: Is the obligation entered into by the board of control of the station a "debt" in view of the constitutional use of that term?

In considering section 1 of article VIII we find the inhibition of the constitution as to debts to include both "debts direct and contingent," for the language used is "but the aggregate amount of such debts, direct and contingent, * * * shall never exceed seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars." Then if contingent debts are inhibited by the third section of article VIII—and this seems evidently to have been the intention of those who formulated the said constitutional provisions—the next question to consider is as to whether the obligation incurred in the contract of lease is a contingent debt or obligation.

This lease binds the state, through said board, to pay to lessor, Mary Viola Mowery, the sum of $345.00 each and every year during the term of the contract. At the time this contract is executed it would create a present obligation on the part of the state to pay money at a future period. It thus becomes a debt of the state and is inhibited by section 3 of article VIII of the Constitution.

Further, if such a course could be followed by the state boards and departments generally, the hands of each subsequent general assembly would be tied.

Section 4 of article XII of the Constitution provides:

> "The general assembly shall provide for raising revenue, sufficient to defray the expenses of the state, for each year, * * *."

Section 22 of article II of the Constitution provides:

> "No money shall be drawn from the treasury, except in pursuance of a specific appropriation, made by law; and no appropriation shall be made for a longer period than two years."

From the provisions of these two sections it is evident that the entering into of obligations upon the part of the state and the provision for the payment of the same must go hand in hand, and that at the end of every two year period the affairs of the state must be balanced; and further, this matter of providing for the raising of revenues sufficient to defray the expenses of the state and of making specific appropriations to take care of the debts and obligations of the state is a matter that is entirely within the sound discretion of each legislative body as it meets in each of these two-year periods. But, as said above, if your board and other boards and departments of the state were permitted to enter into obligations, the payment of which is deferred to a time beyond the ending of any two-year period, each succeeding legislature could not exercise its judgment in reference to these matters. It could neither decline to make an appropriation to meet these various obligations year after year, nor could it withhold the tax or revenues sufficient to meet the appropriations.

Each legislative body appropriates a certain sum of money to take care of the obligations and the expenses of the state for the period of two years, and the expenditures of those two years must be kept within the bounds and limitations of the appropriations so made. For example, the present general assembly appropriated a certain amount of money for the uses and purposes of the Ohio agricultural experiment station for two years. Your expenditures for these two years must keep within the amount so appropriated, and you have the right to contract against it for the two years which the appropriation covers, but you have no right or authority to assume that the next general assembly will appropriate money to take care of obligations entered into by you during those two years and which become due and payable beyond the expiration of said two years.

Section 2 of the appropriation act of the present general assembly provides that the sums so appropriated herein "shall not be expended to pay liabilities or deficiencies existing prior to July 1, 1917, or incurred subsequent to June 30, 1919." (107 O. L. 187.) Hence, your entering into an obligation which involves the payment of money for the next five years violates, first, what seems to be the settled financial policy of the state as gathered from the constitutional provisions and from the acts of the legislature itself, and secondly, violates the provisions of section 3 of article VIII.

Hence your board has no authority, in my opinion, to enter into a contract involving the payment of money, a part or all of which will become due and payable on and after the two-year period ending July 1, 1919. I know it might be held that the entering into a contract involving the payment of money within the two-year period would be the creation of a debt and thus be inhibited by section 3 of article VII of the Constitution, but it must be remembered that provisions are already made for the taking care of such an obligation, and hence it cannot be considered as a debt or obligation against the state for which no provision has been made. In other words, the creation of the debt or the obligation and the payment of the same go hand in hand.

I base my argument and conclusions herein upon the decision of our supreme court in the case of The State v. Medbery et al., 7 O. S. 522. This case was well considered by the court; and the arguments used therein are unanswerable and the conclusions reached are absolutely sound. The facts in the case before me differ somewhat from the facts in the Medbery case, but the argument used therein and the conclusion reached can be applied to the facts in the matter before me with still greater force and logic than they could be applied to the facts before the court in that case.

I am not unmindful of the fact that the court in State ex rel. Ross et al. v. Donahey, auditor of state, 93 O. S. 414, distinguished the Medbery case in such a way as would warrant a distinction between the matter now before me and the Medbery case; but, as I view it, there is nothing in State ex rel. Ross v. Donahey, supra, which would warrant a different finding in the matter submitted to me than I have found herein.

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my opinion, first, that the enclosed lease is correct in form; secondly, that there is no express authority in law for the leasing of lands by the board of control of the Ohio agricultural experiment station, but if it is necessary to lease lands to enable it to carry out the purposes for which it was established and the duties which are imposed upon it, and there is money appropriated by the legislature for such a purpose, then in that event the board of control would have the implied power to lease lands; but, thirdly, this implied power would not warrant the said board in entering into a lease under such terms and conditions as to make obligations due and payable at a period beyond the two years for which the present appropriation was made, namely, on and after July 1, 1919.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—LANDS LOCATED IN ANOTHER STATE—PROCEEDS OF SALE OF SUCH LAND—SHARES OF STOCK OF FOREIGN CORPORATION—OWNED BY RESIDENT OF THIS STATE.

Lands located in another state are not subject to the collateral inheritance tax of this state nor are the proceeds of the sale of such lands subject to such tax by reason of a direction in the will of the owner thereof that such lands be sold and the proceeds distributed by way of legacies.

Shares of stock owned by a resident of this state in a corporation organized under the laws of another state are property within the jurisdiction of this state within the meaning of section 5331 G. C. and as such are subject to the collateral inheritance tax imposed by said section even though the executors of the estate may have been compelled to pay an inheritance or transfer tax upon such shares of stock to the state under the laws of which such corporation was organized. Persons taking specific bequests of shares of such stock are required to pay the collateral inheritance tax computed at the prescribed rate upon the market value of the shares taken by such bequest over and above the sum of $500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 25, 1917.

HON. J. L. HEISE, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged I am in receipt of your communication of June 22, 1917, asking my opinion with respect to the application of the collateral inheritance tax law of this state to certain bequests made in the codicil to the last will and testament of Josie P. Renick, who died testate, a resident of the city of Circleville, Ohio, July 2, 1916.

As shown by the inventory and appraisement filed in the probate court of Pickaway county, August 19, 1916, the assets of Mrs. Renick's estate consisted of money in bank to the amount of $1,287.37, 264 shares of the capital stock of the Wheeling Steel and Iron Co., a West Virginia corporation located at Wheeling, W. Va., of the appraised value of $36,960.00, 55 shares of preferred capital stock of the United States Steel Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the state of New Jersey, appraised at $6,050.00, 40 shares of the capital stock of the Suburban Brick Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the state of West Virginia, which were appraised as having no value, and 800 acres of land in Morris county, Kansas, of the appraised value of $35,200.00.

It appears from the application, filed by the executors of Mrs. Renick's estate in the probate court of Pickaway county for a determination of the inheritance tax, that the executors, for the purpose of having said 264 shares of the capital stock of the Wheeling Steel and Iron Co. transferred, paid to the state of West Virginia an inheritance or succession tax of five per cent. upon the inventoried value of such shares, amounting to $1,848.00, and that likewise, in order to obtain a transfer of the 55 shares of the preferred capital stock of the United States Steel Co., they paid to the state of New Jersey an inheritance or succession tax of five per cent. upon the inventoried value of such shares, amounting to $302.50. No tax has been paid to the state of West Virginia with respect to the 40 shares of the capital stock of the Suburban Brick Co. for the reason, as stated in said application, that same is of little or no value. In addition it appears that the executors have paid to the state of Kansas an inheritance tax of five per cent. upon the inventoried value of said 800 acres of land, situated in that state, amounting to $1,565.53, and that said lands have since been sold by the executors for the sum of $30,400.00.

By the codicil to the last will and testament of Mrs. Renick, above mentioned, specific bequests of the shares of stock owned by the deceased in the above mentioned companies are made to a number of persons. For the most part the bequests of such shares of stock are made outright to the respective beneficiaries therein named. In one instance, however, a certain number of shares of stock is bequeathed to one beneficiary with the provision that the dividends accruing on such shares are to be paid to the beneficiary during life, after which said stock is to be equally divided between two other persons. In another instance certain shares of capital stock are bequeathed to a certain person therein named to hold in trust for other persons, while in two other cases the codicil bequeathes certain shares of stock to one person to hold in trust and collect the dividends thereon for the use of other persons, during the lives of such persons, after which such stock goes into the residuary estate of the deceased.

With respect to the real estate in the state of Kansas, the will directs that the same shall be sold by her executors in such tracts or parts as they may deem most advantageous to the estate of the testatrix, at public or private sale, with the further direction that after said executors have converted said real estate and the shares of stock, before mentioned as having been bequeathed in trust with the proviso that upon the death of the beneficiaries to the dividends thereon the same shall become a part of the testatrix's residuary estate, the executors after having paid all debts and the costs of administering the estate, shall distribute and pay the balance remaining in their hands by way of legacies in specific amounts to a number of beneficiaries therein named.

It appears further from the application filed by the executors in the probate court that none of the legatees named in the will or codicil of Mrs. Renick are related to said decedent in either of the degrees named in section 5331 G. C.

The specific questions which have been submitted for my opinion are as follows:

> "1. Is any part of this estate subject to the payment of an inheritance tax in the state of Ohio?
> "2. If so, what part thereof, as stated in the inventory, is subject to such inheritance tax?
> "3. If any such inheritance tax is to be paid, which of the legatees or devisees are to be charged with the payment of the same?
> "4. Are each of the legatees or devisees so to be charged entitled to $500.00 of a deduction before the rate per cent. is calculated?"

In answering your first and second questions it will be necessary to note only the provisions of section 5331 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "All property within the jurisdiction of this state, and any interest therein, whether belonging to inhabitants of this state or not, and whether tangible or intangible, which pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state, or by deed, grant, sale or gift, made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor, to a person in trust, or otherwise, other than to or for the use of the father, mother, husband, wife, lineal descendant or adopted child, shall be liable to a tax of five per cent. of its value above the sum of five hundred dollars. Fifty per cent. of such tax shall be for the use of the state; and fifty per cent. of such tax shall go to the city, village or township in which said tax originates. All administrators, executors, and trustees, and any such grantee under a conveyance made during the grantor's life, shall be liable for all such taxes, with lawful interest, as hereinafter provided, until they have been paid, as hereinafter directed. Such taxes shall become due and payable immediately upon the death of the decedent and shall at once become a lien upon the property, and be and remain a lien until paid."

In the first place I take it that the rights and obligations of parties in regard to the payment of a tax of this kind are to be determined as of the time of the death of the decedent and that the tax is to be estimated in reference to property which, in legal contemplation, is within the jurisdiction of the state at the time of the testator's death.

Callahan v. Woodbridge, 171 Mass. 595,
Harper v. Bradford, 178 Mass. 95,
McCurdy v. McCurdy, 197 Mass. 248.

The lands owned by the decedent at the time of her death in the state of Kansas are not as lands properly within the jurisdiction of this state nor subject to the taxing power of the state in any manner.

In point on this question I note the following from the syllabus in the case of People v. Kellogg, 268 Ill. 489:

"For inheritance tax purposes the state takes an interest, at death, in all the property of a resident decedent within its jurisdiction and in all his personal property wherever it is located; but real property in another state is not subject to an Illinois inheritance tax, whether the title thereto passes by will or by the law of descent of the foreign state."

It is only by application of the equitable doctrine of conversion, by reason of the direction in Mrs. Renick's will that the lands owned by her in the state of Kansas should be sold and converted into money, that such property could be considered as personal property for any purpose. With respect to this principle, however, in its application to the questions at hand, it will be noted as a well established rule that succession to real estate is by permission of the state in which it lies and the power of the state to impose a tax affecting real property is restricted to real property over which such state has jurisdiction and the courts have declined to recognize any fiction that will transmute such property into personal property for the purpose of taxation at the domicile of one in another state.

In the case of In the Matter of Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, the court having under consideration the application of the collateral inheritance tax law of the state of New York, held:

"Personal property of a resident decedent out of the state is subject to appraisal for the purpose of taxation under the said act. Real property of a decedent situated out of this state is not subject to such appraisal and the doctrine of equitable conversion cannot be invoked to subject it thereto."

The following is quoted from the syllabus of the court in the case of Connell v. Crosby, 210 Ill. 380, where the court had under consideration questions touching the application of the inheritance tax law of that state:

> "Land situated in states other than Illinois, and belonging to one who was a resident of Illinois at the time of his death, are not subject to our inheritance tax law.
> "An inheritance tax upon funds derived from the sale of lands situated in foreign states cannot be collected in a suit at law upon the ground of equitable conversion by will, since the doctrine of equitable conversion is not given effect in courts of law."

To the same point may be noted the cases of McCurdy v. McCurdy and People v. Kellogg, supra.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that no collateral inheritance tax can be legally estimated on the value of the Kansas lands, nor of course on the proceeds thereof realized by the executors in the sale of the same.

The other property set out in the inventory is personal property owned by the deceased in this state and the same is subject to the collateral inheritance tax imposed by our law estimated on the value thereof in the manner directed by the statutes. Nor is the correctness of this conclusion affected by the fact that the executors were compelled to pay to other states a succession or transfer tax on a part of this personal property, to wit, on shares of stock owned by the deceased in corporations organized under the laws of such other states.

Without discussing the legal principles applicable to a consideration of the question, it is generally conceded that stock in a domestic corporation, whether passing by will or by descent, may be subjected to an inheritance tax by the state notwithstanding the owner of such a stock is a non-resident of such state.

People v. Griffith, 245 Ill. 532,
Estate of Palmer, 183 N. Y. 283,
Matter of Bronson, 150 N. Y. 1,
Dickson v. Russell, 78 N. Y. L. 296,

Gardner v. Carter, 74 N. H. 507,
In re Douglass Co., 84 Nebr. 506,
Estate of Culver, 145 Iowa 1.

It is equally well settled, however, that stock in a foreign corporation held by a resident of the state at the time of death is subject to the inheritance tax of that state for the reason that the legal situs of the stock as personal property is at the domicile of the owner and therefore within the jurisdiction of the taxing power of the state.

Appeal of Gallup, 76 Conn. 617,
People v. Union Trust Co., 255 Ill. 168,
In re estate of Hodges, 170 Cal. 492.

No doubt, the recognition of both the principles of taxation above noted in many cases results in double taxation, as is the case here, but this result it seems infringes no principle of constitutional law.

"There is no constitutional objection to a law which * * * lays a tax according both to the principle of domicil and the principle of situs, or what is practically equivalent, according to both the maxim, 'Mobilia sequuntur personam,' and the actual situs of the property, although double taxation inevitably results if other states in which the decedent was domiciled or in which the property had an actual situs lay the tax according to either or both principles."

Wharton on Conflict of Laws, 2d Ed., Vol. 1, p. 200.
Blackstone v. Miller, 188 U. S. 189,
In re Hodges, supra.

For the above reasons, on consideration of the terms of section 5331 G. C., I am of the opinion that all of the personal property of testatrix set out in the inventory is subject to the collateral inheritance tax law of this state to the extent and within the limitations prescribed by said law.

Applicable to the consideration of your third and fourth questions, it will be necessary to note in addition to section 5331 G. C., above quoted, other sections of the collateral inheritance tax law of this state.

Section 5336 G. C. provides that an administrator, executor or trustee having in charge, or trust, property subject to such law, shall deduct the tax therefrom, or collect the tax thereon from the legatee or person entitled to the property, and that he shall not deliver any specific legacy or property subject to such tax to any person until he has collected the tax thereon.

Section 5338 G. C. provides that if a legacy is given in money to a person for a limited period, the administrator, executor or trustee of the estate shall retain the tax on the whole amount, and that if such legacy is not in money he shall make an application to the court having jurisdiction of his accounts to make an apportionment, if the case require it, of the sum to be paid into his hands by such legatee on account of the tax and for such further order as the case may require.

Section 5333 G. C. provides that when a person bequeathes or devises property to or for the use of father, mother, husband, wife, lineal descendant or adopted child, during life or for a term of years, and the remainder to a collateral heir, or to a stranger to the blood, the value of the prior estate shall be appraised within sixty days after the death of the testator in the manner provided for in the act and deducted together with the sum of $500.00 from the appraised value of such property.

These sections in themselves seem quite clearly to indicate that the separate interests of the respective takers under the will or by descent are separately liable for the inheritance tax and from this it would follow that the deduction of $500.00 is to be made from the value of each separate interest.

Some doubt in respect to this question arises by reason of the provisions of section 5340 G. C., from which it appears that the value of the thing to be taxed is to be ascertained from the inventory of the estate filed in the probate court. From this it might be argued that the estate, or at least so much of it as is subject to the tax, is to be valued as a whole, and if this be the case, any deductions should be made from the whole value so ascertained. It has been held, however, in the cases of Haggerty v. State, 55 O. S. 613, State ex rel. v. Ferris, 53 O. S. 314, and State ex rel. v. Guilbert, 70 O. S. 229, that the tax imposed by the inheritance tax laws of this state is not a tax upon property but is a tax upon the privilege of succeeding to or receiving property, whether such property be received by will or by virtue of the statutes of descent and distribution.

The same theory with respect to the essential nature of the inheritance tax laws is quite generally recognized by the courts of other states.

See:

Estate of Hite, 159 Cal. 392,
Kochersperger v. Drake, 167 Ill. 122,
Wheeting v. Morrow, 151 Iowa 590,
Estate of Mackey, 46 Cal. 79.

Indeed, with respect to our own collateral inheritance tax law, it must be construed as imposing a tax on the privilege of succeeding to property by will or descent and not as imposing a tax upon the property so received, for otherwise the law would constitute a species of property taxation repugnant to the uniform rule enjoined by section 2 of article XII of the state constitution.

I quote the following from an opinion of my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, addressed to Hon. J. W. Smith, prosecuting attorney, Ottawa, Ohio, under date of February 5, 1913 (Report of the Attorney-General for the year 1913, Vol. II, page 1111):

> "This fact, being established, becomes the keynote of the entire law. If the real subject of taxation is the right to inherit, succeed to or receive, then it must be presumed that the legislature intended the value of the right in each instance to be measured by the value of the thing inherited, succeeded to or received and not by the value of the thing transmitted, devised or bequeathed.
> "Therefore, in spite of the use of the inventory in the machinery of assessment, I have reached the conclusion * * * that debts of the decedent and costs of administration of his estate must be deducted from face value thereof as shown by the inventory, and proportionately from the face value of so much of the estate as passes to collateral relatives and strangers to the blood."

Mr. Hogan further addressing himself to the question there at hand says:

> "Having reached the conclusion just stated, it seems to me quite logical to advance a step further for the purpose of answering the question submitted by you and to hold that, when the value of so much of the estate as is transmitted to and received by collateral relatives and strangers to the blood is ascertained in bulk by making the necessary deductions or when the debts and costs chargeable against particular devises and bequests have been properly deducted from the value thereof, that portion of the entire estate which is subject to the collateral inheritance tax should be separated into the various interests, portions, devises or bequests receivable by different persons under the statute or the will or deed of gift and the tax assessed separately against each one of them. This is consistent with the provisions of sections 5333, 5334, 5336 and similar sections. If the tax is to be so separately assessed, it follows as a matter of course, that the deduction of $200.00 (now $500.00) must be made from the ascertained value of each separate share or interest."

I feel that I can agree with the greater part of that which is said by my predecessor in the language above quoted, but to make myself clear I will say that in my opinion in computing the collateral inheritance tax the interest of each separate legatee subject to the tax constitutes a separate taxable thing and the exemption of $500.00 should be deducted from each of the separate interests and not from the aggregate value of all interests subject to taxation.

This answers your fourth question.

With respect to your third question, it follows from what has been before said herein that each person taking by the will of Josie P. Renick a specific bequest of shares of stock is liable for the collateral inheritance tax to be estimated at the rate prescribed upon the market value of the shares of stock so taken over and above the sum of $500.00. The interest of those taking shares of stock in remainder after the termination of the life interest therein of another, should be valued in accordance with the provisions of section 5333 G. C. and the tax should be estimated on such portion of the value of such interest in remainder as exceeds the sum of $500.00.

In this connection, it will be noted from the provisions of section 5333 G. C. that they are in terms applicable for the purpose of ascertaining the value of a subsequent estate in a thing bequeathed when the prior estate or interest therein is not taxable. However, I note that in the case of Dow v. Abbott, 197 Mass. 283, a case construing a similar statute in the collateral inheritance tax law of the state of Massachusetts, there is authority to the point that in determining the value of the subsequent interest here in question section 5333 of the General Code should be applied.

The tax on the particular shares of stock above mentioned, which after becoming a part of the residuary estate of the testatrix are to be sold and the proceeds divided among legatees therein named, should be computed upon the value of the same over and above the sum of $500.00 to each taker diminished by the proportion such stock will have to bear in paying the debts and the costs of administering the estate.

In conclusion it may be observed from what has been before stated herein that no collateral inheritance tax is to be computed on the proceeds of the sale of the Kansas lands.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

Section 11089 G. C. authorizes the probate judge to charge $5.00 in an appropriation proceeding for each day occupied in the trial or trials to the jury, and is not authorized to make such charge upon the hearing of any motions or demurrers, or upon the hearing of the preliminary questions provided for in section 11046 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 25, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Officers, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—We are in receipt of your request for opinion upon the following question:

> "Reading sections 2978 and 11089 G. C. together is probate judge to tax the five dollars a day mentioned in the latter section, in appropriation proceedings, only for each day taken up by the court in the selection of the jury, the taking of the testimony, the receiving of the verdict, etc., or is he legally required to tax this per diem fee for every day or part of day occupied in the hearing of preliminary questions, and the passing on by the court of motions, demurrers, etc., in connection with the cause?"

The answer to this question might be placed on either of two bases and would be the same upon each: First, upon a consideration of the statutes governing the methods of condemnation, as it is popularly called, or appropriation, as named in the statute. Second, if the matter be governed by the civil code, directly or by analogy, it could be determined upon a consideration as to whether the preliminary hearing of motions, demurrers, etc., are trials or any part of a trial.

The first is the proper ground upon which to make the decision, as it plainly appears that the civil code does not govern it. We have then recourse to the statutes governing the method of appropriation of property for public uses. The chapter containing the provisions does not create the right to appropriation, or in any manner limit the machinery and method for its exercise. It is chapter 5 of title III of part third of the General Code. Part third is entitled "Remedial," and has to do generally with the practices and proceedings in all courts. Title III is "Procedure in the Probate Court," and chapter 5 is headed "Appropriation of Property." So that you have exclusively a matter of procedure. That this is not the code of civil procedure is perfectly apparent, as the letter is found in the following title, No. 4, under the heading "Procedure in Common Pleas Court." Although the code provisions are found in the chapter so headed, they also apply extensively to proceedings in other courts, but this only by direct reference requiring such application.

There are in the chapters governing probate courts and justices of the peace certain general enactments making the code of civil procedure applicable to certain phases of the practise in those inferior courts, but this never has any application where their special proceedings are especially provided as in this instance. It may also be promised that the purpose of the civil code is generally a method of determination of matters of right between citizens or sometimes between the citizen and the public, but always when that which is involved may be said to be of the nature of litigation. The appropriation of property theoretically is not so. The right to appropriate is not a private right, or not simply a right of the public for relief against an individual. It is something essentially different; it is an exercise of political power whereby the property of the citizen is taken from him for public use, this public, political right being held to transcend any private right, so that the procedure pointed out is the method by which this right is exercised by the public. The procedure does have some of the attributes and is subject to similar forms as that in litigation. This, however, is the machinery pointed out for the exercise of the right, and the fixing of compensation for the property taken, a right to which is secured by the constitution.

That the proceeding provided in this chapter is not under the civil code is demonstrated by the fact that where the legislature consider that proceedings may most expeditiously be in conformity with the code, they so provide, as in section 11048 the trial is to be as in civil actions.

Section 11063 G. C. provides that "bills of exception may be taken and shall be allowed as provided by law in civil cases;" and in the following section it is enacted that proceedings upon the petition in error shall be conducted as in civil cases." These, it will be observed, are after the case has progressed to the stage where the amount of the compensation and damages is to be determined. All steps are in like manner specially provided. The contents of the petition are prescribed and are different from the setting out of causes of action. Everything connected with summons, publication, and such preliminary matters is expressly enacted.

The whole practise is expressly provided. Therefore, you are to look to this act alone for authority to file motions and demurrers. Not only do you have the certainty of statutory construction that it is not a civil action, but the opinion of the supreme court. Summers, J., in rendering the opinion for the court, bearing on many phases of the subject, says:

> "An appropriation proceeding is not a civil action, but a special proceeding."
> Railroad Co. v. Tod, 72 O. S. 156.

When we speak of special proceedings we refer to a well-known division and subject of the remedial law. This law is divided by text writers into three classes:

1. Civil actions.
2. Special proceedings.
3. Provisional remedies.

and this division was recognized in the Revised Statutes. The compilers of the General Code have recognized a further division, comprising a portion of what had formerly been considered provisional remedies and which they denote "special actions," making four subdivisions instead of the above three. This added class, or rather redivision, is very useful, as "special actions" included in it are of a different nature from the other special proceedings, as divorce, partition, dower and ejectment, in which the method of proceeding uses all the forms of the civil action.

The appropriation in question is not such special action, but is strictly the special proceeding left after taking out all the special actions from the class. There are, therefore, no demurrers or motions provided by law unless the statute so prescribes, which it does not, but makes another provision calculated to take their place in almost every instance, but not entirely, as will hereafter appear.

Section 11046 G. C. is as follows:

> "On the day named in a summons first served, or publication first completed, the probate judge shall hear and determine the questions of the existence of the corporation, its right to make the appropriation, its inability to agree with the owner, and the necessity for the appropriation. Upon all these questions the burden of proof shall be upon the corporation, and any interested person as shall be heard."

Here are enumerated four subjects which the court is to hear upon the day named in the summons. Now these four subjects are not issues in the case made by any pleadings. Upon an examination of the requirement of the petition (Sec. 11042) it appears that no averment is necessary to be made as to any of these four questions. So that in passing upon these the court is not, in any sense, passing upon a demurrer, or that which by any possibility can be construed as a demurrer to the petition. It will appear further along that this hearing on jurisdictional questions is no part of the trial. It is sui generis, the creature of this section in this chapter. It is a determination as to the jurisdiction of the court as to its right and power to proceed. If that right be determined in the affirmative a trial follows. The great purpose of this trial is the determination of one issue of fact, the amount of compensation and damages to be paid to the owner of the property. There are, however, in that trial and in the whole proceeding from beginning to end, issues of law other than the above jurisdictional questions, or at least such issues may arise, and when they do arise at any step of the case, are for the determination of the court.

See Railroad v. Tod, supra, at p. 166.

Speaking of these preliminary questions the court says:

> "Whether denied or not they do not present issues of fact, but are conditions precedent, prescribed by the legislature, to the right of eminent domain, or to the exercise of such right. and the determination of them by the probate judge is not a trial within the meaning of the statutes relating to motions for a new trial."

Upon the following page, the court says that the preliminary hearing is merely one step in the proceeding, and on page 168 states that the fact that the court of common pleas reverses the judgment of the probate court solely on the grounds of error in the trial, there is a query as to whether or not there must be another hearing and determination of the preliminary question, and the opposite query if the reversal be on the determination of the preliminary question as to whether there should be a new trial on the subject of compensation and damages.

Upon the above statement that other issues of law exist, the same judge in another case in the same volume makes the following statement:

> "Independently of the signification of any of the so-called jurisdictional questions, it is not apparent that the jurisdiction of the probate court is limited to a determination of these questions. The fact that the legislature has seen fit, from considerations of convenience or otherwise, to require the probate judge to determine these questions in limino does not necessarily make applicable the maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius."
> Railroad v. Railroad, 72 O. S. 385.

It is, therefore, apparent that there is no demurrer in this proceeding and no motion, and therefore, nothing of the kind to charge for.

As to the preliminary hearing provided by Sec. 11046, the same conclusion applies, if, as above indicated, it is not a trial or part of the trial. Railroad v. Tod, supra, clearly holds that it is not. This would also seem a necessary implication from the statutes.

Looking alone at section 11046 it would seem to have the attributes of a trial, as the burden of proof is spoken of and any interested person is to be heard. Yet it is not a trial, but only an inquiry as to whether there shall be a trial. The trial recognized by the statute is the jury trial.

Section 11048 provides that the owners of each separate tract and each separate right are entitled to separate trials by jury.

Section 11058 provides for a motion for a new trial, which is directed to this last trial alone.

Section 11062 makes further provision as to a new trial. Now suppose such motion be sustained. The new trial at least is a trial, but if the new trial be a trial it follows that the first one also was. There is only one preliminary hearing for all parties. There may be as many trials as there are different parties, and a good many more, for each of them may possibly get one or more new trials.

Section 11050 directly calls the jury trial, the trial: "The court may direct the order and fix the time of the several trials, and adjourn or continue a trial, etc."

Doubt is cast upon the effect of Railroad v. Tod, supra, by the subsequent decision at the same term of Railroad v. Traction Co., 72 O. S. 429. In the opinion in this case Davis, J. indicates a different view from what is set out in the opinion of Summers, J. in the other case, and if the opinion by Davis stood alone it would have to be conceded that it makes the preliminary hearing a part of the trial. There is no conflict in the two decisions; it is a matter of the opinions solely. One was handed down March 21, 1905. The last one is given as of May 2, 1904, but the year must be a mistake, as reference is made to Railroad v. Tod, as "recently held." It was by the same court, however, consisting of all the same judges, and just six weeks after the other, and as they do not disapprove of anything in the former case, but only distinguish the latter one and still approve the first, we may at least treat both impartially and decide the question before us on the evident import of the statutes, especially as it was not necessary to the decision of the last case to decide the question as to whether the preliminary hearing was part of the trial.

There is then one preliminary hearing, which is to the court. If you call it a trial, it is tried to the court. If the determination is a certain way on all the questions, a jury is drawn and a trial or trials may be had upon another issue. This trial is spoken of throughout the chapters as "the trial."

> "The probate judge shall be allowed to enter a charge of five dollars in the cost bill for each day occupied in the trial of a cause."

This matter seems to get through the stage of a public political proceeding and become a cause when you get to the point of fixing compensation. Then the constitutional right of the citizen arises and a trial by jury is vouchsafed by him by the constitution and the legislature begins to speak of the trial and gives the proceeding the nature of a trial and requires it to assume the form and attributes, as well as the name of a trial.

When section 11089 allows a probate judge to enter a charge of $5.00 in the cost bill for each day occupied in the trial of a case, the "trial" is the trial spoken of in these other sections. The maxim noscitur a sociis applies; and for this trial from the time of the assembling of the jury and sending them out to make the view, and upon their return into court at the appointed time, and during the introduction of testimony and argument, and until the return of the verdict, he is entitled to the $5.00 for each day. Such trial is actually in progress.

If, however, an appropriation proceeding were a civil action there would be no authority to charge under this item for the hearing of demurrers and motions. A demurrer is no part of the trial. The demurrer is provided for in the chapter on pleadings, as are also motions. This is at a preceding stage of the case from the trial; the trial takes place always after an issue is made up. The definition of a trial is given in section 11376:

> "A trial is a judicial examination of the issues, whether of law or of fact, in an action or proceeding."

A demurrer is said to be an issue of law, and logically is. The hearing of the demurrer, therefore, upon the application of the above definition of trial, might be said to be a trial, and in an academic sense is so. It is not, however, theoretically so, as is shown by its place in the code, and is not so in the understanding of the profession, and in its practice is not so spoken of. The issues of law referred to in section 11376, 11377 and 11379 are such issues of law as arise at the trial properly speaking. That is the trial as provided in the code which takes place when you get to the issue and after you have passed the stage of demurrer, which is a pleading and motions which are not. These issues of law might amount to exactly the same as a demurrer. It is said a party may always demur, and may demur orally, and may demur upon the trial or upon the motion for a new trial verbally, which means no more than if a petition does not set out a cause of action, that fact may be urged and called to the attention of the court at any time, but issues of law may also arise and constantly do on matters of fact coming up for the first time upon the introduction of evidence, and these issues are tried to the court; that is, the court always determines them, and is constantly deciding and disposing of them during trials and decides all of them in his charge to the jury, who are required to take the law from the court, no matters of law being submitted to them, but simply questions of fact. The court may also decide a case and render judgment upon the pleadings at the trial, and instead of submitting any questions of fact to a jury, may and sometimes does decide such points of law after the trial statement by counsel and without hearing evidence. In all these respects, issues of law are tried to the court, but in the ordinary and practical understanding of lawyers the argument of a demurrer is not a trial.

You are, therefore, answered as above that the probate judge may charge $5.00 a day in an appropriation proceeding for each day occupied in the trial or trials to the jury.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MEMBER OF BOARD OF EDUCATION—NO RIGHT TO CONTRACT WITH BOARD TO PUBLISH LEGAL NOTICES OR FURNISH SUPPLIES.

A member of a board of education who is owner and publisher of a newspaper has no right to contract with the board to publish legal notices even though only the legal rate is charged for such publication.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 25, 1917.

HON. GEORGE F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 2, 1917, in which you ask my opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "A member of a village school board is the editor and publisher of the only newspaper within the district over which the board of education has jurisdiction. The board of education has its legal notices published in the paper of this member of the board, and pays him the legal rate for such publication. This member, in connection with publishing the paper, does job work in his office and in this capacity has contracted with the board to furnish the board of education with supplies, and has been paid for the same. There is no claim of any fraud on the part of any person, or that the charges were extortionate, or were any more than would have been made by any other person doing the advertising and furnishing the supplies, the question simply being whether under section 4757 of the Genral Code such contracts can be made."

Section 4757 G. C., to which you refer, reads in part as follows:

"* * * No member of the board shall have, directly or indirectly, any pecuniary interest in any contract of the board or be employed in any manner for compensation by the board of which he is a member except as clerk or treasurer. * * *"

In order to arrive at the proper meaning of said language quoted it might be well to observe not only said section and every part of it, but if there are any other sections in pari materia they should all be considered together. That is to say, the sections of the statute which are in pari materia, and which refer to the same thing, should be considered together. It might further be said, however, that other sections in pari materia should be considered only where there is doubt as to the construction which should be placed upon the language of the section under consideration. The language of section 4757 G. C., that "no member of the board shall have, directly or indirectly, any pecuniary interest in any contract," standing alone, seems clear and explicit, but the other sections of which are in pari materia with the above language of said above quoted section are sections 12910 and 12911 G. C.

Section 12910 G. C. provides:

"Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant, or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

Section 12911 G. C. provides in part.

"Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit, by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies, * * * for the use of the * * * board of education * * * with which he is not connected, and the amount of such contract exceeds the sum of fifty dollars, unless such contract is let on bids duly advertised as provided by law, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

That is to say, the prohibitory acts in reference to the purchase of supplies are made punishable by sections 12910 and 12911 of the General Code. So that it is not only unlawful for a member of a board of education to directly or indirectly have any pecuniary interest in any contract, but if he is so interested in a contract for supplies, etc., he shall be punished therefor.

All the above sections have been considered from time to time by this department with the result of a universal holding that in whatever manner the officer was interested in the contract, such contract was void and the money paid thereunder was recoverable.

In Grant v. Brouse et al., 1 N. P. 145, the court holds that when a firm engaged in mercantile business enters into a contract with a board of education, thereby selling certain goods to such board, and one of the members of such firm is also a member of said board, such contract comes within the prohibition of said section 4757 of the General Code, and is void. Voris, J., in the opinion, uses the following language:

> "We are not undertaking to censure anybody, because we believe that in this transaction the board believed that it was discharging a public duty beneficially to the public; that is, it supposed that this was a more advantageous course to take than to obey the law. I have no doubt that the member of the board, who sold these articles, undertook to make a favorable arrangement for the public. Nothing to the contrary is asserted, and it is urged in fact, by the defendants, as a reason why this court should not interfere with its jurisdiction, that no pecuniary injury in fact resulted.
> "But we cannot look upon it in this light. The dollar and the cent advantage is the lowest order of consideration that can be urged, when a public wrong, a vicious example is encouraged under high official sanction; the example, the public wrong, the prostitution of public virtue is vastly more than mere matter of dollars and cents. The law was made in the interests of sound public policy, and while in some cases, it may appear to be more advantageous to ignore than to obey the law, yet we think no public officer can violate a direct provision of the law, directing the performance of his duty, or prohibiting certain acts, and have his conduct judicially approved, and where the matter comes before the court it ought to carefully see to it that public policy is upheld. I know of no better way of preserving the virtue of the public than to have its officers understand and act as if they were public servants, always recognizing that a public position constitutes a public trust that must be sacredly carried out."

In Opinion No. 139, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. 1, p. 267, it was held:

> "The president of a board of education who is also a director and stock holder of a material company, which material company sells its material to the principal contractor dealing with said board of education, has such an interest in said contract as is prohibited by section 4757 G. C."

In Opinion No. 1001, Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1914, Vol. 1, p. 848, it was held:

> "A corporation of which a member of the sinking fund trustees or trustees of a municipal library is a stockholder cannot legally sell merchandise to the city with which he is officially connected, or be interested in any way in contracting for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance while such member is in office. Such officers may not be interested in contracts during the term for which they were elected, but may after the expiration of their term."

In Opinion No. 1140, Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1914, Vol. 2, page 1201, it was held:

> "A contract in excess of $50.00, which is entered into between a board of education and a coal company, of which one of the members of the board is a stockholder, without advertising and bids, is illegal and contrary to section 12911 G. C."

In The Bellaire Goblet Co. v. City of Findlay et al., 5 O. C. C. 418, it was held:

"Contracts entered into by a board of gas trustees of a municipality and an incorporated company, when a member of the board of gas trustees is at the same time an officer and personally interested in the incorporated company, are against public policy and void."

Seney, J., in the opinion of the court, at page 430, quoting Doll v. State, 45 O. S. 445, makes use of the following language:

"To permit those holding offices of trust or profit to become interested in contracts for the purchase of property for the use of the state, county or municipality, of which they are officers, might encourage favoritism and fraudulent combinations and practices not easily detected, and thus make such officers charged with the duty of protecting those whose interests are confided to them, instruments of harm. The surest means of preventing this was to prohibit all such contracts."

Applying the above rules, then, to your question, there is but one conclusion for me to reach, and that is that a member of a village board of education, who is the editor and publisher of a newspaper within the district has no right to have any pecuniary interest, directly or indirectly, in a contract wherein he is to receive compensation for the publication of legal notices for said board, and that such member has no right to furnish the board of education with supplies during the time he is a member of such board.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FOREIGN TRUST COMPANIES—THEIR RIGHT TO ACT AS EXECUTOR OR TRUSTEE OF AN ESTATE IN OHIO.

Inasmuch as special provision is made by paragraph (C) of section 736 General Code, empowering the superintendent of banks to issue to a foreign trust company a certificate authorizing it to transact business in this state, a foreign trust company desiring to accept an appointment to act as executor or trustee of an estate in Ohio is not required to comply with the provisions of section 178 General Code, nor would such foreign trust company be required to comply with the provisions of section 183 General Code, especially if it appears that such company would not be required to employ any part of its capital stock in this state in administering the trusts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 13, 1917, you addressed a communication to this department asking for an opinion, in which you say:

"Messrs. Hoyt, Dustin, Kelley, McKeehan & Andrews, of Cleveland, have submitted to this department the following question:

"'Does a trust company, organized under the laws of another state, desiring to accept an appointment as testamentary trustee or executor in this state, have to comply with either or both sections 178 and 183 of the General Code in addition to complying with the provisions of sections 736, paragraph c, 9778 and 9779 of the General Code?'

"Kindly let me have your opinion at the earliest date possible on the above question, and any other questions related thereto."

Your communication does not raise any question as to the powers of trust companies generally, whether domestic or foreign, nor even with respect to their particular power or capacity to act as executor or testamentary trustee of estates. The only question presented by you is whether or not a trust company, incorporated under the laws of another state, must, as a foreign corporation, comply with the provisions of sections 178 and 183, respectively, of the General Code, before exercising trust company powers in this state under appointment as testamentary trustee or executor.

In consideration of this question it is to be noted that with respect to corporations and organizations in this state, trust companies are classed as banks by sections 9702, et seq., of the General Code, which sections were originally enacted as a part of the Thomas banking act, enacted in 1910. By section 10 of said act (now section 9715 G. C.) trust companies and other banking institutions mentioned in section 9702 General Code are brought under the authority and control of the superintendent of banks by the provision that no such corporation shall transact business except such as is incidental and necessarily preliminary to its organization, until it has been authorized by the superintendent of banks.

Section 711 of the General Code, which was likewise a part of the said Thomas banking act, provides more specifically to this end as follows:

"The superintendent of banks shall execute the laws in relation to banking companies, saving banks, saving societies, societies for savings, savings and loan associations, savings and trust companies, safe deposit companies and trust companies and every other corporation or association having the power to receive, and receiving money on deposit, chartered or incorporated under the laws of this state. Nothing in this chapter contained shall apply to building and loan associations."

Sections 9778 and 9779 General Code provide that no trust company, either foreign or domestic, shall accept trusts which may be vested in, transferred or committed to it by an individual or court until its paid in capital is at least $100,000, and until such corporation has deposited with the treasurer of state, in cash or in certain bonds therein designated, an amount not less than $50,000 nor more than $100,000, depending upon the amount of the paid in capital of said company. The treasurer of state is required to hold such funds and securities so deposited with him as security for the faithful performance of the trust assumed by such corporation.

Section 736, paragraph c, General Code, as enacted May 20, 1915 (106 O. L. 361), provides as follows:

"Each foreign trust company desiring and intending to do business in this state shall pay to the superintendent of banks a fee of fifty dollars for issuance to it of a certificate authorizing it to transact business in this state. Such fee to be paid before such certificate is issued."

Looking now to sections 178 and 183 of the General Code, it will be noted that the former is a license fee law and the latter is an initial franchise tax law applicable in general terms to foreign corporations as a condition of their right to do business in this state. The license fee provided for under sections 178, et seq., G. C., is one graduated upon the amount of the authorized capital stock of the foreign corporation seeking to do busniess in this state, while the initial franchise tax provided for in sections 183 et seq. of the General Code is one fixed by the computation of the fractional percentage upon the proportion of the authorized capital stock of the foreign corporation represented by property owned and used and business transacted in this state, but which fee shall not be less than $10.00 in any case.

With respect to the provisions of sections 183 et seq., prescribing an initial franchise tax on foreign corporations doing business in this state, it may be observed that with respect to a foreign trust company, acting as testamentary trustee or executor in this state, such provisions would not necessarily be operative to impose any tax on such company for the reason that such company would not necessarily employ any part of its capital stock in administering such trust in this state. It will be noted further that both sections 178 and 183 of the General Code, and the sections thereto related, operate only as prescribing certain conditions to the right of a foreign corporation to "do business in this state." Statutes of similar import to the above, applying to foreign corporations of different kinds, have been enacted in practically all of the several states and provisions of these statutes in respect to what constitutes "doing business," within the meaning of the term as therein used, has been construed in many decisions of the courts. In these decisions the courts, for the most part, have refrained from formulating any general rules for determining when a foreign corporation is "doing business" within the meaning of such statutes, but have contented themselves in determining whether, under the facts in particular cases, such corporations are within the statute.

The question has arisen quite frequently with reference to mercantile and other commercial corporations. In so far as any general rule can be gathered from the decisions, as has been pointed out by me in my opinion No. 236 to you under date of May 3, 1917, with reference to the matter of the Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, the phrase "doing business" within any particular state, as applied to foreign mercantile and commercial corporations, implies corporate continuity of conduct in respect to the business of such corporations, such as might be evidenced by the investment of capital, the maintenance of an office for the transaction of business, and those incidental circumstances which attest the corporate intent to avail itself of the privilege of carrying on business and activities such as appertain to the ordinary business and purpose of the corporation as distinguished from acts simply within its corporate powers.

Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727;
Penn Coliers Co. v. MacKeever, 183 N. Y. 98;
Simons-Burke Clothing Co. v. Linton, 90 Ark. 76;
Kilgore v. Smith, 142 Pa. 48;
Caesar v. Cappell, 83 Fed. Rep. 403, 422;
Toledo Commercial Co. v. Glenn Mfg. Co., 55 O. S. 217. 222, 223.

With reference to such foreign corporations, as insurance companies, investment companies, building and loan companies, trust companies and banking companies, however, I am not prepared to hold that the reason and purpose of statutes of this kind, as applied to such corporations, require such evidence of intended business continuity in order to bring them within the purview of statutes of this kind. As to such companies it seems that any business done, or transaction within the state through any agencies, is "doing business" in such state.

State v. Bristol Savings Bank, 108 Ala. 3;
Dundee v. Mortgage Trust and Investment Company, 95 Ala. 318;
Farrier v. New England Mortgage Security Co., 88 Ala. 270;
Rose v. Kimberly, 89 Wis. 545;
Swing v. Munsen, 191 Pa. St. 582;
Mo. Guarantee v. Cox, 146 Ind. 107;
Casualty Co. v. Banking Co., 12 C. C. (n. s.) 200;
State v. Insurance Company, 24 C. C. 387.

Under paragraph c of section 736 of the General Code, above quoted, a foreign trust company is required to obtain from the superintendent of banks a certificate as a condition to its right to do business in this state and on the considerations just mentioned I am clearly of the opinion that a foreign trust company would have to comply with the provisions of paragraph c, section 736, before it would be authorized to act as executor or testamentary trustee in this state under appointment therein.

With respect to the application of sections 178 and 183 G. C. to the question at hand, it will be noted that the former section specifically provides that it shall not apply to foreign banking, insurance, building and loan or bond investment corporations, while foreign banking, insurance, savings and loan, building and loan and bond investment corporations are expressly exempted from the operation of section 183 of the General Code by the provisions of section 188 of the General Code.

My predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, giving effect to the provisions just noted, exempting foreign banking corporations from the application of section 178 and 183 General Code, was of the opinion that foreign trust companies are to be classed as banking corporations within the meaning of these sections and therefore for this reason exempt from the provisions of section 178 and 183 General Code (See Attorney General's Reports for 1914, page 1636; 1913, page 73; 1911, page 789). If the conclusion of my predecessor with respect to this particular can be assumed to be correct, it of course affords a sufficient answer to the question made by you. However, this may be, I am of the opinion that inasmuch as specific provision has been made in the terms of paragraph (c) of section 736 General Code, for granting authority to foreign trust companies to transact business in this state, this authority, when granted pursuant to the provisions of said section, is all that is required and that for this reason the provisions of sections 178 and 183 General Code have no application to such foreign corporations.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

EXEMPTED VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT—CANNOT BE TRANSFERRED TO ADJOINING RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICTS.

There is no provision of law in Ohio whereby territory of an exempted village school district can be transferred to an adjoining rural school district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1917.

C. H. CURTISS, Prosecuting Attorney, Ravenna, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of July 5, 1917, you submit for my opinion the following statement of facts:

> "Kent village school district with territory contiguous both within and without the corporate limits of said village, wholly within this county, is exempt from the supervision of the county district, under authority of section 4688 of the General Code.
> "Franklin township rural school district surrounding said village school district, also wholly within this county, is under the control of the county school district, under authority of section 4684 of the General Code.
> "It is desired by the boards of education of these districts to transfer territory from said village school district to said township rural school district.
> "1st. Can this under the present provisions of the several sections of our General Code, now in force, lawfully be done?
> "2nd. If so, how, and what is the proceedure?
> "3rd. Does the repeal of section 4693 of the General Code bar such transfer by mutual agreement of said boards?"

General Code section 4688 to which you refer provides when a village school district might originally be exempted from the supervision of the county board of education. It reads as follows:

> "The board of education of any village school district containing a village which according to the last federal census had a population of three thousand or more, may decide by a majority vote of the full membership thereof not to become a part of the county school district. Such village district by notifying the county board of education of such decision before the third Saturday of July, 1914, shall be exempt from the supervision of the board."

General Code section 4688-1 provides under what circumstances a board of education of a village may order a census to be taken of the population of the district. It provides in part:

> "* * * If the census shows a population of three thousand or more in the village school district, and said census is approved by the superintendent of public instruction, then said district shall, upon notification by the district board of education of said village school district, be exempted from the supervision of the county board of education."

Section 4684 provides that each county, exclusive of the territory which is embraced in any city school district, and the territory which is embraced in any village school district exempted from the supervision of the county board of education by the provisions of section 4688 and 4688-1 before mentioned, and the territory detached for school purposes from said county, and including the territory attached to said county for school purposes, shall constitute the county school district. That is to say, the territory over which the county board of education has jurisdiction, is all that territory of the county including the territory of any other county which is attached to the county for school purposes, and excluding all that territory within the county which is detached for school purposes; and also excluding any city school district and any exempted village school district.

The county board of education is given authority by section 4696 G. C. to transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining exempted village school district or to a city school district, or to another county school district. Such transfer can only be made provided at least 50 per cent. of the electors of the territory to be transferred petition for such transfer, and such transfer must be made provided at least 75 per cent. of the electors of the terrritory petition for such transfer; but there is nothing in our school laws which permits territory to be transferred from a city school district or an exempted village school district to a rural school district. When territory is once attached to a city school district, or to an exempted village school district, there is no way under our school laws to detach the same. Prior to the school code which was enacted in 1914, such transfer of territory from one school district to another school district could be made by the mutual agreement of the several boards of education affected, under and by authority of section 4693 G. C.; but said section was repealed when the new school code was enacted, and no similar provision to that contained therein has been enacted in its place.

I must, therefore, advise you that territory of an exempted village school district cannot be transferred to a rural school district.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

POWER OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY TO REGULATE THE PRICE OF COAL AND FOOD PRODUCTS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1917.

HON. H. H. TIMBY, State Senator, Ashtabula, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have invited my opinion as to the power of the general assembly of Ohio to fix or to regulate the price of coal. I am glad to be able to comply with your request, in that I have on my own motion caused an investigation to be made of this question. Alarmed at the situation which has been developing in this state, and perhaps elsewhere, during the past few months, and feeling that the power of the state might have to be exerted for its control, I had thought it best to ascertain how far that power might extend.

The opinion which is sent to you is the result of the investigation to which I have referred, and the manner of the treatment of the subject is accounted for thereby I ask you, therefore, to accept this statement as a species of apology for the length of the opinion and the method of approach to the solution of the questions which are discussed therein.

It is obvious that any effort to regulate the price of a commodity by legislation would naturally be ascribed to the exercise of the so-called "police power." On close analysis it would seem that there is really no such thing as police power—or rather that in its broadest sense the police power is merely the power to make laws—the general legislative power. Upon the exercise of any legislative power the constitutions, state and federal, impose certain limitations. Some of these, in which we are primarily intersested, are in the nature of guaranties of individual rights. Thus there is the inviolable right of private property; the right of personal liberty, of which one may not be deprived without due process of law. Growing out of one or the other of these primary and constitutionally guaranteed rights (the exact source being immaterial for present purposes) is the right to make contracts respecting the disposition of property. Whether this a part of one's property rights or an attribute of his personal right of liberty, the right is certainly protected by constitutional limit tations.

But, obviously, there is no such thing as an absolute right to make contracts; for if there were the legislative power would be limited to the control of men in their non-contractual relations.

Unless, therefore, we are to assume that no legislature operating under a written constitution, like those which we have, can in any manner prevent the doing of a thing which may be made the subject of a contract, we must conclude that the right to make contracts is like other rights of personal liberty and property—subject to control by the legislature.

Thus, the constitutionally guaranteed right of personal liberty does not imply that the individual is at liberty to defraud his neighbor, and he may be punished for obtaining money by false pretenses, even though he does this through the medium of a contract.

Logically, therefore, the police power would seem to extend to all contracts, though there may be limitations upon its exercise in all cases.

These propositions are elementary and do not require the support of the multitude of adjudicated cases which might be cited to sustain them. The quotation of the general statements of two of the leading commentators on the general subject, representing two generations, will be sufficient.

"All contracts and all rights, it is declared, are subject to this power; (citing Fire Insurance Co. v. Railroad Co., 175 U. S. 91, (insurance regulation); Trust Co. v. Krumseig, 172 U. S. 351 (usurious contracts), etc.; and quoting at length from Allgeyer v. Louisiana, 165 U. S. 578, including the following language of Mr. Justice Peckham therein:

" 'In the privilege of pursuing an ordinary calling or trade and of acquring, holding, and selling property * * * must be embraced the right to make all proper contracts in relation thereto, and although it may be conceded that this right to contract in relation to persons or property, or to do business within the jurisdiction of the state, may be regulated and sometimes prohibited when the contracts or busines conflict with the policy of the state as contained in the statutes, yet the power * * * can not extend to prohibiting the citizen from making contracts * * * (outside of the limits and jurisdiction of the state, and which are also to be performed outside of such jurisdiction * * *); and not only may regulations which affect them be established by the state, but all such regulations must be subject to change from time to time, as the general well-being of the community may require, or as the circumstances may change, or as experience may demonstrate the necessity, (Citing the leading early case of Thorpe v. Rutland & Burlington R. R. Co., 27 Vt. 140—a case which will be found very frequently cited in the early decisions of the supreme court of Ohio on the nature of the police power.) * * *.

"The limit to the exercise of the police power in these cases must be this: the regulations must have reference to the comfort, safety, or welfare of society; (citing numerous cases, the general purport of which is to the effect that police regulations can not be purely arbitrary, and must have some reasonable tendency to promote a public as distinguished from a private or a class good.)

"From the mass of decisions, in which the nature of the power has been discussed, and its application either conceded or denied, it is possible to evolve at least two main attributes or characteristics which differentiate the police power; it aims directly to secure and promote the public welfare, and it does so by restraint and compulsion * * * a detailed examination of statutes and decisions * * * will reveal the police power not as a fixed quantity, but as the expression of social, economic and political conditions. * * *"

"The care of the public welfare, or internal public policy, has for its object the improvement of social and economic conditions affecting the community at large and collectively, with a view to bringing about 'the greatest good of the greatest number.' The organized activity of the community is based upon the fact or belief that certain conditions essential or favorable to all alike can not be obtained at all or without great waste and difficulty by private effort, and also that in certain respects individual activity is antisocial, i. e., accomplishes its ends by sacrificing the interests of the mass or of great portions of the community. The state supplies the former defect by collective communal action, and meets the latter by restraint and compulsion exercised over individuals. * * *

"Custom and a sense of propriety demand of the individual that he subordinate and adapt the exercise of his rights to manifest social interests and requirements, and the disregard of this obligation appears as a wrong. Thus most of the self-evident limitations upon liberty and property in the interest of peace, safety, health, order and morals are punishable at common law as nuisances. It is with reference to these obvious restraints that the maxim has been proclaimed: sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas.

"But no community confines its care of the public welfare to the enforcement of the principles of the common law. The state * * * exercises its compulsory powers for the prevention and anticipation of wrong by narrowing common law rights through conventional restraints and positive regulations which are not confined to the prohibition of wrongful acts. It is this latter kind of state control which constitutes the essence of the police power. The maxim of this power is that every individual must submit to such restraints in the exercise of his liberty or of his rights of property as may be required to remove or reduce the danger of the abuse of these rights on the part of those who are unskilful, careless or unscrupulous. * * *

"Broadly speaking, there are, * * * three spheres of activities, conditions and interests which are to be considered with reference to the police power; a conceded sphere affecting safety, order and morals, covered by an ever increasing amount of restrictive legislation; a debatable sphere, that of the proper production and distribution of wealth, in which legislation is still (1904) in an experimental stage, and an exempt sphere, that of moral, intellectual and political movements, in which our constitutions proclaim the principle of individual liberty."

Freund Police Power, sections 3, 8, 15.

The next question which arises is as to whether or not there is any distinction among the various possible terms of a contract with respect to their subjection to the police or legislative power. The constitutions make no such distinction. They do not protect the agreement as to price by express provision to any greater extent than they protect the agreement as to any other possible terms of a contract. So that on principles such as would be applied to the interpretation of any other written instrument it would follow that if it be established that the legislative power may circumscribe other terms of a contract, it may also control this particular term.

However, certain economic theories—or perhaps truths—seem to have crept into the interpretation of our constitutions in this respect at an early date, and a peculiar sancity seems to have been tacitly assumed by writers and courts to be attached to the right by contract to fix the price of a commodity or the charge for a service.

It is probable that the idea underlying the distinction which seems to have been tacitly assumed or vaguely drawn is that price regulation ordinarily can not accomplish the only public end which could be assumed to justify it; that because it is economically unsound and does not work in practice, simply because the producers or possessors of commodities, or those skilled in or equipped for particular occupations, will not part with such commodities or exercise such occupations unless induced to do so by what may appeal to them—not to the legislature—as the assurance of an adequate return, therefore such legislation can not be justified on the ground of public necessity. In other words, if, as will be hereinafter assumed, public necessity is the essential requisite to the valid exercise of the police power, a statute which because of the operation of economic laws would fail to realize its purpose would not satisfy this requirement and would, therefore, not be valid. Stating in in still another way: The somewhat vague distinction that seems to have been supposed to exist here may rest upon the idea that the repeal or amendment of economic laws is not a proper subject for the municipal law, simply because the latter is inadequate to deal with the former.

However, the distinction just described will be found recognized to some extent in the early cases. On this point again it is felt that quotations from the leading text writers will be sufficient.

"In the early days of the common law it was sometimes thought necessary, in order to prevent extortion, to interfere, by royal proclamation or otherwise, and establish the charges that might be exacted for certain commodities or services. The price of wages was oftener regulated than that of anything else, the local magistrates being generally allowed to exercise authority over the subject. The practice was followed in this country, and prevailed to some extent up to the time of independence. Since then it has been commonly supposed that a general power in the state to regulate prices was inconsistent with constitutional liberty."

Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, 7th Ed., page 870.

"It is true that popular, legislative and judicial sentiment alike are opposed to the recognition of an indiscriminate power to regulate charges."

Freund Police Power, section 378.

"The English and the early American laws fixing the prices of labor and other commodities in private businesses were never successfully enforced, and either became obsolete soon after their passage or were repealed, and the whole scheme of governmental regulation of prices was abandoned as economically inexpedient. There are few instances in the United States of direct regulation of prices in business of a strictly private nature. There is a strong and prevalent feeling that a general legislative power to regulate private business, to prescribe the conditions under which it may be carried on, and to fix the price of commodities and services would be a deprivation of liberty and property guaranteed under the American constitutional system and would be contrary to the genius of American institutions. * * *

"Whether there is under the American constitutional system a general legislative power to fix prices in private business is an open question. The views of many on questions of economics and expediency, and on the proper functions of the state, would undoubtedly oppose the exercise of such power. But it may well be that a time will come when dominant public sentiment will incline less to the laissez-faire and more to the socialistic idea of the state. * * *"

Prof. E. A. Gilmore, University Law School, in the Green Bag, Vol. 17, page 627 (1905).

"It must always be remembered that the circumstances and conditions rendering permissible so strong an exercise of the police power as the regulation of rates and prices are not the same as the circumstances and conditions that might justify some other exercise of that power like the regulation of the times, places, or manner in which the business may be carried on."

N. Matthews, Jr., and W. G. Thompson, 15 Harvard Law Review 249, 254 (1901).

The significance of this statement lies in the implicit assumption that the regulation of prices is a "stronger" exercise of the po ice power than other regulations pertaining to the conduct of a business.

"The instinct of modern lawyers is to regard rate regulation as an anomalous encroachment upon the freedom of the individual, confined by our constitution to a small class of so-called 'public callings' which has definitely ascertained limits."

Note, Harvard Law Review, November, 1914, 28 H. L. R., 85.

"A most interesting question, * * * is the right of the government to regulate prices and charges for things and services. The exercise of this power was quite common in past ages, and there appeared to be no well defined limitations upon the power, if any at all were recognized. But under a constitutional and popular government, there must necessarily be some limitation. It is a part of the natural and civil liberty to form business relations, free from the dictation of the state, that a like freedom should be secured and enjoyed in determining the conditions and terms of the contract which constitutes the basis of business relation or transaction. It is, therefore, the general rule, that a man is free to ask for his wares or his services whatever price he is able to get and others are willing to pay, and no one can compel him to take less, although the price may be exorbitant as to become extortionate. * * *."

Tiedeman on State and Federal Control of Persons and Property, Vol. 1, Sec. 96 (1900).

"After the adoption of our federal and state constitutions, it seems to have been generally assumed that such legislation (fixing prices and rates) would be inconsistent with the American idea of constitutional freedom of action. Not that the forefathers anywhere inserted express provisions against such legislation in their organic laws, but the supposed inconsistency was drawn indirectly from several constitutional provisions, and because it was supposed to be against the general spirit of our institutions. In other words, it was assumed to be a part of the natural and civil liberty guaranteed by American institutions to form business relations and to make contracts free from state interference, and this was thought to include the right of everyone to ask for his wares or services whatever price he was able to get and others were willing to pay."

Address of Gustavus A. Finkelnburg, before Missouri State Bar Association, 32 American Law Review, 501 (1898).

"The spectacle of a government that cannot prohibit a contract merely because two grown persons desire to make it, is so utterly absurd as to be quite beyond the region of discussion if government of any kind is to continue. The wisdom of the particular interference may be debatable, but it is simply ridiculous to assert that a state has no right to inferfere with the individual's right to contract when courts uphold the power of the state to forbid a harmless wager, the contracting of a debt for whiskey, and a promise to pay a larger price for a risky loan of money than for one as secure as the state itself. * * *.

"The most striking instance, however, of the loss of an anchorage in constitutional interpretation is to be seen in Budd v. New York, (143 U. S. 517) * * *, while the sole question was the power of a state to regulate prices charged by a grain elevator, not one person, counsel or court, seem to have started with the simple inquiry—where is the clause in the constitution which prohibits such a thing? * * *.

"It may be very disagreeable to accept the proposition that the legislature of a state can alter prices; * * * but it is plain this is the case unless there is a restriction imposed by something that is not in the constitution * * *."

Richard C. McMurtrie, in American Law Register and Review, January, 1893, Vol. 32, page 1.

"If the price of wheat cannot be regulated on the ground of property, why are not laws against corners in wheat void on the ground that they interfere with the sacred rights of private property? Against the main proposition of the railway companies in the Granger cases, the possible ground for the decision was indeed stronger than it seemed. It is the same as the broad ground of the common law when it strikes at combinations to raise prices and brands them as illegal—the ground that price is a public matter, and regulations of price which the people desire the people can enforce."

William Draper Lewis, 32 American Law Register, page 9 (1893).

The above questions have prepared us for the following observations:

(1.) Though few, if any, courts of standing and authority had down to the end of the first decade of the twentieth century ever actually held that the right of the seller to fix the price was a peculiarly sacred and inviolable right, so that as to ordinary or "private" businesses the power to regulate prices was withheld from the legislature yet that was the general opinion of lawyers and, as will be shown, the tacit assumption of courts. Regulations of sales and businesses, whether private or quasi public, multifarious in their character and affecting practically every other term of the contract of sale excepting that of price had been enacted, yet it was assumed—never decided by any important court—that the one element of price was peculiarly sacred. All of the discriminating commentators note that this was a mere assumption and text writers such as Cooley, Tiedeman and Freund either do likewise or merely make the broad statement, without being able to cite a single case in support of it.

(2.) The justification for such an assumption lay, therefore, not in anything which the courts had actually decided, but rather in the reasons which had been assigned particularly by the supreme court of the United States in certain cases for upholding price or rate regulations in those cases. That is to say, the courts, as will be shown sustained certain rate regulations, but sustained them apparently because of certain static facts concerning the nature of the business regulated: the implication being that if those facts had not been present the regulation would have been unconstitutional.

Thus, in the "Elevator Cases" and the so-called "Granger Cases" the supreme court of the United States, adopting Lord Hale's phrase coined by him in his treatis De Portibus Maris, suggested that the right to regulate prices and charges existed in some peculiar sense with respect to such businesses as might be charged "with a public interest."

In Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S., 113, Mr. Chief Justice Waite's opinion contains the folowing: (Page 123.)

"The question to be determined in this case is whether the general assembly of Illinois can, under the limitations upon the legislative power of the states imposed by the constitution of the United States, fix by law the maximum of charges for the storage of grain in warehouses at Chicago and other places in the state having not less than one hundred thousand inhabitants, 'in which grain is stored in bulk, and in which the grain of different owners is mixed together, or in which grain is stored in such a manner that the identity of different lots or parcels cannot be accurately preserved.' * * *.

"When one becomes a member of society, he necessarily parts with some rights or privileges which, as an individual not affected by his relations to others, he might retain. 'A body politic,' as aptly defined in the preamble of the constitution of Massachusetts, 'is a social compact by which the whole people covenants with each citizen, and each citizen with the whole people, that all shall be governed by certain laws for the common good.' This does not confer power upon the whole people to control rights which are purely and exclusively private, Thorpe v. R. & B. Railroad Co., 27 Vt. 143; but it does authorize the establishment of laws requiring each citizen to so conduct himself, and so use his own property, as not unnecessarily to injure another. This is the very essence of government, and has found expression in the maxim sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. From this source come the police powers, which, as was said by Mr. Chief Justice Taney in the License Cases, 5 How. 583, 'are nothing more or less than the powers of government inherent in every sovereignity, * * * that is to say, * * * the power to govern men and things.' Under these powers the government regulates the conduct of its citizens one towards another, and the manner in which each shall use his own property, when such regulation becomes necessary for the public good. In their exercise it has been customary in England from time immemorial, and in this country from its first colonization, to regulate ferries, common carriers, hackmen, bakers, millers, wharfingers, innkeepers, etc., and in so doing to fix a maximum of charge to be made for services rendered, accomodations furnished, and articles sold. To this day ,statutes are to be found in many of the states upon some or all these subjects; and we think it has never yet been successfully contended that such legislation came within any of the constitutional prohibitions against interference with private property. With the fifth amendment in force, congress, in 1820, conferred power upon the city of Washington 'to regulate' * * * the rates of wharfage at private wharves, * * * the sweeping of chimneys, and to fix the rates of fees therefor, * * and the weight and quality of bread,' 3 Stat. 587, section 7; and in 1848, 'to make all necessary regulations respecting hackney carriages and the rates of fare of the same, and the rates of hauling by cartmen, wagoners, carmen and draymen, and the rates of commission of auctioneers,' 9 id, 224, section 2.

"From this it is apparent that, down to the time of the adoption of the fourteenth amendment, it was not supposed that statutes regulating the use, or even the price of the use, of private property necessarily deprived an owner of his property without due process of law. Under some circumstances they may, but not under all. The amendment does not change the law in this particular; it simply prevents the state from doing that which will operate as such a deprivation.

"This brings us to inquire as to the principles upon which this power of regulation rests, in order that we may determine what is within and what without its operative effect. Looking, then, to the common law, from whence came the right which the constitution protects, we find that when private property is 'affected with a public interest, it ceases to be juris privati only.' This was said by Lord Chief Justice Hale more than two hundred years ago, in his treatise De Portibus Maris, 1 Harg. Law Tracts 78, and has been accepted without objection as an essential element in the law of property ever since. Property does become clothed with a public interest when used in a manner to make it of public consequence, and affect the community at large. When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest he, in effect, grants to the public an interest in that use, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus created. He may withdraw his grant by discontinuing the use; but, so long as he maintains the use, he must submit to the control."

The chief justice thereupon quotes from Lord Hale's treatise respecting the fixing of charges for ferries, wharves and warehouses, citing as to the latter Aldnutt v. Inglis, 12 East 527, in which Lord Ellenborough had said:

"There is no doubt that the general principle is favored, both in law and justice, that every man may fix what price he pleases upon his own property, or the use of it; but if for a particular purpose the public have a right to resort to his premises and make use of them, and he have a monopoly in them for that purpose, if he will take the benefit of that monopoly, he must, as an equivalent, perform the duty attached to it on reasonable terms. * * *."

"It is enough that there exists in the place and for the commodity in question a virtual monoply of the warehousing for this purpose, on which the principle of law attaches, as laid down by Lord Hale in the passage referred to (that from Deportibus Maris already quoted), which includes the good sense as well as the law of the subject."

"In later times, the same principle came under consideration in the supreme court of Alabama. That court was called upon, in 1841, to decide whether the power granted to the city of Mobile to regulate the weight and price of bread was unconstitutional, and it was contended that 'it would interfere with the right of the citizen to pursue his lawful trade or calling in the mode his judgment might dictate;' but the court said, 'there is no motive * * * for this interference on the part of the legislature with the lawful actions of individuals, or the mode in which private property shall be enjoyed, unless such calling affects the public interest, or private property is employed in a manner which directly affects the body of the people. Upon this principle, in this state, tavern-keepers are licensed; * * * and the county court is required, at least once a year, to settle the rates of innkeepers. Upon the same principle is founded the control which the legislature has always exercised in the establishment and regulation of mills, ferries, bridges, turnpike roads and other kindred subjects.' Mobile v. Yuille, 3 Ala. n. s. 140.

"From the same source comes the power to regulate the charges of common carriers, * * *."

The chief justice then referred to the fact that the Chicago grain elevator facilities, so essential to the moving and storage of the crops of the great northwest, were under the actual control of relatively few persons and corporations who were able to and had agreed among themselves as to rates, so that there was actually present in the case a condition of "virtual monoply" in a service absolutely essential to the welfare of the public of the whole United States. Summing up his description of the situation, the chief justice says: (page 132.)

"They stand, to use again the language of their counsel, in the very 'gateway of commerce,' and take toll from all who pass. Their business most certainly 'tends to a common charge, and is become a thing of public interest and use. Every bushel of grain for its passage 'pays a toll, which is a common charge,' and, therefore, according to Lord Hale, every such warehouseman 'ought to be under public regulation, viz., that he * * * take but reasonable toll.' Certainly, if any business can be clothed 'with a public interest, and cease to be juris privati only,' this has been. It may not be made so by the operation of the constitution of Illinois or this statute, but it is by the facts."

The foregoing quotation from the opinion of the chief justice is perhaps all that is necessary to bring out the point under discussion. However, to complete the reasoning of the opinion it is appropriate to call attention to the fact that it was asserted by the plaintiffs in error that their warehouses had been established and the capital invested in them before any regulation had been attempted, so that they did not at the time consciously enter a service already stamped by the legislature as public. On this point the chief justice says:

"It matters not in this case that these plaintiffs in error had built their warehouses and established their business before the regulations complained of were adopted. What they did was from the beginning subject to the power of the body politic to require them to conform to such regulations as might be established by the proper authorities for the common good. They entered upon their business and provided themselves with the means to carry it on subject to this condition. If they did not wish to submit themselves to such interference, they should not have clothed the public with an interest in their concerns. The same principle applies to them that does to the proprietor of a hackney-carriage, and as to him it has never been supposed that he was exempt from regulating statutes or ordinances because he had purchased his horses and carriages and established his business before the statute or ordinance was adopted.

"It is insisted however, that the owner of property is entitled to a reasonable compensation for its use, even though it be clothed with a public interist, and that what is reasonable is a judicial and not a legislative question.

"As has already been shown, the practice has been otherwise. In countries where the common laws prevails, it has been customary from time immemorial for the legislature to declare what shall be a reasonable compensation under such circumstances, or, perhaps more properly speaking, to fix a maximum beyond which any charge made would be unreasonable. Undoubtedly, in mere private contracts, relating to matters in which the public has no interest, what is reasonable must be ascertained judicially. But this is because the legislature has no control over such a contract. So, too, in matters which do affect the public interest, and as to which legislative control may be exercised, if there are no statutory regulations upon the subject, the courts must determine what is reasonable. The controlling fact is the power to regulate at all. If that exists, the right to establish the maximum of charge, as one of the means of regulation, is implied. In fact, the common law rule, which requires the charge to be reasonable, is itself a regulation as to price. Without it the owner could make his rates at will, and compel the public to yield to his terms, or forego the use.

"But a mere common law regulation of trade or business may be changed by statute. A person has no property, no vested interest, in any rule of > the common law. That is only one of the forms of municipal law, and is no more sacred than any other. Rights of property which have been created by the common law cannot be taken away without due process; but the law itself, as a rule of conduct, may be changed at the will, or even at the whim, of the legislature, unless prevented by constitutional limitations. Indeed, the great office of statutes is to remedy defects in the common law as they are developed, and to adapt it to the changes of time and circumstances. To limit the rate of charges for services rendered in a public employment, or for the use of property in which the public has an interest, is only changing a regulation which existed before. It establishes no new principle in the law, but only gives a new effect to an old one."

It was on this last point that Mr. Justice Field expressed dissent, stating the belief that because no conscious or express or necessarily implied grant to a public use had been made, and because no special privileges, such as the franchise of eminent domain or the like, had been given by the state to the elevator companies they were not in a public calling and their property was not "clothed with a public interest." He also argues strongly, although without effect in the light of subsequent decisions, for the right to compensation. Speaking of the Alabama case, he denied the dictum therein to the effect that the legislature had the power to "fix the price which one shall receive for his property of any kind," saying:

> "If the power can be exercised as to one article, it may as to all articles, and the prices of every thing, from a calico gown to a city mansion, may be the subject of legislative direction."

In the "Granger cases" Munn v. Illinois was merely followed on the points now under discussion. (See 94 U. S., 155, 164, 179, etc.)

This principle, which as stated, of course, operates as a limitation on the power to regulate prices generally, was seemingly at first understood to apply to those businesses which, either by long established custom or by reason of certain natural principles such as monopolistic character of the service, public necessity for it, the exercise of specially granted privileges and the like, had been recognized to be quasi public in character and designated as "public callings." There are, of course, certain peculiar rules applicable to such public service or public utility occupations. One who enters such an occupation undertakes in contemplation of law to serve all who may apply on the same terms. He has declared himself, as it were, a public trustee and his personal services or his property devoted to the uses of such occupation become impressed with a public trust, the obligations of which he cannot evade so long as he continues in the public employment. Authorities are not necessary to illustrate the scope of these peculiar rules.

It was seemingly supposed at the time the supreme court of the United States first used the expression "property charged with a public interest" in connection with the regulation of prices and charges, that the term was merely another way of describing the class of public service occupations. The conclusion was, for a time at least, rather generally assumed that the right to regulate prices and charges by legislation was limited to the prices and charges which might be exacted by one whose business or property was charged with a public trust, i. e., a public service company or individual.

Judge Cooley wrote his treatise on "Constitutional Limitations" not long after these decisions. Of Munn v. Illinois he says:(page 870)

> "The ground of the decision appears to be that the employment of these warehousemen is a public or quasi public employment; that their property in the business is 'affected with a public interest,' and thereby brought under that general power of control which the state possesses in the case of other public employments." .

Speaking of the instances of price regulation mentioned by Chief Justice Waite in his opinion, he says:

"Some of the cases here referred to seem plain enough. Ferries are public highways, * * * A hackman exercises a public employment in the public street; * * * The rates of toll, when mills grind for toll, are usually fixed by law; but there is nothing exclusive in this; the parties may make their own bargains, and the legislative rate only controls where the parties by implication have apparently acted in reference to it. In England, formerly, the lords of manors, as mill owners, had exclusive rights; and where an exclusive right exists in one's favor, to compel the public to deal with him, there can be no doubt of the right of the state to compel him to deal fairly with the public. * * *"

"What circumstance shall affect property with a public interest is not very clear. The mere fact that the public have an interest in the existence of the business, and are accommodated by it, cannot be sufficient, for that would subject the stock of the merchant, and his charges, to public regulation. The public have an interest in every business in which an individual offers his wares, his merchandise, his services, or his accommodations to the public; but his offer does not place him at the mercy of the public in respect to charges and prices. If one is permitted to take upon himself a public employment, with special privileges which only the state can confer upon him, the case is clear enough; and it seems to have been the view of both courts in this case, that the circumstances were such as to give the warehousemen in Chicago, who were the only persons affected by the legislation, a 'virtual' monopoly of the business of receiving and forwarding the grain of the country to and from that important point, and by the very fact of monopoly to give their business a public character, affect the property in it with a public interest, and render regulation of charges indispensable. * * *

"In the following cases we should say that property in business was affected with a public interest: 1. Where the business is one the following of which is not of right, but is permitted by the state as a privilege or franchise. Under this head would be comprised the business of setting up lotteries, of giving shows, etc., of keeping billiard tables for hire, and of selling intoxicating drinks when the sale by unlicensed parties is forbidden; also the cases of toll bridges, etc. 2. Where the state, on public grounds, renders to the business special assistance, by taxation or otherwise. 3. Where, for the accommodation of the business, some special use is allowed to be made of public property or of a public easement. 4. Where exclusive privileges are granted in consideration of some special return to be made to the public. Possibly there may be other cases."

The article by Messrs. Matthews and Thompson, in 15 Harvard Law Review, referred to above, contains the following statement: (Page 250.)

"The general rule is that the several state legislatures have the power to regulate the rates or prices charged for the services rendered or commodities sold by persons or corporations engaged in a business affected with a public interest or use.

* * * * * * * * * *

"It would seem as unprofitable to attempt any general definition of > what constitutes that 'public interest' or 'public use' which renders the business and property to which it attaches subject to state regulation of rates and prices as it is to attempt a definition of the 'police' power itself. * * * Certain broad elements of similiarity in the subject matter of the adjudicated cases, suggested by the expression 'public service companies' now coming into common use, will in some cases serve as a sufficient criterion."

Professor Bruce Wyman, writing in Harvard Law Review for February, 1904, 17 H. L. R., 223, in discussing Munn v. Illinois, says:

> "What businesses then, are so affected with a public interest that they are made of such public consequence that the public has an interest in their control? * * * Attempts to enforce public duties in respect to the operation of private businesses must always fail by virtue of the guaranties of our constitutions; * * * Munn v. Illinois, therefore involves the distinction between the regulation permitted in public calling and the police allowed in private calling."

It is true that the writer of this article was speaking to the thesis that actual, as well as economic monopoly was a foundation for the exercise of all power which a state might exercise over a public calling, the title of his article being, "The Law of the Public callings as a Solution of the Trust Problem," and so what he says in interpertation of Munn v. Illinois is well enough on the point on which it is written.

Of course, more might be cited, and under this general heading all the quotations which have previously been made are in point.

It will be seen that Munn v. Illinois does afford ground for the belief that the essential justification for the exercise of the power to regulate prices is that the property or business to which such regulations shall apply be "affected with a public interest" in the sense that they are devoted to a public use."

Historically there never was any basis for such an assumption aside from the implications arising from the language of the Supreme Court of the United States in the early cases. Thus, from carliest times the prices of things which could not possibly be regarded as property charged with a public interest, and the charges in occupations which could not by any stretch of imagination be regarded as public employments, had been regulated by legislation, not only in England but also in this country, and not only under the absolute parlimentary power but also under the limitations of written constitutions.

The opinion in Munn v. Illinois itself refers to instances of this kind. Thus, the charges that bakers and chimney sweeps were mentioned by Chief Justice Waite as having been regulated even in the face of constitutionally guaranteed rights and to have been sustained in at least one case. There can be no claim that the business of a baker, for example, is a "public calling" in so far as the definition of what constitutes a "public calling" must be conditioned by the existence of a monopoly, actual or virtual, and yet it has come to be thoroughly established that monopoly is the determining test of what constitutes a public calling. (Gas Light Company v. Zanesville, 47 O. S. 1. See also, generally, Wyman on Public Service Companies and the articles hereinbefore referred to from the pen of that writer.)

The history of price regulation is interestingly set forth in the article by Professor Gilmore already referred to. He mentions as the early history examples of price regulation the Assizes of Bread, of Ale and of Cloth, by which the price and quantity of these articles were fixed with considerable certainty on account of conditions arising from the ravages of the terrible Black Death which devastated England in 1348-9. He refers to the statute of Labourers, fixing wages and passed in 1349; to further price regulation statutes passed in 1363, 1533, 1543 and 1709. He refers also to the familiar and universal example of usury legislation, for which, however, another historical reason can be given: Originally the taking of usury was an ecclesiastical offense, and probably at the outset such legislation proceeded, as stated by Professor Gilmore, "on the theory that the taking of interest is a privilege (not a right) and which may be accompanied by restrictions."

Coming to the colonial history of this country, he enumerates statutes in Massachusetts and New York regulating the prices of various commodities which were passed in colonial times or during the Revolution.

Some additions to the catalog of regulations enumerated by Professor Gilmore are to be found in a note to United States v. Ohio Oil Co., 34 Supreme Court, 956, 28 Harvard Law Rev., page 85.

The quotation already made from Cooley on Constitutional Limitations shows that the learned author of that leading work must have regarded some of these instances as anomalous or else to be accounted for on purely historical and, therefore, arbitrary grounds. Other writers have simply gone so far as to deny the correctness of Munn v. Illinois. (See Tiedeman, section 96.)

The supreme court of the United States soon had occasion to show what it meant by a "business charged with a public interest," and in the celebrated case of Brass v. North Dakota it sustained the regulation of rates in a case where the "public interest" would have little, if any, foundation to rest on if placed on the footing of a public trust.

First, however, there is the case of Budd v. New York, 143 U. S. 517, in which Munn v. Illinois was expressly reaffirmed and explained. In that case there was no express departure from the theory of "practical monopoly;" but a discriminating minority of the court, in an opinion written by Mr. Justice Brewer, expressed the fear that this doctrine could be extended to every possible business, and sought to distinguish a public use from a "public interest in the use," saying:

> "There is scarcely any property in whose use the public has no interest. No man liveth unto himself alone, and no man's property is beyond the touch of another's welfare. Everything, the manner and extent of whose use affects the well-being of others, is property in whose use the public has an interest. Take, for instance, the only store in a little village, all the public of that village are interested in it. * * * Does it follow that that village public has a right to control these matters (including price)?

> "The paternal theory of government is to me odious. The utmost possible liberty to the individual and the fullest possible protection to him and his property, is both the limitation and duty of government. If it may regulate the price of one service, which is not a public service, or the compensation for the use of one kind of property which is not devoted to a public use, why may it not with equal reason regulate the price of all service and the compensation to be paid for the use of all property?"

The statute sustained in Budd v. New York regulated the prices at which shovelling in connection with the service of elevating grain were fixed.

The Brass case, 153 U. S. 391, forced the court to depart from the test of monopoly. This case involved a statute regulating grain warehouses, and in fact declaring all such warehouses to be public warehouses and imposing upon the proprietors thereof such positive public duties as well as fixing rates of storage. Nevertheless, it was shown that the warehouse of the plaintiff in error was but one of three at the same station on a single railroad; that there was actual competition among the three; that there were about six hundred similar elevators in North Dakota owned and operated by over one hundred and twenty-five different owners independent of and in competition with each other; that in point of fact there were at every railroad station in North Dakota at least two competing grain elevators; and that land upon which it was practicable to erect a large number of elevators if needed was available at every station in North Dakota at which grain was marketed. The court dismissed these facts with the short statement that as arguments they were "matters for those who make, not for those who interpert the laws,"and seemed to regard the Munn and Budd cases as finally deciding that the grain elevator business as a business was subject to such regulations as were imposed upon it by legislation of North Dakota.

This decision was rendered by a majority of one of the supreme court of the United States. Mr. Justice Brewer, with whom concurred three other justices, in his dissenting opinion first objected particularly to the compulsory public service feature of the law, which indeed is the weakest feature thereof and one upon which the majority opinion finds but little support. Mr. Justice Brewer then called attention to the fact that the element of monopoly was wholly absent from the case.

This case seemed to throw the subject into some confusion; yet some discriminating commentators on the law began to see that the occupations, businesses and property which, for the purposes of the rule laid down in the "Granger cases" and in Munn v. Illinois, were to be regarded as "charged with a public interest" were not limited to the public service occupations.

Thus, as far back as 1893 and before the decision in Brass v. North Dakota, William Draper Lewis advanced, in the article from which quotation has already been made, the thesis that "the public as a whole has an interest in price not only in the price of railway tickets but in the price of everything sold in the markets of the nation." To support this he calls attention to anti-trust laws and laws against cornering commodities of necessary public consumption, inquiring whether these do not rest for their ultimate foundation upon the postulate of a public interest in price.

Freund in his "Public Power" (written in 1904) commenting upon Brass v. North Dakota, sums up his conclusions as follows:

> "(Section 373.) If a greater than the ordinary control is claimed, it should be justified by the peculiar conditions of the business affected.
> Omitting those kinds of business which are subjected to a special control in the interest of peace, safety, health and morals, and which involve only the police power in the narrower sense of the term, the following have been classed from time to time as in a special sense public occupations or classes of business; at common law, the business of the carrier, innkeeper, ferryman, wharfinger, miller; the charactic is frequently indicated by the term public or common carrier, etc.; by modern statutes, and in addition to the common law, the business of railroads and the telegraph and telephone, also the management of turnpikes and canals; storage of grain and tobacco; and the business of stock yards; the supply of water, gas, light, heat, and power, through pipes and wires; and banking and insurance; under recent judicial decisions, also the gathering and distribution of news and market quotations.
> "While it may be said that the various classes of business mentioned have to do with either transportation, or finance, or the necessaries of life, or the staple products of the community, it does not appear that they have one common characteristic which could explain the special public interest.

"Turning to the special control exercised over them, we find that it assumes one or more of the following forms; the regulation of charges; the requirement of equal service; requirements in the interest of public convenience; and requirements and restraints in the interest of financial security.

"It is then necessary to inquire, to what classes of business each of these requirements applies, and how it is justified by the nature of the business to which it applies.

"(Section 378.) * * * The justification for regulating charges in some particular business would usually be that it constitutes a de jure or a de facto monopoly or enjoys special privileges; but it may also be that the commodity selected is a necessary of life, or that it is essential to the industrial welfare of the community, or that it has been immemorially the subject of regulation. Upon this theory it is possible to account for existing legislation without conceding legislative power with regard to any and all commodities which it may choose to select, and on the other hand to allow for new applications of this power, while subjecting them to an efficient judicial control which will undoubtedly be claimed and exercised. * * *"

Most interesting, however, in this connection is the conclusion of that writer in an eleborate note to Winchester & Lexington Turnpike Road Co. v. Croxton, 33 L. R. A. 177 (1896). The whole note might well go in as a part of this opinion, but for the fact that subsequent decisions have greatly clarified the situation, and rendered unnecessary an exhaustive citation of the earlier cases. However, the author of the note, writing as stated in the year 1896 and quite soon after the decision in Brass v. North Dakota, concludes as his statement of "the general doctrine" that "A fair interpertation of the above cases does not limit the doctrine to cases of monopoly or virtual monopoly, but extends it to all cases in which the property is affected with the public interest to such a degree that its regulation is demanded by the public welfare. It is difficult, if not impossible, to find any legitimate test of this except the judgment of the legislature unless the legislative function of declaring public policy is to be transferred to the courts."

This is believed to be an exact and accurate statement of the law. It is the more remarkable because of the date when it was written. At that time, as we have seen, the conclusion of the writer of the note was still regarded as very debatable.

At length, however, the issue was squarely raised in the supreme court of the United States in the now celebrated case of German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis, 233 U. S. 389. In this case a majority of the court, speaking through Mr. Justice McKenna, distinctly repudiated the notion, which undoubtedly had theretofore been entertained by large numbers of the lawyers and even the courts of the country, that insofar as the right to regulate prices and charges was dependent upon the property or occupation to which such regulations would apply being "charged with a public interest," such right was limited to those occupations which might be grouped together under the designation of public service employments. The court rather suggested as a definition of what is "property or business charged with a public interest" for the purpose of price regulation, that which makes such public interest virtually dependent only upon the public necessity, which in turn is a matter primarily for the consideration of the legislature.

The court in this case sustained a law of Kansas regulating fire insurance rates and reposing in effect in the superintendent of insurance of that state powers over fire insurance companies similar in respect of rate making, but not otherwise, to the powers exercised over public utilities by the public utilities commission of this state. The following is quoted from the opinion:

> "The basic contention is that the business of insurance is a natural right, receiving no privilege from the state, is voluntarily entered into, cannot be compelled, nor can any of its exercises be compelled; that it concerns personal contracts of indemnity against certain contingencies merely. Whether such contracts shall be made at all, it is contended, is a matter of private negotiation and agreement, and necessarily there must be freedom in fixing their terms. And 'where the right to demand and receive service does not exist in the public, the correlative right of regulation as to rates and charges does not exist.' Many elements, it is urged, determine the extending or rejection of insurance the hazards are relative and depend upon many circumstances upon which there may be different judgments, and there are personal considerations as well—'moral hazards,' as they are called.
> "* * * We may put aside, * * * all merely adventitious considerations and come to the bare and essential one, whether a contract of fire insurance is private, and as such has constitutional immunity from regulation. Or, to state it differently and to express an antithetical proposition, is the business of insurance so far affected with a public interest as to justify legislative regulation of its rates? And we mean a broad and definite public interest. In some degree the public interest is concerned in every transaction constituting the activities of life. But there is something more special than this, something of more definite consequence, which makes the public interest that justifies regulatory legislation. We can best explain by examples. The transportation of property—business of common carriers—is obviously of public concern, and its regulation is an accepted governmental power. The transmission of intelligence is of cognate character. There are other utilities which are denominated public, such as the furnishing of water and light, including in the latter gas and electricity. We do not hesitate at their regulation nor at the fixing of the prices which may be charged for their service. The basis of the ready concession of the power of regulation is the public interest. This is not denied, but its application to insurance is so far denied as not to extend to the fixing of rates. It is said, the state has no power to fix the rates charged to the public by either corporations or individuals engaged in a private business, and the 'test of whether the use is public or not is whether a public trust is imposed upon the property, and whether the public has a legal right to the use which cannot be denied;' or, as we have said, quoting counsel, 'Where the right to demand and receive service does not exist in the public, the correlative right of regulation as to rates and charges does not exist. Cases are cited which, it must be admitted, support the contention. The distinction is artificial. It is, indeed, but the assertion that the cited examples embrace all cases of public interest. The complainant explicitly so contends urging that the test it applies excludes the idea that there can be a public interest which gives the power of regulation as distinct from a public use, which, necessarily, it is contended, can only apply to property, not to personal contracts. The distinction, we think, has no basis in principle. (Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062; 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487), nor has the other contention that the service which cannot be demanded cannot be regulated."

Coming now to Munn v. Illinois, Mr. Justice McKenna explains, and, it must be admitted, extends the doctrine of that case, speaking of it in part as follows

"That the case had broader application than the use of property is manifest from the grounds expressed in the dissenting opinion. The basis of the opinion was that the business regulated was private and had 'no special privilege connected with it, nor did the law ever extend to it any greater protection than it extended to all other private business.' The argument encountered opposing examples, among others, the regulation of the rate of interest on money. The regulation was accounted for on the ground that the act of parliament permitting the charging of some interest was a relaxation of a prohibition of the common law against charging any interest; but this explanation overlooked the fact that both the common law and the act of parliament were exercises of government regulation of a strictly private business in the interest of public policy, a policy which still endures and still dictates regulating laws. Against that conservation of the mind which puts to question every new act of regulating legislation, and regards the legislation invalid or dangerous until it has become familiar, government—state and national—has pressed on in the general welfare; and our reports are full of cases where in instance after instance the exercise of regulation was resisted and yet sustained against attacks asserted to be justified by the constitution of the United States. The dread of the moment having passed, no one is now heard to say that rights were restricted or their constitutional guaranties impaired."

Naturally enough, Budd v. New York and Brass v. North Dakota were next considered. Omitting the discussion of them as found in Mr. Justice McKenna's opinion, the following conclusions respecting the trend of the prior decisions of the court were expressed by Mr. Justice McKenna:

"The cases need no explanatory or fortifying comment. They demonstrate that a business, by circumstances and its nature, may rise from private to be of public concern, and be subject, in consequence, to governmental regulation. And they demonstrate, to apply the language of Judge Andrews in People v. Budd (117 N Y. 27, 5 L. R. A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460, 22 N. E. 670), that the attempts made to place the right of public regulation in the cases in which it has been exerted, and of which we have given examples, upon the ground of special privilege conferred by the public on those affected cannot be supported 'The underlying principle is that business of certain kinds hold such a peculiar relation to the public interests that there is superinduced upon it the right of public regulation.' Is the business of insurance within the principle? It would be a bold thing to say that the principle is fixed. ine astic, in the precedents of the past, and cannot be applied though modern economic conditions may make necessary or beneficial its application. In other words, to say, that government possessed at one time a greater power to recognize the public interest in a business and its regulation to promote the general welfare than government possesses today.

"We proceed, then, to consider whether the business of insurance is within the principle."

Thereupon, Mr. Justice McKenna traces the history of such legislation in the regulation of fire insurance business or fire insurance companies as had grown up in the several states and had been accepted as of unquestioned constitutionality or, where questioned, had been sustained; such as the requirement of a reserve fund, the prescribing of standard form of contracts (as to which, it will be observed, every possible item of the contract is not merely regulated but absolutely fixed by law, excepting the one matter of consideration), making the business a franchise and limiting it to corporations, prescribing investments, and concluding with the statement that

> "In other words, the state has stepped in and imposed conditions upon the companies, restraining the absolute liberty which businesses strictly private are permitted to exercise."
> "Those regulations exhibit it to be the conception of the lawmaking bodies of the country without exception that the business of insurance so far affects the public welfare as to invoke and require governmental regulation. A conception so general cannot be without cause."

Mr. Justice McKenna then went on to demonstrate that insurance is merely a device by which losses are spread over a large territory. In other words, that it is a social institution rather than an individual one. He concludes as follows:

> "We can see, therefore, how it has come to be considered a matter of public concern to regulate it, and, governmental insurance has its advocates and even examples. Contracts of insurance, therefore, have greater public consequence than contracts between individuals to do or not to do a particular thing whose effect stops with the individuals. We may say in passing that when the effect goes beyond that, there are many examples of regulation. Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366, (42 L. ed. 780, 18 Sup. Ct. Rep. 383); Griffith v. connecticut, 218 U. S. 563, (54 L ed. 1151, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 132;) Muller v. Oregon, 208 U. S. 412, (52 L. ed. 551, 28 Sup. Ct. Rep. 324, 13 Ann. Cas. 957); Mutual Loan Co. v. Martell, 222 U. S. 225) (56 L. ed. 175, 32 Sup. Ct. Rep. 74, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 529); Schmidinger v. Chicago, 226 U. S. 578, (57 L. ed. 364, 33 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182); Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, 55 L. ed. 328, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 259; Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 55 L. ed. 112, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, 31 Sup. Ct. Rep. 182, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487.
> "Complainant feels the necessity of accounting for the regulatory state legislation and refers it to the exertion of the police power; but, while expressing the power in the broad language of the cases, seeks to restrict its application. Counsel states that this power may be exerted to 'pass laws whose purpose is the health, safety, morals, and the general welfare of the people.' This admission is very comprehensive. * * *
> "But it is said that the reasoning if the opinion has the broad reach of subjecting to regulation every act of human endeavor and the price of every article of human use. We might, without much concern, leave our discussion to take care of itself against such misunderstanding or deductions. The principle we apply is definite and old, and has, as we have pointed out, illustrating examples. And both by the expression of the principle and the citation of the examples we have tried to confine our decision to the regulation of the business of insurance, it having become 'clothed with a public interest,' and therefore subject 'to be controlled by the public for the common good.'
> "If there may be controversy as to the business having such character, there can be no controversy as to what follows from such character if it be established. It is idle therefore, to debate whether the liberty of contract guaranteed by the constitution of the United States is more intimately involved in price regulation than in the other forms of regulation as to the validity of which there is no dispute. The order of their enactment certainly cannot be considered an element in their legality. It would be very rudimentary to say that measures of government are determined by circumstances, by the presence or imminence of conditions, and of the legislative judgment of the means or the policy of removing or preventing them. The power to regulate interstate commerce existed for a century before the Interstate Commerce Act was passed, and the commission constituted by it was not given authority to fix rates until some years afterwards. Of the agencies which those measures were enacted to regulate at the time of the creation of the power, there was no prophecy or conception. Nor was the regulation immedate upon their existence. It was exerted only when the size, number and influence of those agencies had so increased and developed as to seem to make it imperative. Other illustrations readily occur which repel the intimation that the inactivity of a power, however prolonged, militates against its legality when it is exercised. United States v. Delaware & Hudson Co., 213 U. S. 366. It is oftener the existence of necessity rather than the prescience of it which dictates legislation. And so with the regulations of the business of insurance. They have proceeded step by step, differing in different jurisdictions. If we are brought to a comparison of them in relation to the power of government, how can it be said that fixing the price of insurance is beyond that power and the other instances of regulation are not? How can it be said that the right to engage in the business is a natural one when it can be denied to individuals and permitted to corporations? How can it be said to have the privilege of a private business when its dividends are restricted, its investments controlled, the form and extent of its contracts prescribed, discriminations in its rates denied, and a limitation on its risks imposed? Are not such regulations restraints upon the exercise of the personal right—asserted to be fundimental—of dealing with property freely, or engaging in what contracts one may choose, and with whom and upon what terms one may choose?

"We may venture to observe that the price of insurance is not fixed over the counters of the companies by what Adam Smith calls the higgling of the market, but formed in the councils of the underwriters, promulgated in schedules of practically controlling constancy which the applicant for insurance is powerless to oppose, and which, therefore, has led to the assertion that the business of insurance is of monopolistic character and that 'it is illusory to speak of a liberty of contract.' It is in the alternative presented of accepting the rates of the companies or refraining from insurance, business necessity impelling if not compelling it, that we may discover the inducement of the Kansas statute; and the problem presented is whether the legislature could regard it of as much moment to the public that they who seek insurance should no more be constrained by arbitrary terms than they who seek transportation by railroads, steam, or street, or by coaches whose itinerary may be only a few city blocks, or who seek the use of grain elevators, or be secured in a night's accommodation at a wayside inn, or in the weight of a five cent loaf of bread. We do not say this to belittle such rights or to exaggerate the effect of insurance, but to exhibit the principle which exists in all and brings all under the same governmental power."

Mr. Justice Lamar, with whom concurred the Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Van Devanter dissented. This dissent shows the full length to which the majority opinion really goes. It draws the line just where the commentators had assumed that it would be drawn, viz: between the regulation of other items of a contract or attributes of a business and the regulation of price. The temptation is to quote this dissenting opinion, but it is sufficient to observe that it sticks to the theretofore generally (though, as we have shown, by no means universally) accepted (and as we have shown, rather assumed than established) doctrine that is expressed in the following two statements:

(1) That there is an essential difference between fixing price and regulating other elements of a contract.

(2) That the public right to fix prices is limited to the public callings, i. e., property or businesses devoted to a public use.

It will be observed that the foregoing statement of the clash between the majority and the minority of the supreme court in this case is as to the definition of the phrase "charged with a public interest," the majority holding that such phrase was not limited in import to the public callings and the minority contending that it is.

Upon principle, however, I am impressed with the thought that the real decision in the case is better understood if we discard entirely as misleading the qualification expressed in the phrase "charged with a public interest." For if we come to define what that phrase as interpreted by the majority of the court means we must inevitably come to the conclusion that it signifies and extends to any "business," as such, the sociological aspects of which at any given time may take on a preponderant public interest in the eyes of the lawmaking power—not in the first instance at least, of the courts. That is to say, a business is charged with a public interest in the sense that its charges or prices may be regulated whenever a strong and preponderant public sentiment, expressing itself in legislation, finds that the public interest, i e., the public necessity, requires that it shall be so regulated. And the fact of public interest so defined can not be, as Mr. Justice McKenna well says, determined on purely historical grounds nor can the power of the legislature respecting a given business be denied merely because in the remote past such business was not deemed to be, or in point of fact was not, so "charged with a public interest." In short, there is no such thing as a catalogue of businesses which in this sense are "charged with a public interest," whatever may be the case with respect to those which are "public callings." The result of all this is, it is felt, better expressed when we say the test of the power to regulate prices of a given commodity or the charges of a given business is merely the same test that must be applied to the exercise of the police power in any given instance. The question is: Is the public necessity such as reasonably to justify the legislature in assuming the power to regulate the price of a given commodity? If it is, then the police power extends that far and the property or business affected is, for the purpose of the rule, "charged with a public interest." How much simpler it would be merely to leave out this last qualification and to admit, as the minority opinions in the Kansas and North Dakota cases insist is the result of the majority opinions in those cases that the phrase 'charged with a public interest" really has no legal significance other than as a general term descriptive of that justification for the exercise of the police power which may occasion the regulation of prices without regard to any hard and fast classification of occupation or property.

The cases and the other authorities quoted, classified on the basis suggested by the phrase which has been discussed, really present two extreme views,

First, The public has an interest only in the prices or charges of such businesses as constitute public callings, and Second. That the public has an interest in this sense in price in the abstract, at least in the prices of all commodities and services greatly necessary to the public.

It is believed that the truth lies between these two extremes and can be discovered best by ignoring entirely the phrase which has been the subject of so much debate. I feel that it is true that almost any business and almost any attribute of any business or any term of any contract relating to any business may, under sufficient facts, invoke the regulatory or police power of the state, and that it is misleadng to try to classify either businesses or terms of contracts with respect to the application of the police power to them.

The so called "police power" may be likened to the individual right of self defense. It is the correlative right which society possesses and may exercise through governmental rules. The individual right of self defense is limited by the rule of necessity. In like manner, in theory at least, the social right of self defense against the aggressions of individuals through so called "police regulation" is limited by the same rule of necessity.

It would seem to be conceivable, therefore, that the power to regulate the price of a commodity is not absolutely limited by any rule which would classify the commodities subject to regulation; but that in the abstract, the power may be said to extend to the regulation of the price of any given commodity when the circumstances —the sociological facts of the moment—give rise to a real public necessity for such regulation. The notion that a power may exist, but may always be conditioned upon the rise of circumstances invoking its exercise, was clearly expressed by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Kansas case and in Wilson v. New (the Adamson law case), 243 U. S. 332, wherein Chief Justice White used the following language:

> "It is * * * true that as the right to fix by agreement between the carrier and its employes a standard of wages to control their relations is primarily private, the establishment and giving effect to such agreed on standard is not subject to be controlled or prevented by public authority (at least under the right to "regulate commerce.") But taking all these propositions as undoubted, if the situation which we have described and with which the acts of congress dealt be taken into view, that is, the dispute between the employers and the employes as to a standard of wages, their failure to agree, the resulting absence of such standard, the entire interpretation of interstate commerce which threatened, and the infinite injury to the public interest which was imminent, it would seem inevitably to result that the power to regulate necessarily obtained and was subject to be applied to the extent necessary to provide a remedy for the situation. * * * This must be unless it can be said that the right to so regulate as to save and protect the public interest did not apply to a case where the destruction of the public right was imminent as the result of a dispute between the parties and their consequent failure to establish by private agreement the standard of wages which was essential; in other words, that the existence of the public right and the public power to preserve it was wholly under the control of the private right to establish a standard by agreement. Nor is it an answer to this view to suggest that the situation was one of emergency, and that emergency can not be made the source of power. * * * The proposition begs the question, since although an emergency may not call into life a power which has never lived, nevertheless emergency may afford a reason for the exertion of a living power already enjoyed. * * *"

The notion here expressed is not that congress has the power at any time to regulate the wages paid to employes of interstate commerce railroads, but that such power is reserved in congress at all times to be exercised only when the circumstances justify it.

This decision is of tremendous significance. It will be observed that the Chief Justice freely acknowledges that, as an abstract principle, congress has no power to regulate the wages of employes of interstate commerce carriers; but when such a regulation of wages is necessary in order to keep that commerce going congress is not to be held impotent to meet the situation

Both the Kansas insurance case and the Adamson law case throw a flood of light upon the problem which is under investigation. The cases show there is no such thing as a catalogue of subject-matters with respect to whether or not a given governmental power extends to them. Thus, it will not do to say that the power to regulate commerce possessed by congress stops short of any particular thing which may at a given time in a state of emergency affect that commerce; neither will it do to say that any particular business or any particular attribute of such business is beyond the reach of the police power of the state in any way in which that power may be exercised, subject to the limitations hereinafter to be referred to. In short, the subjects to which any given legislative power may extend are not, as it were, set off from each other by water-tight compartments and it will not do to say that a given power reaches to such and such a compartment but is stopped by a bulk-head from extending to any other compartment.

Therefore, with respect to the matter of price it is simply not true that it is in any peculiar sense withdrawn from that attribute of legislative power which is dignified by the term "police power." It is true, as expressed in one of the articles quoted, that to regulate price is a "stronger" exercise of the police power than to regulate certain other attributes of a business or features of a contract. But the police power does not stop short of price, and there is no barrier, visible or invisible, express or implied, between the police power and the subject-matter of price. The test "charged with a public interest" under the Kansas case shades off into the general test of necessity, and this is the test which applies to the police power generally, whether it be in the regulation of prices or whatnot.

German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis will lack, it is thought, its proper setting unless quotation is made from some of the great cases cited by Mr. Justice McKenna in his opinion. They were all mentioned as illustrative of what amounts to that "public consequence" or "public interest" or "public necessity" which justifies the exertion of the police power in any given case.

The first of them is Holden v. Hardy, 169 U. S. 366. In this case the supreme court of the United States, two justices only dissenting, sustained the constitutionality of an act of the legislature of Utah regulating the power of employment in certain mining operations. It was an affirmance of the supreme court of Utah in the case of Holden v. State, 14 Utah 71, to which reference will hereafter be made. In the opinion, per Mr. Justice Brown, the following language is found:

> "This right of contract * * * is itself subject to certain limitations which the state may lawfully impose in the exercise of its police powers. While this power is inherent in all governments, it has doubtless been greatly expanded in its application during the past century, owing to an enormous increase in the number of occupations which are dangerous, or so far detrimental to the health of employes as to demand special precautions for their well-being and protection, or the safety of adjacent property. * * *
> "The extent and limitations upon this power are admirably stated by Chief Justice Shaw in the following extract from his opinion in Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. 84:
> " 'We think it a settled principle, growing out of the nature of well-ordered civil society, that every holder of property, however absolute and unqualified may be his title, holds it under the implied liability that his use of it may be so regulated that it shall not be injurious to the equal enjoyment of others having an equal right to the enjoyment of their property, nor injurious to the rights of the community. * * * Rights of property, like all other social and conventional rights, are subject to such reasonable limitations in their enjoyment as will prevent them from being injurious, and to such reasonable restraints and regulations established by law, as the legislature, under the governing and controlling power vested in them by the constitution, may think necessary and expedient.'

"While this power is necessarily inherent in every form of government, it was, prior to the adoption of the constitution, but sparingly used in this country. As we were then almost purely an agricultural people, the occasion for any special protection of a particular class did not exist. * * *

"While the business of mining coal and manufacturing iron began in Pennsylvania as early as 1716, * * * both mining and manufacturing were carried on in such a limited way and by such primitive methods that no special laws were considered necessary, prior to the adoption of the constitution, for the protection of the operatives, but, in the vast proportions which these industries have since assumed, it has been found that they can no longer be carried on with due regard to the safety and health of those engaged in them, without special protection * * *. (Thereupon are mentioned numerous instances of safety and health legislation culled from the statutes of the several states and decisions thereon.)"

In Muller v. Oregon, 208 U. S. 412, the Oregon law limiting the hours of labor of women in certain employments was sustained. The importance of this decision lies in the fact that the court therein, for what is perhaps the first time, laid down a new principle of judicial action applicable to the consideration of questions arising under the police power. This significant principle is stated in the short sentence quoted from the opinion:

"We take judicial cognizance of all matters of general knowledge."

As a matter of fact, the "general knowledge" which the court assumed to have was given to it by a great mass of sociological facts and facts bearing upon the history of the legislation complied for the use of the court by Mr. Louis D. Brandeis, now one of the justices of that court, who acted in that case as amious curiae and more particularly as representative of the national consumers league, in which capacity he has quite frequently appeared before the court in defense of legislation like that then involved.

In this same connection the court, per Mr. Justice Brewer, speaks as follows:

"The legislation and opinions referred to in the margin (and furnished by Mr. Brandeis) may not be, technically speaking, authorities, and in them is little or no discussion of the constitutional question presented to us for determination, yet they are significant of a widespread belief that woman's physicial structure, and the functions she performs in consequence thereof, justify special legislation restricting or qualifying the conditions under which she should be permitted to toil. Constitutional questions, it is true, are not settled by even a consensus of present public opinion * * *. At the same time, when a question of fact is debated and debatable, and the extent to which a special constitutional limitation goes is affected by the truth in respect to that fact, a widespread and long continued belief concerning it is worthy of consideration."

Again in the opinion is found the following:

"It is undoubtedly true, as more than once declared by this court, that the general right to contract in relation to one's business is part of the liberty of the individual, protected by the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution; yet it is equally well settled that this liberty is not absolute and extending to all contracts, and that a state may, without conflicting with the provisions of the fourteenth amendment, restrict in many respects the individual's power of contract."

Griffith v. Connecticut, 218 U. S., 563, is not of great importance, but the actual decision therein is interesting inasmuch as it sustains the constitutionality of a "loan shark" law somewhat like the one in Ohio. This, of course, embodied a regulation of charges.

In C. B. & Q. Railroad Co. v. McGuire, 219 U. S. 549, the supreme court of the United States sustained a statute of Iowa prohibiting railroad companies and their employes from entering into contracts limiting liability for injuries made in advance of the injury received, and providing that the subsequent acceptance of relief association benefits should not constitute satisfaction of the claim for injuries received after the contract. In the opinion of Mr. Justice Hughes the following significant statements appear:

"The legislature, provided it acts within its constitutional authority, is the arbiter of the public policy of the state * * *.

"Freedom of contract is a qualified—and not an absolute—right. There is no absolute freedom to do as one wills or to contract as one chooses. The guaranty of liberty does not withdraw from legislative supervision that wide department of activity which consists of the making of contracts, or deny to government the power to provide restrictive safeguards. Liberty implies the absence of arbitrary restraint, not immunity from reasonable regulations and prohibitions imposed in the interests of the community."

Quoting from Frisbie v. United States, 157 U. S., at 165, 166, Mr. Justice Hughes lends his approval to the following language:

"It is within the undoubted power of government to restrain some individuals from some contracts. It may deny to all the right to contract for the purchase or sale of lottery tickets; to the minor the right to assume any obligations, except for the necessaries of existence; to the common carrier the power to make any contract releasing himself from negligence; and, indeed, may restrain all engaged in any employment from any contract in the course of that employment which is against public policy. The possession of this power by government in no manner conflicts with the proposition that, generally speaking, every citizen has a right freely to contract for the price of his labor, services, or property."

Then in a rapid summary of decisions under the commerce clause and relating to the police power of the state, Mr. Justice Hughes shows how far the adjudicated cases had gone in sustaining legislative limitations upon the right to contract. Among others he mentioned

"requiring the redemption in cash of store orders or other evidence of indebtedness issued in payment of wages (Knoxville Iron Co. v. Harbison, 183 U. S. 13); prohibiting contracts for options to sell or buy grain or other commodity at a future time (Booth v. Illinois, 184 U. S. 425); * * * making it unlawful to contract to pay minors employed at quantity rates upon the basis of screened coal, instead of the weight of the coal as originally produced in the mine. (McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539)."

Speaking generally of these cases, Mr. Justice Hughes says:

"The principle involved in these decisions is that where the legislative action is arbitrary and has no reasonable relation to a purpose which it is competent for government to effect, the legislature transcends the limits of its power in interfering with liberty of contract; but where there is reasonable relation to an object within the governmental authority, the exercise of the legislative discretion is not subject to judicial review. * * * Whether the enactment is wise or unwise, whether it is based on sound economic theory, whether it is the best means to achieve the desired result, whether, in short, the legislative discretion with its prescribed limits should be exercised in a particular manner, are matters for the judgment of the legislature, and the earnest conflict of serious opinion does not suffice to bring them within the range of judicial cognizance."

Of course, the supreme court did not have before it a price regulation statute when Mr. Justice Hughes was laying down the foregoing broad principles; but unless there is something peculiarly sacred in the mere subject of price, which seems to be denied in German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis, these principles would apply to such a regulation as well as to any other regulation of contracts which might be made by the legislature under what is vaguely termed the "police power."

It is submitted that Mr. Justice Hughes' language is merely another way of stating the rule of necessity contended for in this memorandum.

The next case in point of time cited by Mr. Justice McKenna in the insurance case is one which has been most frequently cited as stating the modern conception of the police power in general. The reference is to Noble State Bank v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, and its companion cases collectively known as the "Bank Guaranty Cases." Mr. Justice Holmes' striking phraseology in these cases stands as a landmark in the history of the development of this subject.

The law sustained in this group of decisions subjected all state banks to an assessment for a depositors' guaranty fund. The assessment was compulsory in the sense that it was made a condition of the continuance of the business of banking. The opinion in the first case contains the following succinct language:

"Does the statute deprive the plaintiff of liberty or property without due process of law?"

"In answering that question we must be cautious about pressing the broad words of the fourteenth amendment to a drily logical extreme. Many laws which it would be vain to ask the court to overthrow could be shown, easily enough, to transgress a scholastic interpretation of one or another of the great guaranties in the bill of rights. They more or less limit the liberty of the individual or they diminish property to a certain extent. We have few scientifically certain criteria of legislation, and as it often is difficult to mark the line where what is called the police power of the states is limited by the constitution of the United States, judges should be slow to read into the latter a nolumus mutare as against the lawmaking power.

"* * * There is no denying that by this law a portion of its (the plaintiff's) property might be taken without return to pay debts of a failing rival in business. Nevertheless, notwithstanding the logical form of the objection, there are more powerful considerations on the other side. In the first place, it is established by a series of cases that an ulterior public advantage may justify a comparatively insignificant taking of private property for what, in its immediate purpose, is a private use. * * *

*"It may be said in a general way that the police power extends to all the great public needs. * * * It may be put forth in aid of what is sanctioned by usage, or held by the prevailing morality or strong and preponderant opinion to be greatly and immediately necessary to the public welfare.* * * *

"It is asked whether the state could require all corporations or all grocers to help to guarantee each other's solvency, and where we are going to draw the line. But the last is a futile question, and we will answer the others when they arise. With regard to the police power, as elsewhere in the law, lines are pricked out by the gradual approach and contact of decisions on the opposing sides. * * *

"There are many things that a man might do at common law that the states may forbid. He might embezzle until a statute cut down his liberty. We cannot say that the public interests to which we have adverted, and others, are not sufficient to warrant the state in taking the whole business of banking under its control."

In Mutual Loan Co. . Martell, 222 U. S. 225, the validity of a regulation of the assignments of wages was sustained. The following appears in the unanimous judgment and opinion of the court delivered by Mr. Justice McKenna:

"This court has had many occasions to define, in general terms, the police power and to give applications. In Chicago, B & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 561, 592, it was said that 'the police power of a state embraces regulations designed to promote the public convenience or the general prosperity, as well as regulations designed to promote the public health, the public morals or the public safety;' and that the validity of a police regulation 'must depend upon the circumstances of each case and the character of the regulation, whether arbitrary or reasonable, and whether really designed to accomplish a legitimate purpose.'

"In Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 318, it was decided that the police power is not confined 'to the suppression of what is offensive, disorderly, or unsanitary,' but 'extends to so dealing with the conditions which exist in the state as to bring out of them the greatest welfare of its people.'

"In a sense, the police power is but another name for the power of government, and a contention that a particular exercise of it offends the due process clause of the constitution is apt to be very intangible to a precise consideration and answer. * * * Legislation cannot be judged by theoretical standards. It must be tested by the concrete conditions which induced it, and this test was applied by the supreme judicial court of Massachusetts in passing on the validity of the statute under review. * * *

"We cannot say, * * * that the statute as a police regulation is arbitrary and unreasonable and not designed to accomplish a legitimate public purpose. We certainly cannot oppose to the legislation our notions of its necessity, * * *."

Schmidinger v. Chicago, 226 U. S. 578, is a case which comes close to the exact problem now under consideration. It sustained an ordinance of the city of Chicago enacted under legislative authority fixing standard sizes for loaves of bread and prohibiting the sale of other sizes. As has been seen, unless there is some kind of a line between such a regulation and the fixing of the price of the loaf which stands as a hard and fast barrier to the further extension of the police power, what was said in this case ought to be apt in connection with the present problem.

Mr. Justice Day used the following language:

> "The making and selling of bread, particularly in a large city, where thousands of people depend upon their supply of this necessary of life by purchase from bakers, is obviously one of the trades and callings which may be the subject of police regulation. This general proposition is conceded by counsel for plaintiff in error, but it is contended that the limitation * * * is such an unreasonable and arbitrary exercise of legislative power as to render it unconstitutional and void. This court has frequently affirmed that the local authorities entrusted with the regulation of such matters—and not the courts—are primarily the judges of the necessities of local situations calling for such legislation * * *.
> "It is further urged that this ordinance interferes with the freedom of contract * * *. This court has had frequent occasion to declare that there is no absolute freedom of contract. The exercise of the police power fixing weights and measures and standard sizes must necessarily limit the freedom of contract which would otherwise exist. Such limitations are constantly imposed upon the right to contract freely, because of restrictions upon that right deemed necessary in the interest of the general welfare. * * *."

There are limitations on the exercise of this power, as has been intimated, but before passing to them it is only fair to note the existence of somewhat numerous state decisions, which cannot be perfectly harmonized with the Lewis case.

In the first place, there are certain cases expressly holding that the business of mining and marketing coal is not one "charged with a public interest." A careful examination of these cases in this connection is thought to be pertinent.

Curiously enough, the first of them is the state court decision in Holden v. Hardy, supra. In sustaining the law regulating the hours of labor in certain mines the Supreme Court of Utah expressly disclaimed placing its decision upon the ground under consideration, using the following language:

> "We do not agree with the defendant's counsel that the business of mining is affected with a public interest, and the legislature had the power to pass the law for that reason. Mines are used by private persons or corporations, who have the exclusive use and control of them, as a farmer may own his farm, and have the exclusive use and control of it. The fact that the business may benefit the public does not give the public any interest in the mine or its business, or affect it with a public interest. It is not like the railroad business. Such property and business are owned by a private corporation, but the use of the road is in the public. * * * The same may be said of similar other classes of business affected with a public use and interest.
> "On this point the court said in the last cited case: In re Jacobs (98 N. Y. 98), 'Although the legislature may declare it to be public, that does not necessarily determine its character * * *.'"

The next one of them is Millet v. People, 117 Ill. 294. This was a case just like In re Preston, 63 O. S. 428, in which an anti-screen law was held unconstitutional. The decision in the case is, of course, greatly discredited by such authorative decisions as McLean v. Arkansas, cited in some of the above quotations, and Rail and River Coal Co. v. Yaple, 236 U. S. 338. In other words, these decisions are merely not good law, and the supreme court of the United States has held that they are not good law. For example, the Millett case held that the police power was not competent to deal with the relation of employer and employe in the mining business because such a regulation does not "have reference to the comfort, safety and welfare of society," in which respect the decision is clearly erroneous. But in the opinion in the Millet case the following language is used:

> "The main reliance of the counsel representing the state, to sustain the ruling below, seems, however, to be on the ground that mining for coal is affected with a public use, so that it may be regulated by law, like public warehouses, * * *. It cannot be claimed that mining for coal was, by the common law, affected with a public use, and therefore specially regulated by law, like the business of inn-keepers, common carriers, millers, etc.; and, in our opinion, it is not, like the business of public warehousing, within the principle controlling such classes of business. The public are not compelled to resort to mine owners any more than they are compelled to resort to the owners of wood, or turf, or even to the owners of grain, domestic animals, or to those owning any of the other ordinary necessaries or conveniences of life which form a part of the commerce of the country. The owner of a coal mine is under no obligation to obtain a license from any public authority, and therefore when he chooses to mine his coal he exercises no franchise. We are aware of no case wherein it has been held that the owner or operator of a coal mine stands on a different footing, as respects the control and sale of his property, than the owner or operator of any other kind of property in general demand by the public."

The next case is also an Illinois case. It is that of People v. Steele, 231 Ill. 341; 14 L. R. A. 361. The Illinois supreme court in this case held unconstitutional a statute regulating the sale of theatre tickets by speculators. In this case the Millet case was referred to with approval. In speaking of the general question of what is "business affected by a public interest" the court uses the following language:

> "The fact that a license is required does not make the business a public employment. The cases where a business has been regarded as affected with a public interest have been cases where the person or corporation engaged in the business was acting under a franchise or cases affecting trade and commerce, where either there has been a virtual monopoly of means of transportation or methods of commerce * * *, or where from the nature of the business, in its regular course, the person carrying it on was necessarily entrusted with the property or money of his customers * * *, or where the business has been conducted in such a manner that the public and all persons dealing in the products concerned have adapted their business to the methods, so that such methods have become necessary to the safe and successful transaction of business."

These decisions are usually cited as authority for the proposition that the business of coal mining is not "affected with a public interest." (See Ruling Case Law under the heading "Constitutional Law").

As to the business of mining coal, Professor Wyman, in his excellent work on "Public Service Corporations," without citing any cases, says:

> "It would be going too far doubtless at the present time to claim that it is accepted law that natural limitation of a public necessity necessarily makes its general sale public employment. So long as those who have virtual monopoly of the antracite coal fields are left free to charge what prices they please, the principle is in abeyance. * * * But it may be that in the fullness of time these now all too powerful purveyors to public needs will be brought within this law and subjected to public regulation." (Sec. 91.)

In another part of his treatise he mentions coal yards as private enterprises, as distinguished from public callings, citing the opinions of justices, 182 Mass. 685, as a case in point. In that case it was held that a law conferring upon cities and towns authority to establish and maintain municipal fuel and coal yards, or to purchase coal and wood for the purpose of selling it to their inhabitants or others for fuel would be unconstitutional, although in case of a great scarcity of fuel, creating wide spread and general distress which could not be met by private enterprise and could be met by the interposing agency of government, such a measure as a temporary one for the period of the emergency might be sustained.

This case is interesting because in part it fits in with the remark of Chief Justice White in the Adamson law case, which was that what might not be justified under the rule of public necessity under one set of facts might be, at another time and under special circumstances like the conditions brought about by the war, held proper. It will be observed, however, that on the main point the question was not exactly whether a fuel yard was an enterprise affected with a public interest, but whether selling coal was a proper governmental activity.

In so far as Professor Wyman relies upon this case to establish the conclusion elsewhere expressed, that it is too early to say that the coal business is affected with a public interest in any sense, his conclusion is weakened by the fact stated by him in another section, that mining corporations have in some states been given the right of eminent domain. (See section 63, citing Tanner v. Treasury, etc. Co., 35 Colo. 593, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 106) Baillie v. Larson, 138 Fed. 177; DeCamp v. Hibernia R. R Co., 47 N. J. L. 43).

Professor Wyman's whole work and his other writings which have been referred to from time to time in this memorandum were written with a view to bringing out the essential truth that instead of the grant of the right of eminent domain or similar privileges being the foundation of a public interest in a business, the public interest was the foundation of the right of eminent domain. In other words, business does not become charged with a public interest by being granted the right of eminent domain, in its aid, but before the legislature can constitutionally grant this public right to a business it must be a public calling. The taking of private property under the power of eminent domain must be for a public use, and if coal mining is not a public use, then it is unconstitutional to grant the right to a mining company. It will not be necessary to develop this point as it has become familiar to the modern lawyer, though it was for a long time misunderstood. The point is nowhere better stated than in section 50 of Professor Wyman's work:

> "That legal privileges frequently accompany public employment is the first thing that has struck many observers as characteristic of the class. * * * Such legal monopoly has been said to carry with it the consequent obligation of public service. To aid in the construction of its work, it will frequently be found that eminent domain has been given to the public service companies conducting the business; and here again it is often said that the acceptance of such a special privilege creates obligation to serve the public. * * * It is, of course, true, that in the case of the most of the public services some one of these privileges will ordinarily be found in any particular case. * * * One insuperable difficulty with this common explanation * * * is that there are a considerable number of public employments always recognized as such, which have no such public privileges whatsoever. What is perhaps of even greater significance is that there are very many cases in which the grant of special rights, such as exclusive franchises, eminent domain * * * to a business concern of private character is held to be wholly void upon the ground that such special rights may only be given to such enterprises as are public in character. (Citing Brown v. Gerald, 100 Me. 351, 70 L. R. A. 472). It would seem, therefore, that the effect has sometimes been mistaken for cause here; that although many of these special privileges often accompany public employment, the truth is that these very privileges could not have been validly granted unless these businesses were public in character. It is submitted, therefore, without going into more detail about the matter, that under our constitutional system no special privileges can be granted except for a public purpose. Unless there is public interest apparent the grant is void. * *"

This reasoning of Professor Wyman is believed to be absolutely sound, even though it is not consistent with some rather generally held views. If it is sound, then it would follow that if the right of eminent domain can be constitutionally conferred upon a coal mining company, the business of that company is not only affected with a public interest but is also devoted to a public use; and inasmuch as that use and that interest must pre-exist the grant of the power of eminent domain, it is clear that they exist whether the power has been granted or not.

Therefore, on the authority of the decisions cited by Professor Wyman, coupled with his reasoning in paragraph 50, his later general statement that it can not be safely asserted that coal mining is a public calling is made out over-cautious at the least.

Professor Freund in his work on the police power does not mention the eminent domain cases, probably because all but one of them at any rate were decided since his book was published. He does note, however, under section 373 of his work that

"In Germany mining is also treated as a business affected with a public interest. * * * Land may be condemned in order to allow the opening of mines. * * * This privilege is also recognized in France. * * *."

It might be remarked that the mere fact that we are operating under a written constitution does not make the conditions justifying the extension of the power of eminent domain different in this country from what they would be, on grounds of policy at least, in Germany or France.

In view of all that has been said in this last connection and in view of the new or rather the clearer definition of "affected with a public interest" set forth in German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis, the following propositions regarding those cases in which the courts have held that the coal business is not affected with a public interest are submitted:

(1) In the first place, the remark in the Utah decision is pure obiter. The statute was sustained on other grounds. Therefore, what was said was not necessary to the decision of the case. Moreover, it is a mere naked expression of opinion without reason or authority in support of it.

(2) The decision in the first Illinois case was itself erroneous as tested by the more recent decisions of the supreme court of the United States. This deprives anything that the court may have said in the course of the opinion of any weight whatsoever.

(3) Considered even as dicta the remarks of the Utah and Illinois courts are based upon the generally prevailing contemporaneous understanding of the rule in Munn v. Illinois, namely, that in order to be affected with a public interest a business must be a public calling or, put in another way, that before the state may regulate the price of a commodity the seller of the commodity must be under obligation to sell to all who may apply. But this notion, based as it was solely upon Munn v. Illinois, a decision of the supreme court of the United States, was finally and definitely exploded in German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis, wherein it was held that the right to regulate prices was not necessarily commensurate only with the right to exact a public fee.

(4) Even as dicta on the point of public callings, these decisions are erroneous if it is true, as it has been held, that the right of eminent domain may be granted to a coal mining company. For before such right can be granted to such company it must appear that the business of the company is quasi public in character and not "purely private."

On the test of a "public calling" see particularly the Pipe Line Cases, 234 U. S 548, in which it was held that congress in the regulation of interstate commerce could require the owner of an interstate pipe line to serve all who might apply at a rate to be regulated by the interstate commerce commission, even though he might have built his pipe line for the purpose of transporting his own property, if in connection with such business and as a necessary part of it he was engaged in purchasing rather than producing crude oil so that the oil actually passing through the pipe line was the product of various producers, though technically purchased by the proprietor of the line before transportation.

The decisions of the Ohio supreme court on the nature and extent of the police power teem with expressions quite consistent with the most advanced ground taken by the supreme court of the United States. That is to say, wherever the supreme court of Ohio has sustained the constitutionality of a law or an ordinance, it has done so on the ground established by the above decisions; that there is no absolute personal liberty and no absolute right of property in the sense that they can be successfully opposed to a purely prospective regulation under the police power. Some of the more recent cases along this line are Bloomfield v. State, 86 O. S. 253; Mirick v. Gime, 79 O. S. 174; Sanning v. Cincinnati, 81 O. S. 142; State v. Gage, 72 O. S. 210; State ex rel. v Creamer, 85 O. S. 349; In re Hawley, 12 N. P. n. s. 1, (affirmed by the supreme court without report); Phillips v. State, 77 O. S. 214.

On the other hand, there are some cases, most of them are early but some of them quite recent, in which the supreme court of Ohio has held unconstitutional attempted exercises of the police power, on the ground that they unnecessarily and arbitrarily interfered with purely private rights or that they violated the requirement that government is instituted for the equal protection and benefit of the people (Article 1, Section 1 of the Ohio Constutition), or denied the "equal protection of law" (14th Amendment to Federal Constitution). Among such are the following:

In State v. Boone, 84 O. S. 346; 85 O. S. 313, the requirement that physicians, for the purpose of vital statistics, conduct independent inquiries and ascertain and report facts which they would not ordinarily learn in the practice of their profession, all without compensation, held to be an unreasonable and arbitrary exercise of the police power.

Williams v. Preslo, 84 O. S. 328 (holding that an act making bulk sales from stocks of goods presumptively fraudulent was unconstitutional).

Cleveland v. Construction Co. 67 O. S. 197 (denying the power of the legislature to fix the number of hours that shall constitute a day's work on the public works).

In re Preston, 63 O. S. 428 (holding first Ohio antiscreen law unconstitutional).

Palmer & Crawford v. Tingle, 55 O. S. 423 (holding a law giving mechanics, subcontractors and material men a lien on the property of the owner unconstitutional).

In re Steube, 91 O. S. 135, (holding sales by weight law unconstitutional as an unreasonable and burdensome regulation).

The subsequent history of the subject matters involved in some of these cases in the supreme court of this state is very interesting. For example, Williams v. Preslo, supra, was virtually, though not expressly, over ruled in Steele, etc., Co. v. Miller, 92 O. S. 115. It is true that this decision refers to the intervening constitutional amendment of 1913 as special authority for the enactment of legislation of this kind

(bulk sales); nevertheless, it must be apparent even to the casual view that the question involved in such cases is really a federal question arising under the 14th amendment. The supreme court has come very close to acknowledging more than once that the guaranties of the Ohio bill of rights are substantially the same in effect as those of the 14th amendment (see State v. Ferris, 53 O. S. 314). Class legislation and so-called arbitrary and unreasonable exactions are just as much condemned by the federal constitution as they are by the state constitution. It would follow, therefore, that an amendment to the state constitution would not be enough to sustain legislation that had been condemned upon grounds common both to the federal and to the state constitutions. Indeed, in the Miller case in 92 O. S., Johnson, J., delivering the opinion of the court, acknowledges again that

> "The guaranties of sections 1, 2 and 19 of the bill of rights in the constitution of Ohio are similar to those contained in the amendment to the federal constitution referred to."

Therefore, it is submitted that the Miller case is virtually a reversal or overruling of the Preslo case, and indeed that the court regarded it as such is rather clear from a reading of the entire opinion.

In re Preston, supra, is a peculiar decision, in that a careful perusal of the opinion of Shauck, J., in the case fails to show affirmatively on what ground the anti-screen law was held to be unconstitutional. Assuming, however, that it was upon the ground that an anti-screen law is beyond the police power of the state, the decision is, of course, discredited by the subsequent decisions of the supreme court of the United States which have previously been referred to.

Palmer & Crawford v. Tingle, supra, was discredited almost before it had become familiar law. The supreme court of the United States, in the case of Great Southern Fire-proof Hotel Co. v. Jones, 193 U. S., 532—a case arising under the same statute but before the Palmer case had been decided (i. e., the case arose before the state decision was rendered, though the supreme court of the United States decided the case after that decision was rendered), held that in that particular case it was not bound by the state decision which had not been rendered when the case arose and proceeding to decide the case for itself, held that so far as federal questions were concerned the sub-contractors' lein statute was constitutional. Inasmuch as the federal questions and the state questions were substantially the same, it will be seen that the supreme court of the United States simply disagreed with the state court on the real merits of the case.

Of course, Palmer v. Tingle is further discredited by the fact that the amendments of 1913 to the Ohio constitution have made it possible, so far as the state constitution is concerned, to pass the kind of laws condemned in that decision. In this same connection see Stange v. Cleveland, 94 O. S. 377, which sustains substantially the same relation to Cleveland v. Construction Co. that the later bulk sales law case sustains to Williams v. Preslo.

It would seem that the Steube case in 91 O. S. is recent enough to remain unimpeached, and indeed it has not thus far been overruled in any way. However, see Williams v. Sandles, 93 O. S. 92, sustaining the constitutionality of a law authorizing the condemnation and confiscation of false measures.

In all these more recent cases the leading decisions of the supreme court of the United States above referred to are cited as authorities. It seems reasonably clear that the disposition of our supreme court is, and always has been, to follow the lead of the supreme court of the nation, and in view of repeated dicta respecting the similarity in effect of the 14th amendment, on the one hand, and certain guaranties of our own bill of rights, on the other hand, it would seem reasonable to suppose that there is no peculiar state constitutional restriction on the exercise of the police power.

In point of fact this must necessarily be true. The first section of our own bill of rights, which declares that government is instituted for the equal protection and benefit of the people, is the one which has been most frequently relied upon by our own supreme court in holding various police regulations unconstitutional. The reasoning is that if a law is for the benefit of a given class only, or if it has no reasonable apparent relation to the welfare of the public as a whole, it violates the implied restraint of this section of the bill of rights.

This is nothing more than another way again of stating the principle of necessity which is contended for in this opinion. The necessity which may properly invoke an exercise of the police power must, of course, be a public necessity. The necessities of a small class, if sharply set over against the necessities of the public at large, can not constitute the kind of necessity which may invoke the polic power.

None of these decisions, it will be observed, is directly in point. Those coming nearest to a price regulation were In re Preston and Cleveland Construction Co. v. Cleveland. The first of these was apparently held unconstitutional because the interest or necessity which the anti-screen law attempted to serve was that of a small class, namely, the miners and loaders of coal. The second was stricken down on somewhat similar grounds.

But no such argument could be employed to strike down a law regulating the price of coal. That would not be "class legislation." It is true that a particular class would be restrained by the law, but the interest to be served is clearly the interest of the public at large, for everybody is interested in the price of coal, just as everybody who engages in commercial transactions or owns property is interested in the rates of fire insurance, which were the subject of the decision in German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis, supra.

In other words, it seems possible, even acknowledging the Preston case and the Cleveland case to be good law in Ohio today, to draw a distinction between wage regulation in a particular occupation or class of occupations, the public interest in which is comparatively remote, and the regulation of the price of a commodity of general—not to say universal—public consumption. It is very clear that a great many more people are interested in the price of coal, for example, than possibly can be interested in the wages paid on public works or in the method of compensating miners and loaders of coal. Academically this may not be true, but practically it is.

So it is that although we may not be ready to accept without reservation William Draper Lewis' broad assertion that price is always a matter of public interest, we can see clearly that the price of coal is at all times, and especially in war times, very much more a matter of public interest than the wages of laborers on public works or miners and loaders of coal.

There are some decisions in Ohio and in other states (with respect to which latter the length of this opinion precludes exhaustive citation) which embody the earlier, and perhaps justifiable, erroneous idea of what was decided in Munn v. Illinois. That is to say, there are intimations along the line to the effect that price regulation and certain other classes of police regulations of a "stronger" character are limited to the public callings. It is believed, however, that a careful examination of every case of this character decided between Munn v. Illinois and German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis will show that the former case is the authority for the conclusion reached or the intimation suggested. It is believed that the Ohio supreme court would undoubtedly follow German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis.

In this connection the case of State v. Howard (Neb. 1914), 147 N. W. 689, is very interesting. This case sustained the constitutionality of an act regulating insurance and in particular prescribing a standard form of policy. It seems that an earlier statute of the same type had been held unconstitutional by the circuit court.

of the United States (183 Fed. 636), but in the meantime the Lewis case had been decided.

Speaking of this case the Nebraska court says:

> "It is probably true that the dissenting opinion (hereinafter referred to) expresses views which have heretofore been generally held by most lawyers, and that strict adherence to the doctrine of most of the cases intervening between the Granger cases and Noble State Bank v. Haskell would have made the dissenting opinion, the opinion of the court; however, we are living in an era of advancing economic conditions, and one of the chief glories of the common law is and has been that it is not fixed and certain from generation to generation, but that it follows the trend of the times and meets cases as they arise."

As stated, there is every reason to suppose that the supreme court of Ohio would in like manner accept German Alliance Insurance Co. v. Lewis as the same kind of a landmark in the law as it was characterized to be by the Nebraska court.

There remains to be considered the effect of article II, section 36 of the constitution of Ohio, sometimes called the "conservation of natural resources provision." It is as follows:

> "Laws may be passed to encourage forestry, and to that end areas devoted exclusively to forestry may be exempted, in whole or in part, from taxation. Laws may also be passed to provide for converting into forest reserves such lands or parts of lands as have been or may be forfeited to the state, and to authorize the acquiring of other lands for that purpose; also, to provide for the conservation of the natural resources of the state, including streams, lakes, submerged and swamp lands and the development and regulation of water power and the formation of drainage and conservation districts; and to provide for the regulation of methods of mining, weighing, measuring and marketing coal, oil, gas and other minerals."

It will be observed that power is expressly delegated to the general assembly to regulate the method of mining, weighing and marketing coal. It might be argued, on the maxim that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of others, that the people by expressly conferring these powers respecting the coal business intended to withhold the power to regulate anything except methods, and therefore, to withhold the power to regulate prices. This, however, is not the case. In the first place, the maxim that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of others can not be applied to article II of the constitution, which starts with a delegation of all legislative power to the general assembly, coupled with the reservation of certain legislative powers to the people.

In this connection many authorities might be cited, but that would unnecessarily burden this opinion. It is enough to say that no purpose to limit or restrict powers of the legislature is discernible in the amendments of 1913. If what has been said thus far is correct, the legislature had the power—subject to the arising of the necessary economic or sociological facts—to do what is now questioned prior to the amendments of 1913. Unless, therefore, we give to these amendments the effect of diminishing the legislative power of the state, it would follow that they cannot be so interpreted as to deny the particular power under consideration.

On the whole, then, it does not appear that the supreme court of Ohio would feel itself bound to strike down a law regulating the price of coal passed in the light of war conditions, on the short ground that the power to pass such a law did not exist at all.

In conclusion on the general point we refer again to the old case of Yuille v. Mobile, 3 Ala., 137. This is a case on the question of "affecting a public interest," and it is remarkable because it was decided long before this phrase had been coined for general use in Munn v. Illinois. The question presented was as to the validity of an ordinance regulating the assize of bread. It had its particular origin in an arrest for violating the ordinance in respect of its requirement as to the weight of a loaf of bread—a case like Schmidinger v. Chicago, supra. However, the ordinance clearly had at least an indirect effect upon the price of bread, and it is very certain that the court had this point in mind in considering its validity. Moreover, the charter of the city expressly authorized the regulation of the price of bread.

Ormond, J., used the following language in the course of the opinion:

> "It is strenuously contended * * * that no such power exists, because * * * it would interfere with the right of the citizen to pursue his lawful trade or calling in the mode his judgment might dictate. Doubtless, under the form of government which exists in this and the other states of this union, the enjoyment of all the rights of property, and the utmost freedom of action which may consist with the public welfare, is guaranteed to every man, and no restraint can be lawfully imposed by the legislature in relation thereto, which the paramount claims of the community do not demand, or which does not operate alike on all. Free government does not imply unrestrained liberty on the part of the citizen, but the privilege of being governed by laws which operate alike on all. It is not therefore, to be supposed that in any country, however free, individual action cannot be restrained, or the mode, or manner of enjoying property, regulated.
> "There is no motive, however, for this interference on the part of the legislature with the lawful actions of individuals or the mode in which private property shall be enjoyed, unless such calling affects the public interest, or private property is employed in a manner which directly affects the body of the people.
> "Where a great number of persons are collected together in a town or city, a regular supply of wholesome bread is a matter of the utmost importance; and whatever doubts may have been thrown over the question by the theories of political economists, it would seem that experience has shown that this great end is better secured by licensing a sufficient number of bakers and by an assize of bread, than by leaving it to the voluntary acts of individuals. By this means a constant supply is obtained without that fluctuation in quantity which would be the inevitable result of throwing the trade entirely open, and the consequent rise in price, when from accident or design a sufficient supply was not produced. The interest of the city in always having an abundant supply will be a sufficient guaranty against any abuse of the right to regulate the weight, the consequence of which would be to drive the baker from the trade. * * *
> "The legislature having full power to pass such laws as is deemed necessary for the public good, their acts cannot be impeached on the ground that they are unwise, or not in accordance with just and enlightened views of political economy, as understood at the present day. The laws against usury, and quarantine, and other sanatory regulations, are by many considered as most vexatious and improper restraints on trade and commerce, but so long as they remain in force, must be enforced by courts of justice; arguments against their policy must be addressed to the legislative department of the government. * * *"

For a long time the disposition was to explain this case away and to insist that it did not decide that the price of bread might be regulated. Many of the articles and decisions referred to in this brief and occurring in point of time between the elevator case and the insurance case take this view. The reasoning of the court, however, is not susceptible to such a narrow interpretation, and it is put here to show the remarkably clear vision with which at the early date it was rendered (1841) the true rules which have since come to be established were grasped.

Taking the Yuille case and the insurance case together we have a rule that fits the question under consideration like a glove. Cannot all those things be said of the general public today that were said of the inhabitants of Mobile by the supreme court of Alabama in the Yuille case? Is it not true at this very moment that there is in the supply of coal "that fluctuation in quantity which would be the inevitable result of throwing the trade entirely open" and the "consequent rise in price when from accident or design a sufficient supply was not produced?" Is there not, therefore, the kind of a "public interest" in the price and supply of coal which in respect to the inhabitants of Mobile the supreme court of Alabama discerned regarding the price of bread in that city?

The Yuille case was cited with approval in the elevator case, as we have seen, and it is this passage in the opinion which justifies the interpretation of that decision, or perhaps the extension of it, that was ultimately arrived at in the Kansas case.

Returning now to Ohio, there is perhaps one respect in which the Ohio supreme court is not in accord with the supreme court of the United States, and for very proper reasons:

Without quoting any decisions it is sufficient to state that the state court has repeatedly asserted the judicial right to examine the question which we have designated as the question of necessity. The supreme court of the United States has taken the view that whether or not the sociological facts are such as to evoke particular police regulations is a matter about which the judgment of the state legislature is conclusive, or virtually so; yet that court has not always acted on this principle, as witness the bakeshop case, Lochner v. New York, 198 U. S., 45.

But while in this and other earlier cases the court has stricken down police regulations on the ground that there was no discerned relation between their provisions and the public welfare, yet in the later cases the statement has frequently been made that the judgment of the state legislature would not be inquired into or disputed by the court. Cases more recent than the Kansas case could be cited to this effect. Among them is the "Blue Sky Law" decision, coming up from Ohio. (Hall v. Geiger-Jones Co., 242 U. S., 539.)

One of the reasons for this attitude on the part of the supreme court of the United States is that it will not undertake to say, in opposition to the views of the state legislature, what the facts in a given state may be, as that is a matter of local, as distinguished from general, cognizance. This reason does not apply in its full force to the attitude of the supreme court of Ohio. Therefore, one can justify the repeated assertion by our own court, which is even carried into some of its more recent decisions, such as the Steube case, that it will not let the legislature be the final judge as to the matter of public necessity, or public welfare, or public benefit, or whatever one may term the requisite condition to the proper exercise of the police power. What has been said, therefore, about the probable attitude of the supreme court of Ohio toward a law that under consideration must be taken with this one qualification; yet it is believed that the facts respecting the coal industry are so plain, and the conclusion that a real public interest as distinguished from a mere class interest is involved is so inevitable, that the supreme court of this state could not find itself able to say that such a law would be an unreasonable, unnecessary or arbitrary enactment.

All legislative power is subject to limitations. The police power, as has been stated, is subject to at least one peculiar limitation, viz.: the rule of necessity. Perhaps another way of stating the same thing—perhaps a distinct idea is expressed in the statement that the police power must not be unreasonably or arbitrarily exercised.

In reality, however, this is not an implied limitation but the result of express limitation, such as the following:

Article I, section 2 Constitution of Ohio:

> "All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for their equal protection and benefit. * * *"

This provision is the one which is substantially the equivalent of that one of the 14th amendemnt to the federal constitution which prohibits the states from denying to persons within their respective jurisdiction the "equal protection of the law." As we have seen, there is no idea of class legislation which can be successfully asserted against the proposed law.

> "Private property shall ever be held inviolate, but subservient to the public welfare. When taken in time of war, etc." (Article I, section 19, Constitution of Ohio.)

Of course, it has been held numerous times that this section does not limit a proper exercise of the police power. Nevertheless, as we shall see, it may come into play in case of an improper exercise of such power. In such cases it has the same kind of an operation as that other phrase of the 14th amendment which prohibits the state from depriving persons of liberty or property without due process of law

The idea involved is that if the police power is unreasonably or arbitrarily exercised, inasmuch as in its very nature it involves the taking of private property and the deprivation of personal liberty pro tanto, it violates these limitations. As suggested, this may be simply another way of stating the rule of necessity. As now to be discussed, however, it has another implication. We are speaking of the fixing of prices. The maxim now under consideration has been given familiar operation in the case of railroad rate regulations. Courts have uniformly held that the rates fixed must be reasonable and compensatory; as soon as they become confiscatory they constitute a taking of private property without due process of law, etc. Even as a war measure the general assembly of this state can not fix confiscatory prices and compel sales at such prices without affording compensation to the sellers.

But so long as the rates or prices fixed are reasonable and compensatory no such taking is involved as necessitates making compensation, and the police power, as stated, may deal with the situation.

There are numerous authorities to this general effect, as has been stated. The succinct language of Mr. Justice Holmes in the Kansas Bank Guaranty cases, which has been quoted, is an excellent expression of the rule.

In one view of the case it would seem that the idea of taking private property for public use is not present at all if there is no compulsion upon the rendition of services or sale of commodities, such as is exercised in the case of the public callings. A railroad company, for example, must serve all who apply upon equal terms, and if rates are fixed, then it must either go out of business entirely or make those rates applicable to all. In other words, there is more than one kind of compulsion in the case of the public callings: (1) The compulsion to render the service; and (2) The compulsion to adhere to the established rates.

But if coal mining be not a public calling, and if the proposed legislation does not compel the sale of coal at the prices fixed, but should leave the option to sell or not to sell in any particular case open to the choice of the owner or producer of the coal, it is easy to see how it might be argued that there would be no taking of the property in the mere fixing of prices. That is to say, the legislature fixes, or provides for fixing, the price, to be sure, but so long as it does not compel sales at the price as it compels the services of public utilities at the established rate, there is no taking of property.

It must be conceded that there is a difference in the degree to which property would be taken by an unreasonable price fixed by the legislature for the sale of coal and by an unreasonably low rate fixed by the legislature for the transportation of commodities of commerce, respectively. The distinction, however, is not so important as would at first blush. For after all, property in the hands of the owner and intended for sale is of value to him only in so far as he may deal with it by selling it. To prohibit the sale of such property except at a figure which will not compensate the owner for his outlay in its acquisition and give him a reasonable profit whereby he may sustain his own life, is in the ultimate analysis just as much a taking of that property as if a certain quantity of the thing itself were taken in the specie. It would be idle to argue that the option still remained with the owner of the coal to sell or not to sell as he might choose. The fixing of an unreasonably low price, by preventing him from using the coal for the only purpose for which he could use it to advantage, would force a loss upon him and thus take his property.

Therefore, it is believed that even though the coal business may not be a "public calling" nor treated as such in the legislation proposed, yet the power to fix prices in this manner is qualified or limited by the requirement that the prices so fixed must be reasonable.

The further development of this theme is not necessary as the criteria of reasonableness, as applied to rate making, have been worked out in some detail in the railroad rate cases. It is enough to state that these principles would apply to the regulation of the price of any commodity under the power now under discussion.

Of course, there are other limitations upon the exercise of this power. One of them arises from the fact that a regulation of price is a regulation of commerce. The state's power in this respect does not extend to the regulations of interstate commerce.

There are, of course, two fields of regulations respecting interstate commerce matters: One, which may be designated as the field of exclusive congressional jurisdiction, may not be entered by the states at all; the other, which may be referred to as that of concurrent legislative cognizance, is one which may be occupied by the states unless and until congress has occupied the field.

Of course, there is the third field of exclusive state cognizance, namely, the regulation of such commerce as is purely intra-state.

The test for determining whether or not a regulation of commerce which may conceivably be interstate is within the exclusive jurisdiction of congress or the concurrent jurisdiction of the states is furnished by the directness of the regulation. The question is: Does the proposed state law directly burden interstate commerce? If it does, the state can not act at all; but if it amounts to merely an indirect or incidental regulation of such commerce, the state may, under its police power, act unless and until congress has occupied the field.

It would seem that nothing could be a more direct burden upon or regulation of interstate commerce than the fixing of prices of commodities sold in interstate commerce transactions.

Therefore, if the state of Ohio contemplates regulations fixing the price of coal, such legislation must be carefully limited so as to not apply to interstate commerce. Thus the price of coal at the mines may be fixed, but not in such way as to affect such a sale on a contract calling for immediate transportation to a point outside of the state; on the other hand, the price of coal at the distribution point may be regulated but not in such a way as to affect contracts calling for the immediate importation of a specific and designated quantity of coal from a point outside of the state. Moreover, under the original package doctrine the price of coal which has actually been transported from a point outside of the state to a point within the state prior to its sale can not be regulated so as to apply to a sale of such coal by the importer in the original package of importation, such as a carload lot. But when coal has come into the state from outside and has become commingled with the general mass of property in the state, and the original package of interstate transportation is broken up and the coal is sold piece-meal as it were, such sale is subject to the exclusive control of state legislation.

Of course, another limitation which must be applied in this case is that respecting the impairment of the obligations of contracts.

No state regulation of prices could apply to and govern the consideration of a contract entered into prior to the date when such a law would become effective. Cases which have been previously cited, however, show clearly that the obligation of a contract entered into after a law becomes effective is not impaired by that law, but that the law itself enters into and becomes a part of the obligation of the contract, which must be deemed to have been made with reference to it. Putting it in still another way: the state, under its police power, may prohibit future contracts, but may not affect the obligation of existing contracts.

In conclusion, therefore, it is submitted that the power to regulate the price of coal, which is a commodity a supply of which is necessary to the preservation of the public health and for the economic welfare of the public generally, exists whenever a situation develops which, in the judgment of the legislature, makes such a regulation necessary; that the legislature is the first judge of the occasion of the exercise of its power; but that the occasion and extent to which the power is exercised is subject to review by the courts, so that no unreasonable or arbitrary action may be taken and the price fixed, must be adequate; that the state legislature must limit its acion to intra-state transactions, and may not by its legislation impair the obligations of subsisting contracts; that a state of war is an abnormal condition which on its face would seem to justify the legislature in the exercise of such power, even if its judgment as to the occasion for such exercise is subject to review; and that generally, subject to the foregoing limitations, a law regulating the price of coal may be passed at the present time.

While you do not specifically ask my opinion as to food products, nevertheless following the line of authorities hereinbefore set forth it will be readily seen that the legislature would be authorized to regulate the price of food products as well as the price of coal.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CRUDE GASOLINE — MUST BE INSPECTED BEFORE SOLD TO REFINERIES.

Section 865 General Code requires that high powered crude gasoline, manufactured from natural gas by a fuel supply company, must be inspected before it is sold by such company to refineries.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1917.

HON. CHARLES L. RESCH, State Inspector of Oils, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 11, 1917, as follows:

> "At Sugar Grove, Ohio, the Ohio Fuel Supply Company have a plant at which they manufacture gasoline from natural gas. This gasoline is very high powered and is sold by these poeple to refiners, where it is mixed with other products and put on the market as gasoline. They call this product which thay make crude gasoline. The question has arisen as to whether or not this crude gasoline should be inspected at the first named plant before it is sold by them to a refiner. Inasmuch as the refiner has the finished product inspected the argument presented that it should not be necessary to subject the crude product to inspection.
> "In this connection I would call your attention to section 865 of the General Code which prescribes that 'gasoline, petroleum-ether or similar or like substances, under whatever name called, whether manufactured within this state or not, having a lower flash test than provided in this chapter for illuminating oils, shall be inspected by the state inspector of oils. * * * Whoever sells or offers for sale any gasoline, petroleum-ether or similar or like substance not stamped as provided in this chapter shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding twenty days or both.'
> "Kindly let me have your opinion as to whether or not the provisions of section 865 General Code above quoted make it necessary to inspect this crude gasoline at the Sugar Grove gasoline plant prior to its sale by that company to a refiner?"

You also inform me that the gasoline in question has a "lower flash test" than is provided for illuminating oils and that while this gasoline is very high powered, it can be used in the operation of automobiles, etc.

Section 865 G. C. reads:

> "Gasoline, petroleum-ether or similar or like substances, under whatever name called, whether manufactured within this state or not, having a lower flash test than provided in this chapter for illuminating oils, shall be inspected by the state inspector of oils. Upon inspection, the state inspector shall affix by stamp or stencil to the package containing such substance a printed inscription containing its commercial name, the word 'dangerous,' date of inspection and the name and official designation of the officer making the inspection. For such inspections, the state inspector shall receive the same fees as for the inspection of oils, which shall be paid into the state treasury, as herein provided for other fees. Such fees shall be a lien on the gasoline, petroleum-ether or similar substance so inspected. For such inspection, deputy inspectors shall receive the same fees and shall make monthly report of such inspections, as provided herein for the inspection of oils. Whoever sells or offers for sale any gasoline, petroleum-ether or similar or like substance not stamped as provided in this chapter shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned in the county jail not exceeding twenty days or both."

The product manufactured at the Ohio Fuel Supply Company is usually "gasoline" and inasmuch as it has a "lower flash test" than is provided for illuminating oils, it comes squarely within the provisions of section 865 G. C. The penalty provided by section 865 falls upon a person who "sells or offers for sale any gasoline * * not stamped as provided in this chapter". This penalty is not for the sale of gasoline in the retail market but simply for the sale. The Ohio Fuel Supply Company, in the case submitted, undoubtedly sells this gasoline to the refineries and while I am not unmindful of the argument that could be presented for an opposite construction of the statute, I am of the opinion that the law requires that the gasoline referred to be inspected by your department prior to its sale by the Ohio Fuel Supply Company to the various refineries.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DEPUTY OIL INSPECTOR—TRAVELING EXPENSES AUTHORIZED UNDER SECTION 849 G. C.

Section 849 General Code, allowing deputy oil inspectors their actual and necessary traveling expenses, authorizes the payment to them of all expenses incurred while absent from their home and while engaged in their official duties. This includes railroad fare, lodging, meals and other actual and necessary expenses which may be incurred by them in the performance of their duties while they are traveling about the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1917.

HON. CHARLES L. RESCH, State Inspector of Oils, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 11, 1917, as follows:

"I beg to call your attention to section 849 of the General Code relating to fees of deputies of this department. You will note that this section provides that each deputy inspector of oils shall receive certain fees and 'his actual and necessary traveling expenses incurred while engaged in the discharge of the duties of his office.'

"Kindly advise just what items of expense may be properly charged by the deputy inspector under this section."

Former Attorney-General Hogan, under date of May 8, 1911, rendered an opinion to Hon. E. M. Fullington, auditor of state (found in Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1911-1912, Vol. 1), in which he said:

"When an inspector is assigned to inspect an association in a city other than that of his residence, whether that city be the capital of the state or not, all expenses incurred by him while absent from his home are, in my opinion, 'traveling expenses.' "

This is the view frequently taken by this department in construing statutes that allow to officials their actual and necessary expenses. I beg to advise you, therefore, that section 849 of the General Code authorizes the deputy oil inspectors to charge and receive all expenses incurred by them while absent from their home and while engaged in their official duties. This includes railroad fare, lodging, meals and other actual and necessary expenses which may be incurred by them in the performance of their duties while they are traveling about the state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COSTS—INCURRED IN DETERMINING SANITY OF PERSON CHARGED WITH CRIME—HOW PAYABLE—COSTS IN CRIMINAL CASE WHEN PRISONER RECOVERS SANITY—AND WHEN HE DOES NOT RECOVER—HOW PAYABLE.

The costs incurred in determining whether or not a person is sane under section 13806 General Code are part of the costs in the criminal case. Witness fees are payable out of the county treasury under section 3014 G. C. If the prisoner does not recover his sanity and the indictment is nollied, the officers' fees are payable as in cases of state failure. If the prisoner does recover his sanity and the trial proceeds upon the indictment and the prisoner is acquitted, the officers recover their fees as in cases of state failure. If the priosner is convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary or reformatory, the costs are paid by the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1917.

HON. TOM A. JENKINS. Prosecuting Attorney, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR —I have your letter of July 3, 1917, as follows:

"The question has arisen in our county with reference to costs.

"We had one John Smith, indicted for arson and shooting with intent to kill. He feigned insanity. An inquest was held by the probate judge and physicians unanimously found that he was sane, and that he was feigning. Later when his case was set for trial in the common pleas court his attorneys made application for an investigation as to his insanity under section 13608 of the General Code. The case was a very bitterly contested one and continued over three days. There were a great number of witnesses examined and the costs amounted to considerable. The question arose at the outset of the case with reference to how the costs should be paid. I maintain that the costs should be paid by the defendant, especially should the jury find him to be sane. No costs were paid. The witnesses had their attendance marked and it rests there. The jury found the accused to be insane and he was later sentenced to the Lima State Hospital, where he is now confined. We are at a loss to know how these costs should be paid. I thought probably your department might have had this question up before. In any event we would be glad to have an opinion of your department as to who should pay the costs under the circumstances."

Sections 13608, 13609, 13610 and 13611 G. C. read:

"Sec. 13608. When the attorney of a person indicted for an offense suggests to the court in which such indictment is pending, and before sentence, that such person is not then sane and a certificate of a reputable physician to that effect is presented to the court, such court shall order a jury to be impaneled to try whether or not the accused is sane at the time of such impaneling. Thereupon a time shall be fixed for a trial, a jury shall be drawn from the jury box and a venire issued, unless the prosecuting attorney or the attorney of the accused demand a struck jury, in which case such jury shall be selected and summoned as required by law. The jury shall be sworn to try the question whether the accused is or is not sane and a true verdict given according to the law and the evidence, and, on the trial, the accused shall hold the affirmative.

"Sec. 13609. If three-fourths of the jurors provided for in the next preceding section agree upon a verdict, their finding may be returned as the verdict of such jury, and a new trial may be granted on the application of the attorney of the accused, for the causes and in the manner provided in this title

"Sec. 13610. If three-fourths of the jurors do not agree, or the verdict is set aside, another jury shall be impaneled to try the question. If the jury find the accused to be sane and no trial has been had on the indictment, a trial shall be had thereon as if the question had not been tried. If the jury find him to be not sane, that fact shall be certified by the clerk to the probate court, and the accused, until restored to reason, shall be dealt with by such court as upon inquest had. If he is discharged, the bond given for his support and safe-keeping shall contain a condition that, when restored to reason, he shall answer to the offense charged in the indictment or of which he has been convicted, at the next term of the court thereafter and abide the order of such court.

"Sec. 13611. When restored to reason the accused may be prosecuted for an offense committed by him previous to such insanity, or sentenced on a conviction had previous thereto."

In the case you refer to, the jury found the prisoner to be insane and he was sentenced, I take it, to the Lima State Hospital by the probate court.

It will be noted in this case that the prisoner was not acquitted. The trial was simply halted and the special jury having found him insane he was committed to the Lima State Hospital. Under the provisions of section 13611 he may be tried again for the offense as soon as he is restored to reason. The indictment remains.

The trial of the accused, under section 13608, is a part of the criminal proceedings directed against the accused and provided by statute, between the indictment and the trial, and the costs of the same should, I think, be included as a part of the costs in the criminal case. Surely if the jury found the defendant sane and the trial proceeded to its proper conclusion, it would not be claimed that the costs incurred in this special proceeding were not costs incurred in the case. The fact that the jury found the prisoner insane instead certainly does not alter the character of the proceeding and it is therefore my belief that the costs incurred are a part of the costs in the case. The crime of which the prisoner stands accused is a felony and the case is a "criminal cause" under section 3014 of the General Code, which reads:

"Each witness attending under recognizance or subpoena, issued by order of the prosecuting attorney or defendant, before the court of common pleas, or grand jury, or other court of record, in criminal causes, shall be allowed the following fees: For each day's attendance one dollar, and five cents for each mile, the same as in civil causes, to be taxed in only one cause, when attending in more causes than one on the same days, unless otherwise directed by special order of the court. When certified to the county auditor by the clerk of the court, fees under this section shall be paid from the county treasury."

The trial of the prisoner as to his sanity under section 13608 I have already held is a part of the criminal proceeding and therefore is included within the meaning of the term "criminal cause" as used in section 3014 G. C. The witness fees, therefore, should be paid out of the county treasury under this section.

Whether or not the county is to be reimbursed by the state will depend upon the final outcome of the case. If the prisoner is restored to reason, the state may proceed to trial upon the indictment and if he is convicted and sentenced these witness fees and the other costs in the case will be paid by the state. If he is acquitted the case will be treated as a "state failure" and officers may be allowed fees by the county commissioners accordingly. If the prisoner is not restored to reason, the indictment will in all probability be nollied. This, according to opinion No. 98, rendered by this department under date of March 10, 1917, to Hon. C. M. Caldwell, prosecuting attorney, Waverly, Ohio, is also a "state failure" and in such event the fees of officers may be paid as in such cases.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TAX COMMISSION—MUST CERTIFY ITS DETERMINATIONS TO PERSON IN WHOSE NAME PROPERTY IS LISTED—RIGHT OF PROPERTY OWNER TO HAVE DETERMINATIONS OF COMMISSION REVIEWED IN COMMON PLEAS COURT.

Section 5611-1 G. C., as enacted in 107 O. L. 550, requires the tax commission of Ohio to certify to the person in whose name the property valued by it is listed as to all determinations made by such tax commission, after said act went into effect. The provisions of said section with reference to the time such certification must be made is directory in this that such certification of the actions of the tax commission to the persons in whose name the property is valued may be made after the action of the board is certified to the county auditor, but the certification to the person in whose name the property is listed, if not made at the time the action of the board is certified to the county auditor, should be made within a reasonable time thereafter.

Section 5611-2 General Code, as enacted in said act above referred to, authorizes the persons therein specified to have a review of the determinations of the tax commission with respect to the valuation of property made since said act went into effect, by the common pleas court on petition in error, filed in such court within thirty days after notice of the action of the tax commission is certified in the manner provided by section 5611-1, and, not deciding whether it was the legislative intention, in the enactment of said act, to confer upon the common pleas court jurisdiction to review determinations made by the tax commission with respect to the valuation of property for years prior to 1917, said section 5611-2 General Code authorizes the person indicated in said section to institute proceedings in error in the common pleas court to review determinations made by the tax commission valuing property for taxation for the year 1917, though such determinations were made prior to the time said act went into effect, provided petition in error in such cases is filed in the common pleas court within thirty days after the time said act went into effect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1917.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your favor of July 11, 1917, asking opinion of me on a question stated by you as follows:

> "The commission respectfully requests your opinion as to the effect of senate bill No. 227, passed March 21, 1917, and approved March 30, 1917, upon the proceedings of the commission with reference to the assessment and certification of the property of public utilities for the year 1917.
> "The general law provides that public utilities shall file reports with the tax commission on or before the first day of March. The commission is required to fix the value of the property of such companies on the second Monday of June and is required to apportion the same to the various counties and certify such apportionment on the second Monday of July. The commission desires to know whether or not it will be required for this year to comply with section 5611-1 of the above act and certify its action as to the assessment of public utility property to the person in whose name the property is listed, or sought to be listed, at the same time and in the same form in which such action is certified to the county auditor.
> "The work of preparing the apportionment sheets was practically completed before the commission's attention was called to the passage of this act and most of it was completed before the act became effective.

"The commission desires to know whether upon application, as provided in section 5611-2 of the above act, it is required to deliver to the person or persons making the application a certified transcript of the final order and the evidence in the proceedings upon which such order is based, as to the value of public utility property for the year 1917."

The act referred to in your communication is found in 107 O. L. p. 550, and was enacted March 21, 1917, and filed in the office of the Secretary of State March 31, 1917. The act is as follows:

"Section 5611-1. Whenever the tax commission of Ohio determines the valuation, or liability, of property for taxation, whether in case of an original valuation or other original proceeding of such board, or in case of a determination of an appeal from the decision of a county board of revision, it shall, by registered mail, certify its action to the person in whose name the property is listed, or sought to be listed, at the same time and in the same form in which such action is certified to the county auditor, and such determination shall become final and conclusive for the current year, unless reversed, vacated, or modified as hereinafter provided.

"Section 5611-2. The proceeding to obtain such reversal, vacation or modification shall be by petition in error filed in the court of common pleas, instituted by the person or persons in whose name the property is listed for taxation, or by any person or official authorized to file a complaint against any valuation or assessment under the provisions of section 5609 of the General Code. In case of original proceedings or valuations by the tax commission of Ohio, such proceedings shall be instituted in the common pleas court of the county in which the property is located, or if located in more than one county, then in the county in which the greater amount of the property in question is located as shown by the apportionment of such commission, and in such case the court shall review the determination of the commission as to all the property in each such county and the apportionment of the value thereof. In case of a determination of an appeal from the decision of a county board of revision such proceeding shall be instituted in the common pleas court of the county in which such complaint was originally filed.

"Such petition in error shall be filed within thirty days after notice is served as provided in section 5611-1, provided that in case of determinations made prior to the taking effect of this act, such petition may be filed within thirty days after this act takes effect, and the county auditor of the county in which such petition is filed, and the tax commission of Ohio, shall be made defendants, and, unless waived, summons in error shall be issued and served as in other cases, upon such auditor and upon the chairman and clerk of the tax commission of Ohio. The tax commission shall, upon written demand of the person or persons, filing such petition, made at or before the filing thereof, deliver to such person or persons within thirty days thereafter a certified transcript of the final order and the evidence in the proceedings upon which such order is based, which transcript shall forthwith be filed by the plaintiff in error with the clerk of the court in which such proceeding is pending, and the court may call witnesses and consider other evidence in addition to such transcript in the hearing of such petition in error. The prosecuting attorney of the county shall represent the county auditor in such proceeding. Either party shall have the right to prosecute error as in other cases. The court may permit any interested party to intervene by cross-petition. No determination of the tax commission as to the value of property for taxation shall be reversed, vacated, or modified unless it is shown by clear and convincing evidence that the value of the property, as determined by the tax commission, is not the true value in money of such property.

"Section 5611-3. In case of the institution of such proceeding, liability for taxes upon the property in question, and for non-payment of taxes within the time required by law, shall relate back to the date of the original valuation or determination, and liability for taxes and for any penalty for non-payment thereof within the time required by law, shall be based upon the valuation as finally determined."

As will be observed from its terms, this act is an original act supplementing section 5611 General Code, which prescribes the jurisdiction of the tax commission to hear complaints on appeal from the county board of revision. The act being original in its nature, we are not called upon, with respect to either of your questions, to consider the provisions of section 26 General Code, which under certain conditions limits the effect of statutes amending or repealing existing statutes on pending causes or proceedings. This act, therefore, speaks without qualification from the day that it went into effect as a law, to wit: on June 30, 1917.

With respect to your first question, the act requires that as to all determinations made by you after the law went into effect, you shall by registered mail certify your action to the person in whose name the property valued is listed or thought to be listed, at the same time and in the same form in which such action is certified to the county auditor.

Answering your first question specifically, therefore, I am of the opinion that section 5611-1 General Code, above quoted, requires you to comply with its provisions with respect to the certification of your action to the person in whose name the property valued by you is listed, as to all determinations made by you since the law went into effect. Conformable to the general rule applicable to the construction of statutes of this kind, however, I am inclined to the view that the provisions of this section, in so far as it prescribes the time at which you are required to certify your action to the person in whose name the property valued by you is listed, is directory and that you are permitted to certify your action to such person after your certification is made to the county auditor, and in a reasonable time thereafter.

With respect to your second question, it will be noted that by section 4 of article IV of the state constitution, a common pleas court is authorized to receive such jurisdiction as may be conferred upon it by law, and this would include jurisdiction conferred upon such court to revise, on petition in error or otherwise, findings and decisions made by administrative boards.

Hocking Valley Railway Co. v. Public Utilities Commission, 92 O. S., 9, 14.

Section 5611-2 General Code confers jurisdiction on the common pleas court to review the determinations made by you with respect to the vaulations of property for taxation by petition in error filed in said court. As to such determinations made by you after the law went into effect, this section requires the petition in error to be filed within thirty days after receipt, by the party becoming plaintiff in error, of the notice prescribed by section 5611-1 and with respect to determinations made by you prior to the time the act took effect it is required that such petition in error be filed within thirty days after the time the act took effect. I know of no principle of constitutional law which inhibits the enactment of legislation providing a right of appeal or right of review by proceedings in error with respect to decisions or findings of a board or tribunal made before such legislation goes into effect. On the contrary, legislation of this kind has ben recognized as valied where a reasonable time is given to perfect the appeal or proceedings in error after such law becomes effective.

State Counsel Jr. O. U. A. M. vs. National Counsel, Jr., 79 N. J. Equity, 193;
See Marinda v. Dowlin, 4 O. S., 500;
Lafferty v. Shinn, 38 O. S., 48;
Canaan township v. Board, etc., 46 O. S., 694.

Making direct answer, therefore, to your second question, I am of the opinion that the persons specified in section 5611-2 have a right to institute proceedings in error with respect to determinations as to values of public utility property for the year 1917 and that upon application you are required to deliver to the person or persons making the application a certified transcript of the final order and the evidence in the proceedings upon which your finding is based.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TEACHER—ONE YEAR CERTIFICATES—ENTITLED TO THREE.

Every teacher is entitled to three effective one-year certificates so that when two or more one-year certificates are issued in any one year all will count as but one in making up the sum total of three.

The three one-year certificates mentioned in section 7821 G. C. must be issued in three separate years to make up the limit allowed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 30, 1917.

HON. CHESTER PENDLETON, Prosecuting Attorney, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of June 27, 1917, submits for my opinion the following statement of facts:

"On April 17th, at the request of our county superintendent of schools for an opinion as to whether under section 7821 of the General Code three-one-year certificates are all that may be issued to one person or whether more than three such certificates may be issued provided not more than two of them have been actually used, I replied with an opinion to the effect that the language of the section seemed to me to be very definite in limiting to three the number of one-year certificates to be issued to any one person, and that I saw no justification for holding that more than three such certificates could be issued.

"Since then my attention has been called to a letter from your office dated June 2, 1917, and written to Mr. Harold Gassman, of Arcadia, which seems to indicate what you have come to a different conclusion regarding this section of the General Code, and are placing a more liberal construction on it.

"Under the circumstances, I am asking you to kindly give me your written opinion on this question."

The letter of Harold Gassman, to which my letter of June 2, 1917, was an answer, reads as follows:

> "In June, 1915, I secured a one-year certificate at Bowling Green, Ohio.
> "I secured a position as teacher in Hancock county for 1915-16 which made it necessary to secure another one-year certificate in Hancock county at Findlay, Ohio, August, 1915.
> "In March, 1916, I secured another on-year at Findlay, Ohio, and taught the term of 1916-17. The examiners of Hancock county now refuse to grant me another one-year certificate.
> "I think I am entitled to another certificate, as I used only two certificates granted. Please advise if I am correct."

Section 7821 G. C. provides in part that:

> "County boards of school examiners may grant teachers certificates for one year * * which shall be valid in all villages and rural school districts of the county wherein they are issued. Not more than three one-year certificates * * * may be issued to any one person * * *. Such certificate shall be valid for one year * * * from the first day of September following the day of examination."

Section 7829 G. C. provides that:

> "Three kinds of teacher's certificates only shall be issued by county boards of school examiners, which shall be styled respectively 'teacher's elementary school certificate,' valid for all branches of study in schools below high school rank, 'teacher's high school certificate,' valid for all branches of study in recognized high schools and for superintendents and 'teacher's special certificate,' valid in schools of all grades, but only for the branch or branches of study named therein."

Section 7830 G. C. provides that no person shall be employed as a teacher in any village or rural school district who has not obtained from a board of examiners having legal jurisdiction a certificate as therein set forth.

By legal jurisdiction is meant that the board of examiners issuing such certificate must be the board of examiners of the county in which is located the village or rural school district in which the teacher appearing before the board of examiners desires to teach.

Section 7824 G. C. provides that county boards of school examiners, at their discretion, may issue certificates without formal examinations to holders of certificates granted by other county or city boards of school examiners. The one-year certificate, about which inquiry is made, is what is designated as a "teacher's elementary certificate" and can only be issued by the board of education of the county in which is located the district in which such teacher desires to teach and shall be valid throughout said county from the first day of September following the day of the examination which is attended by such teacher. So that when the teacher in question secured a certificate from the county board of examiners of Wood county, Ohio, in June, 1915, said certificate was secured from the county board of school examiners of said Wood county and was valid only in Wood county, but was valid from the first day of September, 1915, and when the said teacher desired to teach school in a school district in Hancock county, it became necessary for him to secure a certificate from the county board of school examiners of said Hancock county. Hancock county board of school examiners could issue him a certificate without examination, as provided by section 7824, above mentioned, or it could permit him to take an examination as any other teacher, but whether such certificate was issued with or without such examination, it could only be dated from September 1, 1915, that is, from the same date which appeared on the certificate issued to him by the Wood county board of school examiners, and both certificates covered the identical period—from September 1, 1915, to August 31, 1916.

Certificates are issued only for periods certain, as for one, three or five years, and the certificate or certificates mentioned which had been issued to Harold Gassman were for all intents and purposes but one certificate, for but one certificate could be effective in any one year. When said Harold Gassman secured his certificate in March, 1916, that certificate covered the year from September, 1916, to August 31, 1917, and was in effect his second certificate, and he was therefore entitled to one more certificate under section 7821 G. C.

The effect of the above may be better illustrated by the following: Suppose a teacher should apply for a school in three different counties. In each county he would have to secure a certificate. If each certificate issued in each county would count in making up the number of three, then the three certificates could all be issued in any one year and each be effective, for a teacher is entitled to three effective certificates. I do not understand that to be the law. For but one certificate can be effective in any one year, as all must date from September 1st, which is the date certain, and the three certificates must of necessity, in order to be effective, be issued in three separate years. It is not necessary that they be issued in three consecutive years, but when two or more are issued in any one year they count only as one certificate in making up the sum total of three, as provided by General Code section 7821.

Suppose again that the teacher, in endeavoring to secure a three-year certificate shall take several examinations in one year and each time only receives a one-year certificate. Would he be barred from further examination simply because he attempted to receive a higher grade certificate in one year? Each certificate so issued shall be valid for one year, so that if all must count in making up the three, would it not argue that when one was in force none other could be issued covering the same time?

All the above brings me to the conclusion that all the certificates issued in one year count only as one certificate and I advise you that the three one-year certificates mentioned in section 7821 must be issued in three separate years to make up the limit allowed.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CHILD—IN CUSTODY OF JUVENILE COURT OR TRUSTEES OF CHILDREN'S HOME—UPON ADOPTION REMAINS WARD UNTIL IT BECOMES OF LAWFUL AGE.

1. Where a child in the custody of the juvenile court is legally adopted under section 8030 G. C., such child for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection remains a ward of such court until the child attains the age of twenty-one.

2. Where a child in the custody and control of the trustees of the children's home is adopted, such control continues until such child becomes of lawful age.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 30, 1917.

HON. H. H. NEEDLES, Probate Judge, Sidney, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 6, 1917, wherein you state:

"Section 8030 General Code provides that when this court makes an order of adoption that 'The natural parents * * * shall be divested of all legal rights and obligations in respect to the child, and it be free from all legal obligations of obedience and maintenance in respect to them. Such child shall be the child and legal heir of the person so adopting him or her, entitled to all the rights or privileges and subject to all the obligations of a child of such person begotten in lawful wedlock.'

"Under this section it seems that the adopted parent would have complete control free from supervision of any board of trustees of any home where the child was adopted from a children's home, and free from the supervision of a juvenile judge where the child was a ward of the court.

"Section 3093 G. C. provides: * * * 'and if such child is placed out, indentured or adopted, such control shall continue until such child becomes of lawful age.'

"The section as to the continuance of the guardianship of the juvenile court provides similarly that it continues until the child becomes of age.

"There seems to be a conflict between the adoption statute and these statutes where guardianship continues and we have been losing good homes for some of these children because of the possibility of the latter statutes giving control to boards and courts even after adoption, thus making the adoption contract one sided.

"My question is, what rights, if any, have the board of trustees of a children's home over a child in their institution after it has been legally adopted? Same as to a child who is a ward of a juvenile court and has been legally adopted?"

Section 8030 G. C. provides:

"The natural parents, except when such child is adopted under the provisions of sections eighty hundred and twenty-six and eighty hundred and twenty-seven, by such order shall be divested of all legal rights and obligations in respect to the child, and it be free from all legal obligations of obedience and maintenance in respect to them. Such child shall be the child and legal heir of the person so adopting him or her, entitled to all the rights and privileges and subject to all the obligations of a child of such person begotten in lawful wedlock. But on the decease of such person and the subsequent decease of such adopted child without issue, the property of such adopted parent shall descend to his or her next kin, and not to the next kin of such adopted child."

The preceding sections 8024 et seq. provide the procedure for the adoption of a minor child. Under these sections the adopted child possesses the legal status of a child of the adopter. The adopting parent stands in the relation of the natural parent to the adopted child, but I do not think that the adopting parent would have complete control of such minor child free from the supervision of any board of trustees or any home, or free from the supervision of a juvenile judge, when the child so adopted was adopted respectively from a children's home or where the child was the ward of such juvenile court.

Section 1643 of the juvenile court act provides:

"When a child under the age of eighteen years comes into the custody of the court under the provisions of this chapter, such child shall continue for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection, a ward of the court, until he or she attain the age of twenty-one years. The power of the court over such child shall continue until the child attains such age."

In the case of Children's Home v. Fetter, 90 O. S. 110, habeas corpus was brought by a parent against the children's home for the custody of a child which had been committed o the children's home by the juvenile court of Marion county. Newman, J., at page 127, in dismissing the application for the writ, uses the following language:

> "The legislature in the exercise of its police power, in order to protect children and to remove them from evil influences, has established the juvenile court. When proceedings are regularly had in that court and there is a finding that the child is delinquent it becomes a ward of the court. In the interest of the child and in the interest of society, the court can commit its custody to strangers or to an institution for its moral training and education over the objection of the parents. The presumption is that the juvenile court of Marion county, when it committed Howard Fetter to the children's home, was acting with reference to the best interests and welfare of the child. It is in the power of that court, if it deem it advisable, to restore the child to its parents. But there is no authority for any other court to interfere, in an independent proceeding, with the custody of the child thus entrusted by law to the jurisdiction of the juvenile court."

Section 3093 G. C. provides:

> "All inmates of such home who by reason of abandonment, neglect, or dependence have been admitted, or who have been by the parent or guardian voluntarily surrendered to the trustees, shall be under the sole and exclusive guardianship and control of the trustees during their stay in such home, until they are eighteen years of age, and if such child is placed out or adopted such control shall continue until such child becomes of lawful age. A child shall be deemed abandoned, if at any time the parents or persons having control thereof are in arrears for his or her board for a period of one year or more. Payment of such board thereafter shall not reinstate such parents or persons in the control or guardianship of such child, unless such board shall deem it wise."

From this section it appears that all inmates of such home admitted as herein provided shall be under the sole and exclusive guardianship and control of the trustees during their stay in such home until they are eighteen years of age and if such child is placed out or adopted, such control shall continue until such child becomes of lawful age. This section, as now found in the Code, was enacted as found in 103 O. L. p. 864, passed April 28, 1913. Section 1643, above quoted, was passed by the same general assembly and is found in 103 O. L. 864, and passed April 28, 1913. Section 8030, above quoted, is found in 88 O. L. 556, and was passed May 4, 1891. Since under the provisions of the adoption statute the adopted parent stands in the same relation as the natural parent, I can see no conflict between the provisions of such statute and the provisions of either the children's home or the juvenile court statutes. An adopted child coming into the jurisdiction of the juvenile court would be dealt with as provided by law and there would only be such interference with the rights of the adopted parents as would necessarily arise with the rights of a natural parent under the same circumstances. The fact that the adoption was effected subsequent to the acquirement of jurisdiction by the juvenile court would make no difference. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that the juvenile statute was passed long after the adoption statute and must have been in contemplation thereof, and this statute makes the child coming into the custody of the juvenile court a ward of such court for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection until such child attain the age of twenty-one years.

As far as the case of a child being adopted from a children's home is concerned, section 3093 in plain terms states that the child so adopted shall remain under the control of the children's home authorities until such child becomes of lawful age and when a child is adopted out of the children's home it must necessarily be adopted with full concurrence of such provisions of the law.

In the case of Purinton v. Jamrock, 195 Mass., 187, the last paragraph of the syllabus reads as follows:

> "Where a child in the custody of the state board of charity is adopted legally by persons who are found suitable to have custody of him and charge of his education, the child under the provisions of St. 1903, c. 334, sec. 3, still remains in the custody of the state board of charity until he attains the age of twenty-one years or that board shall discharge him from its custody when the object of his commitment has been accomplished."

This is the only case that I find which directly bears upon this question and I think it clearly states the law.

Answering your questions specifically, then, it is my opinion that a board of trustees of a children's home retains the guardianship and control of a child adopted out of said home for the purpose of securing the well being and progress of such child when such child is adopted out of such institution. It is further my opinion that when a child, a ward of the juvenile court, is adopted, such adoption is in contemplation of the provision of statute which gives power to such court over such child until he attains the age of twenty-one years.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SUSPENDED SCHOOL DISTRICT—WHEN SAME MAY BE RE-ESTABLISHED UPON MOTION OF BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHEN COMPELLED TO RE-ESTABLISH SAME.

At any time the enrollment of a suspended school district shows twelve or more pupils of lawful school age, the board of education may, upon its own motion, re-establish such school.

When a petition, asking for the re-establishment of a school, and which is signed by a majority of the voters of a suspended school district, is presented to a board of education in which school district the enrollment shows twelve or more pupils, the board of education must re-establish such school.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 31, 1917.

HON. E. E. LINDSAY, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 7, 1917, wherein you ask my opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "The latter part of section 7730 of the General Code, as amended March 21st last, contains the provision 'that any suspended school as herein provided, shall be re-established by the suspending authority upon its own initiative, or upon a petition asking for re-establishment, signed by a majority of the voters of the suspended district, at any time the school enrollment of the said suspended district shows twelve or more pupils of lawful age.'

"The first paragraph of this section provides generally for the suspension of any or all schools in a village or rural school district. Then follows a provision requiring the suspension of schools when the average daily attendance for the preceding year has been below ten.

"There is no question in my mind but what the proviso above quoted refers to schools that have been suspended by reason of the daily attendance being below ten, but there is some question whether it refers to schools having been suspended for other reasons under the provision of the first paragraph of said section.

"One of our rural boards of education suspended three schools last year and transported the pupils in each district to a centralized school, not because of the attendance in such schools having been below ten, but because of better and cheaper accommodations at the centralized school.

"Petitions have now been filed with the board under the provisions of this section, first above quoted, by majority of the voters of such suspended districts, asking to have such schools re-established. The board does not want to grant petition unless it is compelled to by reason of said proviso.

"I would like to have your opinion as soon as possible as to whether this provision applies to schools suspended for reasons other than the average daily attendance having been below ten."

I am advised, in response to my inquiry for further information, that there has been no vote in said school district on the question of centralization and that the centralized schools to which you refer is, in effect, a consolidated school.

Your inquiry involves a consideration of section 7730 G. C., which section was amended in 107 O. L., p. 638, and reads as follows:

"The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district. Upon such suspension the board in such village school district may provide, and in such rural school district shall provide, for the conveyance of all pupils of legal school age, who reside in the territory of the suspended district, to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district. When the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below ten, such school shall be suspended and all of the pupils of legal school age, who reside in the territory of the suspended district, transferred to another school or schools when the county board of education so directs the board of education of the village or rural district in which said school is located. Notice of such suspension shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural district by the board of education of such village or rural district within ten days after the county board of education directs the suspension of such school; provided, however, that any suspended school as herein provided, shall be re-established by the suspending authority upon its own initiative, or upon a petition asking for re-establishment, signed by a majority of the voters of the suspended district, at any time the school enrollment of the said suspended district shows twelve or more pupils of lawful school age. Any school district that is entitled to state aid for salary of teacher according to provisions of sections 7595 and 7595-1, when such schools are not consolidated, or centralized, shall receive the same amount of state aid after such schools are consolidated or partly consolidated, but to be applied to the cost of transportation of pupils to consolidated school, or schools, or for salary of teachers and the transportation of pupils."

Prior to the time said section was last amended, or as it was amended in 106 O. L. 396, it read as follows:

> "The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district. Upon such suspension the board in such village school district may provide, and in such rural school district shall provide, for the conveyance of pupils attending such schools, to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district. When the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below ten, such school shall be suspended and the pupils transferred to another school or schools when directed to do so by the county board of education. No school of any rural district shall be suspended until ten days' notice has been given by the board of education of such district. Such notice shall be posted in five conspicuous places within such village or rural school district; provided, however, that any suspended school as herein provided, may bet re-established by the suspending authority upon its own initiative, or upon a petition asking for re-establishment, signed by a majority of the voters of the suspended district, at any time the schoo' enrollment of the said suspended district shows twelve or more pupils of lawful school age."

It is noticeable that there is little change in the said section outside of the last sentence which was added to the amendment in 107 O. L., and which is entirely new matter, but apart from said last sentence the changes are in phraseology only, with the exception of the word "may" as used in the phrase "may be re-established" is changed to the word "shall," but, as will be hereinafter noted, that the change of said word does not give the section a different effect. Said section, as it was amended in 106 O. L. 396, was construed in the case of the State of Ohio ex rel John Meyers, v. The Board of Education of the rural school district of Spencer township, Lucas county, 95 O. S. ——, decided February 13, 1917, in which case it was an admitted fact that the enumeration showed more than twelve pupils in such suspended district, and that the schools were suspended not because there was not sufficient pupils to permit a school, but because the board determined to transport what pupils there were to the consolidated school. Johnson, J., in delivering the opinion of said court, used the following language:

> "The controversy in this case concerns the construction of the proviso contained in section 7730 General Code, which was passed May 27, 1915, (105 O. L. 398). Pertinent parts of the section are as follows:
> " 'The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district. * * * When the average daily attendance of any school for the preceding year has been below ten, such school shall be suspended and the pupils transferred to another school or schools when directed to do so by the county board of education. No school of any rural district shall be suspended until ten days' notice has been given by the board of education of such district, * * * provided, however, that any suspended school as herein provided, may be re-established by the suspending authority upon its own initiative, or upon a petition asking for re-establishment, signed by a majority of the voters of the suspended district, at any time the school enrollment of the said suspended district shows twelve or more pupils of lawful age.'
> "The relator contends that upon the filing of the petition referred to by a majority of the voters of the suspended district the provision for re-establishment is mandatory, and that the word 'may' should be construed to mean 'shall.'

"The school code now in operation was passed February 5, 1914, (104 O. L. 103). The sections of the General Code which are therein amended do not appear in the act in their consecutive order, but sections 4726 and 7730, are found on the same page. By the provisions of section 4726, it is enacted that a rural board of education may submit the question of centralization and upon the petition of not less than one-fourth of the qualified electors of such rural district, or upon the order of the county board of education, must submit such question to the vote of the qualified electors of such rural district, at the general election or special election called for that purpose.

"It is further provided in that section that if the proposition fails, the question shall not be again submitted to the electors of such rural district for a period of two years, except upon the petition of at least forty per cent of the electors of such district.

"Section 7730, as there amended, did not contain the proviso involved in this case. At the succeeding session of the legislature the proviso was added to that section.

"It will be observed that the only provisions for centralization are found in section 4726, in which the method by which centralization can be had is specifically described. By those provisions the matter of centralization is required to be left to a vote of the people.

"By the provisions of section 7730, the board of education of any rural or village district may suspend any or all schools in the district and in a village district may provide, and in rural districts shall provide, for the conveyance of pupils attending such schools to a public school in the rural or village district or to a public school in another district.

"It will be observed that in this section there is no reference to centralization nor to the abolition entirely of the suspended district. The use of the term 'suspension' necessarily implies the possibility of a revivor or re-establishment, and the terms of the proviso indicate, of course, that the legislature contemplated the reopening of any 'suspended school.'

"Now, consider the terms of the proviso. It enacts that any suspended school 'may be re-established by the suspending authority upon its own initiative.' Here is an explicit and plenary grant of power to the board of education of the rural or village district to re-establish the school. The grant could not be more comprehensive. Then follows the language 'or upon a petition asking for a re-establishment, signed by a majority of the voters of the suspended district at any time the school enrollment shows twelve or more pupils of lawful school age.'

"There are some well settled rules of construction which we think must be applied to the proviso in question and which control. It must be construed as a whole and given such interpretation as will give effect to every word and clause in it. No part should be treated as superfluous unless that is manifestly required, and the court should avoid that construction which renders a provision meaningless or inoperative. * * *

"The first clause confers upon the board absolute authority to re-establish the suspended school on its own initiative. * * * By this last clause, it is provided that the district may be re-established upon a petition signed by a majority of the voters of the district, but under the first clause the same board might re-establish the school on the petition of a small minority, or upon no petition at all. We cannot conceive, and we find nothing in the language to indicate, that the legislature enacted the additional clause without any purpose whatever in view.

"We think it clear that the legislature intended that the word 'may' when applied to the last clause in the proviso should be held to be mandatory. It intended to secure to the residents of the rural and village school district, which has 12 or more pupils of lawful school age, the privileges of the residents of other such districts which have not been centralized by the affirmative vote of the people pursuant to the statute hereinbefore referred to."

But the legislature, as noted above, when it amended said section 7730, as found in 107 O. L. 638, changed the word "may" to "shall" so that whatever might have been argued in reference thereto prior to the time of the amendment would fall following said amendment and also following the decision of the supreme court in the case above noted.

I must therefore advise you that at any time the school enrollment of a suspended district shows twelve or more pupils of lawful school age, the board of education may, upon its own initiative, re-establish such school and upon a petition signed by a majority of the voters of such suspended district such board shall re-establish such school, whether such suspension was caused on account of lack of attendance or from any other reason.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE ARMORY BOARD—HOW ARCHITECTS SHOULD BE PAID FOR SERVICES UPON AKRON ARMORY.

The state armory board having paid to contractor from $50,000.00 contributed by citizens of Akron such an amount as not to leave sufficient in said fund to pay balance due architects, said balance due said architects should be paid from appropriation made for state armory.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 31, 1917.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me bill presented by Messrs. Harpster & Bliss, architects of Akron, which bill is presented to the Ohio state armory board for balance due for architectural services, in the sum of $250.00, on the armory at Akron. Said bill is as follows:

"To architectural services on armory at Akron as per original contract, 5% of $50,000.00 ..... $2,500 00

CREDIT

"Feb. 17, 1916, payment on account	$2,000 00
"Aug. 26, 1916, payment on account	250 00
		2,250 00
Balance due on contract		$250 00"

And you inquire whether or not the account can be paid.

Together with the bill submitted, you also submitted a letter from Messrs. Harpster & Bliss under date of July 11, 1917, which is to the following effect:

"We desire to submit to you a statement in regard to a contract we had with the state armory board for acting as associate architects in the preparation of plans and specifications for the Akron armory. The Akron armory as you may know was erected from funds provided by the state and a donation to the state of $50,000 by the citizens of Akron, Ohio. Our contract with the armory board was made January 14, 1913, when the board passed a resolution as follows:

" 'RESOLVED: That if the board proceeds within one year to build a state armory at Akron, Ohio, under the plans this day submitted by architects Harpster & Bliss and architect Best or similar plans, then architects Harpster & Bliss of Akron are hereby commissioned as associate architects to act under the armory board's directions and with its architects in the construction of said armory on the further condition that their compensation be paid entirely from funds donated towards said armory and that their compensation for plans, specifications and superintendence does not exceed 5 per centum of the sum so donated.'

"The building project was held up for 2 years or more and at a meeting of the armory board on June 12, 1915 our contract with the board was renewed as a resolution passed on that date by the board will show, which is as follows:

"AKRON ARMORY: The board considered all the details of the tentative plans and preliminary sketches made by the board's architect and Mr. Harpster of Akron, and thereafter it was unanimously

" 'RESOLVED: That the board's architect and Harpster & Bliss, architects of Akron, Ohio, proceed to complete plans and specifications for the Akron armory, in consonance with instructions received by them today from the board; said completed plans and specifications to be reported to the board as soon as practicable.

" 'RESOLVED FURTHER: That the commission heretofore granted to architects, Harpster & Bliss, to work in connection with the board's architect, on the Akron armory, be and hereby is renewed on the basis heretofore granted for the work that may be hereafter carried on in connection with an armory at Akron, to be built from joint funds as now proposed, namely: the $50,000.00 contribution from citizens of Akron and such state funds as may be provided by law.'

"The arrangement agreed upon between the board's architect, Colonel Best, and ourselves, and which was consequently followed, that the plans, specifications and details were prepared by our firm and the matter of superintendence was left to Colonel Best. This arrangement was carried out until Colonel Best was called to the front and the armory board requested our firm to take full charge in the matter of superintendence until Colonel Best would return or until his successor would be appointed. For a period of two and one-half months from July to September and for which we rendered a bill to the armory board for two and one-half months' service amounting to $250.00 which the armory board at their last meeting approved and allowed for payment. They had previously paid us on account as follows: leaving a balance of $250.00 on the original contract price.

" 'February 17, 1916---------- $2,000.00
" 'August 26, 1916---------- 250.00

"At the last meeting of the armory board, resolutions were passed as follows:

" 'AKRON ARMORY: That the bill of Harpster & Bliss, architects, for services as superintendents of Akron armory for two and one-half months July, August and September, 1916, amounting to $250.00 be allowed for payment.

" 'RESOLVED FURTHER: That the bill of Harpster & Bliss for $250.00 for balance claimed by them as associate architects as per original contract, be not allowed for payment because same could only be paid from donated funds for construction of said armory and balance of donated fund for said purposes is at present insufficient.'

"As you will note from the last resolution, the balance of our original contract was not allowed on account of their having exhausted the donated fund. Such a situation is of course entirely unfair to us as we had no charge in any way of dispensing of the moneys in the board's hands and it was not our fault that out of the donated fund they made payments to the general contractor which should have properly come out of the state funds and left sufficient to pay the balance due us.

"We will appreciate your kindness most cordially if you will take this matter up with the attorney-general's office and see if there is not some way by which we can be paid the balance due us on our contract."

It would appear from the letter of Messrs. Harpster & Bliss that they were to be paid five per cent. of the amount contributed by the citizens of Akron, to wit, the sum of $50,000.00, five per cent. of which would of course amount to $2,500.00, upon which they have received $2,250.00; that upon the presentation of the bill for the balance of $250.00 it was not allowed by the state armory board "because same could only be paid from donated funds for construction of said armory and balance of donated fund for said purposes is at present insufficient."

It appears that payment for the armory at Akron was from two sources—the state of Ohio and $50,000.00 contributed by the citizens of Akron, and from what is said in the letter of Messrs. Harpster & Bliss it would appear that the estimates when drawn were drawn out of the amount contributed by the citizens of Akron to such an extent as to exhaust the fund without taking care of the balance due Messrs. Harpster & Bliss, whereas it would have been equitable not to have drawn upon the entire sum contributed by the citizens of Akron, thus exhausting the fund, but rather the sum of $250.00 should have been left in said fund and the amount contributed by the state should have been drawn upon.

If I am correctly informed the $50,000.00 contributed by the citizens of Akron was never paid into the state treasury but was held as a trust fund and that consequently, of course, said sum of $50,000.00 was not commingled with the amount appropriated by the state.

However, it is only fair to consider as done that which ought to have been done and if through inadvertance the entire sum contributed by the citizens of Akron was distributed without taking care of the balance of $250.00 due Messrs. Harpster & Bliss under their contract, it would seem to me that it would only be fair and equitable to pay said $250.00 from the balance of the appropriation on hand for the purpose of the Akron armory. In so doing the state would in no way suffer any loss, but would have carried out the fair agreement of the state armory board.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROBATION OFFICER—SALARY—FROM WHAT FUND PAYABLE.

The proper fund mentioned in section 1671 General Code is considered to be a juvenile court fund from which all the expenses of the juvenile court is paid and such expenses include the salary of the probation officer.

Section 1682 G. C. makes provision for the payment of all necessary incidental expenses of the juvenile court and its officers and the probation officer is considered an officer of such court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 1, 1917.

HON. J. ARTER WEAVER, Probate Judge, Bryan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to reply to your letter of June 15, 1917, and give you my opinion on the question therein propounded.

> "I would like to appoint a probation officer in Williams county. There has never been any in this county. Would like to know if there has to be special fund set aside by the county commissioner before any appointment can be made or if said officer is paid out of the general fund.
> "As I understand the law, the probate judge can appoint and fix the salary of a probation officer, said officer to serve during the pleasure of the judge. What section of the General Code governs his expenses?"

> "The judge designated to exercise jurisdiction may appoint one or more discreet persons of good moral character, one or more of whom may be a woman, to serve as probation officers, during the pleasure of the judge. One of such officers shall be known as chief probation officer and there may be one or more assistants. Such chief probation officer and assistants shall receive such compensation as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of the appointment, but the compensation of the chief probation officer shall not exceed three thousand dollars per annum and that of the assistants shall not exceed fifteen hundred dollars per annum. The judge may appoint other probation officers, with or without compensation, but the entire compensation of all probation officers in any county shall not exceed the sum of forty dollars for each full thousand inhabitants of the county at the last preceding federal census. The compensation of the probation officers shall be paid by the county treasurer from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall be issued upon itemized vouchers sworn to by the probation officers and certified to by the judge of the juvenile court. The county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the treasury and the treasurer shall honor and pay the same, for all salaries, compensation and expenses provided for in this act, in the order in which proper vouchers therefor are presented to him."

By the provisions of the section above quoted, you will note the judge of the juvenile court may appoint a probation officer and that said appointment shall hold during the pleasure of the judge; that the compensation for such probation officer is designated by the probate judge at the time of his appointment and that said compensation shall be paid by the county treasurer upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall be issued upon itemized vouchers sworn to by such probation officer and certified to by the judge of the juvenile court.

It is provided in the last sentence of said section above quoted that the expenses provided for in this act shall be paid by the county treasurer upon the warrant of the county auditor and I shall speak of said expenses further in this opinion.

General Code section 1671 provides that the county commissioner shall transfer to the proper fund, from any fund or funds of the county, such sums as may be necessary to pay the probation officers and said section also makes provision for the expenses of the court.

There is no provision of law which creates a juvenile court fund, as such, but I am advised that in practice it has been the custom for the judge of the juvenile court to make requisition each year to the board of county commissioners for a sum sufficient to pay the expenses of such court for the ensuing year, and that said sum is placed in a separate fund usually denominated "the juvenile court fund," which last mentioned fund has been understood to be the "proper fund," as mentioned in said section 1671 G. C.

General Code section 1683 provides that all fees and costs in juvenile cases, together with such sums as are necessary for the incidental expenses of the court and its officers, shall be paid from the county treasury upon itemized vouchers certified to by the judge of the juvenile court, and section 1683 provides that the juvenile court chapter of our laws shall be liberally construed to the end that proper guardianship may be provided for the children in order that they may be educated and cared for, as far as practicable, in such manner as best subserves their moral and physicial welfare. The expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of said sections or to properly run the juvenile court would include not only the fees and costs which are taxed in the several cases, but such necessary incidental expenses of the court or its officers, and the probation officer being an officer of the juvenile court, his necessary expenses would be included in the above provision.

It is not necessary that the county commissioners pass upon the compensation and expense accounts of the probation officers, for it is provided in section 2570 that where the amount due is fixed by an officer or tribunal authorized by law, the commissioners need not pass upon the same. In this case the amount of compensation is fixed by the juvenile judge and the expense accounts are sworn to by the probation officer and certified to by the juvenile judge, and a warrant therefor is issued by the county auditor and paid by the county treasurer without any action on the part of the board of commissioners. To the same effect is the provision of General Code section 2460, which authorizes payment otherwise than upon the allowance of the county commissioners, when the amount is upon the proper certificate of the tribunal allowing the claim. In this instance the tribunal is the juvenile judge and the claims are the compensation and the necessary expenses of an officer of the juvenile court.

It is also proper for me to mention that this department held in opinion No. 93, a copy of which is enclosed to you herewith, that the probation officer might be appointed as one of the assistants to the juvenile judge not under civil service.

Answering your several questions, then, in the order in which they are contained in your inquiry, I advise you, first, that a special fund is set aside by the board of county commissioners and if the board of county commissioners should refuse to appropriate or set same aside, action in mandamus will lie the same as for any other appropriation, from which fund the expenses of the juvenile court is paid, and in practice the said fund is usually denominated the juvenile court fund and is understood to be the proper fund as mentioned in section 1671 G. C.; and that it is not necessary to wait until such fund is created but said appointment can be made at once.

Second. Section 1682 of the General Code makes provision for the expenses of the probation officer, he being considered an officer of the juvenile court.

I am also enclosing herewith copy of house bill No. 19, found in 107 O. L., page 19, as per your request.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS—POWER TO APPOINT EXAMINERS TO EXAMINE APPLICANT—PRIOR TO 1917—POWER TO CHARGE EXPENSE OF EXAMINATION TO APPLICANT—PRIOR TO AND AFTER 1915.

1. Prior to 1917, the superintendent of banks, "commissioner" under the blue sky act, had no implied power to appoint examiners to make examinations of applicants but was limited to persons appointed as "clerks" under said act, or possibly, as "examiners" under the banking laws; and in either event such appointments, if special, and the compensation of appointees, required the approval of the governor. Firms or corporations could not legally be so appointed.

2. Prior to 1915 there was no authority of law for charging to the applicant any part of the expense of the examination under said act.

3. Under the amendment of 1915, part or all of the compensation of a special clerk or examiner, appointed to make a particular examination, might be charged to the applicant and no part of the salary of a regular clerk or employe could be so charged.

4. The state has no pecuniary claim on account of the violation of any of the above principles.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 1, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date requested my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Under the provisions of the blue sky laws prior to their amendment in 1917, by what method might the superintendent of banks cause investigations and examinations to be made of concerns seeking license to sell securities or lands in the state of Ohio?
> "What I am desirous of knowing specifically is whether he was bound under the banking laws to assign the regular examiners authorized under said laws to be appointed, or whether he had the right to appoint or assign persons or firms other than such examiners to make said investigations under the blue sky laws.
> "2. Prior to the amendment of said blue sky laws in 1915, was there any authority to collect the expenses of such examinations from the concerns examined?
> "3. Under said amendments of 1915, what should the expense collected from the persons or firms investigated include—salary and traveling expenses both, or simply traveling expenses?"

The blue sky act was passed in 1913 (103 O. L., 743), amended in 1914 (104 O. L., 119), in 1915 (106 O. L., 360), and has been recently amended again. Your questions however, relate to the law as it existed from time to time prior to the most recent of these amendments in 1917.

As to your first question the original act provided in section 16 thereof (section 6373-16) as follows:

> "Said 'commissioner' shall have power to make such examination of the issuer of the securities or the owner of the property, named in the two preceding sections, and of such securities or property, as he may deem advisable * * *."

As further reflecting upon the scope of the meaning of this clause as it occurs in the original act, the following other provisions of that act may be noted:

"Before such license shall be issued to any dealer, there shall be filed by him with the superintendent of banks, herein termed the 'commissioner' * *. *." (Section 3 of the original act, section 6373-3 G. C.)

This provision is the only one which determines the identity of the "commissioner," to whom repeated reference is made in the act, until we get to the last section thereof, which is designated as section 6373-24, wherein this designation is abandoned and the superintendent of banks is referred to by his official title, as follows:

"The superintendent of banks is hereby authorized to appoint such clerks as are actually necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and to fix their salaries; such appointments and salaries to be subject to the approval of the governor. All fees received hereunder by the 'commissioner' shall be deposited by him with the treasurer of state * * *. The sum of seven thousand five hundred dollars is hereby appropriated * * * for the payment of the salaries and expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of this act."

I know of no other provision of the original act of 1913 which in any way sheds light upon the answer to your first question.

All of these sections were amended in 104 O. L., 119. The amendment of section 6373-3 does not affect that part of it which has been quoted. It still remained the only section in the law which made the superintendent of banks the "commissioner" for the purpose of the act.

Section 16 was amended in respects also immaterial to your present inquiry. It still gave to the "commissioner" the same power of examination which was given by the same section in the original act.

Section 24 was amended in respects in some degree material in that it expressly authorized the appointment of an assistant commissioner and the temporary provision for the appropriation was properly dropped. As amended, the section provided as follows:

"The superintendent of banks, as 'commissioner' under this act, is hereby authorized to appoint an assistant commissioner and such clerks as are actually necessary to carry out the provisions of this act and to fix their salaries; such appointments and salaries to be subject to the approval of the governor. Subject to the supervision of such 'commissioner,' the assistant commissioner may perform all the duties imposed upon, and have all the powers granted to such 'commissioner' under the provisions of this act. All fees received hereunder by the 'commissioner' shall be deposited by him with the treasurer of state upon the warrant of the auditor of state."

The 16th section was the only one of those under consideration which was amended in 1915 and the amendments then made were material so far as some of your questions at least are concerned. As so amended the section provided as follows:

"Said commissioner shall have power to make such examination of the issuer of the securities, or of the property named in the two next preceding sections, at any time, both before and after the issuance of the certificate hereinafter provided for, as he may deem advisable. When in the discretion of the commissioner all or any part of the expense of such examination should be paid by the applicant for such certificate, such applicant shall deposit with the commissioner such sum of money as the commissioner may order, out of which said sum the commissioner shall pay that portion of the expense of such examination as the commissioner determines said applicant should pay. The commissioner shall render to the applicant an itemized statement of the expenditure and a proper record thereof shall be kept. * *"

As I have stated, there was no provision prior to 1917 in the blue sky law expressly authorizing the commissioner therein named, or the superintendent of banks, as such, to appoint examiners. He was authorized to appoint clerks and later an assistant commissioner, both subject to the approval of the governor. But any power that he had to appoint examiners would have to arise in one of three possible ways:

"(1.) By express authority of the law defining the powers of the superintendent of banks, as such.

"(2.) By implication from express grant of the power to examine vested in him as commissioner under the blue sky law.

"(3.) As reflecting only upon the power to pay compensation of examiners and not upon the power of examiners or the power of the head of the department to delegate any of his authority, the provisions of any appropriation bill that may have been passed and may have authorized the employment of examiners in the blue sky department might be consulted."

The first problem is to decide whether the power to appoint examiners and delegate dutie to them can or must be implied from the blue sky law itself, in the absence, which has been noted, of any express authority in that law to do so.

When a grant of power is in question, the rule of strict construction, which is stated in the maxim that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of all others, applies generally, subject, perhaps, to the exception that where a duty is imposed by law upon an officer and the nature of that duty is such that he cannot be reasonably expected to discharge the duty in person, he has enough implied power to appoint clerks and assistants to justify the exercise of such a power of appointment if the necessary funds to pay the compensation of such assistants are appropriated. Many of the officers of the state are employing assistants under no other authority than this. Such assistants have no power of their own, nor in law does the head of the department delegate any powers to them. In contemplation of law their acts are those of the head of the department and he is answerable for them. In the first instance, he would have to pay their compensation, but the making of an appropriation for such compensation absolves him from that duty.

However, if there is an implied power to appoint assistants, when the very nature of the duties imposed upon the head of the department is such as to make it impossible for one person to attend to all the details of the work, such power arises only when it is necessary to bring it into being in order to supply what would otherwise be a deficiency. That is to say, the general assembly, by imposing duties of that character, will be deemed to have intended that he should have enough power to discharge those duties.

Where statutes exist expressly granting such power, such statutes are the source thereof and the power is no longer an implied but an express one. In the case now under consideration, the superintendent of banks had some power to appoint examiners and the question arises as to whether or not the general assembly intended that examiners who should do the work devolving upon the department under the blue sky law should be those whom the superintendent of banks was authorized to appoint in his general capacity.

Section 712 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., 61-384, provided as follows: (It not being necessary for the present purposes to determine which of these two sections controls, as they are identical for present purposes.)

> "With the approval of the governor the superintendent of banks may employ from time to time the necessary clerks and examiners to assist in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by law. With such approval he may remove any such clerks or examiners."

This language is broad enough to authorize the employment of examiners to assist the superintendent of banks in the discharge of any duty imposed upon him by law, as well as the duty of making examinations under the banking law. It is true that as originally enacted, and even as amended in 1913, the general assembly probably did not contemplate the employment of examiners under this section otherwise than for the purpose of examining banks. This is particularly true in that such examiners were at all times prohibited by section 717 of the General Code from being "interested directly or indirectly in any national banking association or in any bank or other corporation or association under their supervision" or from being "engaged in the business of banking" (103 O. L. 384). Of course, even this language is broad enough to include corporations other than banks, if a very liberal interpretation be given to it. However, I am inclined to the opinion, so far as official qualification is concerned, that that was a matter to be determined with respect to the examiners in the department of banks by their several relations with banking institutions and such other institutions as might be under the supervision of the department otherwise than by virtue of the blue sky law.

In spite of this conclusion, however, it may be that it would be lawful for the superintendent of banks to detail one of the examiners appointed by him under section 712 of the General Code to perform any service devolving upon the department by virtue of the blue sky law. At any rate, the "clerks" mentioned in section 24 of the blue sky law might have been so employed. Therefore no necessity for any implied power of appointment exists under the blue sky law. Inasmuch as implied power comes into existence only through necessity, and inasmuch as there is an express grant of power in section 24 of the blue sky law to appoint certain kinds of assistants, I arrive at the conclusion that no implied power to appoint examiners devolves upon the department of banks as commissioner under the blue sky law.

In interpreting your question, then, and especially that part of which where you refer to "the regular examiners" as referring to examiners or clerks appointed with the approval of the governor, your first question would have to be answered by stating that the first alternative, as framed by you, is a correct statement of the law. That is to say, any examination service performed by the superintendent of banks as "commissioner" under the blue sky law would, prior to the amendment of 1917, if not performed by the superintendent himself or by the assistant commissioner or by some one employed as a clerk under section 6373-24, have to be performed by one appointed as examiner under section 712 of the General Code, subject to the approval of the governor, as therein provided. Inasmuch, however, as section 6373-24 also requires the approval of the governor, it would seem to follow that if the governor should approve a particular appointment, though there might be some informality or defect in respect of the designation of the position, either section would be satisfied and the appointment would be valid. There is no limit under either section as to the number of clerks or examiners who might be appointed by the superintendent of banks in either capacity. In this sense I do not understand that there was any such thing as a "regular examiner." Examiners might be appointed from time to time and discharged from time to time, subject to such civil service regulations as might have been applicable. I find no authority, however, in any of the sections for the appointment or assignment of "firms" to conduct examinations for the superintendent of banks in any capacity.

These things being true, I have not investigated the appropriation bills of the years covering the period of time to which your question relates as any appropriations therein made would be referable to and therefore controlled by the general provisions of law as I have referred to them.

I have also ignored the provisions of section 742-1 et seq. of the banking laws, which authorize the superintendent of banks, as a liquidating officer, to appoint other examiners and special deputy superintendents. These provisions manifestly have nothing to do with the current operations of the banking department nor, of course, with its activities under the blue sky law.

My answer to your first question is, therefore, that under the laws applicable to the subject the superintendent of banks was without authority, prior to the amendments of 1917, to appoint any person to perform services of the kind referred to by you otherwise than with the approval of the governor.

Your second question relates to the condition of the law prior to the amendments of 1915, which, as has been stated, changed the 16th section of the blue sky law, but neither of the other two sections referred to. The changes made in 1915 expressly authorized the collection of certain examination expenses from the concerns examined. Prior to that time there was no authority to do this, and this statement constitutes an answer to your second question.

The provisions of the 1915 amendment do not furnish a very clear and satisfactory answer to your third question. The thing that may be charged by the commissioner to the applicant thereunder is not the expense of an examiner, but the "expense of the examination," yet the commissioner is required to render to the applicant an "itemized statement of the expenditure" and to keep a proper record thereof. The whole provision contains intimations in both directions. I believe, however, that the section may fairly be interpreted in the light of the provisions of section 720 and 735 of the group of sections of the General Code applicable to the superintendent of banks generally. These provide for special examinations requested by a banking association. The first of these sections provides generally that the "expenses thereof shall be paid by the corporation making the request." Section 735 provides as follows:

> "When an examination is made at the special instance and request of such corporation * * * the expense incurred and the services performed shall be paid by the one examined, and the charges collected shall be paid into the state treasury by the superintendent of banks to the credit of the banking fund."

The legislature will be deemed, I think, to have had this scheme in mind in framing the 1915 amendment to the blue sky law. The effect of the section which has just been quoted is the primary meaning of the general phrase "expenses of such examination" as used in section 6373-16. That is to say, this phrase includes something more than the expense of the examiner and really refers to all the cost to the state of making the examination. This would naturally include the cost of the personal services involved.

There is a principle established with reference to the apportionment of the cost and expense of a local improvement by assessment which, I think, comes in here. That principle is that where the services of a public employe receiving a salary from the public treasury are used in connection with the specific improvement, no part of such salary can be included in the assessment; but where a person is specially employed for services in connection with an improvement, his compensation may be included therein.

Longworth v. Cincinnati, 34 O. S. 101;
Spangler v. Cleveland, 35 O. S. 469.

These cases were decided on general principles applicable to the present case.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that where, with the approval of the governor, the superintendent of banks especially appointed a "clerk" or "examiner" to act under the sections under consideration, as to a particular examination, his compensation, as likewise fixed, might lawfully have been included in the amount required to be paid by the applicant. But where persons regularly employed on salaries payable from the state treasury were used to make such examinations, no part of such salaries could lawfully be so included.

Your questions suggest that it may have been the practice of the superintendent of banks, acting under the blue sky law, prior to the amendment of 1915, to collect expenses of examinations from the concerns examined. Such practice, while not authorized, as I have said, would not in any way affect the validity of the examinations made nor of the determinations of the commissioner in accordance therewith. Nor would it subject the superintendent of banks to any liability running to the state. So long as the commissioner and the applicant might agree upon such a plan the state would have no cause for complaint, on pecuniary grounds at least, however dangerous and reprehensible the practice might seem to be on other grounds.

Your question also suggests the possibility that prior to the amendment of 1917 persons and firms, other than those who, as I have held could lawfully be appointed as examiners, were used by the superintendent of banks, acting as commissioner under the blue sky law, for such services. If any money was drawn from the state treasury to pay such person, I doubt the liability of such person to refund the money so drawn; because the only defect in the procedure in appointment would be that the approval of the governor was not secured. If the person in question actually acted as examiner the services would have been rendered and, if regarded as an officer, his status would have been that of a de facto officer; if regarded as an employe, it might be argued that his whole employment was a nullity because of the lack of the jurisdictional requisite of approval by the governor. On the whole, however, I do not think there could be any recovery of such moneys from persons who actually rendered the services and acted as examiner, even though the approval of the governor for his appointment was not obtained.

Strictly, there might be more question about the employment of a firm, as there was no authority whatsoever for such a practice. However, where the services have been rendered and the firms have been paid out of the state treasury, I would advise against a finding for recovery unless there has been a gross abuse of official authority.

In case any such authorized appointment or employment was made, and compensation therefor was paid under a voluntary arrangement between applicant and the commissioner by the former, then the statement above made respecting the lack of any complaint on the part of the state on pecuniary grounds would hold good.

I express no opinion herein, however, as to any other possible aspects of such arrangement entered into before the amendment of section 6373-16 legalizing the practice.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BONDS—PROPER SECURITY FOR PRIVATE TRUST FUNDS.

Federal farm loan bonds are a proper security for the investment of all private trust funds, unless the instrument creating the trust by its terms forbids such investment.

Whenever, under the laws of Ohio, it is necessary for a trustee to obtain, from the court having jurisdiction over the trust, authority to invest trust funds, the court is warranted in authorizing such investment to be made in federal farm loan bonds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 1, 1917.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR GOVERNOR:—On July 17, 1917, I received the following request from you, for my opinion:

> "On inquiry from the Hon. W. G. McAdoo, secretary of the treasury of the United States, permit me to request of your office a ruling as to the character of federal farm loan bonds from the standpoint of investment therein of private trust funds.
> "Do these bonds come within the purview of section 11214 of the General Code of Ohio, which provides for the investment of private trust funds in 'certificates of indebtedness, of the United States?'
> "Certain amendatory legislation was enacted by the 82nd Ohio general assembly (H. B. 463 and S. B. No. 183) to facilitate investment in farm loan bonds by banks and trust and insurance companies, but no reference is made, it seems, to investment therein of trust funds of a private nature."

Federal farm loan bonds, issued, or to be issued, under authority of the federal farm loan act, may be briefly described as follows: These bonds may be issued by any federal land bank, with the approval of the federal farm loan board, in denominations of $25, $50, $100, $500 and $1,000. The interest rate cannot exceed 5%. The bonds can only be issued when the applicant bank tenders to the farm loan registrar of the district as collateral security, first mortgages on farm lands or United States government bonds, in an amount equal to the bonds proposed to be issued.

The act provides, among other conditions, as to mortgages which are taken by federal land banks, which mortgages, as above stated, are used as collateral security for federal farm loan bonds:

> "Section 12. That no federal land bank organized under this act shall make loans except upon the following terms and conditions:
> "First. Said loans shall be secured by duly recorded first mortgages on farm land within the land bank district in which the bank is situated.
> "Third. No loan on mortgage shall be made under this act at a rate of interest exceeding six per centum per annum, exclusive of amortization payments.
> "Fourth. Such loans may be made for the following purposes and for no other.
> "(a) To provide for the purchase of land for agricultural uses.
> "(b) To provide for the purchase of equipment, fertilizers and live stock necessary for the proper and reasonable operation of the mortgaged farm; the term 'equipment' to be defined by the federal farm loan board.

"(c) To provide buildings and for the improvement of farm lands; the term "improvement" to be defined by the federal farm loan board.

"(d) To liquidate indebtedness of the owner of the land mortgaged, existing at the time of the organization of the first national farm loan association established in or for the county in which the land mortgaged is situated, or indebtedness subsequently incurred for purposes mentioned in this section.

"Fifth. No such loan shall exceed fifty per centum of the value of the land mortgaged and twenty per centum of the value of the permanent, insured improvements thereon, said value to be ascertained by appraisal, as provided in section ten of this act. In making said appraisal, the value of the land for agricultural purposes shall be the basis of appraisal and the earning power of said land shall be a principle factor."

The following provisions of the act as to the federal farm loan bonds may also be noted.

"Section 21. That each land bank shall be bound in all respects by the acts of its officers in signing and issuing farm loan bonds, and by the acts of the federal farm loan board in authorizing their issue.

"Every federal land bank issuing farm loan bonds shall be primarily liable therefor, and shall also be liable, upon presentation of farm loan bond coupons, for interest payments due upon any farm loan bonds issued by other federal land banks and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of such other land banks; and every such bank shall likewise be liable for such portion of the principle of farm loan bonds so issued as shall not be paid after the assets of any such other land banks shall have been liquidated and distributed: PROVIDED, That such losses, if any, either of interest or of principle shall be assessed by the federal farm loan board against solvent land banks liable therefor in proportion to the amount of farm loan bonds which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment.

"Every federal land bank shall by appropriate action of its board of directors, duly recorded in its minutes, obligate itself to become liable on farm loan bonds as provided in this section.

"Every farm loan bond issued by a federal land bank shall be signed by its president and attested by its secretary, and shall contain in the face thereof a certificate signed by the farm loan commissioner to the effect that it is issued under the authority of the federal farm loan act, has the approval in form and issue of the federal farm loan board, and is legal and regular in all respects; that it is not taxable by national, state, municipal, or local authority; that it is issued against collateral security of United States government bonds, or indorsed first mortgage on farm lands, at least equal in amount to the bonds issued, and that all federal land banks are liable for the payment of each bond."

"Section 26. That every federal land bank and every national farm loan association, including the capital and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from federal, state, municipal and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section eleven and section thirteen of this act. First mortgages executed to federal land banks, or to joint stock land banks, and farm loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act, shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the government of the United States, and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from federal, state, municipal, and local taxation.

"Section 27. That farm loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act by federal land banks or joint stock land banks shall be a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds, and may be accepted as security for all public deposits."

The act is quite long and I deem it unnecessary to call the attention to further details. An exhaustive opinion as to its constitutionality has been rendered by Hon. Charles E. Hughes, under date of May 4, 1917, addressed to Alexander Brown & Sons of New York, the concluding paragraph of which is:

"My conclusion is that the farm loan bonds to be issued by the federal land banks organized and controlled as provided in the federal farm loan act will be when duly issued and paid for, valid securities, constituting as declared by congress, instrumentalities of the government of the United States, and that they and the income derived therefrom will be exempt as provided in the act from federal, state, municipal and local taxation; and further that, with respect to bonds duly issued and paid for under this exemption, it will constitute a continuing exemption which cannot be withdrawn by subsequent legislation."

Justice Hughes also states in his opinion (in speaking of federal land banks):

"These farm loan bonds are a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds (subject to the laws of the several states), and may be accepted as security for all public deposits."

and further, in speaking of the nature of the obligation created by these bonds, it is stated:

"And while the act does not in terms provide that the United States shall be liable on these farm loan bonds, the act does contain the explicit provision that these bonds must 'be termed and held to be instrumentalities of the government of the United States. * * *.'

"Taking into consideration, the facts which have been stated with respect to the organization and control of the federal land banks, I am of the opinion that the farm loan bonds which are about to be issued by these banks under the authority and direction of the federal farm loan board by virtue of the powers conferred by congress, and which have been expressly declared by congress to be instrumentalities of the federal government, must be regarded as obligations having the support of the good faith and credit of the United States. And while such obligations, because of the nature of sovereignty, confer no right of action against the United States, without its consent, being 'only binding on the conscience of the sovereign,' and hence in this aspect invite reliance on the sense of justice of congress, still the actual relation of the government to the issue of these bonds affords additional ground for sustaining their validity."

The above quotations from the federal farm loan act and from the opinion of Justice Hughes show the very high character of security afforded by these bonds. While they are not, as stated in my opinion of March 2, 1917, to the superintendent of banks, what are commonly known as United States government bonds, they are bonds, secured by first mortgages on real estate, or by United States government bonds, and, as stated by Justice Hughes, are instrumentalities of the federal government and are obligations having the support of the good faith and credit of the United States. Further, "they are a lawful investment for all fiduciary and trust funds."

My opinion is, that unless there is some prohibitive provision of our Ohio laws, any trustee may invest trust funds in these bonds, and, under the general rules of law relating to investment of trust funds, he would be fully protected.

> "Speaking very generally, in passing upon the subject of the proper discharge of his duties by a trustee, it has been said that the true question is whether, considering all the circumstances, he has displayed such prudence and diligence in conducting the affairs of the trust as men of average prudence and discretion would employ in their own affairs. (Bispham's Principles of Equity, section 140).
> "Mortgages on real estate have always been regarded as proper investments for trustees, especially in the United States. (Bispham's Principles of Equity, section 141).
> "There can be no doubt that mortgages on real estate are considered proper investments in the United States, and perhaps they are the only investments which are not objectionable in some one of the states * * * but mortgages upon estates of inheritance, taken with proper caution as to the amount and the title, have been named in all the states as proper and safe investments; so that the question in the United States is whether the security is in fact what is called 'Security upon real estate.' " (Perry on Trusts and Trustees, section 458).

> "A trustee ought not as a rule to invest in second mortgages. Trustees ought to invest in government or state securities, or in bonds and mortgages on unincumbered real estate The rule is not inflexible, but subject to the higher rule that the trustees are always to employ such care and diligence in the trust business as careful men of discretion and intelligence emp oy in their own affairs." (Perry on Trusts and Trustees, 6th Ed., Sec. 452).

Federal farm loan bonds are secured by first mortgages on real estate, and may be classed as bonds secured by real estate, and, in addition, as bonds having the support of the good faith and credit of the United States. Even if congress had not expressly provided that these bonds are lawful investment for trust funds, they would fall within the class of proper investments for trustees. That is, an investment made by a trustee in such bonds, unless prohibited by statute or by the terms of the trust, would relieve the trustee from personal liability in case of loss.

Statutes prescribing certain investments for trustees are generally regarded as enacted in the interest of the trustee. The trustee is liable personally for any loss of trust funds attributable to his neglect or unwise or unfaithful administration of the trust, but if he makes investments, in good faith, in securities authorized by statute or by the court, he is free from personal liability. If the statute or the instrument creating the trust prescribes certain investments the trustee can make others, but he generally does so at his peril.

> "In a few states, there are statutes authorizing trustees to invest in a particular manner, and excusing them from responsibility if their investments are made in good faith in the prescribed securities. * * * But it has been held that trustees are not confined to these funds; that the acts are for their benefit; that they can elect other kinds of investment, but will be responsible for losses." (Perry on Trusts and Trustees, section 459, 6th edition).

The same rule applies also where the instrument creating the trust specifies the securities in which the funds are to be invested. If the instrument creating the trust does not specify the securities but directs the trustee to invest in such manner as he may deem best, then the general rule as first given applies, in Ohio, under the case of Willis v. Brancher, 79 O. S. 290. In that case a trustee under a will invested trust funds in the stock of a state bank, which failed. The trustee having exercised good faith, prudence and diligence was relieved from personal responsibility, the court holding that section 11214, referred to in your request and thereafter quoted and referred to, is permissive, and only applies when the instrument creating the trust did not specify the manner of the investment or vest discretion in the trustee, and to cases of statutory trustees when no other provision as to investment was made.

Under the general law and this decision there can be no question that where a trustee is vested with discretion as to the investment, he may invest in federal farm loan bonds and be fully protected.

Coming now to the statutes of Ohio bearing upon your request I find the following:

Section 10843 provides for investment of unclaimed money by an executor or administrator and is as follows:

> "If a sum of money directed by a decree or order of the court to be distributed to heirs, next of kin, or legatees, or by a judgment or decree of court in favor of a creditor, remains for six months unclaimed, the executor or administrator shall loan it on bond or mortgage, as the court directs, to accumulate for the benefit of the persons entitled thereto. Such loan shall be made in the name of the judge of the court for the time being, and be subject to the order of the judge and his successors in office as hereinafter provided."

Under this section an executor or administrator must apply to the probate court for authority to make the investment, no matter in what security he wishes to invest and the court undoubtedly has just as much authority to authorize an investment under this section in Federal Farm Loan Bonds, as in United States Bonds, or any mortgage on real estate.

Section 10933 General Code (107 O. L. 405) provides for the duties of guardians of minors. Paragraph 7 of this section governs investments by such guardians, and is as follows:

> "7. Within a reasonable time after he receives it, to loan or invest money of his ward, in notes or bonds, secured by first mortgage on real estate of at least double the value of the money loaned or invested. The buildings thereon if any must be well insured against loss by fire and so kept by the mortgagor for the benefit of the mortgagee, until the debt is paid. On failure so to do, the mortgagee shall insure them and the expense to him be prepaid by the mortgagor and be a lien on the property concurrent with the mortgage. Or he may invest such money in bonds of the United States, or of a state on which default has never been made in the payment of interest, or bonds of a county or city in this state, issued in conformity to law; or, with the approval of the probate court, in productive real estate within this state, the title to which must be taken in the name of the ward. He also shall manage such investments, and when deemed proper, change them into other investments of the above classes. No real estate so purchased shall be sold by the guardian, except with the approval of the probate court. If the guardian fails to loan or invest money of his ward within reasonable time, he must account on settlement for such money and interest thereon, calculated with annual rests;"

I think that federal farm loan bonds come fairly within the specification: "bonds, secured by first mortgage on real estate of at least double the value of the money loaned or invested. The buildings thereon, if any, must be well insured against loss by fire and so kept by the mortgagor for the benefit of the mortgagee until the debt is paid. * * *"

Federal farm loan bonds are bonds secured by first mortgage on real estate, and the provisions of the federal act as to the value of the land, it seems to me, are higher than the Ohio statute. Our statute makes absolutely no provision as to the class of real estate upon which the loan is to be made, whether improved or unimproved, whether under cultivation or not; nor is there any restriction as to persons to whom a loan can be made, nor as to the amount of the same. These matters are carefully covered by the restrictions as to federal farm loan mortgages.

Section 10933 provides that the real estate is to be worth double the value of the money loaned. No method of appraisal is required, therefore this provision is largely directory, and if the guardian used good faith in estimating the value of the real estate, but had defective judgment, he would be excused; for no method is provided for ascertaining the value of the land.

Under the federal act a careful and rigid appraisal is provided for. Section 10933 is silent as to whether the loan is to be made on improved or unimproved real estate and therefore contemplates a loan of fifty per cent. on the real estate and fifty per cent on the improvements, thus, if a loan was desired on a farm, the land being valued at $1000.00 and the buildings thereon at $2000.00, a guardian, under section 10933, could loan $1500.00 while on the same farm a loan from a federal land bank could be obtained for not more than $900.00, namely fifty per cent., or $500.00 on the land, and twenty per cent., or $400.00 on the improvements. Only permanent, insured improvements can be included in a federal farm loan; this is not provided for under section 10933. The provision as to insurance on property covered by a federal farm loan mortgage is also more strict than the guardian statute. Paragraph nine of section 12, of the federal farm loan act provides, in part:

> "Every borrower shall undertake to keep insured to the satisfaction of the federal farm loan board all buildings the value of which was a factor in determining the amount of the loan. Insurance shall be made payable to the mortgagee as its interest may appear at time of loss, and, at the option of the mortgagor and subject to general regulations of the federal farm loan board, sums so received may be used to pay for reconstruction of buildings destroyed."

My opinion therefore is that under paragraph 7 of section 10933 the guardian of a minor may invest the money of his ward in federal farm loan bonds, as they are "bonds secured by first mortgage on real estate of at least double the value of the money loaned or invested." and the conditions as to insurance under the federal act fully comply with those of section 10933.

By section 10991, the laws relating to guardians for minors and their wards are made applicable to guardians for idiots, imbeciles and lunatics, except as otherwise provided, and as no separate provision as to investments is made, investments by such guardians would be controlled by section 10993, and investment in farm loan bonds is authorized. Like provision as to guardians for drunkards is made by section 11011; and by section 11021 as to trustees for a non-resident minor, idiot, lunatic or imbecile. No provision is made as to investments by trustees for persons owning property in this state who have not been heard of for such time as raises a presumption of death; such trustee would probably be governed in the matter of investments by section 11214:

This section 11214 is a general law and provides as follows:

> "When they have funds belonging to the trust which are to be invested, executors, administrators, guardians and trustees, may invest them in certificates of the indebtedness of this state, of the United States, or in such other securities as the court having control of the administration of the trust approves. When money coming into the hands of an executor, administrator, trustee, agent, assignee, attorney, or officer is stopped therein by reason of litigation for more than six months, he may invest it during such detention in the manner that trust funds are now authorized by law to be invested, or as the probate or other court having jurisdiction of the pending litigation, or person aforesaid, directs."

This statute was considered by our supreme court in the case of Willis v. Brancher, 79 O. S. 291. On page 298 the court, in speaking of this section, says:

> "It is perhaps enough to say of this statute that it is permissive. It provides for situations where the instrument constituting the trust does not otherwise provide. Undoubtedly it indicates a general policy; a policy of carefulness in the handling of trust funds; it points out a course free from risk, and affords a certain sure method by which the trustee may secure an affirmation of the legality of his investment in advance. So that, as a matter of prudence, resort to the methods indicated may be strongly commended. But the statute does not afford any special aid in determining the question involved in the case at bar, unless it be ascertained that the will gives no added authority to the trustee."

This section gives a wider range of investments than section 10933, but, when investment is made under it, instead of 10933, the authority of the probate court must be obtained. It may be that under this section it is only necessary to obtain the approval of the court when the investment is in other securities than certificates of the indebtedness of this state or of the United States; but it is not necessary to go into that question. The opinion of the court in the last cited case makes it plain that this section, if mandatory at all, only applies to trusts where the instrument creating the trust neither specifies the securities in which investment is to be made, nor vests the trustee with discretion as to investments, and as to statutory trustees where the statute makes no provision as to the investments; it does, however, and this was probably the purpose for the enactment, widen the list of securities in which guardians and other trustees may invest, so as to include any security which meets the approval of the court. Investment in farm loan bonds could undoubtedly be made under this section by any trustee (unless the terms of the instrument creating the trust prohibited). If approved by the court, just as such investment could be made under it in United States government bonds; and, in any case which makes resort to this section necessary, as federal farm loan bonds answer every requisite for an investment by a trustee, and as they are authorized by section 10933, as investments for guardians, any court having jurisdiction would probably approve any application to invest in such bonds.

My conclusion is that federal farm loan bonds are a proper security in which all private trust funds may be invested unless the instrument creating the trust by its terms prohibits such investments and that wherever it is necessary under our laws for a trustee to obtain authority to invest trust funds from the court having jurisdiction of the trust, the court is warranted in authorizing such investment to be made in federal farm loan bonds.

I have not found it necessary to consider the two acts of the 82nd general assembly referred to in your request namely senate bill No. 183, making federal farm loan bonds a lawful investment for the funds of insurance companies; and house bill No. 463, including such bonds in the list of securities in which commercial banks, savings banks and trust companies may invest; for the reason that the first act has no bearing whatever upon the question under consideration. As to house bill No. 463, it is sufficient to say that this act has to do primarily with investments for the funds of banking corporations, which investments are prescribed by statute. Under it trust companies may invest trust funds in federal farm loan bonds as well as in other securities mentioned in the act but this privilege is granted to them not as trustees but as banks. It is not probable that the legislature would have authorized such investment by trust companies as trustees and deny it to trustees other than trust companies. The only reasonable inference is that the legislature recognized federal farm loan bonds as proper investments for all trustees (as they are) and therefore gave to trust companies express authority to invest in them, which express authority it was necessary for such companies, being banking corporations to have.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CITY ORDINANCE—ENTITLED TO SAME RESPECT AS GENERAL LAWS OF STATE—WHEN SAME ARE NOT IN CONFLICT.

In those cases in which an ordinance of a municipality does not conflict with the general laws of the state, the ordinance is entitled to as much respect and is as much a legal regulation within the limits of the municipality as a police regulation passed by the legislature.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1917.

HON. CALVIN D. SPITLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 13th in which you enclose a letter received by you from the mayor of Tiffin asking for my opinion in reference to the matter therein set out. The letter from the mayor of Tiffin reads as follows:

> "The question has arisen as to whether or not prosecutions can be had in the city of Tiffin under the so called dimmer ordinance since the passage of the new state auto light law.
> "Will you be so kind as to procure an opinion concerning the same from the attorney-general?"

Section 2 of the ordinance about which the mayor makes inquiry reads as follows:

> "That it shall be unlawful for anyone to operate a motor vehicle or other vehicle upon the streets of said city having or using a head light and reflector thereon without the use of a dimmer or other mechanical contrivance to prevent the glare of said light and reflectors from blinding the eye; said dimmer or other mechanical contrivance to be so adjusted and used as to enable persons upon the streets of said city to see objects as well as if no head-lights with reflectors were in use on such vehicle"

The section of the General Code which has to do with the same matter is section 12614-1 (107 Ohio Laws, page 540.) The section reads as follows:

> "It shall be unlawful for any person to drive or propel any automobile or other vehicle upon the public highways of the state in the night season if said vehicle is equipped with any acetylene, electric or other brilliant headlight or any other light, the rays of which shall be intensified by any parabolic or condensing reflector, unless such headlight or other light when approaching another automobile or vehicle at a distance of not less than seven hundred feet, shall be dimmed, controlled, deflected or so adjusted that at a distance of two hundred feet or more in front of such vehicle, no part of the intensified rays of light shall be visible more than three and one half feet above the surface of the highway, and remain so until the approaching vehicle passes by. Any person guilty of such unlawful act, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than twenty-five dollars for the first offense and not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars for the second offense."

It will be noted in comparing the ordinance with the statute, that the ordinance does not conflict with the statute. Hence, the proposition is as to whether under these circumstances prosecutions can be had under the city ordinance. I am of the opinion that prosecutions may be had under such city ordinance.

Section 3632 of the General Code provides, in part, as follows:

> "To regulate the use of carts, drays, wagons, hackney coaches, omnibusses, automobiles, and every description of carriages kept for hire or livery stable purposes; * * *."

From this section, it is evident that municipalities are given authority to legislate in reference to the matter of automobiles.

Dillon, in his work on Municipal Corporations, lays down the law in reference to the matter suggested in the mayor's communication as follows: Section 633.)

> "We concur in the opinion, that there are many acts of such a nature that they may, if the legislature has so provided, be an offence against the state at large, and also against the special and local government of the municipality. Accordingly, where an act is prohibited both by statute and by ordinance, it may constitute two offences, one against the state and the other against the city or town, and where such is the case a conviction of one may not be pleaded as constituting former jeopardy when the offender is prosecuted for the other, and where such is the case the weight of authority also seems to hold that power to enact ordinances with reference thereto may be included in the general powers conferred on cities and towns by statute."

In Koch v. The State, 53 O. S. 433, the court say in the syllabus as follows:

> "A former conviction before a mayor for the violation of an ordinance is not a bar to the prosecution of an information charging the same act as a violation of a statute."

And the court in the opinion hold as follows:

> "In the probate court an information was filed against the plaintiff in error charging him with a misdemeanor, it being an offense against a statute. To this he pleaded in bar a former conviction before the mayor o Akron for the same act, it being also a violation of an ordinance of said city. A demurrer to the plea was sustained.
> "The ruling is in accord with the general course of decisions. Bloomfield v. Trimble, 54 Iowa, 399; Minnesota v. Lee, 29 Minn., 445; Robbins v. The People, 95 Ill., 175; Cooley's Const. Lim., 239."

In Schell v. DuBois, 94 O. S. 93, the court, in passing upon a question presented to it in said case used the following language: Page 103.)

> "Manifestly this ordinance had no other object in view than to protect the public. A police regulation, duly and legally passed by a municipal corporation, 'not in conflict with general laws,' is entitled to as much respect and is as much a legal regulation within the limits of the municipality as a police regulation passed by the legislature."

And on page 109 of the opinion the court lays down the following proposition:

> "Such an ordinance must be reasonable and must not conflict with general laws."

From all the above, it is my opinion that prosecutions may be had under the city ordinance of Tiffin, notwithstanding the fact that the general assembly has legislated upon the same subject. In legislating upon this subject, the general assembly did not forbid municipalities from legislating upon the same subject. And, as is shown in section 3632 G. C. above quoted the general assembly has given general power to municipalities to legislate in reference to automobiles.

Hence, answering the question specifically, it is my opinion that inasmuch as the city ordinance does not in any way conflict with the general law of the state upon the same subject, prosecutions may be had under the said ordinance notwithstanding the fact that the general assembly has legislated upon the same subject matter.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—CREATION OF NEW SCHOOL DISTRICT FROM ONE OR MORE DISTRICTS—NOTICE MUST BE GIVEN SUCH DISTRICTS—NOT NECESSARY TO FILE MAP WITH AUDITOR—EFFECT OF PETITION TO FORM NEW DISTRICT FILED BY MAJORITY OF ELECTORS.

(1) The county board of education may create a new school district from one or more districts or parts thereof, as provided by General Code section 4736, and shall file with the board or boards of education from which the territory is taken a written notice of such proposed arrangement. The electors of the territory of the new district have thirty days time from the filing of such written notice to remonstrate against such proposed arrangement.

(2) In the creation of a new school district by a county board of education it is not necessary to file a map with the county auditor showing the boundary of the territory transferred.

(3) A petition filed by a majority of the electors of the territory, asking the county board to form such district, has no legal effect. The only provision for the filing of a petition for the transfer of territory is section 4696 G. C. and that applies to the transfer of territory from one county school district to another county school district, or to an exempted village or city school district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1917.

HON. CALVIN D. SPITLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your several letters you submit for my opinion the following statement of facts:

> "On March 24, 1917, there was filed with the board of education of Seneca county a petition signed by approximately 88 per cent. of the male electors of the territory, asking the board to form a new school district to be known as the 'Cromer's rural school district.'
> "On April 20, 1917, petitions were filed, bearing the names of 49 of said electors in said territory, requesting that their names be withdrawn from the remonstrance which they had signed against the proposed school district.
> "On April 21, 1917, a remonstrance was filed containing the names of 136 electors in the territory affected. The question is, whether the 49 names should be deducted from the 136 names, and whether or not a majority of the qualified electors had signed the remonstrance; in other words, did the 49 signers have the right to withdraw their names from the remonstrance voluntarily and without first obtaining the consent of the other signers to said petition?"

Said territory is described as follows:

"Beginning with the center of section nine of Hopewell township; thence north on the half section line to the center of section four Hopewell township; thence west on the half section line to the middle of the west line of said section four of Hopewell township, thence north on the section line to the northwest corner of section sixteen of Liberty township, thence east to the middle of the north section line of section thirteen, Liberty township; thence south on the half section line to the center of said section thirteen; thence east on the half section line to the middle of the east section line of said section thirteen; thence south on the township line to the middle of the east section line of section twenty-five, Liberty township; thence east on the half section line to the middle of the Sandusky river; thence along the middle of the Sandusky river to a point where the said line crosses the east and west half section line of section eight of Clinton township; thence west to the point of beginning, embracing approximately 27 square miles.

"The board of education on the 24th day of March, 1917, passed the following resolution:

"RESOLUTION,

"TRANSFERRING TERRITORY TO CREATE A NEW SCHOOL DISTRICT.

"Item 1.

"In accordance with sections 4692 and 4736 of the General Code, 105-106 Ohio Laws, page 397, be it RESOLVED, that certain territory now being parts of Hopewell, Liberty, Pleasant and Clinton townships rural school districts, Seneca county, Ohio, above described and mapped and designated by a map filed herewith and with the auditor of Seneca county, be and the same is hereby transferred from the said township and united to form a new school district for school purposes.

"Item 2. Be it

"RESOLVED, that the territory so transferred and mapped, and united, shall be known as the 'Cromer's rural school district.'

"Item 3. Be it

"RESOLVED, that the equitable division of school funds be made as follows:

"All funds collected and distributed from the February settlement, 1917, shall belong to the respective boards of education as heretofore. Beginning with the August settlement, 1917, said August settlement and all funds collected for school purposes thereafter in the above described district shall be paid to the board of education of the Cromer's rural school district, for school purposes.

"Item 4. Be it

"RESOLVED, that in accordance with sections 4692 and the General Code, O. L. 105-106, page 397, a certified copy of the resolution and a map showing the boundaries of the district above created, be filed with the auditor of Seneca county, and notices of such transfer shall be posted in three conspicuous places in the district so transferred."

From the above, then, I gather that on and prior to March 24, 1917, there existed in the Seneca county school district certain township rural districts named as follows:

Hopewell, Liberty, Pleasant and Clinton rural districts; and from portions or parts of said four named rural districts the county board of education attempted to create a new rural school district, the same to be known as the "Cromer's rural school district."

That said new district was to contain approximately twenty-seven square miles of territory, that a petition bearing approximately 88 per cent. of the electors in the territory described in the resolution above quoted was presented to the county board of education, petitioning for the creation of said new district.

It will be understood at the out set that said petition had no legal effect, for the only section of our school laws which provides for a transfer to be made upon the filing of a petition is section 4696 G. C.; and that section applies only to territory which is to be transferred from one county school district to another county school district; and inasmuch as the school districts above mentioned, both the old and the new, are all located within the same county school district, said section could not, and does not apply, and said petition which contained the names of said electors would be simply an expression of sentiment to the county board of education, from the electors of said territory.

So that the first act of legal effect in your matter would be the act of passing the resolution by your county board of education, in which a new school district was created out of the parts of the four rural school districts above mentioned. The said new district was attempted to be created, and could be created only under and by authority of section 4736 G. C., which reads as follows:

"The county board of education shall arrange the school districts according to topography and population in order that schools may be most easily accessible to the pupils, and shall file with the boards of education in the territory affected, a written notice of such proposed arrangement; which said arrangement shall be carried into effect as proposed unless, within thirty days after the filing of such notice with the board or boards of education, a majority of the qualified electors of the territory affected by such order of the county board, file a written remonstrance with the county board against the arrangement of school districts so proposed. The county board of education is hereby authorized to create a school district from one or more school districts or parts thereof. The county board of education is authorized to appoint a board of education for such newly created school district, and direct an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness belonging to the newly created district. Members of the board of education of the newly created district shall thereafter be elected at the same time and in the same manner as the boards of education of the village and rural districts."

That is to say, your county board of education is authorized, acting under said section, to create a new school district from one or more school districts or parts thereof, in this case from parts of the four rural districts mentioned. In so doing, and after passing a resolution similar to the one above set forth, the county board of education shall file with each one of the rural boards of education of the districts mentioned, or from which territory is used in the creation of the new district, a written notice of such proposed arrangement. After filing such written notices with said rural boards of education, a majority of the qualified electors of the entire new district then have thirty days' time in which to file a written remonstrance with the county board of education, remonstrating against the said arrangement so proposed in the formation of such new district. If such remonstrance is so filed by a majority of the qualified electors of the entire new district, and found to be such by the county board of education, and filed within thirty days from the date of such notices, then the proposed arrangement does not become effective; but if no such remonstrance is so filed by a majority of the qualified electors of such entire new district before thirty days from the date of the filing of such notices with the various rural boards of education, then said proposed arrangement or the creation of such new district does become effective. It is contemplated that the said notices so to be filed shall be filed at the same time that the resolution is passed which purports to create such new district; but the language of said section in relation to the filing of such notices is unquestionably only directory, and the notices can be filed within a reasonable time after the passing of such resolution, for instance, at this time.

It was held in Johann v. Board of Education, 26 Ohio circuit court, new series, 209, 212, that:

> "The statutory requirement is directory in so far as it fixes the time for such filing," keeping in mind, however, that the electors of such proposed district have thirty days from the filing of such notices in which to file their remonstrance. In the creation of a new district it is not necessary to file any map with the county auditor of the county in which the new district is created. The provision of the law for the filing of a map applies only when territory is transferred from one district of the county school district to an adjoining district or districts of the county school district.

Where a new district is created it is not such a transfer to an adjoining district, and hence in the creation of such new district the procedure outlined in section 4736 G. C. is followed, as above mentioned, and under the procedure as outlined in section 4692 G. C., which latter section applies only to transfers of territory. When your new school district is once created, it is necessary that a board of education be appointed, and therefore, while you do not inquire in relation to same, I deem it advisable to call your attention to a portion of opinion 368, rendered by this department June 16, 1917, in which opinion I held as follows:

> "The question as to whether the county board of education has a right to appoint a board of education for such new school district is not so easily determined. The language of section 4736, in relation thereto, seems clear and explicit. It provides that 'the county board of education is authorized to appoint a bord of education for such newly created school district,' but section 4736-1 G. C. provides:
> " 'In rural school districts hereafter created by a county board of education, a board of education shall be elected as provided in section 4712 of the General Code. When rural school districts hereafter so created, or which have been heretofore so created, fail or have failed to elect a board of education as provided in said section 4712, or whenever there exists such school district which for any reason or cause is not provided with a board of education, the commissioners of the county to which such district belongs shall appoint such board of education * * *.'
> "Said section 4736 was enacted May 20, 1915, and approved by the governor May 27, 1915, and filed in the office of the secretary of state May 28, 1915. Said section 4736-1 was enacted May 20, 1915, approved by the governor June 4, 1915, and filed in the office of the secretary of state June 5, 1915, being, therefore, the later of the two acts.

"It is somewhat difficult to ascertain whether or not the language of said acts is so contradictory that the latter will repeal the former by implication, or whether effect can be given to both. Effect must be given to both if the same can be done, and I am of the opinion that if at the time the county board of education creates a new district it appoints a board of education for such district, such board of education thereby becomes the legally constituted board for such district but if, for any reason or cause, the county board of education fails to appoint a board of education for such newly created district, then I am of the opinion that the board of county commissioners have the right to appoint such board, thus giving effect to both of the above mentioned sections."

From the above considerations you will plainly see that both petitions and the remonstrance which were mentioned by you, and especially the petition and remonstrance which were filed following the filing of said map with the county auditor, were of no effect in law.

Reaching this conclusion, then, the direct answer to your question is made unnecessary, but the procedure necessary is outlined above.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL— PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF LOGAN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

"IN RE —Bonds issued by the board of county commissioners of Logan county, Ohio, in the sum of $8,390.00 covering the shares to be paid by Liberty township and abutting property owners of the cost and expense of improving section 'D' of inter-county highway No. 189."

I have carefully examined the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Logan county Ohio, of the board of township trustees of Liberty township, said county, and of other officers relating to the above bond issue and find the same to be in compliance with the sections of the General Code relating to bond issues of this kind, and I am of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said bond issue will, when signed by the proper officers, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SALARY—OFFICER TAKING OFFICE DURING REFERENDUM PERIOD OF A BILL CHANGING SALARY OF SAID OFFICE—TAKES SUBJECT TO THE LAW EXISTING BEFORE THE CHANGE.

An officer assuming office within the referendum period of ninety days from the filing of an act with the secretary of state, which act changes the salary of said officer, takes the office at the salary as it existed before the change. And the change of salary becoming effective at the end of the ninety day period does not affect his salary for the term for which he was appointed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1917.

The Public Utilities Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIRS:—I have your communication of some days since in which you ask for my opinion in reference to a certain claim made by Hon. Lawrence K. Langdon for salary claimed due him as a member of your commission from June 8, 1915, to February 1, 1917. Your communication reads as follows:

> "On the 27th day of May, 1915, Mr. L. K. Langdon assumed office as a member of the public utilities commission of Ohio by virtue of an appointment by Governor Willis to fill the unexpired term of Charles C. Marshall, ending February 1st, 1917, at a salary of $6,000.00 per annum. Mr. Langdon received such salary until the 8th day of June, 1915, at which date the law reducing the salary to $4,500.00 per annum became effective. Thereafter he was paid at the rate of $4,500.00 per annum.
> "Mr. Langdon submitted a bill to this commission for the sum of $2,470.83, being the balance of salary claimed by him as commissioner from June 8th, 1915, to February 1, 1917, (the latter date being the expiration of his term of office), and representing the difference between the salary of $6,000, to which he claims he was entitled under article 2, section 20, of the constitution of Ohio, and the salary of $4,500 per annum which he received for said period.
> "Acting under authority of an opinion of Attorney-General Turner, rendered to this commission on the 22nd day of January, 1916, with respect to commissioner O. H. Hughes, the commission has approved and allowed the bill. (Copy of the attorney-generals opinion attached.)
> "Upon transmissal of same to auditor of state, it was returned and the attached communication addressed to Mr. Langdon.
> "The commission would be pleased to have your opinion as to the legality of the claim."

The section of the General Code which fixes the salary of members of the public utilities commission is 2250-2 G. C. The old section is found in 102 Ohio Laws, 549, and reads as follows:

> "Each member of the commission (then public service commission, now public utilities commission) shall receive an annual salary of six thousand dollars, * * *."

This section was amended in 106 Ohio Laws, 26, to read as follows:

> "Each of the members of the public utilities commission of Ohio shall receive an annual salary of four thousand five hundred dollars, * * *."

This latter act changing the salary from six thousand dollars to four thousand five hundred dollars was passed March 8, 1915, was approved by the governor on March 8, 1915, and filed by him in the office of the secretary of state March 9, 1915. Mr. Langdon was appointed a member of the commission on May 27, 1915, to fill the unexpired term of Hon. Charles C. Marshall, whose term would have expired on February 1, 1917.

The question now is as to whether Mr. Langdon would be entitled to six thousand dollars per year during the term for which he was appointed or not.

Under the principles of the referendum, no law becomes effective until ninety days after the same has been filed with the secretary of state. Hence this law changing the salary of the public utility commissioners from six thousand dollars to four thousand five hundred dollars became effective on June 8, 1915. We thus see that the law changing the salary became effective on June 8, 1915, while Mr. Langdon was appointed as a member of the commission on May 27, 1915.

The question now is as follows:

> "(1) Did Mr. Langdon draw a salary of four thousand five hundred dollars from the beginning of the term for which he was appointed to the end of the same; or
> "(2) Did he draw a salary of six thousand dollars from the beginning of the term for which he was appointed to the end of the same; or
> "(3) Did he draw a salary of six thousand dollars from the beginning of the term for which he was appointed up until June 8, 1915, the time at which the new law became effective, and then from that time on to the end of the term for which he was appointed draw a salary of four thousand five hundred dollars per year?"

These questions arise under and by virtue of the constitutional provision found in section 20 of article II of our constitution, which reads as follows:

> "The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished."

Before proceeding further in the consideration of the question I desire to note carefully this constitutional provision. There are several important phrases in the provision which apply to this question, namely: "The general assembly shall fix the compensation of all officers," "but no change therein," and "during his existing term." Let us first note that the phrase "no change therein" has reference to a change in compensation and not to a change in law. The word "law" is not used in the provision. "Therein" is a word with the attributes of a preposition and a pronoun, namely, "in which." The antecedent of "which" is compensation and not law. This is important to keep in mind for the reason that the phrases "no change therein" and "during his existing term" are vitally related to each other. They are related practically as follows:

> "During the term existing at the time the salary of an officer may be changed, his salary will not be affected."

Or, in other words, the said constitutional provision practically reads:

> "But no change in salary or compensation shall affect the salary of any officer during the term which an officer is serving at the time the change in salary is made."

So that we must carefully note in the further consideration of this question the time at which the change in salary took place as applied to the members of the public utilities commission. This for the reason that the change in salary, whenever it may take place, shall not affect the salary of any of the members of the public utilities commission during the terms they were serving at the time the change in salary took place.

With this in mind let us inquire when the change in salary from six thousand dollars to four thousand five hundred dollars was made. Did the change in salary take place on the ninth day of March, 1915, when the act was filed by the governor with the secretary of state; or was the change made on the eighth day of June, 1915, ninety days after the same was filed with the secretary of state; or was the change made at some intervening period between the ninth day of March, 1915, and the eighth day of June, 1915?

The change in salary was certainly not made on the ninth day of March, 1915. If the change in salary was made at that time, then Mr. Langdon would have drawn a salary of four thousand five hundred dollars from the day of his appointment. But this would not be possible for the reason that the law filed with the secretary of state on March 9, 1915, had no force or effect until ninety days after said date. Hence there was no change in salary effective on March 9, 1915, and, of course, there was no change in salary intermediate between that date and the eighth of June, 1915, but the change took place on said latter date, namely, June 8, 1915. If the change in salary took effect on June 8, 1915, and Mr. Langdon was appointed May 27, 1915, the term of Mr. Langdon was existing at the time the salary was changed and under the constitutional provision the change in salary would not affect his salary for the term he was serving at the time the salary was changed.

With this in mind let us go back to the three questions asked above in reference to the salary proposition As said before, he certainly could not be held to have started on his term at a salary of four thousand five hundred dollars per year. The new law was not effective on May 27, 1915. The old law was still in force and it was the only law in force. Hence Mr. Langdon entered upon his term at a salary of six thousand dollars and not at a salary of four thousand five hundred dollars. But if he entered upon his term at a salary of six thousand dollars "no change therein," that is in the salary, could affect him during the term upon which he had entered; that is, during the term existing at the time the salary was changed. It is true the salary was changed on June 8, 1915, from six thousand dollars to four thousand five hundred dollars; but this change could not affect his salary for the constitutional provision above quoted protects him in the salary which he was drawing at that time and would protect him in that salary during the term existing at the time the salary was changed.

This whole matter really involves the question as to whether the provisions of a law filed with the secretary of state ought to be anticipated and considered of some force and vitality during the ninety day referendum period; or whether we ought to rely entirely upon the old status of the law, until the ninety day period expires. It is my opinion that the provisions of a law filed with the secretary of state are not effective during the ninety day period, commonly known as the "referendum period." Its provisions during that period are held in abeyance. The law works no change or effect whatever upon the rights of persons until the ninety day period has expired. No rights can be predicated upon it; no remedies can be secured from it. The same principle must control whether the time being considered is but a few days before the referendum period expires or whether it be eighty or ninety days before the expiration thereof. The constitution provides that no law shall have any force or effect until ninety days after it has been filed with the secretary of state. Hence the repealing section of the new law has no force or effect until said ninety day period has expired. Therefore, the old law has just as much force and just as much effect as if the new law had not been enacted to take its place, up until the time that the ninety day period expires.

It is needless to say that we can not have two laws upon which to base our rights and to secure our remedies. If we consider the new law at all as being effective, to what extent will we consider it? If there is a certain time within the referendum period at which we might begin to anticipate the new laws coming into effect, what is that time? The answer to these questions must develop the fact that there is just one safe course to pursue and that is to rely entirely upon the old law until the new one comes into force and effect, which is ninety days after it is filed with the secretary of state. We must treat the new law just as if it were not in existence until it becomes effective. Any other course would lead to endless confusion and uncertainty. If this construction is not adopted the people of our state will be entirely at sea as to their rights and their remedies during this ninety day period.

This was evidently the construction which the people and the convention itself meant to have placed upon the referendum provisions. This we gather from the language of the provisions themselves. Not only does section 1c of article II provide that "no law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state," but it also provides that if a petition signed by a certain percentage of the electors shall be filed with the secretary of state within ninety days, then "the secretary of state shall submit to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection such law." From this it is quite evident that the framers of the constitution, as well as the people in adopting it, had in mind the idea that the people had the right not only to reject but they practically reserved the right to stamp their approval upon the same. This language is very similar to the language used in reference to the attitude of the governor of the state toward a bill. Section 16 of article II provides:

> "Every bill passed by the general assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor for his approval. And he may either approve the bill by signing it or he may reject the same by returning it to the general assembly unsigned."

It is my opinion that the poeple of the state were given practically the same authority in reference to acts passed by the legislature as that which is given to the governor of the state. Supposing the principle of the referendum did not exist, and supposing Mr. Langdon had been appointed just a few days before the law making the change in salary had been signed by the governor—would there be any question as to the application of the principle of the constitutional provision? None whatever, and this for the reason that the bill as passed by the legislature could not be effective until ten days after the same was presented to the governor or until at such time within said period of ten days as he might see fit to sign the same and file it with the secretary of state. It seems to me the same construction should be placed upon the one procedure as upon the other. In the one case the act is held in abeyance for ten days in order to ascertain what action the governor of the state will take in reference to it; while in the other the provisions of the act are held in abeyance for ninety days in order to ascertain what action, if any, the people of the state will take in reference to it; and I am of the opinion that we should not anticipate what action the governor will take in reference to the bill nor what action the people shall take in reference to the law filed with the secretary of state. In each case the provisions of the act can have no force or effect until the expiration of the respective periods of ten days in the one case and ninety days in the other.

I am aware that the word "bill" is used in speaking of an act in so far as the governor's attitude toward the same is concerned, while the word "law" is used in speaking of the act in so far as the people's attitude in reference to the same is concerned.

But I do not feel that this should make any material difference as to the construction to be placed upon the two circumstances. Whether we call the act a "bill" or whether we call it a "law," it is true that in the ten day interim in the one case and the ninety day interim in the other the provisions of the act are held in abeyance by the constitution itself and do not become effective until the end of the period.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that Mr. Langdon was entitled to a salary of six thousand dollars per year from the day upon which he was appointed, namely, May 27, 1915, up until the time that his term expired, namely, February 1, 1917.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS AND INSPECTORS OF ELECTIONS—NOT STATE OFFICERS—NOT EXEMPT FROM MILITARY SERVICE—UNDER FEDERAL CONSCRIPTION SERVICE ACT.

Under the ruling of Provost Marshal General Crowder, form 22, under date of July 24, 1917, governing the status of officers in contemplation of the regulations for local and district boards and which he orders to be followed in passing upon claims for exemption under section 18 of the rules and regulations, deputy state supervisors of elections and deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections are not exempt and are not to be regarded as state officers within the purview of section 18, subsection (a) of the federal conscription service act which exempts from such service certain officers of the state and federal governments.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1917.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
MY DEAR GOVERNOR:—I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your communication under date of July 26th, reading as follows:

> "Will you kindly furnish me with an opinion as to whether the position of deputy state supervisor of elections is to be regarded as a state office, within the purview of that section of the federal conscriptive service act which exempts from such service certain officers of the state and federal governments?"

In the rules and regulations prescribed by the President under the authority vested in him by the terms of the act of congress to authorize the President to increase temporarily the military establishment of the United States, approved May 18, 1917, section 18 provides for persons or classes of persons to be exempted by a local board. Subsection (a) of said section reads as follows:

> "Officers, legislative, executive, and judicial, of the United States, the several states, territories, and the District of Columbia. The word 'officers' shall be construed for the purpose of said act of congress and these rules and regulations to mean any person holding a legislative, executive, or judicial office created by the constitution or laws of the United States, or of any of the several states or territories."

The subsection itself defines the word "officer," and since, of course, the position concerning which you inquire was not created by the constitution or the laws of the United States, we must look to the statutes of our state to ascertain what the position really is.

Section 4787 of the General Code provides:

> "By virtue of his office, the secretary of state shall be the state supervisor and inspector of elections and the state supervisor of elections, and, in addition to the duties now imposed upon him by law, he shall perform the duties of such offices as prescribed in this title."

Section 4788 of the General Code provides:

> "In each county of the state which contains a city wherein annual general registration of the electors is required by law, or which contains two or more cities in which registration is required by law, there shall be a board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, consisting of four members who shall be qualified electors of the county."

Section 4803 of the General Code provides:

> "Except in counties containing cities wherein annual general registration of electors is required by law, or which contains two or more cities in which registration is required by law, there shall be a board of deputy state supervisors of elections for each county consisting of four members who shall be qualified electors."

From the above sections it is apparent that the secretary of state is constituted by law the state supervisor and inspector of elections and the state supervisor of elections, and further provisions of the election laws give him general charge of the election machinery of the state. In the counties there are deputies under the state supervisor, and in the one instance they are called "deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections," while in the other they are known as "deputy state supervisors of elections."

Section 4801 G. C. gives to the state supervisor and inspector of elections all the rights, powers and duties conferred and imposed by law upon the state supervisor of elections, and the board of deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections are given all the rights, powers and duties conferred and imposed by law upon boards of deputy state supervisors of elections.

Various sections of the election laws impose duties and confer rights upon said boards of elections for the supervision and conduct of elections in their respective jurisdictions.

In the case of State of Ohio ex rel v. Craig, Auditor, et al., 8 N. P. 148, the court held that the deputy state supervisors of elections are not officers within the legal definition of that term, and, though their jurisdiction may be coterminous with that of the county, they are not county officers and, therefore, section 2866-3 R. S. does not violate section 1 of article X of the constitution. In that case the contention was that deputy state supervisors of elections possessed many or most of the characteristics of a public officer, namely, that they are officers in an independent capacity, clothed with some part of the sovereignty of the state, appointed for definite terms, taking oath of office, are required to give bond, and are paid a compensation out of the county treasury, and that the territory in which they act, being coterminous with the county, they are, therefore, county officers, and being county officers should be elected and not appointed. The court, holding that they were not county officers within the constitution, held the law constitutional. The act under which the deputy supervisors were appointed (Section 2966-1 R. S.) provided:

> "There is hereby created the office of state supervisor of elections, and of deputy state supervisors of elections, with the powers and duties hereafter prescribed."

The court concluded that since the secretary of state was the principal election officer, and the deputy state supervisors were subordinate officers for the carrying out the agencies of the state for the conduct of elections, "the legislature in designating these officers as deputy officers, intended to make them officers subordinate to the secretary of state, and, consequently, that while they were officers, they were not officers within the legal definition of that term under the constitution."

The above case was appealed to the circuit court, which held that quo warranto and not injunction was the proper procedure in trying title to office, thus inferentially holding that such positions were officers, State ex rel. Craig, 21 O. C. C. 175, which decision was affirmed without report in the supreme court, 61 O. S. 588.

Of course, it is readily apparent that deputy state supervisors are neither legislative nor judicial officers, and the sole question is whether or not a deputy state supervisor of elections is "a person holding an executive office created by the state of Ohio." Under our statutes I do not think that the question is even debatable. The legislature has specifically provided for their appointment (Sec. 4808 G. C.); provided for the form of oath to be taken (Sec. 4809); provided their general duties (Sec. 4819); required them to make investigations for violations of the election laws and report same to the state supervisor of elections, and authorized either the state supervisor or the deputy state supervisors to order the prosecution of all offenses against any law of the state relating to the conduct of elections (Sec. 4820). Such boards appoint all registrars, judges and clerks of elections (Sec. 4874), make and issue rules, regulations and instructions, not inconsistent with law, as they deem necessary for governing and guiding their appointees (Sec. 4875), perform all duties imposed by the primary laws of this state (Sec. 4967), pass upon objections or other questions arising in the course of nominations (Sec. 5006), and only in case of disagreement or where no decision can be arrived at is there any provision for submitting the matter to the state supervisor of elections (Sec. 5007).

The deputy state supervisors of elections possess all the indicia of officers. They are persons "holding a * * * executive * * * office created by" the laws of Ohio.

Your attention is called to the case of United States v. Maurice, 2 Brock. 103, in which it was held that an agent of fortifications was an officer of the United States. In that case Chief Justice Marshall, with that ability and learning which characterized all of his judicial utterances, said:

> "An office is defined to be a public charge or employment, and he who performs the duties of an office is an officer. Although an office is an employment, it does not follow that every employment is an office. A man may certainly be employed to do an act or perform a service without becoming an officer. But if that duty be a continuing one, which is defined by rules prescribed by the government, and not by contract, which an individual is appointed by government to perform, who enters upon the duties appertaining to his station without any contract defining them, if those duties continue, though the person be changed, it seems very difficult to distinguish such a charge or employment from an office, or the person who performs the duties from an officer."

Considering the above definition of "office" and "officer," and also considering the statutory provisions creating the position of deputy state supervisor, the nature of the public service to be performed by those deputies, the duties imposed upon them by law within the territorial limits fixed, the fact that many could prescribe duties, are independent of their superior and supervising officer and partake to some extent of the sovereignity of the state, all leads to the inevitable conclusion that as far as the law of this state is concerned the positions thus created by law are offices and that the persons filling these positions are persons filling offices created by statute

While it would be my personal view, interpreting the language of subsection (a) of section 18 of the rules and regulations, that persons filling the position above referred to would be within the exemption, still any view of mine would be controlled absolutely by any different or limited interpretation of such section given by the federal authorities.

Since the preparation of this opinion, I am in receipt of "Compiled Rulings of Provost Marshal General No. 1" under date of July 24, 1917. Provost Marshal General E. H. Crowder on p. 4 of the pamphlet containing said rulings, subsection (s) under the heading "Officers and other persons in Federal or State service," uses the following language:

> "The following ruling governing the status of officers in contemplation of the regulations for local and district boards is to be followed in passing upon claims for exemption or for discharge under section 4 of the act of May 18, and sections 18 and 20 of the regulations for local and district boards."

The following ruling governing the status of officers in contemplation of the regulations for local and district boards is to be followed in passing upon claims for exemption or for discharge under section 4 of the act of May 18 and sections 18 and 20 of the regulations for local and district boards:

"I. Federal service.

* * * * * * * * *

"II. State, territorial, and District of Columbia service.

"Exemptions (regulations No. 18, p. 24). The exemptions extend to the following offices:

"Section 6. 1. Supreme offices. Governor, members of the supreme (i. e., highest) court, members of the appellate (i. e., intermediate revisory) court, members of both branches of the legislature.

"Section 7. 2. Superior offices. (1) All offices, other than the above, filled by popular election for the entire state, and (2) all offices filled by appointment by the governor or by the legislature or by the supreme and appellate courts, for the entire state; and having no intermediate superior between them and the appointing power.

"As an example of the kinds of positions which would fulfill ordinarily one or the other of these requirements, the following list will serve as a guide: attorney general, auditor, commissioner of health, commissioner of public utilities, commissioner of prisons, commissioner of insurance, commissioner of forestry, commissioner of labor, commissioner of railroads, commissioner of workmen's compensation, librarian, lieutenant governor, printer, superintendent of public instruction, treasurer.

"Further requirements. But positions in this class 2 must also fulfill the following requirements: (a) They must form the principal occupation of the incumbent, requiring the substance of his daily work and time; and (b) they must be performed by regular attendance at a building or room furnished by the state, territory, or District of Columbia.

"Section 8. Discharge (regulations No. 20, p. 29). All persons holding in a state, territory, or District of Columbia, other positions than the above must apply for discharge under regulations, section 20, paragraph a, as 'county and municipal officers' if this description applies to them. If it does not apply, their positions are not within the class for whom either exemption or discharge is authorized."

In section 8, above quoted, reference is made to section 20, paragraph "a," as found at p. 30 of the rules and regulations, which reads as follows:

"(a) County and municipal officers. Any county or municipal officer, including therein officers of counties, townships, cities, boroughs, parishes, towns, and villages, who has been elected to his office by popular vote and whose office may not be filled by appointment for an unexpired term, upon presentation to such local board at any time within 10 days after the filing of a claim for discharge by or in respect of such person, of an affidavit made by the county clerk or like officer of the county, township, city, borough, parish, town, or village of which such person is an officer, stating the office held by such person and the date of his election, when his term of office expires, and that the unexpired term of such office may not be filled by appointment; and upon presentation by affidavits of such other evidence as may be required, in the opinion of the local board, to substantiate the claim."

So at this time the Provost Marshal General has laid down a rule which fixes the exemptions under section 18, subsection (a). It is evident from reading his ruling that deputy state supervisors of elections do not come within the exemption therein defined. They are neither 'supreme officers" nor "superior officers" under his ruling. Neither do they fulfill the further requirements that the performance of the duties of the position must form the principal occupation of the incumbent, requiring the substance of his daily work and time; nor that they must be performed by regular attendance at a building or room furnished by the state.

It is well known that with the exception of the larger cities, but very little time must be given by the deputy state supervisors of elections in the discharge of their duties, and even in the larger cities it does not take all their time. Again, the expenses of the building or room used by the election board, if any, is borne by the county and not by the state, and in the majority of instances the county and not the state furnishes the quarters for the election board within the court house. Neither can these election officers come within the definition of county and municipal officers, as found in subsection (a) of section 20 of the rules and regulations.

I am therefore constrained to advise you that under and by virtue of the ruling of Provost Marshal General Crowder, the positions of deputy state supervisors of elections and deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections are not to be regarded as state offices within the purview of that section of the federal conscriptive service act which exempts from such service certain officers of the state and federal governments.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—ADJOURNED MEETING—DEFINED—FAILURE TO READ AND APPROVE MINUTES OF PREVIOUS MEETING—EFFECT THEREOF—COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT—BY WHAT BOARD ELECTED.

An adjourned or continued meeting is but a prolongation or continuation of the meeting from which such adjournment or continuation was had.

The provision of law in reference to reading and approving minutes of previous meeting are directory only and a failure to do so is not such a fatal defect as will justify a court of equity to interfere.

A county superintendent can only be elected by the board which is in power at the beginning of the term of such superintendent.

"H. E. Dening,
"County Superintendent."

The first question I shall determine is the following:

"Were the meetings of January 2, 1917, and January 5, 1917, legal meetings?"

The regular meetings of a county board of education are held under authority of section 4733 G. C., which reads as follows:

"The regular meeting of the county board of education shall be held at the office of the county superintendent. At the time of the first meeting the board shall fix the time for holding its regular meeting. Regular meetings shall be held at least every two months and at the call of the president or any two members. A majority of the board shall constitute a quorum at any regular or special meeting."

Section 4729 G. C. provides that the terms of members of county boards of education shall begin on the third Saturday of January and shall extend for the term of five years. Section 4732 G. C. provides that each county board of education shall meet on the third Saturday of March of each year and the third Saturday of March each year is made the regular meeting at which the organization of the board is perfected. The county superintendent shall act as secretary of the board unless there be no county superintendent, then a temporary secretary shall be chosen, which temporary secretary shall act until a county superintendent has been elected and no longer. At the first meeting of the board provided for, as above mentioned, the board shall fix the time for holding its regular meetings, but it is provided that such regular meetings shall be held at least every two months,—that is, beginning on the 3d Saturday in March a county board of education must hold at least one regular meeting every two months and if the time set by the board for holding such regular meetings is such other time than the third Saturday in March, then said board is compelled by law to hold a regular meering on said day also, for the third Saturday in March, and someone day in each two months, which day is designated by the board, are all prescribed by law as the regular meeting days of the county board of education.

It is also provided that "other" meetings may be held at the call of the president or of any two members. Such "other" meetings are special meetings if they are held upon call and if they are not held as provided by a rule of the board, for if they are held as provided by a rule of the board then they are regular meetings and are not called meetings. The statute recognizes only two general classes of meetings, that is, regular meetings and special meetings, so that the meetings which are fixed by law or a rule of the board, as provided by law, are regular meetings, and those meetings which are upon call either of the president or of any two members of the board, are called or special meetings, but a regular meeting or a special meeting may be adjourned from one day to another.

1 Cyc., 793, says: "To adjourn is to put off until another time and place. It is not more than a continuance of a session from one day to another."

In Harris v. Gest, 4 O. S. 473, in speaking of an adjourned term of court, Thurman, C. J., says:

> "When this power is exercised, the sitting after the adjournment is a prolongation of the regular term, and, in contemplation of law, there is but one term."

An adjourned meeting would, following the above, be a continuation of the meeting from which the adjournment was taken, and it is held in Turpin v. Haggerty, 47 Bull. 809, in a case in which the circuit court was defining "regular sessions," that whenever a statute designates a particular regular session for certain business, as for instance the March, June, September and December regular sessions of the board of county commissioners, that business would have to be done at that particular session or at an adjourned meeting thereof." That is to say, following the above reasoning, when the county superintendent is compelled by law to be elected at a regular session of the county board of education, such superintendent must be so elected at such regular session or meeting, or at an adjourned session or meeting of a regular session or meeting. In other words, a county superintendent could not be elected legally at a special or called meeting or a continuation or adjournment of such special or called meeting.

In Lenhart v. Board of Education, 5 O. N. P. (n. s.) 129, it is held that a second adjourned meeting of a called meeting is a continuation of the original called meeting; and in Bryant v. Goodwin, et al, 9 O. S. 472, an adjourned session of a regular session is a continuation of the regular session.

In Wiswell v. Church, 14 O. S. 31-40, it is held that it is perfectly settled that adjournments are the prolongations of the annual session.

Therefore, following all the above citations, I must conclude that the adjourned or continued meetings of January 2nd and of January 5th were but continuations or prolongations of the regular meeting of December 13, 1916, and were valid regular meetings at which any business which could be transacted at any other regular meeting might be transacted at those regular meetings, except the organization of the board, which by statute is made to take place on the third Saturday in March of each year.

The next question is,

> Was it necessary for the board of education to approve the minutes of the meetings of January 2nd and of January 5th, and if so when could the same be done?

General Code section 4754, and which applies to boards of education generally, reads as follows:

> "The clerk of the board of education shall record the proceedings of each meeting in a book to be provided by the board for that purpoes, which shall be a public record. The record of proceedings at each meeting of the board shall be read at its next succeeding meeting, corrected if necessary, and approved, which approval shall be noted in the proceedings. After such approval the president shall sign the record and the clerk attest it."

The above question was considered in the case of Leathers v. Clouser, decided by the court of appeals of Wood county, May 19, 1915, in which the court held:

> "It is also claimed that the minutes of the meetings of the board of education were not read, nor approved, nor signed at the next succeeding meeting, in conformity to the provisions of law * * *. The requirements of law providing for the reading, approval and signing of the minutes of the board of education at the next succeeding meeting of the board are directory only and a failure to comply therewith is not such a fatal defect as justifies the interference of a court of equity by injunction."

The same being directory only such minutes would, therefore, not need the approval of the board at the next succeeding meeting to make the same valid, for approval or disapproval of minutes is simply to correct or cause such minutes to speak the truth of the business of the board of education which was lawfully transacted at such meeting.

The third question I shall determine is, did the county board of education have a right to hire superintendent Dening for a term of three years, the same to begin August 1, 1917, and could such hiring be done on the 5th day of January, 1917.

General Code section 4744 provides that the county board of education, at a regular meeting held not later than July 20th, shall appoint a county superintendent for a term of not longer than three years. Such term shall commence on the first day of August.

General Code section 7705, which section refers to village and rural schools provides that teachers shall begin their terms within four months from the time of their appointment.

General Code section 7702 provides that the superintendent of city schools shall begin his term within four months of the time of his appointment, but I find nothing in our school laws which provides that the county superintendent must begin his term within any particular time after he is appointed. The only provision is that his term shall begin on the first day of August, which necessarily must mean on the first day of August next following the time of his appointment. The county board of education is a continuing body. One new member is elected each year for the term of five years and such term of office of such member so elected each year shall begin on the 3d Saturday of January so that each year on the third Saturday of January a new member is elected to the county board of education and such new board shall meet on the third Saturday of March of each year and shall organize by electing on of its members president and another vice president, both of whom shall serve but one year. There is in reality, then, while a continuing board, a new addition or a different member upon such board each year and a new organization is had for each separate year. Such county board of education, as noted above, at a regular meeting held not later than July 20th, shall appoint a county superintendent and it is a well recognized principle of law that no appointing power can make an appointment the term of which shall begin after the term of the appointing power. That is to say, the board of education, in exercising the authority under section 4744, and appointing a county superintendent, could not exercise same until the board was in power, which would be in power on August 1st, because August 1st is the day set for the beginning of the term of the county superintendent and the board which is in power on August 1st is the board which organizes on the third Saturday of March, but one member of which is elected on the third Saturday of January of each year.

> "It is admittedly the well-established general rule of law that an officer clothed with authority to appoint to a public office, cannot, in the absence of express statutory authority, make a valid appointment thereto for a term which is not to begin until after the expiration of the term of such appointing officer. Mechem in his work on public offices and officers, at section 133, states the general rule as follows: 'The appointing power cannot forestall the rights and prerogatives of their own successors by appointing successors to office expiring after their power to appoint has itself expired.' The author then quotes with approval the language of Buchanan, J., in Ivy v. Lusk., 11 La. n. 486, where he says: 'That an appointment thus made by anticipation has no other basis than expediency and convenience, and can only derive its binding force and effect from the supposition that there will be no change of person, and consequently of will, on the part of the appointing power, between the date of the exercise of that power by anticipation, and that of the necessity for the exercise of such power by the vacancy of the office.' Throop in his treatise on public officers, section 92, says: 'But it has been held that where an office is to be filled by appointment by the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, the governor and senate cannot forestall their successors, by appointing a person to an office which is then filled by another, whose term will not expire until after the expiration of the terms of the governor and senators. And that an out-going board of freeholders of a county cannot lawfully appoint a person to an office which will not become vacant during their official terms.' The correctness and soundness of the rule and doctrine as above enumerated, so far as investigation has disclosed to us, is not opposed by any of the authorities, but is supported by many, among which are State ex rel. Bownes v. Meehan, 45 N. J. L. 189; The People ex rel. Sweet v. Ward, 107 Cal. 236; Ivy v. Lusk, 11 La. An. 486."

But it is urged that the board being a continuing body the above principle would not apply to it the same as to an appointing officer whose term would expire, or the same as it would to a board the term of which the full membership expires prior to the time such appointed person's term would begin. The above, however, is answered in State ex rel. Attorney General v. Thomson, 6 O. C. D. 106-110, where the following language is used:

> "At the time of the attempted appointment of the defendent by the commissioners, it was known that when the office should become actually vacant the personnel of the board would be changed by the expiration of the term of Mr. Cassidy. For that reason, in addition to the others we have stated, the board had no power to make his appointment."

The appointment referred to above was one to be made by the board of three commissioners, the term of only one of which would expire, but it was considered a new board and one without authority to appoint a person whose term would begin after the term of any member upon the board.

> "In Commissioners v. Ramek, 9 O. C. C., 301, the board of county commissioners employed a janitor on the last day of the term of certain members of said board. On page 308 the court uses the following language.
> "We fully concur in what was said in State ex rel Attorney-General v. Thompson, 6 O. C. D., 106, and believe that in the absence of some necessity or special circumstances, showing that the public good required it, such a contract, as the one under consideration, made by an expiring board, and which has the effect to forestall the action of its successor for a year, is not only evidence of unseemly conduct on the part of the members of the board, but in its object, operation and tendency, is calculated to be prejudicial to the public interests, and is against public policy and void.
> "The maxim, omnia praesumuntur rite esse acta rests largely on the ground of public policy, so that in a case of this character, where the contract prima facie has a bad tendency, the maxim does not apply, and a court might well refuse to enforce the contract in the absence of a showing that it was made in good faith, and in the interests of the public, even though it might hold that the question of the necessity for the employment of a janitor was one of discretion and not of jurisdiction. This contract was made on Saturday, the last working day of the board. On the following Monday, the new board came into existence. No necessity of an employment for a year is shown. Indeed it is conceded by the pleadings that the employment was unnecessary, and a contract made under such circumstances and for such length of time, is strong evidence, to say the least, that the only object in making the contract was to forestall the action of the new board. We, therefore, hold that the contract is void, as against public policy."

I must therefore conclude that the county board of education has no authority to appoint a county superintendent whose term will begin after the term of any member of such board, or, in other words, that such appointment can only be made after such new board has organized on the third Saturday of March in each year in which a vacancy occurs in such position.

In the second question you inquire in reference to supervision districts of the county. Supervision districts are provided for by section 4738, which reads as follows:

> "The county board of education shall divide the county school district, any year, to take effect the first day of the following September, into supervision districts, each to contain one or more village or rural school districts. The territory of such supervision districts shall be contiguous and compact. In the formation of the supervision districts consideration shall be given to the number of teachers employed, the amount of consolidation and centralization, the condition of the roads and general topography. The territory in the different districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable and the number of teachers employed in any one supervision district shall not be less than thirty. The county board of education shall, upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county, redistrict the county into supervision districts. The county board of education may at their discretion require the county superintendent to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers of the village or rural schools of the county. This shall supersede the necessity of the district supervision of these schools."

That is to say, the county board of education, when it determines that it is necessary to do so, shall divide the county school district into supervision districts any year, but that such division shall take effect on the first day of the following September. It is not necessary for the county board of education to await the application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards before such division is made. It may be made without any such application.

This department held in Opinion No. 94, rendered to Hon. Charles H. Jones, prosecuting attorney, Jackson, Ohio, under date of March 9, 1917, as follows:

> "The re-districting may be perfomed by the county board of education any year and upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural boards of education the county board of education must redistrict the county into supervision districts."

During the school year beginning September 1, 1916, your county school district had four supervision districts and on January 12, 1917, under and by virtue of section 4738, above quoted, the county board of education divided the school district into two supervision districts, as set forth in the resolution of that date. On April 11, 1917, the county board of education passed a resolution rescinding the action of the board of January 12th and resolving "that said Adams county continues to be divided into four districts the same as originally divided by this board." That is to say, the board determined on April 11th that the action of the board on January 12th should not stand, and that the conditions warranted a division of the county school district into four supervision districts instead of only two. This, I am of the opinion, the board had a right to do, although there is some question as to whether or not the board has a right to act again upon this matter after it has once acted, and especially after certain other statutory acts intervene. Some of such other statutory acts are the meeting of the presidents of the boards of education within such supervision district, or in supervision districts, which contain three or less village or rural districts, the boards of education of such districts to elect a district superintendent, or, the certificate of the county auditor of the salary of the district superintendents employed, or the apportionment of the school funds by the county auditor. A decision of this question is not necessary to answer your inquiry and I am not determining same definitely.

So that, answering your second question, I advise you that the county board of education did have the right to divide the county into supervision districts on April 11, 1917, and that the original division into supervision districts will stand.

The direct answer to your several questions, then, is as follows:

First, from the minutes of the county board of education, quoted above, superintendent Hostetter is the legally employed superintendent and his term will begin August 1, 1917, and extend three years.

Second, there are four supervision districts in Adams county as shown by the minutes above mentioned.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CIVIL SERVICE LAW—WHAT SCHOOLS ARE INCLUDED THEREIN.

Paragraph 12 of section 8 of the civil service law includes the institutions and schools therein mentioned, whether the same be those of the state at large or whether they be under the control of political subdivisions thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 4, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a communication under date of July 16, 1917, from Hon. Charles A. Groom, city solicitor, Cincinnati, Ohio, and as the same concerns a matter of state-wide interest and importance, I am taking the liberty of expressing my views concerning this matter in an opinion addressed to you.

The communication is as follows:

> "May a municipal civil service commission exempt from the classified service teachers in city, penal or reformatory institutions, such as for instance the house of refuge, and student employes in a city university, such as the university of Cincinnati, when it finds it impracticable to include such employes in competitive classified service?
> "Paragraph 12 of section 486-8 General Code (106 Ohio laws 405) provides:
> "'12. Such teachers and employes in the agricultural experiment stations; such teachers in the benevolent, penal or reformatory institutions of the state; such student employes in normal schools, colleges and universities of the state; and such unskilled labor positions as the state commission or any municipal commission may find it impracticable to include in the competitive classified service; provided, that such exemptions shall be by order of the commission duly entered on the record of the commission with the reasons for each such exemption.'
> "You will note that the reference is to teachers in benevolent, penal or reformatory institutions of the state, and such student employes in normal schools, colleges and universities of the state, and such labor positions as the state commission or any municipal commission may find it impracticable to include in the competitive classified service; while subdivision '(b)' states that the classified service shall comprise all persons in the employ of the state and several counties, cities and city school districts thereof not specifically included in the unclassified service, to be designated as the competitive class and the unskilled labor class, and further specifies in paragraph 1, under subdivision (b) that the competitive class shall include employments in cities for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness of applicants by competitive examinations.
> "By the use of the words 'of the state' in connection with the mention of the municipal commission, the designation only of competitive and unskilled labor classes thereafter, and the further specification that the competitive class include those positions in cities for which it is practicable to determine the merit and fitness by competitive examinations, was it intended to use the term 'of the state' in the restricted sense of institutions maintained by the state in its separate governmental capacity, or was it intended to include such institutions maintained by the state through its local governmental agencies?
> "For the sake of uniformity in operating under paragraph 12 of section 485-8 I would appreciate your opinion."

In the section of the code copied in the above inquiry the phrase "of the state," used in reference to teachers and employes in the agricultural experiment stations, and in the benevolent, penal and reformatory institutions and students employed in normal schools, etc., has exactly the same meaning as if it read "in the state," and the section, therefore, includes all such teachers in this state in any such institution or school therein named, existing by virtue of the law of the state. The natural meaning of the words is just as susceptible to this general interpretation as would be the more restricted meaning suggested by you, and no reason is apparent for restricting its application to those institutions or schools under the control of the state at large as distinguished from political divisions thereof. Besides, if there were any doubt, the inclusion of a municipal commission would solve it, as a municipal commission has authority in municipal corporations and in the school district included in such municipal corporation, or which includes it, while the state service includes all other branches of the civil service, whether it be the service of the state at large or of other political divisions thereof than cities and city school districts. The extension of authority therefor to the municipal civil service commission necessarily means that employes under its control are within the provisions of the section. This meaning is not affected by the relative position of the phrase in question, as suggested in your inquiry. The phrase "as the state commission or any municipal commission may find it impracticable to include in the competitive classified service" applies to all the employes enumerated above it, as the section and each clause in the series begins with the word "such." The competitive classified service is the whole classified service and the whole civil service under the supervision of the commission. Section 486-1 contains the following:

> "(3) The term 'classified service' signifies the competitive classified civil service of the state, the several counties, cities and city school districts thereof."

This presents an apparent conflict with paragraphs 1 and 2 of subdivision (b) of section 486-8, where the competitive class seems to include the unskilled labor class, which labor is placed under the authority of the civil service commission. The conflict, however, is not important and only presents an additional particular to that mentioned in the definition and thereby supplements the latter, which to that extent is incomplete.

You are therefore advised that the municipal civil service commission may, by proper order upon their record, omit the appointees in question from the competitive classified service.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONTRACTOR—WORKING FOR STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT—MAY ASSIGN MONEY DUE HIM.

A person or firm contracting with the state highway commissioner for the construction of an inter-county highway, under the provisions of the Cass highway law, may assign money due or to become due under such contract with the state and the assignee thereby obtains an enforceable right to such payment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 4, 1917.

HON. CHESTER E. BYYAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 26, 1917, you addressed a communication to me in which you requested my opinion as to the necessity of having all future warrants drawn in favor of Philip Dieffenbacher & Sons, endorsed by the Southern Surety Company, which company, it appears, is surety on the bond of said Philip Dieffenbacher & Sons on their contract with the state for the construction of section "G" of I. C. H. No. 145, Holmes county, Ohio. From a communication addressed to you by the Southern Surety Company, under date of May 10, 1917, it appears that at the time of the execution of said bond said surety company, for its protection thereunder, took from Philip Dieffenbacher & Sons an assignmentof all payments to become due to them for the construction of said improvement. The terms of the contract executed by Philip Dieffenbacher & Sons, whereby said payments were assigned to said surety company, are in words as follows:

> "In consideration of the execution of said bond by The Southern Surety Company, we the undersigned hereby covenant with said company * * *.
> "That we, the undersigned, will at all times indemnify and keep indemnified said company and hold it safe and harmless from and against any and all liability, damages, loss, cost, charges and expense of whatsoever kind or nature * * * which the company shall or may at any time sustain or incur by reason or in consequence of having executed the bond herein applied for * * * and that we will pay over, reimburse and make good to said company all sums and the amounts of money which said company shall pay or cause to be paid or become liable to pay on account of the execution of said instrument * * * and for the better protection of said company, we, the undersigned, do as of the date hereof hereby convey and assign unto the said company any and all payments, funds, moneys or property due or to become due to the undersigned as provided in said contract (contract between Dieffenbacher & Sons and the state)."

The inquiry made by you depends upon the question whether by said assignment the Southern Surety Company took an enforceable right in the payment thereafter becoming due to Dieffenbacher & Sons from the state in the construction of said inter-county highway improvement. In this connection it may be observed that although said contract between Dieffenbacher & Sons and the state, for the construction of said inter-county highway, cannot have the effect of investing Deffenbacher & Sons, or any body through them, with an enforceable right of action against the state in its sovereign capacity, nevertheless, any person legally entitled to the payments coming due from the state in the performance of said contract would undoubtedly have a right to institute an action in mandamus against the proper state officer to secure payment of such claims. Though you do not so state, I assume that the contract for the construction of the inter-county highway improvement referred to in the correspondence attached to your communication was entered into under the provisions of chapter 8 of the Cass highway law relating to the construction and improvement of roads by the state highway department, which law went into effect September 6, 1915, and the provisions of which relating to the construction and improvement of roads by the state highway department have been carried into the General Code as sections 1178 to 1231-3 inclusive.

Section 1218 G. C. provides that each contract under the provisions of the chapter of which the section is a part shall, except as otherwise provided in the act, be made in the name of the state and executed on its behalf by the state highway commissioner and attested by the secretary of the department.

Section 1208 G. C. provides that before entering into a contract, the state highway commissioner shall require a bond with sufficient sureties, conditioned that the contractor will perform the work upon the terms proposed within the time prescribed and in accordance with the plans and specifications thereof, and that the contractor will indemnify the said county or township against any damages that may result by reason of the negligence of the contractor in making said improvements. This section further provides that such bond shall also be conditioned for the payment of all material and labor for or used in the construction of roads for which such contract is made, and which is furnished to the original contractor or subcontractor, agent or superintendent of either engaged in said work. It is further provided that such bond may be enforced against the person, persons or company executing such bonds, by any claimant for labor and material, and suit may be brought against such bond in the name of the state of Ohio with relation to any claimant within one year from the date of delivery or furnishing such labor or material, and that such bond, or surety thereon, shall not be released by the execution of any additional security, note or other instrument on account of any such claim, or any reason whatsoever except the full payment of such claim for labor and material.

By section 1212 G. C. it is provided that the state's proportion of the cost and expense of construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of a highway, under the provisions of said chapter relating to the construction of highways by the state highway department shall be paid by the treasurer of state upon the warrant of the auditor of state, and that the proportion of the cost and expense of such construction or improvement to be borne by the county, township and property owners shall be paid by the treasurer of the county in which the highway is located, upon the warrant of the county auditor, issued upon the requisition of the state highway commissioner. There being no stipulation or statutory provision in the contract between the state and Dieffenbacher & Sons to the contrary, I know of no reason why Dieffenbacher & Sons could not legally assign to the surety company payments thereafter to become due them under their then existing contract with the state.

> "As to money due or to become due under a contract with a government, it is well settled that an assignment thereof is valid unless prohibited by statute or stipulated to the contrary."

Such assignment of payments thereafter becoming due on a contract between a contractor and a state, or a political subdivision thereof, cannot be made to the detriment of rights of those furnishing labor or material to such contractor, where the rights of those furnishing such labor and material have been secured by statutory provision applicable to the case.

> General Fireproofing v. Keepsdry Construction Company, 173 App. Div. (N. Y.) 528.

With respect to this question, however, it will be noted that there is nothing in the provisions of the Cass highway law, under which the contract between Dieffenbacher & Sons and the state was executed, which confers any right upon those furnishing labor and material to the contractor in the money due him from the state by lien or otherwise. On the contrary, express provision is made for the security of such persons by giving them a right to proceed on the bond which the contractor was required to furnish under the provisions of section 1208, above noted.

In the case of State of Washington ex rel vs. Cheetham, Auditor of State, 17 Wash., 131, it was held that under a statute providing for the construction of a state normal school building and making appropriation therefor, the contractor and his assigns, upon completion of the building, were entitled to warrants for the amount due upon the contract price, although the contract in that case provided that the contractor must first show that all debts due for labor and material had been paid. The court held that in the absence of such requirement in the statute there was no privity between the state and such claimants on account of labor and material furnished to the contractor and that the fact that the contractor had assigned a portion of the sum due him for the erection of such building in the payment of his personal debts, while claims in connection with the construction of the building remained unpaid, did not justify the state auditor in refusing to issue warrants in payment of the orders issued by the contractor.

I am therefore of the opinion that by the assignment set out in the communication addressed to you by the Southern Surety Company, such surety company obtains an enforceable right to the payments thereafter coming due Dieffenbacher & Sons in the performance of their contract with the state for the construction of said inter-county highway improvement and that before paying any warrants in favor of Dieffenbacher & Sons on such contract you should have the consent of the surety company to such payments endorsed thereon.

Before closing this opinion I feel impelled to make a few observations which are not, perhaps, strictly necessary in the consideration of the precise question submitted by you. In the first place the conclusion here reached, that the contractors, Dieffenbacher & Sons, had a legal right to assign money due or to become due to them on their contract with the state, is predicated, of course, upon the facts here appearing that such assignment carried all the moneys due or to become due under said contract and the conclusion here reached as to Dieffenbacher & Sons' right to make the assignment in question would not hold good with reference to an assignment which carried to the assignee a part only of a claim which may be due and owing to the contractor, for it has been an established principle that an assignment of a part of a debt cannot be enforceable by law unless assented to by the debtor.

Railway Company v. Bolkert, 58 O. S., 362, 369.

In the second place I note from the correspondence attached to your communication that although you, in your official capacity as treasurer of state, received notice of this assignment by Dieffenbacher & Sons, as likewise did the state highway commissioner and certain county officials, no notice of the assignment appears to have been given to the auditor of state.

Under section 243 of the General Code the auditor of state is required to examine each claim presented for payment from the state treasury and if he finds it legally due and that there is money in the treasury duly appropriated to pay it, he shall issue to the person entitled to receive the money thereon a warrant on the treasurer of state for the amount found due.

By section 301 it is provided that no money shall be paid out of the state treasury except on the warrant of the auditor of state. A consideration of the provisions of the sections just noted makes it clear that the notice of such assignment should have been directed to the auditor of state rather than to yourself, but I am holding in this opinion that inasmuch as a matter of fact you did receive notice of this assignment, the proper thing for you to do, in order to avoid future complications with respect to moneys becoming due and payable on this particular contract, is to require the consent of the surety company to such payment before paying warrants drawn in favor of Dieffenbacher & Sons. Lastly, I may note that section 1208 General Code, above referred to, has been amended by the act of the legislature under date of March 20th, 1917, so as to provide that the state highway commissioner shall not draw his requisition for a warrant on account of any contract until it appears by the affidavit of such contractor, or its officer or agent in case the contractor is a corporation, that all such indebtedness of such contractor, on account of material incorporated into the work or delivered on the site of the improvement, or labor performed thereon, has been paid. This section, as amended, further gives the persons furnishing such labor or material the right to protect and enforce a lien to the extent of their claims against the money due the contractor from the state.

It is obvious, from what has been said above with respect to the amendment of section 1208 G. C., that the conclusion reached by me with respect to the particular case mentioned in your communication would not apply to contracts with the state highway commissioner made and entered into on behalf of the state after the amendment of section 1208 went into effect. As to such contract, no assignment can be made which either you or the auditor of state is required to recognize, if there are any outstanding claims for labor or material furnished the contractor in the performance of his contract with the state; and if such recognition on the part of yourself or the auditor of state will have the effect of prejudicing the payment for such labor and material so furnished to the contractor.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

I have carefully examined these final resolutions and, with the exception of those hereinafter specifically noted, find them correct in form and legal, and have therefore endorsed my approval thereon and return the same to you.

However, there are several of the final resolutions which are not regular in form and ought to be corrected before I approve the same.

1. In the final resolution having to do with I. C. H. No. 134, section 'h,' Greens burg township, Putnam county, the certificate of the clerk of the township shows that the final resolution was entered into on April 26, 1916, while the resolution itself shows the same to have been entered into on July 20, 1917.

2. The final resolution relative to I. C. H. No. 87, section 'U-1,' Mahoning county, sets forth that the preliminary application to the state highway department for state aid was made on the 28th day of December, 1917, which of course is not correct.

3. The certificate of the county auditor, in the final resolution relating to I. C. H. No. 18, section 'R-1,' Mahoning county, to the effect that the money was in the treasury to the credit of the appropriate fund, was made on July 20, 1917, while the final resolution entered into by the county commissioners was dated December 28, 1914. This is not in harmony with the provisions of section 5660 G. C., which requires that the certificate of the proper officer shall first be filed before the entering into of any contract or resolution.

4. In regard to I. C. H. No. 79, section 'A,' Holmes county, the resolution itself shows that it was entered into on June 19, 1917, while the certificate of the county auditor states that the final resolution was entered into on July 19, 1917. The certificate of the county auditor, to the effect that the money was in the treasury to the credit of the proper fund, was also made on July 19, 1917, some time after the 19th day of June, 1917. Undoubtedly July 19, 1917 is the proper date, rather than June 19, 1917, but this should be corrected.

5. In I. C. H. No. 399, section 'F-1,' Gallia county, there was a mistake made in the amount of money appropriated by the chief clerk of the state highway department, in that he appropriated the sum of $9,845.00, instead of $9,485.00, the sum which the state highway department is to furnish toward the improvement of said highway. Inasmuch as this is a step that is not particularly required by law, I have endorsed my approval on said final resolution. It might be well, however, for your department to make these figures stand as they should, namely, $9,485.00.

You also call my attention to section 2288-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 457), and make inquiry as to whether the state auditor under the provisions of said section would have to make his certificate before the chief clerk could appropriate the different sums of money set out in the different final resolutions. You suggest that the first steps in the matter of these final resolutions were taken prior to the date upon which the act, of which section 2288-1 G. C. is a part, became effective, and therefore you inquire whether the provisions of the old law would apply, and not those of the new law.

It is my opinion that the provisions of the new law would apply, notwithstanding the fact that the first steps in the matter of these final resolutions were taken prior to the taking effect of the new act. This certificate of the state auditor has nothing whatever to do with any of the steps in the proceedings up until the time that the state highway commissioner shall enter into a contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the expenditure of money.

Hence it is my opinion that the provisions of section 2288-1 G. C. should be made to apply from the taking effect of the act in reference to all expenditures of money. But the question arises, when the provisions of this section would apply in reference to the procedure of your department. It is my opinion that the provisions of this section would apply to the entering into of the contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, and not to the appropriation of money as set out in your final resolutions, for the reason that there is no provision of law requiring the formal appropriation by your department of money which is to enter into the payment of the improvement of a highway.

The first instance in which your department binds the state to pay out money is when it enters into the contract, agreement or obligation with a contractor, to improve a certain highway. Hence it is my opinion that the certificate of the auditor of state should be secured as provided in section 2288-1 G. C., before your department enters into such a contract, agreement or obligation, and not necessarily before the formal appropriation which your department makes.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MATRON—EMPLOYED TO CARE FOR SICK EMPLOYES IN FACTORY—IS WITHIN THE PROVISIONS OF SECTION 1008 G. C.—FIFTY HOUR LAW.

A matron employed in a factory to look after the needs of both male and female employes in case of sickness or accident is within the provisions of section 1008 G. C. which prohibits the employment of females in certain establishments, irrespective of the character of work that they may be called upon to perform therein.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 7, 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your communication of July 12th you state

"We are in receipt of the following letter from the Diamond Match Company, Barberton, Ohio:

" 'We have a matron at our factory and I would very much like to know if she comes under the lately enacted fifty hour law for women.

" 'You understand a matron's duty is to look after all the needs of both male and female employes in case of sickness or accident, and inasmuch as departments employing men only work ten hours per day, it is absolutely necessary that our matron be on hand.

" 'Will you kindly give the interpretation of the law in this case and greatly oblige?'

"Section 1008 of the General Code reads as follows:

" 'Females over eighteen years of age shall not be employed or suffered to work in or in connection with any factory or workshop more than nine hours per day, etc.'

"In view of the fact that the law does not apply to this class of employment in hospitals, homes, etc., we should like to have your opinion as to whether it is applicable in this case."

Section 1008 of the General Code (107 O. L. 149), reads:

"* * * Females over eighteen years of age shall not be employed or permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with any factory, workshop, * * * more than nine hours in any one day, except Saturday, when the hours of labor in mercantile establishments may be ten hours, or more than six days, or more than fifty hours in any one week, * * *."

It is suggested that since the matron's duty is to look after all the needs of both male and female employes in case of sickness or accident, and since there is no inhibition against females performing this character of work in hospitals and homes, that possibly such a matron would not be included within the provisions of the section.

In the case submitted it is admitted that the matron is employed or permitted or suffered to work in or in connection with a factory. Plainly, then, she is within the letter of this enactment. The exception found in the act only applies to canneries and establishments engaged in preparing for use perishable goods, during the season they are engaged in canning their products.

It will be noted that the inhibition is against females over eighteen years of age working in or in connection with certain named establishments. The exception also applies to certain establishments. The prohibition is not against the character of the work done or services performed; neither is the exception along that line.

> "2. Including hotels among the specified establishments in which women must not be employed more than eight hours in one day, or forty-eight hours in one week, does not render the statute invalid as discriminatory, although the classification may, to some extent, be based upon the nature of the employer's business rather than the character of the employe's work."

In this case, at page 834, Justice Hughes refers to the fact that the case of Hawley v. Walker, 232 U. S. 718, which arose under the Ohio act prohibiting the employment of "females over eighteen years of age" to work in "any factory, workshop, etc." was held constitutional, and, following that case, the court held that the California statute which was under discussion was likewise constitutional. It had been urged, among other things, that the California statute was invalid because the classification was based on the nature of the employer's business and not upon the character of the employe's work. The court, referring to the objection urged as stated above, uses this language: (page 834).

> "With respect to the last of these objections, it is sufficient to say that the character of the work may largely depend upon the nature and incidents of the business in connection with which the work is done. The legislature is not debarred from classifying according to general considerations and with regard to prevailing conditions; otherwise, there could be no legislative power to classify. For it is always possible by analysis to discover inequalities as to some persons or things embraced within any specified class. A classification based simply on a general description of work would almost certainly bring within the class a host of individual instances exhibiting very wide differences; it is impossible to deny to the legislature the authority to take account of these differences, and to do this according to practical groupings in which, while certain individual distinctions may still exist, the group selected will, as a whole, fairly present a class in itself. Frequently such groupings may be made with respect to the general nature of the business in which the work is performed; and, where a distinction based on the nature of the business is not an unreasonable one, considered in its general application, the classification is not to be condemned."

It would seem, then, that the legislature has prohibited the employment of females in certain establishments, irrespective of the character of work that they may be called upon to perform therein. In the instant case the duties of the matron would have no bearing upon the matter. The law forbids the employment of females over eighteen years of age in or in connection with a factory. It is plainly evident that the matron in question is employed in and in connection with the match factory, and it is my opinion that she is clearly within the provisions of said section 1008 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF SECTION 2411 AUTHORIZING THE EMPLOYMENT OF CIVIL ENGINEERS BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The provisions of section 2411 General Code are not in contravention of section 2 of Article X of the Constitution. The said engineer and assistants are not officers in the constitutional sense, but are mere employes of the board of county commissioners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 7, 1917.

HON. ROBERT P. DUNCAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 30, 1917, in which you ask my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "The commissioners of Franklin county, in January, 1917, employed a civil engineer who was neither the surveyor of said county, nor an assistant to said surveyor, to prepare plans for two county bridges, under the provisions of section 2411, General Code, * * *
> "1. What effect does section 2, article X, Ohio Constitution, have on the appointment made by the commissioners of Franklin county under the provisions of section 2411 General Code, in the light of section 2792 General Code, which latter section requires a county official, to wit: the county surveyor to perform all duties for the county now or hereafter authorized or declared by law to be done by a civil engineer or surveyor, and which further says that he shall prepare all plans, specifications, etc., for the construction of bridges, etc., constructed under the authority of any board within and for the county?
> "2. Can a contract of the nature mentioned in section 2343, General Code, be entered into by the county commissioners, based upon the plans and specifications prepared by the engineer appointed under the provisions of section 2411 General Code?"

The question submitted in your communication has to do with the constitutionality of section 2411 General Code. That is, you raise the question as to whether the provisions of section 2411 General Code are constitutional when taken in connection with the provisions of section 2792 General Code. The particular section of the constitution which is called into question is section 2 of artilce X, which reads:

> "County officers shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, by the electors of each county in such manner, and for such term, not exceeding three years, as may be provided by law."

If the engineer provided for in section 2411 General Code is a county officer, then in that event the provisions of the section would not be constitutional, and this from the fact that all county officers must be elected under the provisions of section 2 of article X of the constitution, and not appointed as provided for in said section 2411.

In order to get a correct understanding not only of a number of the sections of the General Code which I shall consider hereafter, but also an understanding of the holding of our supreme court in reference to the matter under consideration, it will be necessary for me to note the provisions of section 845 Revised Statutes. This section included within its provisions a number of different and distinct matters. Among others it included provision giving power to the county commissioners to employ an engineer, assistant engineers, rod men, and inspectors, which part of the section reads as follows:

"Whenever in any county the services of an engineer are required with respect to roads, turnpikes, ditches, or bridges or to their improvement or construction, or with respect to any other matter, requiring the services of an engineer, and whenever said board, on account of the amount of work to be performed, shall deem it necessary, said board, upon the written request of the county surveyor, may employ a competent engineer and as many assistant engineers, rodmen, and inspectors, as may be needed, and shall furnish said engineer and assistants with suitable offices and with the necessary books, stationery, instruments and implements for the proper performance of the duties required of such persons. Said engineer, assistants, rodmen, and inspectors shall perform such duties as may be imposed upon them by such board."

It also includes provisions giving power to the county commissioners to employ legal counsel, which part of the section reads as follows:

"Whenever the board of county commissioners of any county deems it advisable, it may employ legal counsel and the necessary assistants upon such terms as it may deem for the best interests of the county, for the performance of the duties herein enumerated. Such counsel shall be the legal adviser of the board of county commissioners and the board of control, where there is such board, and of all other county officers, of the annual county board of equalization, the decennial county board of equalization, the decennial county board of revision, and the board of review; and any of said boards and officers may require of him written opinions or instructions in any matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions, which any of the boards above named may direct, or, to which it or any of said officers may be a party, and shall also perform such duties and services as are now required to be performed by prosecuting attorneys under sections 799, 1277, 1278-a and 3977 of the Revised Statutes, and as may at any time be required by said board of county commissioners."

Section 845 Revised Statutes was divided into a number of sections when it was carried over into the General Code, the above quoted sections becoming sections 2411 and 2412 of the General Code. Section 2411 General Code reads practically as it did in the Revised Statutes as follows:

"When the services of an engineer are required with respect to roads, turnpikes, ditches or bridges, or with respect to any other matter, and when, on account of the amount of work to be performed, the board deems it necessary, upon the written request of the county surveyor, the board may employ a competent engineer and as many assistant engineers, rodmen and inspectors as may be needed, and shall furnish suitable offices, necessary books, stationery, instruments and implements for the proper performance of the duties imposed on them by such board."

Section 2412 General Code reads entirely differently from what it read in the Revised Statutes, and is as follows:

"If it deems it for the best interests of the county, upon the written request of the prosecuting attorney, the board of county commissioners may employ legal counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney in the prosecution or defense of any suit or action brought by or against the county commissioners or other county officers and boards, in their official capacity."

In State ex rel. v. Cannon et al., 12 C. C. N. S. 103, the court held that part of section 845 Revised Statutes which gave the commissioners power to employ legal counsel unconstitutional, on the ground that it contravened section 2 of article X of the constitution. The judgment of the circuit court was affirmed without report by the Supreme Court in 80 Ohio Statutes 756.

The question now is as to whether section 2411 General Code, originally a part of section 845 Revised Statutes, is not unconstitutional on the same ground and for the same reasons as set forth by the court holding that part of section 845 Revised Statutes unconstitutional which had to do with the selection of legal counsel. In order to answer this question let us note the argument of the circuit court which led it to the conclusion that said part of section 845 Revised Statutes is unconstitutional. In the opinion of the court on page 105 the court laid down the following basic proposition:

> "If the positions which the several defendants occupy and the duties required of them are such as to constitute them officers, it is clear that the statute authorizing their appointment by the board of county commissioners is in contravention of this constitutional provision."

The court then points out the numerous and varied duties which the legal counsel so selected had to perform, in part, as follows:

> "Such counsel shall be the legal adviser of the board of county commissioners, and of all other county officers, of the annual county board of equalization, the decennial county board of revision, and the board of review; and any of said boards and officers may require of him written opinions or instructions in any matters connected with their official duties. He shall prosecute and defend all suits and actions, which any of the boards above named may direct, or to which it or any of said officers may be a party; * * *"

He shall also perform such duties and services as may at any time be required by said board of county commissioners; he shall determine and certify that contracts named in section 799 Revised Statutes are in accordance with law; shall be the legal adviser of the county commissioners and all other county officers; shall have the power in the name of the state to apply to a court of competent jurisdiction to restrain the mis-application of funds, the completion of illegal contracts and the recovery back for the county of moneys illegally paid out.

The court after setting out the above duties which were to be performed by legal counsel so selected by the county commissioners under favor of section 845 Revised Statutes concludes as follows:

> "That most of these duties, if not all of them, are official duties, duties which can only be performed by a public officer, would seem to be beyond question, under any definition of what constitutes an officer with which we are acquainted."

From the duties imposed upon said legal counsel, it would hardly seem that the court would have arrived at any other conclusion than that to which it came—that a legal counsel selected by the county commissioners was clothed with almost as broad and ample powers as was the prosecuting attorney.

We now come to the question as to whether section 2411 is open to the same criticism as was that part of section 845 of the Revised Statutes upon which the court passed in the above case.

I am of the opinion that it is not.

When said section 2411 is studied carefully, we find its scope to be entirely different from the matter upon which the court passed above. The engineer is employed for some specific matter or duty in reference to roads, turnpikes, ditches or bridges. He is employed for some particular work on account of the inability of the county surveyor to perform the same due to the amount of work which he already has on hand to perform. Further, the county surveyor must make a written request for assistants. The engineer so selected upon the request of the county surveyor has certain duties imposed upon him, as is evidenced by the latter part of the section, which provides that he shall be furnished with suitable offices, necessary books, stationery, instruments and implements for the proper performance of the duties imposed on him by such board of county commissioners.

In other words, he is the employe of the county commissioners at the request of the county surveyor to perform some certain specific duties. He is a sort of assistant to the county surveyor, selected not by the county surveyor but by the county commissioners. He is in no sense an officer; he is not given general, continuous and official duties to perform.

The main requirements necessary to constitute an officer are generally given as follows: "The person must occupy a permanent position and not a mere occasional or temporary one. He must be invested with some portion of the sovereignty of the state. He usually is required to take an official oath, and generally is required to give bond. He is invested with the right to discharge the duties of some particular office provided by law or by the constitution. Mere employment has none of these distinguishing features. A person employed acts only on behalf of his principal. In the case under consideration he merely performs the duties which are placed upon him by the county commissioners who are the employers. So that, I am of the opinion that the engineer provided for in section 2411 General Code is not in any sense an officer, but a mere employe.

In arriving at the above conclusion I am not unmindful of section 2792 General Code, which reads as follows:

> "The county surveyor shall perform all duties for the county now or hereafter authorized or declared by law to be done by a civil engineer or surveyor. He shall prepare all plans, specifications, details, estimates of cost, and submit forms of contracts for the construction or repair of all bridges, culverts, roads, drains, ditches and other public improvements, except buildings, constructed under the authority of any board within and for the county. When required by the county commissioners, he shall inspect all bridges and culverts, and on or before the first day of June of each year report their condition to the commissioners. Such report shall be made oftener if the commissioners so require."

But notwithstanding the fact that this section provides for the county surveyor's performing all the work set out in the section, we know that the county surveyor cannot personally do all of the said work, and therefore provision is made for assistants in section 2788 General Code, which provides:

> "The county surveyor shall appoint such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office * * *."

In my opinion section 2411 General Code was enacted for the purpose merely of taking care of an emergency. For all the ordinary help which the county surveyor needs he himself appoints assistants and deputies, but when an emergency arises for which his ordinary office help is not sufficient, the county commissioners may, upon the request of the county surveyor, appoint assistants to take care of the emergency. Hence the engineer and the assistants provided for in section 2411 Genral Code are practically assistants to the county surveyor selected not by himself under section 2788 General Code, but by the county commissioners.

I desire to call attention to two opinions rendered by my predecessor, Honorable Timothy S. Hogan. One is found in the report of the attorney-general for 1913, Vol. II, page 1144, in which he was asked the question: "Can commissioners for the purposes of the above (preparing plans and specifications for a bridge) employ engineer or architect under section 2411?" Mr. Hogan, in the second branch of the syllabus, held as follows:

> "Under section 2792, General Code, it is the duty of the county surveyor to prepare all plans and specifications necessary for bridge improvements, and assistants for such work may not be employed except upon the request of the county surveyor in accordance with section 2411 General Code."

And in the opinion, at page 1146, he makes the following statement:

> "The commissioners, however, cannot employ such engineer and assistants, under section 2411, unless a request therefor is first made in writing, by the county surveyor; nor can they employ an engineer or architect to prepare plans and specifications for bridges, under section 2343, without the requisition of the county surveyor."

In Vol. II, Report of the Attorney-General for the year 1914, at page 1262, in passing upon the question of the employment of legal counsel to assist the prosecuting attorney of a county, Mr. Hogan uses the following language: (p. 1264.)

> "* * * it is clear that it is primarily the duty of the prosecuting attorney of your county to defend the county auditor and county treasurer in the suits referred to, but if he deems it for the best interest of the county, he may request the county commissioners to appoint counsel to assist him in these cases, and the commissioners may employ such counsel by virtue of section 2412."

It must be remembered, however, that Mr. Hogan used this language in reference to section 2412 General Code, which was entirely modified from the way in which it stood as a part of section 845 Revised Statutes. So that, answering your question specifically, I am of the opinion that the provisions of section 2411 General Code do not contravene the provisions of section 2, article X of the constitution, and that the county commissioners of Franklin county had authority to employ an engineer and assistants under said section to make plans and specifications for the erection of bridges in said county. The answer to your second question naturally follows from the answer to the first and that is, the county commissioners may use the plans and specifications prepared by the engineer appointed under the provisions of section 2411 General Code as a basis for a contract under the provisions of section 2343 General Code.

I am assuming, in rendering the above opinion, that the county surveyor notified the county commissioners that on account of the amount of work to be performed the services of an engineer would be required in the matter of making the plans and specifications for the bridges mentioned in said request. I have learned this to be the fact both from the prosecuting attorney's office and from the county surveyor's office.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

STATE CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION—POWER TO LIMIT COMPETITION FOR CERTAIN POSITION. SUPPLEMENTAL TO OPINION NO. 358.

1. The state civil service commission, acting under section 486-10 is required to limit competition on any of the grounds therein mentioned, when and to the extent that the same are laid down as qualifications for office by the constitution or statutes, or as limitations on the employing power by statutes which are consistent with the civil service amendment to the constitution. The limitation in the law relating to the appointment of district mine inspectors, requiring such inspectors to have been residents of the district for which appointed, for a specified time prior appointment, is of this character.

2. Said commission, under said section is also authorized to limit competition on any of said grounds, when the same are not expressly laid down in the statutes as such qualifications or limitations on the appointing power, but when the nature of the duties of a given position, as established by law or the rules or practice of the head of a department, are such that lack of the qualification of the kind mentioned in section 486-10 is sufficient to make any person unfit to discharge them at a minimum degree of efficiency. The commission is the judge of the facts necessary to establish this conclusion, but its determinations are subject to court review when its jurisdiction is exceeded or its powers abused. Mere expediency, convenience, or the wishes of the head of a department are not sufficient reasons to support a limitation of competition.

Whether non-residence in a prescribed area is ever sufficient in law to make an applicant for a state district position unfit to discharge its duties, quaere.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 7, 1917.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of June 16, 1917, in which you ask my opinion as follows:

> "After careful consideration of your opinion under date of June 8, relating to districting of the state for the purpose of examination and certification, the commission is still in some doubt as to its proper interpretation.
> "In the case of district mine inspectors under the Industrial Commission, mentioned in this opinion, there is a specific provision of law requiring that the chief inspector of mines shall establish certain districts, and that inspectors appointed therein shall have been residents of their respective districts for two years preceding appointment. The commission understands that in making certification to these positions, the names certified must be confined to residents of the particular district to which certification is made, and that, therefore, separate eligible lists must be created for each district established by the chief inspector of mines.
> "While the laws relating to the inspection of workshops and factories, examination of steam engineers, and the inspection of boilers, under the industrial commission of Ohio, provide for districting of the state and the appointment of district deputies, there is no specific provision of law requiring residence in a district as one of the qualifications necessary for appointment to service therein; and the commission understands that in holding examinations to create eligible lists, either for a specified district or for all of these districts, they must be open to competition by persons throughout the state, regardless of residence, and that certification for appointment to any such district cannot, under the civil service law, be limited to residents of that district but must include the names of the three persons standing highest on the eligible list composed of all persons throughout the state who have competed in the examination for that particular branch of the service.

"This would apply also to inspectional forces and field workers of other departments assigned to districts for the purpose of administration and facilitating field work where there is no specific provision of law requiring residence in a district.

"Will you kindly inform the commission, at the earliest possible date, whether this interpretation is correct?"

I think your question requires me to consider the meaning of certain provisions of sections 486-10 and 486-11 of the General Code. It is true that these provisions which I am about to quote must be interpreted in the light of other provisions of the same act, the constitutional requirements respecting civil service and other laws of the state as well as other constitutional provisions; nevertheless, in the main the complete answer to your question depends upon the two sections refererd to. They are in part, as follows:

"Section 486-10. All applicants for positions and places in the classified service shall be subject to examination which shall be public, competitive and free for all, within certain limitations, to be determined by the commission, as to citizenship, residence, age, sex, experience, health, habits and moral character; * * * .

"Written or printed notices of every examination for the state classified service shall be sent by the commission to the county clerk of each county in the state, etc. * * * . In case of examinations limited by the commission to a district, county or city, the commission shall provide in its rules for adequate publicity of such examinations in the district, county or city, within which competition is permitted.

"Section 486-11. * * * The commission may refuse to examine an applicant, or after an examination to certify an eligible, who is found to lack any of the established preliminary requirements for the examination or who is physically so disabled as to be rendered unfit for the performance of the duties of the position which he seeks, * * * ."

The use of the word "residence" in the context in which it is found in the above quotation raises the question which must be answered in connection with your specific inquiry; but that question is not limited to the meaning of the meaning of the word itself but rather extends to the interpretation and application of the whole clause, and more especially to the phrase "to be determined by the commission" and other similar phrases found in the cognate clauses.

In a word, it is palpable that some power, authority, or it may be duty, is vested in or imposed upon the civil service commission to determine limitations upon the absolute freedom and openness of competition in its examinations for positions in the state service which would otherwise be required by the first part of the first sentence which has been quoted, and that such limitations may or must, in appropriate cases be residential in character. So much must be taken for granted, for to hold otherwise would be to ignore the clear statement of the law that the commission is to make the determinations, that the determinations are to relate to limitations upon competition, and that such limitations may be made dependent upon residence. The problem is to determine the rules of law which must guide and restrain the commission in the general exercise of its power or duty to prescribe limitations, or, as section 486-11 has it, "preliminary requirements," and more particularly what those rules of law are as applied to the determination of limitations based upon residence.

I start with the principle that the commission is not given any arbitrary power by section 486-10. This is plain enough for the broad reason that no administrative power will be regarded as arbitrary; for so to regard it would be to make the law unconstitutional in such respect. Authorities might be multiplied on this point. Harmon v. State, 66 O. S. 249, is an extreme case on the one hand, and State Board of Health v. Greenville, 86 O. S. 1, on the other; but both of them yield deference to the idea that legislative power may not be delegated to an executive tribunal. The general assembly must make the law, though it may permit to the executive branch of the government what is known, despite the dictum to the contrary in the first case cited, as the administrative power to apply the general principles of the law to specific cases, and to make orders, rules and regulations to that end.

As between two possible interpretations of a statute that one which will avoid conflict with constitutional limitations, express or implied, (regarding the principle against delegation of legislative power as a species if implied constitutional limitation) must be chosen. I do not think that section 486-10, read in connection with all the other sections of the civil service law, could be fairly regarded as an attempt to vest arbitrary power in the civil service commission; but even if it could be so regarded, it would have to be interpreted otherwise in accordance with the principle just stated.

For these general reasons, then, it becomes clear that the whole law relative to the powers or duties of the civil service commission in the respect under consideration is not stated in the unvarnished language of section 486-10, to the effect that the commission may prescribe limitations based on residence respecting the scope of competition for positions for which examinations are to be held. There must be added such rules of law as will define what limitations the commission is at liberty to impose on this ground within the scope of its purely administrative power; or, putting it negatively, what attempted limitations on the part of the commission would transcend the exercise of its administrative power and amount to unauthorized legislation.

At the outset, the scope of the power which is herein granted is rather broadly indicated by the enumeration of grounds upon which limitations on competition may be imposed. Those grounds, repeating them, are "citizenship, residence, age, sex, experience, health, habits and moral character."

But without pausing to attempt to extract from this catalogue some attribute common to all these enumerated things which might serve to show the purpose and the co-ordinate limitations of the grant of power, I think we may add to the express provisions to be considered the all-controlling declaration of article XV, section 10 of the constitution, as follows:

> "Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties, and cities, shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examinations. Laws shall be passed providing for the enforcement of this provision."

Looking now to the language of section 486-10 and reading it in the light of the constitutional provision just quoted, we discover that only to the extent that the various things enumerated in section 486-10 may so operate as to determine the merit and fitness of a particular person for a given position may they be constitutionally considered by the commission or any one else, as requirements for admission to a civil service examination.

In this connection, however, one consideration deserves special mention. The legislature has the undoubted power as a general proposition to prescribe qualifications for public offices. The "civil service of the state" mentioned in article XV, section 10 of the constitution is not therein defined, but in the law which has been passed "for the enforcement of this provision" it is so defined as to include some offices as well as a great many mere public employments. (Section 486-1 G. C.). Some nice questions are raised here, but I do not feel called upon to discuss them minutely. It is sufficient to say that where a position is an office, as distinguished from a public employment, and the legislature has prescribed qualifications for that office, those qualifications should by all concerned, and unless and until the courts hold otherwise because of some possible application of article XV, section 10, be deemed controlling. That is to say, at the present time all administrative officers should agree to follow implicitly the laws relating to qualifications for particular public offices, either on the ground that such qualifications will be conclusively presumed to have been set up because of their bearing upon the question of merit and fitness, or because in the constitutional sense (as distinguished from the legislative sense) the civil service of the state does not include offices at all.

Now the law relating to appointments to positions which are offices may prescribe the qualification of citizenship. This, of course, is universally true, for article XV, section 4 of the constitution, which is in force and must be read in connection with the civil service amendment thereto provides that:

> "No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state, unless he possesses the qualifications of an elector."

To possess the qualifications of an elector a person must be a "male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township, or ward, in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law." (Article V, section 1).

Here are qualifications both of citizenship and residence, as well as of age and sex, which the commission and the legislature itself must observe. In this respect, therefore, it follows that the civil service commission, acting under section 486-10 in prescribing the preliminary requirements for admission to an examination for an office in the classified service, not only may, but must, impose such limitations as the constitution of the state itself imposes in the foregoing respects.

However, these reasons are not applicable to positions which are not offices. The other considerations hereinafter to be discussed must come into play as to them.

Again, particular statutes may, as stated, impose particular qualifications. The incumbent of a position which is an office may be required by the legislature to have certain definite qualifications of experience, such as that he shall be a civil engineer of two years' experience, or the like. In my opinion, the commission not only may but must impose such preliminary qualifications under section 486-10 if the statutes so require; and here, in my opinion, the rule applies alike to offices and employments, for though I have been discussing the legislative power to determine the qualifications for an office, yet I am also of the opinion that when the legislature has imposed qualifications of this kind for an employment, as distinguished from an office, the presumption is that it has been imposed for reasons bearing upon merit and fitness.

However, there may conceivably be qualifications for employments imposed by the legislature which, obviously, have no relation to merit and fitness. I recall the case of a statute at one time in force in this state limiting the employments of attendants and other persons in the various benevolent institutions of the state which might be made from the county in which the institution is located. I am unable to appreciate by any stretch of the imagination any relation between such a requirement and that of merit and fitness. In such case the legislative rule is not on which prescribes the qualifications for office, but merely is a limitation upon the power of employment otherwise to be exercised by the head of the department or institution. In such case the conflict between the legislation and the civil service amendment to the constitution would appear to be clear. Without going through the statutes to find whether there are any at present apparently in force which palpably so violate the constitution, I content myself with pointing out the possbility of such legislation and advising the commission that should such legislation be enacted the commission would be justified in raising the question as to its power or duty to follow the mandate of the legislature under such circumstances.

There are, however, some tests enumerated in section 486-10 which, so far as I am advised, have never customarily been made standards of qualification for office or even legislative standards of fitness for employment. I refer particularly to the words "health" and "habits" as used in the section. I think it is safe to say that it has never been the legislative policy of this or any other state to set up any standard of health or habits as statutory qualifications for office or limitations on the employing power. If this is true, it would seem to follow that although with respect to qualifications for office imposed by the constitution and the laws, the function of the commission acting under section 486-10 is merely to follow and enforce such qualifications by excluding those not qualified from the examination, and although with respect to such limitations on the employing power for particular positions as the legislature may have seen fit to impose and which have some appreciable relation to merit and fitness, it may be the commission's duty to give effect to them without question under section 486-10, the legislature did not intend that the commission's functions under this section should be limited merely to giving effect to express legislation or constitutional provisions. In other words, the fact just noted leads me to conclude that in prescribing limitations on competition on the grounds enumerated in section 486-10 the civil service commission is not limited merely to following the qualifications for office imposed by the constitution or laws and proper limitations of employing powers made by express legislation, but may—still, of course, in the exercise of purely administrative power—prescribe limitations without the sanction of express legislation.

This conclusion is supported, of course, by the phrase "to be determined by the commission;" for if the legislature had intended merely to direct the commission to exclude from examination for offices those disqualified by law to hold such offices or to exclude from examinations for employments those which the legislature in other laws had prohibited the head of the department from employing, I do not think it would have used the phrase "to be determined by the commission."

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the commission does have the power within limits hereinafter to be pointed out, to prescribe preliminary requirements or limitations upon competition other than those which the constitution or the statutes may have expressly prescribed for given positions.

Before discussing those limitations and defining the scope of the power which I have just held to exist, let me pause to point out that some of the specific questions which you have in mind have already been answered. Where a law like that relating to the district mine inspectors specifically provides that the chief inspector of mines shall establish certain districts, and that inspectors appointed therein shall have been residents of their respective districts for two years preceding appointment, we have a situation which may be looked at in two different lights and, so regarded, produces the same result in either case. The position of district inspector of mines may be regarded as an office. If so regarded, the qualifications laid down are those which the legislature on principles above stated should be held, at least until the contrary is declared by a court, to have the power to prescribe, and the law so enacted by the legislature is binding upon the commission, so that the commission not only may but must, acting under section 486-10, follow the law in prescribing the limitation based on residence which the statute itself requires. Or, the position of district inspector may be regarded as a mere employment (although I presume it is an office), in which event we would have a legislative declaration that two years' residence in the district is requisite to the efficient discharge of the duties of the position. Inasmuch as such declaration has an appreciable relation to the matters of merit and fitness, the first duty of the commission would be to follow it as a criterion of such merit and fitness. Therefore, on either of the grounds suggested I would advise with respect to the district mine inspectors that it is not only the right but the duty of the commission to create separate eligible lists for each district established by the chief inspector of mines and to limit competition for the position of a given district inspectorship to those who have the preliminary requirements established by the law itself.

Where a law provides that districts may be established for the ordering of an inspection or other similar service within a state department, but is itself silent as to the qualifications of the incumbents of such district positions, the case must stand upon a different footing and be decided by different rules. For in such case the position in its nature is a state position. The legislature has not expressly made it a district position so far as qualifications therefor are concerned; and has not limited the authority of the employing power—if the position be regarded as a mere employment —to persons residing within the district. It is very questionable whether even express legislative authority to divide the state into districts for such a purpose would carry with it as a necessary implication the power to determine that each district inspector should have resided in the district for a given time prior to his appointment or employment, or should continue to reside therein while discharging his duties. As an example of this kind of legislation I refer you to the former law on the subject of inspection of workshops and factories (sections 984 et seq. of the General Code, many of which have been repealed). It was therein provided that the chief inspector of workshops and factories should divide the state into districts, should appoint twenty-five district inspectors, and should make such assignments of district inspectors in the several districts and prescribe such rules and regulations for their government as the service might require. It will be observed that these statutes go as far as it could be possible to go without expressly authorizing the head of the department to prescribe as a rule that district inspectors shall be appointed from and reside in their districts. Of course, as a matter of practice the appointing power under such a section might, in the absence of civil service laws, so limit his appointments; and as a matter of law I believe he would have the right under his power to prescribe rules and regulations to assign residential headquarters to his various inspectors for the purpose of determining such matters as the payment of traveling expenses, the transmission of orders from the main departmental office, and the like. But I incline to the view that in the absence of civil service laws the power to prescribe rules of the kind just referred to would not arise until an inspector was appointed. That is to say, the head of the department is to prescribe rules for the government of the inspectors, not for his own government in appointing inspectors.

What has been said respecting a statute as explicit as the old law relating to the district inspectors of workshops and factories would apply a fortiori to a statute under which the head of a department might successfully assert the implied power to divide the state into districts for the government of an inspection service, or the like, and an implied power to prescribe rules for the government of subordinates in performing such service. I believe it may safely be assumed that where a service of this character naturally lends itself to a scheme of districting, the head of the department by virtue of his position as such, and simply because those who work under him are his subordinates, has the power to order them to confine their operations to particular districts, and to prescribe for them places in such districts which shall be regarded as their headquarters and at which they shall live, for official purposes at any rate. Nevertheless, a power of this sort does not go far enough to authorize the head of a department possessing it to require, as a matter of law binding upon others who might be governed thereby, that appointment shall be made from residents of such district.

In a word, then, except as to a law like the mine inspection act, the commission is neither compelled to lay down residential qualifications as in that case because the head of a department may deem it advisable that such qualifications should be laid down, nor even authorized to do so for any such reason; for a limitation of this kind is a limitation upon the appointing power or the employing power. Because a stream can rise no higher than its source, it follows that the appointing power or the employing power can not impose limitations upon itself.

Stating it in another way: it is within the power of the head of the department, like the former chief inspector of workshops and factories, to appoint whomever he chooses to a district inspectorship, whether the diatrict is established by him under the express authority of law or by reason of his implied power; he may choose to appoint residents of the several districts, but his choice in this particular lacks the force of law and is neither perfectly binding upon him nor upon any one else.

What I have been saying respecting cases of the type now under discussion has been based upon the state of the law as it would be without the civil service law. That law, as we have seen, enacts that competition for all positions in the state service shall be open to all in the first instance. The whole civil service law is a limitation upon the appointing or the employing power. It takes away from the heads of the various departments the uncontrolled power which they formerly had. So that it is clear that with the civil service law in force the appointing power is less than it formerly was from the viewpoint of the heads of the departments. From all that has been said, then, it must follow that any attempt on the part of the head of a department to make a rule, to the effect that subordinates performing services in districts established under the express or implied authority of law by the head of the department shall have resided before appointment in the district in which they are to work, or for that matter outside of the district in which they are to work, can have no binding force upon the civil service commission, and in and of itself is not even sufficient as authority to the civil service commission to exercise any power which it may have under section 486-10 of the General Code.

But this discussion does not fully dispose of all the questions which are involved in your inquiry. I have already stated that the power and duty of the civil service commission, acting under section 486-10, to prescribe preliminary requirements of various sorts which constitute limitations upon free competition in the examinations for positions in the classified service is not limited to the mere enforcement of qualifications for office or limitations on the power of employment expressly prescribed by constitution or statute. I have also said, however, that where such qualifications are prescribed by the constitution as to offices they are binding upon the civil service commission and it must observe them in formulating its rules under section 486-10; and where such qualifications are prescribed by statute the commission must also observe them except in such cases, more particularly regarding statutory limitations on the power of employment as distinguished from that of appointment to office, which bear no perceptible relation to the question of merit and fitness. What I have just been saying is merely that the administrative regulations of the head of a department, as such, do not have the force and effect of constitutional provisions or statutes in this particular, so that such administrative regulations are not a part of the law that is to guide the civil service commission in determining whether or not it may or should impose a given preliminary requirement under section 486-10.

If no statute creates a given qualification or imposes a given limitation upon the appointing or employing power such as is referred to in section 486-10 of the General Code, and if the administrative rules of the head of the appointing or employing department are not efficacious to create such qualifications, what standards are to determine whether or not such limitations may lawfully be imposed or determined by the civil service commission? For we have seen that the power of the commission under section 486-10, though it extends beyond mere compliance with statutes and the like, is not arbitrary; so that the jurisdiction of the commission is circumscribed by some rules of law.

The abstract answer to this question is not difficult to state, however hard it may be to apply it as a principle to the solution of particular questions. The one great and controlling law which the civil service commission by its administrative activities is to enforce and apply to specific cases as they arise is that appointment to and promotions in the civil service of the state shall be made only according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained as far as practicable by competitive examination. This is the keynote of every question that arises in the administration of the civil service law. Here, then, is one test by which the power of the commission under section 486-10 may be at least partially defined. No limitation upon competitive examination for a position in the state service otherwise open to all can be made which is not based on the factor, the existence or non-existence of which in a given case will conclusively determine the merit and fitness of any person who may apply for examination for any particular position in the classified service In short, the civil service commission must be guided only by the question of merit and fitness, where the statutes themselves are silent; the wishes or practices of a head of a department in themselves afford no criterion.

I feel that I ought to explain what I mean by the statement just made. How, it may be asked, can any of the things mentioned in section 486-10 so conclusively determine merit and fitness? In the first place, the two words used in the constitution and in the civil service law ought to be defined.

"Merit" is defined in the Standard Dictionary as follows:

> "1. The state or fact of deserving, either in a favorable or unfavorable sense; desert; as used absolutely, the state or fact of deserving well; excellence; worth; * * *. 2. Ground or basis of consideration or judgment; * * *."

"Fitness" is defined as follows:

> "1. The state or quality of being fit; suitableness; adaptability; congruity, or aptitude of any means to accomplish an end: * * *.
> "2. The state of being fitted or prepared; readiness; preparedness; qualification; as, fitness for an office."

Though these lexicographic definitions do not make the distinction entirely clear, I feel that the framers of the constitution and the legislature with them did not intend to employ the mere vain repetition of synonymous terms in the use of these words and that they denote radically different ideas. It seems to me that the word "merit" carries with it the implication of a comparison of an individual with other individuals who are in competition with him; while the word "fitness" imports the idea that a single individual is to be considered with respect to the duties of a given position.

To put it in another way: The constitution requires that two standards be set up—one by which each applicant for a position in the civil service may be tested with respect to his adaptability to that position as an individual and wholly apart from the qualifications of other individuals. This is what is implied in the word "fitness": the other standard is that by which one applicant is compared as regards his adaptability to the duties of the position, i. e., his "fitness", with other applicants for the same position. "Fitness" relates the man to the job; "merit" compares him with other applicants for the same position.

There is another shade of meaning by which certain distinctions may be drawn which should be here noted. While the very double standard which has been referred to implies that there may be degrees of fitness, yet it is conceivable and indeed demonstrable that the required comparison of the attributes of the man with the duties of the position may show not only a low degree of fitness but also an absolute unfitness.

The same thing is not true, as I see it, of merit. Merit is the relation among those who are fit. It has no such absolute significance as is involved in the term fitness. In other words, it is possible for an applicant to prove to be not merely little fit, but absolutely unfit to discharge the duties of a given place. When that appears he is thereby eliminated from consideration and the criterion of merit need not even be applied to him, but where several have shown that they are fit in one degree or another they must then be classified according to their respective merit.

I have entered upon this somewhat academic discussion with a view to showing what I mean by the way in which the controlling law which is embodied in the phrase "only according to merit and fitness" is to govern the action of the commission under section 486-10. To get at all that I have in mind here it is necessary now to show what use is to be made of the determinations made under that section. This is disclosed by section 486-11, which provides, in part, as follows:

> "The commission may refuse to examine an applicant, or after an examination to certify an eligible, who is found to lack any of the established preliminary requirements for the examination or who is physically so disabled as to be rendered unfit for the performance of the duties of the position which he seeks, * * *."

It will be seen that the preliminary requirements referred to in section 486-11 or, what is the same thing, the limitations on competition referred to in section 486-10 have for their purpose the elimination of the unfit. They constitute a convenient means of avoiding the idle ceremony of admitting to an examination one of whom unfitness could be predicated by the ascertainment of some outstanding fact. Just because fitness is an absolute term as well as a relative one it is necessarily true, in the nature of things, that it may be possible to determine unfitness without competition, and thereby to narrow competition to those of whom the facts upon which unfitness may be predicated do not foreclose the question.

Coming down to specific cases, there may be positions in the classified civil service of the state for which it could be held conclusively as a matter of fact, and for our present purposes, of course, as a matter of law—the law resulting from the constitutional requirement and from the controlling general provisions of the civil service act—that for example a woman would be unfit simply because of her sex to discharge the duties of a given position. This might be just as true where the legislature had not taken the trouble expressly to limit the appointing or employing power by this qualification as where the legislature had limited employments to men, as in the case of qualifications for a public office. The mere fact that the legislature did not act would not change the law requiring fitness.

The same thing would be true of other facts mentioned in section 486-10. A man over sixty might be on that account alone in a conceivable case—though I do not undertake to imagine any—absolutely unfit to discharge the duties of some public employment. It is not necessary to carry the illustrations further. The commission has, I think, by this time come to an understanding of the controlling principle.

In a word then, there is a principle of law which emerges here; it is that no unfit person shall be appointed to a position in the civil service of the state. The constitution makes this law, and the civil service law, among other things, is intended to provide machinery for applying it as a principle to specific cases. The civil service commission is the administrative agency selected to discharge this function. (See Green v. Civil Service Commission, 90 O. S. 252.) One of the ways in which it is to discharge it is by determining limitations under section 466-10 of the General Code. Where the legislature has itself created qualifications the civil service commission, subject to the principles above laid down, must look to such legislation as a part of the law governing it; but where the legislature does not prescribe qualifications or limitations upon the employing power, the civil service commission is to prescribe such specific qualifications or limitations as, on the grounds enumerated in the section, may be necessary to enforce the law that the unfit shall not be appointed.

How is this to be done? I need not go into an elaborate discussion of this question. It is obvious that the problem in each case is to determine the criteria of fitness with relation to the duties of the position. Those duties exist as objective facts beyond the control of the civil service commission under the law as it now stands—at least I am not aware of any provision which gives any power to the commission to specify what duties shall be assigned to particular positions. The commission will find that duties have been assigned to each position in the classified service of the state "by law or by practice," as one of the sections of the law has it. That is to say, as to some positions, including practically all the offices in the classified service, the statutory law itself is to be looked to to determine what the duties are; as to others, including even some whose duties are partially prescribed by law, the commission by such investigations as it is authorized by law to make must ascertain from the head of the department what duties have been assigned to particular positions by the departmental regulations, colored, of course, by the nature of the work of the department as a whole. The appropriation acts passed by the general assembly are to be consulted wherever they may have a bearing upon these questions. In short, the duties of the position may be prescribed in three ways:

"1. Directly by statute or appropriation.

"2. By the head of a department under the express authority of statute.

"3. By the head of a department under such implied power as such an officer must necessarily have in order to organize and administer the work of the department."

The civil service commission, having ascertained by consulting the sources of information suggested what the duties of a given position are at the time it is required to hold examinations therefor, must, if it is to discharge its duty to eliminate the unfit, determine what there is about such duties that may render it impossible, in the sense which I am about to describe, for persons of a given class to discharge such duties. I have used the word "impossible" for lack of a better term. What I mean to say is, that the commission is authorized by section 486-10 and section 486-11, and indeed is required by the controlling principle of law which I have developed, to devise appropriate means for eliminating from the possibility of appointment to positions in the classified service of the state such persons as to whom some of the easily ascertained characteristics mentioned in section 486-10 may make it apparent that they could not meet the minimum requirements of the duties of the position. Such persons are really disqualified by law—not the edict of the commission, for the law is that the unfit shall not be appointed, and the commission's duty is merely to determine what facts respecting a given position would make certain classes of persons unfit. To cite another example which I take from my own experience: The duties of the position of stenographer in the office of the attorney-general are of such character that a person lacking experience in the taking and transcribing of language couched in legal phraseology would not be competent to discharge them. In other words, such stenographers require what may be called a "legal vocabulary." I do not mean to say that this is true as a matter of law, for that is for the commission to decide; but I am pointing out an instance wherein one of the things referred to in section 486-10, viz.: "experience" or, rather, the lack of it, might well be held to furnish a conclusive test of fitness.

Now if it is true as a matter of fact that only such persons as may have the requisite preliminary experience are qualified for such a position—that is, competent to discharge its duties according to the minimum requirements of efficiency—then it is the law that they shall not be appointed to that particular position; and the duty of the commission is merely to ascertain whether or not the fact exists. The order or determination authorized to be made under section 486-10 merely applies the law to the facts thus ascertained.

It is apparent from what I have said, I think, that the civil service commission, acting under section 486-1C, can not go further than to find that as a matter of law a given fact concerning possible applicants for a position has such relation to the duties of that position be established by law or in practice as that it can be said of it that it unfits an applicant to discharge those ditues—that is, conclusively establishes his incompetency therefor. Mere considerations of convenience are not enough. The head of a department may desire the establishment of standards of efficiency which are unreasonably high and have no necessary relation to the duties of the position; but such desire on the part of the head of the department lacks legal sanction and can not be given such sanction by an order of the commission. The department head merely establishes the duties. The minimum standard of efficiency or qualification results by operation of law upon facts to be ascertained by the civil service commission.

There is no delegation of legislative power involved here, (Green v. Civil Service Commission, supra), even though one might claim that the working out of these principles would practically amount to vesting in the civil service commission the power to determine qualifications for office which the legislature had not prescribed. I say this because the civil service commission does not determine what the qualifications shall be, as the legislature does when it makes the law, but merely determines as a matter of fact what those qualifications are. In other words, the mere silence of the legislature on the point of qualification for office or limitation on the appointing power, coupled with the declaration of the first part of section 486-10 that competition shall be open to all, does not result in a principle that presumably all persons are qualified for all positions except those dealt with by the legislature. The contrary is true because of the constitutional and statutory provisions requiring the elimination of the unqualified or unfit.

Since leaving the case of the mine inspectors I have discussed in this opinion other criteria of fitness mentioned in Section 486-10, but have not dealt with that of "residence" as therein mentioned. This is because I was seeking to get at the meaning and application of the clause as a whole by working it out through the consideration of such other requirements as age, sex, experience, etc. The word "residence" is used in the same context and, so far as the abstract principles are concerned, I believe that the action of the commission in determining limitations based upon residence is to be governed by the same rules as those which have been discussed in connection with the other facts mentioned in the same section. It must be apparent, however, that though the abstract principles are the same, the working out of those principles in specific cases may be vastly different with respect to one fact from what they are with respect to another. Thus, I can not at this moment think of any position in the civil service of the state, other than an office, of which it might be said as a matter of law—and it must finally be as a matter of law—that its duties are such that a person not a citizen of the United States would be unfit to discharge them. This does not read the word "citizenship" out of the section, for we have seen that if a position is an office the commission must in deference to the Constitution of the state limit competition to citizens of the United States. The question now arises as to whether "residence" is like "citizenship" in this respect, or whether it is possible to imagine cases in which it might be used like "age" or "sex" have been used in the ways suggested in the previous discussion.

I will not undertake to answer this question explicitly. However, it may be that there are some positions in the service of the state which a resident of a particular territory would be incompetent to fill, regardless of his other qualifications. The case of the superintendent of a free employment bureau comes into my mind. I will not say that it is true that a non-resident of the area to be served by the particular free employment agency would not be fit to take charge of such an office and discharge its duties. I will only say that without investigating the matter thoroughly, and merely as a case of first impression, I can see some reasons at least for so holding. On the contrary, however, a mere stenographer in a given free employment office, whose duties are limited to those of ordinary stenographic service, would clearly not be unfitted for her work by reason of lack of previous residence in the area to be served by the office in which she is employed.

You inquire specifically about district inspectors of workshops and factories. The present law applicable to the organization of this branch of the work of the industrial commission undoubtedly authorizes the industrial commission to divide the state into districts and to assign different inspectors to different districts. In all likelihood the industrial commission may go so far in the establishment of rules and regulations for the government of its employes as to require actual residence in the district to which assignment is made during the period of service. but the fact that such power had been exercised would not, in my opinion, be enough to establish the legal conclusion of unfitness. I say this without detracting at all from what I have previously said to the effect that it is for the commission to determine the facts. What I mean is, that the facts which I have mentioned, put together, would not in law justify the commission in holding that a limitation as to competition should be made on the ground of residence and that eligible lists should be made up exclusively of residents of the different districts established by the industrial commission. More would have to appear, as that the inspection of factories and public buildings is a work requiring for its competent discharge at a minimum standard of efficiency such acquaintance and knowledge of and information respecting local conditions as could be possessed only by a person residing in the district at the time of his appointment. From a very general understanding of the nature of these duties I do not think that this is the case, but I will not say so as a matter of law—merely advising the commission that these additional facts must be examined into and that the regulations of the industrial commission creating districts and assigning inspectors thereto, and requiring inspectors so assigned to have their headquarters in the districts in which they are to work, are not enough.

And so one might go through the whole catalogue of state positions. Very few, if any, of them, I am sure, are characterized by duties of such a nature as that a person not a resident of a given locality would be plainly and palpably unfit to discharge them. Of course, the commission has discretion in making its findings, but it must act within the scope of its jurisdiction and that scope is circumscribed by the principle that absolute unfitness must be found to exist before exclusion from competition can be predicated upon any of the facts enumerated in section 486-10. A mere determination by the commission to limit competition, without stating the grounds therefor, would be open to general review as to its reasonableness. Whereas, if the commission should specifically state in its order limiting competition by any of the standards enumerated in section 486-10 a reason therefor, based upon some such mere consideration as desirability or the wishes of the appointing power or expediency, or the like, the commission's order would be void because it was plainly and palpably in excess of its jurisdiction. The commission is not required to state the reasons for its orders as a jurisdictional step, but if it does so and the reasons are not sufficient the orders would not stand when called in question in court.

But if the commission should actually find as to a given position that its duties are such that unfitness to discharge them in the legal sense which I have been trying to describe could be predicated of one residing in a given district or not residing in a prescribed area, as the case might be, or if, without stating its reasons, the commission should make the determination to limit competition on such grounds, then the courts, acting upon familiar principles, would not set aside the orders of the commission merely because they might disagree with them, but would only do so if able to find that the discretion of the commission had been palpably abused. This very fact—the breadth of discretion entrusted to the commission by the law—leads me to admonish the commission as to its high moral duty to use the power granted to it sparingly, and of its plain legal duty, to be satisfied by its own independent investigation in each case, that the absolute standards of unfitness which I have been describing require a given exclusion to be made upon a particular ground mentioned in section 486-10 before taking action thereunder.

I advise the commission, therefore, respecting the particular positions inquired about in your letter, excepting that of district mine inspectors which have been perviously dealt with, that I incline to the view that none of them mentioned are such as with respect to examinations for which competition may be limited to the residents of a particular district. Because the commission has some discretion under this section I can not go so far as to make my negative advice unequivocal and positive; but the mere wishes of the head of a department like the industrial commission are no justification to your commission to divide the state into districts; nor is the fact that the industrial commission, acting under express or implied power, has itself divided the state into districts for the purpose of administration. The further facts mentioned in the opinion must appear, and appear clearly and conclusively, before the commission is empowered to limit competition in accordance with such districts so established.

Of course, I think it is apparent from the discussion in this opinion that in a case if any, where the commission may find it to be true that a non-resident of a given district would be unfit on account of his non-residence alone to discharge the duties of a particular district position, the district within which competition may be limited by the commission must be the district established by the appointing authority. This point was fully covered in the previous opinion referred to in your letter, in which it was pointed out that the commission's power to establish civil service districts has nothing whatever to do with questions like those which have been under discussion. There may be some inconsistency of expression between the prior opinion referred to and this one, and to the extent of this inconsistency I desire that you regard the later expression of my views as the controlling one.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY OFFICER—PERSON ACTING AS SUCH WITHOUT COMMISSION —NOT ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION.

No one can be a county officer without receiving a commission for the office in question, and one acting as a county officer, never having received a commission for such office is not entitled to receive the compensation provided by law therefor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 7, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN: I am in receipt of your letter of July 20, 1917, requesting my opinion on the following matter:

> "Some time during the year 1915, A was appointed coroner of M—— county to fill the unexpired term of B, resigned. A gave bond for the term of his appointment but failed to make application for a commission from the governor. While A was paid the fees for services rendered by him during that part of 1915 that he served, he has presented bills for his fees claimed by him during the year 1916, which the county commissioners have not yet allowed, and the commissioners and the auditor of said county wish to know whether he may be legally paid the fees he now claims, in view of the fact that he was never commissioned as required by section 138 General Code."

From the above statement the person assuming to exercise the office of coroner never was commissioned as such. The "commission" seems to be the one thing needful to constitute a man a county officer. The section of the General Code governing is section 138, and is as follows:

"A judge of a court of record, state officer, county officer, militia officer and justice of the peace, shall be ineligible to perform any duty pertaining to his office, until he presents to the proper officer or authority a legal certificate of his election or appointment, and receives from the governor a commission to fill such office."

This is a very old statute, and is so plain in its terms that it has not been necessary that it receive much attention from the courts. It was, however, passed upon at a very early date (in 1832) by the supreme court in the case of State ex rel. v. Moffitt, 5 Ohio 358. In that case Moffitt claimed to have been elected associate judge of Ashtabula county, but by reason of an informality in his election he failed to get a certificate thereof, and consequently failed to get a commission from the governor, but the court of common pleas admitted him to take the oath of office and sit as an associate judge. The supreme court held that this was illegal under the above statute and that he could prove his title to the office only by the commission therefor. The same statute at that time contained the provision now found in section 7 in reference to the failure to give bond, and the office then also being deemed vacant for failure to secure the commission. It was not simply held that the commission was evidence of his title to the office but that the obtaining thereof signified his acceptance, so that the commission instead of simply being evidence of his right to the office was one of the steps necessary to entitle him to it. Hitchcock, J., in his opinion, at page 365, says:

"By taking the oath he signifies his acceptance, but he is expressly prohibited from discharging the duty until the 'indorsement' is made. This may be considered as a mere trifle, as usless formality. But shall a man who assumes the character of a judge treat any part of the law as insignificant and trivial? It would rather become him to be scrupulously exact in his compliance with every scintilla of law. Let others, if they will, complain of the unnecessary provision of any statute or of any other principle of law, but such language does not become a judge. Let me be not misunderstood; it is not the commission issued in pursuance of these statutes which confers the right upon the officer. The right is derived from the election or appointment, of which the commission is only evidence. But it is evidence without which the officer cannot proceed to act officially."

This language would seem to indicate that the commission is evidence alone of his title to the office, but immediately before that it is stated:

"* * * every man before he presumes to exercise the office of a judge must have a commission, must signify his acceptance of the appointment and must take an oath of office, and have the same 'indorsed on his commission.' "

The whole opinion relates to the proposition that the commission in addition to being a title to office is a requisite to his exercising the same. Of course county officers being provided for in the same section are governed by the same principles. The same section is incidentally considered in a recent opinion in the case of Bushnell v. Koon, et al., 8 C. C. N. S. 163, in which it is distinguished and held that the date of the term of a justice of the peace, also provided for in said section, is the date of his commission, and where a justice was re-elected before the expiration of his first term but there was an interim between the expiration of that term and the ensuing commission for the second term, that any judgments rendered by him during that interim were absolutely void and their enforcement might be prevented by injunction, there being no provision that he should hold until his successor was elected, etc.

The term of office begins with the receipt of the commission and expires at the end of a period of the term after the date of the commission. He was no officer until he received the commission, and he ceases to be one as soon as it expires. The commission and the office go together. The commission is the evidence that the man is an officer. It is more than that,—it is his muniment of title to the office. It is not the foundation of his right, for that is his election or appointment, but it is a necessary accompaniment of the existence of his right, which neither preceeds it nor survives it.

It follows from the above statute and the authorities and principles established and recognized by them that the appointee in the instant case never became coroner; never had any right whatever to exercise the duties of the office, not even an imperfect right; that he simply assumed to be such officer and performed such duties without right, and with nothing more than "color" of office, even if he had that.

It would seem plain upon principle that one cannot become entitled to the emoluments of office by interfering therein and performing the duties thereof without any right to do so. Having no express legal right to the emoluments of the office, because not being an officer, he would only be entitled to such compensation upon the principle of quantum meruit, which plainly can have no application to such case for such numerous and strong reasons that it is unnecessary to enter upon them.

The question asked of you by the county commissioners and county auditor is therefore answered in the negative.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—LEASE OF CANAL LANDS IN ROSS COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 7, 1917.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of August 7, 1917, in which you enclose two leases of canal lands and ask me to endorse my approval thereon. The leases are as follows:

"1. To James P. Fuller and Martha Baus, of Columbus, Ohio, of certain lands located in the city of Chillicothe, Ross county, Ohio, valuation $4,166.66⅔, at an annual rental of $250.00.

"2. To R. E. Wagner, of Akron, Ohio, of certain lands located in Chillicothe, Ross county, Ohio, valuation $4,166.66⅔, at an annual rental of $250.00."

I have examined these two leases carefully and find the same to be regular in form and legal. I further find that the rights of the state are fully protected in the terms and conditions of said lease. I am therefore endorsing my approval on the same, and have forwarded them to Hon. James M. Cox for his approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CLERK—APPOINTED BY COMMISSIONERS—NOT AUTHORIZED TO PERFORM DUTIES OF AUDITOR UNDER SECTION 2342 G. C.—BUILDING COMMISSION—COMPENSATION—NOT ENTITLED TO PERCENTAGE RECEIVED FROM INSURANCE.

(1) A clerk appointed by the county commissioners, under the provisions of section 2409 G. C., is not authorized to perform the duties provided for in section 2342 G. C.

(2) Under section 2334 G. C. the members of the building commission are entitled to receive only two and one-half per cent. of the amount received by the county from taxes raised for the purpose of constructing the building or from the amount received by the county from the sale of bonds for the purpose of constructing the building. The commissioners are not entitled to any percentage of money received from an insurance company to cover loss of an old building by fire, even though this money is expended by the building commission in the construction of the new building.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 8, 1917.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 17, 1917, which reads as follows:

"Under the provisions of the statutes, a building commission was duly appointed for the erection of a new infirmary building for Warren county, Ohio.

"The attorney-general, in an opinion rendered February 5, 1916, which is found at 216-17 of the 1916 Reports of the Attorney-General's Opinions, held among other things the following: 'I am of the opinion, in answer to your third question, that a clerk of the board of county commissioners, appointed under the provisions of section 2409 G. C. may perform for the building commission the duties imposed by section 2343 G. C. upon the county auditor.'

"I desire to inquire whether or not the building commission may pay to the clerk who has performed such duties any compensation therefor out of the funds to be expended by the building commission.

"It is not the desire of the commission in this county to pay a large amount of money to the clerk, but they do desire to make some compensation to the clerk of the county commissioners for the services rendered to the building commission.

"$19,000.00 of the amount of money which has been and will be expended on this building is money which came into the fund from insurance on the building which was destroyed by fire. The balance of the fund, to wit, $65,000.00, came from the sale of bonds. I desire to inquire whether or not in fixing the compensation of the commission who were appointed under section 2334 G. C., the aggregate compensation of 2½ per cent. of the money, in that section, should be calculated on $65,000.00 of the funds or whether it would be based on $84,000.00 which is the amount of the bond and the insurance money which was placed in the building. It would seem that the intention of the legislature in section 2334 G. C. was to fix a per cent. on the amount of money which the commission would have a right to expend, but owing to the language of the section, I am in a little doubt as to whether the legislature may not have limited the compensation to 2½ per cent. of the amount of bonds actually sold.

"While the insurance money did not come from taxation directly, at the same time the premiums on the policies under which it was paid were paid by funds arising from taxation.

"The building commission in this county is anxious to complete its work and finally dissolve as soon as possible."

Answering your first question:
Sections 2409 and 2342 General Code read:

"Section 2409. If such board finds it necessary for the clerk to devote his entire time to the discharge of the duties of such position, it may appoint a clerk in place of the county auditor and such necessary assistants to such clerk as the board deems necessary. Such clerk shall perform the duties required by law and by the board.

"Section 2342. Full and accurate records of all proceedings of the commission shall be kept by the county auditor upon the journal of the county commissioners. He shall carefully preserve in his office all plans, drawings, representations, bills of material, specifications of work and estimates of costs in detail and in the aggregate pertaining to the building."

I have read the opinion of former Attorney-General Turner, to which you refer, which is dated February 5, 1916, and found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, vol. 1, page 216, in which request the following question was asked:

"Is the auditor their (building commission's) clerk or is he relieved from that duty by reason of the fact that the commissioners have heretofore appointed a commissioner's clerk?"

Mr. Turner answered this question as follows:

"I am of the opinion, in answer to your third question, that a clerk of the board of county commissioners, appointed under the provisions of said section 2409 G. C., may perform for the building commission the duties imposed by section 2342 G. C. upon the county auditor."

The above is the full extent of the opinion of Mr. Turner as to the right of the clerk of the board of county commissioners to perform the duties for the building commission imposed by section 2342 upon the county auditor. In the opinion there is no citation of authorities or any argument to show how Mr. Turner reached said opinion.

In the case of State vs. Edmonson, 12 N. P. (n. s.) 577, the first branch of the syllabus is as follows:

"1. A distinct legislative intent appears in the provisions of section 2342, P. & A. Anno. G. C., that the county auditor shall act as the recording officer of a commission to build a new court house, and a writ of mandamus will issue requiring him so to act, notwithstanding the earlier and in some measure conflicting provision for the appointment of a clerk of the board of county commissioners in place of the auditor."

On page 586 of the opinion, Hunt, J., holds as follows:

"The commissioners of Hamilton county have availed themselves of section 2409 and have appointed a clerk to take the place of the auditor as their secretary, and it is argued by reason thereof that said clerk should perform duties specifically enjoined upon the auditor under sections 2341 and 2342. In addition to the fact that the building commission act is a later act and charges such duties upon the auditor specifically and not upon the secretary or clerk of the board of county commissioners, and the further fact that section 2409 is by its terms and context applicable only to the duties of the auditor in connection with the proceedings of the county commissioners, section 2409 also contemplates that such duties of the clerk shall be such as to require him to 'devote his entire time' to such duties, leaving no time for him to act for the building commission. The legislature therefore provided that the auditor should act as recording officer of the building commission. For these additional duties he can adequately provide by the appointment, if necessary, of a deputy under section 2563.

"The recording officer of the building commission is therefore the county auditor, or a deputy appointed by him for such purpose."

It seems to me that the holding of the court, as above set out, is the better reasoning and I therefore adopt the same and hold that the clerk appointed by the county commissioners, under the provisions of section 2409 of the General Code, is not authorized to perform the duties imposed upon the county auditor by virtue of section 2342 of the General Code, and that therefore the building commission is unauthorized to pay to the clerk of the board of county commissioners any compensation for duties performed under section 2342 of the General Code.

Referring to your second question, sections 2333 and 2334 of the General Code read:

"Section 2333. When county commissioners have determined to erect a court house or other county building at a cost to exceed twenty-five thousand dollars, they shall submit the question of issuing bonds of the county therefor to vote of the electors thereof. If determined in the affirmative, within thirty days thereafter, the county commissioners shall apply to the judge of a court of common pleas of the county who shall appoint four suitable and competent freehold electors of the county, who shall in connection with the county commissioners constitute a building commission and serve until its completion. Not more than two of such appointees shall be of the same political party.

"Section 2334. The persons so appointed shall receive a reasonable compensation for the time actually employed, to be fixed by the court of common pleas and on its approval paid from the county treasury. Their compensation in the aggregate shall not exceed two and one-half per cent of the amount received by the county from taxes raised, or from the sale of bonds for the purpose of constructing the building."

> "Section 1. That when the county commissioners of any county have determined under and by the authority of the statutes of the state of Ohio to erect a court house which shall cost to exceed twenty-five thousand dollars and after the question of issuing the bonds of said county for the construction of said court house or other county building has been submitted to a vote of the electors of the county, and said question has been determined by said electors in the affirmative, said county commissioners shall, within thirty days after said election has been held and the results thereof determined, apply to the judge of the court of common pleas for said county, who shall appoint four suitable and competent freehold electors of said county, not more than two of whom shall be of the same political party, who shall, in connection with the county commissioners, constitute a building commission and who shall serve until the completion of said court house as contemplated herein. Said persons so appointed shall receive a reasonable compensation for the time actually employed by them; said compensation to be fixed by the court of common pleas and paid out of the county treasury, on the approval of the common pleas court. Said compensation shall not in the aggregate, for said four persons, and their successors, exceed two and one-half (2½) per cent. of the amount received, by said county, from taxes raised for or from the sale of bonds issued for the purpose of building said court house, or other county building; said limitation on said compensation shall apply to persons now or hereafter appointed. * * * "

It will be noted that the original act provided:

> "Said compensation shall not in the aggregate, for said four persons, and their successors, exceed two and one-half per cent of the amount received by said county, from taxes raised for or from the sale of bonds issued for the purpose of building said court house, or other county building."

In section 2334 General Code the words "for the purpose of constructing a building" qualify the words "from taxes raised" and therefore the compensation to be paid the building commissioners under this section is limited to two and one-half per cent. of the amount received by the county from taxes raised for the purpose of constructing the building and from money received by the county from the sale of bonds for the purpose of constructing the building.

It is clear that the $19,000 received from the insurance company in the case you submit, even though it should be paid into the general county fund and then transferred to the infirmary building fund by authority of popular vote, is not and cannot be held to be money "from taxes raised * * * for the purpose of constructing the building." This being so I am forced to the conclusion that the maximum amount of compensation to be allowed the building commission referred to is two and one-half per cent. of the $65,000 raised from the sale of bonds and that said commission is not entitled to receive as his compensation any percentage of the $19,000 which was received from the insurance company to cover the loss sustained in the destruction by fire of the old building.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW—WHEN BOARD OF EDUCATION MAY MAKE LEVY OUTSIDE OF THE LIMITATION OF SAID LAW.

Although under the provisions of section 7630-1 and section 5649-4 G. C., a board of education is not authoized to levy taxes outside of the limitations of the Smith one per cent law for the purpose of paying the principal and interest on bonds issued on a vote of the electors for the purpose of constructing a school building, the construction of which is made necessary by the emergency mentioned in section 7630-1 G. C., unless it is not practicable to secure the funds necessary for the construction of such building under the provisions of sections 7625 to 7630, inclusive, G. C., the right of the board of education to make such levy outside of the limitations of the Smith one per cent. law should not be denied where the legislation of the board of education with respect to such bond issue shows a bona fide attempt on the part of the board of education to bring the proceedings within the authority of said sections 7630-1 and 5649-4; and it further appears as a matter of fact that said board of education cannot meet such bonds and the interest thereon by levies within the limitations of the Smith one per cent. law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 8, 1917.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication under date of June 27, 1917, enclosing a couple of resolutions relating to a certain bond issue in the sum of $20,000, issued by the board of education of South Lebanon village school district on a vote of the electors of such school district.

The first resolution is one under date of June 9, 1914, providing for the submission of said bond issue to the electors. This resolution recites the fact that the chief inspector of the department of workshops and factories and public buildings has by order condemned the then school building of the district and ordered its further use discontinued. This resolution further determines that for the proper accomodation of the pupils in the school of the said school district it is necessary to build and furnish a new school building, and that the board estimates that the amount of money required will be the sum of $20,000.00. This resolution further recites that the school funds at the disposal of the board of education, or that can be raised under section 7629 and 7630 of the General Code of Ohio, are not sufficient to accomplish the purpose of constructing said school building, and > "it is not practicable to raise such funds in any other way, and that it is necessary that bonds of said district be issued in the amount of $20,000.00 for the purpose of paying the expense thereof."

Following these recitals the resolution provides for the submission of the question of such bond issue to the electors of the school district at an election to be held on July 21, 1914.

This resolution does not contain the finding that it was not practicable to secure such funds for the purpose under any of the six sections of the General Code preceding section 7630-1 General Code, because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district.

The resolution of the board of education providing for the issue of said bonds subsequent to the election authorizing the same, in directing the manner in which said bonds should be advertised for sale, among other things provides that the notice of such bond sale should state

"that said bonds are issued under the authority of sections 7625, 7626, 7627, 7628, 7630-1 and 5649-4 of the General Code of Ohio and a vote of the electors of said district and of this resolution."

The question submitted by you is whether or not tax levies made by the board of education to meet and pay the principal and interest on these bonds are required to be within the fifteen mill limitation of the Smith one per cent law, or whether, on the other hand, such levies may be made without respect to the limitations of said law.

The question made by you resolves itself into the further question of whether the bonds above noted are bonds legally issued under the provisions of section 7630-1 General Code or not. If these bonds were legally authorized under section 7630-1 of the General Code then, by reason of the provisions of section 5649-4 of the General Code, tax levies to meet such indebtedness are not subject to the limitations of the Smith one per cent. law so-called.

A consideration of the question here presented requires me to note briefly the different statutory provisions relating to the issue of bonds of a school district for the purpose of obtaining, constructing or improving school property.

Under section 7629 General Code the board of education of a school district is authorized to issue bonds on its own initiative and without a vote of the electors of the school district for the purpose of obtaining or improving public school property. With respect to such bonds, however, this section contains the limitation that the board of education shall issue no greater amount of bonds in a year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills for the next year preceding such issue.

Section 7625 General Code authorizes a board of education to submit to a vote of the electors of a school district the question of issuing bonds for the purpose of purchasing a site for constructing or repairing a school building. This section, however, as a condition to the right of the board of education to submit such question to the vote of the electors requires, among other things, that the board of education shall determine that the funds at its disposal or that can be raised under the provisions of section 7629 are not sufficient to accomplish the purpose. Section 7630-1 General Code provides as follows:

"If a school house is wholly or partly destroyed by fire or other casualty, or if the use of any school house for its intended purpose is prohibited by any order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and the board of education of the school district is without sufficient funds applicable to the purpose, with which to rebuild or repair such school house or to construct a new school house for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district, and it is not practicable to secure such funds under any of the six preceding sections because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district, such board of education may, subject to the provisions of sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven, and upon the approval of the electors in the manner provided by sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-five and seventy-six hundred and twenty-six issue bonds for the amount required for such purposes. For the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds and on bonds heretofore issued for the purpose herein mentioned and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, such board of education shall annually levy a tax as provided by law."

An examination of the resolution of July 9, 1914, providing for the submission to the electors of South Lebanon village school district of the question of said bond issue clearly indicates that the same contains all that is necessary for the submission of the question of a bond issue under section 7625 General Code. If the bonds in question are to be considered as having been issued by the board of education pursuant to a vote of the electors under this section, it follows from the provisions of sections 5649-2 and 5649-5b that tax levies made by the board of education for the purpose of meeting the principal and interest on said bonds are subject to the combined limitations of fifteen mills for all purposes. The fact, however, that the question of said bond issue was submitted to the electors of South Lebanon village school district in conformity to the provisions of section 7625 General Code does not necessarily imply that the question of said bond issue was not also submitted to the electors in conformity to the provisions of section 7630-1 of the General Code, and this for the reason that section 7630-1 among other things provides that bonds issued thereunder shall be subject to the approval of the electors of the school district in the manner provided for in section 7625 General Code.

The question whether or not the bonds in question were legally issued under section 7630-1 arises from the fact that the resolution providing for the submission of the question of this bond issue contained no finding to the effect that it was not practicable for the board of education to procure the funds needed for the purpose under the provisions of sections 7625 to 7630, inclusive, because of the limitations of taxation applicable to such school district.

The resolutions above referred to clearly states the emergency which confronted the board of education and which made necessary the construction of a new school building in this school district, and the only question is whether or not the board of education in failing to recite in said resolutions the fact that by reason of the limitations of taxation applicable to such school district it could not secure the necessary funds by an issue of bonds under sections 7625 to 7630 General Code, inclusive, put itself in the position of issuing these bonds under sections 7625 et seq. and not otherwise.

I am inclined to the view that although the fact that the board of education could not provide a levy sufficient for the purpose under the authority of sections 7625 to 7630, inclusive, was jurisdictional to the authority of the board to issue bonds under the authority of section 7630-1 General Code, it was not necessary for the board to make a specific finding of such fact on its record as a condition of its right to issue bonds under the latter section.

In this connection it will be noted that before a board of education can issue bonds under section 7625 and 7626 General Code it must in its resolution submitting the question of the bond issue to the electors under section 7625 determine the fact that the funds at its disposal, or that can be raised by a bond issue under section 7629, are not sufficient for the purpose. There is nothing in the provisions of section 7630-1 which require the board of education to determine that it cannot raise sufficient funds by proceeding under section 7629 or section 7625 et seq. as a condition to its right to issue bonds under section 7630-1. In one case it is the determination of a fact which gives the board of education the right to proceed. In the other case it is the existence of the fact.

The case of Lima v. McBride, 34 O. S. 338, is, I believe, in point on this question. In that case the question was whether a certain tax levy made by the county commissioners of Allen county, Ohio, for road purposes, which was carried into the record in general terms, was a levy under a statute providing for a special tax levy for certain emergency road repairs, or whether the levy was one made under a more general statute authorizing the county commissioners to levy taxes for road purposes. The syllabus in this case reads as follows:

> "2. Where the county commissioners, intending to make a levy of taxes for road purposes, under the act of April 30, 1869 (66 O. L. 60), cause such levy to be entered on the record, in general terms, the tax will not be regarded as invalid, or made under the act of 1877 (74 O. L. 92), on the mere ground that the record does not show the existence of facts which warranted the levy under the former act."

In an opinion to Hon. Fred. W. McCoy, prosecuting attorney, Carrollton, Ohio, under date of July 19, 1915, my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, addressing himself to a concrete question similar to that here presented, said:

"It will be observed that under the provisions of section 7630-1 G. C., the authority conferred by said section on said board of education may not be invoked by said board unless it finds that it is unable to provide a levy sufficient for the aforesaid purpose, under authority of sections 7625 to 7630, inclusive, of the General Code, because of the limits on tax levies applicable to said district. In other words, if the aggregate levy for said district for the year 1915, and thereafter, including said sinking fund levy, will not exceed the 15 mill limitation above referred to, the authority conferred on said board of education by section 7630-1 G. C., and section 5649-4 G. C., as amended, may not be invoked.

Inasmuch, however, as the aforesaid bonds were issued by said board of education for the purpose of constructing a new school building, in compliance with the order of the state inspector of workshops and factories, I am of the opinion that, if the said board of education finds that said sinking fund levy cannot be made without exceeding said fifteen mill limitation, said board may make said levy under authority of said sections 7630-1 G. C., and 5649-1 G. C., as amended, irrespective of the limits provided by sections 5649-2 to 5649-5b, inclusive, of the General Code, and referred to in said section 5649-4, G. C., as amended."

As above noted, the resolution of the board of education providing for the issue of bonds in question after the vote of the electors of the school district authorizing the same, recites among other things that said bonds are issued under the authority of sections 7630-1 and 5649-4, General Code.

I do not feel called upon to determine in this opinion just how far, if at all, with respect to school bonds issued on a vote of the electors one resolution of the board of education pertaining thereto can be helped out with respect to the matter of essential averments by recitals in another resolution pertaining to the said issue. Neither do I feel it necessary to here determine the question whether under the provisions of section 7630-1 the finding that it is not practicable for the board of education to procure funds under any of the six sections immediately preceding said section because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district should properly be incorporated in the resolution submitting the question of the bond issue to a vote of the electors or in the resolution providing for the issue of bonds after such vote is taken. In other words, I do not find it necessary to determine here whether section 7630-1 is essentially a bond-issuing statute or a statute providing for the levy of taxes. I do hold that the record relating to this particular bond issue, taken as a whole, shows a bona fide attempt upon the part of the board of education to issue these bonds under the authority of section 7630-1 General Code, and applying in this case to the record of the proceedings of the board of education the rule adopted in the case of Lima v. McBride, supra, with respect to the construction of the record of proceedings of inferior tribunals, I am constrained to the opinion that this bond issue can be sustained as one under the authority of section 7630-1 General Code, and that under the express terms of section 5649-4 General Code the board of education of said school district, if it finds that it cannot make a sufficient levy to pay the interest on said bonds and to create a sinking fund to redeem such bonds as they mature within the fifteen-mill limitation of the Smith one percent law, may make said levy without respect to the limitations of said law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SECRETARY OF STATE BOARD OF EMBALMING EXAMINERS—WHEN TERM EXPIRES—COMPENSATION.

The old secretary of the state board of embalming examiners should turn over the affairs of the office at the end of his term and such old secretary can receive no compensation for services performed after the old board has ceased to exist.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 9, 1917.

HON. B. G. JONES, President Ohio State Board of Embalming Examiners, 277 East Broad St., Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication you submit for my opinion the following:

> "At what time will the secretary of the old board turn over the affairs of his office to his successor and if it can be done after the annual meeting of the board can he, the old secretary, draw any compensation for intervening time?"

General Code section 1335, as amended in 107 O. L., 655, provides that there shall be a state board of embalming examiners which shall consist of five members; that the president and secretary of the state board of health shall be ex officio advisory members of the board; and that the other three members of the board shall be residents of Ohio who have had at least five consecutive years of experience in the practice of embalming and the preparation and disposition of the dead.

General Code section 1336 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., 655, provides that the members of the present state board of embalming examiners, with the exception of the president and secretary of the state board of health, shall continue in office until the terms for which they were appointed shall expire. Said section before it was amended, as above mentioned, provided that the board should consist of three members, each of whom was appointed by the governor for the term of three years from the first day of July following his appointment. The present section further provides that the governor may appoint a member to serve for three years from the first day of July of the year of his appointment, so that the board, as it is now constituted, consists of the three members who composed the old board, one of which having been re-appointed by the governor. Inasmuch as the laws providing for the state board of health have been repealed, and there being now no president and secretary of the state board of health, no other members except the three above mentioned have qualified to serve on the present board of state embalming examiners, but those who have qualified are a quorum for the transaction of all necessary business.

Section 1338 G. C. provides that:

> "On the second Tuesday of July of each year the state board of embalming examiners shall organize and elect from their number, a president and secretary-treasurer. The president shall serve for a term of one year and until his successor is elected and qualified. The secretary-treasurer shall serve during the pleasure of the board and shall keep a complete record of the transactions of the board, collect all moneys and perform any other duties required by the board. * * * The board shall from time to time make and adopt rules, regulations and by-laws, for its government not inconsistent with the laws of this state and the United States. Two members shall constitute a quorum at all meetings of said board."

The board thus created is a new board. The board as it formerly stood has been abolished and with the abolition of the old board also is terminated the terms of the officers of the old board. That is to say, when the board ceased to exist which had employed the secretary, the secretary's term then ceased and he should turn over to the new secretary-treasurer whatever books or affairs of his office there was in his possession. He can receive no compensation for any services performed after the end of his term. A new secretary, having been elected at the annual meeting, is in charge of the affairs of the office and is the only person who can draw compensation as such secretary.

Answering your question, then, I advise you that the old secretary should turn over the affairs of the office at the end of his term and that he can receive no compensation for services rendered since that time.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—APPOINTED TO FILL VACANCY—HOLDS OFFICE UNTIL SUCCESSOR ELECTED AND QUALIFIED.

A county surveyor appointed to fill a vacancy caused by the death of the one elected to said office will hold the office until his successor is elected and until he qualifies for the position according to law, and he holds as a de jure officer and not as a de facto officer. His acts are legal and he is entitled to the salary provided for said office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 9, 1917.

HON. CHARLES M. GORDON, Member House of Representatives, Georgetown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 10, 1917, which reads as follows:

"Mr. Carl Thomas who is at present acting as county surveyor for this county was appointed by the county commissioners to fill a vacancy in the county surveyor's office caused last summer by the death of county surveyor John R. Moore. The appointment was until his successor was elected and qualified. Mr. Thomas was elected last fall (in November) to fill the vacancy which will expire on the first of September, 1917. Mr. Thomas since his election to fill this vacancy has continued to fill the office of county surveyor but has never given bond nor been sworn into office to fill the vacancy from the time of his election until the present time. Will the work he has performed on disputed farm lines be legal and will the work he has performed as county engineer be legal? Can he legally draw his salary under such circumstances? If his acts are not legal will he be compelled to pay back what money he has drawn from the county treasury as county surveyor?"

And not being quite certain as to whether Mr. Thomas gave a bond and took the oath of office at the time he was appointed to fill the vacancy of John R. Moore, deceased, upon my request you wrote me further under date of July 31, 1917, stating that Mr. Thomas did take oath and give bond when he was appointed to take the place of John R. Moore, deceased. The facts in the matter submitted to me for consideration, then, are about as follows:

John R. Moore, county surveyor of Brown county, whose term would have expired in September, 1917, died some time during the summer of 1916. Carl Thomas was appointed as county surveyor to fill the vacancy and qualified according to law. Then at the November election 1917 the said Carl Thomas was elected to complete the unexpired term of Mr. Moore, but since said election he has taken no oath or given no bond and therefore has not qualified according to law. Your question upon these facts is as to what the status of matters is in your county due to the above facts.

Section 10 General Code provides, in part, as follows:

> "* * * Unless otherwise provided by law, such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term at the first general election for the office which is vacant that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have occurred. * * *"

From this provision it is readily seen that the correct procedure was followed in electing some one to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Moore; that is, the appointment lasts no longer than up until the time of the next general election for the office which is vacant, when some one to fill the vacancy must be elected.

Section 10 also provides as follows:

> "When an elective office becomes vacant, and is filled by appointment, such appointee shall hold the office until his successor is elected and qualified."

From this provision it is noted that the person appointed to fill a vacancy shall hold the office until his successor, that is, the successor of the one appointed, is elected and qualified. That is, Mr. Thomas would, in the first instance, hold his appointment up until the election in November, 1917; but further, under the provision above quoted, Mr. Thomas would hold his appointment up until his successor is elected and qualified. Notice the provision is not only until his successor is elected, but until his successor is elected and qualified. Hence, Mr. Thomas would hold the office under and by virtue of his appointment so long as a person is not elected and does not qualify to succeed him.

In the case submitted by you Mr. Thomas was elected to succeed himself, but it is my opinion that the same principle of law would apply in the case submitted by you as if some other person were elected at the November election in 1917 to succeed Mr. Thomas. If this assumption is correct, then Mr. Thomas, the appointee, would hold the office under and by virtue of his appointment up until the time that Mr. Thomas, the person elected, shall qualify; and as Mr. Thomas, the one elected to succeed Mr. Thomas, the appointee, has not yet qualified, Carl Thomas is still performing the duties of county surveyor under and by virtue of his appointment made in the summer of 1916.

Further, Mr. Thomas is an officer de jure and not merely an officer de facto. That is, he is performing the duties of his office as a matter of right just the same as any other legally elected or appointed officer would perform the duties of his office. To substantiate this legal proposition I will merely call attention to the case of State ex rel. v. Howe, 25 O. S. 588.

With the above conclusion in mind the answers to your questions are readily given. All the work that Mr. Thomas has performed up to the present time is legal and indisputable, and he is entitled to draw the salary provided by law for his services so rendered as county surveyor. It follows from this, of course, that the county can not recover the money which it has paid to him for services rendered.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TEXT BOOKS—WHAT BOARD HAS POWER TO ADOPT SAME.

General Code section 7706-2, which provides that county and district superintendents shall recommend text books to county boards of education, does not repeal by implication the provisions of section 7713 which gives the power to adopt text books to district boards of education.

A county board of education has no power to adopt a text book and therefore any recommendations to it of text books should in turn be referred to the various district boards of education of the county school district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 9, 1917.

HON. MELL G. UNDERWOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, New Lexington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion contains the following language:

> "Does section 7706-2 repeal section 7713 by implication? Under this new section where does the power of selecting text books lie? If not given to the county board of education, what powers does this new section of the law give to the county board in reference to the selection of text books?"

Section 7706-2 of the General Code, as amended in 107 O. L. 624, reads as follows:

> "It shall be the duty of the county superintendent, district superintendents to recommend to the county board of education such text books and courses of study as are most suitable for adoption."

No where in our school laws is the county board of education given authority to adopt or purchase text books and it cannot be inferred that authority to so adopt or purchase same is given to the county board from the mere fact that the county and district superintendents are directed to recommend same to such board as most suitable for adoption.

Said section, prior to its amendment, above noted, and found in 104 O. L. 133, read as follows:

> "It shall be the duty of the district superintendent to recommend to the village and rural boards of education within such district, such text books and courses as are most suitable for adoption."

It is noted that as distinquished from the section as it now reads, the section formerly provided that the district superintendents should recommend text books to the village and rural boards of education. This for the reason that the village and rural boards of education were the boards of education authorized by law to adopt text books and the district superintendents having the general supervision of the schools of the district, which include the districts controlled by the various boards of education, gave such superintendents special knowledge of the particular needs of such schools, which knowledge should be valuable to the various boards of education when the question of the adoption of text books was under consideration.

Section 7713 of the General Code provides:

> "At a regular meeting, held between the first Monday in February and the first Monday in August, each board of education shall determine by a majority vote of all members elected the studies to be pursued and which of such text books so filed shall be used in the schools under its control. But no text books now in use or hereafter adopted shall be changed, nor any part thereof altered or revised, nor any other text book be substituted therefor for five years after the date of the selection and adoption thereof, as shown by the official records of such boards, except by the consent at a regular meeting, of five-sixths of all members elected thereto. Books so submitted shall be adopted for the full term of five years."

Each board of education mentioned in the above section means the board of education having control of the schools of the various districts, but does not include the county board of education and, as noted above, the county board of education has no power to adopt text books.

In opinion No. 1838, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, Vol. 2, page 1357, section 7706-2, as found in 104 O. L. 133, was under consideration, and it was held that while the district superintendent had a right to recommend text books he had no power or authority to adopt or cause to be adopted any particular text book or books. I agree with the reasoning and the holding in said opinion and believe that the same has a bearing upon the questions presented by you, for under the language of section 7706-2, as now found in 107 O. L. page 624, all that the county and district superintendents are authorized to do with reference to text books and courses of study is to recommend same. Just why the legislature provided that the recommendation should be made to the county board of education is not clear. Only an inference as to said intention can be drawn and that is that inasmuch as the county board of education occupies a sort of supervisory capacity over the school districts of the county, and inasmuch as the county board of education elects the county superintendent, who has general supervision of the schools of the county, it must be inferred that the legislature intended the county board of education to in turn recommend to the various boards of education for adoption such text books and courses of study as is recommended to it by the county and district superintendents. No other conclusion can be drawn, but the fact that it is provided that such recommendation shall be made does not authorize the county board of education to adopt text books, and the same cannot be taken as a repeal of any part of the language of section 7713.

So that, answering your questions specifically, I advise you:

> (1) That section 7706-2 does not repeal by implication section 7713 of the General Code.
> (2) That the power of selecting text books lies with the various district boards of education and not the county board of education.
> (3) That the only power the county board of education can have is to recommend text books to the varoius district boards.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

TAX COMMISSION—"ROAD BED" AND "MAIN TRACK" AS USED IN SECTION 5430 DEFINED—OPINION No. 388 MODIFIED.

1. The established practice of the tax commission by which the term "roadbed" as used in section 5430 General Code is limited in application to improvements placed on real estate for the purpose of supporting tracks is correct and should be followed in the future so far as the general features of it are concerned.

2. There is grave doubt as to the power of the commission to single out one track and call it the "main track" for the purposes of section 5430 General Code; but in the absence of complaint that practice may also be followed, though primarily the phrase "main track" means all tracks which are in point of fact "main tracks" as distinguished from side tracks, switches, turnouts, etc.

3. The practice of the commission which in effect localizes the roadbed underlying all tracks, excepting the single or first main track, and apportions only the latter on the mileage basis cannot be supported under section 5430 General Code; and in the future the commission should apportion the value of all the roadbeds on the mileage basis, whether such roadbed underlies the main track or side tracks, turnouts, etc.

4. Opinion No. 388 is modified in so far as it is inconsistent with this opinion, and particularly in so far as it purports to frame a definition of the term "roadbed."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 9, 1917.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of July 7, 1917, requesting a reconsideration of a certain part of my opinion No. 388 given to the tax commission under date of June 8, 1917, and relating in the main to the apportionment of property of railroad companies to counties and taxing districts therein. In that opinion the word "road-bed" was defined as including the land itself and as referring to a strip of land sufficient to accommodate the necessary tracks of the railroad—in other words as substantially synonymous with the term "right of way."

You submit in your last letter a brief summary of the requirements of the tax commission of Ohio made in the form prescribed by it for the return of real estate and personal property by railroads. From this it is apparent that the commission has not exactly placed a definition on the term "road-bed," but has used the term "roadway" so as to include the following:

> "roadbed, embankments, cuts, slopes, and fills and devices for the protection of the road, such as walls, breakwaters, levees, canals and dams; tunnels, bridges, trestles and culverts; ties, rails, frogs and switches; track fastenings and appurtenances; fences crossings, cattleguards, and signs; but not the value of the land. * * * "

The definition which was given in the former opinion was based exclusively upon an interpretation of the decision in the case of Railway Company v. Hynicka, 4 N. P. N. S., 345, affirmed without report in Hynicka v. Railway Co., 77 O. S., 628. Hoffheimer, J., in his opinion in this case did hold rather clearly that not only "road-bed," whatever meaning be attached to that term, but all real estate necessary to the "daily running operations of the road" was to be averaged and apportioned on the mileage basis. (See page 353.) In other words, the learned judge evidently supposed that all real estate necessary to the daily running operation of the road was to be apportioned.

Of course this view involved a manifest error as old section 2774, which the court was then applying, did not authorize the apportionment of all property necessary to the daily running operation, but was in terms exactly the same in this particular as present section 5430.

In justification for Judge Hoffheimer's error, at this point it is to be observed that he was following the dictum of Bradbury, J., in Railroad Company v. Commissioners, 48 O. S., 249, wherein, speaking of section 2774—which was then in exactly the same language as is now found in section 5430 General Code—he said:

> * * * "This section provides that such proportion of the entire property of a railroad, (except realty not necessary to its daily running operations) shall be taxed in each district through which it runs, as the length of the road in such district bears to its whole length."

It will be seen that Judge Bradbury also supposed that all real estate necessary to the daily running operations of a railroad would be apportioned on the mileage basis.

This discrepancy was observed when the other opinion was prepared and the thought in my mind was to reconcile these dicta with the statutes as they actually appeared by putting on the word "road-bed" such interpretation as would include practically the entire right of way.

This feature of the former opinion was not essential to the main inquiry then considered and answered.

The practice of the commission is not consistent with the former opinion nor with the dicta upon which it was based. In reconsidering the present question it is obvious that I must first determine whether and to what extent the decisions referred to are binding and should be followed.

I have already said they seem to rest on a misapprehension of what the statute provides. In addition to this fact, however, an examination of both decisions show that the propositions laid down by the two courts in their respective decisions were in neither case essential to the points to be decided therein.

In Railway Company v. Commissioners the only question was as to whether or not the one mile assessment pike tax was properly levied upon the assessed value of the property of a railroad within the bounds of the road. No question as to what should actually have been done under the railroad tax statutes was raised in the case, though the alleged inequality and unfairness of the statutes were referred to in the argument thus evoking the remarks of Judge Bradbury.

In Railway Company v. Hynicka the question was as to whether the value of a bridge across the Ohio river had entered into the valuation made by the county auditor under the railroad property tax sections, i. e., whether it was property used in the daily running operations or was separate and distinct property like the bridge in the case of Cowen v. Aldridge, 114 Fed. Rep., 44. The latter bridge was a toll bridge and as such was held not properly included within the property to be assessed by the local auditor or the board of auditors.

In Railway Company v. Hynicka the county auditor had attempted to place so much of the value of the bridge as was represented by that part of it which lay within the territorial limits of Ohio upon the duplicate as omitted property for the reasons above stated. All that it was necessary for the court to conclude was that it was property used in the daily running operations of the railroad, and therefore had been already assessed for the year in controversy.

The gratuitous remarks of the court to the effect that all property used in the daily running operations was apportioned on the mileage basis was not essential to the decision.

I conclude, therefore, that the cases referred to do not answer the question now under discussion and that I may with propriety consider the question on its merits.

As I have intimated in this opinion and held in the former opinion, no real estate as such, whether used in the daily running operations or not, is to be apportioned on the mileage basis unless it constitutes either "main track, road-bed or power house."

The commission's interpretation of the word "road-bed" appears to be that which limits the application of the term to improvements on the real estate. This is the natural and primary meaning of the term. A mere strip of land secured for the purpose of building a roadbed is not in this sense a roadbed. The latter comes into existence only when the railroad company has put ballast consisting of gravel or stone, or culverts and bridges, and the like upon the land for the purpose of supporting the track at the proper grade. Of course, in one sense, such material when in place naturally becomes a part of the real estate, but it is not so considered for the purpose under discussion.

Is this the meaning of the term "roadbed" as used in section 5430 General Code? On the face of section 5430 itself, there is support for this meaning in the immediate context which is:

> "rolling stock, main track, roadbed, power houses, poles, wires, supplies, etc."

All the other things mentioned in this category have in common the attribute of being, or of having been in the first instance, personal property. Those most nearly like roadbed, i. e., "main track" and "power houses" have in common the additional attribute of being improvements on real estate.

If I were to base my opinion on section 5430 alone then I would come to the conclusion without further thought that the commission's interpretation is right.

It is only when other considerations are evoked that any doubt is raised. In the first place the term "roadbed" as used in similar statutes in other states has not been uniformly interpreted. Consistent with the commission's interpretation and that which I would place on the section standing by itself are the following cases:

> Cass County v. C. B. & Q. R. R. Co., 25 Neb. 348; > Railroad Company v. Board of Equalization 60 Cal. 12;
> City of Shreveport v. Shreveport Belt R. R. Co., 107 La. 785;
> Attorney-General v. Detroit, 148 Mich. 71;
> RE: New York Bay R. R. Co., 75 N. J. Law 389;
> Railroad Co. v. Stockton, 149 Cal. 83;
> Skiles v. Railway Co., 130 Mo. App. 162;

Opposed to it and consistent with the idea that the term "roadbed" includes the real estate itself are the following:

> Hayes v. Railroad Co., 135 Mo. 618;
> Meadows v. Pac. Life Ins. Co. of California, 129 Mo. 76;
> Railroad Co. v. Railway Co., 87 Ala. 520;
> Osgood v. U. S. Health & Ac. Ins. Co., 76 N. H. 475;
> McClure v. Great West. Ac. Association, 133 Iowa 224;
> Railway Co. v. Patterson, 122 Tenn. 1;
> Railway Co. v. Grayson, 72 Ark. 119.

Not all of these cases are in point. Possibly all of the cases on the other side are to be distinguished. However, it is fair to say that whatever be the weight of authority the term "roadbed" has not been universally regarded as having any such definite and fixed meaning as to preclude either definition.

Again, I find the term "roadbed" in another law relating to railroads wherein it clearly refers to land. I refer to the sections relating to the appropriation of private property by railroads and particularly to those under favor of which a railroad company may appropriate an unfinished roadbed owned or claimed by another railroad company or companies and not used for a period of five years. (Sections 11076 et seq. General Code.) Section 11083 General Code defines roadbed as used in these sections as including "rights of way, depot grounds, and other easements connected therewith."

It is manifest, however, that this statutory use of the term is a conventional one.

I do not deem it necessary to go into an extended discussion of the decisions which have been or may be cited. It is sufficient to observe that the better reasoning supports the commission's interpretation; but even if there were some doubt about this that interpretation has, as you have informed me, been followed and applied by the commission ever since it came into existence. An established executive interpretation of even a doubtful statute ought not to be disturbed by the courts unless it is based in a manifestly erroneous conception thereof. In this case I not only do not think the commission's interpretation is not warranted by statute, but believe that it is, at the very least, the better interpretation thereof; in point of fact I think it is rather clearly true that it is the only true and correct interpretation of the section.

For the reason then that section 5430 General Code on its face indicates that the word "road bed" is used in the sense of something put upon the land; because that is the natural meaning of the term; because the apparent weight of judicial opinion under similar statutes support this definition; because the two cases containing dicta, which it is difficult to reconcile with this view, are not authoritative; and because, finally, even if it were possible to raise a doubt as to the interpretation of the section by the consideration of extraneous circumstances, such doubt should be resolved in favor of that interpretation of the section which has been adopted and followed for years by the tax commission.

I conclude that the blank forms in use by the commission as reflecting upon the practical application to be given to the section in this particular are proper.

Your letter, though not specifically requesting my opinion thereon, also raises the question as to the propriety of the commission's treatment of the term "main track" as used in section 5430. The commission has divided all tracks into the following classes:

> "Main track, second main track, branches, yard tracks, sidings, switches and turnouts."

The statement of the commission is that according to its practice.

> "A valuation per mile is placed upon the second, third, fourth and fifth tracks if so many are operated, and also upon the sidings, yard tracks and switches, and the valuation of these tracks is assigned to the county and taxing district in which they are located or through which said tracks run.
> "The value of the single first main track is treated as 'Other Property' and distributed in accordance with the method outlined thereunder.
> "In the apportionment of the valuation of railroad companies 'Other Property' includes the value of main track (single), roadbed, power houses, telegraph and telephone lines, moneys, credits and investments and other intangible capital. 'Other Property,' which consists of the two items just named, is distributed over the entire mileage (single main track) to each taxing district in the proportion the miles of main track therein bears to the entire length of the road in the state."

The question which is now raised in my mind is in part suggested by section

8745 General Code, an old section which has been in force side by side with the railroad taxation sections for a number of years, and which provides as follows:

> "Any railroad company may maintain and operate, or construct, maintain and operate a railroad, with such main tracks, not exceeding six and such side tracks, turnouts, offices, depots, round-houses * * * and other necessary appliances, as it deems necessary, between the points named in its articles of incorporation * * *."

In short, the commission has assumed that but one track is a main track consistently with the use of the term in section 5430 in the singular number, whereas section 8745 assumes and provides that there may be more than one main track, distinguishing such tracks from such other tracks as are comprised in the classification of "sidings, turnouts, switches," etc., all of which are tracks of another character.

Members of the commission have verbally pointed out to a representative of this department that it would seem to be unfair to distribute on the basis of mileage the value of more than one main track, because on that basis a county through which a division of a railroad having but one main track might run, would share the value of an additional main track located in another county. That is to say, assuming, which is perhaps the case, that the Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cincinnati & St. Louis Railroad Company operates four main tracks east of Columbus and only two on any of its divisions west of Columbus, the commission practically would leave the additional value arising from the extra main tracks in the counties where such tracks are located; whereas the contrary application of the statute would bring into the western counties a part of the value represented by the tracks lying in the eastern counties.

This question is much more troublesome than that relating to the term "roadbed." I do not think that the natural meaning of the phrase "main track" can be limited to a single track; so that, in this instance, the commission's interpretation lacks at least one of the sanctions which support its interpretation of the word "roadbed." I do not know how it is possible to determine which of two or more tracks on which traffic is continually moving in one direction or another is the "first main track." Where, for example, one track carries all the eastern-bound traffic and the other the western-bound traffic one is as much a "main track" as the other. It is obvious that the commission's selection of one track under these circumstances is made upon a more or less arbitrary basis for the purpose of avoiding the supposed inequality of applying the statute in the other way.

I am not so sure that the commission has not power, and that it is its duty, to obviate the injustice, which the commission fears, in another way. Section 5431 provides that if the line of a railroad company is divided into separate divisions or branches.

> "* * * so much of the rolling stock thereof as belongs to or is used solely upon such divisions or branches shall be apportioned in like manner to the county, or counties, and to each taxing district therein, through which such branch or division runs. * * *"

While this section in terms relates only to the apportionment of rolling stock, in my opinion it establishes a principle that the commission may adhere to for the apportionment of other things.

I agree with the commission that the statute as a whole was not intended to give to the counties through which one separate division or relatively unimportant branch runs the benefit of the great value inhering in the tracks on the main trunk line. For example, the New York Central Lines between Cleveland and Toledo are operated over two divisions. The main division, which is a four-track line, runs via Sandusky,

What is locally known as the "Southern Division," which is a single-track line, runs via Norwalk and Fremont. I agree that Huron county, for example, in which no part of the trunk line lies, ought not to reap any advantage from the fact that what may be termed a "part of the main line" is located within its borders and the fact that one of the main lines has four tracks.

It would seem, however, that if section 5431 be liberally interpretated the commission might regard the "Southern Division" as a separate unit for the purpose of apportioning the value of the single main track thereof, and apportion the main track on the trunk line to those counties in which that line is located on the mileage basis.

Of course the commission's method of handling this problem comes to precisely the same result as would be the case if different terminology were used, for, as I understand it, the commission gets a value per mile for all tracks, which is applied uniformly in all counties and taxing districts. Where the same number of main tracks exists throughout a division this would come to the same thing as apportioning the value of the main track on the mileage basis; but it is true that if the same number of main tracks does not exist throughout a division there would be a substantial difference between the commission's method of apportioning track values and that suggested by the opposite interpretation of the statute.

The commission's interpretation, however, as observed, has the support of the fact that the phrase in the statute is in the singular number.

On the whole, I see no objection to the commission's going through, for the present at least, with its established scheme of using a single track as a "main track" so long as no question is raised by any railroad or county auditor. This is because the established practice ought not to be upset except for sufficient reason. I must say, however, that if the question were a new one I should be inclined strongly to advise the commission that the phrase "main track" includes all main tracks, and is not limited to a "first main track."

I have not referred to the question respecting main tracks solely because it is raised by the statement transmitted to me by the commission respecting its method of operation in the past, but also because another application of the phrase "roadbed" as used in the section is here involved. I have heretofore approved the commission's definition of roadbed in general; however, I find myself unable to approve it without qualification, for it is apparent from the information furnished me by the commission that you have been apportioning as "roadbed" only the sub-structure of the "first track." This appears from the following:

"TRACKS AND ROADWAY:

"Under this heading a return is required of the number of miles and the true and actual value per mile of all tracks owned or leased by the company, located in each county and taxing district through which the road runs in the state of Ohio. For the purpose of this return railway tracks are defined as follows: Main track, second main track, branches, yard tracks, sidings, and switches and turnouts.

"The valuation per mile of track is to include the value of roadbed, embankments, cuts, slopes and fills and devices for the protection of the road, such as walls, breakwaters, levees, canals and dams; tunnels, bridges, trestles and culverts; ties, rails, frogs and switches; track fastenings and appurtenances; fences, crossings cattle guards and signs; but not the value of the land. * *

"A valuation per mile is placed upon the second, third, fourth and fifth tracks if so many are operated, and also upon the sidings, yard tracks and switches, and the valuation of these tracks is assigned to the county and taxing district in which they are located or through which said tracks run. * * *."

These statements in connection with others which have previously been quoted raise some question in my mind as to the commission's method of procedure, but it would seem to be as follows:

The commission does not separate in the form of return prepared by it the value of the tracks as such from the value of the roadbed, but all are lumped together as "tracks and roadway" and the valuation per mile is put upom them as main, second, third, fourth and fifth tracks, and as sidings, yard tracks and switches. In other words, it appears that what is properly comprised within the meaning of "roadbed" is treated by the commission for convenience as part of the value of an entire thing called "tracks and roadway," and that this value is divided into first, track, second track, etc.; and that only the value of the "first track" is apportioned.

If this is true, then it would follow as a practical result that the value of the roadbed underlying the second track and other additional main tracks, and the value of the roadbed underlying switches, yard tracks, turnouts, and the like, would be localized instead of distributed and proportioned to the length of the road. I cannot find any justification for this in section 5430, unless it be in the mere fact that the word "roadbed" follows the phrase "main track" and is influenced in its meaning thereby. That is to say, the commission's interpretation of the section would read as follows:

> "* * * and so that the rolling stock, main track, and the roadbed thereunder, power houses, poles, wires, supplies, * * * shall be apportioned in like proportion that the length of the road in such county bears to the entire length thereof, * * * etc."

It seems to me that if the legislature had meant this result it would have used different language. It is not some of the roadbed that is to be apportioned, but all of the roadbed, whether under the main track or under other tracks. I regret very much to come to any conclusion that would not be in harmony with the established practice of the commission, but I cannot bring myself to support the commission's practice in this respect.

In my opinion, all roadbeds of the company, by which I mean all structures and improvements designed to accommodate any and all tracks of the company, whether main tracks or otherwise, are apportionable. It will be objected that this has the unequal result referred to above in the discussion of the phrase "main track." Any principle that might be derived from such supposed injustice cannot, however, be carried too far. For example, power houses, poles, wires and supplies must be apportioned on the basis of the length of the road, so that the value of the property of an interurban railroad, like the Columbus, Delaware and Marion Railway, for instance, having one power house located in Delaware county, must be so apportioned that Franklin and Marion counties will share in the value of that power house. So also with the poles and wires; the telegraph lines of a railroad company may be much more valuable in one county than in others on account of the large number of wires carried, etc., yet the value of the whole as ascertained must be apportioned on the mileage basis.

It is my opinion that the plain language of section 5430 requires the commision to apportion all roadbed on the mileage basis and prevents the commission from separating roadbed into different classes as it has separated tracks.

My conclusions then are as follows:

1. The established practice of the tax commission by which the term "roadbed" as used in section 5430 General Code is limited in application to improvements placed on real estate for the purpose of supporting tracks is correct and should be followed in the future so far as the general features of it are concerned.

2. There is grave doubt as to the power of the commission to single out one track and call it the "main track" for the purposes of section 5430 General Code; but in the absence of complaint that practice may also be followed, though primarily the phrase "main track" means all tracks which are in point of fact "main tracks" as distinguished from side tracks, switches, turnouts, etc.

3. The practice of the commission which in effect localizes the roadbeds underlying all tracks, excepting the single or first main track, and apportions only the latter on the mileage basis cannot be supported under section 5430 General Code; and in the future the commission should apportion the value of all the roadbeds on the mileage basis, whether such roadbed underlies the main track or side tracks, turnouts, etc.

4. Opinion No. 388 is modified in so far as it is inconsistent with this opinion, and particulerly in so far as it purports to frame a definition of the term "roadbed."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—HOW TUITION FOR HIGH SCHOOL PUPIL FROM ANOTHER DISTRICT RECOVERED.

A board of education cannot recover tuition for high school pupils from the district of the residence of such pupils, un'ess WRITTEN NOTICE is given as provided by section 7750.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 9, 1917.

HON. C. A. STUBBS, Prosecuting Attorney, Celina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of July 11, 1917, you inquire as to the following statement of facts:

> "In Re: Opinion 1653, 1916.
> "The above opinion was given to B. A. Myers, prosecuting attorney, on June 3, 1916.
> "In this case, no written notice was given to the school board, of the attendance of pupils from Montezuma special school district to the Celina High school. Members of the board, however, had knowledge of the fact that such pupils were attending.
> "The people concerned were instructed by Mr. Myers that such knowledge would be sufficient notice and that written notice would not be necessary in this case. The board now refuses to pay the tuition.
> "I will thank you to reply, stating whether written notice is necessary as designated in the statute, where the board has knowledge as in this case."

The opinion of the Attorney-General, to which you refer, is found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916 Vol. 1, page 976, the syllabus of which reads as follows:

> "A rural school district which maintains no high school and has no agreement with another district maintaining a high school for the schooling of its high school pupils, is required to pay the tuition of such high school pupils by section 7747 G. C., 104 O. L., 125, when the notice of the attendance of such pupils is given as required by section 7750, G. C."

Your inquiry now is whether actual notice on the part of the members of the board is a sufficient substitute for the written notice which is required by section 7750. The matter of giving notice is in relation to the payment of tuition for pupils who are eligible for admission to high school.

General Code section 7747 provides that the tuition of pupils who are eligible for admission to a high school and who reside in rural districts in which no high school is maintained shall be paid by the board of the district in which such pupils have a legal residence.

General Code section 7750 provides that a board of education which has no high school, may enter into an agreement with one or more boards of education where high schools are maintained, for the schooling o all its high school pupils, and then provides:

> "In case no such agreement is entered into, the school to be attended can be selected by the pupil holding a diploma, if due notice in writing is given to the clerk of the board of education of the name of the school to be attended and the date the attendance is to begin, such notice to be filed not less than five days previous to the beginning of attendance."

Notice is defined as the information given of some act done or the interpellation of which some act is required to be done and is usually divided into two classes, viz., actual and constructive.

Actual notice may again be divided into express and implied and one of the classes of express notice is written notice or notice in writing.

It was held in Jones vs. Van Zandt, 13 Fed. cases, 1047-1049, that where notice is required, any knowledge is equivalent to notice except where it is required to be in writing.

In Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1913, Vol. 2, page 1207, section 7750 was being considered and the following language was used:

> "Section 7750 of the General Code, in so far as giving notice in writing of the school to be attended by the pupil, provides in substance that if the board of education, not having a high school, does not provide a high school for its Patterson graduates, a school which said graduates may attend can be selected by the pupils holding the diplomas provided due notice in writing is given to the clerk of the board of the name of the school to be attended, and the date the attendance is to begin, such notice to be filed not less than five days previous to the beginning of the attendance."

In School District v. Harrison Twp., 14 O. Dec. 62, the court had under consideration the same section and in its conclusion, on page 64, lays down the following proposition:

> "Where no high school is maintained by the township board of education and no agreement has been made by such township board, with one or more boards of educa ion of the same or adjoining townships for the schooling of high school pupils of such township, the high school pupils resident in such township may attend any high school in the state, and tuition in such case shall be chargeable to such township board of education, providing written notice thereof is given to the clerk of the board of education before the attendance begins."

That the legislature has a right to provide for written notices cannot be doubted. A board of education is a creature of statute and where the statute prescribes certain forms or rules to be followed, the board in the transaction of its business must follow same. It was provided in this case that notice in writing should be given at least five days prior to the time the attendance of the pupil began and that such notice should be given to the clerk of the board of education. The notice must also contain the name of the school to be attended and the date the attendance is to begin. I am satisfied if the board of education of the district in which the pupil resides should refuse to make payment and an action were brought by the board of education of the school attended, demurrer would lie to the petition on the ground that notice in writing was not alleged.

In MacMillen v. Middletown, 11 L. R. A. (n. s.) 391, it was held that the legislature may make the giving of written notice to the municipal authorities, of the defective condition of a street, prior to the happening of an accident, a condition precedent to holding the municipality liable for injuries caused by such defect, and Gray, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, says:

> "It is not alleged in the complaint that this written notice had been given, and, as such a notice was made a condition precedent to the maintenance of such an action, the absence of such an allegation would be fatal to the complaint upon demurrer."

Speaking further of the right of the legislature to provide for written notice on page 393, the same court uses the following language:

> "The cases are numerous which involve the right of a municipality to defeat the claims of a plaintiff because of a failure to show notice or knowledge on its part of the conditions complained of and because of the failure to comply with statutory requirements of notice to municipal officers before the commencement of an action. The novelty of the case, in the feature of the statutory requirement that a written notice shall have been given, is explained in the legislative purpose to make that certain which before was often uncertain. The fact of knowledge should no longer be dependent upon inferences from the evidence of circumstances, nor the liability of the municipality be left to a determination reached upon an indulgent construction of the legal rules as to actual notice.'

What applies to a municipal corporation would also apply to a board of education and I must therefore conclude that inasmuch as the statute provides for written notice to be given, other knowledge or notice will not be sufficient.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SUPERINTENDENT OF BANKS—EXPENSE INCURRED IN LIQUIDATION OF BANK DISALLOWED BY COURT—PERSONAL LIABILITY.

Where the superintendent of banks incurred expenses in the liquidation of a bank in 1914 and 1915, which expenses he paid, and upon presenting the same to the court of common pleas of the county in which such bank was located, under section 742-4 G. C., the same were partially disallowed, and thereupon before payment of dividends, the superintendent resigned, a cause of action exists against him for the amount of such expenses so paid out of the assets of such bank which was disallowed by the court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 9, 1917.

HON. PHILIP C. BERG, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On July 21, 1917, you addressed the following request for advice to this office:

> "We submit herewith the following statement of facts:
> "A private bank was closed by this department May 16, 1914. The superintendent immediately proceeded to liquidate its assets in the performance of which he incurred expenses, including salaries of liquidating agents, bookkeepers, clerks, attorney fees, etc., which were paid for as rendered.
> "On or about December 26, 1914, he (the superintendent) made application to the court of common pleas of the county in which the bank was closed, for the approval of the expenses thus incurred and which had been paid out of the assets of the bank, to which application objections were filed by a committee representing the creditors of the bank; before a hearing was had thereon the superintendent resigned. Later, viz. March 16, 1915, the matter was heard and the court made an order therein, a copy of which is hereto attached disallowing, or not approving, a part of the moneys paid out; this disallowance amounts to approximately $2,300.00. No proceedings have ever been instituted by either of my two predecessors in office. The matter is substantially the same as when the order was made by the common pleas court in March, 1915, reference to which is made herein.
> "Please favor us with your opinion advising what, if any, duties we should perform in this matter."

Since submitting the above you have forwarded two copies of bonds given by the former superintendent, one executed by the American Surety Co. of New York, the other by the National Surety Co., each for the sum of twenty-five thousand dollars

The law governing the payment of expenses by you incurred in the liquidation of an insolvent bank is G. C. section 742-4, which, as it read at the time of the transactions you mention, was as follows:

> "The expenses incurred by the superintendent of banks in the liquidation of any bank in accordance with the provisions of this act, shall include the expenses of deputy or assistants, clerks and examiners employed in such liquidation, together with reasonable attorney fees for counsel employed by said superintendent of banks in the course of such liquidation. Such compensation of counsel, of deputies or assistants, clerks and examiners in the liquidation of any corporation, company, society or association, and all expenses of supervision and liquidation shall be fixed by the superintendent of banks, subject to the approval of the common pleas court of the county in which the office of such corporation, company, society or association was located, on notice to such corporation ,company, society or association. The expense of such liquidation shall be paid out of the property of such corporation, company, society or association in the hands of said superintendent of banks, and such expenses shall be a valid charge against the property in the hands of said superintendent of banks and shall be paid first, in the order of priority."

This section has since been amended by adding thereto a proviso to the effect that such expenses should not be paid until after the approval of an account thereof by the court, and also providing for notice by publication of the filing thereof. But as it stood at the time it required the superintendent in making payments of such expenses, to do so at his peril, and in case of disapproval by the court he would be required to account for and make good any amount which the court so refused to approve. If he continued in office until a dividend were payable under section 742-7, he could be required by order of the court to take such excess payment into account in fixing the amount of the dividend, and if all claims against the bank were paid in full and there were surplus assets to be disposed of for the benefit of stockholders under section 742-11 et seq., this sum would still remain assets in his hands to be disposed of under the provisions of those sections.

This consequence is defeated by his resignation before paying a dividend, and as his successor in office never received the amount in question, he is, of course, not responsible for it.

There is, therefore, a cause of action against the former superintendent for the amount.

The two bonds are similar in form. The condition in both is identical, and is as follows:

"The condition of the above obligation is such that whereas the said Emory Lattaner has been duly and in accordance with the law appointed superintendent of the department of banks and banking of the state of Ohio, to serve from the sixth day of June 1913 and until his successor shall have been appointed and qualified.

"Now if the said Emory Lattanner shall during his term of office faithfully discharge the duties imposed upon him by law to the best of his knowledge and ability, then this obligation shall be void, otherwise it shall remain in full force and effect."

Nothing is here stated in reference to the payment of money, but only that he shall faithfully discharge the duties imposed upon him by law to the best of his knowledge and ability, and it might be argued upon his behalf that he has done so, that in making the payments above discussed he was discharging his duty to the best of his knowledge and ability; that the payments were made in good faith and on the belief on his part that the expenses were necessary and the amounts reasonable. This defense, however, would fall short by reason of the following consideration. His duty did not end with making a payment, but continued until he had complied with the decision of the court upon that subject. He might have protected himself by contracting for repayment or taking security thereof, or withholding actual payment until the court had passed upon it, but it was his official duty, upon the finding of the above deficiency by the court, to return the amount in money to the assets of the bank. The general clause that he will faithfully discharge the duties imposed upon him is to be taken to its full extent.

The statutory provision on the subject is G. C. section 6, which is as follows:

> "A bond payable to the state of Ohio, or other payee as may be directed by law, reciting the election or appointment of a person to an office or public trust under or in pursuance of the constitution or laws, and conditioned for the faithful performance, by such person, of the duties of the office or trust, shall be sufficient, notwithstanding any special provision made by law for the condition of such bond."

The statement is that the bond in this general form shall be sufficient. This has been held by the courts to mean sufficient to accomplish the purpose of the bond; that is, sufficient to secure the faithful performance of all his duties of whatever nature.

King et al. v. Nichols, et al. 16 O. S. 80.
Kelly v. State, 25 O. S. 567.
Dawson v. State, 38 O. S. 1.

In the latter case the court says:

> "A faithful discharge of the duties of the office of county treasurer, within the condition of his official bond, required the payment over 'according to law' of all moneys which came into the hands of the treasurer, during his term, belonging to the city or school district."

In Kelly v. State, supra, the bond provided for the payment of moneys due the state, county and township and omitted school boards, and the moneys of these latter were held included under the general terms, so that the bonds given in the case under consideration seem sufficient, and as those companies probably have representatives in the state so that they may be sued here, although the principal on the bond is absent and said to be a resident of the state of Texas, it would seem to be your duty to proceed to enforce the payment of the above obligation.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHEN BOARD MAY REDISTRICT COUNTY SCHOOL DISTRICT—PETITION OF PRESIDENTS OF VILLAGE AND RURAL BOARDS—UNNECESSARY.

The county board of education may, any year, upon its own motion, redistrict the county school district into supervision districts the same to take effect the first of the following September.

It is not necessary for a petition of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of education to be filed in order that the county board of education may act in redistricting the county school district, although the county board must act when such petition is filed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 9, 1917.

HON. EUGENE WRIGHT, Prosecuting Attorney, Logan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of July 2, 1917, you submit for my opinion the following:

> "I would like to have an opinion as soon as convenient from your office concerning section 4738 of the new school code. The question which presents itself is, can the county board of education, upon their own initiative, redistrict the county into supervision districts, any year, to take effect the first day of following September, or must they wait and act only when three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural districts apply or petition for a redistricting of the county?"

General Code section 4738, to which you refer, provides as follows:

"The county board of education shall divide the county school district, any year, to take effect the first day of the following September, into supervision districts, each to contain one or more village or rural school districts The territory of such supervision districts shall be contiguous and compact. In the formation of the supervision districts consideration shall be given to the number of teachers employed, the amount of consolidation and centralization, the condition of the roads and general topography. The territory in the different districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable and the number of teachers employed in any one supervision district shall not be less than thirty. The county board of education shall, upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county, redistrict the county into supervision districts. The county board of education may at their discretion require the county superintendent to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers of the village or rural schools of the county. This shall supersede the necessity of the district supervision of these schools."

That part of the above quoted section which provides that the county board shall divide the county school district any year is clear and explicit. That is to say, if in any year certain conditions warrant action upon the part of the county board of education in dividing county school districts into supervision districts, section 4738, above quoted, is sufficient authority for the county board of education to act.

It is well in the consideration of this question for us to note the legislative history of said section in order that we may determine the full effect of that part of the section which provides for a redistricting upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of a county. Said section was enacted February 5, 1914, and, as found in 104 O. L. 140, reads as follows:

"The county board of education shall within thirty days after organizing divide the county school district into supervision districts, each to contain one or more village or rural school districts. The territory of such supervision districts shall be contiguous and compact. In the formation of the supervision districts consideration shall be given to the number of teachers employed, the amount of consolidation and centralization, the condition of the roads and general topography. The territory in the different districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable and the number of teachers employed in any one supervision district shall not be less than twenty nor more than sixty.

"The county board of education shall, upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county, redistrict the county into supervision districts."

Prior to the enactment of said section there was no provision made in our school laws for county supervision, or for the dividing of the county school district into supervision districts. So that it was under the provisions of the above quoted section that the county was originally divided into supervision districts. Under the above section when the county was once divided into supervision districts, within thirty days after the original organization of a county board of education, such supervision districts would continue to remain as so originally formed, until an application was made by three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural boards of education of a county, asking the county board of education to redistrict the county into supervision districts. There was no authority in the county board to redistrict after it had once divided the county into supervision districts unless said application was filed by the presidents above mentioned, but in 106 O. L. 396, said section was amended as follows:

> "The county board of education shall divide the county school district, any year, to take effect the first day of the following September. into supervision districts, each to contain one or more village or rural school districts. The territory of such supervision districts shall be contiguous and compact. In the formation of the supervision districts consideration shall be given to the number of teachers employed, the amount of consolidation and centralization, the condition of the roads and general topography. The territory in the different districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable and the number of teachers employed in any one supervision district shall not be less than thirty. The county board of education shall, upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural districts boards of the county, redistrict the county into supervision districts. The county board of education may at their discretion require the county superintendent to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers of the village or rural schools of the county. This shall supersede the necessity of the district supervision of these schools."

The material change by said amendment is that the county board of education is given authority to divide the county school district into supervision districts "any year," the same to take effect the first day of the following September. The provision with reference to the application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards remains the same as in the original enactment. A question is raised as to the difference in the language used between a division by the county board and a re-districting upon application of the presidents of the village and rural boards. That is to say, the section provides that the county board may, in any year, "divide" the county school district into supervision districts and also provides that upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the rural and village boards, the county board shall "redistrict" and it is suggested that this means that after the county board of education has once divided the county school district in any year into supervision districts that then the right of three-fourths of the presidents of the rural and district boards attaches and that they may then file their application to have the county school district redistricted. In other words, the county board must either act and divide the county school district into supervision districts, not only in any year, but in every year, or accept the old division as a new division, if no new division is made before three-fourths of the presidents of the rural and village boards are permitted to make said application to so redistrict. I do not think that construction is the proper one. Under the original section, as found in 104 O. L. 140, the county board after it had once acted, could not act again until such application was filed. That is to say, the filing of the application was made a jurisdictional fact which must exist before the county board could act, but since the amendment in 106 O. L., such act on the part of three-fourths of the presidents of the rural and district boards is not necessary in order to permit the county board to act. The county board may, on its own initiative, divide in any year, whenever it determines that a necessity for such division exists.

This department held in Opinion No. 94, rendered March 7, 1917, that the redistricting may be performed by the county board of education any year and upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural boards of the county, the county board of education must re-district the county into supervision districts.

I believe the construction given to said section in the above mentioned opinion is the proper construction and that it is not necessary for the county board to act in order that the presidents of the rural and village boards may have a right to act, and on the other hand, that the county board may act without any action whatever on the part of the rural and village board presidents, and that the village and rural board presidents may petition if the county board has acted or not.

This department held in Opinion No. 495 that:

> "There is some question as to whether or not the board has a right to act again upon this matter after it has once acted (in any year) and especially after certain other statutory acts intervene. Some of such other statutory acts are the meeting of the presidents of the boards of education within such supervision districts which contain three or less village or rural districts, the boards of education of such districts to elect a district superintendent, or, the certificate of the county board of education to the county auditor of the salary of the district superintendents employed, or, the apportionment of the school fund by the county auditor."

> Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that the county board of education has authority, upon its own initiative, to re-district the county into supervision districts in any year and that the same shall take effect the first of the following September and that it is not necessary for such county board of education to wait until application is made by three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of education and act only upon such application.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—NOT AUTHORIZED TO TRANSFER CEMETERY —OR MONEY FROM LOT OWNERS TO INCORPORATED CEMETERY ASSOCIATION.

1. Township trustees are not authorized by section 4199 G. C. to transfer a cemetery under their control to an incorporated cemetery association. This section only applies to union cemeteries.

2. Township trustees are not authorized to turn over to an incorporated cemetery association moneys collected from lot owners, even if such trustees retained ownership and control of the cemetery and such incorporated cemetery was to keep the lots and graves clean.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 9, 1917.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication wherein you ask for an opinion upon the following:

> "The township trustees in a certain township of this county desire to transfer, to an incorporated cemetery association, a township cemetery. Can such transfer be made by authority of section 4199 of the General Code, or must it be a union cemetery before a transfer can be made under said section?

"This particular cemetery with other township cemeteries, have been in the control of the township trustees for many years, and this is the only cemetery from which any money has been derived from the sale of lots and other sources, which money has been placed in the township cemetery fund, and all the cemeteries kept up out of this fund. There is now in the township cemetery fund about $700.00 all of which has been obtained from this particular cemetery, and at least $1800.00 during the last thirty years has been expended for the keeping up of different township cemeteries in the township, all of which money has been obtained from this cemetery proposed to be transferred.

"In making a transfer of this cemetery to the cemetery association, have the trustees a right to turn over to the cemetery association this $700.00 in the cemetery fund, and can the trustees make a levy equal to the amount that has been obtained from this cemetery and used on other cemeteries, and at the time of such transfer of the cemetery turn over to the cemetery association the funds obtained from such levy?

"Again, if the trustees do not make a transfer of the cemetery to the cemetery association, could the trustees retain the ownership and control of the cemetry, collect from the lot owners money as an endowment of lots and turn over to the cemetery association this money obtained as an endowment and allow this cemetery association to keep the lots and grave clean?"

1. You inquire whether township trustees, having the control and management of a township cemetery, are authorized to transfer such cemetery to an incorporated cemetry association under section 4199 G. C.

Said section 4199 reads as follows:

"The council of a municipality, and the trustees of a township, may transfer to an incorporated cemetery association, the lands, lots and improvements of a cemetery, owned and controlled by the municipality or township for cemetery purposes. The cemetery association shall assume all legal debts on the cemeteries so transferred."

This section was 2545a R. S. and was enacted in April, 1904, as found in 97 O. L. 165, supplementing section 2545 R. S. Section 2545 R. S. is now section 4198 G. C. and is found in Ch. 9, Div. 4, Tit. XII, part I, under the heading "Cemeteries" and the subheading "Union Cemeteries.' The language of the section is:

"The council of a municipality, and the trustees of a township may transfer, etc."

As the subchapter on union cemeteries, in which the above is found, deals with the authority of the council and the trustees acting as a joint body, I am inclined to view that the sole authority granted by the legislature in section 4199 G. C. is to such joint body to make such transfer. This view is strengthened by the fact that in title XI, under the heading "Townships," division 3, chapter 6, the legislature treats of the subject of township cemeteries (Secs. 3441 et seq. G. C.). Nowhere in this chapter do we find any authority given the township trustees as given the joint board under section 4199 G. C.

Back in 1902 it was no doubt the desire to make a transfer of a township cemetery to a cemetery association, and the legislature, as evidenced in 95 O. L. 939, passed a statute which in terms authorized the transfer of any public burying ground located in any township in any county containing a city of the third grade of the first class and not under the control of any municipal corporation and the title of which is vested in the township trustees, to convey such cemetery to the trustees of any cemetery association organized under the laws of the state of Ohio. This section is now numbered 14686 G. C., and even if assumed to be constitutional, would only apply to Lucas county.

I think the principle is well settled that without legislative authority township trustees, being a board of limited authority and deriving all their power from legislative enactment, would have no right to make the transfer spoken of, unless the grant of power was expressly given them.

As above stated, section 4199 G. C. was section 2545a R. S., as passed, 97 O. L. 165. It was:

> "An act to supplement section 2545 of the Revised Statutes, relating to transfers of cemeteries.
> "Section 2545a. The city council of any city or village, and the trustees of any township, may transfer to any cemetery association incorporated under existing laws, the lands, lots, and improvements of such cemetery, now owned and controlled by said city, village or township, for cemetery purposes; said cemetery association shall assume all legal debts on said cemeteries so transferred."

The codifying commission saw fit to insert "a" in place of "such," as found in original enactment. The punctuation of this section, found between the words "village" and "and" and the use of the word "and" between the word "village" and the words "the trustees," in the first part of the section, coupled with the words found later in the section, "owned and controlled by said city, village or township,' render the section somewhat ambiguous, and under familiar rules of construction we can refer to the original act in seeking light as to what the legislative intent was in the passage of the supplemental section, as also any other history pertaining to the legislation in question.

Attention may be called to the fact that most of the sections now found in the subtitle "Union Cemeteries" will be found in the municipal code passed in 1869, 66 O. L. 149 et seq.

Section 4183 G. C. was section 377 of the municipal code of 1869, and the succeeding sections of the municipal code, like the succeeding sections of section 4183 G. C., pertain to union cemeteries.

Section 4198 G. C., formerly section 2545 R. S., was section 388 of the municipal code of 1869. This section provides that the council and the trustees may purchase of an incorporated cemetery association the lands, lots and improvements of such association.

Section 4197 G. C. provided what a municipality and a township may make use of in the establishment of a union cemetery.

Section 4199 G. C., as passed in 97 O. L. 165, was a supplemental section to present section 4198 G. C. and originally provided that the council of a municipality and the trustees of a township may transfer the lands, lots and improvements of such cemetery owned and controlled by the municipali y or township for cemetery purposes. "Such cemetery" refers to some kind of cemetery theretofore spoken of. An examination of the preceding sections evidences that a union cemetery was the only cemetery under consideration in such preceding sections. The necessary inference is that "such cemetery" refers to the particular kind of cemetery spoken of in the preceding section to which section 4199 was supplementary, or to that kind of cemetery that was contemplated in the immediately preceding sections to which reference must necessarily be had to determine what "such cemetery" really meant

In view of all the foregoing, it is my opinion that your township trustees are not authorized to make such transfer under section 4199 G. C., and since there is no statute that empowers them to make such transfer, they are without any authority to do so.

2. Since it is my view that a transfer of this cemetery to the cemetery association can not be made, there is no necessity of answering your further question as to the right of the trustees to turn over to the cemetery association the seven hundred dollars in the cemetery fund, or to make a levy equal to the amount heretofore obtained from this cemetery and used on other cemeteries, and turn the proceeds of this levy over to the cemetery association.

3. You further inquire, could the trustees retain the ownership and control of the cemetery, collect from the lot-owners money as an endowment of lots and turn over to the cemetery association this money obtained as an endowment and allow this cemetery association to keep the lots and graves clean?

Section 3441 G. C. and other sections found in chapter 6, above referred to, contain the legislative enactments regarding township cemeteries. Without setting out the sections in full, they give the authority to the trustees to acquire lands for cemetery purposes, to levy taxes for the purpose of obtaining the lands, and a further levy not to exceed two thousand dollars in any one year, for the needful care, supervision, repair and improvement of such cemeteries. They are authorized to sell lots and section 3449 G. C. provides:

> "Section 3449. The proceeds arising from the sale of such lots shall be used in improving and embellishing such grounds, and the trustees shall build and maintain proper and secure fences around all such cemeteries, to be paid for from the township funds."

Section 3457 G. C. authorizes them to receive by gift, devise, bequest or otherwise, any money, securities or other property in trust as a permanent fund to be held and invested by them and their successors in office, the income therefrom to be used and expended under their direction, in the care, improvement and beautifying of any burial lot designated and named by the person making such gift, devise or bequest, in any township cemetery over which such trustees have jurisdiction.

This seems to be the only provision for a special fund and it seems limited to the care of special burial lots. This fund must be properly invested and section 3459 G. C. compels the township treasurer to keep an accurate and separate account of such investments.

Under section 3464 G. C. the township trustees may appoint three directors to take charge of any cemetery in the township, the control of which is vested in such rustees. When so appointed, such directors shall be governed in the discharge of their duties by the laws so far as applicable relating to township trustees in the control of cemeteries in the township.

Sections 3465 and 3466 G. C. refer to abandoned burial grounds, and it is only when the burial ground has been abandoned and the bodies have been removed, that there is authority to the trustees to sell at public sale such cemetery property.

In the absence of any legislative authority, it seems to me that your trustees have no right to turn over the money collected from lot owners to this cemetery association. Their powers and duties are set forth in the statute. They have no authority beyond that found in the legislative enactment. While they may empower persons necessary to keep the lots and graves in proper shape, they would be acting entirely beyond their authority in turning over any fund to a private association, upon an agreement to look after the cemetery or upon any other agreement.

Trusting this answers your inquiry, I am,

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—UNDER WHAT CONDITIONS THEY MAY PAY MONEY TO HOSPITAL—INDIGENT DEFINED—AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE MEDICAL ATTENTION FOR WARDS AND THE INDIGENT SICK AND DISABLED OF THE COUNTY.

1. Under the provisions of section 2502 G. C. two conditions must obtain before the county commissioners can pay a hospital any sum of money, namely. (1) The hospital must have been organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes and (2) the hospital must receive, free of charge, the indigent poor of the county for needed medical and surgical treatment. If these two conditions obtain, the hospital may be located either within or without the county.

2. The county commissioners do not pay the money on condition that the hospital receives the indigent poor of the county for treatment, but because the hospital receives the indigent poor of the county for treatment.

3. The word "indigent" in said section is not limited to the wards of a county, but includes all those persons who are destitute of property or means sufficient to enable them to pay for medical and surgical treatment.

4. In so far as the wards of the county are concerned, the county commissioners have authority to enter into a contract with a hospital for the medical care and attention which said county wards may require, which would be payable out of the county poor fund.

5. Sections 3138-1 and 3138-2 G. C. provide a method by which the county commissioners may enter into an agreement with a corporation or association organized for charitable purpose, or if there is no such corporation, then with any corporation or association organized for maintaining a hospital, for the care of the indigent sick and disabled of the county, for which a special levy is provided.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1917.

HON. HARRY D. SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As heretofore acknowledged, I have your communication in which you ask my opinion as follows:

> "Mr. C. E Brotten, state examiner, has called to the attention of our board of county commissioners a matter concerning which we desire your opinion.
> "Section 2502 General Code provides in substance that in a county where there is no hospital supported by public funds the county commissioners may pay to 'a hospital organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes, in which the indigent poor of the county may receive free of charge needed medical and surgical treatment, a sum not exceeding twenty-five hundred dollars each year.' The amount so paid is to be paid from the county poor fund on the first day of January and July, 'and shall be for the maintenance and support of such indigent poor and the reimbursement of such hospital for treatment thereof.' Payment of 'public funds to a sectarian institution' is not authorized by this statute as specifically provided therein.
> "This statute was first enacted 95 Ohio Laws 644, and was section 922-4 of the Revised Statutes. When the statute was incorporated in the General Code, there was some change in phraseology, which extended the scope of the statute, but which does not affect the solution of the questions raised.
> "Subsequent to the incorporation of this statute in the General Code, and prior to the time of statutory changes making infirmary directors of county commissioners, our board of county commissioners as county commissioners and not as infirmary directors, began making semi-annual payments to the Miami hospital of Dayton, Ohio (Montgomery county adjoining our county of Greene), the payments being made at the times and not in excess of the amount as provided by the statute.

"There was not at that time, there is not now and never has been in Greene county, any hospital 'supported by public funds.'

"No stated sum or allowance was paid to the Miami Valley hospital. On the first of January and July each year representatives of the hospital met with the commissioners and gave the board of commissioners a detailed statement of the number of indigent patients (residents of Greene county) who had been cared for by the hospital during the preceding six months. Thereupon the commissioners allowed to the hospital a sum of money which was determined by allowing $5.00 for the use of the operating table for each operation, and $1.85 per day for each day each Greene county patient had been cared for in the hospital.

"This continued to be the practice in this county until two or three years ago, when by arrangement with one (and later a second) private hospital in Xenia, the indigent poor of Greene county have been receiving operations, treatments and care in these private hospitals.

"These local hospitals are the private property of local physicians, and it can not be contended that either of them was 'organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes,' although both of these hospitals have undoubtedly done a considerable amount of charity work for which they have received no compensation whatever.

"The local hospitals receive from the county semi-annually, on the allowance of the commissioners, sums of money at the times and all within the limits of the statute, in practically the same manner as allowances were formerly made to the Miami Valley hospital at Dayton. However, there is this difference in determining the amount of the allowance. The Xenia hospitals receive an allowance at the rate of $1.50 per day for each patient, instead of the $1.85 allowed the Dayton hospital, which I am informed by the commissioners accounts for the change from support of the Dayton hospital to patronage of the local Xenia hospitals

"The commissioners have always allowed these sums, as a board of county commissioners and not as infirmary directors. The benefits of treatment in the hospitals have not been limited to the inmates of the county infirmary or to those who were county or township charges, but have been extended in all cases where the patients were in such financial circumstances as to prohibit necessary hospital or surgical care, except for this assistance from the county.

The questions presented are:

"1st. What constitutes 'a hospital organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes?' One from which no owner or stockholder derives any profit, and the income of which is entirely devoted to the payment of the expenses of operation?

"2nd. If there is no such hospital in Greene county, what is to prevent the county commissioners from making such payments to some 'purely charitable' hospital outside of Greene county?

"3rd. Who are the 'indigent poor of the county?' Only the inmates of the county infirmary, and other township and county charges, or does it not include all persons whose financial circumstances are such that they can not obtain necessary medical or surgical treatment?

"4th. Should not the allowance if made at all, be made by the commissioners as commissioners, and not as infirmary directors?

"5th. In so much as the Xenia hospitals are the property of local physicians, and if the payments made to them in the past are not within the provisions of section 2502, can such payments be made under section 2546 of the General Code, provided bids are taken, contracts made, quarterly reports made by the physicians, and if one of the physicians is given all the white patients of the county needing hospital care, and the other is given the colored patients?

"Would hospital care be medical relief under section 2546, and might one physician contract to give such medical relief to persons living outside of his respective township?"

The answers to your questions depend mainly upon the construction to be placed upon section 2502 G. C., but I believe it will assist us, in placing a proper construction upon this statute, to consider the act as it was originally passed. Said act was passed in 1902 and is found in 95 O. L. 644. It is entitled:

"An act to provide for the relief of benevolent and charitable hospitals in the state of Ohio."

The act as originally passed reads as follows:

"That in any county in the state of Ohio, except in counties containing hospitals supported by public funds in which is operated, by any corporation or association of persons, a hospital organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes, in which all the indigent poor of the county requiring the same shall receive medical and surgical treatment free of charge, the county commissioners of such counties may in their discretion pay to such hospital association out of the county poor fund a sum not to exceed twenty-five hundred ($2,500) dollars per year, payable on the first day of January and July, in equal payments, for the maintenance and support of such indigent poor so requiring such treatment, and the reimbursement of such organization so operating such hospital. Provided that nothing in this act shall be held to authorize the payment of public funds to any sectarian institution."

This act became section 922-4 of the Revised Statutes and afterwards became section 2502 of the General Code. Section 2502 G. C. reads as follows:

"Except in counties containing hospitals supported by public funds, the commissioners of any county, in their discretion, may pay to a hospital organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes, in which the indigent poor of the county may receive free of charge needed medical and surgical treatment, a sum not to exceed twenty five hundred dollars each year. Such amount shall be paid from the county poor fund in equal payments on the first day of January and July, and shall be for the maintenance and support of such indigent poor and the reimbursement of such hospital for treatment thereof. Nothing herein shall authorize the payment of public funds to a sectarian institution."

Let us first analyze the provisions of section 2502 G. C., with a view of ascertaining the conditions under which county commissioners may pay money to a hospital, and, secondly why they pay money to such a hospital. In the first place, if a county contains a hospital or hospitals supported by public funds, the commissioners can in no case pay money to other hospitals. If a county contains no hospital or hospitals supported by public funds, two conditions must obtain before the county commissioners can pay money to a hospital:

1. The hospital must be incorporated or organized for purely charitable purposes.
2. The indigent poor of the county must be entitled to receive needed medical and surgical treatment therein, free of charge.

If these two conditions obtain, then the county commissioners may pay to such hospital, not to exceed twenty-five hundred dollars each year for the following purposes:

1. For the maintenance and support of such indigent poor.
2. For the reimbursement of such hospital for treatment thereof.

It will help us to understand the true construction to be placed upon this statute if we remember that there is no provision in the same suggesting that there may be contractual arrangements had between the county commissioners and the hospital. There is nothing whatever suggested in reference to a contractual relation existing between the county commissioners and the hospital. The county commissioners do not pay the hospital a certain amount each year, on condition that the hospital receives for treatment the needy poor of the county; but the county commissioners pay the hospital a certain amount each year because the hospital receives the indigent poor of the county free of charge for needed medical and surgical treatment.

Whatever the county commissioners do is purely discretionary on their part. The hospital may receive aid from the county and it may not receive aid. It may receive aid this year and not receive it next year. What the county commissioners pay to the hospital is with a view of helping and relieving the hospital in its charitable work, and not primarily with the object of paying the hospital for rendering services free of charge to the indigent poor of the county. This is plainly evidenced in the title of the act, which is, as suggested above, "to provide for the relief of benevolent and charitable hospitals."

If a hospital is organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes, and if it receives the indigent poor of the county for needed medical and surgical treatment free of charge, then the county commissioners may in their discretion pay the hospital some amount each year, but not exceeding twenty-five hundred dollars. But what they do pay is in the nature of an aid or relief to a worthy cause, and not in the nature of an obligation which they owe as a matter of right. It is a case in which the county manifests its good will in a substantial way, and not one in which it is meeting an obligation for support rendered the indigent poor of the county. This is fairly evident from the fact that the county commissioners are not authorized to pay a hospital any sum of money unless it be organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes.

So let us note again the logical order of the provisions of this statute:

1. A hospital must be organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes.
2. It must render, free of charge, needed medical and surgical treatment to the indigent poor of the county.

Then, these two precedent and necessary conditions obtaining, the county commissioners may, if they think best, allow said hospital a sum each year, said sum, however, not exceeding twenty-five hundred dollars per year.

If the above construction placed upon the said statute is correct, your county commissioners have no authority, under the provisions of section 2502 G. C., to pay any hospital any sum of money whatever, unless (1) the hospital is organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes and (2) unless it is open to the indigent poor of the county, where they may receive, free of charge, needed medical and surgical treatment.

If these two precedent conditions obtain, then your county commissioners may in their discretion pay to said hospital a certain sum each year, not exceeding twenty-five hundred dollars.

It is to be noted that under the law as it was originally passed, the hospital must have been located in the county before the county commissioners could pay it any amount. But under the law as it now is, I am of the opinion that your county commissioners could pay a sum each year to a hospital located outside the county, provided the two above conditions obtain in reference to the hospital.

I will now take up your questions in their order:

1. You have possibly answered your first question about as well as it can be answered. "Organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes" implies that the organizers had in mind the public at large and not themselves. They are desirous of enriching the public, and not themselves being enriched at the expense of the public. They are in the business not for the profits they make but for the good they may do their fellow men. In other words, they organized not for profit and conduct the hospitals not for profit.

2. As said above, your county commissioners may make payments to some "purely charitable" hospital outside of Greene county, provided said hospital is giving the indigent poor of the county of Greene needed medical and surgical treatment free of charge.

3. As to the scope and meaning of the word "indigent:" There seems to be nothing in the statute which would limit the scope of this word to the poor who are wards of the county. In fact the terms of the statute seem to indicate the opposite.

Webster says indigent persons are those—"destitute of property or means of comfortable subsistence; needy; poor."

It is to such persons that the word refers, in my opinion, and not merely to those who are inmates of the county infirmary or children's home, or who are county or township charges.

4. The board of infirmary directors is abolished. The duties which were formerly performed by the infirmfiry directors are now performed by the county commissioners. The allowance provided for in said section would be made, if at all, by the county commissioners in their capacity as county commissioners.

5. You ask whether your county commissioners would be authorized to pay the Xenia hospitals, which are maintained by local physicians, under and by virtue of the provisions of section 2546 G. C. If you mean to inquire whether the provisions of section 2546 G. C. could be taken in connection with the provisions of section 2502 G. C., and thus enable your county commissioners to pay the physicians who are conducting the Xenia hospitals, in the manner provided for in section 2502 G. C., it is my opinion that this can not be done. There could be no objection to any one of the physicians conducting the hospitals in Xenia submitting bids to the county commissioners to give relief to the poor and entering into a contract with the county commissioners for this purpose.

Section 2544 G. C. provides:

> "In any county having an infirmary, when the trustees of a township, after making the inquiry provided by law, are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall forthwith transmit a statement of the facts to the superintendent of the infirmary, and if it appears that such person is legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown, and that the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he should become a county charge, they shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution, or otherwise * * *."

That is to say, if after the trustees of a township are notified that there lives a person in such township who is destitute of means or needs public relief, the trustees, or one of them, shall forthwith make an investigation and ascertain certain facts, among which is the settlement of such person, and if the trustees are then of the opinion that such person is entitiled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall transmit a statement of the facts in relation thereto to the superintendent of the infirmary, and if the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that such person should become a county charge, he shall be received either in the county infirmary or provided for otherwise. If such person is entitled to hospital care and the same cannot be furnished at the infirmary, I am of the opinion that under the above provisions such care and attention may be had outside of the infirmary, that is, in a hospital located other than at the infirmary. I am of the opinion also that the board of county commissioners have a right to enter into a contract with the owner or keeper of a hospital that if any such persons so accepted by them shall be received during the year into such hospital, the costs and expenses thereof shall be at particular rates, that is, a certain amount for the operating table, and a certain amount per day while such indigent persons are in such hospital, but under the above sections the costs and expenses thereof must be paid from the poor funds of the county.

I might call your attention to the provisions of sections 3138-1 and 3138-2 G. C. The act containing these sections is found in 101 O. L. 166, and is styled:

> "An act to authorize the board of commissioners of any county to render assistance to a corporation or association maintaining a hospital for charitable purposes."

Section 3138-1 G. C. reads as follows:

> "That the board of county commissioners of any county may enter into an agreement with a corporation or association, organized for charitable purposes, or if there is no such corporation or association, then with any corporation or association organized for the purpose of maintaining and operating a hospital in any county where a hospital has been established, or may hereafter be established, for the care of the indigent sick and disabled, excepting persons afflicted with pulmonary tuberculosis, upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between said commissioners, and such corporation or association, and said commissioners shall provide for the payment of the amount agreed upon, either in one payment, or installments, or so much from year to year as the parties stipulate."

It will be noted that under the provisions of this section the county commissioners may enter into an agreement with a corporation or association organized for charitable purposes. In this respect the provisions of this section differ from those of section 2502 G. C. Further, the provisions of this section are broad enough to authorize the county commissioners to enter into an agreement with any corporation or association organized for the purpose of maintaining and operating a hospital, provided there is no corporation or association within the county organized for charitable purposes. It is possible that your county commissioners can avail themselves of the provisions of this section, but I desire to call your attention to the fact that the section reads:

> "any corporation or association organized for the purpose of maintaining and operating a hospital."

This might be, and possibly would be, so construed as to prevent the county commissioners from entering into a contract with a mere individual maintaining and operating a hospital. It seems as if the provisions of section 3138-1 G. C. contemplate a corporation or association organized for such purpose.

In passing I desire to call attention to an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, and found in Vol. I of the Opinions of the Attorney General for 1916, p. 237, under date of February 9, 1916. In discussing the provisions of section 2502 G. C., Mr. Turner argued that the county commissioners might contract with a hospital under said provisions. With this language and line of argument I do not concur, for the reason that there are no provisions in said section warranting such a conclusion.

I might also call attention to section 8 of Article VI of the constitution of Ohio. There might be some question raised as to whether section 2502 G. C. is constitutional, in view of section 8 of Article VI of the Ohio constitution, but in reference to this matter you do not inquire and I am not passing upon it.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—WHEN PORTION OF TOWNSHIP OF HIS RESIDENCE IS ANNEXED TO CITY THAT HAS ABOLISHED OFFICE OF JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—HAS NO AUTHORITY TO CONTINUE TO ACT AS JUSTICE—MAY HOLD HIS OFFICE BY MOVING INTO PORTION OF TOWNSHIP NOT ANNEXED.

1. Where a justice of the peace resides in a portion of a township adjoining a township whose township lines are coterminous with the city, and such portion of the township is annexed to said city and township, and by statute the office of justice of the peace has been abolished in said city, provision being made for a municipal court by an act of legislature, such justice of the peace residing in the portion of a township so annexed can not serve out his term and is without authority of law to continue as justice of the peace in the city.

2. If said justice of the peace, now living in the portion of an adjoining township to a city and township wherein the office of justice of the peace has been abolished by statute, desires to retain his commission and serve out his term, it will be necessary for him, within a reasonable time, to move into a portion of his township which is not contained in the territory annexed to said city and township.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1917.

HON. JARED P. HUXLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

Attention Mr. H. H. Hull, Asst. Prosecuting Attorney.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 25, 1917, in which you ask for an opinion upon the following state of facts:

> "There is a situation growing out of the annexation of a portion of a township adjoining Youngstown township which I would like to submit to you for your opinion.
> "The question I desire to present is:
> " 'What effect will such an annexation have upon the commission of an acting Justice of the Peace who now lives, and who will be living, in that part of the adjoining township which will be annexed to the city of Youngstown?'
> "As you know, the act of legislature abolished justice courts in the city of Youngstown and provided us instead with a municipal court. I might add that the justice who is now living in said portion of said adjoining township desires to retain his commission and if necessary he can move into a portion of the township which is not annexed, but this will entail great inconvenience for him."

As you state, section 56 of the act providing for a municipal court in Youngstown, section 1579-182 G. C., abolished the office of justice and justices of the peace in and for Youngstown township, Mahoning county, Ohio, and no provision was made, as in similar acts, creating municipal courts, for the justice continuing until the end of his term of office.

Section 1713 G. C. provides among other things:

" * * * No justice may be deprived of his commission until the expiration of the term for which he was elected."

So the justice who is now living in the township adjoining Youngstown township a portion of which is to be annexed to the city of Youngstown, still holds his commission and has jurisdiction in said township. However, when the annexation of that portion of the township in which the justice of the peace now resides is completed, he will then be in the territory in which the statute has abolished the office of justice of the peace.

If there were such office as a justice of the peace in Youngstown, then under the decision of our supreme court, in State ex rel. v. Morse, 94 O. S. 435, the justice would be authorized to act as justice in said city.

Section 1716 G. C. provides:

"If a part of a township is attached to another township, justices of the peace residing within the limits of that part so attached shall execute the duties of their office in the township to which such part is attached in the same manner as if elected for such township, and may hold court therein."

If the office of justice of the peace had not been abolished in Youngstown township, even if by special act the number of justices were limited, still it is decided in Pfeiffer v. Green, 3 O N. P. 156, that a justice brought into the limits of a city would be permitted to complete his unexpired term. But it is my opinion that the provision of the municipal court act abolishing the office of justice of the peace is effectual in preventing any justice from exercising his jurisdiction in that territory.

As stated before, the justice still has a commission in the township, adjoining Youngstown township, in which he resides, prior to the proposed annexation, and it is my view that while he is not bound to move either in or out of the territory that has been attached, if he sees fit to remain in that part of the township which is annexed, he will in effect surrender his office and resign his commission; or, by moving out of that portion of the territory which is annexed, into the portion of his old township which is not affected by the annexation, he can still continue out his term.

The Constitution of 1802 provided that certain judges should be residents of their respective districts. In State ex rel. v. Choate, 11 Ohio Rep. 511, the court held that where the lines of the district had been changed so that a judge living in one district was by the change of the territorial lines thrown over into another district, his failure to change his residence into some portion of his own district forfeited his office.

So it is my opinion that if the justice of the peace, of whom you speak, desires to retain his commission and serve out his term, it will be necessary for him to move into a portion of his township which is not annexed to the city of Youngstown.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY RECORDER—RETAINS OFFICE UNTIL SUCCESSOR IS ELECTED AND QUALIFIES—WHEN RECORDER ELECT DIES BEFORE QUALIFYING.

1. When a county recorder elect dies before qualifying, the encumbent of the office under section 8 G. C. continues in said office until a successor is elected and qualifies.

2. Where F. B. D. was elected county recorder in November, 1916, to succeed C. M., whose regular term expires the first Monday of September, 1917, but dies without qualifying, C. M. continues in his office until a successor, elected at the election in November, 1918, qualifies and enters upon his term of office on the first Monday of September, 1919.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1917.

HON. CHARLES L. FLORY, Prosecuting Attorney, Newark, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your inquiry regarding a question relative to your county recorder and enclosing your opinion upon same. I desire to thank you for the assistance rendered me by the able opinion and brief submitted by you. The request for opinion as stated by you was upon the following state of facts:

> "Frank B. Dudgeon was elected November 7, 1916, to succeed the present county recorder, Carl Martin, whose term would ordinarily expire on the first Monday in September, 1917. On April 23, 1917, and before he had taken any step whatever towards qualifying as recorder, Frank B. Dudgeon died.
> "You inquire:
> "1st. Will there be a vacancy in the office of recorder on the first Monday in September, 1917, to be filled by the county commissioners, or will the present recorder hold over until his successor is elected and qualified?
> "2nd. Whether a vacancy will exist to be filled by appointment by the commissioners, or whether the present recorder will hold over, when will be held the first election to which a recorder will be elected? And when will such person so elected qualify and take office as recorder?"

As you have covered the question as well as it could be covered, I am adopting the following portion of the opinion you have submitted for my consideration:

> 'There are certain provisions of the constitution and General Code pertinent to your question as to whether there will be a vacancy in the office of recorder on the first Monday of September, 1917, or whether the present recorder will hold over.
> "Article 10, section 2 of the constitution of Ohio provides:
> " 'County officers shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, by the electors of each county in such manner, and for such term, not exceeding three years, as may be provided by law.'
> "Section 2750 G. C. provides:
> " 'There shall be elected biennially, in each county, a county recorder, who shall hold his office for two years, beginning on the first Monday in September next after his election.'
> 'Section 2755 G. C. provides:
> " 'If a vacancy occurs in the office of recorder, the commissioners shall appoint a suitable person to fill it, who shall give bond, take the oath of office, as provided by law for county recorders, and shall hold his office until his successor is elected and qualified.'

"Section 8 G. C. provides:

" 'A person holding an office of trust shall continue therein until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified, unless otherwise provided in the constitution or laws.'

"As to a county recorder, it is not 'otherwise provided in the constitution or laws,' so that a county recorder holds his office until his successor is elected or appointed and also qualified.

"There are several supreme court decisions touching, more or less directly, upon the question as to whether the death of Mr. Dudgeon, prior to taking any steps to qualify, will result in a vacancy on the first Monday in September, 1917, to be filled by the commissioners.

"In State ex rel. v. Metcalfe, 80 O. S. 244, the second paragraph of the syllabus reads:

" 'The death of a person elected to an office, before he qualifies, does not create a vacancy where the constitution provides that an incumbent in an office shall hold for his term and until the election and qualification of a successor.'

"While the constitution of Ohio does not specifically provide that a recorder shall hold his office until his successor is elected and qualified, section 8 G. C. does so provide * * *.

"In State ex rel. v. Metcalfe, supra, Elias E.Roberts was elected at the November election, 1908, to the office of circuit judge; his term of office to commence February 9, 1909. But, without having qualified, Judge Roberts died on November 22, 1908. On p. 265 the court says:

" 'We should not allow ourselves to become confused by the use of forms of expression. It seems to be assumed that a vacancy must necessarily have been created by the decease of Judge Roberts, taking effect February 9, 1909, because the successor to be elected will be chosen for an unexpired term and there cannot be an unexpired term without a vacancy in the term of which it is a part; hence there was a vacancy in Judge Robert's term. With due respect we wish to urge that Judge Roberts had no term. His untimely death prevented such result. On the other hand his decease, as hereinbefore indicated, was the incident on which the constitution, supplemented by the appointment of the respondent, acted in a way to prevent a vacancy. An unexpired term is not synonymous with a vacancy. The former is the remainder of a period prescribed by law after a portion of such time has passed; a vacancy exists where there is no person lawfully authorized to assume and exercise at present the duties of the office. And if provision, either by constitution or statute, has been made for preventing a vacancy, it is a misuse of terms to assume that a vacancy has occurred. If, therefore, at the expiration of the six years for which Judge Burrows was elected, a person qualified to hold it was in possession of the office, no vacancy existed. It is held distinctly in Kimberlain v. The State, supra, that: "The death of a person elected to an office before he qualifies does not create a vacancy where the constitution provides that the incumbent shall hold office for his term and until the election and qualification of his successor." '

"On page 266 the court proceeds:

" 'It is held in Commonwealth ex rel. v. Hanley, 9 Pa. St. 513, that:

" 'The death of the person elected to fill the office of clerk of the orphan's court, before he has qualified himself according to law, does not create a vacancy, but the incumbent who is authorized to hold the office until his successor shall be qualified, holds over.' And Rogers, J., in the opinion observes: 'It will be observed that the terms on which alone the governor can appoint are a vacancy in the office, and that there can be a vacancy in an office when there is a person in possession whom all acknowledge to be rightfully in possession, having a perfect right to exercise all the powers and duties of the office, and to receive and enjoy all its emoluments, is a difficult position to comprehend. It is an abuse of terms to say that at the time the governor issued his commission to the relator the office was vacant, for no person can plausibly deny that the respondent was the rightful possessor of the office at the time.' So here, it is conceded that the defendant was rightfully in the office at the time of the appointment of the relator unless his powers ceased with the expiration of the six year portion of the term of Judge Burrows. To sustain the claim that they did so cease would, we think, be to fly in the face of the weight of authority; and the manifest purpose of our constitution and statutes, which purpose, as heretofore pointed out, is to secure continuity and steadiness of service and to discourage the creation of vacancies.'

"In State ex rel. McCracken, 51 O. S. 129, the court says:

" 'The recognized policy of the state is to avoid, if practicable, the creation of a vacancy in an elective office, and where the right to hold over is given in language that is not limited, and the same is not otherwise qualified, a court would hardly be justified in seeking for an unnatural construction by which a limit would be placed upon the right. Here the words are: "And until his successor is elected and qualified," and nothing is found in the context to restrict the natural import of the text as given in the section quoted.

"In contemplation of law there can be no vacancy in an office so long as there is a person in possession of the office legally qualified to perform the duties. This conclusion is distinctly supported by the holding in the State ex rel. v. Howe, 25 O. S. 588: 'That the framers of the constitution, in providing for filling vacancies in office, did not regard an office as vacant, when an incumbent might lawfully hold over his definite term until a successor was elected or appointed and qualified, is manifest from other provisions in the instrument. By section 4 of article 10, the duration of the term of township officers is fixed at one year from the Monday next succeeding their election, and until their successors are qualified. It would hardly be contended that, under this provision, a township office becomes vacant at the end of the year, from the mere fact that no successor to the incumbent has qualified.'

" 'We think there is no vacancy in the office of clerk of the court of common pleas, but that the persons duly elected, and holding on February 8, 1894, are entitled to perform the duties until their successors, respectively, elected at the November election, 1893, are qualified.'

"In State ex rel. v. Wright, 56 O. S. 553, the court says:

" 'His right to serve after the expiration of the designated period, until the qualification of his successor, being conferred by statute at the time of his election, is no less a part of his statutory term of office, than is the fixed period itself; and while he is so serving, there can be no vacancy in the office, in any proper sense of the term, for there is an actual incumbent of the office legally entitled to hold the same. As was said by McIlvain, J., in State v. Howe, 25 Ohio St. 588, 596, "the incumbent continues in office, not as a mere de facto officer or locum tenens, but as its rightful possessor until such successor" is duly chosen and qualified. And by a successor, is not meant a mere temporary appointee, but one regularly chosen in succession to the office, to take the place of the predecessor on account of the cessation of his right of occupancy.'

"From the foregoing authorities, I conclude that the death of Frank B. Dudgeon, after his election, but before his qualification, will not create a vacancy in the office of recorder on the first Monday in September, 1917. And since the commissioners are authorized by section 2755 G. C. to appoint a recorder only when a vacancy occurs in that office, the county commissioners will have no authority to make such an appointment in the present instance.

"The cases above cited are also authority for holding that the present recorder, Carl Martin, holds over until his successor is elected and qualified; that the right of the present recorder to hold over is as much a part of his term as the definite two years for which he was elected. Speaking on this subject the court says, in State ex rel. v. Metcalfe on p. 264:

" 'We are of opinion that he resigned the entire authority which as a judge he possessed. That embraced as well the authority to hold over until a successor should be elected and qualified as the remaining portion of the six years, the extent of his term as originally conferred. Using the language of Williams, J., in The State ex rel. v. Wright, 56 Ohio St. 540, speaking of the office of mayor: "His right to serve after the expiration of the designated period, until the qualification of his successor, being conferred by statute at the time of his election, is no less a part of his statutory term of office than is the fixed period itself; and while he is so serving there can be no vacancy in the office in any proper sense of the term, for there is an actual incumbent of the office legally entitled to hold the same," citing The State v. Howe, supra. In Kimberlain v. The State, 14 L. R. A. (Ind.) 858, it is held that: "The period between the expiration of his term and the qualification of his successor is as much a part of the incumbent's term of office as the fixed statutory period, where the law provides that he shall hold over until his successor qualifies." See also Mechem on pubic offices, here and there.'

"Since the present recorder has the right of holding over, the question arises, for what length of time does he hold?"

As hereinbefore stated, Art. X, section 2 of the constitution provides:

"County officers shall be elected * * * in such manner, and for such term, not exceeding three years, as may be provided by law."

Art. XVII, section 2 of the constitution, as adopted November 7, 1905, reads:

"* * * and the term of office of all elective county, township, municipal and school officers shall be such even numbers of years not exceeding four (4) years as may be so prescribed. * * *."

It is my view that section 2 of article X of the constitution, in so far as there is any conflict, is impliedly repealed by the later provisions of section 2 of article XVII.

State ex rel. v. Creamer, 83 O. S. 412.
State ex rel. v. Cox, 90 O. S. 219-225.

The provision of section 2750 G. C. is that the term of the county recorder shall be for two years.

Under article XVII, section 2, the legislature could have made the term of county recorder four years, but four years would be the constitutional limitation, and the legislature could not provide for a term exceeding four years.

Bearing in mind these two provisions of the constitution, I conclude that Mr. Martin's present two-year term will expire on the first Monday in September, 1917, and since section 8 G. C. continues his term until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified, he would continue in office for not exceeding two additional years, unless otherwise provided.

Section 2750 G. C. provides that a county recorder shall be elected biennially, and since the regular time for the election of recorder will occur in November, 1918, it will be necessary to make provision for same. But the recorder elected at the election in November, 1918, will not take office until the first Monday in September, 1919, and as the provisions of section 10 G. C. for an election for the unexpired term only applies in cases of "vacancy," and since there has been no vacancy in the office of recorder, Mr. Martin merely holding over, consequently Mr. Martin will continue in the office of county recorder until his successor, elected at the November election, qualifies and enters upon his term on the first Monday of September, 1919.

I am not unmindful of the holding of our supreme court in State v. Brewster, 44 O. S. 589, wherein it was held that the limitation in article X, section 2 of the constitution, prohibited a county recorder from holding beyond three years. As hereinbefore stated, I am of the opinion that this provision has been impliedly repeal d by the enactment of that part of article XVII, section 2 of the constitution, which provides there can be a four-year term for a county officer.

It is my opinion, therefore, that under the state of facts presented, Carl Martin, will continue to serve as county recorder until his successor, elected at the regular November election in 1918, qualifies and takes his office the first Monday in September, 1919.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION—CONVICT LABOR—ERECTION OF BUILDINGS—WHEN PLANS, ETC., MUST BE PREPARED—NOT NECESSARY TO EMPLOY ARCHITECT—COMPETITIVE BIDDING—WHEN NECESSARY.

The amendments to the state building code, sections 2314 et seq. G. C., found in 107 O. L. 453, in connection with the statutes under which the Ohio board of administration is authorized to conduct industries at the various state institutions and to direct and employ the labor of convicts and inmates of such institutions, require that when a state building is to be erected under the supervision of the board of administration, at an aggregate cost in excess of $3,000.00, including the cost of such labor and materials as are to be furnished by the state, plans, specifications, estimates, etc., covering the entire improvement, shall be prepared; but the contract to be let by competitive bidding under the building code, if any, is to include only such portions of the work as are not done by the board of administration itself.

It is not necessary, under section 2314 G. C. as amended (107 O. L. 453) to employ an architect, if the "owner," as referred to in said section, can avail himself or itself of the services of a person competent to prepare the papers therein specified, without such independent employment.

Where all the labor and a part of the materials of a state improvement are to be furnished by the state, and the aggregate cost of the entire improvement exceeds $3,000.00, the balance must be let by competitive bidding, as provided in the "state building code," and such materials may not be furnished through the activities of a purchasing department conducted under the authority of the state department supervising the improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 28, 1917, in which, speaking for yourself and the board of administration, you request my opinion upon the following question:

> "On page 218 of the indexed appropriations of the last general assembly, H. B. No. 584, under the caption of 'Ohio Board of Administration,' appropriations are made for the erection of cottages for numerous institutions under this board.
> "The former appropriation bill that expired June 30, 1917, carried a clause exempting the board of administration from the provisions of section 2314 of the General Code of Ohio. This provision has appeared in the last two or three appropriation bills. The last general assembly failed to include this provision in the appropriation bill and a new building code was enacted which provides that all structures, improvements, equipment, etc., in excess of $3,000.00, shall be advertised as the law provides.
> "The board of administration is willing to comply with the building code of Ohio in part, but they believe that there are certain structures, for which appropriations have been made to them, that should be constructed in conformity with the building code, while on the other hand they feel that numerous cottages can be constructed by the use of their own labor and materials so far as they may have the same, and any other materials necessary to complete these buildings they desire to purchase by competitive bids through their purchasing department. Their claim is that they can save the fees that would go to an architect and the percentage of profit that would go to a contractor, and can provide labor of inmates of their institutions, and in fact procure a much cheaper and more satisfactory structure. * * *

"* * * In fact, they are only asking to have waived the advertising for competitive bids as a whole on certain improvements.

"The board of administration claims that the fact that the appropriation bill this year did not carry the voiding of section 2314 was an oversight, and you can probably get further information by taking the matter up with the budget commissioner.

"This opinion is at the joint request of the board of administration and the auditor of state in order that thay may speedily determine the policy that must be construed. We desire you to render an opinion stating whether or not the board of administration can proceed along the lines above suggested."

I have omitted from your statement of facts certain procedure that the board of administration is willing to follow.

I find that my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, considered the very question which you have asked of me. You submitted it to him on June 22, 1915, under the apparent erroneous impression that the budget appropriation bill of 1915 omitted the exemption clause, which it had been customary theretofore to insert in appropriation bills. As a matter of fact, the exemption clause was in the 1915 bill, as you have probably since discovered, but it is found in a general section in 106 O. L. 827, instead of in connection with the specific appropriations, as had been the custom theretofore.

It is true, as you state, that the present appropriation bill does not contain the exemption clause. The question, however, is similar to that considered by Mr. Turner though neither he nor you at that time were aware that the question did not then exist.

The opinion which Mr. Turner prepared will be found in Vol. II of Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, p. 1142. The conclusions which he reached were arrived at under the general laws of the state and particularly sections 2228 to 2230, both inclusive, sections 1845 to 1848, both inclusive, and section 1858 of the General Code. Section 1869 G. C. was also referred to.

The general purport of these sections, a part of which relate to the employment of convicts in the penitentiary and Ohio state reformatory, and part to the development of industries at the benevolent institutions of the state, is expressly to authorize, and indeed to direct, the board of administration to find productive employment in state work for the wards of the state under its custody and control.

Both Mr. Turner and his immediate predecessor, Mr. Hogan, who passed upon the effect of the customary exemption clause, in an opinion addressed to the board of administration under date of July 21, 1914, Vol. I, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, p. 1031, agreed that the state building code, so called, and particularly section 2314 of the General Code, was in effect modified by the then subsequent enactment of these sections which could not be reconciled with it. So that without the exemption clause in the appropriation, section 2314 G. C. Did not necessarily apply, unmodified, the procedure of the Ohio board of administration in the construction of a structural improvement under the supervision of that board, when it was practicable to employ laborers under the control of the board as wards of the state or to use materials produced at the state institutions.

Mr. Turner's specific conclusions were as follows: (Vol. II, Opinions of Attorney-General for 1915, p. 1145).

"Any building material which may be produced at any state institution under the control and management of the Ohio board of administration may be excepted from the contract required to be entered into under section 2314 G. C., and furnished directly by one institution to the other.

"Any labor of convicts, or otherwise, which the state board of administration may lawfully employ upon construction work is likewise to be eliminated from the contract which is required to be entered into by section 2314 G. C.

"In case the labor to be so furnished by the board of administration embraces that on all branches of the work, then the only contract to be let should be for the materials, and not for the doing of the work, unless some of the materials are to be likewise purchased from another institution.

"In case the labor is to be furnished on certain branches of the work only, the general contract to be let should exclude these branches of the work, and the branches upon which the labor of inmates is to be employed should be provided for by separate contracts for the purchase of materials.

"In cases in which materials are to be furnished by one institution to another for construction work, the contract should be for the performance of the labor only, except to the extent, as already pointed out, to which the labor of inmates may be employed.

"No improvements at the penitentiary are to be governed at all by section 2314 G. C., such improvements being expressly excepted by that section itself from its remaining terms.

"The aggregate cost of an improvement within the meaning of section 2314 G. C., in the event of the use of materials or labor furnished by a state institution, is the estimated cost of the labor and materials not so furnished."

I may say that I entirely agree with Mr. Turner in his interpretation of the law as he then found it. It does not follow, however, that this is the law at the present time, for section 2314 G. C. has since been amended and now has whatever force must be accorded to a later enactment. The amendment is found in 107 O. L. 453. The act amends several sections of the so-called state building code, but it will be necessary to quote only sections 2314 and 2317 G. C. They provide as follows:

"Section 2314. Whenever any building or structure for the use of the state or any institution supported in whole or in part by the state or in or upon the public works of the state that are administered by the superintendent of public works, is to be erected or constructed, or whenever additions or alterations, structural or other improvements are to be made, or heating, cooling or ventilating plants or other equipment to be installed for the use of the state, or in or upon such public works or in or for an institution supported in whole or in part by the state, or for the supply of material therefor, the aggregate cost of which exceeds three thouands dollars, each officer, board or other authority, upon whom devolves the duty of constructing, erecting, altering, or installing the same, hereinafter called the owner, shall make or cause to be made, by an architect or engineer whose contract of employment shall be prepared and approved by the attorney-general and filed with the auditor of state, the following: full and accurate plans, suitable for the use of mechanics and other builders in such construction, improvement, addition, alteration, or installation; and details to scale and full sized, so drawn and represented as to be easily understood; accurate bills showing the exact quantity of different kinds of material necessary to the construction; definite and complete specifications of the work to be performed, together with such directions as will enable a competent mechanic or other builder to carry them out and afford bidders all needful information; a full and accurate estimate of each item of expense and of the aggregate cost thereof, and such further data as may be required by the governor, secretary of state and auditor of state acting as and being the state building commission. In the absence of the governor, the secretary to the governor, in the absence of the secretary of state, the assistant secretary of state, and in the absence of the auditor of state, the deputy auditor of state, shall act as members of such commission."

"Section 2317. After the proceedings required by sections 2314 and 2315 have been complied with, such owner shall give public notice of the time and place when and where proposals will be received for performing the labor and furnishing the materials of such construction, improvement, alteration, addition or installation, and a contract or contracts therefor awarded, except for materials manufactured by the state or labor supplied by the Ohio board of administration that may enter into the same. The form of proposal approved by the state building commission shall be used, and a proposal shall be invalid and not considered unless such form is used without change, alteration or addition. Bidders may be permitted to bid upon all the branches of work and materials to be furnished and supplied, or upon any thereof, or alternately upon all or any thereof."

The purport of these sections is plain. Under them what was left to implication in the state of the law as it was when Mr. Turner considered it, is covered by expression. Mr. Turner's first conclusion is of course exactly correct and section 2317 supra expressly provides therefor. So also with his second, third, fourth and fifth conclusions. His sixth conclusion is changed, as I shall hereinafter point out. His seventh conclusion is reversed by the amendment. No longer is the aggregate cost of an improvement within the meaning of section 2314 to be determined by the estimated cost of labor and materials not furnished by the state. But it is rather clear, from the consideration of sections 2314 and 2317 supra, together, that the estimated cost of the improvement is to be determined without regard to the fact that a part of the labor or materials, or both, is to be furnished by the state. So that if the board of administration contemplates the erection of a structural improvement and the furnishing of such proportion of the labor and materials thereon as will leave the remainder not so furnished of a less aggregate estimated cost than $3,000.00, that fact alone will not suffice to take the whole proceeding out of the operation of section 2314 and the related statutes. On the contrary, the total aggregate cost, including that of the labor and materials to be furnished by the state, must be considered in determining whether it will be necessary to comply with section 2314 G. C. But when it comes to the letting of the contract, then the labor and materials furnished by the state are to be excepted from the work to be so let.

In short, section 2317 G. C. embodies a recognition of the powers of the board of administration under the other sections referred to by my predecessors.

Section 2314 G. C. then must be complied with if the aggregate cost, including that of the labor and materials to be furnished by the state, exceeds $3,000.00. I point out, however, that section 2314 G. C. merely requires that plans, specifications, details, bills of material, etc., covering the entire work, be prepared and filed.

There is no absolute necessity under this section for the employment of an architect. If the "owner" has in his or its employ a person who is competent to prepare papers necessary to be prepared under section 2314 G. C., such papers may be prepared by such person. It is only when it is necessary to go outside the general service of the state and employ an independent architect or engineer, that contract of employment, to be prepared and approved by the attorney-general, must be entered into.

Therefore, the suggestion of the board of administration, that it is in a position to save architects' fees, can be acted upon and yet section 2314 G. C. may be com plied with. Also, the suggestion of the board of administration that it is willing to furnish the details, plans, specifications, etc., may be followed, with the remark, however, that the board is not only permitted but required to do this, under section 2314 G. C., if the total cost of an improvement, as hereinbefore interpreted, exceeds $3,000.00.

If, as you say, the only thing the board is asking to have "waived" is the advertising for competitive bids as a whole, you are advised that the statute itself does not require that competitive bids be invited on the whole of the work, but only on that part which remains after the labor and material to be furnished by the state is excluded from the whole.

If, however, the board of administration is desirous of waiving the entire requirement as to the inviting of competitive bids under the building code so called, and obtaining the additional materials through its purchasing department, you are advised that this can not be done. The only thing to be excepted from the contract is materials manufactured or labor supplied by the state. The fact that the board of administration has a purchasing department is of no legal significance in this connection.

In so far as compliance with sections 2314 et seq. G. C. is rendered difficult or burdensome on account of prevailing fluctuations in prices, or made seemingly wasteful because of the elements of expenditure involved in the architect's fee and the contractor's profit, it is of course obvious that these considerations are not admissible. If the board of administration were permitted to evade the law in so far as it applies to that board, on these grounds and on the plea that it is in a position, because of its administrative organization, to furnish adequate substitutes for the things contemplated by the statutes, similar arguments might be advanced by other state departments, as reasons why the law ought to be ignored as to them. But this point needs no discussion. Such considerations are for the legislature and not for the courts or for administrative officers. The law, except as modified as above stated, applies to the board of administration and to the extent that it so applies that board must follow it, even though all concerned might rest under the conviction that economies might be effected by ignoring it.

In this connection let me point out that section 2314, supra, no longer exempts improvements at the penitentiary from its provisions, and that the statutes in their present form do not authorize any different procedure in emergency cases from that required in other cases, except in the rejection of the lowest and best bid and in the making of changes in the plans and specifications which are governed by sections 2320 and 2321 G. C. respectively.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRACTORS—USE OF SAME UPON PUBLIC ROAD—FARMER TRAVELING FROM ONE FIELD TO ANOTHER.

The provisions of section 7246 and section 13421-12 General Code are broad enough to include within the same a farmer passing over the highways of the state from one part of his farm to another with tractors such as are therein set out.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 11, 1917.

HON. DAVID A. WEBSTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Bryan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 23, 1917, in which you ask me to place a construction upon our statutes in reference to certain matters mentioned in your communication. The communication reads as follows:

> "I have been asked by one of our progressive farmers, in this community, for a construction of the statute relating to improved highways, and the moving of tractors, over and along said roads, when going to and from their work.
> "This farmer's land is divided by an improved highway, and he is the owner of a large tractor equipped with lugs, and it is necessary for him to cross the improved road, but in doing so, he informs me, that he exercises every caution, possible, to not injure the road more than absolutely necessary. At times it is necessary for him to travel upon this public road a distance of twenty or thirty rods. * * *."

The sections of our statute upon which you ask me to place a construction are sections 7246 (107 O. L., 139), and 13421-12 General Code. Section 7246 G. C., reads as follows:

> "No traction engine, trailer, wagon, truck, steam roller, automobile truck or other power vehicle, whether propelled by muscular or motor power, weighing in excess of twelve tons, including weight of vehicle, object or contrivance and load, shall be operated over and upon the improved public streets, highways, bridges or culverts within the state, except as hereinafter provided. This provision shall not apply to vehicles run upon rails or tracks or to fire engines, fire trucks, or other vehicles or apparatus belonging to any municipal or volunteer fire department or used by such department in the discharge of its functions. No object shall be moved over or upon such streets, highways, bridges or culverts upon wheels, rollers or otherwise, except as hereinafter provided, in excess of a total weight of twelve tons including weight of vehicle, object or contrivance and load."

It will be noted that the terms of this section are very broad and comprehensive It is further to be noted that this section does not refer at all to the person using the thing forbidden, but the section refers to the thing itself. Further, this section sets out certain exceptions to which the provisions of the same shall not apply, but in these exceptions there is nothing which would seem to indicate that a farmer who uses a tractor for the purpose of conducting his farm work is to be exempted from the application of this section when it comes to his use of the public highway. The latter part of the said section reads:

> "No object shall be moved over or upon such streets, highways, bridges or culverts upon wheels, rollers or otherwise, except as hereinafter provided, in excess of a total weight of twelve tons including weight of vehicle, object or contrivance and load."

It will be noted that this section has to do with the weight of the tractor or whatever object it is that is being moved across or along the highway. In connection with this section I would like to call attention to the provisions of section 7251 General Code (107 O. L., 141), which provides in part as follows:

"Any person violating any of the provisions of section 7246 to 7249 inclusive of the General Code shall be liable for all damages resulting to any street, highway, bridge or culvert by reason of such violation. In the case of any injury to a state road such damages shall be collected by civil action brought in the name of the state on the relation of the state highway commissioner and it shall be the duty of the attorney-general or prosecuting attorney of any county to institute such action when so requested by the state highway commissioner and to prosecute the same to final judgment. In the case of an injury to an improved public road, bridge, or culvert of a county such damages shall be recovered by a civil action prosecuted by the county commissioners and in the case of an injury to an improved public street, highway, bridge or culvert of a municipal corporation it shall be the duty of the proper authorities of such municipal corporation to institute an action for the recovery of such damages. All damages collected under the provisions of this section shall be paid into the treasury of the state or proper political subdivisions thereof and credited to any fund for the repair of streets, roads or bridges."

This section throws some light upon the comprehensive scope of section 7246 General Code. The language is "any person." This term "any" is possibly as broad, comprehensive and all-inclusive as any word we have in the English language, and when it is made to apply to any class or group of subjects it is difficult in placing a construction upon the same to make any exception of anything that comes within the class or group. For the present let us turn to section 13421-12 General Code, which reads as follows:

"Whoever drives over the improved highways of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, a traction engine or tractor with tires or wheels equipped with ice picks, spuds, spikes, chains or other protections of any kind extending beyond the cleats shall be fined for each offense not less than ten dollars nor more than one hundred dollars. The terms 'traction' engine or 'tractor' as used in this act, shall apply to all self-propelling engines equipped with metal tired wheels operated or propelled by any form of engine, motor or mechanical power, used for agricultural purposes. No city, county, village or township shall adopt, enforce or maintain any ordinance, rule or regulation contrary to or inconsistent with the terms of this act; or require of any person any license tax upon or registration fee for any traction engine, tractor, or trailer, or any permit or license to operate. Operators of traction engines the drivers of any other vehicle unless some other safe and convenient way is provided, and no public road open to traffic shall be closed to traction engines or tractors."

Here we again find another term similar to the term "any" in so far as its application is concerned—the term "whoever" is as broad and comprehensive as any word can be, and in this section we find no exceptions noted. While section 7246 General Code has particular reference to the weight, section 13421-12 has particular reference to the destructive qualities of the engines used, and provides that "if the engine or tractor has wheels equipped with ice picks, spuds, spikes, chains or other projections,' then he shall be liable to punishment.

It will be noticed that the above section is a radical amendment by the last legislature and is found in 107 O. L., 652. I would like to call your attention especially to the part of the section which reads:

> "* * * The terms 'traction engine' or 'tractor' as used in this act, shall apply to all self-propelling engines equipped with metal-tired wheels operated or propelled by any form of engine, motor, or mechanical power, used for agricultural purposes."

Hence, so far as this section is concerned, it is quite evident that the legislature intended this provision to apply to tractors used in the manner suggested in your communication.

While I am aware that the farmers use these tractors in the legitimate running of their farms and are to be complimented upon their progressive spirit and tendencies, yet, on account of the nature of the terms used in these two sections, it is my opinion that no exception in law could be made which would exempt them from the provisions of the same.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that a farmer who would use a tractor weighing in excess of twelve tons when loaded, or would use a tractor, the rims of which are set with lugs or spikes, on improved highways of the state, would come within the provisions of section 7246 and section 13421-12, respectively, of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ELECTORS OF TOWNSHIP—MAY NOT VOTE IN CITY UNTIL TOWNSHIP ACTUALLY ANNEXED—ALTHOUGH PROCEEDING STARTED—MAY VOTE IN TOWNSHIP.

1. Where it is proposed by proper proceeding that part of a township shall be annexed to a city, but the proposed annexation can not take effect until after the date of the primary election, such electors are not qualified to vote in the city.

2. Such electors, being qualified voters of the township on the date of said primary election, would be entitled to vote at the township primary if such primary were held, the same as if no annexation proceedings were pending.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 11, 1917.

HON. JARED P. HUXLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of August 4, 1917, you ask for an official opinion upon the following:

> "Part of Boardman township has, by ordinance duly passed but not effective for thirty days, been annexed to the city of Youngstown. On account of the ordinance not taking effect for thirty days, this part of the township will not be a part of the city when the primary elections are held, but will be a part of the city on the date of the election.

"The question is: Are the people of this annexed district entitled to vote at the primary election?"

Section 4980 G. C. provides who may vote at primary elections and reads in part as follows:

"At such election only legally qualified electors or such as will be legally qualified electors at the next ensuing general election may vote and all such electors may vote only in the election precinct where they reside, * * *"

Section 4967 G. C. makes all statutory provisions relating to general elections applicable, as far as possible, to primary elections.

It is my opinion that section 4980 gives the right to a person who, on primary election day, is legally qualified to vote in the election precinct where he at that time resides. Under the general election statutes, 4863, 4864 and 4865, residents in the state, county, township and municipality, with an exception as to the head of a family, are duly provided for, and section 4866 lays down the rules that should govern judges of elections in determining the residence of a person offering to vote. Now since in your inquiry you advise me that the ordinance annexing the territory to the city of Youngstown will not take effect until thirty days, and also that the primary election will be held before the date of the going into effect of the said ordinance of said annexation, that part of the township which will subsequently be annexed to the city is now, and will be on primary election day, a part of the township and the mere fact that this annexed territory will be a part of the city on the day of the regular election makes no difference. These statutes prescribe the qualifications for electors at the regular election and if at that time the electors who are now residents of the township become qualified electors in a city, they, of course, will be entitled to vote at the November election.

This produces the anomolous situation of these electors voting at the primary for candidates for whom, if they are annexed to the city, they will not have a right to vote, and voting for candidates at a general election in whose nomination they did not take part, owing to their annexation. But this is nothing strange. Persons move from place to place and frequently might make their change of residence at such a time that while they might assist in nominating, they would be voting for candidates in whose nomination they had taken no part.

Since the annexation ordinance is suspended and will not become effective until after the primary, it is just the same as if it had not been passed at all. The situation of the annexed territory is nothing different from any other portion of the township.

If the township, either by reason of population or petition, as provided by section 4951, where the population is less than 2,000, will hold a primary on the regular primary election day, the qualified electors in that portion of the township which subsequently will be annexed to the city will vote at the township primary. See Bach v. Goff, 24 C. C. (n. s.) 561.

In answer to your specific question, then, my opinion is that the people of the annexed district referred to are not entitled to vote at the primary election for the city, but if a township primary is held then they would be entitled, if otherwise qualified, to vote at the township primary in the same manner as if no annexation proceedings were pending.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EMBALMING EXAMINERS—FEE MUST ACCOMPANY EACH APPLICATION FOR EXAMINATION—CANNOT DELEGATE AUTHORITY TO PASS UPON APPLICATION—SECRETARY-TREASURER MUST PAY PREMIUM ON HIS BOND—THREE YEARS PRACTICAL EXPERIENCE—HOW TIME COMPUTED.

The state board of embalming examiners has no authority to allow an appli ant who has failed at an examination to take a second or subsequent examination without paying a fee therefor. A fee of $10.00 must accompany each application for examination.

The state board of embalming examiners must pass upon all applications; it has no authority to delegate this duty to the secretary-treasurer.

The secretary-treasurer is required to pay the premium upon a surety bond, if such bond is offered by him.

The three years' practical experience required of a person who practiced embalming prior to January 1, 1913, can be computed from any such experience had by such person prior to the date of the filing of his application which must be filed prior to December 31, 1917.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 11, 1917.

HON. B. G. JONES, Secretary The State Board of Embalming Examiners, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You submit for my opinion the following:

> "As secretary of the Ohio state board of embalming examiners I have been instructed by the board to secure your opinion upon the following questions to wit:
> "1. Has this board the authority under the law or by rules adopted by them to allow an applicant who has failed at one examination the privilege of taking a second examination without the payment of an additional fee or the filing of a new application?
> "2. Will it be the duty of the board as a whole to pass upon all applications for registration, or will the filing of the same with the secretary-treasurer be sufficient, (assuming that the applicant fills them out according to law) to allow him (the secretary-treasurer) to issue a certificate of registration?
> "3. Who pays for the bond of the secretary-treasurer as required under section 1340 General Code?
> "4. As provided under section 1343 G. C. can the board construe the three years of practical experience prior to January 1, 1903, to be continuous experience to date or to the passage of the present law (March 21, 1917)? In other words, how much actual experience must the applicant have?"

Pertinent to your questions is General Code section 1342 which reads as follows:

> "Every person desiring to engage in the practice of embalming or the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation, in the state of Ohio, shall make a written application to the state board of embalming examiners for registration, giving such information as the said board may, by regulation, require for such registration. Each application must be accompanied by a fee of one dollar with the certificates of three reputable citizens, (one of whom shall be a licensed embalmer) that the proposed applicant is of good moral character and stating his age and general education which shall be such as to entitle him or her to admittance to high school. If the said board shall find the facts set forth in the application to be true, the said board shall issue to said applicant a certificate of registration. Before a registered applicant can apply for and take an examination in the practice of embalming or preparing for burial, cremation or transportation, the body of any dead person in the state of Ohio, said applicant shall have completed to the satisfaction and approval of the said board, a course consisting of at least twenty-six weeks of studies in the science of embalming, disinfection and sanitation in a regular school of embalming, recognized by said board or shall have had at least two years of practical experience under a licensed embalmer in this state, during which time he or she shall have embalmed (arterially) at least twenty-five dead adult human bodies. All applications for a license to practice embalming and the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation in this state, must be made to the state board of embalming examiners in writing and contain the name, age, residence and the person or persons with whom employed, the name of the school attended together with a certificate from two reputable citizens that the applicant is of legal age and of good moral character, also a certificate under oath when required by the said board from the president or dean of the embalming school or college he or she has attended, that the applicant has complied with the requirements of said school or college or a certificate under oath, when required by said board, from the licensed embalmer under whom he or she has worked as an apprentice, that he or she has complied with the requirements of apprenticeship as set forth in this section. Each application must be accompanied by a fee of ten dollars and the certificate of registration. If after the state board of embalming examiners are satisfied that the applicant has qualified as set forth in this section, the said board shall cause the said applicant to appear before them and be examined in the subjects as set forth in the preceding section and he must pass said examination with an average grade of not less than seventy-five per cent."

That is to say, before a person who desires to engage in the practice of embalming or the preparation of the dead for burial or cremation or transportation in the state of Ohio is permitted to do so, he must pass an examination before the state board of embalming examiners. Before he is permitted to take the examination he must file an application under the terms and conditions set forth in the above quoted section. Said section provides that "each application must be accompanied by a fee of $10.00." So that in case the applicant fails to pass the examination he may apply for and be permitted to take another examination before such board. Said section further provides that "before a registered applicant can apply for and take an examination" he must file his application with the board of examiners. No applicant is permitted to take an examination unless the application is on file. All that would probably be necessary would be to refile the former application because there is no provision of statute which requires any new or additional matter to be set forth on a second or subsequent application for examination than that which is set forth in the original application. But a refiling of the original application for a new examination would be the same as filing a new application and therefore would require another fee of $10.00 to accompany such application.

Answering your first question, then, I advise you that the board has no authority to allow an applicant who has failed at one examina ion the privilege of taking a second examination without the payment of an additional fee or the filing of a new application.

Coming now to your second question: In the application referred to, in answer to your first question, and as required by said section above quoted, the applicant must state such information as the board requires by its regulations and the application must be accompanied by certificates of three reputable citizens (one of whom shall be a licensed embalmer) that the applicant has a good moral character and also his age and general education, which education, however, shall be such as will entitle the applicant to admittance to a high school, as provided by law. The above application is in the nature of a condition precedent, that is, without such application having been made the person cannot take the examination required of all those persons who desire to be registered for the purpose of practicing embalming in this state. The application is provided by law and must contain certain matters which are prescribed by the statute and certain other matters which are prescribed by the regulation of the board. No place in the statute is the board empowered to authorize its secretary-treasurer to perform any of its acts, except in section 1338 "the secretary-treasurer shall serve during the pleasure of the board and keep a record of the transactions of the board, collecting all money and performing any other duties required by the board." Any other duties required by the board would be considered to be such other duties of a clerical nature which would ordinarily fall to the lot of a secretary of a board and not a duty requiring the judgment or the exercise of the discretion of the members of the board.

So that, in answer to your second question, I advise you that it will be the duty of the board to pass upon the applications for registration and that a certificate of registration cannot be issued by the secretary without the authority of the board therefor.

In your third question you inquire who shall pay for the bond of the secretary treasurer.

General Code section 1340 provides:

> "The secretary-treasurer of the state board of embalming examiners shall give bond to the state in such sum as the board shall direct with two or more sureties, or a reliable surety company, approved by said board conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office. Such bond, with the oath of office and approval of the board endorsed thereon, shall be deposited with the state treasurer."

If the bond is given with two or more sureties who are not a surety company, there would be no cost required therefor and it is only in case a premium is paid for a surety bond that any cost would attach thereto. There is no provision of law for the board to pay for any such surety bond and it would therefore manifestly follow that if the board is not authorized to pay for same, and the secretary desires to give a surety company as his bondsman, he, the secretary-treasurer, must pay the premium upon such surety bond.

Answering your third question, therefore, I advise you that if a surety bond is given by the secretary-treasurer, he must pay the premium therefor himself.

Coming now to your fourth question:

General Code section 1343 provides in part:

> "If the state board of embalming examiners finds that the applicant possesses all of the necessary qualifications as prescribed in the preceding section and has passed a satisfactory examination in the subjects prescribed in section 1341, it shall register the applicant as a duly licensed embalmer, provided, however, that this section and the preceding sections shall not * * * apply to any person engaged in the practice of embalming or the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation prior to January 1, 1903, provided that he or she has had at least three years' practical experience, if such person prior to January 1, 1918, makes application to the state board of embalming examiners for a license, accompanied by a fee of $25.00, and an affidavit certifying that he or she was in such practice before January 1, 1903, and thereupon the state board of embalming examiners shall issue a license to such applicant."

As I read the above quotation it means that the provisions of law which relate to the registration of those persons who desire to practice embalming by causing such persons to pass an examination in certain prescribed branches, shall not apply to a person who was engaged in the practice of embalming or the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation prior to January 1, 1903. If such person at the time he files his application for a license, which must be before January 1, 1918, has had at least three years practical experience in embalming or the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation, I do not understand that it is necessary that the same be had since that time nor that the same be had at one continuous time, but what the statute does say is that such person must have been engaged in the practice of embalming, etc., prior to January 1, 1903, and that he has had at least three years practical experience.

So that, answering your fourth question, I advise you that the three years practical experience can be calculated by the board at any time such experience has been had, which must be prior to the time of the filing of the application, the last day of which filing is December 31, 1917.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SHERIFF—REQUISITION MATTERS—NOT ENTITLED TO FEES—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY CANNOT PAY FROM FUND UNDER SECTION 3004 G. C.

A sheriff is not entitled to per diem fees for services rendered in requisition matters.

The prosecuting attorney can not use the fund provided by section 3004 G. C. to pay a sheriff for services or expenses in requisition matters.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 13, 1917.

HON. JOSEPH T. MICKLETHWAIT, Prosecuting Attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You submit for my opinion the following statement of facts:

"For some time I have been paying the sheriff of this county out of the fund provided for by the provisions of section 3004 of the General Code the sum of $5.00 per day for services rendered outside of this state in cases of of extradition of criminals.

"I desire to have your opinion as to whether I can legally make these payments from the fund provided by section 3004 of the General Code."

Your inquiry calls for a consideration and construction of those sections of the General Code which apply to the collection of costs and expenses incurred in returning from a foreign state a fugitive from justice.

General Code section 109 provides how fugitives from justice may be demanded and reads as follows:

"On demand, the governor, when authorized by the constitution of the United States, may deliver to the executive authority of another state or territory a person charged therein with treason, felony or other crime committed therein. On application, the governor may appoint an agent to demand of the executive authority of another state or territory a person charged with felony who has fled from justice in this state."

After the application or demand is made of the governor for a person charged with treason, felony, or other crime, and the governor has appointed some one as an agent to demand of the executive authority of the other state or territory such person so charged, the expense which must necessarily follow such demand of such an agent and the return of the fugitive is then payable from the county treasury upon allowance by the county commissioners under the following sections, to wit:

"Section 2491. When any person charged with a felony has fled to any other state, territory or country, and the governor has issued a requisition for such person, or has requested the president of the United States to issue extradition papers, the commissioners may pay from the county treasury to the agent designated in such requisition or request to execute them, all necessary expenses of pursuing and returning such person, so charged, or so much thereof as to them seems just.

"Section 3015. The county commissioners may allow and pay the necessary expense incurred by an officer in the pursuit of a person charged with felony, who has fled the country."

That is to say, the county commissioners may pay from the county treasury to the agent designated in such requisition or request to execute them all necessary expenses of pursuing and returning such person, so charged, or so much thereof as the county commissioners deem should be paid.

In opinion No. 323—Opinions of Attorney General, 1915, volume 1, page 632, it was held that the expenses of an officer in returning from another state without requisition a person under indictment are payable under above quoted section 3015 and not under section 3004 G. C. Said last mentioned section reads, in part, as follows:

"There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney in addition to his salary, and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice not otherwise provided for. * * *"

That is to say if expenses are incurred either by the prosecuting attorney in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice or by any one for him, and provision of law is made covering said expenses, then the same can not be paid from the fund provided for under section 3004 G. C., but must be paid from the funds otherwise provided by law.

In your case, when the sheriff of your county incurs expenses in the pursuit of a person charged with felony who has fled the country or incurs expenses in relation to the return of a prisoner in requisition matters, such expenses are otherwise provided for by law and can not be paid by the prosecuting attorney from the fund provided for in section 3004 G. C.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that it is not proper for you to pay the sheriff the sum of five dollars per day for services rendered outside of the state in cases of requisition of criminals from the fund provided for in section 3004 of the General Code. The sheriff is not entitled to per diem fees in requisition matters.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PRACTICE OF MEDICINE—GIVING DRUGS TO PRODUCE ANESTHESIA.

The giving of drugs to produce anesthesia is a practice of medicine under our laws which defines what shall constitute the practice of medicine in Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 14, 1917.

HON. HOWELL WRIGHT, Member Twenty-Fifth Senatorial District of Ohio, Cleveland, O.

DEAR SIR—You request my opinion as follows:

"As a member of the legislature, I desire an opinion as to whether the mere giving of the various drugs used in surgical anesthesia, given only under the personal direction and in the presence of the responsible operating surgeon, himself a licensed medical practitioner, by a person not a licensed practitioner of medicine, but who has prepared himself or herself, by satisfactory study and preparation, constitutes in itself the practice of medicine under the provisions of the Ohio Medical Practice Act."

Your inquiry involves a consideration of our laws which relate to the practice of medicine in Ohio.

General Code section 1286 provides in part:

"A person shall be regarded as practicing medicine * * * within the meaning of this chapter who uses the words or letters 'Dr.,' 'Doctor,' 'Professor,' 'M. D.,' 'M. B.,' or any other title in connection with his name which in any way represents him as engaged in the practice of medicine * * * in any of its branches or who * * * administers or dispenses for a fee or compensation of any kind, direct or indirect, a drug or medicine, * * * of whatever nature for the cure or relief of a wound, fracture or bodily injury, infirmity or disease * * *."

That is to say, the practice of medicine as defined by our laws applies to any person who uses the words and letters above mentioned or who administers for a fee or compensation a drug or medicine. A surgical operation is strictly within the statute covering the practice of medicine and when it is determined by the surgeon that in order to properly perform an operation, it is necessary that an anesthetic be used in order that the person upon whom the operation is being performed may be placed in the condition that the performance of such operation is possible, then the administering of such anesthetic becomes as much a part of the operation as does the performance of any other act in relation thereto.

The loss of feeling caused by the administration of a drug is called anesthesia. A surgeon would, under no circumstances, attempt to perform a complicated or prolonged operation without anesthesia being first produced. In order to increase the safety of operation it is necessary to note the effect the anesthetic has on the patient at the time anesthesia is being produced and following. The anesthetist studies his patient, the respiration and circulation as carefully as does the surgeon watch his operating knife while the operation is being made. After the operation is over the anesthetist studies the effect of the surgical shock, the effects of the anesthetic on the resistance of the tissues to disease and the process of recovery from the effects of the anesthetic.

It was held in Opinion No. E222, Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1911-1912, Vol. 1, p. 876, that:

"The question whether the act of administering an anesthetic is an act requiring technical skill or an act of administering a drug for the cure or relief of a wound, disease, etc., or whether such act is a mere ministerial act, is a question of fact. If it is true, as herein assumed, that the first alternative is correct, then such act may not be performed by any other person than a licensed physician, neither under the direction of a licensed physician nor by way of assistance to such nor otherwise."

"It is perfectly clear that a person need not be qualified as a physician in order to be permitted under the law to perform some necessary services in connection with an operation under the direction of a physician or surgeon. Thus any person may, under the surgeon's direction, arrange the instrument for him, or hand him such appliances as he needs. I do not, however regard the administration of an anesthetic as such an act as those described unless I have a wrong impression of the nature of the act. It is the act of administering itself the doing of which requires technical knowledge and professional skill. That would be such an act as could not be, under the law, delegated to another by a qualified physician, even though the person to whom it is delegated acts under the personal direction of the physician."

In other words, if the administering of the anesthetic might be delegated to a person other than one who is licensed to perform such act under our law, then any other act which is required to be performed in the practice of medicine can likewise be delegated to a person other than one who is licensed to practice under our law. That is to say, a physician could delegate to one person the authority to diagnose and to another to prescribe and to another to perform operations, and all that would be necessary would be to simply show that the persons who were performing such acts were doing so under the proper delegated authority of a licensed physician. This cannot be understood to be the law in Ohio. After defining what the term practice of medicine means, the legislature then determined to whom such statutes should not apply, and it is provided in General Code section 1287:

"Nothing in this chapter shall prohibit services in case of emergency, or domestic administration of family remedies. This chapter shall not apply to a commissioned medical officer of the United States army, navy or marine hospital service, in the discharge of his professional duties, or to a regularly qualified dentist when engaged exclusively in the practice of dentistry, or when administering anesthetics, or to a physician or surgeon residing in another state or territory who is a legal practitioner of medicine or surgery therein, when in consultation with a regular practitioner of this state nor shall this chapter apply to a physician or surgeon residing on the border of a neighboring state and duly authorized under the laws thereof to practice medicine or surgery therein, whose practice extends within the limits of this state; provided that equal rights and privileges are accorded by such neighboring states to the physicians and surgeons of Ohio residing on the border of this state, contiguous to such neighboring state. Such practitioner shall not open an office or appoint a place to see patients or receive calls within the limits of this state."

I have quoted the entire above section that the complete extent of the exemptions might be noted. Such exemptions are emergency cases, family remedies, United States army, navy or marine service, a dentist in his profession, physicians or surgeons of another state when called in consultation in this state, and physicians or surgeons on the border if reciprocity is enjoyed, but no where in said section are nurses, interns or hospital employes exempted.

The chapter which applies to the registration of nurses in Ohio, and as found contained in sections 1295-1 to 1295-20 G. C., both inclusive, provides for such examination and registration and section 1295-20 reads as follows:

"Nothing in this act shall in any way be construed to be in conflict with the laws of this state relating to the practice of medicine and surgery."

It cannot be disputed that the anesthetist administers a drug and that said administration is for a fee or compensation no matter whether such fee or compensation is paid by the patient or by the hospital, and that the administration is for the relief of bodily injury, infirmity or disease.

My attention is called to the case of Louis Frank et al. vs. John G. Smith et al., decided May 4, 1917, in the court of appeals of Jefferson county, Ky., in which the court held that a nurse who administered anesthetics for operations in a hospital was not engaged, under the statutes of Kentucky, in the practice of medicine. But it will be remembered that sub-section 5 of section 2615 (Ky. statutes) provides that the law relating to the regulation of the practice of medicine in Kentucky "shall not include trained or other nurses or persons selling proprietary medicines when not traveling as a troupe or troupes composed of two or more persons" and that the act shall not apply to the practice of Christian Science.

If the above exemption had been made in our law as a part of 1287, or otherwise I would have no hesitancy in making application of the decision above named. But no such exemptions being made, I must hold that such decision cannot be given the same application to the laws of this state that it would necessarily have if our laws did contain such exemption.

From the above, then, I advise you that the giving of the various drugs to produce anesthesia, when surgical operations are being performed, constitutes the practice of medicine under the provisions of the medical laws of this state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

EXPENSES—INCURRED BY STATE EMPLOYE—VISITING AT HIS HOME —CANNOT BE ALLOWED AS NECESSARY TRAVELING EXPENSES UNDER SECTION 275 G. C.

Where a deputy supervisor of the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, whose duties necessitate his being at the office of the department at Columbus continuously, makes trips to his place of residence at Dayton, Ohio, on Saturday afternoon, returning to Columbus, Sunday night, such trips having nothing to do with the duties of his office, his railroad fare expended on such trips cannot legally be allowed as necessary traveling expenses within the provisions of section 275 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 14, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

Attention Mr. Blau.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of August 2, 1917, in which you submit for opinion the following:

> "A deputy supervisor of the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices resides at Dayton, Ohio. The requirements of the office necessitate his being at the office of the department continuously. He goes to his place of residence Saturday afternoon and returns to Columbus Sunday night.
> "Question. Can the railroad fare expended on such trips to Dayton and return be legally construed as 'necessary traveling expenses' within the provisions of section 275 G. C., 107 O. L. 504, and may same be paid from the state treasury?"

Section 275 General Code, to which you refer, as found in 107 O. L., page 504, reads:

"All necessary traveling and hotel expenses of the deputy inspectors and supervisors shall be paid from the state treasury."

Section 274 G. C. provides for a bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices and prescribes their powers and duties.

Section 275 G. C. must be read in connection with the other sections referring to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices and the provision that all necessary traveling and hotel expenses shall be paid means all necessary traveling and hotel expenses of the deputy inspectors and supervisors when traveling on the business pertaining to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices. Your question assumes that the requirements of the duties of this particular deputy supervisor necessitates his being at the office of the department continually and I take it that his superior, the auditor of state, who is by the act made chief inspector and supervisor of public offices, has designated the office at Columbus the headquarters and that the office of the bureau is his assigned station to which he must report for service without expense to the state. It would only be in case the business of the bureau called him from the office to some other point within this state that he would be entitled to his necessary traveling and hotel expenses.

You state that this deputy goes to his place of residence at Dayton, Ohio, on Saturday afternoon and returns to Columbus Sunday night. Surely it cannot be seriously contended that this would be such expense as would be covered by section 274. This is purely personal, it is in no way way connected with the business of the bureau and I cannot conceive how any claim could be made for the railroad fare or other expenses attendant upon such trips home.

It is therefore my opinion, in answer to your inquiry, that railroad fare expended by a deputy supervisor on trips made to his place of residence and back to Columbus cannot legally be allowed as necessary traveling expenses within the provisions of section 275 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTION FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN COSHOCTON COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 14, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of August 9, 1917, in which you enclose for my approval the following final resolution:

"Coshocton county—Section 'A' of the Mt. Vernon-Coshocton road, I. C. H. No. 339. Types 'A' and 'B.' "

I have examined this final resolution carefully and find the same correct in form and legal, and I am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BLIND RELIEF—NOT NECESSARY TO BE TOTALLY BLIND TO RECEIVE.

It is not necessary that one be totally blind to render him eligible to receive relief under the provisions of section 2965 if his loss of eyesight makes him unable to provide himself with the necessities of life.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1917.

HON. T. R. ROBINSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Mansfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you requested my opinion relative to blind relief in which you state as follows:

> "Section 2965 General Code reads as follows:
> " 'Any person of either sex, who, by reason of loss of eyesight is unable to provide himself with the necessities of life, who has not sufficient means of his own to maintain himself, and who, unless relieved as authorized by these provisions would become a charge upon the public or upon those not required by law to support him, shall be deemed a needy blind person.'
> "This section and all others relating to blind relief commission was repealed, as found in 103 Ohio Laws 833. An emergency act was enacted by the general assembly, 104 Ohio Laws 200, which authorizes the transfer of funds, as provided in section 2967 of the General Code.
> "Question: Must a person be totally blind to be entitled to relief?
> "I have been unable to find any court decision or opinions of the Attorney-General on this question."

You call my attention to the fact that section 2965 was repealed by an act found in 103 O. L., 833, which act undertook to create an institution for the relief of the needy blind.

The sections of the new act to which you refer were codified by the Attorney-General as sections 1369-1 to 1369-9 inclusive.

In the case of State ex rel. v. Edmondson, 89 O. S., 351, sections 1369-1 to 1369-9, foregoing mentioned, were held to violate article XII, section 5, of the constitution of Ohio and therefore held to be unconstitutional and void. Said act having been declared unconstitutional and void, sections 2965, repealed by said act, was reinstated. Said section 2965 is set out in full in your inquiry.

In an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, on March 21, 1916, being opinion No. 1402 and found in the Opinions of the Attorney-General for that year, at page 521, Mr. Turner held:

> "It is therefore my opinion that it is not necessary that one be totally blind in order to entitle him to receive relief as a needy blind person. If he is so blind as to make it impossible for him to maintain himself from becoming a public charge he would be entitled to relief under the statute, all the other conditions being present."

I am in full accord with the opinion as rendered by Mr. Turner and hereby approve the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

The college or school must adopt a standard of at least 26 weeks embracing a total minimum number of seven hundred and sixty hours (760).

Their curriculum must embrace the following subjects:

Visceral anatomy and vascular system of the human body.

The action and comparative value of germicides. The method of embalming and preparing bodies for transportation.

The meaning of "contagion" and "infection," the dangers they beget, and the best methods of their restriction and arrest. Also bacteriology in relation to contagion and infection.

The signs of death and the manner in which they are determined.

Practical demonstrations on the cadaver.

Each student must embalm (arterially) at least 25 bodies.

A copy of the college or school's curriculum must be on file with the board.

The college or school must maintain a complete record of attendance of each student, using for that purpose a standard roll book which shall be open at all times for inspection by this board.

They must maintain a complete record of the result of all school examinations, and those records should be open at all times for inspection by the board.

They shall be required to stand an inspection by a designated member of the board, whenever the board deems it necessary.

DETENTION HOME—COMMISSIONERS SHOULD PROVIDE SAME—IN COUNTIES OF LESS THAN FORTY THOUSAND MAY PROVIDE NECESSARY ATTENDANTS.

Under sections 1670 and 1671 G. C., upon the advice and recommendation of the juvenile judge, the commissioners should provide, by purchase or lease, a detention home. and in counties having a population less than forty thousand the commissioners are authorized to provide the necessary persons to care for said home and for the children therein.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1917.

HON. J. CARL MARSHALL, Probate Judge, Xenia, Ohio.
DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 31, 1917, you submit the following:

"I would like to ask your opinion as to whether or not, under sections 1670 and 1671 G. C., the county commissioners have authority to provide, by lease or by rent, a detention home and provide also, from time to time, as necessity warrants, the necessary persons to care for the same and to care for the children in same."

Section 1670 G. C. reads as follows:

"Upon the advice and recommendation of the judge exercising the jurisdiction provided herein, the county commissioners shall provide by purchase or lease, a place to be known as a 'detention home' within a convenient distance of the court house, not used for the confinement of adult persons charged with criminal offenses, where delinquent, dependent or neglected minors under the age of eighteen years may be detained until final disposition, which place shall be maintained by the county as in other like cases. In counties having a population in excess of forty thousand, the judge may appoint a superintendent and matron who shall have charge of said home, and of the delinquent, dependent and neglected minors detained therein. Such superintendent and matron shall be suitable and discreet persons, qualified as teachers of children. Such home shall be furnished in a comfortable manner as nearly as may be as a family home. So far as possible delinquent children shall be kept separate from dependent children in such home. The compensation of the superintendent and matron shall be fixed by the county commissioners. Such compensation and the expense of maintaining the home shall be paid from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall be issued upon the itemized voucher, sworn to by the superintendent and certified by the judge. In all such homes the sexes shall be kept separate, so far as practicable."

"When such detention home is provided by the county commissioners, and upon such home being recommended by the judge, the commissioners shall enter an order on their journal transferring to the proper fund from any other fund or funds of the county, in their discretion, such sums as may be necessary to purchase or lease such home and properly furnish and conduct it and pay the compensation of the superintendent and matron. The commissioners shall likewise upon the appointment of probation officers, transfer to the proper fund from any other fund or funds of the county, in their discretion, such sums as may be necessary to pay them, and such transfers shall be made upon the authority of this chapter. At the next tax levying period, provisions shall be made for the expenses of the court."

In 99 O. L. 199, these sections were section 30 of an act. The codifying commissioners split section 30 into two sections, and the legislature, in 103 O. L. 864, amended section 1670 G. C. which in the original act provided that the commissioners "may provide by purchase or lease," etc., so as to make the section read: The commissioners shall provide by purchase or lease.

The age in the original section was raised from seventeen to eighteen years and in the last amendment the following sentence was interlined:

"So far as possible delinquent children shall be kept separate from dependent children in such home."

Under the provisions of section 1670 G. C. as it now stands, it is mandatory, upon the advice or recommendation of the judge exercising juvenile jurisdiction, that the county commissioners provide, by purchase or lease, a place to be known as a "detention home," and it is my view that if the juvenile judge so advises and recommends, then it is the duty of the commissioners to provide the detention home. I think the language of the section is plain and needs no construction or interpretation.

Said section 1670 further provides that in counties having a population in excess of forty thousand, the judge may appoint a superintendent and matron, who shall have charge of such home and of the delinquent, dependent and neglected minors detained therein.

Your county having, as shown by the last federal census, a population of 29,733, and not possessing a population of 40,000, that part of section 1670 G. C. would not authorize your juvenile judge to make this appointment.

I think that the general powers given commissioners under section 2410 G. C., which provides:

"The board may employ a superintendent, and such watchman, janitors and other employes as it deems necessary for the care and custody of the court house, jail, and other county buildings, and of bridges, and other property under its jurisdiction and control," would be authority for the appointment of such employes as would be necessary to properly attend to and look after such detention home.

Hon. U. G. Denman, in an opinion rendered under date of November 29, 1910, found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1910-11, page 701, had under consideration sections 1670 and 1671 G. C., prior to the last amendment. In speaking of the distinction made by the law between "counties having a population in excess of forty thousand" and other counties, Mr. Denman said that such distinction consists in the provision that:

> "In counties having a population in excess of forty thousand, the judge may appoint a superintendent and matron."

Continuing Mr. Denman says:

> "This specific provision for the appointment of a superintendent and matron in such counties negatives the right to appoint a superintendent or matron in counties containing a population of forty thousand or less. It appears to me that in making this classification according to population, the general assembly felt that in counties containing over forty thousand population, it might be advisable to have regular persons, such as a superintendent and matron, permanently in charge of such a home throughout the year, whereas in the smaller counties, the general assembly felt that owing to the small number of children who would probably be involved, it was inadvisable to have persons permanently employed throughout the year. There is nothing, however, in the law which indicates that a county containing a population of forty thousand. or less, may not 'purchase or lease such home and properly furnish and conduct it.' This would include providing the necessary persons to care for this home and for the children from time to time.
> "I am, therefore, of the opinion that your county may proceed to establish a detention home and provide from time to time, as necessity warrants, the necessary persons to care for the same and to care for the children in said home, but I am also of the opinion that you are without power to provide a superintendent or matron for such home."

In an opinion found in Vol. II of the Opinions of the Attorney General for 1916, p. 1623, under date of September 29, 1916, former Attorney-General Edward C. Turner, as shown by the last paragraph of the syllabus, held:

> "In counties having a population of less than forty thousand the county commissioners shall employ or appoint persons necessary to take care of the children therein and the maintenance of the detention home."

He calls attention to the opinion of Hon. U. G. Denman, referred to above and concurs in same. He also calls attention (p. 1629) to the fact that section 1670 G. C. provides that a detention home established thereunder "shall be maintained by the county as in other like cases," and further says: "It is difficult to point to a very like case." Continuing, he says:

> "Both the infirmary and children's home have some similarity to a detention home and the county jail in some respects as well. No two of these are exactly similarly maintained. I am, however, of opinion, in consideration of the duty of maintenance being imposed upon the county commissioners, and in the absence of specific authority being conferred upon the judge of the juvenile court by statute, to appoint the persons necessary to the care of the children and the maintenance of the home, that the authority to do so in counties having a population of less than forty thousand rests in the county commissioners."

In view of all the foregoing and in answer to your specific question, it is my opinion that under sections 1670 and 1671 G. C. the county commissioners, upon the advice and recommendation of the judge exercising the jurisdiction provided therein, shall provide, by either purchase or lease, a detention home, and that in counties having less than forty thousand population, the county commissioners are authorized to appoint the necessary persons to care for the same and for the children therein.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MAILING ARGUMENTS AGAINST PROHIBITION—NOT A VIOLATION OF SECTION 13223 G. C. FORBIDDING THE SOLICITING OF ORDERS FOR INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Publication and mailing of circulars and advertisements containing arguments against the proposed prohibition amendment to be voted for at the November election, which do not contain advertisements for intoxicating liquors, but do contain statements regarding the liquor industry, can not be construed to be soliciting orders for intoxicating liquors under section 13223 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 15, 1917.

HON. JOHN V. CAMPBELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 2, 1917, you submit the following:

"Enclosed herewith you will find copies of arguments which were used in the election on a proposed amendment to the constitution submitted at the election in November, 1915, which are similar, perhaps, to arguments which may be used in the coming fall campaign.

"Referring to section 13223 of the General Code, and the first paragraph of section 5 of the act of congress approved March 3, 1917, effective July 1, 1917, and known as the 'Reed Bone-Dry Amendment,' I have been asked to give an opinion as to whether or not such arguments, when published as circulars or in newspapers or pamphlets and deposited in the United States mails, would constitute a violation or infringement of section 13223 G. C.

"I am quite clearly of the opinion that the publication and mailing of such arguments do not violate this act but the matter is so far reaching that, in my judgment, it should have your interpretation in order that there may be some uniform ruling throughout our state. I therefore respectfully request that you give me your opinion as to whether or not the publication of these articles, or any of them, constitutes a violation of this section."

You enclose with your communication certain advertisements, one from the Ottawa County Herald, which is an advertisement The Ohio Home Rule Association, containing arguments against the proposed amendment to the constitution, prohibiting the sale and manufacture for sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage. The advertisement calls attention to the amount of taxes paid by the liquor industry to state and nation, and to the further fact that at the elections in 1913 and 1914 the electors of the state by majorities nearing one hundred thousand voted against the propositions submitted by the prohibition advocates. The entire trend of the argument is for a vote against prohibition. There is nothing in the advertising concerning any particular intoxicating liquor.

Another advertisement you enclose is one taken from the Zanesville, Ohio, Labor Journal. This too is an advertisement of The Ohio Home Rule Association, calling attention to the millions in wages and the thousands of jobs that would be sacrificed if prohibition obtained. It also calls attention to the extent of the liquor industry, the amount of wages paid in 1914, and argues it would be violative of personal right for prohibition to obtain; but nowhere does it seek to advertise any particular intoxicating liquor.

The other enclosure is a circular signed by The Ohio Home Rule Association, containing, like the two preceding advertisements, copy of a sample ballot to be voted on the prohibition amendment, and contains arguments and statements seeking to induce the readers thereof to vote "No" on the prohibition amendment. Like the preceding advertisements, this circular does not seek to advertise any intoxicating liquors or any particular kind thereof.

Section 13223 G. C. provides:

> "Whoever, directly or indirectly, solicits orders for intoxicating liquor in a county or territory where the sale of such liquor as a beverage is prohibited shall be fined not less than one hundred and fifty dollars nor more than four hundred dollars, and ,for each subsequent offense, shall be fined not less than four hundred dollars nor more than eight hundred dollars."

This section was section 4 of the act passed March 12, 1909 (100 O. L. 89) making it an offense to solicit orders for intoxicating liquors in "a county or territory where the sale of such liquor as a beverage is prohibited." This section was under consideration by our supreme court in the case of Hayner v. State, 83 O. S. 178. The facts in this case were as follows:

A liquor dealer addressed to parties in Knox county, Ohio, a certain letter, circular and post-card, which were received by the addressee in due course of mail in said county. The circular, in addition to setting forth the advantages of the "lock-stopper" decantor mentioned in the letter and depicting the quality of certain brands of whiskey manufactured at the defendant's distillery, commended the goods to the consumer as "absolutely pure," "distilled from the choicest grain," "of the most distinguished quality," and "guaranteed under the United States pure food and drugs act."

The post-card was as follows:

Davis, J., at p. 190 of the opinion, says:

"We assume that the act of soliciting may be done by letter as well as in person. The dictionary term 'solicit' implies 'an application to another for obtaining something.' It is the every-day experience of all of us that in other matters it is so done, and as there is no reason to presume that the general assembly used the word in any sense other than the ordinary sense, we give that construction to the term. We suppose, also, that the letter was intended to take effect in the county of Knox. If it was so intended then we see no reason why the prosecution was not properly commenced in that county. We call attention to the following authorities, and pass this matter without further comment.

Further, at p. 195, the court uses the following language:

"Attention is called to two Arkansas cases, which deserve notice. Carter v. The State, 81 Ark. 37, decided December 3, 1906, holds that, within the meaning of section 5133, Kirby's Digest, making it unlawful for any person, firm, partnership, or corporation engaged in the sale of liquors to solicit orders for the sale of liquors in any place where the same is prohibited by law, an advertisement in a newspaper published in a prohibition district that liquor may be obtained from a licensed liquor dealer doing business elsewhere, is not a solicitation. The validity of the act itself forbidding soliciting is not questioned."

The Hayner case, however, as suggested by the court, was a case directly on a charge of soliciting an order for the sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage in a dry county, and did nor relate to the matter of advertising; so that phase of the subject was not considered.

Ohio, unlike some of the states, has not passed any act prohibiting liquor advertisements. The only law upon the question of soliciting is the section heretofore quoted, which makes it a violation to solicit orders.

One of my predecessors, Hon. U. G. Denman, in an opinion under date of May 3, 1909, found in Annual Report of the Attorney General for 1909 at p. 548, was called upon to construe section 4 of the so called Dean act, which now is section 13223 supra.

He held that the term "solicit," as used in said section, did not include advertisements for intoxicating liquors in dry territory. The following is quoted from his opinion (pp. 549-551):

"The definition of 'solicit,' which appears to fit the case in question, as given by the Century Dictionary, is as follows:

" 'To seek to obtain, strive after, especially by pleading; ask (a thing) with some degree of earnestness or persistency, as, to solicit an office or a favor; to solicit orders.'

"And 'advertisement' is thus defined by the same authority:

" 'To make public announcement of anything of which it is desired to inform the public; announce one's wants, wishes or intentions by advertisement; as to advertise for something that is wanted.'

"See also Anderson's Dictionary of Law, 'solicit,' and Bouvier's Law Dictionary, 'advertisement.'

"The act in question is penal and should, therefore, under the well known principle of statutory construction be strictly construed, and

" '* * * those who contend that a penalty may be inflicted, must show that the words of the act distinctly express that under the circumstances it has been incurred. They must fail if the words are merely equally capable of a construction that would, and one that would not, inflict a penalty.'

"2 Lewis' Sutherland Statutory Construction, section 523.

By a strained construction, the term 'solicit' might possibly be held to include 'advertisement' under the above definitions of those terms, but it must always be remembered that the intention of the legislature to forbid 'advertising' for orders for intoxicating liquors in 'dry' territory, must clearly appear from the express words used in the prohibitory act, and such intention cannot be reasoned into it.

" 'It is a principle in the construction of statutes that the legislature does not intend the infliction of punishment * * * by doubtful language. * * *. Although a case may be within the mischief intended to be remedied by a penal act, that fact affords no sufficient reason for construing it so as to extend it to cases not within the correct and ordinary meaning of its language.'

"2 Lewis' Sutherland Statutory Construction, section 521.

"The question here involved might perhaps 'be held to be within the mischief intended to be remedied' by the 4th section of the Dean act, but, we must ascertain the intention of the legislature from the actual words which they have embodied in the act, and must give to those words their common and ordinarily accepted meaning, and it is my opinion that, under the accepted definitions of these two terms, as above given, 'solicit' implies a more personal and individual application, or request, for orders by liquor dealers to inhabitants of 'dry' territory, than is implied in the word 'advertise,' and the further use of the words 'directly or indirectly' does not so enlarge the meaning of the term as to include 'advertising' such as you have referred to in your question. The apparent intention of the legislature in using the words 'directly or indirectly' was to reach offending agents of anv such liquor dealers. The meaning of the word 'advertise' is well known, and had the legislature intended the act to apply to such cases as the one stated in your question, it should, and undoubtedly would have used that particular term. It is also well to consider in construing this act, that an interpretation of it which would include 'advertisements' such as you have spoken of, inserted in newspapers published in 'wet' counties, would so broaden its scope as to include and indirectly regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors in 'wet' counties, for it is a well known fact that any newspaper published in 'wet' territory, which is of any value as a general advertising medium, would undoubtedly have a greater or less circulation throughout the 'dry' territory of the state. In my opinion, such an interpretation would give to this act a scope which it was not intended by the legislature to have when passed.

"The only case I have been able to find in the reports which is exactly in point on the question here involved is that of Carter v. The State, 98 Southwestern Reporter, 704, decided by the supreme court of Arkansas, in December, 1906. The question involved in that case was, whether an advertisement in the following terms—

" 'J. M. Strange, in Texarkana, will be glad to have your order for Joel B. Fraser whiskey. * * * Please send your order to J. A. Wilson, of Texarkana, for Bonny Rye.'

—inserted in a newspaper published in 'dry' territory, was unlawful under the terms of section 5133 Kirby's Dig., which read as follows:

" 'It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, partnership or corporation, engaged in the sale of alcohol, or any spirituous, ardent, vinous, malt, or fermented liquors, where the same may be lawful, to solicit orders, either by agent or otherwise, for the sale of alcohol or any spirituous, ardent, vinous, malt or fermented, liquors, in any place or places, in this state where the same is prohibited by law.'

"As can be seen, the above provision is in all essentials, and to all intents and purposes, identical with section 4 of the so-called Dean Act, and it is my opinion that the terms, 'either by agent or otherwise,' appearing in the Arkansas statute, and 'directly or indirectly,' appearing in the Dean act, are to all intents and purposes the same, and were intended to cover the same thing.

"Hill, C. J., for the court rendered the following opinion in the Arkansas case:

" 'The facts of this case, which will be found stated by the Reporter, called for a decision as to whether an advertisement is within the meaning of the solicitation denounced by section 5133 Kirby's Dig., * * * The many uses of the term "advertise," in its various forms may be found in the Century dictionary, from which this definition, the one most nearly reaching to the facts here, is taken:

" ' "The act or practice of bringing anything, as one's wants, or one's business, into public notice, as by paid announcement in periodicals, or by hand bills, placards, etc., as to secure customers by advertising."

" 'To "solicit" is thus defined:

" 'To importune, entreat, implore, ask, attempt, try to obtain.' Anderson's Law Dictionary. See also, Century dictionary, "solicit."

"None of the uses of this term embrace 'advertising,' although 'advertising' is a method, in a broad sense, of soliciting the public to purchase the wares advertised. But 'soliciting' is a well-known and defined action, and 'advertising' is an equally well-known and defined action, and they are not identical. It is true that they are intended to reach the same result, the sale of wares, but different routes are traveled in reaching that end. One is legislated against, and the other is not. If the legislature intended to make criminal the advertisement in prohibited district of liquor, it would have said so and not left such an important matter to be implied from the use of a general term. It would be a strained and unnatural use of the term 'solicit' to include in it advertisements in newspapers."

I concur in the opinion of my predecessor, Hon. U. G. Denman, in his holding that the word "solicit" in section 13223 G. C. does not include the newspaper advertisements, but in answering your question it is not necessary to go even that far, for the reason that the circulars and newspaper advertisements submitted, which contain arguments against prohibition and reasons claimed to induce one to vote "No" on the prohibition amendment, can in no sense be construed even to be advertisements for intoxicating liquors.

It is quite significant that while during all the years since the passage of the act, the penal section of which is now section 13223 G. C., the newspapers in this state published freely both advertisements for liquors and advertisements giving the prices of said liquors and the persons to whom orders should be sent, and these newspaper were mailed throughout the state, into dry as well as wet territory, no question was ever raised that such advertisements constituted a violation of the provision of section 13223 G. C.

The Hayner case, supra, does not assist us much, because the facts in that case show that the post-card was a direct solicitation for an order for liquors to the addressee and that the person was asked to send in his order, have the goods shipped to him, sample the goods, if satisfied remit the price, and if not satisfied the privilege was extended to return the goods. In fact the defense in this case practically admitted that a solicitation had been made in dry territory through the mails, but defended that act on the grounds which the supreme court found were not valid. The court in this case also decided that the solicitation of the order might be made by letter as well as in person.

But taking the plain words of the statute, I am constrained to hold that the mailing of newspapers or circulars, containing such or similar arguments as are found in the circulars and advertisements submitted to me, addressed to persons in so-called dry territory, is not an offense against section 13223 G. C., because nowhere therein is there any solicitation, directly or indirectly, for an order or orders for intoxicating liquors.

In your communication, in addition to referring to section 13223 G. C., you also make reference to section 5 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1917, effective July 1, 1917. While I can not see how a consideration of the federal act will in any way reflect upon whether or not a particular advertisement offends against section 13223 G. C., still, since there seems to be an impression that the passage of this federal act in some way made advertisements different from what they were theretofore, I have considered same. You understand, of course, I have only considered it as far as it might in any way reflect upon the proper interpretation of our state statute. It would be beyond my jurisdiction to attempt to anticipate what construction the federal authorities might finally give same.

Section 5 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1917, effective July 1, 1917, (40 Stats. at L. 1069) is as follows:

"That no letter, postal card, circular, newspaper, pamphlet, or publication of any kind, containing any advertisement of spirituous, vinous, malted, fermented, or other intoxicating liquors of any kind, or containing a solicitation of an order or orders for said liquors, or any of them, shall be deposited in or carried by the mails of the United States, or be delivered by any postmaster or letter carrier, when addressed or directed to any person, firm, corporation, association, or other addressee, at any place or point in any state or territory of the United States at which it is by the law in force in the state or territory at that time unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors, or any of them respectively.

"If the publisher of any newspaper or other publication or the agent of such publisher, or if any dealer in such liquors or his agent, shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited, or shall knowingly send or cause to be sent, anything to be conveyed or delivered by mail in violation of the provisions of this section, or shall knowingly deliver or cause to be delivered by mail anything herein forbidden to be carried by mail shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than six months, or both; and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned not more than one year. Any person violating any provision of this section may be tried and punished, either in the district in which the unlawful matter or publication was mailed or to which it was carried by mail for delivery, according to direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed. Whoever shall order, purchase, or cause intoxicating liquors to be transported in interstate commerce, except for scientific, sacramental, medicinal and mechanical purposes, into any state or territory the laws of which state or territory prohibit the manufacture or sale therein of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes shall be punished as aforesaid Prov ded, That nothing herein shall authorize the shipment of liquor into any state contrary to the laws of such state: Provided further, That the postmaster general is hereby authorized and directed to make public from time to time in suitable bulletins or public notices the names of states in which it is unlawful to advertise or solicit orders for such liquors."

In "Liquor Bulletin No. 2" of the post office department, which is the most recent bulletin that has come to hand, will be found the following, on p. 2:

"Since the passage of the act the department has received many requests from manufacturers, dealers, publishers, and editors for specific rulings as to whether or not certain liquids are 'intoxicating liquors' within the meaning of the act.

"The inquiries have been answered in each case by the statement that what is or what is not 'intoxicating liquor' within the meaning of the act is a question of fact to be determined from all available evidence.

'The department regards ethyl alcohol as an intoxicating liquor within the meaning of the act, and matter containing either advertisements or solicitations for orders for such alcohol will be unmailable on and after July 1, when addressed to territory affected by the act.

'Methyl alcohol, wood alcohol and denatured alcohol are not regarded by the department as intoxicating liquors within the meaning of the act.

"The contention has been made before the department that inasmuch as the second paragraph of th section permits the interstate shipment of liquor for 'scientific, sacramental, medicinal and mechanical purposes,' matter containing advertisements or solicitations for orders for intoxicating liquor for these purposes is not affected by the act.

"The two paragraphs of the act are entirely separate, the first relating to the mailability of matter, and the second relating to the physical transportation of the liquors themselves—a matter over which this department has no jurisdiction. Inasmuch as the first paragraph contains no exception as to the purposes for which the liquors are intended or the person addressed the department after July 1 will regard as unmailable all matter containing advertisements or solicitations for orders for intoxicating liquor even though such liquors be intended for 'scientific, sacramental, medicinal, or mechanical purposes.'

'The act is construed to bar from the mails matter of the character described when addressed to states or portions thereof in which it is by state or local law forbidden either to advertise such liquors or to solicit, personally or otherwise, orders therefor.

"This bulletin is subject to change, being based upon the best information available at this time."

From the above it is evident that the post office department has construed the act as to bar from the mails the matter of such character as described in the act, when addressed to states or portions thereof in which it is by state or local law forbidden either to advertise such liquors or to solicit, personally or otherwise, orders therefor.

So that while in Ohio we have no law prohibiting liquor advertisements as such, we have, as has been seen, a law which prohibits soliciting orders for intoxicating liquors in any county or territory where the sale of such liquor as a beverage is prohibited, and we have quite a good deal of territory in Ohio, portions of said state, in which it is prohibited to sell such liquors.

But while the construction placed upon the federal act by the federal authorities makes it a federal offense to do the things inhibited in section 5 thereof, in the dry portions of this state, I can not see how that fact in any way has any bearing upon whether a liquor advertisement in the one instance would be violative of section 13223 G. C., or whether arguments against the proposed amendment prohibiting the sale and manufacture for sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage could or could not be mailed into such dry territory.

So it is my view that irrespective of what facts might constitute an offense under the federal law, section 5, above quoted (having particular reference to the first part of said amendment which by reason of the fact that it covers liquor advertisements and soliciting orders for intoxicating liquors, is the only part of said section which has been given consideration herein), neither produces or limits the provisions of section 13223 G. C., and therefore any facts which might be held to constitute a violation of the last named statute would not be changed or have any different bearing by reason of the provisions of the federal act.

It might be well, even at the risk of lengthening this opinion, to call attention to part of section 1g of article 2 of the Ohio constitution, as adopted September 3, 1912:

"Section 1g. * * * A true copy of all laws or proposed laws or proposed amendments to the constitution, together with an argument or explanation, or both, for, and also an argument or explanation, or both, against same, shall be prepared. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, against any law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, may be named in such petition and the persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for any proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution may be named in the petition proposing the same. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for the law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, or against any proposed law submitted by supplementary petition, shall be named by the general assembly, if in session, and if not in session then by the governor. The secretary of state shall cause to be printed the law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words for each, and also the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words against each, and shall mail, or otherwise distribute, a copy of such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with such arguments and explanations for and against the same to each of the electors of the state, as far as may be reasonably possible. * * *"

It is apparent from the above that when an argument or explanation is prepared for or against the proposed amendment to the constitution on a prohibition proposition, it will be the mandatory duty of the secretary of state to mail or otherwise distribute with the copy of the proposed amendment the arguments and explanations to each of the electors of the state, as far as may be reasonably possible. Since the character of arguments and explanations against the prohibition amendment must necessarily be along the lines indicated in the advertisement you have submitted to me and which applied to former prohibition amendments, and since in performing the duty of mailing such arguments it would be uncumbent upon the secretary of state to send same into dry as well as wet territory, it is obvious that the electors in adopting section 1g, supra, contemp'ated the doing of the very thing concerning which you inquire; that is, having mailed to the electors in dry territory arguments for and against the prohibition amendment, when such amendment was being submitted.

In view of the foregoing, it is my opinion that circulars and advertisements sent into dry territory by mail or otherwise, merely containing arguments against prohibition and nowhere containing solicitations for orders for intoxicating liquors, are not prohibited by the provisions of section 13223, G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1917.

HON. G. O. MCGONAGLE, Prosecuting Attorney, McConnellsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 25, 1917, in which you ask my opinion on certain matters therein set out, as follows:

> "I have before me your opinion of recent date to the auditor of the county, in which you advise against the county commissioners constructing a road improvement through the village of Stockport under the provisions of Sec. 6949, and in which opinion you refer to opinion formerly rendered to prosecuting attorney of Medina county. Sec. 6949 was amended by last legislature and my question is 'Does Sec. 6949 as amended, give to the commissioners authority to continue a road through a municipality to the east line thereof, said road having been heretofore constructed by said commissioners to the west line of said village; the village and the commissioners agreeing on the portion each is to pay?'
> "Acting under Sec. 6949 the village of Stockport and the commissioners entered into the usual agreement; the village held an election on May 7, 1917, for the purpose of issuing bonds to pay for its share of the improvement; the vote was practically unanimous in favor of the bond issue. Under Sec. 6949 as it then stood are the proceedings as between the commissioners and the council void? Is the election to issue bonds void? If, under Sec. 6949 as now amended the commissioners have authority to make such improvement, must the entire proceedings, including the election be again consummated?

"Second: Where petition is filed under Sec. 6887 for private road should a bond be required from the petitioner? In case the commissioners upon hearing dismiss the petition and adjudge costs against the petitioner, no bond having been required, how may the commissioners proceed, if at all, to collect?

"As a result of the flood of March, 1913, the bridge here was destroyed, and after a time was rebuilt. Considerable correspondence was had with the federal government about rebuilding and about a crib to protect the first pier, or draw bridge pier, of the bridge; the bridge was constructed either with or without government approval, and later a plan for constructing a crib up stream from the pivot pier, about 100 feet, at cost of about $8,000.00 was submitted to the government authorities. Approval was not given until recently; this pier having apparently been weakened by the action of the flood, may the commissioners at this time issue bonds for such improvement under flood emergency section, that is, outside the 15 mill limitation?

"When the owner of a hedge fence along a public road refuses to cut or trim same, are the trustees limited to the provisions of section 5935 et seq.?"

1. Your first question has to do with section 6949 G. C. Said section, before it was amended by the White-Mulcahy law, read as follows:

"Sec. 6949. The board of county commissioners may extend a proposed road improvement into or through a municipality when the consent of the council of said municipality has been first obtained, and such consent shall be evidenced by the proper legislation of the council of said municipality entered upon its records, and said council may assume and pay such proportion of the cost and expense of that part of the proposed improvement within said municipality as may be agreed upon between said board of county commissioners and said council."

As you suggested in your communication, I rendered an opinion to the effect that under the provisions of said section the board of county commissioners had no authority to assume jurisdiction over the improvement of a road which was entirely within the limits of the municipalty.

Said section 6949 G. C. has been amended by the White-Mulcahy law (107 O. L. 107) and now reads in part as follows:

"Sec. 6949. The board of county commissioners may construct a proposed road improvement into, within or through a municipality, when the consent of the council of said municipality has been first obtained * *."

It will be noticed that the word "within" is placed in the section, which was not in the section before its amendment. It was placed there to accomplish the very object which the law as it stood before did not accomplish, namely, to permit the county commissioners to improve a road which is entirely within the limits of a municipality.

Your question is as to whether the steps which the county commissioners and the village council took upder the old law are of no effect, due to the fact that the old law made no provision for the improvement in reference to which the different steps were taken.

A number of jurisdictional steps have been taken by the county commissioners and the village council, among them the following: The consent of the council was given to the construction of the public highway in the village. The surveys, plans, etc., for the improvement have been made. These surveys and plans have been approved by the village council. The agreement as to the part of the cost and expense of the improvement each is to bear has been entered into. The county commissioners have taken all the necessary steps leading up to the advertising for bids.

For all of these steps there was no warrant or authority of law. It is true a law had been passed and filed with the secretary of state on March 29, 1917, but section 1c of article II of the constitution provides:

> "* * No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided * *."

As said before, the law as it stood prior to the enactment of the White-Mulcahy law gave no authority to the county commissioners and village council to proceed in the manner in which they did proceed, and the said law which was filed with the secretary of state on March 29, 1917, did not become effective until the 28th day of June, 1917. Hence the only theory upon which the procedure taken by your county commissioners and the village council could be sustained would be to hold that the authorities might anticipate the provisions of the new law. This I do not believe can be done. The fundamental law provides that no act shall become effective for ninety days after the same is filed with the secretary of state. Its provisions are held in abeyance for a time, until the people of the state may decide as to whether they desire to express their opinion at the ballot box as to its merits and demerits.

If the law is not to be effective for ninety days after the filing of the same with the secretary of state, no one can look to its provisions to secure a right or enforce a remedy during this period. If this principle is not followed, great confusion would likely arise. If the provisions of law filed with the secretary of state may be anticipated for one thing, they may be anticipated for all things. If they may be anticipated a day before the referendum period ends, they may be anticipated ninety days before it expires. There would be a great uncertainty among the people as to whether they should base their rights and enforce their remedies under the one law or the other.

Further, if the law has no effect until the ninety-day period has expired, the repealing clause of the said law has no effect until the expiration of that time. If this be true, the old law stands in full force and effect. And if this be true, the rights and remedies of the people must be based upon it and not upon a law the provisions of which have no effect because the going into effect of the same is held in abeyance by the supreme law of the land.

Hence it is my opinion that the steps which the county commissioners of your county and the village council of Stockport have taken under the old law, in the matter of a road improvement lying entirely within the limits of the municipality, are of no effect whatever and they could not be used as a basis for further procedure in reference to the matter of said improvement.

2. You state that the village of Stockport has held an election and has voted favorably upon the question of issuing bonds to create a fund for the improvement of the said street, and you especially ask whether it will be again necessary to hold an election for this purpose.

In reference to this matter I desire first to note section 6951 General Code. This section as it stood in the old law, and as it is found in the new, provides that the municipality in anticipation of the collection of taxes levied for the purpose of providing for the payment of the municipality's share of the cost of such improvement is authorized to sell its bonds.

Under the provisions of this section, bonds could be issued in municipalities in anticipation of the collection of taxes without the necessity of submitting the question to a vote of the people of the municipality. This would be true, provided the bonds issued by the municipality had not reached the limits provided by law. Hence, inasmuch as the village had submitted the question of a bond issue to the people, I am assuming that this step was necessary for the reason that the bonded indebtedness of the village had already reached the limit provided by law without a vote of the people.

With this in mind let us now turn to the provisions of section 3939 General Code. This section provides that the council of a municipal corporation, when it deems necessary, may issue and sell bonds in such amount and denominations, for such period of time and at such rate of interest, not exceeding 6% per annum, as said council may determine and in the manner provided by law for any of the purposes therein specified. Sub-division 22 of said section 3939 sets forth the following purpose:

> "For resurfacing, repairing or improving any existing street or streets as well as other public highways, whether such resurfacing, repairing or improving is done directly by the municipal corporation, or contracted by it, or by the county commissioners under an agreement with the municipal corporation by which it has agreed to assume and pay any part of the cost thereof."

Thus we see, from the provisions of this section, that the council of Stockport can issue bonds under a vote of the people for the purpose of improving the streets of the village, whether the improvement was to be made by the municipality alone or in conjunction with the county commissioners. But while this section gives authority to issue bonds for the purpose set out in subdivision 22 of section 3939 of the General Code, yet it is my opinion that the power to issue said bonds could not be exercised unless the authorities have the power to proceed with the improvement for which they are issued, and as said before the authorities had no power to proceed with the improvement under contemplation for the reason that there was no provision of law authorizing them to construct the improvement. That is, section 6949 of the General Code was not broad enough prior to its amendment to permit the county commissioners and the village council to join in the matter of the improvement lying wholly within the municipality. Hence, at the time the bonds were voted for, the improvement for which the bonds were voted for could not have been made at all.

While there was authority under the provisions of section 3939 of the General Code to issue bonds for the purpose set out above, yet this authority could not be exercised by the municipality for the reason that it was impossible to construct the improvement for which the bonds were issued.

Therefore, it is my opinion that the municipality of Stockport cannot issue bonds as a result of the election held in said village, and this for the reason that the village had no right or authority to hold the election.

From this it follows that it will be necessary, in my opinion, for the proposition of issuing bonds to take care of the municipality's share of the cost and expense of said improvement to be again put up to a vote of the people.

3. You also submit a question in reference to the provisions of sections 6887 and 6889, both inclusive, of the General Code, which provide for the laying out of a road or outlet from a man's premises through the premises of another, leading to the public highway. These sections form a part of what was known as the "Cass Highway Law." Sections 6860 to 6889, both inclusive, made up the first chapter of said act, and the chapter is headed:

> "Locating, establishing, altering, widening, straightening, vacating or changing the direction of the road."

Seitions 6860 to 6886, both inclusive, G. C., embodied provisions which existed before the Cass act became a law. But the provisions of sections 6887 to 6889, both inclusive, G. C., are first found in the law as set out in the Cass act. They seem to have been in a way engrafted on the former provisions in reference to locating, establishing, altering, etc., roads. However, they do not seem to have been engrafted upon these other sections in such a way as to warrant one, in placing a construction upon them, to go to the provisions of the former sections, in order to help out in the scheme or plan set out in the latter sections.

Sections 6860 to 6886, supra, relate to public roads, while sections 6887 to 6889, supra, have to do with private roads or outlets. It is true section 6860 is broad enough to include not only public but also private roads, but the very next section starts out to deal with public roads, and the subject of public roads is considered from that section on through to section 6886.

With this analysis in mind, let us turn to your question. You ask whether the county commissioners should require a bond upon the filing of a petition under section 6887 G. C.

Section 6863 G. C. provides that the county commissioners shall require the petitioners, or some one or more of them, to enter into bonds conditioned for the payment of the cost and expenses incurred in the proceedings, but there is no such provision made in sections 6887 to 6889, supra. As said before, I do not believe that we can turn to the provisions of section 6883 G. C. for this matter.

Hence, I conclude that the statute does not require the giving of a bond, and if the statutes does not require it, I do not believe that the county commissioners would have any authority to require same.

It is almost universally held by our courts that the matter of security for costs in the United States is statutory, and where the statutes do not require security to be given, the courts or officials having jurisdiction over any matter have no right or authority to demand that a bond be filed to secure costs.

In reference to these sections, you also make inquiry if the commissioners should decide to dismiss the petition, then how may they proceed to collect the costs?

Section 6868 G. C. provides that the petitioners shall be liable for all the costs of said proceedings and the commissioners may abandon said improvement and adjudge the costs against the petitioners, and in case of the failure of the petitioners to pay the costs adjudged against them, the same may be recovered in an action against them by the prosecuting attorney of the county. But said provisions relate to public roads and there is no such provision whatever applicable to private roads. There seems to be no provision made for assessing costs against any one, nor any made for collecting costs.

Hence it is my opinion that the county commissioners have no authority to assess costs; neither has any one authority to collect them.

> "Costs can be imposed and recovered only in cases where there is statutory authority therefor. While the power to impose costs must ultimately be found in some statute, the legislature may nevertheless grant the power in general terms to the courts, which in turn may make rules or orders under which costs may be taxed and imposed; but the courts cannot make such rules or orders and impose costs thereunder, unless the power to do so is expressly given them by statute."

This is the rule laid down in 11 Cyc. 24 and from the cases therein cited to substantiate said proposition, I believe the rule is correctly stated.

I desire also to state that it is my opinion that the county would in no event be liable for the payment of the costs, for the reason that the proceeding set out in these three sections in no sense is of a public nature, but is purely private. For this reason I might suggest that I doubt very much whether sections 6887 to 6889, inclusive, G. C., are constitutional. It would hardly seem probable that a private individual could be given the right to condemn the property of another for his own personal use, but upon this question I am not passing. I am only passing upon the question that the costs made in such a proceeding cannot be assessed by the county commissioners; neither can they be collected from anyone.

4. Another question you submit is whether the county commissioners would have authority to build a crib in a navigable river, to sustain a drawbridge pier, and levy taxes to redeem the bonds issued for the payment of the same, said bridge having been washed out by the floods of 1913, and make the said tax levy outside the maximum limit as otherwise provided by law.

From your communication I gather that the bridge has been reconstructed, but that the middle pier of the same is not as well protected from the flowing waters of the stream as it should be. The act relative to the matter under consideration is found in 103 O. L. 141. Section 1 of said act provides for the temporary repairing, reconstruction or replacement of public property or public ways. Section 2 thereof provides for the removing of any obstruction or matter deposited by the flood. Section 3 of the act relates particularly to the question under consideration and reads as follows:

> "For the purposes mentioned in sections 1 and 2 of this act, and for the permanent repair, reconstruction or replacement of public property or public ways destroyed or injured in the manner, and at the time described in section 1 of this act, any board of county commissioners, board of education, township trustees or council of any municipal corporation or the road commissioners of any road district may issue bonds or notes of the corporation, subdivision or district as needed. Resolutions or ordinances providing for the issuance of such notes or bonds shall not be published, shall not require the approval of the electors nor be subject to any referendum. Such resolution or ordinances shall state the facts bringing them within the terms of this act, so far as the emergency is concerned, shall require for their passage the votes of two-thirds of all members elected to such board or council and the recitals therein contained shall be conclusive evidence of the facts recited."

Section 6 of the act provides that taxes may be levied for the redemption of bonds, beyond the maximum limit otherwise provided by law.

The provisions of section 3 of the act are still in full force and effect, and if the board of county commissioners is able to make the statements necessary to bring the matter about which you write within the provisions of the act, there would seem to be nothing to prevent their taking advantage of the provisions of this act.

I might suggest that section 3 of the act under consideration was amended in 106 O. L. 354, but so far as the answer to your question is concerned, the amendment therein made has no effect.

5. You inquire what remedies the public has against an owner of a hedge fence, who refuses to cut or trim the same in accordance with the provisions of the law.

Sections 5935 et seq. G. C. seem to contain the only provisions of law which give any remedy to the public or to private individuals in reference to this matter, and, as will be readily seen in an analysis of said sections, this remedy merely goes to the matter of damages; that is, a private individual who is damaged from the fact that the owner of the hedge on a partition line permits it to remain at a greater height or width than six feet, for a longer period than six months, may recover damages not to exceed twenty cents a rod of such hedge fence. If the same be along a public highway, the trustees of the township may recover damages not to exceed fifteen cents per foot of the hedge fence. There seems to be no provision of law by virtue of which the owner can be compelled to keep his hedge fence trimmed so that the same will be within the dimensions provided for by law, namely, six feet high and six feet wide.

Section 5942 G. C. provides that the owner of lands shall keep all brush, briers, thistles or other noxious weeds cut in the fence corners, etc., but this would not include the hedge fence.

Section 3374-2 G. C. (107 O. L. 94) provides:

> "All brush, briers, burrs, vines, Russian or Canadian, or common thistles or other noxious weeds growing along the public highway shall be cut (at different periods of the year)."

This would not include hedge fences. Hence it is my opinion that there is no remedy other than that found in sections 5935 et seq. G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CLERK OF COURTS—APPOINTED TO FILL VACANCY—WHEN SUCCESSOR ELECTED.

1. Where J. L. F. was appointed Clerk by reason of a vacancy caused by the death of L. B. T., on the 23rd day of December, 1916, and said L. B. T. had been re-elected county clerk at the November election, 1916, said J. L. F. would hold the office under his appointment from that date, December 23, 1916, until his successor is elected and qualified.

2. Such successor should be elected for the unexpired term at the November election, 1918, at which election there should also be elected a clerk for the regular term commencing on the first Monday of August, 1919.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1917.

HON. P. H. WIELAND, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Gilead, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of August 7, 1917, wherein you state:

> "I desire to submit the following questions for an opinion from your department:
> "On the 23d day of December, 1916, John L. Fargo received a commission as clerk of the courts of Morrow county, Ohio, to fill the unexpired term caused by the death of L. B. Terry, clerk, which commission was to end the first Monday of August, 1917. The late L. B. Terry had also been elected for a second term, to begin the first Monday of August, 1917.
> "On the 16th day of July, 1917, the commissioners of Morrow county reappointed John L. Fargo to serve for the term beginning the first Monday in August, 1917, and a commission was given said John L. Fargo on the 28th day of July, 1917. On the first Monday in August, 1917, the commissioners of Morrow county being in doubt as to whether their appointment of July 16, 1917, was legal and regular, again appointed John L. Fargo as clerk of the court of Morrow county.
> "Q. (1.) Could the commissioners of Morrow county, at their July meeting, make this appointment, or should they wait until Monday, August 6, 1917, at which day the first term of John L. Fargo expired?
> "Q. (2.) Is the commission issued by the governor on July 28, 1917, sufficient or should the clerk be required to get a new commission dated from August 6, 1917, when the appointment was again made by the commissioners?"

Section 2870 G. C. provides:

> When a vancancy occurs in the office of clerk of the court of common pleas, the county commissioners shall appoint a clerk pro tempore, who shall give bond and take the oath of office prescribed for the clerk-elect. If the commissioners are not in session when such vacancy occurs, the county auditor shall forthwith give written notice thereof to each of them, and thereupon they shall meet and make the appointment. If the commissioners fail to make an appointment for ten days after they severally have had such notice of vacancy, the appointment shall be made by the county auditor."

Section 8 G. C. provides:

"A person holding an office of public trust shall continue therein until his successor is elected or appointed and qualified, unless otherwise provided in the constitution or laws."

Section 10 G. C. provides:

"When an elective office becomes vacant, and is filled by appointment, such appointee shall hold the office until his successor is elected and qualified. Unless otherwise provided by law, such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term at the first general election for the office which is vacant that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have occurred. This section shall not be construed to postpone the time for such election beyond that at which it would have been held had no such vacancy occurred, nor to affect the official term, or the time for the commencement thereof, of any person elected to such office before the occurrence of such vacancy."

Section 10 G. C. was section 11 of the Revised Statutes and before its codification read as follows:

"When an elective office becomes vacant, and is filled by appointment, such appointee shall hold the office till his successor is elected and qualified, and such successor shall be elected at the first proper election that is held more than thirty days after the occurrence of the vacancy; but this section shall not be construed to postpone the time for such election beyond that at which it would have been held had no such vacancy occurred, nor to affect the official term, or the time for the commencement of the same, of any one elected to such office before the occurrence of such vacancy."

In the case of State ex rel. v. Speidel, et al., 62 O. S., 156, our supreme court held the following, as found in the second paragraph of the syllabus:

"When one who is holding the office of sheriff, and is a candidate for election to succeed himself, dies before entering upon the new term, a vacancy is thereby created in the term in which he was serving, but not in the term for which he was a candidate, and upon which he had not entered; and one who is duly appointed and qualified to fill the vacancy thus created will hold the office for and during the unexpired term of his predecessor, and until his successor is elected and qualified; and such election must be had at the first proper election that is held more than thirty days after the occurrence of the vacancy."

The facts in that case were that Buvinger, who was the sheriff and a candidate for re-election, died upon election day and received the highest number of votes cast for office of sheriff. Cover received the second highest number of votes and claimed that since Buvinger died before the close of the polls, he (Cover) had received the highest number of votes of any person entitled to be elected and was authorized to receive a certificate of election. Walker was appointed on November 9, 1899, two days after the election, to fill the vacancy in said office created by the death of Buvinger, and qualified, gave bond and entered upon the duties of his office. Walker claimed that by virtue of this appointment he held the office until his successor was duly elected and qualified. The first term of Buvinger would expire on the 31st day of December and Speidel, on the theory that Walker only filled out the unexpired portion of Buvinger's first term, was appointed for the vacancy beginning the first Monday in January, 1900.

Davis, J., at page 159, held that Buvinger did not live to qualify and that disposed of his future term. He further held:

> "Walker was, it is conceded, duly appointed, commissioned, qualified and inducted into the office of sheriff of Clermont county, for the unexpired term of Buvinger. This much was done under and by virtue of section 1208 of the Revised Statutes; but section 11 of the Revised Statutes read into his commission the words: 'Until his successor is elected and qualified.' Speidel was appointed, and not elected, and is a mere intruder in the office. Walker is still the legal sheriff and will continue so to be 'until his successor is elected and qualified, and such successor shall be elected at the first proper election that is held more than thirty days after the occurrence of the vacancy.' Revised Statutes, Sec. 11.
> "In order that we may not be misunderstood it may be added that there was no vacancy in the office of sheriff of Clermont county on the first Monday in January, 1900. The death of Buvinger did not create a vacancy in his term which would have begun in January, 1900, assuming that he was duly elected because he did not live to be installed in his second term. State ex rel. v. Dahl et al., 55 Ohio St., 195. Walker was incumbent at the time when that term would have begun had Buvinger lived, with the right to remain until his successor was elected and qualified. There could be no vacancy then, unless Walker should die, resign, or be lawfully removed for cause. State ex rel v. Wright, 56 Ohio St., 540. Therefore, the county commissioners, in appointing Speidel, acted altogether without authority; and Speidel can have no right to act as sheriff."

I am not unmindful of a case decided by the superior court of Cincinnati in 1897, in Harte v. Bode, et al., 4th N. P., 421, where the court held, as shown by the syllabus, as follows:

> "1. That, by virtue of the appointment by the county commissioners, Monfort held the office of clerk until the first Monday of August, 1898; and therefore, there was no unexpired term to be filled.
> "2. That the person elected at the November election would be elected for the full term of three years, beginning on the first Monday of August, 1898.
> "3. That the board of elections properly refused to print the name of any nominee for such office more than once upon the official ballot."

In this case Smith, J., held that there was no unexpired term, and that at the first proper election the clerk should be elected for the full term, but, as a reading of the opinion will disclose, the fact that section 11 of the Revised Statutes did not provide for any unexpired term was one of the reasons assigned by the court for his decision. It probably was in view of that fact that the codifying commissioners changed Revised Statutes section 11, now section 10 of the General Code, and expressly provided that unless otherwise provided by law, such successors shall be elected for the unexpired term at the next general election for the office that is vacant that occurs not more than thirty days after the vacancy occurred.

In view of the decision in 62 Ohio State, above quoted, and this appointment being controlled by the provisions of section 10, General Code, it is my opinion that Mr. Fargo, who was appointed to fill the unexpired term caused by the death of Mr. Terry, on the 23d day of December, 1916, continues under his commission by virtue of the provisions of section 8 of the General Code until his successor is elected and qualified, and that said successor, by virtue of the provisions of section 10 will be elected for the unexpired term at the November election in 1918, at which election, in addition to electing the county clerk for the unexpired term, there will also be an election for the clerk for the full term commencing on the first Monday in August, 1919.

In conclusion, my answer to your specific question is:

(1.) There was no necessity for the commissioners, at their July meeting, to make any appointment. Mr. Fargo, because of his appointment on the 23d of December, 1916, would hold over until his successor was elected and qualified.

(2.) In view of my answer to your first question, it is, of course, unnecessary to answer the second, since the commission that Mr. Fargo received on his appointment the 23d of December, 1916, would be sufficient authority for his holding his office until a successor was elected and qualified.

The above views are not in accord with the conclusions reached by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in his opinion under date of April 2, 1915, found in Vol. I of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, p. 354, with which opinion I do not concur.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

JOINT CITY AND COUNTY WORKHOUSE—MUSKINGUM COUNTY—WHAT EMPLOYES UNDER CIVIL SERVICE.

The secretary of the joint city and county workhouse directors of Muskingum county and the city of Zanesville is subject to the civil service law, and is to be selected from the eligible list and not to be discharged except for cause in accordance with the provisions of the civil service law. But the said board is entitled to select two secretaries, assistants or clerks who are, by virtue of such selection, withdrawn from the operations of the civil service act; and if the said board has not heretofore made such selection of the two such secretaries, assistants or clerks it may do so, including its secretary appointed under section 14551 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1917.

HONORABLE PERRY SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On August 2, 1917, you addressed the following inquiry to this department:

> "First. The secretary of the workhouse board for Muskingum county and city of Zanesville, passed the civil service examination in 1915, and each two weeks he draws his money as secretary of said board, and having received his appointment by passing the examination can he as secretary be removed unless charges are preferred against him?
> "In other words, having passed the examination under the civil service and being employed since 1915, the mayor having appointed a new board of trustees, can the new board elect a secretary to succeed the old secretary without preferring charges against the secretary who was duly elected and appointed by the old board under the civil service law."

The institution you mention was created by a special act of March 17, 1887, which is now found in the General Code, sections 14548 et seq. Section 14549 vests the control of this institution in "the board of joint city and county workhouse directors," who shall be freehold electors of the county.

Section 14550 provides for the appointment of the board by the mayor of the city with the approval of council.

Section 14551 provides:

> "The board of such joint city and county workhouse directors shall elect annually, at its first regular meeting in May, one of its members as president, and at the same meeting appoint a secretary and clerk. * * *"

Section 14553 is as follows:

> "The board shall have power to appoint a superintendent, deputy superintendent and such subordinate officers, guards and employes as may be necessary, fix their compensation and prescribe their duties, and to make all such regulations for their management and government as it may deem expedient."

The above are the provisions for the employes of the board,—one section providing for the secretary and clerk, the other for the superintendent, deputy superintendent, subordinate officers, guards and employes.

There is no doubt that these officers and employes are subject to the civil service law of the state, the first paragraph of the first section of which is: (Sec. 486-1 G. C.)

> "The term 'civil service' includes all offices and positions of trust or employment in the service of the state and counties, cities and city school districts thereof."

So that, whether this workhouse be a city or county institution, or a combination of both, would not matter in this respect. The subsequent provisions of the act place all officers and employes in the classified civil service, with certain exceptions set out in the statute. (Section 486-8 G. C.) The secretary is not in any of these exceptions, unless by the election by the board he is placed there under paragraph 8 of subsection 8, which is as follows:

> "Three secretaries, assistants or clerks, and one personal stenographer for each of the elective state officers; and two secretaries, assistant or clerks, and one personal stenographer for other elective officers, and each of the principal appointive executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such secretary, assistant or clerk and stenographer."

Under favor of this subsection such board has authority to select two secretaries, assistants or clerks and one stenographer. It is therefore within the power of this board to withdraw this position from the classified service and make the appointment otherwise than from the eligible list if it sees fit to select this secretary as one of the two provided in the section. If the board already has two exempted employes by virtue of having selected them as exempt heretofore, it has no option to substitute another person as secretary unless upon a discharge upon charges regularly preferred according to the civil service law. If the board has not availed itself of the benefits of this section and not claimed any employes as exempted from the classified service, it may select the secretary and another or any two assistants as it may desire.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

STOCK—SURRENDERED TO CORPORATION—UPON SALE OF PART OF PROPERTY—NOT RESTORED TO STATUS OF UNISSUED STOCK—HOW TAX COMPUTED ON SUCH STOCK.

1. The surrender by the shareholders, of the part of the stock in such corporation held by them, to the corporation itself by reason of the sale of a part of the property of the corporation and pro-rata distribution of the proceeds thereof among the stockholders does not restore such stock so surrendered to the company to the status of unissued stock,—it continues to retain its character as subscribed or issued and outstanding stock.

2. The fee or tax required of a corporation under section 6488 General Code should be computed upon all its subscribed or issued and outstanding stock, regardless of the fact that a part of such stock has been subsequently acquired and is owned by the corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of July 18, 1917, you submitted to me a communication addressed to you by The Carroll Foundry and Machine Co., of Bucyrus, Ohio, under date of July 11, and another letter dated July 17, 1917. From these communications it appears that The Carroll Foundry and Machine Company was organized with an authorized capital stock of $400,000.00, all of which was later subscribed for and issued. Sometime thereafter the company sold its steel foundry department, which department so sold as property of the company represented a capitalization of $200,000.00. The proceeds of the sale of this property was distributed prorata amongst its stockholders and thereupon all outstanding certificates of stock were called in and new ones issued to the stockholders in the amount of $200,000.00, the remaining $200,000.00 of stock by the surrender becoming the property of the corporation, which it has since held as treasury stock.

The precise question made by the company in the communications to you is whether the franchise tax described by section 5498 General Code should be computed upon the sum of $400,000.00,—the amount of the capital stock of this corporation originally issued and outstanding, or only on $200,000.00, the amount of capital stock now issued and outstanding in the stockholders of the company.

Section 5495 of the General Code provides that annually during the month of May each corporation organized under the laws of this state for profit shall make a report in writing to the tax commission in such form as the commission may prescribe.

Section 5496 provides the manner in which such report shall be signed and verified; and sections 5497 and 5498 General Code provide as follows:

"Sec. 5497. Such report shall contain:

"1. The name of the corporation.

"2. The location of its principal office.

"3. The names of the president, secretary, treasurer and members of the board of directors, with the postoffice address of each.

"4. The date of the annual election of officers.

"5. The amount of authorized capital stock and the par value of each share.

"6. The amount of capital stock subscribed, the amount of capital stock issued and outstanding, and the amount of capital stock paid up.

"7. The nature and kind of business in which the corporation is engaged and its place or places of business.

"8. The change or changes, if any, in the above particulars, made since the last annual report."

"Sec. 5498. Upon the filing of the report, provided for in the last three preceding sections, the commission, after finding such report to be correct, shall, on the first Monday of July, determine the amount of the subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock of each such corporation. On the first Monday in August, the commission shall certify the amount so determined by it to the auditor of state, who shall charge for collection, on or before August 15th, as herein provided, from such corporation, a fee of three-twentieths of one per cent., upon its subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock, which fee shall not be less than ten dollars in any case. Such fee shall be payable to the treasurer of state on or before the first day of the following October."

From the provisions of section 5498 General Code it will be noted that the franchise fee or tax of three-twentieths of one per cent. may be computed upon the subscribed capital stock or upon the issued and outstanding capital stock. It is evident that stock may be subscribed for without being issued and outstanding. Issued and outstanding stock, on the other hand, must in some form be subscribed for. In the instant case it appears that all of the authorized capital stock of the corporation prior to the time of the sale of one of its departments was issued and outstanding. We are not, therefore, in this case necessarily called upon to consider the provisions of section 5498 General Code in so far as they authorize the computation of the franchise tax upon the subscribed capital stock, but the question here presented may be considered to be with respect to the amount which, for the purpose of the computation of the franchise tax prescribed by section 5498, represents the issued and outstanding capital stock of the company.

As above noted, it appears that $200,000.00 of the capital stock of this corporation originally issued and outstanding was surrendered by the stockholders and thereafter held by the company as treasury stock, and the precise question here presented is whether the franchise tax provided for by section 5498 can legally be computed upon the amount of the capital stock thus surrendered to the company by the stockholders, as well as upon the amount represented by the certificates now held by the shareholders in the amount of $200,000.00, or only on the latter amount.

A diligent search fails to discover any extended line of authorities on this question. In the case of the Knickerbocker Importation Company v. State Board of Assessors et al., 74 N. J. L. 583, a case decided by the court of errors and appeals of the state of New Jersey, the court was called upon to consider this precise question under the provisions of section 519 of the compiled statutes of New Jersey, which required corporations organized under the laws of that state to make an annual return to the state board of assessors, and to state therein the amount of the capital stock issued and outstanding as of the first day of January preceding; said statute further providing that such corporations shall pay an annual franchise tax of one-tenth of one per cent. on all its issued and outstanding capital stock up to and including the sum of $3,000,000. In the case just referred to the report of the Knickerbocker Importation Company stated that as of January 1, 1904, its entire issue of $500,000.00 was fully paid, but that prior to January 1, 1904, 3,460 shares of stock of the said company of the par value of $100.00 each had been returned to the treasury of the company, and the company claimed that therefore only $154,000.00 of its stock was issued and outstanding on that date. The state board of assessors fixed the franchise tax at one-tenth of one per cent. upon $500,000.00 of the stock issued.

Upon a writ of certiorari procured by the company in the supreme court to the finding of the state board of assessors, that court held that stock owned by the corporation which issued it should not be considered in determining the amount of the franchise tax under the corporation tax law above referred to, and ordered the tax assessed by the state board of assessors reduced to the sum of $154,000.00.

On error prosecuted by the state board of assessors in the court of errors and appeals the judgment of the supreme court, the court of errors and appeals, reversed the judgment of the lower court and held that stock of a corporation once issued is and remains outstanding, within the purview of the New Jersey franchise tax law above noted although owned by the corporation issuing the same until retired and cancelled in the manner provided by statute for the reduction of the capital stock.

This decision of the court of errors and appeals of the state of New Jersey was later followed by the supreme court of that state in the case of Goldstein-Fineberg Company v. State Board of Assessors et al., 83 N. J. L. 61.

In opinion 1,825, addressed to the Tax Commission of Ohio, under date of August 2, 1916, my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, was called upon to consider the question here presented in a matter relating to the affairs of The France Slag Company, a corporation for profit organized under the laws of this state.

In the matter before Mr. Turner it appears that prior to January, 1916, The France Slag Company had authorized capital stock of $250,000.00, all of which was issued and outstanding. Sometime thereafter and prior to the month of May, 1916, the corporation sold a portion of its assets to some of its stockholders, in consideration of which the purchasing stockholders surrendered to the company stock therein held by them aggregating in amount the sum of $125,000.00 par value. The certificates evidencing such stock being cancelled, the corporation in May, 1916, filed its franchise tax report with the state tax commission, and set out in this report that the amount of capital stock subscribed for, issued and outstanding was $125,000.00, being the balance of the authorized capital stock remaining outstanding after the surrender to the company of the stock above mentioned in the sum of $125,000.00 par value.

Without having before him the New Jersey decisions above cited, Mr. Turner arrived at the same conclusion on the question before him as that announced in said decisions, and held that The France Slag Company was required to pay a franchise tax at the rate prescribed in section 5498 on the total amount of the stock of said corporation originally issued and outstanding, towit, the sum of $250,000.00.

Mr. Turner, in the said opinion, sets out the provisions of section 8700 General Code, which authorizes corporations to reduce their capital stock and prescribes the method whereby this may be accomplished, and held that until the corporation has exercised the power conferred by this section it would have to pay the Willis franchise tax upon the whole amount of its original issued and outstanding stock.

Upon the considerations and authorities above noted, in the absence of authorities and decisions of our own courts to the contrary, I am constrained to the view that the fee or tax required of a corporation, under section 5498 General Code, should be computed upon all its subscribed or issued and outstanding stock regardless of the fact that a portion of such stock has been subsequently acquired by the corporation; and with respect to The Carroll Foundry and Machine Company I am of the opinion that until it takes proper steps in accordance with statutory provisions to reduce the amount of its capital stock, it will be required to pay the franchise fee computed at the prescribed rate upon the full amount of its subscribed, issued and outstanding stock in the sum of $400,000.00.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF HIGHLAND COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 15, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

> "IN RE:—Bonds issued by the county commissioners of Highland county, in the sum of $12,000.00, the same being 20 bonds of the denomination of $600.00 each, issued in anticipation of collection of assessments on property assessed for the improvement and construction of certain highways located partly in Paint township and partly in Marshall township, said county."

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Highland county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue, and find the same, with corrections made as per my request, to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relating to bond issues of this kind, and I am of the opinion that bonds of said county covering said issue will, when properly drawn and signed by the proper officers, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—WHEN HE MAY PROCEED UNDER FORCE ACCOUNT—CANNOT CONSTRUCT INTERCOUNTY HIGHWAY IN CONJUNCTION WTH COMMISSIONERS OR TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—ALTERNATIVE.

1. The state highway commissioner, in the maintenance and repair of the intercounty highways and main market roads of the state and in the construction and improvement of the main market roads, may proceed under force account.

2. The state highway commissioner cannot construct or improve intercounty highways in conjunction with the county commissioners or township trustees, either by force account or under alternative bidding, the one alternative being that the state will furnish the labor and material for the improvement, the contractor furnishing the equipment and overseeing the work in the matter of said improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 16, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of June 26, 1917, in reference to a certain matter, as follows:

> "I desire to call your attention to a situation now existing in Ohio, and to request your opinion as to the legality of a proposed method of meeting this situation.
> "This proposed method has been suggested and strongly endorsed by a joint committee representing the Ohio Good Roads Federation, Ohio State Grange, County Surveyors' Association, County Commissioners' Association, road material and machinery manufacturers, and related interests. The members of this organiation are Hon. W. A. Alsdorf, secretary of the Ohio Good Roads Federation, Hon. A. P. Sandles, Mr. Royal Scott of the Willys-Overland Company, and president of the Ohio State Automobile Association, Hon. Ralph D. Cole, Mr. Charles Deckman and Mr. L. S. Bixler.
> "The state and many of the counties and other political subdivisions have already provided funds for the construction and repair of roads, and these funds are, in many cases, in the treasury and available for use.
> "There are a large number of contractors who have the equipment with which to do good work. Contractors and others report that for the present at least there is no shortage of labor, and it is hoped that transportation difficulties which have prevented the shipment of material and retarded road work will be largely overcome in the near future.
> "There seems to be substantial ground for the prevailing sentiment that there should not for the present at least be an abandonment or serious curtailment of road construction, and especially of road repair, and yet the uncertainties which the future holds as to labor supply and transportation of materials make it well nigh impossible in some instances to judge accurately as to future costs. For this reason contractors hesitate to bid and the situation is such that contracts which may now be made on the usual basis may in the future prove unfair and oppressive either to the state or to the contractors. In other words, contractors, along with all other persons, are unable to accurately forecast the future, even the question of freight rates being unsettled, and for this reason contractors find it well nigh impossible to assemble accurate data on which to base their bids.

"I am aware of the provisions of section 1206 G. C., and the related sections requiring advertisement and the letting of contracts to the lowest and best bidder, but desire your opinion as to the legality of a modification of the present practice of this department to meet the situation above presented.

"As you undoubtedly know, the present practice is to require the contractor to furnish all the labor and material and equipment necessary for the construction of the work.

"The plan which has been suggested and which I desire to submit to you for consideration would be to advertise intercounty and main market improvements upon the basis that the state should meet all bills for labor and material, fix a maximum price for the same from time to time which the contractor in making purchases and employing labor could not exceed, and for the contractor to assume entire supervision of the work under the direction of the department, and furnish all necessary tools and equipment, the contractor to receive for the use of his tools and equipment, and for his services in supervising the work a certain percentage of the amount expended for labor and materials, the percentage to be received by the successful contractor to be that named in his bid. A modification might be necessary in cases requiring the use of heavy equipment, in which case bidders would be required to state the per diem compensation to be received by them for the use, for instance, of a steam shovel or heavy roller.

"Under such an arrangement, the contract would, of course, be awarded to the responsible contractor offering to furnish the necessary equipment and supervise the work for the lowest percentage, or for the lowest percentage and per diem compensation for machinery. Such an arrangement would seem to preserve both the spirit and substance of the statutes requiring competitive bidding, and from some points of view at least, a contract of this character would be more fair and equitable than one made upon the basis which has been in use. Should present labor costs and transportation difficulties increase beyond anticipations, contractors would not be bankrupted by conditions beyond their control, and, on the other hand, if, as we all hope, conditions grow better rather than worse, the state would be the gainer.

"It might be advisable, even if a system such as the above can be worked out legally under the statutes, to so frame advertisements that bidders might, if they preferred, bid upon the old basis of furnishing all the labor, material and equipment, or might, on the other hand, bid upon the basis herein outlined.

"Whatever differences of opinion may exist as to the proper policy to be followed in reference to road building activities, there seems to be a general view that the state must at least hold fast to what it has and give careful attention to the maintenance and repair of all existing improved roads, and that many pieces of new work forming connecting links in important through roads must, if at all possible, be built in order to render possible the prompt and efficient marketing of the products of our farms.

"If this is to be accomplished, the situation which I have herein outlined must be met in some way and I, therefore, desire to request your most earnest consideration of the plan herein suggested, and desire you to advise me as to its legality and will, of course, be very glad to have you suggest any changes or modifications necessary to fit the outlined procedure to the existing statutes.

"I sincerely trust that you will be able to either approve this plan or suggest some other similar means of meeting the difficulties under which this department labors in this particular."

Your question, briefly stated, is this: May the state highway commissioner under the law advertise for bids in the matter of the construction or improvement of intercounty highways and main market roads, with the condition that the state highway commissioner will furnish the labor and material for the same, and the contractor merely submitting a bid as to what percentage of the amount expended for the improvement he would charge to furnish the equipment necessary for doing the work and to exercise supervision over the same, thus making the only competitive feature of the bid the percentage to be charged by the contractor or the price at which he would furnish the equipment and an oversight of the work; or asking for bids on an alternative basis—that is, the contractor bidding on the theory that he shall furnish all the material and labor and perform all the work in connection with the construction or improvement of the highway, and also submitting an alternative bid as set out, namely, that the state furnish the material and labor for the construction or improvement of the highway, the bidder to furnish the equipment and exercise a direct oversight of the construction or improvement.

This question arises by virtue of three different facts or conditions:

(1) That under the present circumstances there is no safe basis or foundation upon which contractors may submit bids for such work on the theory that they are to furnish the labor and material for the same, due to the fact that the price of labor and material is increasing rapidly.

(2) The matter as to whether labor can be secured, owing to the growing scarcity of the same, and whether material can be secured, owing to the inability of the railroads to deliver the same. Due to this condition the matter of bidding on contracts for road improvements is becoming so hazardous that the contractors are hesitating more and more in submitting bids, thus making it impossible to carry on road building with any certainty, and which eventually will lead to a practical abandonment of the same.

(3) That it would not be best at this time to curtail to any great extent the improvement of the state highways for the following reasons:

(a) Many contractors of the state are now in possession of ample equipment for road building and they ought not to be compelled to let this remain idle.

(b) Many of the counties and townships have money already arranged for in many cases, in the treasury, to bear their share of the cost and expense of improving the intercounty highways and main market roads of the state.

(c) At this time, if ever, there is pressing need for good roads, to deliver the crops to market and possibly later on to be used for carrying out war measures.

(d) There is much labor in the state which has been engaged so long in the building of highways that it could not readily adapt itself to other kinds of work.

That the above propositions are true to a great extent cannot be denied by anyone. That the propositions submitted by you would to a considerable extent at least help out in the emergency with which we are now confronted, no one could successfully controvert, and that the object sought by you and others interested in this matter is a most worthy one, is plainly evident.

It is well to keep in mind that this is an emergency for which we are trying to make provisions. It is also well to remember that the legislature, in the enactment of laws, rarely takes into consideration the fact that emergencies may arise and therefore makes no provisions to take care of the same. In fact the legislature cannot in general do this, for the reason that it has no means of knowing in advance the nature or kind of emergencies that may arise. From this self-evident proposition, the probabilities are rather against our finding entirely satisfactory provisions of law to take care of such an emergency as now exists.

We will examine the law which took effect June 28, 1917, in order to ascertain whether any such provision has been made by the legislature, but I will first eliminate certain matters in connection with your communication.

1. The difficulties you suggest in your communication will not interfere with the proper maintenance and repair of the intercounty highways and main market roads of the state, for the reason that the provisions of the law are broad enough to enable you to take care of this matter.

The third subdivision under section 1221 G. C. provides that the funds derived from the registration of automobiles shall be used for the maintenance and repair of the intercounty highways and main market roads of the state, and provides that the state highway commissioner may establish a system of patrol or gang maintenance of intercounty highways and main market roads, and may employ such laborers and teams and purchase such equipment as may be necessary to enable him to perform his duties.

Section 1224 G. C. provides as follows:

> "* * * The state highway commissioner may enter into a contract with any individual, firm or corporation which gives sufficient bond for the faithful performance of said contract, or with the county commissioners of any county or the township trustees of any township in which such highway is situated for the repair and maintenance of such highway, or any part thereof, according to the plans and specifications provided by the state highway commissioner, or for the furnishing of the material or labor for such repair and maintenance, or the state highway commissioner may furnish the material or labor or both, and supervise the repair and maintenance. * * *"

Under these provisions you will have no difficulty in the maintenance and repair of the intercounty highways and main market roads which are already constructed, and it can be said that section 1224 G. C. has considerably extended the meaning of the terms "repair" and "maintenance."

2. Subdivision 2 of section 1221 G. C. provides:

> "Twenty-five per cent. of all the moneys paid into the treasury of the state by reason of the levy for the state highway improvement fund shall be used for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the main market roads of the state. * * *"

Section 1231 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The state highway commissioner, subject to the provisions of this act, shall have power to purchase such equipment and materials, and > employ such labor as may be deemed necessary to execute any work upon said main market roads, or he may let contracts for the execution of any work upon said roads. * * *"

It is plainly evident, from the above provisions of the statutes, that you will have no difficulty in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the main market roads of the state. To be sure, in following the course set out in the above quoted part of section 1231 G. C., you could not avail yourself of the aid of counties, townships and villages, in the improvement of the main market roads. This is apparent from the further provisions of section 1231 G. C., which I will not quote.

With the above eliminations, we still have the question as to the construction and improvement of the intercounty highways of the state. The question is, can you follow one of the methods suggested by you, in the improvement of the intercounty highways of the state? What you really desire to know is as to whether you can apply the principle either of constructing the intercounty highways under what is known as a force account contract, or under the principle of alternative bidding, one alternative being that the bidder shall furnish all the material and labor and perform all the work in connection with the improvement, and the other being that the state will furnish the labor and material and the bidder will furnish the equipment and oversee the work in the matter of the improvement.

In answering this question it will be impossible for me to analyze the provisions of the act in so far as it applies to the jurisdiction of the state highway commissioner in the construction of intercounty highways. But suffice it to say that there are no provisions which give direct authority to the state highway commissioner to construct intercounty highways under either what is known as a force account contract or under alternative bidding. It can further be said that there are no provisions of the said act which seem to tend in this direction. Every step to be taken in the improvement of intercounty highways and every provision in reference thereto are apparently based upon the theory that the contract as a whole is to be let to the lowest and best bidder, the bidder to furnish all the labor, material and equipment and do all necessary work in connection with the improvement.

Furthermore, it can be said that the legislature seems to have deliberately limited and circumscribed the state highway commissioner in the above respects. It evidently had this matter of force account and alternative bidding in mind when this act was passed. This is obvious when we compare the law which applies in the construction of intercounty highways with the law that applies in the construction of county and township highways.

While, as said before, the law as it applies to the improvement of intercounty highways of the state makes no reference whatever to the matter of alternative bidding, yet section 3298-6 G. C. provides that:

> "* * * The township trustees may order the county surveyor to make alternate surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications, providing therein for different widths of roadway, or different materials, and approve all or any number of such alternate surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications," or the county surveyor may, without such instruction, prepare alternative surveys, plans, etc. To be sure, these alternative surveys, plans, etc., must be limited to different widths of roadway or different kinds of material, as is provided in said section.

When we come to the law which applies to the improvement of county highways, we find the provisions of the statute still more liberal.

Section 6911 G. C. provides that:

> "* * * The county commissioners may order the county surveyor to make alternate surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications, providing therein for different widths of roadway, different materials or other similar variations, and approve all or any number of such alternate surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications," or the county surveyor may, without instructions from the county commissioners, prepare alternative surveys, plans, etc.

Thus it is seen that in making alternative surveys, plans, etc., the county commissioners are not limited in widths of roadway and different materials, but may base them upon other similar variations. Further, while, as said before, there is no provision whereby the state highway commissioner may improve intercounty highways under force account, yet section 6948-1 G. C. provides:

> "If the county commissioners deem it for the best interest of the public they may, in lieu of constructing such improvement by contractor, proceed to construct the same by force account."

From all this it is clearly evident that the legislature did not intend that the state highway commissioner should have the power to receive alternative bids such as you suggest; neither did it intend that he should improve the intercounty highways of the state under force account contracts. This is possibly more evident from the fact that the legislature gave him the right to maintain and repair the highways of the state under force account, as well as to improve the main market roads under force account.

It appears that not only did the legislature not make such provisions as would enable the state highway commissioner to use either of the above methods in the improvement of intercounty highways, nor make any provisions tending in that direction, but on the other hand it is apparent that the legislature had these different methods in mind and deliberately failed to make them applicable to the construction and improvement of intercounty highways by the state highway commissioner. So there seems to be no warrant or authority whatever for placing such a construction upon the act as would enable the state highway commissioner to use the methods suggested, and thus place a construction upon the statute which the legislature did not intend to have placed thereon.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that while there is ample provision made in the law to enable the state highway commissioner to maintain and repair the intercounty highways and main market roads and also to construct and improve the main market roads under force account, yet there is no provision of law that would authorize the state highway commissioner to construct and improve the intercounty highways under force account or under alternative bidding such as herein discussed.

The policy of the legislature seems to be that the intercounty highways of the state should be constructed under contracts let by competitive bidding, as along this line the statutes of the state seem to have been drawn. For this reason I am not able to suggest any plan by which the said highways could be constructed under any other plan or policy.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SUPPLEMENTAL TO OPINION NO. 500—EMPLOYMENT OF CIVIL ENGINEERS BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 17, 1917.

HON. ROBERT P. DUNCAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Supplemental to my opinion rendered you on August 7, 1917, I desire to say that it has come to my attention, since rendering said opinion, that the Watson Engineering Co., a corporation with its principal place of business at Cleveland, Ohio, was employed by the county commissioners to make plans and specifications for two of the bridges in question.

In reference to this matter I might call attention to State ex rel. v. Sayre, 15 C. C. (n. s) 267.

The decision in this case was affirmed by the supreme court without report, 86 O. S. 362.

I desire to say that my opinion did not go to the question as to whether a corporation could be employed under the provisions of section 2411 G. C. Neither was this question asked. My opinion was limited simply to the proposition of the constitutionality of section 2411 G. C., that if an engineer was properly employed under the provisions of said section, his plans and specifications could be used as a basis for proceedings under section 2343 et seq.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR FUND—WHERE IMPROVEMENT CHANGES WIDTH OF ROAD—COST CANNOT BE TAKEN FROM SAID FUND.

Where an improvement changes the width of the improved part of a highway from ten feet to fourteen feet, that part of the cost of such improvement to be borne by the state cannot be taken from the "Maintenance and Repair" fund of the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 17, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of recent date in which you enclosed among other final resolutions having to do with the construction of certain highways one in reference to the improvement of intercounty highway No. 330, Sec. "C," Trumbull county. I approved all of the final resolutions with the exception of this one, which I reserved for further consideration. The resolution is too lengthy to quote in full, but the material parts of the resolutions are these:

The resolution has to do with the construction of I. C. H. No. 330, in length about 3.38 miles. The improvement of the same is estimated to cost $33,800; of this amount the county agreed to pay the sum of $8,800, leaving $25,000.00 for the state to pay; the state highway commissioner has appropriated or set aside out of the maintenance and repair fund of the state the full amount to be borne by the state, namely: $25,000.00.

In addition to these facts, as shown by the final resolution itself, I have been informed by your department that the road about to be improved was originally constructed of macadam to the width of ten feet; that under the plans and specifications for the proposed improvement the road is to be built of macadam to the width of fourteen feet; that in the maintenance and repair of state highways the department must keep in repair about sixteen feet of the highway, including both improved and unimproved parts of the highway, that is, if the improved part of the highway is ten feet, six feet of the unimproved highway would have to be maintained and kept in repair for public travel; but if the improved portion of the highway is fourteen feet in width, then only two feet of the unimproved part of the highway would need to be kept in repair for public travel.

The question now is as to whether the said final resolution, in view of the facts contained within itself, and in view of the facts that have come to my knowledge through your department, is legal and therefore proper to be approved by me.

In answer to this question I desire to note the provisions of a number of sections of the statutes.

Section 1213 General Code provides that whenever there are one or more improvements to be made in a county, and the cost and expense thereof does not exceed twice the amount apportioned by the state to a county, then the state shall pay fifty per cent. of such cost and expense.

Section 1214 General Code provides in part as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the county shall pay twenty-five per cent. of all cost and expense of the improvement. Fifteen per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement, except the cost and expense of bridges and culverts, shall be apportioned to the township or townships in which such road is located. * * * Ten per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement, excepting therefrom the cost and expense of bridges and culverts, shall be a charge upon the property abutting on the improvement. * * *"

From these two sections it is quite evident that ordinarily the state is not authorized to pay more than one-half the cost and expense of the improvement of an intercounty highway. In the final resolution under consideration the state will assume $25,000.00, or about three-fourths of the cost and expense of the said improvement. The question is, has the state any authority to assume as large a portion of the cost and expense of the proposed improvement as this.

As shown above, it originally cannot. As stated above, the share of the cost and expense to be borne by the state is sought to be taken from the "maintenance and repair" fund of the state. The question immediately arises as to whether this can be done. The theory upon which this amount is sought to be taken from the maintenance and repair fund of the state is that the proposed improvement is a "repairing" of a highway which has already been constructed. Let us note the provisions of the statute in reference to the matter of maintenance and repair. The third division of section 1221 General Code provides as follows:

> "The funds derived from the registration of automobiles shall be used for the maintenance and repair of the intercounty highways and main market roads of the state. The state highway commissioner may use part of said funds as may be necessary in establishing a system of patrol or gang maintenance on the intercounty highways and main market roads, and for that purpose may employ such patrolmen, laborers and other persons and teams and purchase or lease such oilers, trucks, machinery, tools, material and other equipment and supplies as may be necessary."

It is from this fund, namely the automobile license fund, which is set apart for the maintenance and repair of highways, that the money for this improvement is to be taken. The law becoming effective on June 28, 1917, materially broadened the meaning of the term "maintenance and repair," especially in this respect; that is different material may be used in the repair of the road than that which was originally used. For instance, if macadam has been used in the first place, brick may be used in the repair of the same road; but other than this there does not seem to have been any particular change made in reference to the matter of maintenance and repair of the road from that which existed prior to the taking effect of the new law. Hence, practically the same construction that was placed on the law prior to its amendment would be placed upon the law as it exists today insofar as the right to use the money which is placed to the credit of the maintenance and repair fund is concerned. I might suggest that the broader meaning placed upon maintenance and repair is set forth in section 1224 General Code.

Taking into consideration the provisions of section 1221 and the provisions of section 1224 General Code, can the automobile license fund be used for such an improvement as the one under contemplation? I do not think that it can.

In "maintaining" anything we simply keep it up to the standard at which it was at any given time; in "repairing" we simply perform work upon it to bring it up to the standard at which it was in the beginning. In neither instance do we materially or radically change the thing from the condition in which it was in the beginning. If the thing is radically changed we do not call it maintenance or repair.

In the improvement under contemplation the width of the highway is to be increased from ten feet to fourteen feet, thus making a practically new and different improvement from that which was originally made.

It does not seem to me that such a change could be brought under the term "maintenance and repair," and thus be paid for out of the fund which is particularly set aside for maintaining and repairing improved highways of the state.

My predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in Vol. I, of the Report of the Attorney-General for the year 1915, at page 990, called attention to this fact in an opinion rendered by him. On page 991, Mr. Turner uses the following language:

> "* * * Some substantial part of the original improvement must remain, and in order to constitute a repair the proposed operation must contemplate the use of that part of the old improvement still remaining and must further contemplate a completed work that will be substantially like the original. It will not, however, rob a contemplated operation of its character as a repair merely because it is proposed to so conduct the operation that the highway when repaired will possess certain improvements as compared with the original work. In the specific instance referred to by you, it is my opinion that the fact that some slight alterations are to be made in the grade of some parts of the road, that the margins are to be straightened up and that the roadway is to be widened in places will not change the character of the proposed operation as a repair. The present cuts and fills will be utilized, substantially the present grade will be folowed and the old macadam not worn away will be used as a base. * * *"

It is my opinion that the rule laid down by Mr. Turner in the above opinion should not be extended at all beyond the language used therein and the facts to which it was applied.

I rendered an opinion on March 11, 1917, to Hon. James P. Wood, Jr., prosecuting attorney, Athens, Ohio, in which I discussed at considerable length the meaning which should be attached especially to the word "repair," and I am enclosing a copy of this opinion for your consideration.

Therefore, it is my opinion that said resolution should not be approved, and this for the reason that the improvement under contemplation could not be held to be a mere maintenance and repair of a highway already constructed, but is really and practically a new construction.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY ROADS AND TOWNSHIP ROADS—DEFINED.

The question as to whether a certain road is a county road or a township road under the present law depends upon the fact as to whether it comes under one or the other of the classes as enumerated in subdivision (b) of section 7464 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 17, 1917.

HON. HECTOR S. YOUNG, Prosecuting Attorney, Marion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 19, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to certain matters therein set out. Your letter reads as follows:

"On June 4, 1917, the commissioners of Marion county, Ohio, acting upon a petition signed by one petitioner, who was the owner of all the land on both sides of the road in question, passed a resolution taking over an improved township road. The township trustees made no request for the change, and were not notified before action was taken by the board of county commissioners.

I wish to submit to your office for an opinion thereon, the question as to whether, under the above facts the road becomes a county road, or whether it remains a township road, under the control of the township trustees."

In answering your question I should like to call attention to the fact that the roads of the state have been divided into classes upon a different basis under the present scheme of highway laws than they were previous to the time the present scheme or plan was adopted. Section 7464 G. C. sets forth the classification of the roads of the state and the basis upon which this classification is made. In order to make the answer to your question clear it will be necessary, therefore, for us to note the provisions of this section, which reads as follows:

"The public highways of the state shall be divided into three classes, namely, state roads, county roads and township roads.

(a) State roads shall include such part or parts of the intercounty highways and main market roads as have been or may hereafter be constructed by the state, or which have been or may hereafter be taken over by the state as provided in this act and such roads shall be maintained by the state highway department.

(b) County roads shall include all roads which have been or may be improved by the county by placing brick, stone, gravel, or other road building material thereon, or heretofore built by the state and not a part of the intercounty or main market system of roads, together with such roads as have been or may be constructed by the township trustees to conform to the standards for county roads as fixed by the county commissioners, and all such roads shall be maintained by the county commissioners.

(c) Township roads shall include all public highways of the state other than state or county roads as hereinbefore defined, and the trustees of each township shall maintain all such roads within their respective townships; and provided further, that the county commissioners shall have full power and authority to assist the township trustees in maintaining all such roads, but nothing herein shall prevent the township trustees from improving any road within their respective townships, except as otherwise provided in this act."

From this section it will be noted that the state roads shall include (1) such parts of the intercounty highways and main market roads as have been or may hereafter be constructed by the state; and (2) such parts of the intercounty highways and main market roads that are taken over by the state as provided in this act.

It will thus be seen that there are no roads any longer coming under the designation of state roads other than certain parts of the intercounty highways and main market roads coming under the conditions of subdivision (a) of said section 7464.

Provision for taking over intercounty highways and main market roads by the state is made in section 7465 G. C. Before noticing the provisions of this section, however, let us first note the provisions of section 1203 G. C. This section provides that

"Nothing in this chapter shall be construed as prohibiting the county commissioners or township trustees from constructing, improving, maintaining or repairing any part of the intercounty highways within such county or township; provided, however, that the plans and specifications for the proposed improvement shall first be submitted to the state highway commissioner and shall receive his approval."

With this in mind let us turn now to the provisions of section 7465 G. C., which reads as follows:

"In all cases where a county or township has constructed or improved any main market or intercounty road, the state highway commissioner, upon request, shall, within sixty days indicate what changes or improvements will be required in said road in order to bring the same up to the approved standard of construction of such roads, or in any case where such road is about to be constructed, reconstructed or improved, the state highway commissioner shall, upon application, indicate within sixty days what changes will be required in the plans and specifications therefor, to bring said road up to the standard required by the state for the construction of intercounty highways and main market roads. Whenever the changes so specified by the state highway commissioner have been made, or when such roads have been constructed according to the plans and specifications so approved by the state highway commissioner, such roads shall at once become state roads."

It will be noticed that there are two classes of roads set out in this section: (1) Such main market or intercounty roads as have been constructed or improved by a county or township; and (2) such main market or inter-county roads which are about to be constructed or improved by a county or township.

Subdivision (b) of said section 7464 G. C. defines county roads, and sets out three different conditions under which roads may be classified as county roads: (1) They shall include all roads which have been or may be improved by the county by placing brick, stone, gravel or other road building material thereon; (2) they shall include all such roads as have been heretofore built by the state and not a part of the intercounty or main market system of roads; and (3) such roads as have been or may be constructed by the township trustees to conform to the standards for county roads as fixed by the county commissioners.

Subdivision (c) of said section defines township roads as follows:

"Township roads shall include all public highways of the state other than state or county roads as hereinbefore defined."

It will be noted also in said section that the state highway department must maintain all state roads; the county commissioners all county roads, and the township trustees all township roads. This unless other arrangements or agreements are made.

Let us now come directly to the answer to your question.

It must be found under subdivision (b) of said section 7464 G. C., which has to do with county roads. Let us again notice carefully the three classes of county roads. They are first: such roads which have been or may be improved by the county by placing brick, stone, gravel or other road building material thereon; or, second, such as have been built by the state and are not a part of the intercounty or main market system of roads; or, third, such as have been or may be constructed by the township trustees to conform to the standards for county roads as fixed by the county commissioners.

If the road about which you inquire is one which has been improved by the county by placing brick, stone, gravel or other road building material thereon, then it is, from that fact alone, a county road, and the county commissioners would be compelled to maintain the same. Further, if the said road about which you write is not a part of the intercounty or main market system of roads, and has been built by the state, then it is, from that fact alone, a county road, and the county commissioners would be compelled to maintain it. Thus, in short, the roads in the two classes named are county roads owing to the fact that they come within certain conditions as set out in said subsection (b) of said section.

This leaves for consideration the third class found in subdivision (b) of said section. The provision is made that "such roads as have been or may be constructed by the township trustees to conform to the standards for county roads as fixed by the county commissioners, shall be county roads and shall be maintained by the county commissioners."

The question immediately arises in connection with this class as to the matter of the standard to which the roads must be made to conform. Who is to determine as to whether the roads are up to a certain standard fixed by the county commissioners, and how is it to be determined?

In answer to this question let us turn to the provisions of section 7466 G. C., which reads as follows:

"The county commissioners upon application by the township trustees, shall specify in like manner what changes are required in any township road in order to bring the same up to the standard of construction maintained for county roads, or in case of the construction of any new improvement, the county commissioners shall indicate what changes in the plans and specifications will be required in order to bring said road up to the standard of construction required for county highways, and when a township highway is so improved, or constructed, in accordance with the standard so fixed by the county commissioners, such road shall be a county road."

The provision here is that "the county commissioners, upon application by the township trustees, shall specify in like manner, etc." That is, in the manner provided in section 7465 G. C. for transferring roads classified as county roads to roads classified as state roads. There are two classes of roads mentioned in section 7465 G. C., as stated above; (1) those main market or intercounty roads which have been constructed or improved by a county or township; and (2) those roads which are about to be constructed or improved by a county or township.

In reference to the first class provision is made that the state highway commissioner, upon the request of the county or township, shall within sixty days indicate what changes or improvements will be required in said roads in order to bring them up to the approved standard of construction of state roads, and provision is made in reference to the second class that the state highway commissioner shall, upon application, indicate within sixty days what changes will be required in the plans and specifications therefor to bring said road up to the standard required by the state for the construction of intercounty highways and main market roads. Then the provision is made in said section that.

"whenever the changes so specified by the state highway commissioner have been made, or when such roads have been constructed according to the plans and specifications so approved by the state highway commissioner, such roads shall at once become state roads."

Remembering now that section 7466 G. C. provides that the county commissioners shall act in like manner to the provisions made in section 7465 G. C., let us apply the provisions of section 7465 G. C. to the question of township roads. In doing so, we have the following propositions:

(1) If the township trustees have already improved the township roads to a certain standard, they may request the county commissioners to indicate what changes or improvements will be required in said road in order to bring the same up to the approved standard of construction of county roads, and the county commissioners within sixty days must grant the request;

(2) If the township trustees are about to construct or improve a township road, they may make application to the county commissioners asking them to indicate what changes will be required in the plans and specifications therefor to bring said road up to the standard required by the county commissioners for the construction of county roads, and the county commissioners shall grant the request within sixty days.

Let us recapitulate: The first two classes of roads under subdivision (b) viz.: all roads which have been or may be improved by the county by placing brick, stone, gravel or other road building material thereon, or have been heretofore built by the state and not a part of the intercounty or main market system of roads, are county roads from the fact that they come within the conditions therein specified, and from that fact alone. But the third class under subdivision (b) viz.: such roads as have been or may be constructed by the township trustees to conform to the standards for county roads as fixed by the county commissioners, depends upon the question as to whether they come up to the standard fixed by the county commissioners. Whether the roads are already improved by the township trustees, or are to be improved, the township trustees may make application to the county commissioners asking them to indicate what changes must be made in the roads or in the plans and specifications of the proposed improvement to bring them up to the standard approved by the county commissioners. Then whenever the changes so specified by the county commissioners have been made, or when such roads have been constructed according to the plans and specifications so approved by the county commissioners, such roads shall at once become county roads.

From all the above I think the answer to your question is fairly evident. If the road about which you write comes either within the first or second class of subdivision (b) of section 7464 G. C., then, in that event the said road is from that fact alone a county road, and the county commissioners would be compelled to maintain the same, and the road would be under their jurisdiction. Further, if the road about which you write had been a township road under the provisions of section 7464 G. C., but was afterwards improved by the township trustees, they might make application to the county commissioners requesting them to indicate what changes or improvements would be required in said road in order to bring the same up to the approved standard of construction of such roads, and if the suggested changes or improvements were made then the road would become a county road. Or if the township trustees were about to improve said road, the township trustees would submit their plans and specifications to the county commissioners, and if said road were constructed according to the suggestions of the county commissioners, then the same would become a county road.

From all the above it is quite evident that the filing of the petition by the property owner has no place whatever in the law, and the question whether the road about which you write is a county road depends altogether upon the question as to whether it can be brought within one of the classes enumerated in subdivision (b) of said section 7464 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT—CONTINGENCIES CAUSING EXTRA WORK—MUST FOLLOW SECTION 1210 IN LETTING CONTRACT—HOW COST PAID.

Where unforeseen contingencies arise in the matter of completing a road improvement, the provisions of section 1210 G. C. must be followed in letting a contract for extra work rendered necessary by such contingency. The cost of said extras shall be considered as a part of the total cost and expense of the improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 17, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of June 18, 1917, in which you ask my opinion as follows:

> "I respectfully direct your attention to the following letter from Division Engineer Waid of this department:
> A contract was awarded to McElfresh, Danford and Glover on May 19, 1916, for the construction of section L of the Marietta-McConnelsville road, I. C. H. 393 in Washington county, with bituminous macadam.
> The contractors performed the grading work, built the drainage structures and placed a few hundred feet of the foundation course last year.
> During the winter and past spring three extensive slips have developed on the road.
> (1) From approximately station 8+50 to 9+50 the hillside for a considerable height is slipping into the roadbed.
> (2) From approximately station 12+50 to 13+5 the roadbed is slipping into the Muskingum river.
> (3) From approximately station 22 to 26+30 the roadbed is likewise slipping into the river.
> I have had test holes sunk at various places to locate the slipping strata and believe the slips can all be stopped by proper drainage and the driving of piling. By taking action at once we could repair the slips so as not to delay or hinder the contractor. I do not think we should construct our road over these slips until they are properly drained.
> As it will require an expenditure of at least $2,000.00 to take care of these slips, I have consulted the county commissioners as to their willingness to bear half the expense of this extra work. They are not inclined to make any provision for the extra funds. They take the position that it is either a matter to be remedied by the contractor or to be maintained by the state.
> What funds, if any, are we at liberty to use in taking care of this situation, and what course do you wish to pursue?"
> This is not a main market road and may properly be said to have been an unimproved road at the time the contract was let.
> I therefore respectfully request that you advise me what course I may pursue in taking care of the above situation."

From your communication I take it certain unforeseen contingencies have arisen in the matter of a certain improvement for which a contract was duly entered into by and between your department and McElfresh, Danford & Glover, on May 19, 1916.

The provisions of the statute applicable to such a situation are found in section 1210 G. C. This section reads in part as follows:

> "Sec. 1210. The foregoing provision relating to advertising for bids shall apply to the letting of a contract for extra work, resulting from unforeseen contingencies, not included in the original contract, provided the estimate of the cost and expense of such work amount to one thousand dollars or more. If the estimate is less than one thousand dollars, and more than two hundred dollars, fifteen days' notice of the letting of the work shall be given by posting it on a bulletin board, or writing it on a blackboard in a conspicuous place in the office of the county highway superintendent and the county commissioners of the county where the proposed work is located, stating the nature of the work, and when and where proposals in writing will be received. Plans and specifications for such extra work shall be kept on file at the office of the county highway superintendent during the fifteen days for which the same is being advertised and be open to public inspection. If the estimated cost and expense of the extra work does not exceed two hundred dollars, it may be let by the state highway commissioner at private contract without publication or notice thereof. * * *"

From the provisions of this section as quoted, it is evident that you will be compelled, in the matter of taking care of the extras suggested by you in your communication, to make plans, profiles, specifications and estimates of the extra work to be done. Then you will proceed to advertise for bids and let the contract under the provisions of sections 1206 and 1207 G. C.

As this matter of extras is directly connected with the improvement as originally contemplated and relates to the contract as originally let, it will not be necessary for you to submit the plans, profiles, specification and estimates to the county commissioners for their approval. This matter of extras must always be taken into consideration when the original contract is let and when the steps leading up to the same are taken. It must always be contemplated, in entering into a contract or taking steps leading up to it, that extras may have to be provided for before the improvement is fully completed, and as the provisions of section 1210 G. C. apply merely to the matter of advertising, it will not be necessary, as suggested, for you to submit the plans, etc., to the county commissioners. But the making of plans, etc., the advertising for bids and the letting of contracts for extras must, when the cost exceeds $1,000.00, be done in accordance with the provisions of sections 1206 and 1207 G. C. There is just one exception to this general rule and that is found in the latter part of section 1210 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "* * * If the state highway commissioner decides and the county commissioners by resolution adopted by majority vote and entered upon their journal, declare that an emergency exists which in their judgment will not permit of the delay necessary to advertise said extra work either by posting or newspaper publication, and the chief highway engineer shall in writing declare that an emergency exists, such a declaration shall be entered on the journal of the department, and such contract for extra work may then be let without any advertising whatever, but such contract so let shall be absolutely void unless the provision hereof shall be strictly followed."

However, from the statements set forth in your communication, no such emergency exists in the matter you have in hand, which would warrant you in proceeding to let a contract for the same without complying with the provisions of sections 1206 and 1207 G. C.

The further question you suggest is as to who will bear the cost and expense of providing for the extras and from what funds the money will be taken to pay for the same. It must be kept in mind that these extras are referable to the original contract. They grow out of it. They are necessary before the improvement can be completed. Hence, the same rule will apply in the payment of extras as will apply to the improvement as originally contemplated and for which a contract was duly let.

Section 1211 G. C. provides as follows:

"Upon completion of the improvement, the chief highway engineer shall immediately ascertain the cost and expense thereof, and apportion the same to the state, county, township or townships and abutting property. He shall certify the total cost and expense of the improvement, and his apportionment thereof to the county commissioners, and the trustees of the township or townships interested therein."

Therefore, the same rule will apply to the matter of the cost and expense of the extras as does to the cost and expense of the improvement as originally contemplated, and the chief highway engineer will take into consideration the matter of the cost and expense of the extras, as well as the cost and expense of the improvement as originally contemplated and contracted for; that is, he will certify the total cost and expense of the improvement, which will include the cost and expense of the extras, and his apportionment thereof to the county commissioners and the trustees of the township or townships interested therein; and the state, county, township and abutting property owners will pay for the extras in the same proportion and from the same funds from which they will or might pay the amount for which the improvement was originally contracted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO NATIONAL GUARD—STATE NOT LIABLE FOR RENTALS ON LEASES FOR ARMORIES—GUARD IN FEDERAL SERVICE.

Under order No. 155, issued by the war department, the Ohio National Guard has been mustered out of the military service of the state and into the military service of the United States, and from and after said date of mustering out the state is no longer liable for rentals on leases for armories for the Ohio National Guard, for the reason that said leases provide that when the Ohio National Guard is mustered out the terms and conditions of the lease shall then and there terminate and be void.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 17, 1917.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me a number of leases for armories for the use of the Ohio National Guard, and ask my opinion in reference thereto, as to whether the state of Ohio is liable for rental upon said leases until the expiration of the time for which they were given.

While there are quite a number of leases, they are all in the main uniform in terms, so that an answer to one will practically be an answer to all. The only condition of these leases which varies is the one as to time. They are drawn for a term of from two up to ten years.

In answering your communication I shall note but two conditions of the leases and these are found in all of them. The first condition is the one in reference to the length of time for which the leases are given.

In State v. Medbery et al., 7 O. S. 522, the court passed upon a proposition in which the board of public works had made contracts on behalf of the state, which contracts covered a period of five years. The court held in the syllabus as follows:

> "The board of public works made contracts on behalf of the state, stipulating to pay defendants in error and others yearly, for the period of five years, for materials and repairs of the canals of the state, an amount in the aggregate of $1,375,000. Held—
> "1. That, except in certain specified cases, no debt of any kind can be created on behalf of the state.
> "2. That no officers of the state can enter into any contract, except in cases specified in the constitution, whereby the general assembly will, two years after, be bound to make appropriations either for a particular object or a fixed amount—the power and the discretion, intact, to make appropriations in general devolving on each biennial general assembly, and for the period of two years.
> "3. The contracts of the board of public works, creating a present obligation to pay the defendants and others, for the period of five years, a certain amount, do not come within said constitutional exceptions, and are in contravention of the provisions of article 8, section 3, and article 2, section 2.

If the principles laid down in this case could be applied to the provisions of the leases under consideration, there would be no question that the state of Ohio would not be liable under the terms of the leases, for the reason that the leases are void in all those cases in which the time is longer than two years;

but in this connection we are called upon to note the finding of the court in another case, namely, State ex rel., Ross et al., v. Donahey, Auditor of State, 93 O. S. 414. The court in this case was also passing upon a lease which was conditioned for a longer period than two years, and held the lease to be a valid and binding obligation against the state of Ohio, inasmuch as the same was not a debt or liability within the inhibition of the provisions of the constitution, and distinguished the Medbury case, above quoted. The court held in the syllabus as follows:

> "Where the general assembly of Ohio has authorized some department or sub-department of the state government, such as the industrial commission of Ohio, to secure suitable quarters necessary for the transaction of its business pursuant to law, and a contract is regularly executed and signed by the proper parties, which contract by its terms is made subject to an appropriation by the state legislature, and such legislature makes the necessary appropriation pursuant to said contract; Held: Mandamus is the proper remedy to compel the auditor to issue a warrant for any amount due from the state pursuant to such contract.
> The necessary and current expense growing out of the rental of suitable and necessary quarters for the transaction of the state's business, for which appropriation has been made by the state legislature, is not a debt or liability within the inhibition of the provisions of the constitution."

The court based its opinion mainly upon two propositions. The first one was that the law provided, in reference to the industrial commission of Ohio, as follows:

> "The commission shall keep and maintain its office in the city of Columbus, Ohio, and shall provide suitable room or rooms, necessary office furniture, supplies, books, periodicals, maps and appliances as they dem necessary, the expense thereof to be audited and paid in the same manner as other state expenses."

The contract itself provided as follows:

> "This lease is made subject to the appropriation by the state legislature and the individual members of the industrial commission are relieved from all liability for the payment of rent, if such appropriation is not made."

Based upon these two propositions, one statutory and the other contractual, the court held that this lease, even though it was for a period of five years, was a binding obligation on the part of the state of Ohio.

When we apply the principles laid down in this latter case to the facts as we find them before us in the matter of these leases, we are of the opinion that the leases are not void under the principles laid down in the Medbury case.

Section 5255 G. C., which was in force at the time these leases were drawn, provides as follows:

> "The board shall provide armories for the purpose of drill and for the safe keeping of arms, clothing, equipments, and other military property issued to the several organizations of organized militia, and may purchase or build suitable buildings for armory purposes when, in its judgment, it is for the best interest of the state so to do. The board shall provide for the management, care, and maintenance of armories and may adopt and prescribe such rules and regulations for the management, government and guidance of the organizations occupying them as may be necessary and desirable."

Further, the contract of lease provides as follows:

"PROVIDED, HOWEVER, That nothing herein shall bind the STATE OF OHIO nor the members of the state armory board for any amount of money in excess of that portion of the amount appropriated by law for rent of armories, applicable to the rent of this particular property, under the laws and military regulations in force at the time of such appropriation."

These two provisions, one statutory and the other contractual, are very similar to the provisions considered by the court in the latter case above quoted; hence I feel these leases are valid and binding obligations against the state of Ohio and that mandamus would lie against the proper officer to compel the payment of the same, provided the general assembly would make an appropriation.

There is one other provision of these leases to which I desire to call attention. It reads as follows:

"It is understood and agreed that in the event of the muster-out or disbanding of the military organization occupying the premises herein described, under the terms and conditions of this lease, this lease and agreement shall then and there terminate and be void."

The question then arises as to whether under the present condition of affairs in this country the Ohio National Guard has not been mustered out and disbanded, owing to the fact that they have been mustered into the federal army, and whether the same will not be a part of the federal army, until it is discharged from the federal army and again mustered into the National Guard of the state of Ohio. It is my opinion that such is the case.

Under order No. 155, issued from the "War Department, The Adjutant General's Office, Washington, July 28, 1917," to "The Commanding General, Central Dept., Chicago, Ill.," we find the following provisions:

"All enlisted men of the National Guard drafted into the military service of the United States will be furnished with certificates of discharge. Form No. 525-1 A. G. O. will be used except for men that are not entitled to an honorable discharge under provisions of paragraph 150, Army Regulations, 1913.

The draft of the president completely separates from the National Guard all persons included in the draft and the provisions of paragraph 61, circular No. 21, Militia Bureau, 1916, and all other provisions of existing orders and regulations calling for the rendition of reports and returns by National Guard commanders to the adjutant generals of their respective states become inoperative from, and on the date of the draft, except as required by paragraph 5 above."

The above order was signed by the adjutant general, P. C. Harris, and was issued "by order of the secretary of war."

It will be noticed in said order that all enlisted men of the National Guard who were drafted into the military service of the United States will be furnished with certificates of discharge—that is, they are no longer connected with the Ohio National Guard.

Further, provision is made that the draft of the president completely separates from the National Guard all persons included in the draft, and that reports and returns by National Guard commanders to the adjutant general of the state become inoperative from and on the date of the draft.

From this order it is my opinion that the Ohio National Guard has been mustered out, that the military organization heretofore existing has been disbanded, and that the said guard has been mustered into the military service of the United States.

I desire also to quote section 111 of an act of congress for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense and for other purposes, as follows:

> "Sec. 111. NATIONAL GUARD WHEN DRAFTED INTO FEDERAL SERVICE—When congress shall have authorized the use of the armed land forces of the United States, for any purpose requiring the use of troops in excess of those of the regular army, the president may, under such regulations, including such physical examination, as he may prescribe, draft into the military service of the United States, to serve therein for the period of the war unless sooner discharged, any or all members of the National Guard and of the National Guard Reserve. All persons so drafted shall, from the date of their draft, stand discharged from the militia, and shall from said date be subject to such laws and regulations for the government of the army of the United States as may be applicable to members of the volunteer army, and shall be embodied in organizations corresponding as far as practicable to those of the regular army or shall be otherwise assigned as the president may direct. The commissioned officers of said organizations shall be appointed from among the members thereof, officers with rank not above that of colonel to be appointed by the president alone, and all other officers to be appointed by the president by and with the advice and consent of the senate. Officers and enlisted men in the service of the United States under the terms of this section shall have the same pay and allowances as officers and enlisted men of the regular army of the same grades and the same prior service."

From the provisions of this section and the order hereinbefore quoted, it is my view that the provision of the contract applies to the conditions now existing.

Answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the state of Ohio is not liable for rentals under leases for armories for the Ohio National Guard, from and after the day that said guard was mustered out of the military service of the state and into the military service of the United States.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE DRIVER'S MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 20, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am returning herewith to you with my approval articles of incorporation of The Driver's Mutual Insurance Company.

I find that these articles have been corrected in accordance with recommendations made on a previous reference of the articles for my approval, and as corrected I find the same to be in conformity to the provisions of the act of March 21, 1917, amending section 9607-2 and other sections relating to insurance companies other than life and other than mutual protective associations. I further find that said articles are not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of the state of Ohio, nor with the constitution and laws of the United States, and the same are therefore approved.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—UNDER WHAT CONDITIONS THE COURT MAY GRANT HIM ADDITIONAL ALLOWANCE FOR DEPUTIES AND ASSISTANTS.

A common pleas court of any county has authority, under amended section 2787 General Code to grant an additional allowance to the county surveyor to that which was allowed him for deputies and assistants by the county commissioners at the beginning of the present year; but the amount, if any, allowed by the court must not be used to pay the compensation of assistants earned before the additional allowance was secured.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 20, 1917.

HON. J. H. FULTZ, Prosecuting Attorney, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 30, 1917, in which you ask my opinion in reference to a certain matter therein set out. Your communication reads as follows:

> "On July 18th I asked for an opinion as to whether or not the court of common pleas would have authority, or the prosecuting attorney would be justified, in making application for an allowance to the county surveyor under section 2787 General Code upon the following facts:
> On June 1, 1916, the county commissioners, under section 2787, fixed the amount of money to be paid by the county surveyor for clerk, draughtsman and office help for the year beginning September 1, 1916, and ending September 1, 1917, said money to be paid out and expended under the provisions of sections 2787 and 2788 General Code. The surveyor wishes an additional allowance for the present year. Does the amended section 2878 authorize the allowance?

You declined to give an opinion, thinking the matter was pending in court. The matter is not in court and will not be asked until we have your opinion."

In answering your question let us first notice the provisions of sections 2787 and 2788 G. C., as they stood prior to June 28, 1917.

Section 2787 G. C. read as follows:

"On or before the first Monday of June of each year, the county surveyor shall file with the commissioners of such county a statement of the number of all necessary assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes in his office for the year beginning September 1st next succeeding and their aggregate compensation. The county commissioners shall examine such statement and, after making such alterations therein as are just and reasonable, fix an aggregate compensation to be expended therefor for such year."

Section 2788 G. C. read as follows:

"The county surveyor shall appoint such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office and fix their compensation, but compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed therefor by the county commissioners. After being so fixed, such compensation shall be paid to such persons in monthly installments from the general fund of the county upon the warrant of the county auditor."

By taking the provisions of these two sections I find the scheme or plan to guide the county commissioners and the county surveyor in reference to the matter of assistants and deputies to the county surveyor and their compensation. This plan or scheme involves several steps. (1) On or before the first Monday in June of each year the county surveyor must file with the county commissioners of such county a statement of the number of all necessary assistants, etc., for the year beginning September 1st next succeeding, and their aggregate compensation. (2) The county commissioners shall examine such statement and after making such alterations therein as are just and reasonable, fix the aggregate compensation to be expended therefor for such year. (3) The county surveyor shall appoint such assistants, deputies, etc., as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office. (4) He shall fix their compensation, but the compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed therefor by the county commissioners.

The following matter was added to section 2787 as it originally stood:

"Provided, however, that if at any time, any county surveyor requires an additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, such county surveyor may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas of the county wherein such county surveyor was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application, and if upon hearing the same said judge shall find that such necessity exists he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salaries of such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or other employes as may be required."

The question now is as to whether the county surveyor has a right to avail himself for this present year of the remedy provided in the amendment to section 2787 General Code.

This addition to section 2787 provides an additional remedy to the county surveyor in that he is not compelled absolutely to rely upon the amount allowed him by the county commissioners, but may apply to the court of common pleas for an additional allowance. This being merely an additional remedy, there is no reason, in my opinion, why the county surveyor cannot take advantage of this remedy during this present year just as well as he can in any succeeding year. Therefore, I advise you specifically that a county surveyor may ask the court for an allowance in addition to that which was allowed by the county commissioners of your county. However, the amount allowed by the court of common pleas cannot be used for the purpose of paying the compensation of assistants before the order was secured, but must be limited to the payment of compensation of assistants after the additional allowance is secured.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HIGHWAY ADVISORY BOARD—APPROVAL OR DISAPPROVAL OF ACTS OF HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER SHOULD BE ENTERED ON JOURNAL —APPROVAL ALSO SHOULD BE WRITTEN ON INSTRUMENT APPROVED.

1. The action of the highway advisory board in approving or disapproving of an act of the state highway commissioner must be entered on the journal of the board, as the statute makes the board speak through its journal. The form which the action of the board takes is not vital.

2. If the highway advisory board approves a contract or agreement entered into by the state highway commissioner, its action must be placed not only in its journal, but the approval of the board must be endorsed upon the instrument as well.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 20, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of August 9, 1917, which reads as follows:

"I have been directed by the advisory board to request that you prepare and furnish us with the form of approval which is required by the statute that the advisory board sign."

The section of the General Code which embodies the provisions about which you make inquiry is section 1231-9 G. C. (107 O. L. 138.) This section reads as follows:

"No act of the state highway commissioner designating additional intercounty highways or main market roads or changing existing inter> county highways or main market roads; granting any application for aid from any appropriation by the state for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of intercounty highways or main market roads or any other fund created by the state for highway purposes; aid from any appropriation by the state for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of any intercounty highway or main market road; purchasing any material, machinery, tools or equipment for road improvement; entering into an agreement with the federal government relative to the securing of federal aid for road construction; or designating an engineer other than the county surveyor to have charge of the roads and bridges within any county under the control of the state, shall be valid or have any force and effect until such act has been approved by the highway advisory board, by resolution duly passed by majority vote and entered upon its journal. In the case of contracts or agreements requiring the approval of the highway advisory board such approval shall also be endorsed in writing thereon and signed by the members of the board or a majority thereof."

In answering your question it would be well to call attention especially to two or three provisions found in said section, one of which is as follows:

> "No act of the state highway commissioner (in relation to a number of matters set out therein) shall be valid or have any force and effect until such act has been approved by the highway advisory board by resolution duly passed by majority vote and entered upon its journal."

From this provision it is seen that the highway advisory board speaks from its journal, and from its journal only. The form of the motion or resolution that the board uses to indicate its approval or disapproval of any act of the state highway commissioner is not vital, only so it plainly indicates the board's action in reference to the same. The action of the board would be taken the same as would the action of any other body. For example, the following would be sufficient: Resolved, by the highway advisory board that the action of the state highway commissioner in awarding the contract for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of (here describe the road to be approved). Then indicate on the journal of the board the vote of the members of the board. Or, Resolved that the act of the state highway commissioner in appointing (here name the person appointed) as engineer for, say Richland county, to have charge of the highways, bridges and culverts within said county, and under the control of the state, be approved. Then indicate on the journal the vote of the members of the board upon the resolution; but as said before the particular form which the action of the board takes is not vital, but it is vital that their journal shows the action taken, and this for the reason that under the provisions of the section the board speaks from its journal.

Another provision of said section which ought to be carefully noted is as follows:

> "In the case of contracts or agreements requiring the approval of the highway advisory board such approval shall also be endorsed in writing thereon and signed by the members of the board or a majority thereof."

This is a provision that must be followed in addition to the entering of a resolution of approval of the board upon its journal. That is, in case of contracts or agreements requiring the approval of the board, it must adopt a resolution of approval and place the same upon their journal as above set out, and also must endorse in writing their approval upon the contract or agreement. This endorsement may be very brief. For example: The within contract is approved by the highway advisory board. Date ..... Then the board or a majority thereof must sign the approval so endorsed thereon.

Of course, the question might arise as to the form which the board should follow in giving notice to the state highway commissioner of its action in reference to any matter upon which the board passes judgment. This part of the proceedings is not vital because, as said before, the board speaks through its journal. Hence it is the journal that controls, and no particular form need be followed in notifying the state highway commissioner. Any form of communication which will transmit the knowledge to the commissioner, whether oral or written, would suffice. The main thing is what the journal says. This must control in all matters.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONTRACT FORM CORRECTED AND APPROVED.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 21, 1917.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 26, 1917, in which you submit a form of contract for my approval. I have examined this form carefully, and I am of the opinion that the same is correct in form and legal, with two exceptions which I will note.

In the fourth division of said contract you provide that no part of the work shall be altered by the contractor from that prescribed in the specifications without the express sanction of the superintendent in writing.

Section 2321 General Code (107 O. L. 455) provides that:

> "after they are so approved and filed with the auditor of state, no change of the plans, details, bill of materials or specifications shall be made or allowed unless the same are approved by the state building commission."

It is my opinion that you should make your contract conform to this provision instead of the way in which you have it now written.

Further, it is my opinion that you should set out in the contract the particular appropriation made by the legislature out of which you intend to pay the obligation so entered into under and by virtue of this contract.

The law requires that you submit to me the executed contract together with the bond, for my approval. This you can do when the contract is executed.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

AUDITOR OF STATE—MUST MAKE CERTIFICATE PROVIDED FOR IN SECTION 2288-1 G. C.—BEFORE STATE OFFICER CAN ENTER INTO AGREEMENT FOR EXPENDITURE OF MONEY.

The certificate of the auditor of state, provided for in section 2288-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 457), must be made before the entering into of any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money or the passing of any resolution or order for the expenditure of money by any officer, board or commission of the state, whether the contract be important or not, and whether the amount of money expended is large or small.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 21, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 27, 1917, in which you ask my opinion as follows:

> "I am not certain as to the scope of the words (referring to section 2288-1 G. C.) 'contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or * * * resolution or order for the expenditure of money,' and respectfully request that you furnish me with a comprehensive opinion for my guidance.
> "I should be glad particularly to be advised as to whether or not the above section applies in the purchase of material and equipment as used on our maintenance and repair work and also whether same covers such purchases of office equipment as are not secured through the state purchasing agent.
> "Referring to your opinion No. 449 and your answer to our question No. 5, I respectfully ask that you advise me whether or not the above section is applicable on contracts awarded subsequent to July 1, 1917, and for which bids were received prior to that date. I have a number of such contracts which I am ready to award, but do not deem it proper to do so until I have complied with all legal requirements."

1. Your first question arises under and by virtue of the provisions of section 2288-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 457), said section reading as follows:

> "Sec. 2288-1. It shall be unlawful for any officer, board or commission of the state to enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the expenditure of money, unless the auditor of state shall first certify that there is a balance in the appropriation pursuant to which such obligation is required to be paid, not otherwise obligated to pay precedent obligations."

You request me to place a comprehensive construction upon this section. This is difficult to do, my not knowing the exact matters you have in mind, but I will give a general idea as to the scope of this section, as I view it, and if other matters should arise in reference to same, you may ask for further information.

There is one word found in this section to which we must give considerable attention in placing a construction upon the section, namely, "any." This is a comprehensive and all inclusive word, and when it is used in reference to a particular object or class or group of objects of any kind, it is difficult to limit or restrict in any way the class or group to which it applies. This section reads:

> "It shall be unlawful for any officer, board or commission of the state to enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money * * *."

It further provides that it shall be unlawful for any officer, board or commission of the state to pass any resolution or order for the expenditure of money, unless a certain condition first obtains, and that condition is that—

> "the auditor of state shall first certify that there is a balance in the appropriation pursuant to which such obligation is required to be paid, not otherwise obligated to pay precedent obligations."

There are two different parts to this provision; the one relates to the entering into of the contract, agreement or obligation, and the other is the passing of a resolution or order. There is no limitation or modification whatever found in the terms of this section. Whenever a contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money is entered into, whether the amount of money to be spent is large or small, and whether the contract or agreement is of little or great importance, are not material, but if the same involves the expenditure of money it cannot be entered into until the auditor of state certifies that there is a balance in the appropriation from which the obligation must be paid. It is the same with the resolution or order. If in any case there is not a formal contract, agreement or obligation entered into, in that event your department would have no authority to make an order for the payment of any work done or material furnished until said certificate is made and filed with your department.

I cannot see how the terms of this statute can be limited or circumscribed in any way, and if this construction is correct, the section would apply to the purchase of material and equipment used in the maintenance and repair work of your department, or to the resolution or order for the payment of an obligation due for labor performed or material furnished, and it is my opinion that the provisions of this section would cover the purchase of office equipment such as is not secured through the state purchasing agent.

2. As I understand it, the facts, upon which you request an opinion in the second branch of your communication, no longer exist, and for this reason I am not answering that part of your communication.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DITCH IMPROVEMENT—UPPER COUNTY NOT TAKING PART IN PROCEEDING—MUST BEAR PORTION OF COST—WHEN DRAINAGE SYSTEM OF SAID COUNTY IS IMPROVED THEREBY—WHAT COMMISSIONERS ENTITLED TO VOTE ON AMOUNT TO BE PAID BY THE VARIOUS COUNTIES.

Under the provisions of section 6540 G. C. an "upper county" not taking part in the proceedings to construct a ditch improvement or river improvement is required to bear a part of the cost thereof if the improvement so to be constructed may be an outlet for a ditch or stream of such upper county, or provide better drainage, or a more sufficient outlet for such ditch or stream, or if the construction of the improvement in question was rendered necessary in order to secure a sufficient outlet for an improvement to a ditch or stream of an upper county.

The meeting of the commissioners to endeavor to agree upon the amount so to be paid should be of all of the commissioners of the county or counties making the improvement, together with the commissioners of such upper county sought to be assessed, and in so far as the vote may be taken at such joint meeting each member would be entitled to a vote, but no agreement on the part of such upper county could take place until the majority of the commissioners of such county voted in favor of such agreement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 22, 1917.

HON. HECTOR S. YOUNG, Prosecuting Attorney, Marion, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of June 22, 1917, you addressed the following request to this office:

> "Proceedings have been started for the improvement of the Scioto river from the Marion and Hardin county line, through Marion county, and into Delaware county. All of the county commissioners of Marion county were interested in the improvement, and a special board was appointed under section 6538 G. C. The improvement has been started as a joint county improvement by Marion and Delaware counties. The area affected by the improvement is shown on the accompanying plat. Marion county wants the counties benefited to pay their portion of the cost.
> "I would like to submit to your office for an opinion thereon, the following questions:
> "1. Under section 6540 can Allen, Auglaize and Logan counties be made to bear a part of the expense of the improvement, and if so what county is entitled to contribution from them?
> "2. In the meeting for the apportionment of the amount to be paid by the different counties as provided in 6540 and 6541 G. C. what boards of commissioners should meet, that is, should there be a joint meeting of all the boards, or should the meeting be split up? What voting power have the commissioners at this meeting? If the joint board for the improvement meets with the board of county commissioners of another county, what voting power have the commissioners of the joint board?"

The statutes cited by you are part of a legislative scheme for the construction of drainage improvements extending into more than one county and constitute the chapter headed "Joint County Ditches." Prior to 1913 the provisions were for ditch improvements only as distinguished from river improvements, the two kinds of improvements not having been separated in the understanding of the lawyers and the people of the state generally until a distinction was made by what is known as the Harbine case in 1905 (74 O. S. 318). In 1913 the different sections of the chapter were amended so as to include these river improvements in the same manner that they are included in the single county ditch law. 103 O. L. 836.

The first section of the chapter conferring the general authority for the making of these joint improvements is section 6536, which is as follows:

> "Ditches, drains or water courses which provide drainage, or, when constructed, will provide drainage for lands in more than one county, may be located and constructed, enlarged, cleaned, or repaired or boxed or tiled as provided in this chapter and the laws prescribed for constructing, enlarging, cleaning or repairing single county ditches, drains or watercourses, or the channel of a river, creek or run, ditch, or part thereof which provides drainage, or when improved will provide better drainage for lands in more than one county, may be improved by straightening, widening, deepenin or changing the channel or part thereof, of it, or by removing from adjacent lands, timber, brush, trees, or other substance liable to obstruct it, as provided in this chapter and the laws prescribed for the improvement of the channel of a river, creek or run or part thereof as provided in the laws for single county ditches."

Here are found the two species of improvements above referred to and which are the same as those contained in the single county ditch law, namely, on the one hand the commissioners may cause to be located and constructed, straightened, widened, altered, deepened, boxed or tiled a ditch, drain or watercourse; on the other they may cause the channel of a river, creek or run, or part thereof, to be improved by straightening, widening, deepening or changing it or by removing from adjacent lands timber, brush, trees or other substance liable to obstruct it. This language is taken from section 6443 providing for single county ditches and is in substance the same as in the joint county ditch law. For the purpose of clearness as well as brevity we will shorten these expressions, when referring to these improvements generaly or in quoting from the different sections of the statutes, by speaking of one as a "ditch improvement" and the other as a "river improvement." It will be noted that by the very last words of section 6536, above quoted, these joint improvements are to be made "as provided in the laws for single county ditches."

One of the principal subjects of the laws both in regard to single and joint county ditches is the method of payment for such improvements and that is undoubtedly included in the above phrase. The improvement is to be made as provided in the laws for single county ditches. This makes all provisions of the laws upon the subject of single county ditches govern the joint improvements in so far as they are applicable and not in conflict with the express provisions in the chapter upon the latter subject, and it must have been the legislative intent by the use of these general words to include not only the construction of the improvement, but the apportionment of the cost and in general the means for paying for the same. The importance of this fact will become apparent in a consideration of the succeeding sections.

The different steps for the making of these joint improvements are provided in the sections immediately succeeding. Section 6537, so far as applicable to the questions here involved, is as follows:

> "When a ditch or improvement is proposed, which will require a location in more than one county, or it is sought to (make a river improvement), which improvement as proposed is in more than one county, application shall be made to the board of county commissioners of each of such counties. * * * Application for damages shall be made and appeals from the finding of the commissioners, in joint session (making a ditch improvement or river improvement), and from the assessment of damages or compensation, shall be taken to the probate court of the county in which the greatest length of such (ditch or river improvement) is located. * * *"

Section 6538 G. C. provides that when two or more of the commissioners of a county are personally interested in an improvement in which they are called upon to act, a suitable person shall be selected in the manner pointed out to take the place of each commissioner so interested.

Now it will be borne in mind that as to all proceedings not expressly provided in these sections recourse is had to the former chapter.

Section 6539 G. C. provides in part as follows:

"If a majority of the joint board of county commissioners in joint session find in favor of the proposed improvement or improvements provided for in section 6537, and are unable to agree as to the proportion of the costs of location and construction of the improvement or (river improvement), which shall be assessed against each of the counties, respectively, the commissioners of either county may petition the court of common pleas of the county in which the greatest length of (such ditch or river improvement) is located for the appointment of three disinterested freeholders, not residents of either of said counties, who * * * shall estimate and report to the court the amount which would be charged to the land respectively in each county interested in the improvement."

The section gives further proceedings in the case with reference to the division of the costs.

Here will be seen a method of dividing the cost between two or more counties, both or all of which have some part of the improvement within their boundaries and the commissioners of all of which are participating in the business of such construction. Attention is called to it because it is a different proceeding and a different method of dividing the cost from that provided for in forcing contribution from a county which has no part of the improvement within its bounds and which is not otherwise concerned in making it than by contributing to the payment on account of advantages gained by such county in the way of securing an outlet or otherwise.

The sections immediately succeeding not only provide for the latter described case, but control all cases where a county not containing any portion of the improvement and not participating in its construction has either an advantage or a burden imposed upon it by the improvement. In calling attention to these next sections it is necessary to note that there is some ambiguity as to whether they apply to single county ditches alone or as to what extent they apply to or govern joint county improvements.

Section 6540 G. C. is as follows:

"When the board of county commissioners cause to be constructed, enlarged, cleaned, or repaired, a ditch, drain or watercourse, or the channel or any part thereof of a river * * *, water from which flows into an adjoining county, or into or finds an outlet in a ditch, drain or watercourse constructed or being constructed in an adjoining county, or finds an outlet in a river, creek, or run being improved in an adjoining county, or cause to be constructed, enlarged, cleaned or repaired, a ditch, drain or watercourse, or cause to be improved the channel or any part thereof of a river, creek or run, by cleaning out, straightening, widening or deepening the same, which is, or may be, an outlet for a ditch, drain, or watercourse, or river, creek, or run, of lands of an upper county, or which by reason of the improvement thereof, will provide better drainage, or a more sufficient outlet for a ditch, drain, or watercourse, or a river, creek or run, for lands of an upper county, or finds it necessary to construct, enlarge, widen, deepen or clean a ditch, drain or watercourse, or to improve the channel or part thereof of a river, creek or run of a lower county in order to secure a sufficient outlet for a proposed ditch, drain or watercourse, or river, creek or run of an upper county the commissioners of said upper county shall pay the commissioners of such lower county such sum as is agreed upon by a majority of the joint board of the commissioners of all counties for the use and benefit of such outlet. The commissioners of such upper county shall apportion such sum to the lands in their county, for whose benefit said ditch or improvement was or is made or constructed."

This section may be separated into the following cases:

1. When the board causes to be constructed a ditch improvement or river improvement, water from which flows into an adjoining county.
2. When they construct such improvement which finds an outlet in a ditch, drain or watercourse constructed or being constructed in an adjoining county, or a stream being improved therein.
3. When they construct an improvement which is or may be an outlet for a ditch or stream of lands of an upper county, or will provide better drainage or a more sufficient outlet for such ditch or stream for lands of an upper county.
4. When they find it necessary to construct a ditch improvement or river improvement of a lower county in order to secure a sufficient outlet for an improvement to a ditch or stream of an upper county.

The first two of these cases are where a burden is placed upon the outside county which it is necessary to pay for. The last two are where a benefit is secured to an outside county on account of which it ought to contribute to the cost of the improvement.

The one significant word in this whole section is the word "all" in the expression "such sum as is agreed upon by a majority of the joint board of the commissioners of all counties." In the old statute this word was "both" so that the conclusion cannot be escaped that more than two counties may be included under the operation of this section. This carries us back to the last line of section 6536 where the proceedings are to be "as provided in the laws for single county ditches."

Section 6540, although found in the chapter on joint county ditches, by its express terms is a provision in reference to single county ditches. Being such, however, there is no reason why it is not adopted by the clause above named into the joint county ditch law. It is a construction which has to be threshed out by a consideration of all the statutes together, and yet it appears to be the only one which furnishes a rational solution of the legislative intent. There is no reason for confining the phrase "as provided in the laws for single county ditches" to the chapter upon that subject. Section 6540, although found in the chapter on joint county ditches, is just as much a "law for single county ditches" by its express terms as if it were found in the other chapter, and therefore it is adopted into the joint county ditch scheme of payment for improvements. It is not in such legislative scheme because found in the chapter upon that subject, but it is first cast out of that chapter by its express language and then taken back by the adoption above referred to. And this, as above stated, is an absolutely necessary construction by virtue of the change from "both" to "all," although it might be otherwise capable of this construction. This, however, renders it certain.

It therefore follows that in the payment by an outside county of part of the cost of construction of an improvement, which outside county is always in this case an upper county, the amount is to be agreed upon by a majority of the joint board of all the counties.

Some further difficulty as to this subject is found in the language of the next section, which also needs construction, to make it fit in with this notion. It is as follows:

> "Sec. 6541. Before work is begun in the construction, enlarging, cleaning, or repairing, of a ditch, drain or watercourse, or the improving of the channel or a part thereof, of a river, creek or run, in either of such counties, as provided in the next preceding section, the amount to be paid by the commissioners of the upper county to the commissioners of the lower county, for the use and benefit, or burden of such outlet, or better outlet, shall be agreed upon or be determined at a joint meeting of the commissioners of the upper and lower counties upon the line or proposed line of such ditch, drain, or watercourse, river, creek or run."

Read alone this section would seem to refer only to the commissioners of the two counties interested. However, construing it in connection with the preceding section the words "lower counties" in the expression "at a joint meeting of the commissioners of the upper and lower counties" would mean the counties participating in the improvement, who with the commissioners of such upper county would form the board to decide upon such amount.

Section 6542 G. C. has not been amended, but strictly speaking no amendment is necessary to make it fit in with the above interpretation. The refusal of either of said counties, as mentioned in that act, may still refer, as it originally did before "both" was changed to "all," to the two interested counties.

This is as far as it is necessary to quote or discuss the sections in order to determine the questions asked, which are both answered in the above discussion, except to add that no method of voting in such joint board is indicated and that therefore the only presumption can be that each member has a vote.

No agreement, however, can be reached unless a majority of the board of such "upper county" sought to be assessed vote in favor of it. This follows from the fact that the agreement was between the counties and is a necessary implication from section 6542, which provides that a refusal of a majority of the officials of any such county, or the failure to meet or to act upon ten days' notice shall be prima facie evidence of their failure to agree.

You are therefore advised that Allen, Auglaize and Logan counties may be made to bear a part of the expense of this improvement if the conditions exist as set out in section 6540 applicable to the situation which is the fourth case provided in said section as above divided; that is, if it is necessary to construct this improvement in order to secure a sufficient outlet for a proposed ditch improvement or river improvement in those counties, or under the third of said cases, if said improvement will provide better drainage or a more sufficient outlet for a ditch, drain or watercourse, or river, creek or run, for lands in such upper counties.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—RESOLUTIONS BY STATE ARMORY BOARD FOR AKRON ARMORY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 23, 1917.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—There have been submitted to me for approval four resolutions adopted by the state armory board on June 26, 1917, before said state armory board was abolished by senate bill No. 192 (107 O. L. 382). The said four resolutions pertain to the Akron armory now under construction by The Clemmer & Johnson Company, contractors.

The first resolution is as follows:

> "RESOLVED FURTHER: That the contractors, The Clemmer & Johnson Co., be allowed an extra of $1,360 for installing sidewalks and steps from building to sidewalks according to architect's plans and specifications. This extra is subject to approval of attorney-general."

If I am correctly informed, the question of installing sidewalks and steps from the said building to the sidewalk was not within the original contract of The Clemmer & Johnson Company, and it may well be doubted as to whether or not it could properly be considered as an extra in the construction of said building. However, I am of the opinion that payment for said work could be considered as within the appropriation made for the Akron armory, and if the bid of The Clemmer & Johnson Company has been obtained through competitive bidding, the said contract could be let to said Clemmer & Johnson Company. If, therefore, there are funds sufficient in the appropriation for such purpose the said contract could be so awarded.

The second resolution is as follows:

> "RESOLVED FURTHER: That the general contractors, The Clemmer & Johnson Co., be allowed an extra of $93.10 for providing 4-inch by 12-inch stone coping on area walls on north and south sides of building near east end, as per architect's details, price being approved by architect. This resolution is subject, however, to approval of attorney-general."

The work called for by this resolution seems to me clearly to be an extra on the building and could be properly allowed, provided the money is available.

The third resolution is as follows:

> "RESOLVED FURTHER: That the general contractors, The Clemmer & Johnson Co., be allowed an extra of $400 for painting ceiling of drill hall with one coat of white plaster finish paint as per architect's specifications and his recommendations as to price. This resolution is subject to approval of attorney-general."

This also seems to me clearly an extra and may be allowed provided there is sufficient money applicable to the payment thereof.

The fourth resolution is as follows:

> "RESOLVED FURTHER: Whereas, the architect has prepared plans and specifications for construction of asphaltic concrete driveway from street curb lines to entrance to said armory as shown on said plans, and attempted to secure other bids therefor than one from general contractor, but no such bids were received; it is therefore

"RESOLVED: That general contractors, The Clemmer & Johnson Co., be allowed an extra of $2,920, being its bid for furnishing materials and completing work described in preamble hereto, using Trinidad Lake Asphalt, provided that this award be first approved by the attorney-general."

It appears from the above that there was an attempt to get further bids and that, therefore, the bid of The Clemmer & Johnson Company may be considered as a competitive bid. While the work contemplated is not strictly an extra to the original contract, nevertheless, having been let under competition, I am of the opinion that said contract may be awarded, provided, of course, that there is sufficient money available for such purpose.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—ABSTRACT OF TITLE—GALLIA COUNTY—OHIO HOSPITAL FOR EPILEPTICS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 25, 1917.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You recently submitted to this department an abstract of title covering the following premises situate in the county of Gallia, in the state of Ohio, and in the township of Gallipolis, and bounded and described as follows:

"Situate in sections seventeen (17) and eighteen (18), township three (3), range fourteen (14), in the Ohio Company's Puchase, beginning at a point 57 links north of the southwest corner of eight acre lot number 1126 in section seventeen (17), said point is in the middle of the lane leading to the Keller residence; thence with said lane north 29 degrees east 4 chains and 45 links to a point in the middle of the lane leading to the Shepard residence; thence with said lane north 60 degrees west 7 chains and 98 links to a point on the north line of lot 1130, which point is 4 chains and 52 links west of the northeast corner of said lot; thence to the southwest corner of eight acre lot number 1119; thence north along the west line of eight acre lots 1119, 1114 and 1110 to the northwest corner of eight acre lot 1110; thence east along the north line of eight acre lots numbers 1110, 1109 and 1108 to a point 27 links west of the northeast corner of eight acre lot number 1108; thence south 27 links; thence east 5 chains and 16 links with the south line of the right of way belonging to Ella Hutsinpiller; thence south with the west line of the right of way of Ella Hutsinpiller 14 chains and 96 links to the north side of the right of way of The Gallipolis and Northern Traction Company; thence in a southwesterly direction with the north line of said right of way to the place of beginning, containing ninety-four and forty-three hundredths (94.43) acres, more or less, and being all of eight acre lots numbers 1108, 1109, 1110, 1112, 1113, 1114, 1118 and 1119, section 18, township 3, range 14, O. C. P., and 7 acres in eight acre lot 1117, 50-100 acres in eight acre lot 1116, 6.50 acres in eight acre lot 1092, and 5.75 acres in eight acre lot 1088, section 18, township 3, range 14, Ohio Company's Purchase, and 4.81 acres in eight acre lot 1126, 4 acres in eight acre lot 1123 and 59-100 acres in eight acre lot number 1130, section 17, township 3, range 14, Ohio Company's Purchase."

You also submitted a deed covering the above described premises, wherein Lewin G. Davis deeds the said property to the state of Ohio.

I have carefully examined said abstract dated July 21, 1917, and note several lapses and defects in the title. These defects, however, except the ones hereinafter specifically mentioned, are immaterial, as they are cured by lapse of time. The defects above mentioned are as follows:

At section 70 of the abstract, Richard Willis, by deed dated July 25, 1891, deeded to Stephen G. Keller eight acre lot No. 1130 in the Ohio Company's Purchase, said deed containing a restriction as follows:

"It is expressly understood that the grantor, Edward Willis, shall have the privilege to fence the grave of Stephen Stewart on said lot 1130, and the grave shall remain undisturbed by the grantee, his heirs and assigns until the remains shall be removed by the relations or friends of Stephen Stewart, but as long as unfenced, the fact of the grave there being, shall not prevent pasturing, or like surface use of grantee, his heirs and assigns."

The abstract does not show whether or not the grave is located on the part of the lot included in the deed submitted, nor whether or not the said lot No. 1130 is still subject to this restriction.

C. W. Gee executed the following mortgages on the foregoing real estate. (Sec. 18.)

Mortgagee.	Amount.	Due	Date.
J. L. Vance, trustee.....	$1,000.00	1 year	12-31-69
Emily F. Vance.....	1,000.00	2 years	11- 1-70
R. F. Stewart.....	750.00	1 year	11- 3-71
H. N. Bailey.....	1,000.00	1 year	9- 3-72
Mina Long	542.00	1 year	9-20-73
J. L. Vance, trustee.....	1,000.00	1 year	5-27-74

The abstract does not show that any of the foregoing mortgages have ever been satisfied.

You will note that these mortgages were given 43, 44, 45, 46, 47 and 48 years ago, respectively, and in all probability have been satisfied, or the statute of limitation has run against them. In any event it is highly improbable that the mortgages above mentioned are a lien on the premises at this time. However, there is a bare possibility that one or more of said mortgages may be a valid lien against said premises. Still it would be well, in my opinion, to make an investigation to ascertain if releases have been had of the foregoing mortgages, but have not been placed on record. No doubt some of the mortgagees are living and can give this information, or, if deceased, their heirs might be in position to furnish same.

The deed submitted covenants that the premises are free and clear of all incumbrances whatsoever, except the taxes due and payable on said real estate after June, 1917, and the crops now growing on said premises, and it is very probable that said deed will convey a clear title, with the exception of the above mentioned taxes and growing crops.

The deed which has been drafted for signing by Lewin G. Davis does not state whether he is married or an unmarried man. I would suggest that this description be placed in the deed before it is signed by Mr. Davis and his wife if married.

I am herewith returning said deed and abstract.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—ABSTRACT OF TITLE—GALLIA COUNTY—OHIO HOSPITAL FOR EPILEPTICS.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 25, 1917.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You recently submitted to this department an abstract of title covering the following premises, situate in the county of Gallia, in the state of Ohio, and in the township of Gallipolis, and bounded and descrbed as follows:

> "Tract Number One. Being parts of eight-acre lots respectively numbered on the recorded plat in Gallipolis township, Gallia county, Ohio, 1132, 1136, 1137 and 1138, beginning 1 chain, 70 links west of the northeast corner of said lot No. 1136; thence west 8 chains and 46 links to the northwest corner of said lot No. 1136; thence south 22¼° east 18 chains and 76 links to the middle of the public road; thence along said road N. 75° E. 50′ two chains and fifty links; thence N. 40° 51′ east four (4) chains and fifty-seven (57) links; thence N. 15½° west 12 chains and 31 links to the place of beginning, containing 11 and 30/100 acres (11.30 A.) more or less, being the property conveyed to John L. Vance by Lucy H. Cherrington by deed dated April 2, 1882, recorded in book 63, page 24, Records of Deeds of Gallia County, Ohio, but excepting from this transfer the strip or parcel of above described property conveyed by said John L. Vance to The Columbus, Hocking and Toledo Railway Company for right of way as a railroad track for a spur of said railway, being and lying on the lower or southwest side of the property thereby conveyed, and now occupied by said railway company.

"Tract Number Two. The following real estate, situated in the county of Gallia, in the state of Ohio, and in section 23 and 24, township 3, range 14, Gallipolis township, and bounded and described as follows, to wit: A strip of land sixty-five feet in width across eight (8) acre lots 1135 and 1141 and one hundred (100- acre lot No. 520 and being twenty (20) feet wide on the west side and forty-five (45) feet wide on the east side of the center line surveyed and located by The Columbus, Hocking Valley and Toledo Railway Company, for a branch of its railway located as follows: Beginning in the south line of said eight-acre lot 1135, twenty feet east of the southwest corner thereof, thence north 22° 16′ west two hundred and forty feet, thence with a curve to the right of five hundred and seventy-three feet radius, five hundred and forty-two feet to the center of the main track of said railway as now located, containing about one acre of land, and being the property conveyed to said John L. Vance by Genevieve Maxon by deed dated August 13, 1892, and recorded in Vol. 63, page 26, Records of Deeds of Gallia County, Ohio; excepting, however, from this transfer the strip or parcel of last above described property conveyed by said John L. Vance to The Columbus, Hocking Valley and Toledo Railway Company for a right of way for railroad track for spur of said railway, and now held by the said John L. Vance."

You also submitted a deed covering the above described premises wherein Rowena P. Cherrington and Samuel M. Cherrington, her husband, deed said property to the state of Ohio.

I have carefully examined said abstract dated July 11, 1917, and note several lapses and defects in the title. However, these lapses and defects all appear prior to 1850, and are, therefore, cured by lapse of time.

I also note that the premises herein described are subject to the lien of a mortgage of one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) to W. J. Fulton, as set out in No. Three of said abstract.

I am of the opinion that the deed submitted will convey a clear title to the state of Ohio, save and except taxes due and payable on said real estate after June, 1917, and crops now growing on said premises, and the mortgage lien of one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) herein noted. However, as the deed covenants that he premises are free and clear from all encumbrances whatsoever, except the taxes due and payable on said real estate after June, 1917, and the crops now growing on said premises, the amount of said mortgage, together with the interest thereon, should be deducted from the purchase price.

I am herewith returning said deed and abstract.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

JUVENILE COURT—HAS EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION OF MINORS UNDER EIGHTEEN IN ALL BUT FELONY CASES—MAY FINE DELINQUENT—APPEAL—ERROR.

1. When a juvenile court has found a minor to be delinquent such court may impose a fine not exceeding $10.00, by reason of the provisions of section 1654 General Code.

2. There is no provision in law for appealing or prosecuting error from the judgment of a juvenile court.

3. A juvenile judge has exclusive jurisdiction in all but felony cases with respect to minors under 18 years of age.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 25, 1917.

HON. J. ARTER WEAVER, Probate Judge, Bryan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 12, 1917, as follows:

"I desire your opinion on section 1654 of the General Code as to whether a juvenile judge has the right to fine a minor under 18 years for violating a village ordinance and creating a disturbance and attacking a deputized officer and resisting arrest. We juvenile judges encounter many cases where the delinquent is over 16 and under 18 years of age that we do not care and in fact feel that a commitment to the boys' industrial school is not proper and a suspended sentence to said institution is not sufficient, while if we could impose a proper fine it would be far better.

In a juvenile case, when the defendant is under 18, can the case be appealed or taken up on error to the common pleas court?

Where the common pleas judge and probate judge select the probate judge as the juvenile judge, has the juvenile judge exclusive jurisdiction or has the common pleas judge concurrent jurisdiction?

I would like very much to have your opinion by the first of September, as the case where this point arises is set for trial at this date."

Sections 1644 and 1654 General Code read:

"Sec. 1644. 'DELINQUENT CHILD DEFINED.'

"For the purpose of this chapter, the words 'delinquent child' includes any child under 18 years of age who violates a law of this state, or a city or village ordinance, or who is incorrigible; or who knowingly associates with thieves, vicious or immoral persons; or who is growing up in idleness or crime; or who knowingly visits or enters a house of ill repute; or who knowingly patronizes or visits a policy shop or place where any gambling device or gambling scheme is, or shall be, operated or conducted; or who patronizes or visits a saloon or dram shop where intoxicating liquors are sold; or who patronizes or visits a public pool or billiard room or bucket shop; or who wanders about the streets in the night time; or who wanders about railroad yards or tracks, or jumps or catches on to a moving train, traction or street car, or enters a car or engine without lawful authority, or who uses vile, obscene, vulgar, profane or indecent language; or who is guilty of immoral conduct; or who uses cigarettes, cigarette wrapper or substitute for either, or cigars, or tobacco; or who visits or frequents any theater, gallery, penny arcade or moving picture show where lewd, vulgar or indecent pictures, exhibitions or performances are displayed, exhibited or given, or who is an habitual truant; or who uses any injurious or narcotic drug. A child committing any of the acts herein mentioned shall be deemed a juvenile delinquent person, and be proceeded against in the manner hereinafter provided.

"Sec. 1654. Whoever abuses a child or aids, abets, induces, causes, encourages or contributes toward the dependency, neglect or delinquency, as herein defined, of a minor under the age of 18 years, or acts in a way tending to cause delinquency in such minor, shall be fined not less than ten dollars, nor more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than one year, or both. If in his judgment it is for the best interest of a delinquent minor, under the age of 18 years, the judge may impose a fine upon such delinquent not exceeding ten dollars, and he may order such person to stand committed until fine and costs are paid."

It will be noted that section 1644 provides that a juvenile under 18 years of age who violates a village ordinance, shall be deemed a delinquent child, and section 1654 provides:

"If in his judgment it is for the best interests of a delinquent minor, under the age of eighteen years, the judge may impose a fine upon such delinquent not exceeding ten dollars, and he may order such person to stand committed until fine and costs are paid."

In answer, therefore, to your first question, I would advise that the juvenile court may impose upon this juvenile a fine of not to exceed $10.00, as provided by section 1654, after the court has found the juvenile to be a delinquent.

Answering your second question, beg to advise that no means of appealing or prosecuting error from the juvenile court has been provided by the legislature, therefore none exists.

In In re Frank Januezewski, 10 O. L. R., 151, this fact was argued in support of the claim that the statute was invalid, but the court said:

"Nor is there any merit in the contention that the petitioner's rights were invaded because the statute did not afford him the opportunity of appealing or prosecuting error from the judgment of the juvenile court. It is a settled rule in Ohio that there can be no appeal or proceedings in error from the judgment of one judicial tribunal to another, unless the right thereto is given by statute. (Barr v. Closterman, 1 Ohio C. C., 387; Karb v. State, 54 Ohio St., 383.) It follows, therefore, that a federal court may not hold the statute invalid because it contains no provision for appeal or the prosecution of error. * * * * * * It is not urged and cannot be successfully maintained that a laxer rule obtains in distinctly criminal cases than in those of a civil or quasi-criminal nature."

Referring to your third question, as to whether or not a juvenile judge has exclusive jurisdiction in such a case as you submit, I beg to refer to an opinion rendered by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, on November 13, 1914, to Hon. Homer E. Johnson, prosecuting attorney, Marion, Ohio, and found in the Annual Report of the Attorney General for 1914, Vol. 2, in which he held that "the juvenile court and not the justice of the peace has jurisdiction over boys under 18 years of age arrested for violation of the hunting law." In that opinion Mr. Hogan said:

> "There seems to be only one case in which the legislature provided for the jurisdiction of any other court than the juvenile court over minors under 18 years of age. That provision is found in section 1681, G. C., which says that when a delinquent child is charged with the commission of a felony, the juvenile judge may bind such minor over to the court of common pleas to be proceeded against there in the same manner as any other person charged with a felony. Where such minor under the age of 18 is charged with a felony, the case would first be brought before the juvenile judge; and it seems to me that such judge has the exercise of a sound discretion whether the case should be transferred to the court of common pleas.
> "Therefore, it is my opinion that the state of Ohio, in the valid exercise of its police powers, intended by the act creating what is known as the 'juvenile court' to give to and vest in such court the exclusive jurisdiction over and with respect to minors under the age of 18 years of age, with the exception in regard to felonies, as provided in section 1681 G. C. If the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace, judges of the police court and mayors of villages were made concurrent with the jurisdiction of the juvenile court, the purpose and spirit of the act would be defeated. It therefore follows that in case referred to in your letter, the justice of the peace had no authority to retain and hear the same."

I also would refer you to an opinion rendered by Hon. Edward C. Turner, on June 14, 1915, found in Opinions of the Attorney General for 1915, Vol. 2, 1022, in which he held that "A mayor has no jurisdiction to dispose of a case against a minor under 18 years of age other than to transfer the case to the juvenile judge." In that opinion Mr. Turner said in part:

> "It is my opinion, therefore, that under the provisions of section 1659 of the General Code, as amended and quoted above, the juvenile judge has exclusive jurisdiction to try and dispose of cases involving violations of law by minors under the age of 18 years, subject to the exceptions made in section 1681 of the General Code; and that while a mayor has no jurisdiction to finally dispose of such a case, he is, by the provisions of section 1659 of the General Code, authorized to transfer the case to the juvenile judge, it then becoming the duty of the officer having the minor in charge to take him before such juvenile judge.
> "Section 1659 of the General Code, quoted above, does not specifically mention mayors; however, there can be no question but that it was the intention of the legislature to vest the jurisdiction over minors under the age of 18 years in the juvenile court for final disposition, except when the charge involving such minor was a felony. Therefore a mayor has no jurisdiction to dispose of a juvenile case brought before him other than to transfer it to the juvenile judge of the county."

I agree with these views of Mr. Hogan and Mr. Turner, and advise you that the juvenile court has exclusive jurisdiction in the case you submit in your communication. It therefore follows that the common pleas judge is without jurisdiction.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

SECRET SERVICE OFFICER—PROSECUTING ATTORNEY MAY EMPLOY AND PAY FROM FURTHERANCE OF JUSTICE FUND—NO AUTHORITY FOR TWO OR MORE COUNTIES TO HIRE SUCH AN OFFICER JOINTLY.

1. A prosecuting attorney may expend from his "furtherance of justice" fund (section 3004 G. C.) for secret service work, when a regular secret service officer provided by section 2915-1 G. C. is not serving, or in addition to such services.

2. There is no provision of law for two or more counties to join in employing a secret service officer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1917.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your request for my opinion you submit the following:

"(1.) In a county in which a secret service officer is appointed under the provisions of statute for a month at a time, there probably being something like three appointments during the year, is the prosecuting attorney authorized to expend for secret service work any part of the funds in his hands under section 3004 of the General Code, when such work is done at a time when there is no secret service officer serving? That is, after the expiration of one monthiy appointment and before the making of another appointment?

"The statute provides that the compensation of a secret service officer when appointed under the law shall not be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month during the time actually employed; that the total amount so expended in a year shall not exceed one-half of the prosecuting attorney's salary. It will thus be seen that it is impossible in a county in which the salary of a prosecuting attorney is $1,350.00 per year for a secret service officer to be appointed and constantly employed during the entire year, under the provisions of law providing for such appointments.

"(2.) I desire to inquire whether or not there is any legal manner in which two or three counties, acting together, may secure the services of a secret service man for the entire year. If so, what procedure is necessary."

Two questions are contained in the above statement: First, in a county in which a secret service officer is appointed under the provisions of section 2915-1 of the General Code, for a month at a time but not regularly, can the prosecuting attorney expend a portion of the funds in his hands under section 3004 G. C. for secret service work while the officer appointed under section 2915-1 is not working? Second, is there any legal manner in which two or more counties, acting together, can secure the services of a secret service man for the entire year?

Section 2915-1 of the General Code provides:

"The prosecuting attorney may appoint a secret service officer whose duty it shall be to aid him in the collection and discovery of evidence to be used in the trial of criminal cases and matters of a criminal nature. Such appointment shall be made for such term as the prosecuting attorney may deem advisable, and subject to termination at any time by such prosecuting attorney. The compensation of said officer shall be fixed by the judge of the court of common pleas of the county in which the appointment is made, or if there be more than one judge, by the judges of such court in such county in joint session, and shall not be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars per month for the time actually occupied in such service nor more than one-half of the official salary of the prosecuting attorney for a year, payable monthly, out of the county fund, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

Section 3004 G. C. provides in part:

"There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney, in addition to his salary and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary, to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for. Upon the order of the prosecuting attorney the county auditor shall draw his warrant upon the county treasurer, payable to the prosecuting attorney or such other person as the order designates, for such amount as the order requires, not exceeding the amount provided for herein, and to be paid out of the general fund of the county. * * *"

That is, the above provisions of law permit the prosecuting attorney, if he deems it advisable, the right to appoint a secret service officer, and it shall be the duty of such secret service officer to aid the prosecuting attorney in the collection and discovery of evidence to be used in the trial of criminal cases and in matters of a criminal nature. The prosecuting attorney may designate the term of such secret service officer and may make such terms of such length as he deems advisable, subject, however, to be terminated at any time by the prosecuting attorney. When a secret service officer is so appointed by the prosecuting attorney, the compensation of such officer shall be fixed by the judge of the court of common pleas of the county in which such appointment is made, or if there be more than one judge of the court of common pleas of such county, then such salary shall be fixed by the judges of such court of common pleas of the county in which such appointment is made and such judges shall fix such compensation in joint session; and the salary so fixed, whether fixed by the single judge or by the judges joint session, as the case may be, shall not be less than $125.00 per month for the time actually occupied in the services so performed by such secret service officer, nor shall such salary so fixed be more than one-half of the official salary of the prosecuting attorney during any year. Such salary shall be paid monthly out of the county funds of such county and upon warrants of the county auditor. But if such prosecuting attorney appoints no such secret service officer, under the provisions of section 2915-1 G. C., or if for any other reason in the furtherance of justice it is necessary for the prosecuting attorney to secure the services of a secret service officer in the performance of his official duties, then such prosecuting attorney shall be allowed to use the fund provided for in section 3004 G. C. to cover such expense. Even if a secret service officer is appointed by the prosecuting attorney in any county, as provided by section 2915-1 G. C., and a condition arises which warrants further or other secret service for the prosecuting attorney in the performance of his official duties, and in the furtherance of justice, then and under such conditions the prosecuting attorney is allowed to also use the funds provided by section 3004 to cover the expenses of such services, if any there be.

In other words, section 2915-1 provides for the appointment of a secret service officer whose salary shall be paid out of the county fund, under the conditions above mentioned, and section 3004 G. C. provides a fund which is placed at the disposal of the prosecuting attorney to be used in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice.

The two matters are separate and distinct. Both can be used at the same time; neither need be used at any time if the conditions warrant such non-use.

My predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, held in Opinion No. 1872, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, volume 2, p. 1453, that the allowance made to a prosecuting attorney, under the provisions of section 3004 G. C., may be expended in the employment of a person or persons to procure evidence against violations of the law regulating the speed of motor vehicles, said evidence to be used before a grand jury or in the prosecution of said violations, if no secret service officer has been appointed by the prosecuting attorney under the provisions of section 2915-1 G. C., and if such secret service officer has been appointed said expenditure, aforesaid, may be made in addition to the services of such secret service officer.

Said official further held in Opinion No. 10, found in Vol. 1, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, p. 16, that the evident purpose of the enactment of section 3004 G. C. was to place at the disposal of the prosecuting attorney a sum of money which he might expend in such manner as to render partial secrecy at the time when the expenses were incurred, and also add a requirement that on or before the first Monday of the year following he should render a statement under oath of the manner of his expenditures; that the statute contemplates two methods by which the special fund may be drawn from the treasury and expended by the prosecuting attorney.

(1.) He may secure from the county auditor a warrant for all or a portion of the amount to which he is entitled, after having given bond and securing its approval by the court; or

(2.) He may leave the entire amount in the county treasury and issue his order to the county auditor for each separate expenditure of money.

In no event does the statute contemplate that a court shall exercise any jurisdiction or have any control over this fund, other than to approve the bond when submitted, said official giving it as his opinion therefore that after a bond is given and has been approved by the court, the prosecuting attorney may withdraw either all or a portion of the amount to which he is entitled, and expend it in such a manner as is contemplated by the section in the furtherance of justice, and the court has no jurisdiction over the amount to be so drawn.

Again, in Opinion No. 260, Vol. 1 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, p. 491, the same official held, in a matter wherein the prosecuting attorney had secured the attendance of witnesses from a foreign state, that:

> "If you will have the subpoenas issued and you mail them to the witnesses you may then have their attendance, and mileage from the state line, paid by order of the court, showing that the witnesses came upon the call of the prosecuting attorney, and taxed as costs in the case. Any deficiency in the amount of their actual mileage is a proper charge against your 'in furtherance of justice fund' under section 3004 G. C."

My predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, held in Opinion No. 789, Vol. 1, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, p. 270:

> "The question presents itself as to the meaning of 'not otherwise provided for.' Does it mean not otherwise provided for in law, or not otherwise provided for in fact? Suppose the prosecuting attorney had not proceeded agreeably to section 2915-1 and had not appointed a secret service officer under that section. May it then be said that we have an application of 'not otherwise provided for' in section 3004? I should be inclined ordinarily to hold that the expression, 'not otherwise provided for,' was a legal expression and did not relate to a fact, but I am loath to come to a conclusion that would unnecessarily put the greater expense upon the county; and, too, I can conceive of a situation in which the prosecuting attorney might have his regular detective employed under section 2915-1 occupied and a situation would arise wherein it would be advisable in the furtherance of justice to employ a detective under section 3004 for special purposes.
> "On the whole, I am not able to see any objection to the action of the prosecuting attorney who is prompted by considerations of economy to proceed under section 3004. Certain it is that the chief guiding official in transactions under either section is the prosecuting attorney. Certain it is, also, that either section gives him the right to employ a detective."

The same official held in Opinion No. 836, Vol. 1, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, p. 399:

> "A prosecuting attorney who is employing a secret service officer regularly under section 2915-1, General Code, may employ another secret service officer when necessary under the provisions of section 3004, General Code."

So that, answering your first question, I advise you that in a county in which a secret service officer is appointed under the provisions of General Code section 2915-1 for a month at a time, but not regularly for the full year, the prosecuting attorney may use from the fund provided for under section 3004 G. C. whatever is necessary to cover the expenses of secret service for such prosecuting attorney in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice while such officer provided for in section 2915-1 G. C. is not serving.

Coming now to your second question: Section 2915-1, above quoted, provides a plan of procedure in the appointment of a secret service officer for one county only. The statute does not provide that the prosecuting attorneys of two or more counties may appoint, or that the common pleas judges of two or more counties may fix the salary of such secret service officers so appointed, but the entire section limits the act of appointing a secret service officer to each or any county. In the performance of such acts prosecuting attorneys and common pleas judges have only such powers as are specifically granted them by statute, and the statute limits the same to single counties.

I must advise you, therefore, in answer to your second question, that there is no provision of law whereby two or more counties may act jointly in securing the services of a secret service man for the entire year.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES AND CLERKS—COMPENSATION—BY WHAT LAW GOVERNED.

The special acts in 93 O. L., 674 and 714, fixing the compensation of township trustees and the township clerk of Canton township, Stark county, Ohio, are unconstitutional, and said officers are governed in regard to their fees by the provisions of section 3294 General Code as amended by the last general assembly, 107 O. L., 698.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 25, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On July 30, 1917, you submit the following inquiry to this office:

> "We respectfully call your attention to a special act fixing the compensation of the trustees and clerk of Canton township, Stark county, Ohio, as recorded in 93 O. L., 714 and 674, passed in 1898. You will note that the compensation therein fixed is higher than the compensation fixed by the general laws of the state for township clerk and township trustees. We also call your attention to section 3294 G. C., as amended 107 O. L., 698.
> "Question: Will the old law referred to in 93 O. L., or the new law referred to in 107 O. L. govern in ascertaining the compensation of the trustees and clerk of Canton township?"

The two special acts which you mention, passed in 1898, are as follows:

> "(93 O. L., 714.) Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, That the township trustees of Canton township, Stark county, Ohio, may receive as compensation, at one dollar and fifty cents for each day's service, a sum not to exceed three hundred dollars each in any one year, to be paid out of the township treasury; including services in connection with the poor.
> "(93 O. L., 674.) Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, That the township trustees of Canton township, Stark county, Ohio, may allow the clerk thereof a compensation not to exceed two hundred dollars in any one year, to be paid out of the township treasury."

The amendment of section 3294 General Code by the last general assembly (107 O. L., 698) would have no effect on these two special acts if they were valid before. The amendment makes no practical change in the law except as to the fixing of the maximum amount that each of the officials may draw in the year, and in no other manner would change the status of the trustees or clerks as they stood prior to its enactment.

Since 1898, when these special acts were passed, there has been an entire revulsion of opinion upon the subject of special legislation by the supreme court. For several years after the enactment such special acts were frequently passed and were observed without criticism or comment. In 1902, however, the court settled the interpretation of section 26 of article II of the constitution requiring that all laws of a general nature shall have a uniform application throughout the state. In the case of State ex rel. v. Spellmire et al., 67 O. S., 77, Burket, J., in his opinion collated and distinguished the different cases unhesitatingly, overruling those which went to the limit of liberality in such legislation. In this case it was decided that a special school district could not be created by a special act of the legislature.

Just previous to that, however, in the same year, the court composed of the same judges, had rendered a decision more directly in point in the present instance (State ex rel. Guilbert v. Yates, 66 O. S., 546). The only difference in the facts of this case and the instant matter is that that was in reference to county officers and this in reference to township officers, a circumstance of no consequence. The syllabus of the case is as follows:

> "1. County officers are not local officers, but are a part of the permanent organization of the government of the state, and the subject of compensation to county officers is not local in its nature, and an act of the general assembly upon that subject is a law of a general nature which must operate uniformly throughout the state. Pearson et al., v. Stephens et al., 56 Ohio St., 126, overruled.
> "2. The 'act relating to the duties and compensation of certain county officers in Pickaway county,' passed April 22, 1896 (92 O. L., 597), and the act amending sections 1, 2 and 5, thereof, passed March 29, 1898 (93 O. L., 507), are unconstitutional, being in conflict with the first clause of section 26, article II, of the constitution."

Speaking of a former case in which such special legislation had been sustained, Davis, J., speaking for the court, said:

> "* * We are constrained to, and do unhesitatingly, overrule the case of Pearson et al v. Stephens, because the doctrine therein declared, that local legislation on the subject of the compensation of county officers is constitutional, is exactly the opposite of our deliberately formed convictions."

A perusal of these two cases is sufficient to save time in going through all the cases on the subject, as all are briefly stated and considered in the two opinions.

It is the duty of all state departments, including this, to indulge every intendment in favor of the validity and constitutionality of the acts of the legislature. In reference to the subject of your inquiry, however, the question is so absolutely and emphatically settled by the decisions of the supreme court expressed in such positive terms and with such final decision that no question is left for consideration. The two acts cited in your inquiry are so plainly within the operation of the decisions of the supreme court that there is nothing left but to advise you that they are unconstitutional, and although believed to have been constitutional at the time of their enactment and acquiesced in as valid and constitutional for some years afterwards, they never were constitutional; on the contrary they were absolutely void and of no effect from the very date of their enactment, and should at once be disregarded, and the officials of this township should be held, in the future at least, to be under the operation of the general laws upon the subject of fees in common with all other townships of the state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SECTION 1465-61 G. C.—RELATING TO PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS INTO STATE INSURANCE FUND BY CONTRACTORS—DOES NOT AFFECT CONTRACTS ENTERED INTO PREVIOUS TO JULY 1, 1917.

Section 1465-61, passed March 30, 1917, (107 O. L. 157) does not affect contracts entered into prior to July 1, 1917, and uncompleted at time this act took effect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of July 18th, requesting my opinion in regard to amended section 1465-61, sub-section 3, of the General Code of Ohio, which was passed March 20th, 1917, and filed in the office of the secretary of state on March 30th, 1917 (107 O. L., 157, at 159), and which reads as follows:

> "Sec. 1465-61. The terms 'employe,' 'workman' and 'operative' as used in this act, shall be construed to mean * *.
> "3. Every person in the service of any independent contractor or sub-contractor who has failed to pay into the state insurance fund the amount of premium determined and fixed by the industrial commission of Ohio for his employment or occupation, or to elect to pay compensation direct to his injured and to the dependents of his killed employes, as provided in section 1465-69, General Code, shall be considered as the employe of the person who has entered into a contract, whether written or verbal, with such independent contractor unless such employes, or their legal representatives or beneficiaries elect, after injury or death, to regard such independent contractor as the employer."

This act went into effect July 1st, 1917.

You request my opinion as to whether or not this section as amended applies to or affects contracts entered into previously to July 1st, 1917, and which are uncompleted at the time the above section went into operation.

I am of the opinion that this section does not apply to or affect contracts entered into previous to July 1st, 1917, and which are yet uncompleted.

Section 28 of article II of the constitution of Ohio provides:

> "The general assembly shall have no power to pass retroactive laws, or laws impairing the obligation of contracts; but may, by general laws, authorize courts to carry into effect, upon such terms as shall be just and equitable, the manifest intention of parties, and officers, by curing omissions, defects and errors, in instruments and proceedings, arising out of their want of conformity with the laws of this state."

The supreme court, in Raridon v. Holden et al., 15 O. S., 207, adopted Justice Story's definition of the word "retroactive" to be as follows:

> "Upon principle, every statute which takes away or impairs vested rights, acquired under existing laws, or create a new obligation, imposes a new duty, or attaches a new disability, in respect to transactions or considerations already past must be deemed retroactive."

The words "retrospective" and "retroactive," as applied to statutes of this character, seem to be synonymous.

It seems clear then that this section, if applied to contracts entered into previous to July 1st, 1917, would create a new obligation and impose a new duty with reference to such contract and hence would contravene section 28 of article II of the constitution of Ohio and would therefore be null and void.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROPRIATIONS—H. B. 701 (106 O. L., 751) REMAINING UNEXPENDED ON JULY 1, 1917—TO WHAT EXTENT REAPPROPRIATED IN H. B. 584 (107 O. L. 187).

Balance of appropriations made in H. B. 701 (106 O. L. 751) remaining unexpended on July 1, 1917, are only reappropriated by section 9 of H. B. 584 (107 O. L. 187) to the extent of contingent liabilities existing on said date.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1917.

The Public Utilities Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On August 8, 1917, I received a communication from you as follows:

> "A consideration of your Opinion No. 493 of the third inst. holding that Mr. L. K. Langdon may be paid the difference between a salary at the rate of $6,000.00 per annum, and the salary he received at the rate of $4,500.00 per annum, during his incumbency of office, presents a new question, which we beg to herewith submit for your consideration and advice.
> "Does this commission possess authority to pay to Mr. Langdon any part of this salary out of monies which may be available, or should Mr. Langdon apply to the emergency board or the assembly for an appropriation covering the whole sum?"

In Opinion No. 493 I held that Mr. Langdon was entitled to a salary of $6,000.00 per year for services as member of the public utilities commission from the date upon which he was appointed, namely, May 27, 1915, up until the time that his term expired, namely, February 1, 1917. It appears, however, from the communication upon which Opinion No. 493 was based that Mr. Langdon received salary at the rate of $6,000.00 only until the eighth day of June, 1915, after which he was paid at the rate of $4,500.00 until the expiration of his term, making a total balance due him of $2,470.83.

It appears from the auditor of state's record that from June 8, 1915, to July 1, 1915, there was a balance due Mr. Langdon in the sum of $95.83.

House Bill No. 314 (106 O. L. 33) appropriated for current expenses of the state government for the period beginning January 16, 1915, and ending June 30, 1915, known as the short term budget bill. Section 6 thereof (106 O. L. 101) provided:

> "All liabilities incurred on or before June 30, 1915, shall be paid from appropriations herein provided in section 1."

There was appropriated for the salaries of the three commissioners the sum of $6,750.00 (106 O. L. 85). This act was passed on March 12, 1915, approved the same day and filed on the same day in the office of the secretary of state. The appropriation would therefore lapse on the 12th day of March, 1917. There was $287.52 left of the appropriation foregoing mentioned, but the same lapsed, as before stated, on March 12, 1917. Therefore said $287.52 would not now be available for the payment of the $95.83 balance due Mr. Langdon which should have been paid from such amount, nor was said appropriation revived by the provisions of House Bill 701 (106 O. L. 666).

House Bill 701 was the general appropriation bill for the period beginning July 1, 1915, and ending June 30, 1917. In section 2 of said act it was provided that the sums therein set out "shall not be expended to pay liabilities or deficiencies existing prior to July 1, 1915, or incurred subsequent to June 30, 1917."

In section 2 of said act there was appropriated to the public utilities commission for the salaries of the three commissioners the sum of $15,000, and in section 3 of said act (106 O. L. 751) it was provided that the moneys appropriated in section 3 "shall not be expended to pay liabilities or deficiencies existing prior to July 1, 1916, or incurred subsequent to June 30, 1917," and in said section 3 there was likewise appropriated for the three commissioners of the public utilities commission the sum of $15,000.00.

From July 1, 1915 to July 1, 1916, there was a balance due Mr. Langdon of $1,500.00, and from July 1, 1916, to February 1, 1917, there was a balance due Mr. Langdon of $875.00.

Of the appropriation made in section 2 of said House Bill No. 701, there was on July 1, 1916, a balance in the appropriation for commissioners the sum of $862.50, and on July 1, 1917, there was a balance in the appropriation of $258.89.

In House Bill No. 584 (107 O. L. 187), being the general appropriation bill passed at the recent session of the legislature, there is a provision in section 9 thereof, as follows:

> "Unexpended balances of all appropriations, made by the eighty-first general assembly, against which contingent liabilities have been lawfully incurred, are to the extent of such liabilities only hereby reappropriated and made available for the purpose of discharging such contingent liabilities and for no other purpose."

While it true that there was the sum of $1,121.39 still in the fund available for the payment of the salaries of the commissioners of the public utilities commission on July 1, 1917, nevertheless that amount lapsed into the general fund of the state treasury, since under no circumstances could the amount due Mr. Langdon be considered as a contingent liability. The amount due Mr. Langdon is an absolute liability.

I am therefore of the opinion that there are no funds at present available from which to pay the amount of the balance due Mr. Langdon upon his salary nor can the said amount be obtained from the emergency board.

Section 2313 G. C. relative to the emergency board provides that in case of any deficiency in any of the appropriations for the expenses of an institution, etc., or in case of an emergency requiring the expenditure of money not specifically provided by law, application may be made to the emergency board. The amount due Mr. Langdon cannot be considered as being a deficiency in the appropriation nor is it a case of an emergency. I am therefore of the opinion that the emergency board cannot allow the amount. The only way, therefore, for the claim of Mr. Langdon to be paid is by an appropriation made in his behalf by the legislature.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—RIGHT OF WAY GRANTED BY STATE TO THE ATHENS ELECTRIC COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1917.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On August 1, 1917, you submitted a grant of right of way made by the state of Ohio to The Athens Electric Company across certain lands of the state, for approval or comment. The preamble of this grant recites that it is under the act of February 16, 1915, which act is found in Vol. 106 Ohio Laws, at page 7, the first and second sections of the same being as follows:

> "Sec. 1. That The Hocking Power Company, its successors and assigns be given the right to enter in and upon such part or parts of said Outlots Nos. 51 and 56 in said city of Athens and to construct, maintain and operate thereon an electrical transmission line consisting of poles, wires, cross arms, insulators and other material and equipment, that it be used for transmission line only and locate the same as may be agreed upon by said state board of administration upon the payment to the state of such sums of money as may be agreed upon by said board of administration and said The Hocking Power Company.
> "Sec. 2. The state board of administration is also hereby empowered to convey such right or rights to said The Hocking Power Company, its successors and assigns by deed or other proper instrument in writing, said conveyance to be made in the name of the state by said board; provided, however, that such instrument shall contain a condition that the state of Ohio shall not be liable to any person for any injury that may result from the construction, maintenance or operation of said transmission line across said premises."

The description in the grant consists of a single line having, of course, one dimension. It is preceded by the statement that it is to be located along the following route:

> "Being a part of said Outlots Nos. 51 and 56 in said city of Athens."

and continues, giving the location of a line across said lots.

Being only a line and having no width it is, strictly speaking, no part of the lots in question. This fact would not affect the grant, but it does leave the other necessary dimension—width—uncertain and to be determined by the test of reasonable necessity—about which, as to the width necessary to use for the purpose of the grant, or the amount of ground necessary to use in the construction and maintenance of the apparatus of the grantee, difference of opinion might exist at the present or in the future. This does not affect the validity of the grant, but it would be better to have its subject matter fully set forth in the instrument creating it, than to leave it for determination otherwise.

A stipulation is contained in the grant that the electric transmission line shall be used for a transmission line only. No penalty or consequence is attached to any misuse or other use of the grounds. This is exactly in accordance with what the special act provides, but it would not be inconsistent with the terms of that act to protect the state by a clause of forfeiture in event of any other use. Without such clause the only remedy the state has would be mere prevention by injunction or otherwise of such use for other purposes. This, likewise, does not affect the validity of the grant, but it is a precaution and protection against violation of its terms that ought to be included in the instrument.

There is a further stipulation that the conveyance is made subject to the condition that the state of Ohio shall not be liable to any person for any injury that may result from the construction, maintenance and operation of said transmission line across said premises. This clause also is exactly in accordance with what is specified in the act, but it is of no benefit to the state and has no effect whatever, beng merely a stipulation between two persons attempting to bind a third. The state could not escape any liability to an injured person by any agreement that it might have with this company. If protection be desired it could be obtained by a stipulation to the effect that the company would save the state harmless, or would repay any damages that the state might incur. It is not at all probable that the state would ever become liable for such damages as the state is not maintaining the transmission line, but only permitting another to erect it across its property. However, if there be such possible liability and protection is sought against it, it is not secured by this provision, but could be by substituting the one above, and this would not be inconsistent with the terms of the act.

There is one other and serious defect in this conveyance. The statute above quoted requires the board of administration to make the grant only upon the payment of such sums of money as may be agreed upon. It might be argued that the word "sums" being in the plural, should be construed as requiring payment of rent from time to time, or periodically. However, admitting that the construction may be otherwise and that the statute would be complied wih by a single payment, the sum ought to be named, and its receipt acknowledged in the conveyance itself, otherwise it has the appearance of being made without consideration and in violation of the terms of the enabling statute.

For the above reasons said instrument is returned without approval.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

IMPROVEMENT OF INTER-COUNTY HIGHWAY OR MAIN MARKET ROAD UPON COUNTY LINE—APPLICATION FOR STATE AID—ADVERTISEMENT FOR BIDS—WHEN FINAL RESOLUTIONS SHOULD BE ENTERED INTO—APPORTIONMENT OF COST BETWEEN COUNTIES—WHEN CERTIFICATE OF AUDITOR SHOULD BE FILED.

1. While section 1220 G. C. may contemplate that, in the improvement of an inter-county highway or main market road upon a county line, county commissioners of the counties interested should make a joint application for state aid, yet where the board of county commissioners of each county separately makes application for the same improvement, and aid is given for the same by the state, and final resolutions are entered into by the counties and a contract let for the improvement, the fact that a joint application was not made cannot avail anyone and especially the contractor himself.

2. The language used in section 1206 G. C. is really susceptible of the construction that advertisement for bids for an improvement of a highway located on the county line may be made in two newspapers published in either county interested in the improvement.

3. The mere fact that in the specifications and advertisement for bids the road was referred to as lying entirely in one county, rather than on the line between the counties, cannot be complained of by anyone, and especially the contractor, when the description of the road was sufficiently clear to indicate its location and the work to be done under the contract entered into by and between the state and the contractor.

4. While logically and naturally, and under the provisions of section 1206 G. C., the final resolutions of the county commissioners should be entered into before advertising for bids, yet where advertisement is made and bids submitted and the contract awarded, no one can be heard to complain that the logical order was not followed, provided the county or counties later assumed their share of the cost and expense of the improvement.

5. The cost and expense of the improvement under the provisions of section 1211 G. C. need not be apportioned to the different counties, townships and abutting property owners until the completion of the improvement.

6. The certificate of the county auditor, filed with the county commissioners in accordance with section 5660 G. C. before they adopted the resolution to assume the county's share of the cost and expense of the improvement, and the final resolution adopted by the county commissioners upon the faith of said certificate, are sufficient authority to warrant the state highway commissioner in proceeding to let the contract for an improvement under the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1917.

Honorable Clinton Cowen, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 24, 1917, which communication reads as follows :

> "On Friday last Mr. James G. Stewart, representing The Jones Construction Company, called at this office and stated to me that he believed the agreement between this department and the above company for the improvement of section J-48 of the Salem-Alliance road, I. C. H. 84 in Columbiana and Mahoning counties, is not a valid contract. The contractor has already entered upon the work and we have been urging upon him the necessity of prosecuting it vigorously. Representative citizens from the community in which the above improvement lies have called at this office and expressed a desire to assist in any way possible in the early completion of the work, inasmuch as the improvement of the road this year is of very substantial importance to the local industries. Mr. Stewart requested that I ask for an opinion from your office as to the legality of our agreement, to which request I assented, and am therefore attaching hereto a copy of his letter to me on behalf of The Jones Construction Company. I shall be glad to hand you our file or such part of it as you desire for examination at any time, and ask that you give this matter such early consideration as the press of other business in your office will permit."

There is a great amount of correspondence also in reference to the matter about which you write, which correspondence I have examined carefully, but the same is too lengthy to set out in this opinion. However, from your communication and from the correspondence which I have examined, I gather the following facts, and upon these facts I am basing my opinion.

The Jones Construction Company of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, entered into a contract with the state highway commissioner for the construction of the Salem-Alliance road, I. C. H. 84. This contract is dated May 19, 1916. The said road lies on the boundary line between Columbiana and Mahoning counties. The final resolution was entered into on August 10, 1916, by the county commissioners of Mahoning county in which they agreed to pay toward the improvement the sum of $45,250.00, and the state $250.00.

The certificate of the county auditor to the effect that the money was in the treasury to take care of the obligation of the county was made on the same date. A final resolution was entered into on September 11, 1916, by the county commissioners of Columbiana county agreeing to pay toward the improvement the sum of $40,000.00 and the state $5,500.00. The certificate of the county auditor to the effect that the money was in the treasury to meet the obligation entered into by the county commissioners was made on the same date.

Both of these final resolutions covered exactly the same improvement, namely, the improvement above designated.

The contract, while dated August 9, 1916, was not signed by the state highway commissioner and delivered to The Jones Construction Company until after the middle of September, 1916. The work on the highway was begun in the fall of 1916, and considerable grading was done that fall. No work has been done by said company since the fall of 1916.

The Jones Construction Company now is seeking to be relieved from the obligations of the contract thus entered into by it with the state highway commissioner. The said company offers a number of reasons why it feels that it should be so relieved. The company's attorneys, Mr. Charles H. Duncan and Mr. James G. Stewart, have filed a comprehensive brief in support of the claims made by The Jones Construction Company. These claims are set out clearly in the brief, and I shall consider them as set out therein. They are as follows:

1. The company complains that no joint application for state aid was made by the two boards of county commissioners, as provided for in section 1220 General Code.

2. That no advertisement for bids was ever published in Mahoning county, as required by section 1206 General Code.

3. That the plans, specifications, estimates, advertisement for bids, proposal, contract and bond all refer to the work as being located in Columbiana county, none of them making any reference to the fact that the road is on the line between the two counties.

4. That the bids were advertised for, opened, the lowest bidder determined and the contract signed by the bidder before any final resolution had been adopted by either board of county commissioners.

5. That the state highway commissioner has never taken action apportioning the cost between the two counties, as provided in section 1220 General Code.

6. That the county auditor's certificate of available funds in the Mahoning county treasury made at the time the county commissioners of that county passed the final resolution was false.

I shall take these different questions in their order.

1. Section 1220 General Code provides that the board of county commissioners of two or more counties interested may make application to the state highway commissioner for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of the inter-county highway or main market road upon a county line.

The Jones Construction Company maintains that the language of this section indicates a joint application from the fact that the language is: "the board of county commissioners of two or more counties," thus indicating that it is the joint board that acts.

I am of the opinion that this was the intention of the legislature in enacting this provision, but when the county commissioners of each county make application for state aid for a road located on the county line and each board afterwards enters into a final resolution or agreement with the state highway commissioner, each agreeing to assume a certain part of the cost and expense of the improvement, and when the state highway commissioner enters into a contract with someone to construct the road on the faith of this final resolution, then I am of the opinion that any irregularity in the matter of making application would be cured, and that especially would this be true in reference to the contractor himself. I do not believe that this claim of the contractor is well taken.

Further, in reference to this matter, I would like to call attention to the language used in the latter part of said section 1220, which is as follows:

> "Two or more townships may make application for state aid in the construction or improvement of inter-county highways or main market roads upon a county or township line, and all the provisions of law relating to an improvement upon the application of a board of county commissioners or two or more boards of county commissioners shall apply as far as applicable."

Here we find the language that two or more townships may make application, and that the provisions of law relating to an improvement where two or more boards of commissioners may make application will be applicable. This language is almost as strong to the point that separate boards may make application as is the language used in the first part of the section, that the application must be by the joint board.

2. The second claim made by the contractor is that the advertisement for bids was not in accordance with law, in that the publication was made only in Columbiana county papers, one a democratic newspaper and the other a republican paper.

In reference to this claim, let us turn to section 1206 General Code and note what provisions are made in reference to advertising, as follows:

> "* * The state highway commissioner shall advertise for bids for two consecutive weeks in two newspapers of general circulation and of the two dominant political parties published in the county or counties in which the improvement or some part thereof is located."

This languge seems to be fairly capable of the construction that the advertisement shall be made in two newspapers published either in the county or in the counties in which the whole improvement is located, or it may be published in two newspapers in a county in which some part thereof is located. A part of this improvement lies in Columbiana county, and it seems to me that when the state highway commissioner advertised in two papers of general circulation and of opposite politics in Columbiana county, where a part of the improvement lies he complies with what is a reasonable construction of said statute.

3. The company complains for the reason that the plans, the advertisement, the proposal, the contract and the bond all refer to the work as being located in Columbiana county.

This undoubtedly is a technical irregularity. Strictly speaking, the road lies in both counties with the boundary line of the counties as the center of the road, but I cannot see how anybody could be injured from this irregularity. Bidders could certainly locate the road with exactness; they would not be misled in any respect, and so far as I can see no one else could be injured by this irregularity. Certainly anybody desiring to bid would have opportunity to bid, and that is all that can be asked of any advertiser, and the bidder who was awarded the contract, contracted to do a certain amount of work according to certain plans and specifications, and the fact that the half of the road lies in Mahoning county instead of all of it lying in Columbiana county certainly could have no effect whatever in the way of influencing the bid of any person.

Hence, I feel that while this is a technical irregularity, yet no one was injured thereby.

4. The next complaint is to the point that bids were advertised for, opened and the lowest bidder determined, contract prepared and signed by the bidder before any final resolution had been adopted by the said county.

In order to understand this point clearly it might be well to note the practice that is followed by the state highway commissioner in reference to the reception of bids. It is his rule to demand that each bidder with his bid submit a contract duly signed for the faithful performance of the work, together with a bond duly executed, guaranteeing the faithful performance of the work, and this contract is always dated as of the same date as the opening of the bids. Hence in this case, as set out in the statement of facts, the contract is dated May 19, 1916, the day upon which the bids were opened, while the final resolutions of the county commissioners were not entered into until August 10, 1916, and September 11, 1916.

The question now is as to whether this is in violation of sections 1206 and 1218 General Code.

Section 1218 General Code provides that:

"No contract shall be let by the state highway commissioner in a case when the county commissioners or township trustees are to contribute a part of the cost of said improvement, unless the county commissioners of the county in which the improvement is located shall have a written agreement to assume in the first instance that part of the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount to be paid by the state."

"No contract shall be let" is the language used. It must be remembered in this case that the contract was not let; that is, was not signed by the state highway commissioner and delivered to the successful bidder until some time after the middle of September, 1916, which was after both final resolutions had been entered into. Hence, I am of the opinion that the provisions of section 1218 General Code were not violated.

How about section 1206 of the General Code? This section reads in part:

> "Upon the receipt of a certified copy of the resolution of the county commissioners or township trustees, that such improvement be constructed under the provisions of this chapter * * the state highway commissioner shall advertise for bids * * *."

It is quite evident that the provisions of these sections were not logically followed; that is, logically the final resolutions are to be entered into before the state highway commissioner shall advertise for bids, but here again while there is a mere irregularity no one could be injured thereby or suffer therefrom. The bidders submitted their proposals with certain plans, specifications and estimates in view. The fact that the final resolutions were not entered into has no bearing upon the matter of bidding, and if the county commissioners afterwards entered into final resolutions agreeing to assume a certain part of the cost and expense of the improvement, they or those whom they represent cannot complain.

Hence, while there is an irregularity in the face of the provisions of section 1206 General Code, yet it is an irregularity of such a nature as to cause no one to suffer or permit anyone to complain in reference thereto.

5. The Jones Construction Company complains that the state highway commissioner has never taken action apportioning the cost between the two counties, as provided for in section 1220 General Code, which provides that:

> "The cost and expense of the construction of such improvement, over and above the amount to be paid by the state shall be equitably apportioned by the state highway commissioner between the counties interested therein."

In connection with this I think that we ought to consider the provisions of section 1211 General Code, which reads as it was amended in the White-Mulcahy act and as it practically read under the old law:

> "Upon the completion of the improvement, the state highway commissioner shall immediately ascertain the cost and expense thereof, and apportion the same to the state, county, township or townships and abutting property."

I think that this same provision would apply in the matter of an improvement located on the line between two counties, and further it must be remembered that each county has in the final resolutions entered into by it agreed to assume a certain portion of the cost and expense of the improvement. Hence, I am of the opinion that there is no irregularity in reference to this matter.

6. The construction company makes the claim that the county auditor's certificate to the effect that money was in the treasury of Mahoning county to take care of its share of the cost and expense of the improvement was false. Of this I am not informed other than in the brief of the attorneys for the construction company, but I am assuming it to be a fact.

It is further stated in the brief that the county commissioners of Mahoning county sold the bonds in March of this year to take care of its share of the cost and expense of the improvement. This would seem to indicate that the money was not in the treasury when the certificate was made.

This is possibly the most vital question that is raised by The Jones Construction Company. The courts have held in numerous cases that the failure to make a certificate by the proper officer invalidates or makes null and void a contract entered into involving the expenditure of money; but there is no case with which I am familiar in which the court passed upon the question as to the effect of the proper official making a false statement in reference to the matter of the necessary funds being in the treasury.

Section 5660 General Code provides that the commissioners of a county shall not enter into any contract unless the auditor first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn. The certificate in this case was made and the contract was duly entered into in view of said certificate. Hence, at least with a technical construction placed upon said section, the county commissioners acted in accordance with the provisions of this section and entered into the final resolutions which were filed with the state highway commissioner, and at least I am of the opinion that these final resolutions entered into by the county commissioners were of sufficient force to warrant the state highway commissioner in entering into the contract with The Jones Construction Company.

It must be remembered that this certificate which is questioned has nothing to do with the contract entered into by the state highway commissioner with The Jones Construction Company, but it has to do with the final resolutions of the county commissioners. However, I am not unmindful of the fact that section 1218 General Code provides that no contract can thus be entered into for an improvement until the final resolutions of the county commissioners are filed with the state highway department. There is no complaint made that the money is not now in the treasury. The fact of the matter is that the money is in the treasuries of both Columbiana and Mahoning counties, and for that reason I am of the opinion that The Jones Construction Company has no right to complain in reference to this matter.

Counsel for the company state in their brief that an injunction suit might be brought at any time by a taxpayer against the county's paying out the money which they are obligated to pay. It seems to me that this is too remote a proposition to consider.

While, as said before, there are some irregularities in these proceedings, yet it seems to me that there are none of sufficient importance that a court would be warranted in granting relief to a taxpayer, especially when he has sat by until the work has progressed to the extent to which it has now come.

In general, I desire to say that The Jones Construction Company in this matter was not in any way interfered with in the matter of the progress of the work. They accepted the contract some time in September; they began the work under the contract; they received their money upon estimates made by the engineer, and the money today necessary to take care of the obligation entered into by the state highway commissioner is at hand.

Hence, I am of the opinion that there is nothing connected with the proceedings in reference to the improvement of the highway in question which would warrant the state in releasing The Jones Construction Company from the obligations which it has assumed under the terms of the contract.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—BOND ISSUE—NECESSARY VOTE UNDER SECTION 1259—LAW GOVERNING AFTER 1917 AMENDMENTS—NOT PART OF PROCEEDING BEFORE STATE BOARD OF HEALTH.

Section 1259 G. C., as amended in 1917, must be interpreted as requiring an affirmative vote on the question of the issuance of bonds, required therein to be submitted to the electors, of a majority of the electors voting at the election.

The issuance of bonds by a municipal corporation is no part of the proceeding before the state board of health to compel the installation of water or sewage facilities.

After the amendments of 1917 go into effect, all bonds issued by municipal corporations under the Bense act must be governed by such amendments; but no other feature of the administration of the law as to proceedings instituted prior to the amendments are affected thereby.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1917.

State Board of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "In March, 1917, House Bill No. 262 was enacted, amending sections 1249, 1250, 1251 and 1259 of the General Code, and repealing the said original sections. As amended, section 1259 requires that the question of the issuance of bonds shall be submitted to a vote of the electors.
> "Query: What affirmative vote will be required for the issuance of such bonds?
> "A number of proceedings under sections 1249 to 1261, inclusive, General Code, will have reached the following stages when the amended sections take effect. These may be classified as follows:
> "1. Matters concerning which complaints have been received by this department but no further steps taken.
> "2. Matters which have been complained of and investigated, and concerning which the board has adopted findings but has not issued orders.
> "3. Matters concerning which the board has adopted orders, which orders have not received approval of the governor and the attorney-general.
> "4. Matters concerning which orders duly approved by the governor and the attorney-general have been issued but in which the municipalities so ordered have not provided the necessary funds for compliance."
> "Query: To what extent and in what manner will the said sections 1249, 1250, 1251 and 1259 General Code, as amended, affect the foregoing proceedings?"

Section 1259 G. C., as amended by H. B. No. 262, provides in full as follows:

> "Each municipal council, department or officer having jurisdiction to provide for the raising of revenues by tax levies, sale of bonds or otherwise, shall take all steps necessary to secure the funds for any such purpose or purposes. The council of a municipality, by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, by ordinance shall issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, and at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent per annum, as said council shall determine and in the manner provided by law, in order to provide the funds necessary and proper to carry out and perform all of the conditions of said finding and order and to make and install any or all of the improvements and changes herein provided, and the question of the issuance and sale of said bonds shall be submitted to a vote of the electors. When the funds are so secured, or the bonds therefor have been authorized by the proper municipal authority, such funds shall be considered as in the treasury and appropriated for such particular purpose or purposes, and shall not be used for any other purpose. The bonds authorized to be issued for any such purpose or purposes, in any one year, shall not exceed six per cent. of the total value of all property in any city or village, as listed and assessed for taxation, and shall be in addition to the total bonded indebtedness of such city or village otherwise permitted by law, and as to such bonds the limitations of sections 3940, 3941 and 3952 of the General Code shall not in any manner apply or prevent or delay the issuance and sale of said bonds. The interest and sinking fund levies on account of bonds issued under this section by any municipal corporation, in compliance with said orders of the state board of health, shall be exempt from all limitations on tax levies provided by sections 5649-2, 5649-3a and 5649-5b of the General Code."

Prior to its amendment, this section provided that the question of the issuance and sale of the bonds should not be required to be submitted to the electors, but did not provide (as it does since the amendment has gone into effect) that the interest and sinking fund levies on account of the bonds should be exempt from the limitations of what is popularly known as the Smith law. Evidently the general assembly, in creating the exemption from tax limitations, thought best to safeguard the issuance of such bonds by requiring their submission to a vote of the electors. It is only proper to say that these are not the only changes made in the section, as the limitation on the amount which may be issued is changed from five per cent. generally in the old section to six per cent. in any one year in the amended section.

It is clear, both by expression and by necessary implication, that the power to issue bonds, conferred upon municipal corporations by section 1259 as amended, is an independent substantive power. Not only do the limitations of the Longworth act not apply, but the procedure of the Longworth act is necessarily not applicable; otherwise it would not have been necessary for the legislature expressly to provide, as it did for the first time in the amendment of section 1259, by H. B. No. 262, that:

"* * The council of a municipality, by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, by ordinance shall issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, and at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent. per annum, as said council shall determine and in the manner provided by law. * *."

Here is another change as compared with the old section, for under that act the council is merely directed to > "take all steps necessary to secure the funds for any such purpose or purposes."

The steps to be taken must be in accordance with and under the authority of other statutes. But the intention to take the proceedings under section 1259 G. C. out of the operation of the Longworth act for all purposes, is, I think, rather clearly manifested on the face of the section as amended.

It follows, therefore, that merely because the somewhat analogous provision of the Longworth law (sections 3943 to 3947 inc. G. C.) require a favorable vote of two-thirds of the voters at such election, upon the question of issuing bonds under that law, it does not therefore follow that the vote required under section 1259 G. C. shall be a two-thirds vote. It might nevertheless be argued that section 1259, in requiring the submission of the question to a vote of the electors, provides no machinery such as is elaborately set forth in sections 3943 to 3947 inc. G. C. Thus it does not provide how the council or other department or officer shall proceed in determining to submit the question to a vote of the electors, nor what shall be the duties of the deputy state supervisors of elections, where the election shall be held, how it shall be canvassd, when it shall be held, what notice thereof shall be given, nor what shall be the form of the ballots.

Therefore it might be concluded that inasmuch as the legislature had not provided the necessary machinery in section 1259, it must have intended that that machinery which exists and is available for use in the most similar case, viz., that of the issuance of bonds under the Longworth act by vote of the people, should be followed in acting under section 1259, even though in the academic sense the power to act under section 1259 is separate and distinct from that embodied in the Longworth act.

Even if this reasoning must be accepted and if, to save section 1259 from fatal ambiguity and inconsistencies and to give effect to the probable intention of the legislature, the submission to a vote must be in the manner provided by sections 3943 to 3946 inc. G. C., being a part of the Longworth act, still such a conclusion is not equivalent to holding that the question shall require the favorable vote of two-thirds of the electors, as this requirement of section 3947 G. C. is, strictly speaking, not a machinery provision, but rather a substantive requirement.

Ordinarily, a vote of the electors is determined by the express will of the majority, and in the absence of any express or implied requirement that a larger proportion shall vote in favor of the proposition in order to carry it, a majority vote is to be understood.

However, I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that no municipal corporation is authorized under other existing laws to issue bonds by a vote of the electors, otherwise than upon the approval of two-thirds of the electors. See section 3931 G. C., providing for the issuance of deficiency bonds. There may be exceptions, but it would seem to be the general policy of our state legislature to require that municipal bonds should be approved by two-thirds of the electors, if the approval of the electors is required at all.

These considerations bring the issue raised by your first question to a fine point. On the one hand, in order to save section 1259 G. C. from hopeless ambiguity, it might be regarded as necessary to read at least part of the machinery provisions of the Longworth act into the section. The requirement in the Longworth act, that two-thirds of the electors shall vote favorably on the proposition, is very closely connected with such machinery provisions, and in one sense may be said to be a part of it; also it may fairly be said to be the general policy of the state to require the concurrence of two-thirds of the electors of a corporation, in order to sustain the issuance of bonds when such question is submitted to the electors.

On the other hand we have the facts that section 1259 G. C. embodies what is in its essence at least an independent, substantive power to issue bonds, and that by its silence, respecting the vote which shall be required on the part of the electors to authorize such issuance, it brings into play the general principle that a majority vote alone is sufficient.

I have come to the conclusion that the choice between these two views is dictated by the fact that section 1259 G. C. (107 O. L. 185) as amended, standing by itself and quite independent of the Longworth act, may be given force and effect.

Section 4785 G. C. provides as follows:

> "Except when otherwise provided by law, all public elections in this state shall be conducted according to the provisions of this title."

Section 4840 G. C. provides :

> "Unless a statute providing for the submission of a question to the voters of a county, township, city or village provides for the calling of a special election for that purpose, no special election shall be so called. The question so to be voted upon shall be submitted at a regular election in such county, township, city or village and notice that such question is to be voted upon shall be embodied in the proclamation for such election."

Section 5122 G. C. provides:

> "Where it is provided by statute that a question shall be submitted to the qualified voters of a county, township, city or village, and such statute is silent as to the number of votes necessary to authorize the performance of the act voted upon, such statute shall mean that a majority of all the qualified voters voting at such election must vote in favor thereof, in order to authorize such act."

These sections have the effect of fixing the time of holding the election referred to in section 1259 G. C., if it is not otherwise fixed, of providing for the giving of notice thereof, and of determining beyond question the precise thing inquired about by you, namely, the number of votes necessary to authorize the issuance of bonds. Indeed, the effect of section 4785 G. C. is still more far-reaching, as it makes applicable to the special election in question, so far as appropriate, all the provisions of the title relating to public elections.

It is true, however, that some things which really ought to be provided for, in order to complete the machinery for holding such an election, are not specifically dealt with in the general election laws. Nowhere is there a specific provision as to the form of the ballots for the purpose of ascertaining the will of the electors, nor is any board or officer given authority to prescribe such form. Perhaps there is not quite enough machinery to enable one to determine exactly how the votes shall be canvassed and the results certified to the proper officer.

An argument might be advanced to the effect that these omissions would make it impossible to sustain section 1259 G. C. as an independent section, so that recourse would have to be had to the Longworth act, which does specifically provide for all these things, in order to furnish the complete machinery.

The weight of any such an argument would be destroyed, I think, by consideration of the fact that there are many sections in the General Code providing for the submission of questions to electors of different subdivisions, which are silent in some and perhaps all of the vital respects in which section 1259 G. C. is silent. Let me refer to sections 3211, 3077, 3981, 4142 and 3260 G. C. as instances of this sort of legislation.

It is true that by far the greater number of statutes authorizing or requiring submission of questions to the electors do specifically provide for such an important matter as the form of ballots, in particular. But in view of the fact that a respectable number of statutes do not so provide, I cannot find that it is the legislative policy of this state to make such provision in all cases. Therefore I am unable to conclude, on grounds of legislative policy, that section 1259 G. C. must be interpreted in connection with the Longworth act.

For similar reasons it will not do to say that section 1259 G. C. cannot stand alone, regardless of the question of policy and for the mere reason that it is ineffectual without such additional provision. To do so would be to hold all the other sections referred to void for a like reason.

However, the most satisfactory dispostion of the question would seem to be to hold that where a statute providing for the submission of a question to a vote of the electors of a sub-division fails to provide for such matters as the form of ballots and the like, the authority to make such provision must result as an implied power in some officer or tribunal. The officer or tribunal having such implied power must be either the authority which submits the question to the electors or the board of deputy state supervisors of elections.

Whatever may be the case, where the submitting authority is an executive officer and the statutes are silent, I feel quite certain that the council of a municipal corporation, in which is vested all the legislative powers granted by the municipal code and allied sections, is the proper authority to determine the form of the ballots for election to be held under section 1259 G. C. The subject matter of the action of council is essentially legislative—the borrowing of money on behalf of the city—and full power is by necessary implication vested in the council to provide the necessary machinery for the submission of the question to the electors to the extent that the statutes themselves are silent.

My conclusion with respect to your first question is, then, that the election to be held under section 1259 G. C., as amended (107 O. L. 185), must be held on the day of holding the regular November election. This means that there is opportunity to vote upon such a question only once in every two years, except in charter cities where the frequency with which there may be an opportunity to vote upon the question may be determined by the frequency with which municipal elections may be held under the charter.

It might be argued that section 4740 G. C. authorizes the submission of a question at any regular election. I should like to bring myself to this conclusion for the purposes of your inquiry, but I cannot do so. The election must be an election "in such city or village," and notice of it must under section 4740 G. C. "be embodied in the proclamation for such election."

The only occasion upon which the proclamation for a regular election in a city or village is authorized or required, is when there is to be an election "for municipal officers" (section 4837 G. C.). The proclamations for general elections are to be made by the sheriff under section 4827, and such proclamations are to be made "throughout the county."

Reading all the statutes together, it seems clear to me that section 4840 G. C. does not apply to any regular election, but only to an election for which a proclamation, addressed to the electors of the particular subdivision who are to vote on the question, is to be issued.

Further answering your question, I am of the opinion that under section 5122 G. C., above quoted, the affirmative vote of a majority of all the qualified voters voting at the election is necessary. This means that the proposition must receive the support of such number of affirmative votes as constitutes more than half of the highest total vote cast for the candidates for any office filled at such election or upon any question submitted thereat. It does not mean a majority of the votes cast on the proposition, nor does it on the other hand mean a majority of the number of voters qualified to vote at the election.

State ex rel. v. Foraker, 46 O. S. 677.

Your second general question, or group of questions, involves consideration of section 26 G. C., as applying to the effect of H. B. No. 262 upon pending proceedings. The act itself contains no express provision as to what that effect shall be and therefore the general section referred to comes into play. It provides as follows:

> "Sec. 26. Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, civil or criminal, and when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy, it shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions or proceedings, unless so expressed, nor shall any repeal or amendment affect causes of such amendment or repeal, unless otherwise provided in the amending or repealing act."

I have carefully examined the amendments of sections 1249, 1250 and 1251 G. C. as contained in H. B. No. 262. None of them could possibly have any effect save by the mere fact that they involve a repeal and a simultaneous re-enactment of these sections upon proceedings of the classes that might have been instituted and carried to any particular point under the old sections bearing the same numbers. That is to say, none of the substance of the old sections is taken away by these amendments; on the contrary, new authority is merely added.

Thus, in section 1249 G. C., the changes consist of authorizing a petition to the state board of health on the part of ten of the qualified electors of a city or village, and extending the subject matter of such complaints to the inadequacy of a public water supply and waterworks distribution system and the flushing of sewers and the disposal of sewage by means of water, in addition to the subject matter which might be made the foundation of the complaint under the original section.

Without going into detail, the changes made in sections 1250 and 1251 G. C., by H. B. No. 262, are of the same general character—nothing is destroyed or taken away; all that is done is to add new matter, which does not of itself have any modifying effect upon powers existing under the old section.

This being the case, section 26 G. C. is not even invoked by these amendments; for it is well settled that even in the absence of a saving clause, the simultaneous repeal and re-enactment of a section for the purpose of amending it, does not affect the continuing existence of the law in the respects in which it is not amended, but it is taken to have been the law all the time, without interruption.

See authorities cited in State xe rel. v. Spiegel, 91 O. S. 13.

As above stated, however, radical changes are made by H. B. No. 262 in the substance of section 1259 G. C., and this fact raises the question as to whether the issuance of bonds under original section 1259 was a part of the proceeding which for the purpose of the statement of the question might be assumed to have commenced upon the filing of the initial complaint with the state board of health.

In my opinion this question must be answered in the negative. The Bense act, so called, provided generally for the making of complaints to the state board of health, for certain investigations, hearings, appeals, references, etc., all culminating in an order of the board, to a municipal corporation, for example, requiring it to do certain things. This order in my opinon was and is the end of the proceeding described. The subsequent steps of the city council, in raising funds necessary to comply with the order, were and are separate and independent proceedings.

This position is sustained in principle, I think, by the decision in Alexander v. Spencer, 13 G. C. (N. S.) 475, affirmed without report at 83 O. S. 492, wherein it was held that the levy of taxes to pay for the redemption of bonds issued in payment of a sewerage improvement was no part of the proceeding to improve the sewer.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that while in a strict sense the amendments of H. B. No. 262 will not affect any of the proceedings enumerated by you, yet section 1259 G. C., as amended, will apply to and govern the power of any municipal corporation to borrow money for the purpose of complying with the orders of the board of health on and after the day when it becomes effective, regardless of when any proceeding resulting in such order may have been instituted.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP HIGHWAY SUPERINTENDENT—OFFICE CEASES JUNE 28, 1917—COMPENSATION—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—COMPENSATION.

1. The office or employment of the township highway superintendent ceases on June 28th, 1917, by virtue of the provisions of amended section 3370 G. C. and he is entitled to no compensation on and after said date.

2. The township trustees are entitled to a compensation of $2.50 per day on and after the taking effect of the new law. But they cannot receive to exceed more than $250.00 for this or any succeeding year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1917.

HON. GEO. F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your inquiry under date of August 6th, 1917, relative to the method to be pursued by the township trustees under the new road law (H. B. No. 300).

Your communication reads, in part, as follows:

> "* * * Section 3370 provides three methods of procedure. If the trustees proceed under the first method of designating one of their number to look after the maintenance of the roads, or if they proceed under the second and divide it into three road districts, each member superintending his district, it would necessarily greatly increase the burdens and duties, respectively, of one member or of the three members of the board of trustees.

"House Bill No. 176 amends section 3294 of the General Code, increasing the compensation of township trustees from $1.50 to $2.50 per day, and the total compensation from $150 to $250 per year.

"1. Was the township highway superintendent's office abolished June 28th, 1917, by the amendment of section 3370?

"2. Would a payment to such road superintendent, subsequent to June 28th, be legal?

"3. If the trustees were to proceed under method one, could such trustee appointed be legally paid his fee for such work?

"4. If the second method mentioned in section 3370 were followed, could each trustee be paid for such work?

"5. Is the compensation, as provided in said H. B. No. 176 available to the present incumbent in the office of township trustee, or will such payment be deferred until new officers are elected and take office?"

In your communication you ask for an opinion upon five different propositions:

(1.) Was the township highway superintendent's office or employment abolished June 28th, 1917 The office or employment of the township highway superintendent ceased to exist on the 28th day of June, 1917, the day upon which the new highway law became effective. Under the new law township trustees must adopt a resolution, duly entered upon their journal, setting forth the method to be followed in their township in the matter of the maintenance and repair of township roads. They may select any one of the three methods set out in section 3370 of the White-Mulcahy act.

From this it is quite evident that the legislature intended that the duties of the township highway superintendent, appointed under the former law, should cease upon he new law becoming effective.

(2.) You ask whether it would be legal to pay a road superintendent appointed under the old law after the new law became effective, viz., June 28th, 1917.

From the answer to the first question it is readily seen that such superintendent cannot be paid after June 28th, 1917, and this for the reason that his appointment or employment ceases.

(3.) You ask if the trustees were to proceed under method one as set out in section 3370 of this act, could such trustee be legally paid his fee for such work.

(4.) This question is the same in principle as the fourth, which inquires if the second method mentioned in section 3370 were followed, could each trustee be paid for such work.

In answer to both these questions I will say that the trustees could be paid for work rendered under and by virtue of the provisions of section 3370 G. C. with this condition, that they could not receive to exceed $250.00 for the present year's work. That is, the compensation of the township trustees was changed from one dollar and fifty cents to two dollars and fifty cents per day. This change became effective at the date the law, of which the section was a part, became effective, with this condition, however, that the maximum compensation of the township trustees should not exceed in any one year $250.00. This limitation would apply to the present year.

You suggest in your letter that the same principle possibly should be made to apply to the county surveyor and to the township trustees, and you further suggest that in an opinion heretofore rendered by me I held that the salary of the county surveyor would not change until the first Monday in September, that is, when the present term of the county surveyor expired. There is a difference between the county surveyor and township trustees. When the section pertaining to the pay of the county surveyor is considered, it will be noticed that the county surveyor draws a salary; under the old law a salary not to exceed $4,000 and under the new law, a salary not to exceed $6,000. Hence, section 20 of article II of the constitution would apply to the county surveyor, but the pay of township trustees is not in any sense a salary. It is merely compensation, and our courts have always held that said constitutional provision while it applies to salary does not apply to compensation.

(5.) The answer I have given to the questions thus far answers your fifth question, viz., the compensation provided for in House Bill No. 176 is available to the present incumbent of the office of township trustee, and he need not wait until the expiration of his present existing term to have the advantage of this section.

I have been very brief in answering your questions for the reason that, in the main, I have treated the questions you ask at length in former opinions rendered by me, and I am enclosing a copy of these opinions for your consideration; one was rendered on June 18th, 1917, to Hon. Jared P. Huxley, prosecuting attorney, Youngstown, Ohio, and the other to the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP CLERKS—TRUSTEES—TREASURERS—COMPENSATION—WHEN LAW BECAME EFFECTIVE.

1. The sections of the statute modifying the compensation of township clerks, treasurers and trustees became effective on the same day that the acts of which they are a part became operative. Section 20 of article II of the constitution does not apply because said officers draw compensation and not salaries.

2. Trustees will be entitled to receive not to exceed $250 for the present year; the clerk, $250; the treasurer in townships where there is no city, $150; and wherein there is a city, $250; excepting that the treasurer is entitled to all the fees earned before July 2, 1917, even though they should exceed the said limitation.

3. The compensation provided for clerk by section 3298-15m General Code is included within the maximum amount allowed, and is not over and above the said amount.

4. The change in compensation in reference to township trustees takes effect when the act of which section 3372 General Code is a part becomes operative. There is no particular conflict between the provisions of section 3372 and 3294 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 27, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter requesting my opinion upon the following:

"In view of sections 3308 and 3318, General Code, being amended by H. B. 406, filed with the secretary of state April 3, 1917, and becoming a law on July 2, 1917, and section 3294, General Code, being amended by H. B. 176, filed with the secretary of state April 3, 1917, and becoming a law on July 2, 1917, together with the provisions of article II, section 20 of the constitution of Ohio, which provides that the salary of any officer cannot be changed during his existing term, and the various court decisions thereunder as to the difference between compensation and salary:

"Question I. Do these laws as amended become operative on July 2, 1917, during the term of the township clerk, treasurer and trustees, or not until the term of the present officials mentioned has been completed?

"Question II. If such laws become operative on July 2, 1917, would the proper method of computation be to compute compensation for the first six months of 1917 under the old law with the maximum limitation of one-half year's compensation, and the compensation for the last six months of 1917 under the new law with one-half year's portion of the maximum limitation?

"Question III. Does the compensation provided for the clerk by section 3298-15m, of H. B. 300, embracing both the amounts for making record and reasonable compensation allowable, come within the limitations of the maximum amount already mentioned, or is this in addition thereto?

"Question IV. In view of the provisions of section 3298-15m, and section 3372, of House Bill 300, filed in the office of the secretary of state March 29, 1917, and becoming a law June 27, 1917, and House Bills 406 and 176, becoming laws July 2, 1917, how may the same be reconciled as to which date the officials mentioned in these sections will commence to draw their new compensations?"

Your questions relate to the compensation of township trustees, township treasurer and township clerk, as affected by certain recent amendments of the statutes. The changes made in the statutory law are shown by the following quotations:

Section 3294 G. C., as it existed prior to 1917, was as follows:

"Each trustee shall be entitled to one dollar and fifty cents for each day of service in the discharge of his duties in relation to partition fences, to be paid in equal proportions by the parties, and one dollar and fifty cents for each day of service in the business of the township, to be paid from the township treasury. The compensation of any trustee to be paid from the treasury shall not exceed one hundred and fifty dollars in any year including services in connection with the poor. * * *"

The same section as amended (107 O. L. 698) (filed in the office of the secretary of state April 3, 1917) reads as follows:

"Each trustee shall be entitled to one dollar and fifty cents for each day of service in the discharge of his duties in relation to partition fences, to be paid in equal proportions by the parties, and two dollars and fifty cents for each day of service in the business of the township, to be paid from the township treasury. The compensation of any trustee to be paid from the treasury shall not exceed two hundred and fifty dollars in any year including services in connection with the poor. * * *"

The foregoing section relates to the compensation of the township trustees.

Section 3308 G. C. as it existed prior to 1917 was as follows:

"The clerk shall be entitled to the following fees, to be paid by the parties requiring the service: twenty-five cents for recording each mark or brand; ten cents for each hundred words of record required in the establishment of township roads, to be opened and repaired by the parties; ten cents for each hundred words of records or copies in matters relating to partition fences, but not less than twenty-five cents for any one copy, to be paid from the township treasury; ten cents for each hundred words of record required in the establishment of township roads, to be opened and kept in repair by the superintendents; for keeping the record of the proceedings of the trustees, stating and making copies of accounts and settlements, attending suits for and against the township, and for any other township business the trustees require him to perform such reasonable compensation as they allow. In no one year shall he be entitled to receive from the township treasury more than one hundred and fifty dollars."

The same section as amended, 107 O. L. 651 (filed in the office of the secretary of state April 3, 1917) reads as follows:

"Sec. 3308. The clerk shall be entitled to the following fees, to be paid by the parties requiring the service: twenty-five cents for recording each mark or brand; ten cents for each hundred words of record required in the establishment of township roads, to be opened and repaired by the parties; ten cents for each hundred words of records or copies in matters relating to partition fences, but not less than twenty-five cents for any one copy, to be paid from the township treasury; ten cents for each hundred words of record required in the establishment of township roads, to be opened and kept in repair by the superintendents; for keeping the record of the proceedings of the trustees, stating and making copies of accounts and settlements, attending suits for and against the township, and for any other township business the trustees require him to perform, such reasonable compensation as they allow. In no one year shall he be entitled to receive from the township treasury more than two hundred and fifty dollars."

Section 3298-15m G. C., as enacted in 107 O. L. 69, 82 (filed in the office of the secretary of state March 29, 1917) reads as follows:

"The trustees shall provide the township clerk with a suitable book in which he shall keep a complete record of proceedings for the construction, reconstruction, resurfacing or improvement of public roads. For making such record he shall receive ten cents for each one hundred words and for all other services in connection therewith he shall receive such reasonable compensation as may be allowed him by the township trustees."

The foregoing sections relate to the compensation of the township clerk.

Section 3318 G. C., as it existed prior to 1917, was as follows:

> "The treasurer shall be allowed and may retain as his fees for receiving, safe keeping and paying out moneys belonging to the township treasury, two per cent of all moneys paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees."

The same section as amended, 107 O. L. 652 (filed in the office of the secretary of state April 3, 1917) reads as follows:

> "Sec. 3318. The treasurer shall be allowed and may retain as his fees for receiving, safe keeping and paying out moneys belonging to the township treasury, two per cent of all moneys paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees, but in no one year shall he be entitled to receive from the township treasury more than one hundred and fifty dollars, except that in a township wherein a city is located and such city is a part of such township, a township treasurer shall be entitled to receive from the township treasury not more than three hundred dollars in one year."

1. For the purposes of your first question, it is to be noted that with respect to the compensation of township treasurer, the same prior to its last amendment consisted entirely of fees, but that by such amendment the limitation on the amount of fees receivable in any one year was imposed; that with respect to the compensation of the other officers named, the law in force prior to 1917 provided for fees with a maximum limitation on the amount to be paid from the public treasury in any one year, and that the amendments of 1917 raised these maximum limitations.

The answer to your first question depends upon whether or not these changes are violated by article II, section 20 of the constitution, which provides that:

> "The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished."

From the earliest times in this state it has been uniformally held that the word "salary," as used in this section, is designedly employed in contradistinction to the term "compensation" as used in the same section; that a change of compensation other than salary, to take effect during the existing term of an officer, is not prohibited, and that a salary is compensation dependent upon the lapse of time only, and in nowise dependent upon the amount of official services performed.

These principles furnish a direct answer to the question relating to the change made in the compensation of the township treasurer. Prior to 1917 this officer was on a straight fee basis. It is competent for the legislature at any time to change such compensation. I am of the opinion, therefore, that when the amendment relating to the compensation of the township treasurer went into effect, it immediately applied to the compensation of the township treasurers then in office.

The question is not essentially dissimilar as regards the other two officers inquired about. The mere fact that there was a maximum limitation upon the amount that might be drawn from the public treasury in favor of either of these officers, as compensation in any one year, did not make that compensation a "salary." While limited by a rule which had reference to the lapse of time, yet such compensation was not absolutely dependent upon a lapse of time, but was also dependent upon the amount of services rendered. That is to say, while not more than one hundred and fifty dollars could be drawn from the treasury in any one year, under the old law, by either of these officers, yet, unless the requisite official services were performed, that amount could not be so drawn. In essence, then, these officers too were on a fee basis, and in my opinion the change in the law applied to and governed the compensation of the trustees and clerks in office at the time the amendment became effective.

2. Your second question requires me to consider just how this change operated. In my opinion the suggestion made by you should not be followed. There never was any limitation in the law upon the amount that might be received by any of these officers in any given period of time less than a year. It was perfectly lawful for a township treasurer, for example, to draw his percentages on the amount of money paid out as they were earned, so long as the old law was in effect, and if these percentages so drawn exceeded in amount the sum fixed by the new law, there is nothing in the new law requiring him to refund what he has already drawn. He is simply prevented from drawing any additional compensation for duties he performs during the remainder of the year by the operation of the newly effective limitation. To be sure, if he has not drawn an amount in fees up to the maximum limit, he would be entitled to draw fees for services rendered under the new law during the remainder of the year up until the limit is reached.

Similarly, a township trustee or clerk might have drawn fees only slightly less than one hundred and fifty dollars in amount, in that portion of the year preceding the day when the new law became effective, without violating the old law, for under such old law he was entitled to his fees as fast as they were earned, until the limit had been reached. When the new law became effective and raised the limit, either of such officers would be permitted to go on drawing his fees as they were earned, until the aggregate drawn in the year reached the limit set by the new law.

The only difficult question which arises here is that which is made by a case in which a trustee or clerk may have drawn up to the limit of one hundred and fifty dollars before the new law went into effect. In such case it is clear that after the new law went into effect he could commence drawing fees again until the aggregate drawn by him during the year would reach the limit fixed by the new law.

The question is as to whether such officer would be entitled, after the new law went into effect, to receive from the public treasury, for his own use, the fees for the services performed after the limit had been reached under the old law and before the new law went into effect. In my opinion he would not be entitled to do this; for at the time fees were earned the law then in force prohibited him from receiving them for his own use.

So if a trustee, for example, had drawn one hundred and fifty dollars on June 1 within the year, and then performed official services for which fees payable from the township treasury might otherwise have been charged and retained by him during the month of June and until the new law went into effect, then after the new law went into effect such trustee might again retain for his own use the fees payable from the public treasury, for services performed by him, until he had reached the two hundred and fifty dollar limit of the new law; but he could not go back and receive for his own use the fees earned for services performed during the month of June.

I take it that the bureau is assuming that the "year," to which all these sections refer, is the official year, i. e., the year of the term of office of one of these designated officers. This assumption is, in my opinion, correct.

3. In answer to your third question I am of the opinion that the compensation provided for in section 3298-15m of the General Code is embraced within the limitations referred to. Regardless of the respective dates of the enactment of this section and the amendment of section 3294 of the General Code, it is rather clear to me that this particular section is to be interpreted in the light of the fact that at all times before and after its enactment there was in force a general limitation on the compensation of the township clerk. I think the legislature must be deemed to have had this fact in mind, and as there is nothing in section 3298-15m of the General Code which shows that the legislature intended that compensation receivable thereunder should be outside of the maximum limitation, I conclude that it is within that limitaton.

I have heretofore rendered an opinion upon this particular question, and I am enclosing a copy of the same herewith for your consideration.

4. Your last question, in so far as it relates to section 3298-15m G. C., is of course made unnecessary by what has just been said, as the special compensation receivable under that section must be drawn as fees, subject to whatever limitation may have been in force at the time the particular services thereunder were rendered.

So far as section 3372 G. C. is concerned, the question which you have in mind arises from the fact that this section covers the same subject matter as that covered by section 3294 G. C. above quoted. Section 3372 G. C., as amended, 107 O. L. 93, is as follows:

> "Sec. 3372. When the trustees of any township determine to proceed in either the first or the second method hereinbefore provided, the trustee or trustees designated to have charge of the maintenance and repair of roads and culverts within the township, or within a road district thereof, shall receive two dollars and fifty cents for each day of service in the discharge of such duties, but the total compensation of any township trustee to be paid from the treasury under this and all other sections of the General Code shall not exceed two hundred and fifty dollars in any year."

This law, as you have observed, went into effect a little before section 329 G. C., as amended, became effective. Both sections, as observed, relate to the same subject matter, yet they are in no way inconsistent with each other. Section 3372 G. C. certainly covers the entire ground, and from the date when it became effective it furnishes the maximum limitation on the compensation of township trustees payable from the township treasury. The mere fact that the other section coming along later also imposes the same limitation, is of no significance. The change in the limitation as to township trustees is determined by the date at which section 3372 of the General Code became effective, and the subsequently arising effectiveness of the amendment to section 3294 of the General Code is of no significance.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FINES—COSTS—FEES—COLLECTED FOR VIOLATION OF DAIRY AND FOOD LAW—PAID TO SECRETARY OF BOARD OF AGRICULTURE.

The words "fines, costs and fees" as used in section 1177-14 General Code, providing for the payment of such fines, etc., to the secretary of agriculture means the same as fines, costs and fees in other statutes, and require the payment of all such fines, costs and fees collected under the dairy and food provisions of the act reorganizing the department of agriculture. (107 O. L., 460.)

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 28, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On July 28, 1917, you requested my opinion as follows:

> "We refer you to the provisions of section 1177-14 General Code as amended 107 O. L. page 478, relative to fines, fees and costs which shall be paid to the secretary of agriculture.
> "Do the words, 'fines and costs,' herein, embrace the regular court costs and fees, the same as any other case in a police court, municipal court, or justice's court, or do these words refer only to the fees and costs that may be connected therewith through the action of a representative of the board of agriculture?"

On July 31, you sent the following supplemental communication:

> "In connection with our request for opinion under date of July 28th, relative to fines and costs in section 1177-14 G. C., we are enclosing herewith blank form used by the state board of agriculture which may throw a little light upon the matter. It would appear from this form that the words 'Costs and Fees,' as embodied in this section, had been interpreted by the board of agriculture to mean costs and fees of inspection and analysis by employes of said board."

The section you refer to is as follows:

> "Section 1177-14. (107 O. L. 478.) All fines, fees and costs collected under prosecutions begun, or caused to be begun, by the secretary of agriculture, shall be paid by the court to the secretary of agriculture within thirty days after collection, unless error proceedings have been properly begun and prosecuted and in case the judgment of the justice of the peace is sustained the fine shall be paid within thirty days after such judgment or affirmance, and by the secretary paid into the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund."

No reason is apparent for giving the language of the above section any other than its usual and natural meaning. The plain statement is that all fines and fees and costs when collected in suits started by the secretary of agriculture shall be paid to the secretary, and there is nothing either in the context or in the reason of the case requiring any restrictive significance. In fact we have to look to the context or elsewhere than to the plain terms of the act itself to raise any question of interpretation, and it is probably by such reference to what precedes the section that the person who prepared the blank attached was led into some doubt and confusion.

The terms "fines," "fees" and "costs" have an ordinary and well understood meaning. The word "fees" taken alone might have a different meaning and might apply to other than judicial proceedings, but being found between "fines" and "costs" determines its nature in the present case. By the application of the maxim noscitur a sociis it is in the present instance confined to fees in the sense of costs, two terms that are often used interchangeably, and yet between which there is a slight distinction; as we say "witness fees" and sometimes "attorney fees" are to be taxed as "costs." In the present case it applies to any such fees—any fees that are incident to the judicial proceeding in which a fine is imposed and costs attach. This section by its express terms, which are as general as they could be made, includes all prosecutions carried on by the secretary of agriculture. It was formerly section 378 General Code and was in a chapter headed "Dairy and Food Commissioner," the principal change being the change of the name of the office. The secretary of agriculture, however, has in addition to all the power formerly exercised by the dairy and food commissioner a number of other departments. This statute by its plain language clearly extends this power to the other departments as well as the dairy and food department, he being the equal successor of all. However, there are other sections in the act which are contradictory to this act, and in order to give effect to all it is necessary to read them as exceptions, as for instance, by section 1140 it is provided:

> "All moneys derived from the provisions of sections 1122 to 1140 inclusive of the General Code shall be paid to the board of agriculture and by it deposited in the state treasury to the credit of the agricultural fund, and to be expended in promoting and protecting the horticultural interest of the state."

This, then, must be subtracted from the general provisions contained in section 1177-14 providing that these fines and costs go into the general revenue fund, and this is plain and easy of application, the section in question applying to the subject of nursery stock and the fines and fees being imposed for violations of that branch of the act.

A more serious question arises with reference to the other provisions, of which the following is one:

> "Section 1177-51. The moneys received under the provisions of this act shall be paid into the state treasury accredited to the agricultural fund. * * *"

Here, as was said, is a contradiction. The money received under this act would mean all money received under any of the provisions of the whole act and no other or restricted meaning can properly be given to it. It is, however, found in the immediate connection of certain sections regulating the sale of lime and limestone, and is the successor of an act originally referring to that subject alone. The words "this act" in the former restricted act being carried into the section in question apparently without any reflection on the part of the draftsman or compiler of the new agricultural law that the act in which they would afterwards be found would be more extensive than the one in which they had formerly been, and that the provisions would be contradictory to the others contained in the new act.

If it be said that there is a distinction between "the money received under this act" in section 1177-51, and "all fines, fees and costs collected under prosecutions begun, or caused to be begun, by the secretary of agriculture" and that an application could be found applying this distinction, we refer to another section:

> "Section 1460. All fines, penalties and forfeitures arising from prosecutions, convictions, confiscation or otherwise under this act, unless otherwise > directed by the board of agriculture shall be paid by the officer by whom the fine is collected to the board of agriculture and by it paid into the state treasury to the credit of a fund which is hereby appropriated for the use of the board of agriculture. * * *"

Here we have in one case "all fines, fees and costs collected under prosecutions" by the secretary of agriculture; in another "all fines, penalties and forfeitures arising from prosecutions, convictions, confiscations or otherwise under this act." Here is clearly an absolute contradiction. One section gives the money to the general revenue fund of the state; the other to the credit of a fund which shall be appropriated for the use of the secretary of agriculture. As both of these sections are parts of the same act, passed at once and going into effect at the same instant, the contradiction is hopeless. It is likely, however, that the courts would go far enough in the way of judicial legislation to restrict the meaning of each of these provisions to the subject of the act in which it was originally found and among the provisions of which each is still located.

There are other sections equally contradictory to section 1177-14, but the above are enough to illustrate the point. It is possible that a judicial interpretation would confine section 1177-14 to the provisions formerly found in the food and dairy act of which it was a part, but so doing would be to legislate and to make laws where the legislature has not, or in contradiction of what the legislature has expressly said. Such a course, however, is often thought necessary as the uncertainty and contradiction of the present act are unfortunately so general. The department of agriculture has been recreated a number of times to suit the fancy of successive legislatures, but in each revision, instead of comparison of contradictory provisions and eliminations, of contradictions, the whole mass of legislation applied to the different departments in detail before the consolidation is embodied with little or no change in each new act. We therefore have upon this one subject a vast body of law consisting of an enormous amount of detail thrown together, as we find it, without any effort to make it comprehensively include the subject of its enactment. As a result, it is full of contradiction, uncertainty and impossibility. It is lacking in cohesion, continuity or concatenation, and utterly lacking in anything like homogeneity.

Your question, however, is answered in accordance with the conclusion first announced herein: "fines, costs and fees" are those in judicial proceedings, and include the items commonly passing under those names and are not restricted to such as are payable to an employe of the state. It should be stated that they do not include any fees or costs which the officials, justices or constables, are permitted to retain for their services, or witness fees from one other than an employe of the department.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

REMONSTRANCE—AGAINST NEW SCHOOL DISTRICT—SIGNERS MAY WITHDRAW NAMES THEREFROM.

Persons who sign a remonstrance against the formation of a new school district may withdraw their names by petition or otherwise and shall not be counted as remonstrating by the county board of education.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 28, 1917.

HON. CALVIN D. SPITLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion upon the following proposition:

> "The required notices were filed as provided by section 4736 G. C. and within thirty days, namely, on the 21st day of April, 1917, a remonstrance was filed containing the names of one hundred and thirty-six electors in the territory affected.
> "On April 20th, the day before the remonstrance was filed, forty-nine of the one hundred and thirty-six signers filed a petition with the county board of education asking that their names be withdrawn from the remonstrance.
> "If these forty-nine names can be taken from the remonstrance then the remonstrance would not contain a majority of the electors of those living in the district attempted to be created.
> "The question is whether the forty-nine signers have the right to withdraw their names from the remonstrance voluntarily, within the thirty days, without first obtaining the consent of the other signers to the remonstrance, and thereby defeat the purpose of the remonstrance."

Your question grows out of the act of the county board of education of your county in the formation of a new school district as provided by section 4736 G. C., which section, after providing that the county board of education shall file, with the board or boards of education in the territory affected, a written notice of such proposed arrangement in so forming such new district, further reads:

> "* * * which said arrangement shall be carried into effect as proposed unless, within thirty days after the filing of such notice with the board or boards of education, a majority of the qualified electors of the territory affected by such order of the county board, file a written remonstrance with the county board against the arrangement of school districts so proposed. * * *"

In your case a remonstrance was filed within the thirty days after the giving of said notices but on the day previous to the filing of said remonstrance a petition was filed by certain persons who had signed the remonstrance, asking that their names be taken from the remonstrance so to be filed, or, in other words, that their names be not counted or considered among those who are remonstrating. If those who signed the petition be not counted as among those remonstrating, then the remonstrance does not contain a majority of the electors in such newly created district and your question is, shall those names appearing upon the petition, and which also appear upon the remonstrance, be counted in making up the number who are remonstrating, or not?

The remonstrance, to have any effect, must be filed with the county board of education within thirty days after the filing of the notices with the various district boards of the proposed order of the county board, and when such remonstrance is filed the county board of education must find that, to have the effect of keeping the order of the county board of education in the formation of the new district from becoming effective, it must contain the names of a majority of the qualified electors of the territory affected.

Bearing upon your question is the case of Hays et al. v. Jones et al. 27 O. S. 218. In that case a petition was filed with the board of county commissioners for a road improvement under what was commonly called the two mile road improvement statutes, and the commissioners could have jurisdiction only when a majority of the resident land owners of the county, whose lands are reported as benefited and ought to be assessed, shall have subscribed a petition praying for said improvement. It was ascertained that the number necessary to constitute such majority was one hundred and twenty-four; that the petition praying for said improvement was signed by one hundred and thirty-two; and that a remonstrance was later filed by fifty-seven of said land owners, thirteen of whom had signed the petition.

One of the questions raised was, could said persons be counted as remonstrating after having signed the petition, or would their names be counted as petitioners only?

> "They are for the improvement, as prayed for, or against it, and can not be allowed to occupy any middle ground. The statute cannot mean that, if there is a majority of qualified persons at some time between the commencement of the proceedings and the time the final order is to be made, whether there be such majority at that time or not, the improvement may be ordered. * * * this jurisdictional majority must be found in the attitude of asking for the improvement at the time the proposed final order is to be made, and one who has subscribed the perition may, at any time before the board makes the final order by remonstrance or other unmistakable sign, signify his change of purpose. His assent is within his own control up to the time the commissioners move to make the final order. He could not, after having signed the petition for the improvement, be silent until after the order had been made for the improvement, and then put in a remonstrance that would avail him anything. The form or manner in which his dissent is made known is immaterial. If it is clearly made known to the board of commissioners, that is sufficient. Story on agency, treating upon the subject of revoking an agency, section 474, says: 'It may be express as by a direct and formal declaration publicly made known, or by an informal writing, or by parol, or it may be implied from circumstances.' "

So in your case, when the remonstrance was filed, any person who had signed the same has within his control his assent or dissent thereto. If he dissents, such dissent should be made known to the county board of education prior to the time the county board of education acts thereon. How could it be more clearly made known than to file with the board a petition asking that his name be not considered as assenting to said remonstrance when the same is filed? There would be no more direct or public manner of making his desire known to the board, whose duty it is to file and consider the same.

It was held in Dutten v. Village of Hanover, 42 O. S. 215, that upon the presentation of a petition to the council of a municipality for the submission of the question of the surrender of its municipal powers, it is the duty of the council, before taking action thereon, to satisfy itself that such petition contains the requisite number of qualified petitioners, and for that purpose it may refer the said petition to a committee, to make necessary examination and investigation in relation thereto, and while such petition is under consideration and before action thereon is taken by the council, signers thereof may withdraw their names from such petition, and if thereby the number of names is reduced below the requisite number, it is the duty of the council to refuse to order such election.

So in your case, when the remonstrance was filed with the county board of education, it was the duty of said board to examine and investigate the same, to the end that it satisfy itself that such remonstrance contains a majority of the qualified electors of the territory affected by the order of the county board. And if during such examination and investigation, and before the board takes action thereon, signers thereto desire to withdraw their names therefrom, they may do so, following the decision last above cited.

In Sedalia (City) v. Montgomery, 109 Mo. App. 217; 88 S. W. 1014, a public improvement was being projected. A protest was filed, objecting to said improvement. The court held that a person who had signed the protest against the public improvement might withdraw his name from same at any time within the statutory period for signing the protest. That is to say, and applying the same to your case, a person who had signed said remonstrance had a right to withdraw his name by petition filed with the county board of education and he would not be counted among those who remonstrated.

Answering your question specifically then, I advise you that the forty-nine signers had a right to withdraw their names from the remonstrance, without first obtaining the consent of the other signers to the remonstrance and thereby defeat the purpose of the remonstrance.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF AUGLAIZE COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 28, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

> "IN RE:—Bonds of Auglaize county, Ohio, in the sum of $26,500.00, in anticipation of the collection of taxes and assessments for the construction and improvement of Fisher road."

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners of Auglaize county, Ohio, relative to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relating to improvements of this kind.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers of Auglaize county, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county.

Very truly yours,

BOARD OF EDUCATION—APPOINTED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—HOW SUCCESSORS NOMINATED AND ELECTED.

1. Where a board of education has been appointed by the board of county commissioners as provided by section 4736-1 G. C., the successors to the members of such board must be elected at the first election for members of the board of education held in such district after such appointment, two members to serve for two years and three for four years.

2. Members of boards of education shall be nominated for the terms for which they are to be elected, that is, if two members are to be elected for two years and three for four years, nominations must be made for the short and long terms.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 28, 1917.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You submit for my opinion the following statement of facts:

> "The question has arisen in this county as to the method of nominating and electing members of a school board who were appointed under section 4736-1 G. C.
> I am enclosing herewith copy of letter written by me to the county superintendent of our county and would like to inquire whether or not, in your opinion, this letter is sustained by the provisions of said section."

That part of your letter necessary for our consideration is as follows:

> "I am of the opinion that section 4736-1 authorizes and requires the election of two members for two years and three for four years at the general election to be held in 1917, and while I have found no express statutory provision on the subject, construing this section with section 4839, I am of the opinion that the ballots to be used at such election might properly designate the respective terms for which members of the board were to be elected and that the petitions filed by candidates might state which term the candidate was seeking."

Your questions arise from the fact that certain members of a board of education have been appointed and the regular election for members of boards of education will occur November 6, 1917, and the question is, as I understand you, how many of the five members appointed will be elected and for what term and how shall the nominations be made for same.

General Code section 4736-1 provides that in rural school districts hereafter created by a county board of education, the members of a board of education for such newly created districts shall be elected as provided by section 4712 G. C., and that wherever there exists such newly created district or any other district which has no board of education, the board of county commissioners of the county to which the district belongs shall appoint such board of education. The successors of the members so appointed shall be elected at the first election for members of the board of education held in such district after such appointment, two members to serve for two years and three members for four years, and thereafter their successors shall be elected in the manner and for the term as provided by section 4712 G. C.

Section 4712 G. C. provides that in rural school districts the board of education shall consist of five members elected at large at the same time at which township officers are elected and in the manner provided by law, and that the term of such school board members shall be four years. That is to say, at all regular elections for members of boards of education the term is for four years, but section 4736-1 G. C. provides that at the first election after such board has been appointed two of such members shall be elected for two years and three for four years, thus preventing the terms of the entire board from expiring at the same time, and thereafter each member shall then be elected for four years.

Section 4713 G. C., which is now repealed, provided that at the first election in a township district a board of education shall be elected, two members to serve for two years and three members to serve for four years, and at the township election held every second year thereafter their successors shall be elected for a term of four years. Said section, as above noted, was repealed at the time the new school code, so called, was enacted, namely, February 5, 1914 (104 O. L. 133), but at the same time there was enacted section 4735 G. C., which provided that all officers and members of boards of education of existing school districts shall continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and powers until their terms expire and until their successors are elected and qualified. That is to say, the machinery which was provided for the conduct of the schools was permitted to remain intact at the time the radical change in our laws became effective, and the members of the boards of education continued to serve for the terms for which they had been originally elected or appointed and until their successors were duly elected and qualified.

Provision was therefore made for all existing members and with the enactment of section 4736-1 G. C. provision is made for boards of education in newly created districts and for the election of the successors thereto. Candidates for members of boards of education shall be nominated as provided by section 4997 G. C., in which section it is provided that nominations of candidates for the office of member of the board of education shall be made by nominating papers signed in the aggregate for each candidate by not less than twenty-five qualified electors of the school district, of either sex, and in village and city districts by not less than two per cent. of the electors voting at the next preceding general school election in such city or village school district.

Such nominating papers shall be filed with the board of deputy state supervisors of elections as provided by section 5004 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "Certificates of nomination and nomination papers of candidates shall be filed as follows: * * *
> "For * * * members of the board of education, with the board of deputy state supervisors of the county, not less than sixty days previous to the date of election; * * *."

Section 5032 G. C. provides that the names of candidates for members of the board of education of a school district, however nominated, shall be placed on one independent and separate ballot without any designation whatever, except for member of board of education and the number of members to be elected.

Section 5018-1 G. C. provides that where the names of several persons are grouped together upon the ballots as candidates for the same office, the ballot shall contain immediately above the names of such candidates the words "vote for not more than —." The blank space shall be filled with the number representing the persons who may lawfully be elected to such office. In your case the word "two" will be written in said space on the ballot for the one class of candidates, and the word "three" will be written in the blank space for the other class.

Section 4998 G. C. provides that when nominations of candidates for members of the board of education have been made by nomination papers filed with the board of deputy state supervisors, then the board of deputy state supervisors shall publish on two different days prior to the election a list of the names of such candidates in two newspapers of opposite politics in the school district, if there is such printed and published therein, and if no newspaper is printed in such school district, the board shall post such list in at least five public places therein.

Section 4838 G. C. provides that all elections for members of boards of education shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of odd numbered years, and section 4839 G. C. provides that the clerk of each board of education shall publish a notice of all such elections in a newspaper of general circulation in the district or post written or printed notices thereof in five public places in the district at least ten days before the holding of such election, and that such notices shall specify the time and place of the election and the number of members of the board of education to be elected and the term for which they are to be elected.

It was held in the case of State v. Schafer, 10 Cir. Dec. 36, that:

> "Where three members are to be elected to the board of education, two of them for the full term of three years and one to fill an unexpired term of one year, and the names of six candidates appear on the ballots, but with nothing to indicate which are candidates for the long term and which are candidates for the short term, there is no valid election."

Therefore, answering your questions specifically, I advise you that all five members of the board of education shall be elected on November 6, 1917; that two of such members shall be elected for two years and three shall be elected for four years; that the nomination papers of the candidates to be voted for at said election shall be filed with the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of your county "not less than sixty days" previous to the date of election, and that candidates shall be nominated for the terms for which they are to be elected and the designation thereof shall be made upon the ballots; that is, the term for which the candidate is to be elected.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONTRACT—RENDERED IMPOSSIBLE BY GOVERNMENT—SUSPENDED WHILE PROHIBITION REMAINS IN EFFECT—ALIEN ENEMIES—RESTRICTED AREA.

A contract of employment as instructor at the Ohio state university between the trustees of the said university and a person who is an alien enemy is rendered impossible of performance by an order denominating the campus of the university as a restricted area and excluding alien enemies therefrom except on permit, if the permit is refused to the person so employed such impossibility of performance at least suspends the force of the contract during the time that the prohibition remains in effect; whether or not it discharges the contract of employment depends upon whether or not the matter is entire.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 28, 1917.

DR. W. O. THOMPSON, President of Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 22, requesting my opinion as follows:—

> "The trustees of the university at their summer meeting elected the instructional force for the coming year. This election included one Professor K. Mr. K. is an alien enemy. The government has now refused him a permit to come upon the university grounds because it is a restricted area. Will you therefore furnish the university an opinion on the following question:

"Whether the action of the government in declining the permit to Professor K. automatically cancels the contract entered into between the university and Professor K., who had accepted his election for the ensuing year."

It is obvious that the action of the government renders it impossible for the contract of employment to be discharged in the ordinary way, in as much as that would require the attendance of the instructor at the appointed places on the campus of the university for the purpose of conducting classes.

The well established rule of law is, that a contract for personal services is discharged by impossibility of performance produced by action of the government, unless there is something about the contract that manifests an intention on the part of one party or the other to assume the risk of such happenings. I take it that nothing of that sort appears in the case mentioned by you, and that the general rule therefore would apply.

Page on Contracts, at section 1363, mentions as one of the three classes of cases in which impossibility of performance not contemplated by the parties operates as a discharge:

"Where contracts are made for personal services which cannot be performed by an assignee or personal representative."

He gives as an instance, in section 1366, the arrest of an employe and his detention for a considerable period of time.

It is stated, however, that if the law or an act of government stops performance for a limited time only, the contract is temporarily suspended rather than discharged. (Section 1373, citing School District v. Howard. 98 N. W., 666).

The case you have in mind may be an instance of this kind. The order excluding alien enemies from restricted areas may undoubtedly be regarded as temporary. Should the war cease within a week, and the exclusion of Professor K. from the campus be soon thereafter lifted in consequence thereof, there would be nothing to prevent him from offering performance, and nothing to justify the trustees of the university in declining his tender of performance. Should, however, the order and its application to Professor K. remain effective for any part of the college year within which teaching services under the contract would have to be rendered, the university, of course, would not be liable to him for such part, at least, of his compensation as might relate to the period of time during which he was excluded from the campus. Whether or not the board of trustees would be under obligation to accept the services of Professor K. if they should be again tendered after having been interrupted during the college year would depend upon whether the contract should be regarded as entire, i. e., interpreted as being a contract for a year's services, or a contract of employment as instructor for a year, the right to compensation pro rata temporis not to be dependent upon the rendition of an entire year's service. This question, however, hardly arises at the present time, and will never arise if the duration of the war, or the order of the goverment covers the entire college year.

At the present time you are advised that the university is under no obligation to pay Professor K. for any services which he is prevented from rendering by virtue of the order of exclusion; that such order, at least pro tanto, discharges the contract; and that if the order of exclusion remains operative during the entire life of the contract the impossibility of performance produced thereby will completely discharge the contract.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF THE COUNCIL OF TOLEDO, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 28, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:

"IN RE: Bonds of the city of Toledo, Ohio, in the sum of $300,000.00, for the purpose of paying the city's share of the cost and expense of certain street improvements.

I am herewith returning, with my approval, transcript of the proceedings of the city council and other officers of the city of Toledo, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue.

The bonds in question are issued for the purpose of paying the city's share of the cost and expense of certain specifically named street improvements, seven in number, and the issue thereof has been provided for by a resolution of the city council, duly passed by more than two-thirds of the members thereof and published in accordance with the provisions of section 57 of the charter of the city of Toledo, which provides as follows:

> "Every ordinance or resolution upon its final passage shall be recorded in a book kept for that purpose, and shall be authenticated by the signature of the presiding officer and clerk of the council. Within ten days after its final passage, every ordinance of a general nature shall be published at least once in full in the city journal. Other ordinances and resolutions shall be published in the city journal in full or in condensed form, as the council may direct. There shall be no other publication at the expense of the city."

Four of these street improvements were initiated by the passage of resolutions of necessity prior to the time the charter of the city of Toledo went into effect, to wit, January 1, 1916, and three of said improvements were initiated in like manner after the charter went into effect and in pursuance to its provisions.

With respect to the four improvements projected before the charter of the city went into effect the legislation as to three of them, down to and including the ordinance to proceed, was complete at the time of the adoption of the resolution providing for this bond issue; while as to one of them no ordinance to proceed had as yet been passed.

With respect to the three street improvements projected under the charter of said city the legislation with respect to one of said improvements, down to and including the ordinance to proceed, was complete at the time of the adoption of the resolution providing for the issue of the bonds; while as to two of said improvements no ordinance to proceed had as yet been passed.

In the consideration of the transcript relating to the above bond issue only two questions have given me any serious concern with respect to the validity of this bond issue.

The case of Heffner v. Toledo, 75 O. S. 413, involved an issue of bonds of the city of Toledo for the purpose of paying the city's part of the cost and expense of certain street and sewer improvements. The court in this case had under consideration section 53 of the Municipal Code of 1902, which, with slight amendment, has since been carried into the General Code as section 3821, authorizing municipal corporations to issue and sell bonds as other bonds are sold to pay the corporation's part of any improvement authorized and provided for under the assessment statutes. The court likewise had under consideration the provisions of section 2835 of the Revised Statutes, which is now section 3939 of the General Code. The court held that the bonds authorized by section 53 of the Municipal Code (section 3821 G. C.) could not be provided for by resolution or ordinance until after the passage of the ordinance to proceed. The court held further, however, that under section 2835 Revised Statutes (section 3939 G. C.) the council of the city may, by a resolution or ordinance passed by the affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, provide for the issuing of bonds to pay the city's part of the cost of a specific improvement before the passage of either the ordinance to proceed or the resolution of necessity with respect to such improvement.

Chapter XI of the charter of the city of Toledo is devoted to the subject of assessments and improvements. The chapter is comprehensive in its terms and covers in a large measure the same subject covered by the chapter of the General Code relating to the subject of improvements by assessments. Section 208 of the charter of said city, the same being a part of said chapter XI relating to the subject of assessments and improvements, provides as follows:

> "The city shall pay such part of the cost and expense of improvements for which special assessments are levied as the council deems just, which part shall not be less than one-fiftieth of all such cost and expense; and in addition thereto, the city shall pay the cost of intersections. The council may provide for the payment of the city's portion of all such improvements by the issuance of bonds or notes therefor, and may levy taxes, in addition to all other taxes authorized by law ,to pay such bonds or notes and the interest thereon."

The provisions and setting of this section of the charter of the city of Toledo authorizing the city to issue bonds for the purpose of paying its share of improvements under the chapter in which the section is contained are quite similar to section 53 of the municipal code of 1902, which was under consideration by the court in the case of Heffner v. Toledo, supra, and which, as before noted, has been carried into the General Code as section 3821. If, as a charter provision, section 208 above quoted is to be considered the exclusive authority of the city of Toledo to issue bonds for the purpose of paying its share of the cost of specific street improvements, the question would naturally arise under the decision of the court in the case of Heffner v. Toledo, supra, whether the issue of such bonds could be provided for until an ordinance to proceed affecting the street improvements covered by the bond issue had been passed. I find, however, that section 10 of the charter of the city of Toledo provides as follows:

> "The enumeration of particular powers by this charter shall not be held or deemed to be exclusive; but in addition to the powers enumerated or implied therein, or appropriate to the exercise thereof, the city of Toledo shall have and may exercise all other powers which under the constitution and laws of Ohio now are, or hereafter may be, granted to cities. Powers proper to be exercised, and not specially enumerated herein, shall be exercised and enforced in the manner prescribed by this charter; or, when not prescribed herein, in such manner as shall be provided by ordinance or resolution of the council, or by statute."

I am of the opinion, therefore, that by reason of the provisions of the section of the charter just quoted the city of Toledo has power to issue bonds not only under section 208 of the charter of said city, but under the provisions of section 3939 of the General Code as well. This section of the General Code, among other things, specifically authorizes municipal corporations to issue bonds for the purpose of resurfacing, repairing or improving any existing street or streets as well as other public highways.

The other question which has called for some consideration arises by virtue of the provisions of section 4 of the charter of said city, which provides as follows:

> "All contracts entered into by the city for its own benefit prior to the taking effect of this charter shall continue in full force and effect. All public work begun prior to the taking effect of this charter shall be continued and perfected hereunder. Public improvements for which legislative steps shall have been taken under laws in force at the time this charter takes effect may be carried to completion in accordance with the provisions of such legislation."

It is obvious that if the word "legislation" found at the end of the section refers to the general statutes of the state and the proceedings relating to this bond issue is one of the things to be carried to completion in accordance with the provisions of such "legislation," the proceedings relating to the bond issue are defective for the reason that the ordinance providing for the same was not published in compliance with the provisions of section 4228 of the General Code. However, I am unable to give this effect to the language above quoted, and am of the opinion that the word "legislation" as used in said section 4 of the charter of the city of Toledo refers to the "legislative steps" of the city council previously mentioned therein, and that the only force of the provisions of the section is to give validity to such legislative steps which may have been taken before the charter went into effect with respect to improvements which might have to be completed after the same went into effect, and that the section cannot be given the effect of requiring that the subsequent ordinance providing for the issue of bonds covering such improvement should be published otherwise than in conformity with the provisions of section 57 of the city charter, specifically providing how all ordinances should be published.

The proceedings of the council and other officers of the city being in other respects regular, and this issue itself being within the limitations of the Longworth law, I am of the opinion that said issue is in all respects valid and that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when signed by the proper officers, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said city.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LOCOMOTIVES—FLAGMAN OR RED LIGHT NOT REQUIRED THEREON UNDER SECTION 8945-4 G. C.

The act found in 107 Ohio Laws, 605, does not require that a flagman or red lights be placed upon locomotives allowed to stand on running tracks during the night season.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 29, 1917.

Public Utilities Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 4th, requesting my opinion with reference to the interpretation of an act found in 107 Ohio Laws, 605.

The specific question in which you are interested, which has been submitted by counsel for the Bessemer and Lake Erie Railroad Company, is as to whether or not the act referred to requires that red lights be placed upon locomotives allowed to stand on running tracks and within the yard limits during the night season.

The act in question, with its title, is in full as follows:

"AN ACT

"To compel common carriers to place lights on front and rear ends of all trains, part-trains, cuts of cars, cabooses and locomotives, while on the main railroad tracks.

"BE IT ENACTED BY THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF THE STATE OF OHIO:

"Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any superintendent, trainmaster, yardmaster, or other employe of the railroad company doing business in the state of Ohio, to allow or permit passenger or freight car to stand on a track commonly called a running track, within yard limits unless flagman or red light is on end of car during the period from thirty minutes before sunset to thirty minutes after sunrise.

"Section 2. Whoever being superintendent, trainmaster, yardmaster, or other employes of a railroad company, violates section 1 of this act, shall be guilty of misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than three hundred dollars for each and every offense.

"Section 3. The public utilities commission shall be empowered to enforce the foregoing sections and prosecute any violations thereof."

It will be observed that the title of the act mentions "locomotives," but that this word is not found in the body of the law. Section 1 of the latter refers only to passenger or freight cars, and it is clear to me that this term does not include locomotives.

The title of an act may be consulted to resolve ambiguities apparent on the face of the body of the law; it is not, however, a part of the act and cannot be given effect to enlarge or restrict the clearly expressed provisions of the latter.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that despite the title of the act, no part of the law in any way governs the placing of flagmen or red lights upon locomotives under any circumstance.

You have submitted an opinion to the commission by Hon. C. A. Radcliffe, attorney for the commission, which is consistent with the opinion which I have expressed, and which goes further and deals with questions not raised by counsel for the Bessemer and Lake Erie Railroad Company. Mr. Radcliffe expresses the view that the body of the act not only does not apply to locomotives, but also does not apply to trains, part trains, cuts of cars and cabooses, as referred to in the title. That is to say, Mr. Radcliffe expresses the view that the operative effect of the act is limited to the lighting or safeguarding of single cars.

I am not clear as to this point, and in as much as the commission's letter to me refers to the communication of counsel for the Bessemer and Lake Erie Railroad Company, I assume that the point raised by them is the only one submitted to me for decision. I, therefore, express no opinion as to the effect of the act in so far as trains part trains, cuts of cars and cabooses are concerned.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—APPOINTED BY COUNTY BOARD FOR NEW DISTRICT—WHEN AND HOW SUCCESSORS ELECTED.

Where a board of education has been appointed for a newly created district by a county board of education, the successors thereto shall be elected at the first election for members of the board of education held in such district after such appointment. Two of such members shall be elected for the term of two years and three for the term of four years.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 29, 1917.

HON. OTHO W. KENNEDY, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

MY DEAR SIR:—In your letter of August 25, 1917 you ask my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "We have a number of school districts created under section 4736 G. C., and the county board of education appointed the board of education under the provisions of that section. In all of these districts thus created no elections have been held to elect members of such board of education.
> "Section 4736 says nothing about how long the members shall be elected for, that is, the members to be chosen this fall. It only provides that they shall be elected as provided by law. Section 4736-1 G. C. makes provision for the electing successors, but this is where the board has been appointed by the county commissioners.
>
> "Section 4712 G. C. provides that all members shall be chosen for four years.
>
> "All the districts that I have reference to are rural districts. We have no village districts created under this law.
> "What I desire to know is: For how long a term shall the members of these boards be chosen? Are they all to be chosen for four years, or shall two of them be chosen for two years and three chosen for four years?"

Section 4736 G. C. provides that the county board of education is authorized to create a school district from one or more school districts or parts thereof and that:

> "* * * The county board of education is authorized to appoint a board of education for such newly created school district and * * *. Members of the boards of education of the newly created district shall thereafter be elected at the same time and in the same manner as the boards of education of the village and rural districts."

That is to say, it is necessary to look to the statutes which provide for the election of boards of education in village districts and also to the statutes which provide for the election of boards of education in rural districts, and from the various statutes determine how members shall be elected to succeed the members of the board of education of a newly created district, which board was appointed by the county board of education.

I shall first take up the sections which refer to village districts.

Section 4709 G. C. provides:

> "At the first election in such district, a board of education shall be elected, two members to serve for two years and three to serve for four years. At the proper municipal election held thereafter, their successors shall be elected for a term of four years."

That is, at the first election in a village district two members of the board of education shall be elected to serve for the term of two years and three members of such board shall at the same time be elected to serve for the term of four years, and thereafter and at the end of the expiration of the terms of the various members, their successors shall be elected for a term of four years. So that if the successors to the members of a board of education of a newly created district, which was appointed by a county board of education, would be elected in the same manner as the members of a board of education of a new village district, then under such an arrangement two members would have to be elected at the coming election for two years and three members would have to be elected for four years, and thereafter and when the successors thereto would be elected, all would be for the term of four years, because their terms would alternate, two to be elected at one election and three at the next election.

The sections relating to the election of members of boards of education for rural districts are very similar to those which relate to the election of members of village districts. The general section of the school code which applies to the election of members of boards of education in rural districts is section 4712 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "In rural school districts, the board of education shall consist of five members elected at large at the same time township officers are elected and in the manner provided by law, for a term of four years."

The section which made provision for the first election in a township district, and which provided that two members should be elected for two years and three for four years was numbered 4713, and was repealed when the new school code was enacted in 1914, and provision was not made at that time for the election of members in a new rural school district.

But in 1915 the legislature enacted section 4736-1 G. C. which reads as follows:

> "In rural school districts hereafter created by a county board of education, a board of education shall be elected as provided in section 4712 of the General Code. When rural school districts hereafter so created or which have been heretofore so created, fail or have failed to elect a board of education as provided in said section 4712, or whenever there exists such school district which for any reason or cause is not provided with a board of education, the commissioners of the county to which such district belongs shall appoint such board of education, and the members so appointed shall serve until their successors are elected and qualified. The successors of the members so appointed shall be elected at the first election for members of the board of education held in such district after such appointment, two members to serve for two years and three members for four years. And thereafter their successors shall be elected in the manner and for the term as provided by section 4712 of the General Code. The board so appointed by the commissioners of the county shall organize on the second Monday after their appointment."

This department held in opinion No. 368, rendered June 16, 1917, to Hon. Phil H. Weiland, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Gilead, Ohio:

> "That if at the time the county board of education creates a new district it appoints a board of education for such district, said board of education thereby becomes the legally constituted board for such district, but if, for any reason or cause the county board of education fails to appoint a board of education for such newly created district, then I am of the opinion that the board of commissioners have the right to appoint such board."

Said opinion harmonized the provisions of sections 4736 and 4736-1 G. C. in reference to the appointing of a board of education for a newly created district, the object being to provide for a board of education for such newly created district and to eliminate any contradiction in the provisions of said sections.

I also held in opinion No. 569, rendered to Hon. Dean E. Stanley, Prosecuting Attorney of Warren county, on the 28th day of August, 1917, that as between the general provisions of section 4712 and the special provisions of section 4736-1 G. C., the provisions of the latter section must control as to the first election had after a board has been appointed by the board of county commissioners, and I am of the opinion that the same conclusion should be reached where a board has been appointed by the county board of education, for in both instances it is the successors of the members of a board of education which was appointed in a newly created district, that are being elected at the first election for members of boards of education, which is held in such district after such appointment is made.

So that whether the procedure in relation to the election of members of boards of education in village districts or in relation to the election of members of boards of education in rural districts is followed, the same result is reached.

Answering your question, I advise you that two members of the board of education which was appointed for the newly created district by your county board of education shall be elected for two years and three members shall be elected for four years, and the nomination papers shall be filled accordingly.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN ADAMS COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am herewith returning, with my approval, final resolution relating to the improvement of

> "Section 'B,' West Union-Hillsboro road, inter-county highway No. 441, Pet. No. 2004-T, Wayne township, Adams county."

In this instance the application for state aid in the improvement of this road was made by the board of township trustees of Wayne township, said county, and provides for an appropriation by the township trustees in the sum of $2,450.00, said amount being one-fourth of the total estimated cost and expense of said improvement.

Section 1214 of the General Code provides in general terms for the division of the cost and expense of making such inter-county highway improvements, to-wit: that twenty-five per cent. thereof shall be paid by the county, fifteen per cent. thereof by the township or townships, and ten per cent. thereof by the owners of abutting property.

The amount appropriated by the township trustees covers only the proportion of the cost and expense to be borne by said township and by abutting property owners. However, I note that by section 1217 of the General Code it is provided that where the application for such improvement is made by the township trustees the state may assume all or any part of the county's proportion of the cost of said improvement.

The certificate of your department, over the signature of Mr. Hastings, chief clerk, is to the effect that there has been appropriated from the inter-county highway fund of the state highway department of Ohio the sum of $7,350.00 to the credit of Wayne township, Adams county. This sum covers not only the portion of the cost and expense of said improvement to be borne by the state of Ohio under the provisions of section 1213 of the General Code, but likewise the part apportioned to the county under the provisions of section 1214 G. C., and constitutes, therefore, a sufficient assumption by the state of the county's share under section 1217 of the General Code.

Said final resolution being in other respects in regular and proper form, the same is herewith approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN WARREN COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 30, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am herewith returning, with my approval, final resolution relating to the improvement of

> "Section 'D,' Cincinnati-Chillicothe Road, inter-county highway No. 8, Pet. No. 3051, Warren county."

I note from the recitals of the resolution that the particular section of this road to be improved is 513 feet of new location, together with new culverts at point where I. C. H. No. 8 crosses under the tracks of the B. & O. S. W. R. R. about one-half mile southwest of the village of Blanchester. This description of the improvement indicates a deviation of the line of the road from the existing highway and calls into consideration the provision of section 1201 of the General Code, which provides that if the line of the proposed improvement deviates from the existing highway, the county commissioners or township trustees making application for such improvement must provide the requisite right of way.

Application for state aid in the present instance was made by the board of county commissioners of Warren county, and the final resolution having been found to be in other respects regular and in proper form, the same is approved on condition that the county commissioners of said county have secured the necessary right of way for the improvement in so far as the same deviates from the existing highway.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN HIGHLAND COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 30, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your communication of August 17, 1917, transmitting to me for examination final resolution relating to the improvement of

"Section 'K' of Hillsboro-Piketon road, inter-county highway No. 261, Petition No. 2488, Highland county."

I find this resolution to be in regular form, and I am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN JACKSON COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Aug. 30, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your communication of August 17, 1917, transmitting to me for examination final resolution relating to the improvement of "Section 'F,' Chillicothe-Jackson road, inter-county highway No. 364, Pet. No. 2530, Jackson county."

With the exception that the name of the township or townships in which said improvement is located is not stated in the final resolution, the same is in regular and proper form. Subject to the correction of said final resolution by the insertion of the name of said township or townships, said final resolution is herewith approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN BROWN COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am herewith returning, without my approval, final resolution transmitted to me under date of August 25, 1917, relating to the improvement of

> "Section 'A,' Ripley-Hillsboro road, inter-county highway No. 177, Pet. No. 2112-T, Union township, Brown county."

The application for state aid in the improvement of this road was made by the township trustees of Union township, Brown county, Ohio. It does not appear that the county is to bear any portion of the cost and expense of said improvement as provided for in section 1214 of the General Code, but with respect to this it sufficiently appears from the appropriation made by your department that the state has assumed the county's share of the cost and expense of said improvement, as provided for by section 1217 of the General Code.

The final resolution is disapproved for the reason that the section of said road approved by the state highway commissioner for improvement is not sufficiently definite. With respect to this point I note that the application of the township trustees of Union township, said county, filed with your department under date of April 29, 1916, described the section of the road with respect to which such aid is requested as follows:

> "Beginning at the intersection of I. C. H. No. 177, with the east corporation line of the village of Ripley, thence in a general northerly direction along the route of I. C. H. No. 177, passing through the villages of Red Oak P. O., Carlisle, Macon and Fincastle to where same intersects the boundary line between Highland and Brown counties, about two and one-half miles northeast of the village of Fincastle, in all a distance of 21.0 miles."

The final resolution recites that the state highway commissioner has approved said application and has caused a map of the following described section of said highway to be made in outline and profile, to-wit:

> "Beginning at the intersection of I. C. H. No. 177, with the east corporation line of the village of Ripley, thence in a general northerly direction along the line of I. C. H. No. 177."

Section 1195 of the General Code provides that if upon receipt of an application for state aid, the state highway commissioner approves of the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of such inter-county or main market roads or any part thereof, he shall certify his approval of the application, for any part thereof, to the county commissioners of the township trustees, as the case may be.

This section contemplates that if the state highway commissioner approves of the construction or improvement of a particular inter-county highway, and is unable or does not elect to approve the application to the extent of the whole improvement set out in the application for state aid, he shall approve some definite part thereof, and, in my opinion, the description of the particular section of said highway which the state highway commissioner has approved does not meet the intent and purpose of the section of the General Code above quoted.

I assume that in all probability the recital in the final resolution with respect to the section of inter-county highway No. 177 approved by the state highway commissioner for construction is but a clerical error, and that in point of fact the proper description of said section so approved for construction is a definite part of said road. If this be the case, I am of the opinion that the said recital may be corrected to show the fact.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN MONROE COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1917.

HON CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am herewith returning, with my approval, final resolution transmitted to me under date of August 27, 1917, relating to the improvement of > "Section 'N,' Ohio river road, inter-county highway No. 7, Pet. No. 2715, Monroe county."

Aside from the fact that the name of the township or townships in which the proposed improvement is located is not set out in said final resolution, the same is in all respects regular and in proper form and, subject to the correction to be made as above indicated, is herewith approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION—NO RIGHT TO ESTABLISH HIGH SCHOOL—WHEN VILLAGE BOARD REFUSES TO DO SO—TUITION.

A county board of education has no right under section 7610-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 623) to establish a high school in a village district, when the village board of education refuses to do so.

A village which maintains no high school must pay the tuition of its high school pupils in other districts where they attend.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1917.

HON. CHESTER PENDLETON, Prosecuting Attorney, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your request of August 23 you ask my opinion on the following:

> "The school situation in the village of Arlington in this county has been very bad for a number of months. The electors of the village by an overwhelming vote recently rejected a bond issue for the building of a new school building, and the state department of public instruction has taken away the charter from the Arlington high school because of inferior housing conditions. The industrial commission has ordered many repairs to be made upon the village school building before it is used for the elementary grades this fall.

"For reasons which seemed good to the village board of education it decided either to discontinue giving high school instruction during the coming school year, and make provision for the payment of the tuition of high school pupils in other districts, or to establish a third grade high school and pay the tuition for the advanced pupils of Arlington.

"A great many of the citizens of Arlington have objected to this conclusion of the village board, and it has resulted in the filing of the enclosed application with the county board of education by some of those interested.

"First: Under these circumstances what power, if any, does the county board have, under section 7610-1, to act over the heads of the village board of education and provide a first grade high school for the village?

"Second: Does section 7610-1 apply only to elementary schools, or does it include within its terms high schools as well?"

Section 7610-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 623) provides:

"If the board of education in a district fails to provide sufficient school privileges for all the youth of school age in the district, or to provide for the continuance of any school in the district for at least thirty-two weeks in the year, or to provide for each school an equitable share of school advantages as required by this title, or to provide suitable school houses for all the schools under its control, or to elect a superintendent or teachers, or to pay their salaries, or to pay out any other school money, needed in school administration, or to fill any vacancies in the board within the period of thirty days after such vacancies occur the county board of education of the county to which such district belongs, upon being advised and satisfied thereof, shall perform any and all of such duties or acts, in the same manner as the board of education by this title is authorized to perform them. All salaries and other money so paid by the county board of education shall be paid out of the county treasury on vouchers signed by the president of the county board of education, but they shall be a charge against the school district for which the money was paid. The amount so paid shall be retained by the county auditor from the proper funds due to such school district, at the time of making the semi-annual distribution of taxes."

The question is, can the county board of education, under the authority granted in the above quoted section, provide a first grade high school for the pupils of said village, since the village board of education has decided to have no high school or only a third grade high school and to pay the tuition for the advanced pupils of the village to some other first or second grade high school?

Section 7644 G. C. provides that each board of education shall establish a sufficient number of elementary schools to provide for the free education of the youth of school age within the district under its control; such elementary schools shall be located at such places as will be most convenient for the attendance of the largest number of the youth who attend such schools in such district; and that every elementary day school, so established, shall continue for not less than thirty-two weeks in any school year, nor more than forty weeks therein, and that all the elementary schools within the same school district shall be continued for the same length of time.

An elementary school is defined by section 7648 G. C. as one in which instruction and training are given in spelling, reading, writing, arithmetic, English language, English grammar and composition, geography, history of the United States, including civil government, physiology and hygiene; but that nothing in said section shall abridge the power boards of education to cause instruction and training to be given in vocal music, drawing, elementary algebra, the elements of agriculture and other branches which they deem advisable for the best interests of the schools under their charge.

A high school is defined by section 7649 G. C. to be one of higher grade than elementary school, in which instruction and training are given in approved courses in the history of the United States and other countries; composition, rhetoric, English and American literature; algebra and geometry; natural science, political or mental science, ancient or modern foreign languages, or both, commercial and industrial branches, or such of the branches named as the length of its curriculum makes possible; also such other branches of higher grade than those to be taught in the elementary schools, with such advance studies and advanced reviews of common branches as the board of education directs.

Section 7663 G. C. provides that a board of education may establish one or more high schools whenever it deems the establishment of such a school or schools proper or necessary for the convenience or progress of the pupils attending them, or for the conduct and welfare of the educational interests of such district.

Section 7651 G. C. provides that all high schools of the state shall be classified into schools of the first, second and third grades.

Section 7748 G. C. provides that a board of education providing a third grade high school, as defined by law, shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district, at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year. Should pupils residing in the district prefer not to attend such third grade high school, the board of education of such district shall be required to pay the tuition of such pupils at any first grade high school for four years, or at any second grade high school for three years and a first grade high school for one year, except that a board of education which maintains a third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when the maximum levy permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district.

Section 7747 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L. 625, provides that the tuition of pupils who are eligible for admission to high school and who reside in village or rural districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence.

No question is raised in your inquiry as to the elementary schools and it is to the maintenance of this class of schools that the statute is mandatory. That is, it is provided that such board of education shall establish a sufficient number of elementary schools and there can be no doubt that if a board of education did not establish a sufficient number of elementary schools, then under the authority of section 7610-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 623), the county board of education has authority to provide such sufficient school privileges for all the school youth who might desire to attend such elementary schools. But the establishment of high schools is optional with a board of education. If such village board of education fails or refuses to establish a high school, then under the provisions of section 7747 G. C., as last amended 107 O. L. 625), such village board of education must pay the tuition of pupils who are eligible for admission to high school and who attend high school in another district.

You state that if a high school is established it will be only a third high grade school and that if the board of education establishes such third grade high school it will then pay the tuition of those high school pupils within the district who attend other high schools, and I assume from said statement that the limits of taxation have not been reached or that there will be sufficient funds in the hands of the board to cover whatever tuition expenses might arise in event that course is taken. This would provide all pupils in the district with proper school facilities and the conditions of section 7610-1 supra could not attach.

Many of the provisipns now contained in section 7610-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 623) were taken from original section 7610 G. C. (section 3969 R. S). and said section was considered in Board of Education v. Commissioners, 10 O. N. P. (N. S.) 505, the syllabus of which case reads as follows:

> "In fixing the school levy and in determining the number of schools which shall be maintained in a school district, a board of education performs judicial acts, and in the case under consideration did not adopt a policy so unmistakably wrong as to show a gross abuse of the discretion confided in it by law, and the county commissioners were not justified, therefore, in reversing the action of the board of education by ordering a larger tax levy and the establishment of another sub-district."

Henderson, J., on p. 507 says:

> "The school electors in each school district elect a board of education for their district schools. Into the hands of this board of education the law of our state commits, in general, all the powers granted respecting the maintenance of schools in such districts; * * * these powers are broadly vested in the local board, who, in the judgment of the law, are best qualified by residence, interests and local knowledge to exercise them carefully, wisely and with discrimination, to the best interest of the school children of the district, which is the ultimate aim and just purpose of all school legislation.
> "As a rule courts will not interfere with boards of education in the exercise of these functions. The control and management of the schools of this state is given to the boards of education by the statute, and these boards cannot be interfered with in any manner by the court unless there is a gross abuse of the discretionary powers given. * * * Nevertheless, the authority of the board of education is not final in all matters; a certain supervisory power (is) vested in the county commissioners by R. S. 3969 (G. C. 7610). * * * Some of these powers committed to the county commissioners after default on the part of the board of education, such as certifying the levy, hiring and paying teachers, etc., are ministerial merely in their nature, and that some of them are judicial. As to the ministerial acts, the law is simple; if the local board of education fails to perform them, the county commissioners step in, upon being advised and satisfied of such default, and perform them in the place and stead of the local boards.
> "As to the exercise of judicial powers the case is different. The county commissioners in such cases can not interfere merely by reason of a difference of opinion; they certainly have no higher powers than the courts have; that is, they can only interfere and assume the functions of the local board, when that board has acted, or declined to act, in such a way as to show gross abuse of discretion."

The county board of education in your case stands in the same position as did the board of county commissioners in the case above quoted, and following the reasoning therein I advise you that under the circumstances you relate, the county board of education has no power under section 7610-1 supra to act over the heads of the village board and establish a high school.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN BUTLER COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 30, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am herewith returning, without my approval, final resolution transmitted to me under date of August 25, 1917, relating to the improvement of > "Section 'I,' Hamilton-Middletown road, inter-county highway No. 179, Pet. No. 2121, Butler county."

Said final resolution is disapproved for the reason that it appears that the improvement of said highway is on application of the board of county commissioners of Butler county for state aid, but it does not appear that said section approved by the state highway commissioner for improvement constitutes any part of the improvement which was the subject of the application of the board of county commissioners. Said final resolution recites that on the 8th day of December, 1915, the board of county commissioners of said county made application for state aid in the improvement of the following section of a certain road:

> "Beginning at the intersection of I. C. H. No. 43 with the boundary line between Hamilton and Butler counties, thence in a northwesterly direction along the route of I. C. H. No. 43 to where the same intersects the south corporation line of the city of Hamilton, 'and located in the township of Fairfield, in all a distance of about 5.6 miles.' "

Said final resolution further recites that the state highway commissioner has approved said application and has caused a map of the following described section of said highway to be made in outline and profile, to-wit:

> "Beginning at the intersection of I. C. H. No. 179 with the eastcorporation line of the city of Middletown, thence in a northeasterly direction along the route of I. C. H. No. 179, to its intersection with the Butler-Warren county line, in all a distance of 16,803 feet, or 3.18 miles."

It is evident that the particular section of road approved by the state highway commissioner for construction is no part of the road for the improvement of which the board of county commissioners made application for state aid under date of December 8, 1915. The recitals of said resolution do not, therefore, show a compliance with the provisions of section 1195 of the General Code, which provides that if upon the receipt of an application for state aid, the state highway commissioner approves of the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of such inter-county highway or main market roads, or any part thereof, he shall certify his approval of the application, or any part thereof, to the county commissioners or the township trustees, as the case may be.

For this reason the final resolution as it now reads is disapproved.

I am inclined to the view that in all probability the recital of the final resolution with respect to the particular road and section thereof contained in the application of the board of county commissioners for state aid is erroneous, and that in point of fact the road mentioned in said application was said inter-county highway No. 179, in said county. Though the recitals of said final resolution are stated as preliminary to the contract of the commissioners of said county, wherein they agree to assume in the first instance the share of the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount to be paid by the state and guarantee the state highway commissioner that such money shall be available at such time or times as it may be needed in the construction of said highway, I am inclined to the view that a false recital in a matter of this kind binds nobody against the fact, and that the final resolution may be corrected so as to recite the fact as it exists with respect to the point above discussed.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CAROLINA DOVE—IS IN SONG BIRD LIST—SAME BIRD AS MOURNING DOVE.

The Carolina dove is in the song bird class in this state and comes under the provisions of section 1409 G. C., and therefore under said section 1409 it is illegal to catch, kill, injure, pursue or have in possession, either dead or alive, or purchase, expose for sale, transport or ship to a point within or without the state, the Carolina dove at any time during the year.

It is also illegal to sell any part of the plumage, skin or body of such bird or to have the same in possession for sale.

The above holding is made on the assumption that the statement of the acting chief of the United States bureau of biological survey, to the effect that the Carolina dove and mourning dove are one and the same, is correct.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 3, 1917.

HON. JOHN C. SPEAKS, Chief Warden, Fish and Game Division, The Board of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 20, 1917, as follows:

> "Much confusion exists with reference to the status of the Carolina dove. Will you kindly advise whether or not this bird is protected by Ohio laws?
> "Section 1412 enumerates a list of birds which 'shall be classed as game birds in contradistinction to all other birds.' The Carolina dove is not mentioned in this section.
> "Section 1409 enumerates the song and protected birds and contains a sweeping clause which includes 'any wild bird other than a game bird.'
> "Section 1413 provides that no person shall kill more than twelve Carolina doves in any one day.
>
> "The federal law does not protect the Carolina dove.
> "Many inquiries reach this office inquiring as to the status of the Carolina dove and whether it can be hunted and killed this fall. The last open season for dove shooting was from September 1st to October 20th, 1916."

I note from a letter of Hon. W. C. Henderson, Acting Chief, United States Bureau of Biological Survey, that the Carolina dove is the same as the turtle or mourning dove and that it is a wild bird, usually classed as a game bird.

Section 1412 G. C. (107 O. L. 17) enumerates the different birds and reads:

> "No person within this state shall catch, kill, injure or pursue with such intent a Hungarian or gray partridge, a ruffled grouse, Mongolian pheasant, English pheasant, ring-necked pheasant or other pheasant, before the fifteenth day of November, 1917, or after that date except from the fifteenth day of November to the fourth day of December, both dates inclusive; a wild duck, wild goose, brant, or other wild waterfowl, except from the first day of September to the fifteenth day of December, both dates inclusive, and from the first day of March to the twentieth day of April, both dates inclusive; a wood duck before September first, 1918; a rail, coot, or mud hen, or gallinule except from September first to November thirtieth, both dates inclusive; a black breasted plover, golden plover, Wilson or jack snipe, the greater and lesser yellowlegs except from the first day of September to the fifteenth day of December, both dates inclusive; a woodcock, except from October first to November thirtieth; but no person shall catch, kill, injure or pursue with such intent a wild duck or other wild waterfowl on Sunday or Monday of any week, or shoot such wild duck or wild waterfowl before sunrise or after sunset of any day during the time fixed herein when it shall be lawful to kill them; no person shall catch, kill, injure or pursue with such intent any game bird or game animal on any Sunday. The birds named in this section shall be known and classed as game birds in contradistinction to all other birds and the sum of four thousand dollars is hereby appropriated for the propagation of quail for the years nineteen hundred and seventeen and nineteen hundred and eighteen."

Section 1409 G. C. (107 O. L. 17) provides:

"No person shall catch, kill, injure, pursue or have in his possession either dead or alive, or purchase, expose for sale, transport or ship to a point within or without the state a turtle or mourning dove, Virginia partridge, quail or bobwhite, sparrow, nuthatch, warbler, flicker, vireo, wren, American robin, catbird, tanager, bobolink, blue jay, oriole, grosbeck or redbird, creeper, redstart, waxwing, woodpecker, humming bird, killdeer, swallow, bluebird, blackbird, meadow lark, bunting, starling, redwing, purple martin, brown thresher, American goldfinch, chewink or ground robin, pewee or phoebe bird, chickadee, fly-catcher, gnat-catcher, mousehawk, whippoor-will, snow-bird, titmouse, gull, eagle, buzzard, or any wild bird other than a game bird. No part of the plumage, skin or body of such bird shall be sold or had in possession for sale."

It will be seen from section 1412, supra, that the Carolina dove is not a game bird in Ohio, since it is not enumerated in that section and since the section provides that birds

"named in this section shall be known and classed as game birds in contra-distinction to all other birds."

This language undoubtedly excludes the Carolina dove from the game bird class.

It will also be noted that section 1409 G. C. makes it unlawful to kill "a turtle or mourning dove" or to kill "any wild bird other than a game bird."

Since from the statement of the United States Bureau, the Carolina dove is the same as the turtle or mourning dove, it is clear that it comes within the purview of section 1412, and even if this statement of the department is incorrect, the Carolina dove is undoubtedly a "wild bird," and as section 1409 prohibits the killing of "any wild bird other than a game bird," it falls within this section.

Attention is called to the fact that section 1413 G. C. provides in part:

"Section 1413. * * * No person shall * * * kill in one day more than twelve * * * Carolina dove * * * ."

Sections 1409, 1412 and 1413 G. C. were originally sections 22, 25 and 26 of an act passed May 9, 1908 (99 O. L. 364-369, 370). At that time section 22 classed a "turtle or mourning dove" as a song bird and afforded it protection during the entire year.

Section 25 classed the Carolina dove as a game bird and allowed it to be killed within a certain period of the year.

Section 26 provided that no person should kill in one day more than twelve Carolina dove.

The Carolina dove and the turtle or mourning dove being one and the same bird, it is evident that at the time this act was passed those sections were in conflict, in so far as the Carolina dove was concerned.

Section 22, enumerating song birds, became section 1409 G. C. and remained as enacted in 99 O. L. until it was amended, 107 O. L. 17. However, this amendment did not affect the "turtle or mourning dove" since it remained on the song bird list.

Section 25 of the act referred to became section 1412 G. C. and was amended in 101 O. L. 161, 103 O. L. 167, 104 O. L. 169 and 106 O. L. 110.

But during all these enactments the Carolina dove remained classified as a game bird, the killing of it being authorized during a certain period of the year.

However, in 107 O. L. 17, the legislature, apparently realizing the inconsistency in the former act, removed the Carolina dove from the game bird list.

Section 26 of the act of 1908 became section 1413 G. C. and has remained in the same form ever since.

In other words, when the act of 1908 was passed, there was a conflict between sections 22 and 25, the legislature apparently not realizing that the mourning or turtle dove was the same as the Carolina dove. This conflict continued until 1917, when the legislature in 107 O. L. 17 struck the Carolina dove from the game bird list. This act upon the part of the legislature clearly classified the Carolina dove or turtle or mourning dove as a song bird.

Section 26 of the act of 1908, above referred to, which later became section 1413 G. C., has been allowed to remain unaltered and still retains the provision that no person shall kill in one day more than twelve Carolina dove. However, this provision is now without force. Section 1413 G. C. never authorized the killing of Carolina dove. The authorization is found in section 1412 and the lawful period therein set out. Section 1413 only restricted the number of Carolina dove which could be killed in any one day of the season prescribed in section 1412 G. C. When the Carolina dove was stricken from section 1412, the provision of section 1413, to the effect that not more than twelve Carolina dove could be killed in any one day, ceased to have application.

It is therefore my opinion that the Carolina dove is in the song bird class in this state and comes under the provisions of section 1409 G. C., and therefore under said section 1409 it is illegal to catch, kill, injure, pursue or have in possession, either dead or alive, or purchase, expose for sale, transport or ship to a point within or without the state, the Carolina dove at any time during the year. It is also illegal to sell any part of the plumage, skin or body of such bird or to have the same in possession for sale.

In rendering the above opinion, I assume that the statement of Hon. W. C. Henderson, Acting Chief, United States Bureau of Biological Survey, to the effect that the Carolina dove and the mourning dove are one and the same, is correct.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

SEPARATE SUPERVISION DISTRICT—MAY BE CONSOLIDATED WITH OTHER DISTRICT ANY TIME DURING YEAR—DOES NOT AFFECT DISTRICT WHERE SUPERINTENDENT HAS BEEN EMPLOYED FOR YEAR AND THE CERTIFICATE RELATIVE TO HIS SALARY HAS BEEN MADE, ETC.—SUPERINTENDENT—SALARY—STATE AID.

1. The county board of education may grant the petition of the board of education of a separate supervision district to become a part of some other supervision district of the county school district at any time during the year, but such can not affect a supervision district after the district superintendent thereof has been employed for the ensuing year and the certificates with reference to his salary have been made and distribution made by the county auditor of the semi-annual appropriation of taxes.

2. A superintendent who gives none of his time to teaching can have no part of his salary included in an application for aid to weak school districts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 31, 1917.

HON. WALTER W. BECK, Prosecuting Attorney, Lisbon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your request for my opinion you submit the following questions:

> "A question has been presented to this office as to the interpretation of section 4740 G. C., relative to when 'the board of education of a separate village school district can by resolution petition to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district.'
> Can a separate village school district under section 4740 (amended by Senate Bill No. 239) receive state aid after July 1st for a superintendent who gives all his time to supervision. This separate village school district also expects to ask for aid for both superintendents and teachers."

Your first inquiry involves the consideration of section 4740 G. C. Said section was amended in 107 O. L., 622, and reads as follows:

> "Any village or wholly centralized rural school district or union of school > districts for high school purposes which maintains a first grade high school and which employs a superintendent shall upon application to the county board of education before June 1st of any year be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district by resolution shall petition to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district. Such superintendents shall perform all the duties prescribed by law for a district superintendent, but shall teach such part of each day as the board of education of the district or districts may direct."

That is to say, a village school district which is a part of a county school district may in any year be established as a separate supervision district provided the application therefor is filed with the county board of education prior to June 1st, and provided the district maintains a first grade high school and employs a superintendent; and when such application, which sets forth said conditions, is filed with the county board of education, then the county board of education shall establish such district as a separate supervision district. When once established as a separate supervision district such district continues as such separate supervision district until the board of education of the separate supervision district by resolution shall petition to become a part of some other supervision district of the county school district. In other words, it is not necessary that the application be made annually or that there be an annual filing in order that the district might continue as a separate supervision district, but it shall continue as such separate supervision district until the resolution above mentioned is passed by the board of education having control of such separate supervision district.

This department held in opinion No. 244, rendered to Hon. Benton G. Hay, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio, on May 5, 1917, that "it was not the intention that the filing was to be an annual affair;" for the section provides that such district shall > "be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district by resolution shall petition to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district."

The statute uses the words "continued as a separate district;" but it was held in the same opinion above mentioned that said section meant to authorize the establishment of separate supervision districts under the provisions thereof and that said districts would not only continue but could be established thereunder as well.

Before said separate supervision district, which has heretofore been established as such, becomes then a part of some other supervision district of the county school district, some act is necessary to be performed on the part of the various boards; that is, on the part of the district board, the act of passing the resolution petitioning the county board to assign such district to some other supervision district of the county school district, instead of permitting such district to longer remain as a separate supervision district.

The question then is, when can such resolution be passed by the board of education of such separate supervision district, and when can it be acted upon by the county board of education? There is nothing in our laws which directs when the same shall be passed or which prevents the same from being passed at any time. The statutes do not say it shall be passed on any particular day or at any particular meeting, nor do they place any limitation in any manner upon the same, with the exception that the petition shall be by resolution of the board having control of the separate supervision district. I must conclude then that said resolution can be passed at any proper and legal meeting of the board of education at any time during the year and that the same may be acted upon and become effective at any time during the year, unless such acts are prevented from becoming effective by other matters hereinafter referred to and considered.

It is suggested that on account of the language in section 4742 G. C., probably such resolution could not be passed after June 1 in any year. Said section provides for the re-election of district superintendents not less than sixty days before the expiration of the term of any such superintendent, but the language of said section is directory only, and if such district superintendent be not employed "not less than sixty days before the expiration of the term of such superintendent," such employ ment can be made after that time, and if such superintendent is not employed on or before September 1, by the presidents of the boards of education of the supervision district, or the members thereof, as the case may be, then the county board of education shall employ such superintendent. In other words, the failure of the presidents of the various boards of education or of the members of the boards, as the case may be, to elect a district superintendent prior to sixty days before the expiration of a term does not bar the electing power from performing the statutory act at a later date than June 1 in any year and up to September 1. But if such act is not performed by September 1, then the county board of education shall perform such act instead.

Said section, therefore, can not have the effect of preventing the passing of the resolution referred to in section 4740 G. C.

The question is raised as to just what effect the granting of said application by the county board of education will have upon the supervision district to which such separate supervision district is attached by such county board; that is, suppose a county board of education in any year has divided the county school district into supervision districts, and suppose further that the presidents or members of the boards, as the case may be, have met and elected a district superintendent for the year. Can the county board of education grant the application of the separate supervision district, thus change such supervision district and make the lines thereof different by adding another district thereto, after a district superintendent has once been elected?

If there is anything in our laws which will prevent such act on the part of the county board of education, that one thing would be the election of the district superintendent, for it is provided that when a district superintendent is elected his compensation shall be fixed at the same time and by the same authority which elects or appoints him, and that such salary shall be certified to the county auditor of the county in which such district is located.

The county auditor, when making his semi-annual apportionment of the school funds to the various village and rural school districts, shall retain the amounts necessary to pay such portions of the salaries of such district superintendents and other amount as may be certified by the county board of education, and such money shall be placed in a separate fund to be known as the "county board of education fund."

If such funds have been so distributed by the county auditor, or, in other words, retained at the time of distribution and another district is then added to such supervision district, then such district which is so added to such supervision district would pay no part of the salary of such district superintendent and would still be entitled to the services of such district superintendent. I do not believe that such was intended by the legislature, for it is provided in section 4744-2 G. C. that the county—

> "board of education shall also certify to the county auditor the amounts to be apportioned to each district for the payment of its share of the salaries of the county and istrict superintendents"

That is to say, each district of each supervision district shall pay its share of the salaries of the county and district superintendents and the amount necessary for the contingent expenses of the county board of education and such amounts are retained from the semi-annual distributions of the county auditor and as certified by the county board of education. It must therefore follow that the petition or resolution of the board of education of the separate supervision district can not be granted by the county board of education after such distribution is made by the county auditor.

It was held in opinion No. 2069, found in Vol. II of the opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, p. 1855, that:

> "When a certification has once been made to the county auditor, according to the provisions of section 4744-2 G. C., 104 O. L. 142, no subsequent certification may be made for that year."

In other words, when the duty imposed upon said boards was once performed, there is no authority to act a second time.

I concur in the above opinion and applying the same to the matter before us, I am compelled to hold that when the presidents of the various boards which compose a supervision district, or the members thereof, as the case may be, have acted once in the election of a district superintendent and have fixed his salary and certified such acts to the county board of education, there is no authority for them to act again when there is no vacancy.

All the above then brings us to the conclusion that when the county board of education has divided the county school district into supervision districts and the presidents of the various boards of education, or the members thereof, as the variou boards of education, or the members thereof. as the case may be, of such supervision districts, have met pursuant to law and elected a district superintendent and fixed his salary, and have certified such acts to the county board of education, and the county board of education has certified such acts to the county auditor, and the county auditor has made his semi-annual apportionment of the school funds, any or all of such acts are of such a nature as to prevent a redistricting of the county during the same year which will in any manner affect or change such supervision district.

Answering your first question, then, I conclude that the county board of education may grant the petition referred to in section 4740 G. C. at any time during the year, subject, of course, to the provisions above set forth.

In your second question you inquire whether or not a village school district, which has been established as a separate supervision district and which employs a superintendent whom you say gives all of his time to supervision, can receive state aid. You state that said district expects to ask aid for both superintendent and teachers.

State aid, as far as teachers are concerned, is controlled by section 7595-1 G. C. Said section reads as follows and is found in its amended form in 107 O. L. 623:

> "Section 7595-1. Only such school districts which pay salaries as follows shall be eligible to receive state aid; elementary teachers without previous teaching experience in the state, fifty dollars a month; elementary teachers having at least one year's professional training, fifty-five dollars a month; elementary teachers who have completed the full two years' course in any normal school, teachers' college or university approved by the superintendent of public instruction, sixty dollars per month; high school teachers not to exceed an average of eighty dollars per month in each high school."

Nothing is said in said section in relation to superintendents or the salaries there of, and therefore such salaries cannot be included in an application for state aid under said section, unless such superintendent can be considered as a teacher or unless state aid can be given to such person for only that part of the time in which he is engaged in teaching.

In your letter you state that such person will give all of his time to the duties as superintendent and I draw the inference from said language that you mean he will spend none of his time in teaching. If such be the case, no part of his salary should be included in the application for state aid to weak school districts, for only such school districts as pay salaries to teachers shall receive aid therefor.

That is to say, state aid for weak school districts is only for teachers' salaries and not superintendents' salaries.

I am not passing upon the question, however, as to whether or not it is legal for a board of education to direct the superintendent to do no teaching, but I am holding that if no teaching is done by him then no part of his salary shall be included in aid to weak school districts.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PETITION FOR COUNTY DITCH—NAME MAY BE WITHDRAWN THEREFROM ANY TIME BEFORE ACTION TAKEN—MORTGAGOR QUALIFIED TO SIGN PETITION—BY WHAT COUNTIES ACTION TAKEN (1) IN LOCATING AND CONSTRUCTING DITCH (2) TO APPORTION COST.

A petitioner for a county ditch improvement may withdraw his name from the petition at any time before action has been taken on it.

As between mortgagor and mortgagee, the mortgagor is the land owner qualified to sign a petition for such improvement.

In the construction of a single county ditch or joint county ditch the action in locating and constructing the ditch is by the county or counties in which the improvement actually made is located. The commissioners of the other counties affected by the improvement only act and sit in joint session with such commissioners engaged in such construction for the purpose of determining the amount of contribution or apportionment to be paid by an upper county to a lower county for the benefit received or burden imposed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 1, 1917.

HON. CHARLES C. CHAPMAN, Prosecuting Attorney, Ashland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 9, 1917, you submit the following inquiry:

"Sometime in May a petition was filed to straighten, deepen and widen a part of the Mohican creek, which is entirely in Ashland county; Muddy Fork creek flowing into Mohican river from the east, being in Wayne county.

"The petitioner originally obtained fifty-seven signers. Parties opposing the same filed a remonstrance with ten names on it and obtained the signatures of these parties by misrepresenting the same. The petitioner went to see those parties who had signed the petition and also the remonstrance, and a sufficient number of them withdrew their name from the remonstrance thereby leaving fifty-one signers upon the original petition.

"Two of the parties on the petition hold a mortgage upon the land, which would be benefited and assessed for this improvement, but as we understand it, these two parties would not be interested in any other way.

"Therefore, the question in my mind is whether a party who would not be assessed and yet holds a mortgage on the premises has a sufficient interest in the same to be legally counted on the petition?

"Question No. 2: The petition itself calls for a joint county ditch, while, as I have stated above the ditch is entirely in Ashland county, and only furnishes an outlet for the Muddy Fork creek, which comes directly from Wayne county. Would the petition in your opinion ask for sufficient relief to proceed further with it as a joint county ditch?"

Your first question involves the right of one signing a petition for a river improvement to withdraw therefrom, and really involves two separate questions:

(a.) As to the right of a signer of a petition for such improvement to withdraw his name therefrom.

(b.) As between the mortgagor and the mortgagee which is the land owner for the purpose of signing such petition.

Authority is not wanting upon either of these questions and both seem to be definitely settled; upon the first question—the right to withdraw from the petition—the authorities seem conflicting. Upon comparison, however, they are reconcilable and consistent. The supreme court, passing upon the question in reference to a road proceeding under an act in force in 1875, held:

"3. Resident land holders, who have subscribed a petition praying for such road improvement, may, at any time before such improvement is finally ordered to be made by the board of county commissioners, withdraw their assent by remonstrance, or having their names stricken from the petition, and after withdrawal of consent, such persons can no longer be counted as petitioning for the improvement."

Hays et al. v. Jones et al., 27 O. S. 218.

This case is followed in Makemson v. Kauffman et al., 35 O. S. 444, which was under the same statute; and again in McGonnigle et al. v. Charles Arthur, et al., 27 O. S. 251.

The apparent contradiction arises in the following syllabus:

"After the jurisdiction of county commissioners, in the matter of laying out or altering a county road, has attached by the filing of a proper petition, etc., such jurisdiction can not be defeated by any number of the petitioners afterward becoming remonstrants against the granting of the prayer of the petition."

Grinnell v. Adams, 34 O. S. 44.

The explanation, however, is that in Hays, et al. v. Jones, et al. the statute authorizing the improvement contained a provision that the order establishing it could not be passed unless a majority of the adjoining land owners had signed, and it was held that those who had withdrawn their names previous to that time by the signing of a remonstrance could not be counted. The case, however, clearly recognizes the right of a petitioner to withdraw from a petition.

In Grinnell v. Adams the statute was different and the decision is to the effect that after the petition is acted upon such withdrawal can not take place. The court said:

> "The filing of such petition, the giving of certain notice, and the execution of a bond to pay the expenses, in case the application shall fail, confer upon the county commissioners power to act in the premises, and the only question now before us is, after jurisdiction is thus conferred and assumed by the commissioners, is their power to proceed defeated by all or any number of such petitioners subsequently remonstrating against the prayer of the petition being granted."

They decided in the negative, and thereby fixed the limits of such right to withdraw confining it to such times as it had not been acted upon, and denying it after such action. This case is followed by the supreme court, placing the decision rather upon the ground of estoppel.

Columbus v. Slyh, 44 O. S. 484.

The court says:

> "The case is distinguished from Hays v. Jones, 27 Ohio St. 218. There, one of the land owners who had petitioned for the improvement, with others, signed a remonstrance before the petition had been acted on by the commissioners of the county; and this the court held he could do; not that he could do so after the order for the improvement had been made."

The court distinguished the case from Hays v. Jones, supra, but in doing so seemed to mistake the ratio decidendi of the latter case. As in that case the court based its decision upon the peculiar provision of the statute above referred to rather than upon the fact that the petition had not been acted upon. The result, however, of the decisions in these different cases is the very reasonable and common sense conclusion that the name of a petitioner may be withdrawn before any action has been taken upon it, but not after it has been ao acted upon as to confer jurisdiction upon the board or body to whom it is addressed to proceed with the improvement prayed for.

Your inquiry does not state whether the remonstrance in this case has been filed with the commissioners or not. It is not provided for by statute, however, and can have no legal effect otherwise than as constituting a withdrawal from the petition, so that if the remonstrance were never filed there would never be any withdrawal perfected; or, if it were filed the same principle above stated would be true in the case of the remonstrance just the same as the petition, and it would be cancelled or withdrawn in like manner leaving the names on the petition still in full effect and to be counted in its favor.

The last branch of this question is as to whether, when land is mortgaged, the mortgagor or the mortgagee is a proper person to sign the petition. The requirement as to such petitioners is contained in section 6446 General Code, above cited, and is that > "it shall be signed by one of more owners of the lots or lands which will be drained or benefited."

so that the qualification for the petitioner is as to whether he is the owner of any lots or lands which will be drained or benefited by the improvement.

The question of whether the mortgagee or the mortgagor is such owner has not been uniformly decided one way or the other at all times. Originally a mortgage was taken strictly upon its terms and was drawn in the form of a conveyance of land therein described just as much as would be a deed in fee simple. In fact, it usually was a deed in fee simple, and is so in form at the present time. The payment of the debt incurred was a condition subsequent upon which the conveyance might afterwards be defeated and was construed as being in no manner different from any other condition having that effect. At an early date, however, the courts of chancery began to interfere and decreed such debts to be a simple security for the money, and so it came to be considered and held generally in England and in the different states. It has not, however, in Ohio entirely lost the character indicated by its form, and it has always been held that the mortgagee after condition broken might enter and take possession of the land and might maintain an action of ejectment against the mortgagor putting the latter off the land, and taking possession of it himself. This is the law today as much as it has ever been, but this remedy is seldom resorted to by reason of the fact that under the equitable doctrine above referred to as established, at any time after such eviction the mortgagor may still redeem by payment of the debt and interest, in doing which he is entitled to an accounting and credit of the value of the rents and profits received by the mortgagor while in possession, and as this equitable right would continue and might be enforced until defeated by the statute of limitation, the remedy by ejectment is seldom, if ever, resorted to.

Of course it follows that the mortgagee must be the owner in order to maintain an action of ejectment, and so we have this sort of double ownership recognized by a uniform line of decisions. In order to make such ownership consistent, however it is held that the mortgagee is the owner as between himself and the mortgagor, but as to all the world, aside from the mortgagee, the mortgagor is the owner of the land. This has been held and this line of decisions approved by the supreme court in a comparatively late case.

Bradfie d et al. v Hale et al., 67 O. S., 316.

This action was one in which the decision was upon the statute of limitations. However, the question of ownership is necessary to be determined and is determined. Price J., in the opinion collates and adjusts authorities on this subject, reference to which opinion is made instead of repeating such collation herein.

Quoting from the opinion of Judge Burket in

he says:

> "The mortgage being, in equity, regarded as a mere security for the debt, the legal title to the mortgaged premises remains in the mortgagor, as against all the world, except the mortgagee, and also as against him until condition broken, but after condition broken the legal title as between mortgagor and mortgagee is vested in the mortgagee."

The ownership, therefore, of the mortgagor is recognized against all the world but the mortgagee. The mortgagee may assert his ownership by legal proceedings including the action of ejectment, or he may omit to do so and leave the mortgagor in possession and enjoyment of the property with all the attributes of ownership still treating his conveyance thereof as a mere security for his debt. He usually takes this course, and usually proceeds by foreclosure to have the property sold, equity of redemption foreclosed and the debts paid out of the proceeds of the sale. The mortgagor being the owner as against all the world except the mortgagee, it follows that he has the ownership so far as concerns the interest of the county commissioners or other land owners interested in the construction of an improvement, and is therefore the proper owner to sign a petition for such improvement.

The answer to your second question is found in section 6537, as it is evidenced from your discussion of the number of petitioners that your question is whether fifty signatures are left. This is a comparatively new provision in the drainage laws, consisting of a very long section, the substance of which is as follows:

> "When a ditch or improvement is proposed, which will require a location in more than one county, or it is sought to improve the channel of a river * * * which improvement as proposed is in more than one county, application shall be made to the board of county commissioners of each of such counties, * * *. A majority of the joint board of commissioners, when in joint session, shall be competent to locate and establish such ditch or improvement, or to grant the order improving the channel of a river * * *. Or in case the members of the said joint board of commissioners when in joint session shall be equally divided on the locating or establishing such ditch improvement, or the granting the order for improving the channel of a river * * * said joint board shall certify that fact to the governor of the state of Ohio, who shall within twenty days appoint an experienced civil engineer * * *. Said civil engineer shall thereupon be competent to sit with said commissioners in joint session and vote on all questions relating to such proceedings as fully and completely as any commissioner of said joint board. * * *"

Your question does not state whether your petition is filed in more than one county. It does show that the whole improvement to be constructed lies in one county and that the benefit to be derived partly accrued to another county, known in other sections of the joint county ditch law as the "upper county." This case is provided for in section 6540 General Code under the provisions of which your proceedings as to locating and constructing the ditch would be a single county proceeding before the commissioners of Ashland county acting under the provisions of said section. Wayne county, under your statement of facts, would be required to help pay for the improvement. The method of enforcing, which payment would be under section 6541, to hold a general meeting of the commissioners of Ashland and Wayne counties in order to agree upon the amount to be paid by Wayne county, which meeting may be called in a manner pointed out by section 6542 General Code, and if there be an entire failure to agree, section 6543 General Code provides for the bringing of an action which in this case would be in Ashland county, and before the court of common pleas to determine the amount to be apportioned against Wayne county. Your question No. 2 states that the petition called for a joint county ditch from which it follows that it is a joint proceeding, and that the commissioners of both counties have been called upon to act upon the loaction of the ditch and is answered in the negative.

If it be an improvement constructed entirely in Ashland county and it is sought to require Wayne county to assist in paying for the construction on account of the benefits received by Wayne county the proceeding should be a single county ditch proceeding under favor of section 6540 et seq. It does not follow that a proceeding might not be had under this section in case it were a joint improvement constructed by Ashland county and a lower county. This question has been fully considered and an opinion rendered thereon to Hon. Hector S. Young, prosecuting attorney of Marion county, being opinion No. 551, to which we refer you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE BY COMMISSIONERS OF COLUMBIANA COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 1, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Columbiana county in the sum of $84,700 issued by the commissioners of said county in anticipation of taxes and assessments levied and assessed for the construction of the Lisbon-Bayard-Canton public roads.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners and other officers relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in all respects legal and in conformity with the provisions of the General Code relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that bonds properly prepared covering said issue in accordance with the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers of Columbiana county and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHERE SCHOOL FUNDS DEPOSITED—LIABILITY OF MEMBERS WHEN NO DEPOSITORY DESIGNATED.

Where two banks are located in a school district, one with a capital stock of $50,000 and the other with a capital stock of $25,000, the board of education may designate either or both of said banks as a depository for the school funds.

Where more money comes into the hands of a board of education, through the issue of bonds, than can be lawfully deposited in the banks of such district by reason of the limit of the capital stock being reached, such board may contract with outside banks for the excess.

If a board of education fails or refuses to establish a depository for its school funds the members of such board shall become liable in a sum of at least two per cent. on the average daily balance of such funds and shall also be liable for any loss of such funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 4, 1917.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion upon the following proposition:

> "One of the school districts of Warren county, Ohio, which contains two banks, has in its treasury, arising from the sale of bonds for the purpose of erecting a school house, the sum of approximately $100,000.00. In addition to that sum, said district has a certain amount of funds arising from taxation for the use of the contingent and tuition funds of said district. There are located within this district two banks, one of which, I am told, has a capital of $50,000.00 and I understand a surplus in addition thereto. The other bank has a capital, I am informed, of $25,000.00. It would thus appear to be impossible for the board of education to comply strictly with the provisions of the sections 7604 and 7605 inasmuch as section 7605 attempts to require the money to be deposited in the two banks within the district and the aggregate of the two banks being $75,000.00, being less than the amount on hand.

If the limitation prescribed in section 7604 is followed, an amount in excess of $25,000.00 could not be deposited in these two banks. On this state of facts I desire to inquire as follows:

First. Should all of the money be deposited in the two banks located within the district?

Second. Should $75,000.00 be deposited in the two banks located within the district and the balance be retained by the treasurer of the school district?

Third. Can the provisions of section 7607, in which the following language is used 'in all school districts containing less than two banks' be construed to mean in all districts containing less than two banks capable of receiving the amount of money the board of education has to deposit and if such construction should be placed on that section, should the board of education then deposit all of the funds in its hands in the two banks in said district?

Fourth. Should any part of the money be deposited with the county treasurer (the $100,000.00, it will be noted, never was in the hands of the county treasurer but was paid to the board of education direct by the purchaser of its bonds)?

Fifth. If any part of this money should be deposited with the county treasurer, what steps should be taken to get the same into his hands?

Sixth. What liability will the members of the school board be under with regard to this money if they follow the course above outlined?

Owing to the cost of building materials and some questions surrounding the site upon which the school building will be erected, it will probably be some time before any considerable part of the $100,000.00 mentioned above will be expended."

Section 7604 G. C. provides that within thirty days after the first Monday of January, 1916, and every two years thereafter, the board of education of any school district shall by resolution provide for the deposit of any or all moneys coming into the hands of its treasurer, but no bank shall receive a deposit larger than the amount of its paid in capital stock.

Section 7605 G. C. reads:

"In school districts containing two or more banks such deposit shall be made in the bank or banks, situated therein that at competitive bidding offer the highest rate of interest which must be at least two per cent. for the full time the funds or any part thereof are on deposit. Such bank or banks shall give a good and sufficient bond, or shall deposit bonds of the United States, the State of Ohio, or county municipal, township or school bonds issued by the authority of the state of Ohio, at the option of the board of education, in a sum not less than the amount deposited. The treasurer of the school district must see that a greater sum than that contained in the bond is not deposited in such bank or banks and he and his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned by deposits in excess of such bond. But no contract for the deposit of school funds shall be made for a longer period than two years."

Section 7606 G. C. provides that the board shall determine in the resolution mentioned in section 7604 the method by which bids shall be received and the authority which is to receive them. The time for which such deposits shall be made and all details for carrying into effect the authority given by the sections of our laws which refer to the deposit of school funds.

Sections 7607 G. C. provides:

> "In all school districts containing less than two banks, after the adoption of a resolution providing for the deposit of its funds, the board of education may enter into a contract with one or more banks that are conveniently located and offer the highest rate of interest, which shall not be less than two per cent. for the full time the funds or any part thereof are on deposit. Such bank or banks shall give good and sufficient bond, or shall deposit bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or county, municipal, township or school bonds issued by the authority of the state of Ohio, at the option of the board of education, in a sum at least equal to the amount deposited. The treasurer of the school district must see that a greater sum than that contained in the bond is not deposited in such bank or banks, and he and his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occassioned by deposits in excess of such bond."

Section 7609 G. C. provides:

> "When a depository is lawfully provided, and the funds are deposited therein, the treasurer of the school district and his bondsmen shall be relieved from any liability occasioned by the failure of the bank or banks of deposit or by the failure of the sureties therefor, or by the failure of either of them, except as above provided in cases of excessive deposits. Upon the failure of the board of education of any school district to provide a depository according to law the members of the board of education shall be liable for any loss occassioned by their failure to provide such depository, and in addition shall pay to the treasurer of the school funds two per cent. on the average daily balance on the school funds during the time said school district shall be without a depository. Said moneys may be recovered from the members of the board of education for the use and benefit of the school funds of the district upon the suit of any taxpayer of the school district."

Section 4763 G. C. provides in part:

> "* * In all village and rural school districts which do not provide legal depositories as provided in sections 7604 to 7608 inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such districts."

Section 4782 G. C. provides that when the depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, the board of education of the district, by resolution adopted by a vote of a majority of its members, shall dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys and the clerk shall perform all the services and be subject to all the obligations required by law of the treasurer of such school district.

The object of the above sections of our laws is to provide for the depositing and safe keeping of the school funds of a school district. By the terms of section 7609 G. C. it is provided that upon the failure of the board of education of any school district to provide a depository according to law, the members of the board of education shall be liable for any loss occasioned by their failure to so provide such depository and that in addition to being liable for any such loss, such board of education shall pay to the treasurer of the school funds two per cent. on the average daily balance on the school funds during the time such school district is without a depository, thus providing a penalty for the failure on the part of a board of education to establish a depository.

In the district you mention the board of education did attempt to follow the statutes in creating the depository. Two banks were located in said district and it is provided by section 7605 G. C. that in school districts which contain two or more banks the school funds of such districts shall be deposited in the bank or banks which are situated in such district and which at competitive bidding offer the highest rate of interest for said funds. There being two banks located therein, it was obligatory upon the board of education to select one or more of such banks as the depository for its school funds, unless the board of education finds that there has been collusion between or among the bidders for such funds, in which case the board may reject any and all bids and arrange for the deposit of such funds in a bank or banks outside of such district by entering into a contract with one or more banks which are conveniently located and which offer the highest rate of interest, but not less than two per cent. Such arrangements with such outside banks can not be so made if there has been no collusion between the bidders representing the banks located within the district, and from the fact that no such condition is mentioned by you, and from the further fact that both banks in your district have been awarded funds, I must conclude that there has been no collusion, and therefore the board was not only warranted in awarding funds to said banks, but was compelled under the law to do so.

It is provided that no greater sum shall be deposited in any bank than the amount of its paid in capital stock and you state that one of such banks has a capital stock and I am assuming that it is fully paid up, of $50,000.00, and that the other in said district has a capital stock of $25,000.00. So that the maximum amount which could be deposited in both of said banks would be $75,000.00. After said $75,000.00 was so deposited there remains in the hands of the acting treasurer $25,000.00 or more undeposited and with no legal depository under contract to receive the same.

As to this last amount, that is the amount of approximately $25,000.00 undeposited, there arises a condition in relation to which there is no bank in the district in which said amount can be deposited. One of two courses must be taken in relation to said amount; either the district must be considered as having no bank therein or such funds must be placed in the county treasury.

Section 4763 G. C. provides that where districts do not provide legal depositories as provided in sections 7604 to 7608 inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such district. I take it that the provisions of said section mean that where a board of education of a district refuses or neglects to establish a depository as provided by said sections, then and in that event the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds. I do not believe said section was meant to apply to a district where the board of education acted within the law and established a depository or depositories within said district and deposited funds therein to the limits allowed by law, and still had other funds to be deposited. It is more particularly a case as though there existed a bank in a school district which had no capital stock and which on account of that or some other fact was unable to be designated as such depository. It is possible for more than two banks to be located in the school district with none of which a school board may contract for the deposit of its school funds.

It was held by my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, in opinion No. 189, found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, Vol. II, p. 1197, that:

> "A private bank owned by an individual has no 'paid in capital stock' and therefore can not be made a public depository * * * under section 7604 G. C."

Such bank could not bid to become a depository for the school funds, nor be contracted with as such depository. It would be, as far as establishing a depository is concerned, as though no bank existed within the school district.

I believe what applies to a bank having no capital stock in relation to being unable to contract as a depository also applies to a bank which has received the maximum amount allowed by law; that is, neither one being able to bid for the amount of money which remains undeposited in each class, it would be as though no bank was located in the district.

Therefore, if no bank is located in the district which can be designated as a depository, and if there are funds to deposit, then the board of education has a right to proceed under the provisions of section 7607 G. C. and enter into a contract with one or more banks which are conveniently located and which offer the highest rate of interest of not less than two per cent for the funds so to be deposited.

Answering your several questions then, in the order in which they are asked. I advise you:

1. Only that amount of money should be deposited in the two banks located within the district to which they are legally entitled according to law and in no event to exceed the amount of their paid in capital stock.

2. If the two banks located in the district are entitled to and do receive the amount of $75,000.00, then the balance should be deposited in a depository outside of the district which is legally established according to law.

3. The answers to your first and second questions answer your third.

4. The board of education should deposit none of said money with the county treasurer, but should establish a depository for same as provided by law.

5. Your fifth question is answered by the answer to the fourth.

6. If the members of your school board follow the courses outlined in this opinion, there will be no liability. If they do not provide legal depositories for the funds of said school district, they will be liable under the provisions of section 7609 G C. above quoted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COMMISSION—APPOINTED TO CODIFY DITCH LAW—WHEN REPORT MAY BE FILED—COMPENSATION AND EXPENSES AFTER JANUARY 1, 1918.

1. The commission appointed under and by virtue of an act found in 107 O. L., 611 may file its report after January 1, 1918, if it finds itself unable to complete its report by said date.

2. The members of the commission would be entitled to their compensation and expenses while engaged on the work of the commission, after January 1, 1918, as well as before said date.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 5, 1917.

HON. F. E. BAILEY, Chairman of Ditch Codifying Commission, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 25, 1917, in which you ask for my opinion upon the following:

> "I desire to call your attention to senate bill No. 110, found in 107 O. L. at page 611, and to inform you that in the opinion of the commission, the appointment of which is provided for by that bill, it will be impossible to give the necessary attention to the work imposed upon it and to make a full report by the first day of January, 1918, and ask an opinion of your office as to what authority remains in the commission under this legislation, to perform any of its duties after the first day of January, 1918; also whether or not the commission would be authorized to expend any of its appropriation of $3,000.00 after said date, for payment of any expenses and compensation which may be incurred and which are provided for under the act."

Section 1 of the act about which you inquire provides as follows (107 O. L. 611):

"Section 1. The governor is hereby authorized to appoint a commission of three members to consist of a county surveyor, a farmer and a lawyer, all of whom have had experience in ditch matters, to codify, consolidate and clarify the ditch laws of the state. The commission shall organize within ten days after appointment by electing a chairman and secretary, and shall make a report to the governor prior to January 1st, 1918."

Section 3 of said act reads as follows:

"Section 3. To carry out the provisions of this act there is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund and not otherwise appropriated, the sum of three thousand dollars."

Section 2 of the act provides that each member of the commission shall be paid five dollars for each day actually engaged on the work of the commission, and shall also be paid his actual and necessary expenses incurred while engaged in such work.

The answer to your inquiry depends upon the question whether the language contained in section 1 of the act is merely directory, or whether it is mandatory—whether the provision that the report shall be filed with the governor prior to January 1, 1918, is material, or whether the date upon which the report is to be filed is immaterial. In order to answer this question I desire to note the construction which courts place upon matters similar to the one about which you inquire.

In Spencer's Appeal, 78 Conn. 301, the court say in the syllabus:

"The provision of general statutes, section 3718, which requires that the decision of the railroad commissioners upon any matter relating to the removal of grade crossings shall be communicated to the parties within twenty days after the final hearing, is directory only, not mandatory; and therefore a failure by the railroad commissioners to give such notice does not render their decision void."

In the opinion the court say:

"It is of course difficult to lay down a general rule to determine in all cases when the provisions of a statute are merely directory and when mandatory or imperative, but of the rules mentioned, the test most satisfactory and conclusive is, whether the prescribed mode of action is of the essence of the thing to be accomplished, or in other words, whether it relates to matter material or immaterial—to matter of convenience or of substance."

In Hurford v. The City of Omaha, 4 Neb. 336, the court lays down the two following fundamental principles in its opinion:

"1. That when the particular provision of the statute relates to some immaterial matter, where compliance is a matter of convenience rather than substance, or where the directions of the statute are given with a view to the proper, orderly and prompt conduct of business merely, the provision may generally be regarded as directory.

2. When the statutory provision relates to acts or proceedings immaterial in themselves, but contains negative terms, either express or implied, then such negative terms clearly show a legislative intent to impose a limitation, and therefore the statute becomes imperative, and requires strict performance in the mode or manner prescribed."

In People v. Lake Co., 33 Calif. 487, the court in the syllabus says:

"Where a statute specifies the time at or in which an act is to be done, it is usually held to be directory, unless time is of the essence of the thing to be done, or the act contains negative words, or shows that the designation of the time was intended as a limitation of power or authority or right."

Now, when we consider the nature of the act under consideration, the nature of the duties to be performed by the said commission, the use to which the results of the labor of the commission are to be put, and the language used in the first section of the act, I am clearly of the opinion that the language is merely directory.

(1) In the first place it is well to remember that the action of the commission is not at all final. Whatever the commission does must be acted upon by the general assembly and by the governor of the state, before it has any force or vitality.

(2) The results of the labor of the commission are for the use of the general assembly, that it may be better able to enact proper and necessary legislation in reference to ditches. The legislature has held its regular session and will not meet again in regular session until the first Monday of January, 1919. Hence the results of the commission's labor will not likely be used before the year 1919.

(3) There is nothing whatever in the section of a negative character—that is there is nothing to indicate that the report will not be effective provided it is not filed prior to January 1, 1918.

(4) The section provides that the commission shall make a report to the governor prior to January 1, 1918. This would seem to indicate that the commission might make, if it so desired, a partial report to the governor, and its final report later on; or in other words, it could postpone its entire report to a later date than January 1, 1918.

So that when we come to apply the law, as set out above, to the facts as we find them in this case, I am of the opinion the commission may, if it considers it necessary so to do, put off the filing of its report until after January 1, 1918. What the legislature undoubtedly desired is a report full and comprehensive in its scope, and if the commission finds it impossible to prepare such a report in the time limited within the statute, the legislature no doubt intended that a longer time might be used by the commission.

In People v. Earl, 42 Colo. 238, the court touches upon this matter and says in the syllabus:

"The requirements of a statute which are mandatory must be strictly construed, while the requirements which are directory should receive a liberal construction to the accomplishment of the intent and purpose of the law."

The third section of the act provides for an appropriation of three thousand dollars to carry out the provisions of this act. This appropriation does not lapse until the first of July, 1919.

Section 2 of said act provides that each member shall be paid five dollars for each day actually engaged on the work of the commission and also shall be paid his expenses. Hence it is my opinion that the members of the commission would be entitled to their compensation and expenses from the time they are engaged in their work after January 1, 1918.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CANDIDATES—NOMINATED BY PETITION—FOR TOWNSHIP AND MUNICIPAL OFFICES—NOT REQUIRED TO PAY FEE—IN MUNICIPALITIES OF LESS THAN 2,000 POPULATION.

Candidates for township and municipal offices in municipalities which have less than two thousand population, when not nominated under the primary election act, do not come under section 4970-1 General Code, and hence are not required to pay the fee provided by said section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 6, 1917.

HON. E. A. SCOTT, Prosecuting Attorney, West Union, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you inquire as follows:

> "Under section 4970-1 G. C. does the words in said section 'for any office' apply to township officers and municipal officers, when not nominated as candidates at a primary election? My question for opinion is this: Are township and municipal candidates required to pay fee under the above section? All towns in Adams county are less than two thousand population and are not required to hold primary."

Section 4970-1 General Code provides as follows:

> "At the time of filing the declaration of candidacy for nomination for any office, each candidate shall pay a fee of one-half of one per cent of the annual salary of such office, but in no case shall such fee be more than twenty-five dollars. All fees so paid in the case of candidates for state offices, office of United States senator and congressman-at-large, shall forthwith be paid by the officer receiving the same into the treasury of state. All other fees shall be paid by the officer receiving the same into the treasury of his county to the credit of the county fund. No fee shall be required in the case of candidates for committeeman or delegate or alternate to a convention or for president or vice-president of the United States, nor for offices for which no salary is paid."

Section 4970 General Code provides, among other things, the form of the declaration of candidacy and the certificate which must be filed with the state supervisor of elections by the candidates for office seeking to have his name printed on the primary ballot. Both of these sections are found in chapter VI, title XIV, subdivision II (III) part first, and is headed "Primary Elections." Section 4951 General Code provides:

> "The provisions of this chapter shall not extend nor be applicable to the nomination of candidates for township offices or for the elective offices of any municipality which has less than two thousand population as ascertained by the federal census next preceding such nominations unless the voter o such towns ip or municipality shall so petition the board of deputy state supervisors of elections which petition shall be filed at leas ninety days before the regular date for holding the primary to nominate the officers mentioned in this section and shall be signed by qualified electors of such township or municipality equalling in number at least a majority of votes cast in such township or municipality at the last general election therein. In the event that such petition is filed then all nominations of party candidates in such township or municipality shall be made as in this chapter provided."

Inasmuch as section 4951 expressly states that the provisions of this chapter shall not extend or be applicable to nominations of candidates for township offices or for elective offices of any municipality which has less than 2,000 population, and since you state that all of the towns in Adams county are less than two thousand population and are not required to hold primaries, it necessarily follows that section 4970-1 does not apply.

I therefore hold that township and municipal candidates who are not nominated at the primary elections are not required to pay any fee under section 4970-1 General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TEACHER—MAY TEACH UNDER MAIDEN NAME—IF MARRIED SUBSEQUENT TO ENTERING INTO CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT.

A teacher who is single when a contract of employment is en'e ed into, but subsequently marries, may continue to teach under her name before marriage, if not prevented by a rule of the board rejecting all married women.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Sept. 6, 1917.

HON. MILTON HAINES, Prosecuting Attorney, Marysville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of August 29, 1917, you submit for my opinion the following proposition:

"Recently a rumor came out that a teacher re-employed as a 'Miss G.' was married before her re-employment but which fact was not known by the board of Education.

"The teacher being called before the board, she stated that she was married before her re-employment both this spring and also last spring; that is, she taught last year as a Miss G., signing reports and drawing her salary as Miss G. but in fact her name was Mrs. Gertrude G. Was the re-employment legal? Did the board re-employ a Miss G. as the minutes state? Could she take up her school work this fall as Mrs. G. when Miss G. was employed?"

General Code section 7705 provides that the board of education of a rural school district shall employ the teachers of the public schools of such district but nothing is said in said section, or in any other section of our school laws, that the teacher shall be employed by the family or any other particular name. So that, if there is any inhibition in the use of any particular name by a person who engages himself or herself as a teacher, the same must come not from our statutory law but from the general law upon the subject of the use of names.

The word "name" is defined in Uihlein v. Gladieux, 74 O. S. 247, as:

> "The distinctive appellation by which a person or thing is designated or known; or, as better given by another lexicographer, that by which an individual person or thing is designated and distinguished from others."

So that, when a person is known or designated by an appellation, that appellation by which he or she is so designated or known is considered to be the name of such person. But it is not in all cases necessary that a person shall always use the name by which he is commonly designated or distinguished. He may, without abandoning his real name, adopt any name, style or signature wholly different from his own by which he may transact business, execute contracts, issue negotiable paper, and sue or be sued, and such assumed or fictitious names may be purely artificial names or may be names that are or may be applied to natural persons.

It is held in 29 Cyc. 271, that:

> "A man may lawfully change his name without resorting to legal proceedings and for all purposes the name thus assumed will constitute his legal name just as much as if he had borne it from birth."

And in Clark v. Clark, 19, Kansas, 522, that:

> "Where a married woman eloped with a man and was commonly known in the community in which she lived after elopement by the name of her paramour with whom she lived as a wife, she can sue in such reputed name."

It is further held in 29 Cyc. 271, citing Goodenow v. Tappan, 1 Ohio 60; Mack v. Schlotman, 4 Ohio Dec. Rep. 307; Donaldson v. Donaldson, 31 Cin. Law Bulletin 102, that it is sufficient in legal proceedings for a person to be designated by a name by which he is commonly known and called, even though it is not his true name.

So that, when in your case Mrs. G. continued to teach school under the name by which she was commonly known prior to the time of her marriage and by which name certificates to teach were issued to her, and by which name she entered into school teaching contracts, she was doing a thing which is entirely permissible by law.

It frequently happens that persons of certain professions or employments use names other than those by which they are commonly designated or distinguished. The family or surnames of many of the most noted authors, actors, journalists, etc. commonly remain entirely unknown and instead thereof those persons are known only by their professional or business names and the contracts which are entered into by such persons using such professional or business names are as valid as though they were entered into by the family name of such person. If, however, a board of education should make a rule that no married person should be employed as teacher in the public schools of a district, and if a person who desired to be so employed and knowing of such rule would falsely represent her name and thereby cause the board to believe that such teacher was a single person, when in fact such person was married this would be such a fraudulent condition that the contract would be on the part of the board of education a voidable one upon the discovery of same by the board. Your inquiry, however, sets forth no such condition or rule of your board and I am therefore compelled to conclude that none such exists.

So that, answering your question specifically, I advise you that the board did re-employ the teacher who was commonly known as Miss G. and that she can take up her school work this fall in that name if she so desires.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DOG AND KENNEL FUND—TO WHAT SOCIETIES COMMISSIONERS MAY AWARD SAID FUND.

1. Under the provisions of section 5653 General Code, as found in 107 O. L. 537 the county commissioners may make an award of a part of the dog and kennel fund arising from the registration of dogs and dog kennels to more than one branch of the Ohio Humane Society, if there be more than one such branch in the county.

2. In order to make such award it is not required that the society receiving it be a branch of the Ohio Humane Society or have the approval of the latter, but only that it be incorporated and organized as provided by law and have one or more agents appointed in pursuance of law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 6, 1917.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On August 8th, you addressed the following communication to this department:

> "Sometime ago the county commissioners of this county awarded The Cleveland Humane Society and The Cleveland Animal Protective League equal sums out of the sheep fund and the action of the commissioners was then submitted to me for my approval.
> Inasmuch as there seems to be some ambiguity in the statutes concerning the right of the commissioners to make this award, I am respectfully asking for your opinion in this matter.
>
> The questions involved are as follows:
> 1. Can an award be made to more than one society in the same county?
> 2. If so, can an award be made to a society not under the supervision of The Ohio State Humane Society and not approved by such state society?
> The Cleveland Humane Protective League has not been approved by the state society, not having asked for such approval.
>
> You will note that section 5653 (104 O. L.), which is the statute that authorizes these awards provides that this fund shall be transferred as follows:
>
> 'In a county in which there is a society, for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals, incorporated and organized as provided by law which has one or more agents appointed in pursuance of law, all such excess as the county commissioners deem necessary for the use * * * of such a society.'
> It occurs to me by reason of the wording of the statute, that it is possible that the legislature had in mind but one society in each county and also had in mind that it was to be such a society as made itself a part of the general humane society scheme of the state."

Section 5653 General Code, referred to by you, was amended by the last general assembly March 21, 1917, (107 O. L. 537), and now reads as follows:

> "After paying all horse, sheep, cattle, swine, mule and goat claims at the December session of the county commissioners, if there remain more than one thousand dollars of the dog and kennel fund arising from the registration of dogs and dog kennels for such year the excess at such December session shall be transferred and disposed of as follows: In a county in which there is a society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals, incorporated and organized as provided by law, which has one or more agents appointed in pursuance of law, all such excess as the county commissioners deem necessary for the uses and purposes of such society by order of the commissioners and upon the warrant of the county auditor shall be paid to the treasurer of such society, and any surplus not so transferred to the county board of education fund at the direction of the county commissioners."

It is true that the humane society referred to in said statute is in the singular number, and that the statute appears to contemplate but one such society. It is not within the operation of section 10213 enacting among other things that words in the singular include the plural number, for said section by its express terms applies only to the civil code, yet while this statute is expressed in the singular number and seems to contemplate but one humane society in a county, this may be because the legislative intent finding expression in the language of the person who framed the act, was not so expressed because of a design to contribute only to humane purposes involved through one sole organization, but rather because they contemplate that which is doubtless the fact that there would be but one such society in each county, which is true of the smaller counties. Considered with exactness, the act does not prevent contribution to more than one society. It certainly does not expressly do so, and if at all it is only done by inference from the use of the name in the singular number. The portion of the section giving this power reads substantially as follows:

"In a county in which there is a society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals * * * all such excess as the county commissioners deem necessary for the uses and purposes of such society by order of the commissioners * * * shall be paid to the treasurer of such society. * * *"

After that has been done once, is there anything in the statute to prevent its repetition in the event there be another such society? You still have a county in which there is such society unprovided for, and you still have a surplus. May the commissioners not turn over to such society all of such excess as they deem necessary for its uses and purposes? Is not the second transfer just as much within the purpose and object of the act, and just as much within its language as the first? The same object is there to be accomplished. The first society has been provided with all that the commissioners deem necessary for its uses and purposes. The situation is just the same as it was in the first place. You still have an excess and you still have a society of the proper description, and if there is still humane work for this last society to do, the letter and spirit of this act permits the transfer of funds to it. Of course, if the purpose is fully accomplished by the donation to the first society, then the second society would receive nothing because the commissioners would deem nothing necessary for them. It is the plain intent of the section that the commissioners may contribute such part of this excess fund for this purpose as they deem necessary to accomplish it, and that the residue shall go to the county board of education.

Your first question is, therefore, answered in the affirmative—an award can be made to more than one humane society in the county. Such has been the practice at least to some extent.

State ex rel v. Struble et al., 15 N. P. N. S. 233.

Your second question is whether such award can be made to such society not under the Ohio state humane society and not approved by such state society.

The requirement of the society as given in the above section is that it shall be > "a society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals incorporated and organized as provided by law, which has one or more agents appointed in pursuance of law."

We are therefore relegated to the statutes governing humane societies for the further consideration of what is requisite, which is chapter V, division VI, title IX, part second, (sections 10062 to 10084.) The local societies are provided by section 10066, which is as follows:

> "Branches of such society consisting of not less than ten members may be organized in any part of the state to prosecute the work of the societies in their several localities, under rules and regulations prescribed by this society. Societies organized in any county under the next following section may become branches of such society by resolution adopted at a meeting thereof called for that purpose, a copy of which resolution shall be forwarded to the secretary of state."

Also by section 10067 G. C., which is as follows:

> "Societies for the prevention of acts of cruelty to animals may be organized in any county, by the association of not less than seven persons. The members thereof, at a meeting called for the purpose, shall elect not less than three of their members directors, who shall continue in office until their successors are duly chosen."

It would seem strange that two adjacent sections of the statutes would provide for two similar societies for the same purpose and having the same powers but make them of a different nature and composed of different numbers of members. No reason is apparent for the two kinds of local humane societies and especially is no reason apparent why one of these should have ten members and others required to have only seven. This incongruity arose in the usual way and is an example of what is frequently found in the Ohio statutes.

The laws governing humane societies constitute chapter V, division VI, title IX, part second of the General Code, consisting of sections 10062 to 10084. The original act upon which this chapter is founded was passed March 29, 1875. Section 10066 was not found in it, but was subsequently enacted. The original act consisted of twenty-four sections, largely providing for the protection of animals and declaring the offenses constituting cruelty and the penalties for the same. Sections 12 and 21 provided for societies for the enforcement of law. Section 12 is present section 10067 providing for county societies. Section 21 provided for state societies, now constituting section 10062 and the main provisions of the three succeeding sections authorizing the appointment of agents etc.

From this it appears that the state society and the county society are entirely independent of each other, were created by the same act, and the county society by the prior section of that act. By the original act and by the present form of that act, omitting the excrescence which was afterwards attached to it, the act is cohesive, homogeneous and effective for the purpose for which it was passed.

Section 10066 is a part of an act passed March 21, 1887, vol. 84 O. L., page 207 the title of which is as follows:

"AN ACT.

"To amend section 3714 of the Revised Statutes of Ohio, so as to provide for changing the name of 'the Ohio state society for the prevention of cruelty to animals,' to 'the Ohio humane society,' and to more clearly define the purpose and scope of said state society and its auxiliaries."

Section 10066 G. C. provides for branches of the state humane society, and also provides that the county societies already existing may become branches of the state society in a certain manner. You therefore have certain branches of the state society with ten members and certain other branches with seven members.

No effectual connection with the state society is found in the act and none is found in the original act providing for the department because none was then intended so that the connection of the branches with the state society is nominal only and may exist in one case and not exist in another at random or at the caprice of the members constituting any particular society. Either kind of local society comes under the description in section 5653 as being "incorporated and organized as provided by law," and either is authorized by law to have one or more agents appointed in pursuance of law; therefore either is entitled to participate in the fund as provided in said section.

Your statement as to the Cleveland Humane Protective League is that it has not been approved by the state society and has not asked for such approval. It is impossible to tell from this whether it is organized according to law or not. As appears above, it might be organized according to law and have no connection whatever with the state humane society. It was probably the intention of the framer of the act of March 21, 1887, to exclude local societies not becoming branches of the state society from any of the privileges of the original act, but the provisions of section 10067 were not expressly repealed and are in the law now, have been carried into the General Code and are still in effect as a part of the legislative provisions upon the subject.

Your first question is therefore answered in the affirmative—an award can be made to more than one humane society in the county; and your second question is sufficiently answered above to the effect that a local humane society may be entitled to receive this appropriation without being a branch of the state society or having any approval therefrom.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHEN ADVERTISEMENT FOR BIDS FOR SCHOOL HOUSES MAY BE DISPENSED WITH—"URGENT NECESSITY"—DEFINED.

A board of education can only dispense with advertisement for bids for the building of a new school building in case there exists an "urgent necessity" therefor.

"Urgent necessity" means more than convenience and more than ordinary necessity, It is something which requires immediate action. Something that cannot wait. When pleaded as an excuse for a failure to comply with any statutory requirement, it must be decided by the circumstances of the particular case in which it arises.

The mere fact of itself that a school building is unfit for use of the schools does not create a case of urgent necessity, but, coupled with other circumstances, may do so.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 6, 1917.

HON. ADDISON P. MINSHALL, Prosecuting Attorney, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of August 28, 1917, you request my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

> "The board duly passed a resolution submitting to the electors of the district the question of the issuance of bonds for the erection of a high school building. The bonds were issued after the election had been held and the question favorably passed upon. Plans and specifications were prepared, advertisement for bids duly made but no bids within the estimate were received. A high school has been in operation for severl years in a building wholly unfit for such purposes.
> Under section 7623 of the General Code of Ohio can the board now proceed to enter into contracts for the construction of the building costing about $8,000.00, without advertising for bids, and is this a case of 'urgent necessity' such as will permit of dispensing with the advertisement?"

Pertinent to said inquiry is section 7623 G. C., which provides in part as follows:

> "Section 7623. When a board of education determines to build, repair, enlarge or furnish a schoolhouse or schoolhouses, or make any improvement or repair provided for in this chapter, the cost of which will exceed in city districts, fifteen hundred dollars, and in other districts five hundred dollars, except in cases of urgent necessity, or for the security and protection of school property, it must proceed as follows:
> 1. For the period of four weeks, the board must advertise for bids in some newspaper of general circulation in the district, and in two such papers, if there are so many. If no newspaper has a general circulation therein, then by posting such advertisement in three public places therein. Such advertisement shall be entered in full by the clerk, on the record of the proceedings of the board. * * * *"

That is to say, the board, when it decides to build a school building the cost of which, in city districts, is more than fifteen hundred dollars, and in other districts five hundred dollars, shall advertise for bids in a newspaper or newspapers which have a general circulation in the district, or by posting notices in three public places, unless there is urgent necessity for such building or the security and protection of school property will not permit such advertisement or such posting of notices.

In your case it is not a question of the protection of school property or the security of the same, but only a question of "urgent necessity" in the building of a new school building for the accommodation of the schools of said district which is raised. The term "urgent necessity" has been defined in Mueller v. Board of Education 11 O. N. P. (n. s.) 113-120, as follows:

> "Urgent necessity is a very strong expression. It means more than convenience and more than ordinary necessity. It is something that requires immediate action. Something that can not wait. When pleaded as an excuse for failure to comply with any statutory requirement it must be decided by the circumstances of the particular case in which it arises. An illustration of a case which might arise under the statutes referred to would be where there is a single school building of which a number of pupils would be prevented from occupancy for a considerable time, and left without any chance for instruction, pending the construction or repair of such building."

It is thus to be noted that the facts in each particular case must determine what is meant by the expression "urgent necessity" in that particular case.

It was held by my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, in Opinion No. 1087 rendered to Hon. Hugh S. McCall, City Solicitor, Portsmouth, Ohio, on August 3 1914, found in Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, Vol. 1, p. 1078, that:

> "If, therefore, before the schoolhouse in question must be used by pupils for school purposes the next school year, such changes, for example, in the floors and ventilating systems or otherwise as might seriously interfere with the use of the schools can be completed, and the remaining repairs, such as changes in the plumbing, toilet room equipment, drinking fountains, etc., can be undertaken and prosecuted without endangering the safety of the pupils or the efficiency of the schools during the session of the school, or can be done outside of school hours, in such event it would be unlawful to dispense with competitive bidding as required by section 7623. But if on the other hand, * * * the work can not be completed before it would be necessary to use the school building for the accommodation of pupils, and if such work as would remain undone at that time would be such as to interfere with the use of the schools, in that event I would be of the opinion that the board of education might lawfully declare a case of 'urgent necessity' involving the 'security and protection of school property' and proceed without inviting competitive bids."

You state in your letter that the high school building is wholly unfit for the purposes of a high school and for that reason there exists a case of urgent necessity. But it must occur to you that it would be impossible for you to complete said building prior to the time it would be necessary for you to use a school building for school purposes this year, and that either the old building would have to be used for high school purposes or arrangements made for the convenience of said high school pupils elsewhere than in said building this year. A case of urgent necessity might have existed at such time during the year as would have permitted the completion of the school building for service during the school year, but since said building can not be completed for use during this school year and arrangements must be made for housing such pupils this year, and ample time exists in which to advertise for bids and complete said new building before its use is necessary another year, then it would seem to follow that a case of urgent necessity does not exist and that said section 7623 G. C. must be followed in the matter of advertisement.

Holding these views, then, and from the citations above given, I advise you that I am of the opinion that a case of urgent necessity does not exist in the matter mentioned by you and that the board of education should advertise for bids as required by section 7623 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DENTIST—MAY ADMINISTER ANAESTHETICS.

The holder of a certificate to practice dentistry in the State of Ohio is permitted to administer anaesthetics both in the exclusive practice of dentistry and otherwise.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Sept. 6, 1917.

The State Dental Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—An inquiry is made for my opinion on a matter which is of such general importance to the profession of dentistry that I am directing my answer thereto to you and will send a copy hereof to inquirer. The question is as follows:

> "Under what circumstances are the members of the dental profession permitted to administer anaesthetics; that is, can a member of said profession administer anaesthetics except when performing a dental operation?"

Part I, title III, Div. 2, Ch. 22 of the General Code of Ohio provides for the appointment, organization and duties of the state dental board. Section 1321 of said chapter provides that each person who desires to practice dentistry in this state shall file with the secretary of the state dental board a written application for a license and shall furnish satisfactory proof that he is at least twenty-one years of age, of good moral character and present evidence satisfactory to the board that he is a graduate of a reputable dental college as defined by the board.

Section 1321-1 G. C. provides that the applicant shall also present with his application a certificate of the state superintendent of public instruction that he is possessed of a general education equal to that required for graduate from a first grade high school, and that the superintendent of public instruction shall issue to such applicant a certificate, without examining the applicant, provided such applicant presents the following credentials:

> "A diploma from an approved college granting the degree of A. B., B. S. or equivalent degree; a certificate showing graduation from a high school of the first grade, or from a normal or a preparatory school, legally constituted, after four years of study; a teacher's permanent or life high school certificate; a certificate of admittance by examination to the freshman class of an approved college granting the degree of A. B., B. S. or equivalent degree. In the absence of the foregoing credentials and before issuing certificate, the applicant shall be examined by said superintendent of public instruction, in such branches as are required from a first grade high school and to pass such examination shall be sufficient qualification to entitle such applicant to a certificate; provided, however, that the superintendent of public instruction may designate any county superintendent of schools to hold such examination at such times and places as may be necessary or convenient. * * * Granting of certificates by examination by said superintendent of public instruction, and acceptance by said superintendent of certificates of admittance by examinations to the freshman class of approved colleges granting the degree of A. B., B. S. or equivalent degree, shall cease after January 1, 1919. This shall not apply to students already enrolled in accredited dental colleges."

If permitted to take the examination, such applicant shall, as provided by section 1322 G. C.,

"pass a satisfactory examination, consisting of practical demonstrations and written or oral tests, or both, in the following subjects: anatomy, physiology, chemistry, materia medica, therapeutics, metallurgy, histology, pathology, bacteriology, prothetics, operative dentistry, oral surgery, anesthetics, orthodontia and oral hygiene."

If such applicant passes the examination provided for in said chapter, he shall receive a license from the state dental board which entitles him to practice dentistry in this state.

Part I, title III, Div. 2, Ch. 20 of the General Code provides for the appointment, organization and powers of the state medical board. Section 1287, which is a part of said chapter, reads as follows:

"Section 1287. Nothing in this chapter shall prohibit service in case of emergency, or domestic administration of family remedies. This chapter shall not apply to a commissioned medical officer of the United States army, navy or marine hospital service in the discharge of his professional duties, or to a regularly qualified dentist when engaged exclusively in the practice of dentistry, or when administering anaesthetics or to a physician or surgeon residing in another state or territory who is a legal practitioner of medicine or surgery therein, when in consultation with a regular practitioner of this state; nor shall this chapter apply to a physician or surgeon residing on the border of a neighboring state and duly authorized under the laws thereof to practice medicine and surgery therein, whose practice extends within the limits of this state; provided equal rights and privileges are accorded by such neighboring state to the physicians and surgeons of Ohio residing on the border of this state contiguous to such neighboring state. Such practitioner shall not open an office or appoint a place to see patients or receive calls within the limits of this state."

When said section was amended as above quoted, on April 18, 1913, the words "or when administering anaesthetics" were added. An applicant for a license to practice dentistry in this state was compelled to pass an examination in anaesthetics and it was contended, prior to the time section 1287 G. C. was last amended, that because a knowledge of anaesthetics was required of dentists, the holder of a certificate to practice dentistry in this state was also permitted, on account of said required knowledge and said certificate, to administer anaesthetics generally.

But it was held in opinion No. 243, annual report of the attorney-general for 1912, Vol. I, p. 843, that—

"Regularly qualified dentists are authorized to administer anaesthetics in the exclusive practice of dentistry, but it is not lawful for them to administer anaesthetics in surgical operations not incident to the practice of dentistry."

Said opinion, it is noted, was rendered under the statute as it read prior to the amendment as above quoted; that is, prior to the time the words "or when administering anaesthetics" were added. It must be presumed that said amendment shall have some effect, for if a dentist could administer anaesthetics in the practice of his profession of dentistry, without said amendment, then the amendment must give added rights, and I am of the opinion that it was intended by said amendment to give to the holders of certificates to practice dentistry in Ohio the right to administer anaesthetics generally, or, in other words, at such times as the administration of same is necessary.

Holding these views, then, I advise you that a person who has a certificate to practice dentistry in the state of Ohio is permitted to administer anaesthetics, not only in the exclusive practice of dentistry, but also when otherwise properly required to do so.

In opinion No. 528, rendered by me on August 14, 1917, I held that the giving of the various drugs to produce ansaethesia, when surgical operations are being performed, constitutes the practice of medicine under the provisions of the medical laws of this state and therefore could not be given by persons not admitted to the practice of medicine, but the question raised in this opinion as to the exemption of a dentist was not before me and was not answered in that opinion.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOL BOARD—ELECTION OF MEMBERS THERETO—VACANCY.

1. Where an attempt was made to elect members of a school board at the November election in 1915, but said election was invalid, the members of said board whose terms would have expired on the first Monday of January, 1916, will hold until their successors are duly elected at the November election in 1919, and begin their terms on the first Monday in January, 1920.

2. A vacancy does not occur in office where an incumbent is duly authorized to hold over and is legally qualified to perform the duties thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 6, 1917.

HON. HENRY W. CHERRINGTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You ask my opinion upon the following proposition:

> "At the November election, 1915, there was an election held for members of the board of education of Clay township, Gallia county, Ohio, rural school district. Prior to the time the election was held a member of the board had died, another had resigned, and the terms of two members had expired. There was an attempt made to elect four members of the board, and for various reasons in accordance with an opinion rendered me by Attorney-General Turner, the attempted election was declared null and void.
> "The situation confronting the election of officials this year is as follows: Owing to the illegal election held in 1915, two members, whose terms would have otherwise expired January 1, 1916, held over. Two members were appointed to fill the vacancies caused by the death of one member and the resignation of another. The term of the fifth remaining member expires January 1, 1918. The terms of the two members appointed to fill the unexpired terms will expire January 1, 1918. It is my opinion that the terms of the two members who held over will expire immediately after the November, 1917, election or on January 1, 1918.

"I have advised the board of education that it will be necessary to elect five members of the board of education at the coming election. If this is correct, I desire to inquire for what length of time each member shall be elected. I also desire to inquire what should be printed on the ballots, and in the notices of election."

On account of the invalid election in 1915, two members of said board of education, whose terms would have expired on the first Monday in January, 1916, held over, and will so hold over until their successors are elected and qualified, for section 4745 G. C. provides:

"The terms of office of members of each board of education shall begin on the first Monday in January after their election, and each such officer shall hold his office for four years except as may be specifically provided in chapter II of this title and until his successor is elected and qualified."

Chapter 2, which is referred to in said section 4745 of the title of which said section is a part, refers to city school districts.

The question then to determine is, when will the successors to said two members be elected?

Section 4712 G. C. provides:

"In rural school districts, the board of education shall consist of five members elected at large at the same time township officers are elected and in the manner provided by law, for a term of four years."

Section 4748 G. C. provides that:

"A vacancy in any board of education may be caused by death, nonresidence, resignation, removal from office, failure of a person elected or appointed to qualify within ten days after the organization of the board or of his appointment, removal from the district or absence from meetings of the board for a period of ninety days, if such absence is caused by reasons declared insufficient by a two-thirds vote of the remaining members of the board, which vote must be taken and entered upon the records of the board not less than thirty days after such absence. Any such vacancy shall be filled by the board at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term. A majority vote of all the remaining members of the board may fill any such vacancy."

So that the terms of office of such members being for four years, those terms would have ended on the first Monday in January, 1916, if their successors had been elected and had qualified, but no successors having been elected and hence none being able to qualify, the incumbents held over and will so hold over until their successors are elected and do so qualify.

If a vacancy existed at the end of the term of said members, or, in other words on the first Monday in January, 1916, then said vacancy would be filled by the remaining members of said board, who would elect successors to such two members for the remainder of the unexpired term. That would be for the term ending on the first Monday in January, 1920, because there was no vacancy in the terms of the members which ended on the first Monday in January, 1916, and any such vacancy which could have existed would have been in the term which began on the first Monday of January, 1916, and ended on the first Monday in January of 1920. But no such vacancy existed because said members must hold until their successors are elected and qualified and the offices have been regularly filled by those who were elected thereto and who were in possession of said offices and legally qualified to perform the duties thereof.

Bearing directly upon this question is the case of State v. Metcalfe, 80 O. S. 261 where the following language is used:

> "It has never been the policy of the state to create vacancies in office for the mere purpose of giving somebody an opportunity to fill them. Piling vacancy upon vacancy is an anomaly. * * *
> The policy to discourage the needless creation of vacancies is recognized in a number of decisions of this court. As instance the State, ex rel., v. Howe, 25 Ohio St. 588, where it is held by McIlvaine, J., that the general assembly may provide against the recurrence of vacancies by authorizing incumbents to hold over their terms in cases where the duration of their terms is not fixed and limited by the constitution, and that from this it results that the evils contemplated as likely to result from vacancies in office are guarded against by confining the exercise of the power to fill vacancies to those cases where no one is authorized by law to discharge the public duties; which, we think, is the constitutional scope of that power. Also, by the case of the State, ex rel., v. Bryson, 44 Ohio St., 457, where it is observed that the office (that of fire engineer) could not be regarded as vacant while filled by one lawfully entitled to it, nor could an appointment made ostensibly to fill a vacancy create one. Also, in The State, ex rel., v. McCracken, 51 Ohio St. 123, where, at page 129, it is observed that: 'The recognized policy of the state is to avoid, if practicable, the creation of a vacancy in an elective office, and where the right to hold over is given in language that is not limited, and the same is not otherwise qualified, a court would hardly be justified in seeking for an unnatural construction by which a limit would be placed upon the right. In contemplation of law there can be no vacancy in an office so long as there is a person in possession of the office legally qualified to perform the duties.' "

The above decision was rendered in a case in which the title to a judicial office was in question and in that kind of case section 13 of Article IV of the constitution applies. Said section reads:

> "In case the office of any judge shall become vacant before the expiration of the regular term for which he was elected, the vacancy shall be filled by appointment by the governor, until a successor is elected and qualified, and such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term, at the first annual election that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have happened."

That is to say, when a vacancy occurs in a judicial position, the same shall be filled by appointment, and such appointee shall hold said office only until his successor is elected and qualified, and such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term and at the first annual election which occurs more than thirty days after such vacancy occurs.

No such provision, as underscored in the last above quoted section, is contained in the school laws or in the laws which apply to the election of members of boards of education, for if a vacancy occurs in a board of education, the electors of the district are given no authority to fill such vacancy. The vacancy is filled by the majority vote of the remaining members of such board and the person elected to fill such vacancy holds for the remainder of the term which he is elected to fill.

However, if the decision in State v. Metcalf, supra, is followed, no vacancy existed and none will exist until the first Monday in January, 1920, for the term of office of a member of a board of education being four years, and the term which is being filled by the members who are holding over, having begun on the first Monday in January, 1916, it will not end until the first Monday in January, 1920, and the election of a successor to the persons now holding said offices will be had at the regular election in November, 1919.

It is urged, however, that the successors to said two members might be elected for the term of two years—that is to fill an unexpired term—and that section 10 G. C. is authority for same. Said section reads as follows:

> "Section 10. When an elective office becomes vacant, and is filled by appointment, such appointee shall hold the office until his successor is elected and qualified. Unless otherwise provided by law, such successor shall be elected for the unexpired term at the first general election for the office which is vacant that occurs more than thirty days after the vacancy shall have occurred. This section shall not be construed to postpone the time for such election beyond that at which it would have been held had no such vacancy occurred, nor to affect the official term, or the time for the commencement thereof, of any person elected to such office before the occurrence of such vacancy."

Said section manifestly can not apply for various reasons:

First, the elective office could not become vacant as long as there was a person in possession of the office legally qualified to perform the duties, and there was such person so in possession of the office in this case, who was holding over and was legally qualified to perform the duties thereof.

Second, the school laws provide another means of filling the vacancy. So that it is otherwise provided by law how a successor to an appointee shall be selected, and the provisions of said section 10 could not apply thereto.

Third. If the said section 10 were followed, the official term would be affected; that is the term would be for two years instead of four years, and there is no provision in our school laws for any such short or unexpired term.

I must hold, therefore, that the provisions of section 10 G. C. can not apply to a case of this nature. The only provisions of our school laws which permit an election to be held for a short term in rural districts are the provisions of section 4736-1 G. C., where it is provided that at the first election of members of a board of education in a newly created district and where the county commissioners have appointed a board, two members shall be elected to serve for two years and three for four years, and this department held in opinion No. 573, rendered August 29, 1917, to Hon. Otho W. Kennedy, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio, that said provisions also apply where a board has been appointed in a newly created district by the county board of education. And in no other case is it provided that members of a board of education be elected for a term other than the regular four year term.

I must advise you, therefore, that the two members whose terms expired on the first Monday of January, 1916, and who are holding over, will continue to so hold said positions until the first Monday in January, 1918, and that their successors shall be elected at the November election in 1919. As to the other three members, there can be no question. Their terms will expire on the first Monday in January, 1919. Their successors should be elected for the regular term of four years at the election which is held in November of this year and nominations should be made accordingly.

Candidates for members of boards of eduaction shall be nominated as provided by section 4997 G. C., in which section it is provided that nominations of candidates for the office of members of boards of education shall be made by nominating papers signed in the aggregate for each candidate by not less than twenty-five qualified electors of the school district, of either sex.

Such nomination papers shall be filed with the board of deputy state supervisors of elections as provided by section 5004 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "Certificates of nomination and nomination papers of candidates shall be filed as follows:
> * * * For * * * members of the board of education, with the board of deputy state supervisors of the county, not less than sixty days previous to the date of election; * * *."

Section 5032 G. C. provides that the names of candidates for members of the board of education of a school district, however nominated, shall be placed on one independent and separate ballot without any designation whatever except for member of board of education and the number of members to be elected.

Section 5018-1 G. C. provides that where the names of several persons are grouped together upon the ballots as candidates for the same office, the ballot shall contain, immediately above the names of such candidates, the words, "Vote for not more than ----------." The blank space shall be filled with the number representing the persons who may lawfully be elected to such office.

In your case the word "three" will be written in the blank space.

Section 4998 G. C. provides that when nominations of candidates for members of the board of education have been made by nomination papers filed with the board of deputy state supervisors, then the board of deputy state supervisors shall publish, on two different days prior to the election, a list of the names of such candidates in two newspapers of opposite politics in the school district, if there be such printed and published therein, and if no newspaper is printed in such district, the board shall post such list in at least five public places therein.

Section 4838 G. C. provides that all elections for members of boards of education shall be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of odd numbered years; and section 4839 G. C. provides that the clerk of each board of education shall publish a notice of all such elections in a newspaper of general circulation in the district, or post written notices thereof in five public places in the district at least ten days before the holding of such election, and that such notices shall specify the time and place of election and the number of members of the board of education to be elected and the term for which they are elected.

To recapitulate then and answering your questions specifically, I advise you:

1. The two members who are holding over will continue to hold their positions until the first Monday in January, 1920, and their successors should be elected at the November election in 1919.

2. The three members whose terms will expire on the first Monday of January, 1918, will be succeeded by the same number which should be elected at the November election this year for terms of four years.

3. The ballot should contain, immediately above the names of the candidates thereon, the words "Vote for not more than three."

4. The notices of such election shall be given by the board of deputy state supervisors of elections and by the clerk of said board of education as above provided.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

TITLE GUARANTEE AND TRUST COMPANY—INSURING TITLES.

Under section 9850 General Code a title guarantee and trust company may not do the business of insuring titles generally, but when it gives an abstract or certificate as to a title it may then guarantee such title to be perfect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 7, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of August 8, which reads as follows:

> "Supplementing our question to you under date of June 1, 1917, relative to section 9850 of the General Code, we desire to know if a title guarantee and trust company is authorized by law to issue its guarantee or policy of insurance to owners of real estate, or other interested parties, the titles of which real estate, said company has examined to its satisfaction but as a matter of fact has not issued an abstract of title therefor.
> We are enclosing herewith as a reason for this supplemental opinion a letter addressed to the Bankers Guarantee Title & Trust Co. of Akron by the comptroller of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. of New York. We are also enclosing a supplemental opinion which will be satisfactory to said company if you should find that such companies are authorized to insure or guarantee titles of real estate for which they have not actually issued an abstract of title."

The former inquiry to which you refer was in reference to the nature of the business of a title guarantee and trust company, as to whether it were guaranty or insurance, and it was answered that it was guaranty in its nature, although from the standpoint of benefit to the guarantee or abstract-holder it was not different from insurance; that it differed from insurance only in the nature of the business transacted, and from the fact that the guaranty was collateral to some other transaction taking place between the parties; whereas, insurance itself is the main contract. This being the nature of the inquiry, the opinion stated that the guaranty was an incident in each case to an abstract of title furnished. It was not meant thereby to hold that there should always be an actual abstract of title made, nor does the statute creating such company so contemplate.

Section 9850 quoted in that opinion is as follows:

> "A title guarantee and trust company may prepare and furnish abstracts and certificates of title to real estate, bonds, mortgages and other securities, and guarantee such titles, the validity and due execution of such securities, and the performance of contracts incident thereto, make loans for itself or as agent or trustee for others, and guarantee the collection of interest and principal of such loans; take charge of and sell, mortgage, rent or otherwise dispose of real estate for others, and perform all the duties of an agent relative to property deeded or otherwise entrusted to it."

Its business is not at all confined to the making of abstracts even in guaranteeing titles. It may prepare and furnish abstracts and certificates. The difference between abstracts and certificates is well known. The one sets out the substance of all that the records show in reference to a title; the other merely states the result as to whether such title be complete or otherwise. It was held in that opinion that the guaranty of a title should be an incident to the abstract, which is usually the case. However, it is perfectly plain that the abstract need not be furnished; the guaranty should accompany the certificate of title, which certificate is a mere opinion or statement which amounts to no more than an opinion. The correctness of this opinion may be guaranteed by the company just as much as if a complete abstract were made and furnished.

It was held in that opinion substantially that such companies are not authorized to issue policies of insurance or make contracts warranting titles as an original agreement. Such business would be insurance pure and simple and is a character of insurance not authorized by the insurance laws of Ohio. Such company, however, without furnishing or even making such abstract, may give its opinion upon a title and guarantee the correctness of that opinion. In such case the guaranty is collateral to the service rendered,—the opinion given.

The purported expression of opinion furnished you in writing and signed by you and attached to the inquiry contains the following statements:

> "I am of the opinion that The Bankers Guarantee Title and Trust Company of Akron, Ohio, is authorized to guarantee or insure titles by an instrument in writing direct, and without an abstract of title.
> "I am of the opinion that companies of the character of The Bankers Guarantee Title & Trust Company of Akron, Ohio, incorporated under the laws of Ohio, are authorized to guarantee, by instruments in writing, the title to real estate located in the state of Ohio, separate from and without abstracts of title."

This language, while literally true, is calculated to give an impression of broader authority than actually exists. It is calculated and intended as a certificate that such company may do an insurance business pure and simple. This is not the law. While they do furnish insurance in the guaranty they give, such guaranty must be collateral to another transaction which they are authorized by law to have, that is, to passing upon titles to real estate. Whenever they do that they may guarantee the result. It is not intended to hold that they must make such examination of the title as would be required to make an abstract, showing a complete title back to the government, but only that they should go so far as in their own judgment may be necessary to justify a favorable opinion, which when they have given they may guarantee—that is, they may guarantee that the title concerning which they have given such certificate or opinion is good.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS—ARE NOT COUNTY, TOWNSHIP OR MUNICIPAL OFFICERS—CORPORATION—OF WHICH MEMBER OF SAID BOARD IS AN OFFICER MAY PRINT ELECTION SUPPLIES.

1. The conduct of elections belongs to the state, and is under the control of state officers and state agencies.

2. Deputy state supervisors of elections are neither county, township nor municipal officers, neither are they connected with the county, township or municipality within the meaning of sections 12910 and 12911 General Code.

3. Where an officer and stockholder of a printing and publishing corporation is a member of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, such printing and publishing company is not prohibited under sections 12910 and 12911 G. C. from contracting for the printing of the ballots and other election supplies for such deputy state supervisors of elections.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Sept. 7, 1917.

HON. C. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of August 27, 1917, in which you state

"The Waverly Watchman Publishing Company is a corporation under the laws of Ohio, printing and publishing a newspaper at Waverly, also doing job printing, etc.

One of the officers and stockholders of this company has been appointed deputy supervisor of elections for this county.

Question: If this stockholder and officers of said publishing company acts as deputy state supervisor of elections, can the publishing company do printing for the said board of elections, and furnish supplies for same, etc.?

See Doll v. State, 45 O. S. 445.

There would be no question if the appointee was the individual owner of the said enterprise, but being merely a stockholder and his interest in any contract being only incidental—that is, he might have such interest as the stockholders might derive from the profits of such contract—it occurs to me that his interest is not such as would disqualify the publishing company from accepting contracts for printing, etc., from this board of elections.

See case of Richardson v. Township.

6 O. N. P. (N. S.) 505, 18 O. D. (N. P.) 806.

I would like to have your opinion on the foregoing by early mail, and greatly oblige."

Section 12910 of the General Code provides:

"Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

Section 12911 General Code provides:

"Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit, by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is not connected, and the amount of such contract exceeds the sum of fifty dollars, unless such contract is let on bids duly advertised as provided by law, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

In an opinion of my predecessor, Honorable Timothy S. Hogan, under date of April 4, 1912, attorney-general report for 1912, page 1238, it was held that:

"A deputy state supervisor of elections is appointed by the secretary of state and is, therefore, a state officer and not connected with the county, within the meaning of section 12910 General Code prohibiting contracts of public officials with political subdivisions, with which they are connected. Such official is a public officer, however, and comes within the prohibition of section 12911 General Code providing against the interest in public contracts of an amount over $50,000 unless under advertisement and bid."

The same attorney-general had before him the question of whether a member of the board of sinking fund trustees of a city, who was the lowest bidder for furnishing ballots at a primary election, could legally enter into such contract and receive payment for the same in view of the provisions of section 12910. In an opinion under date of September 25, 1913, attorney-general's report for 1913, Vol. I, page 363, will be found the following at page 364:

"Section 12910 and the section immediately following are given a very broad scope in their effect by the legislature; the one prohibiting officers from being interested in contracts involving the political subdivision with which the officer is connected, and the other prohibiting such contracts with any other political subdivision of the state. Contracts on behalf of the state itself, or rather to be more definite, contracts for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance, for the use of the state, are not comprised within the terms of either statute.

In State v. Craig, 8 O N. P. 148, the court said (at page 150):

'From an examination of the election laws in this state it seems apparent that the legislature intended that the conduct of elections should belong to the state and be under the control of state officers.' Section 2966-2 (Revised Statutes) provides that: "By virtue of his office the secretary of state shall be the state supervisor of elections, and in addition to the duties now imposed upon him by law shall perform the duties of such office as defined therein." We have then the secretary of state as the principal election officer and the deputy state supervisors, as subordinate officers, for carrying out the agencies of the state for the conduct of elections.'

The question presented, therefore, is whether or not the supplies purchased in this case, which are used for municipal purposes, their use being managed and controlled by state agencies, and payment made in the first instance by the county, reimbursement being made therefor by the municipality, are supplies for the use of the municipality as is comprehended by the language of section 12910 General Code.

I am of the opinion that these supplies are for the use of the state, in the conduct of its general duties with reference to election matters. It is true they are used in behalf of the municipality. The municipality, however, has nothing to do with the actual use, conduct and management of these supplies. The control of their use is vested in state agencies. Were it not for the statutory provision providing for a reimbursement of the county from the municipal treasury, this question would not have arisen; and I am of the opinion that the mere fact that reimbursement from the municipal treasury, is provided for the service of the state, administered in a case of municipal benefits, does not afford sufficient ground for holding that such supplies are for the use of the municipality as is intended by section 12910 General Code."

I concur in the reasoning and conclusions of the above opinions, and it is my holding that where a member of the deputy state supervisors of elections is also an officer and stockholder of a newspaper company which desires to bid for the work of furnishing necessary supplies, printing ballots, etc., and competitive bidding is had therefor, neither section 12910 nor 12911 General Code would have any application.

Further, I am of the opinion that such printing and publishing company can legally contract for the printing of ballots and necessary supplies.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BLUE SKY LAW—FEE FOR AGENTS NAMED IN LICENSE ISSUED UNDER SAID LAW.

The additional fee of five dollars for each agent named in a license issued under the blue sky law need not be paid annually upon renewal of such license.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 7, 1917.

HON. P. A. BERRY, Commissioner of Securities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of August 21 you request my opinion upon the following questions:

"Section 6373-4 provides that 'a licensed dealer in such securities' must pay an annual fee of fifty ($50.00) dollars for such license, and five ($5.00) dollars for each agent named in the application for said dealer's license.

"Kindly advise this department if the agent's fee of five ($5.00) dollars, as set forth in said section, should also be collected annually when said dealer's license is renewed?"

Section 6373-4 G. C., referred to by you, provides in part as follows:

"* * * If the 'commissioner' be satisfied of the good repute in business of such applicant and named agents, he shall, upon the payment of an annual fee of fifty dollars, and an additional fee of five dollars for each agent named in the application, register the applicant as a licensed dealer in such securities, and issue to him a license, containing the name of the applicant and all such agents, renewable annually upon payment of such annual fee, unless revoked as herein provided. * * *"

Section 6373-5 G. C. deserves consideration in this connection. It provides as follows:

"Sec. 6373-5. Such license shall be taken out at the beginning of each calendar year, but it may be issued at any time for the remainder of such year, and in such case the annual fee shall be reduced four dollars for each expired month but in no case shall it be less than ten dollars. Upon the payment of a fee of five dollars for each specified agent not named in such license the same may at any time be amended or supplemented to include such agent. Upon the written request of such applicant, accompanied by a fee of two dollars, such license shall be revoked as to any agent or agents of such applicant, and an amended license shall thereupon be issued for such applicant and his remaining agents and thereafter the applicant shall not be bound by the acts of the agent whose license has been revoked. * * *."

The language of section 6373-4 G. C. does not appear to me as ambiguous. The applicant, if he names agents, must pay not one fee, but at least two fees. The principal fee is denominated the "annual fee." The fees on account of agents are called "additional fees." When the section names the conditions of renewal of the license only one of these fees is referred to. Because the "additional fee" is no part of the "annual fee," and because the former is not mentioned in defining the terms of renewal, I am forced to the conclusion that the agent's fee of five dollars should not be collected annually when the dealer's license is renewed.

I have quoted section 6373-5 G. C. because I think it supports this view of the section. It will be observed that if the license is taken out after the beginning of the calendar year, there is a reduction, but the reduction applies again to the "annual fee." There is no similar reduction or scaling down of the "additional fee." Thus the separation between the two is kept distinct.

The provision in section 6373-5 G. C. for amendment of a license or its revocation as to a particular agent or agents sheds some light also upon the question. It is to be noted that but one original license is issued. Such license is renewable annually; but this does not mean that a new license is issued each year. On the contrary, the first license is perpetual, in the sense that it is good for one year and automatically renewed upon payment of the annual fee.

Inasmuch, however, as no new license is issued each year, provision would necessarily have to be made for changes in the personnel of agency forces. This is done by the second and third sentences of section 6373-5 G. C.

Because, then, the statute is not ambiguous, there must be given the meaning which it clearly expresses; and because also, that meaning is consistent with the general framework as evidenced by the other provisions referred to, I am of the opinion that the agent's fee of five dollars should not be collected annually, when the dealer's license is renewed.

Very truly yours
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ILLEGITIMATE CHILD—REPUTED FATHER CAN NOT BE PROSECUTED FOR NON-SUPPORT—WHEN SECURITY HAS BEEN GIVEN FOR PAYMENT OF SUM ORDERED BY COURT FOR MAINTENANCE OF SAID CHILD.

Where a defendant has been adjudged the reputed father of a child under section 12123 G. C. and has either paid or given security for the payment of the sum in which the court has ordered him to stand charged with the maintenance of such child this constitutes a complete bar to a subsequent proceeding against him, under section 13008, for failure to support the child.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1917.

HON. GEORGE S. MAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Napoleon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 17, 1917, as follows:

"About two years ago a bastardy case was tried in the court of common pleas of this county, resulting in a conviction and defendant was adjudged to be the putative father of the child. He was fined by the court $300 which the mother received and expended in attorney fees, doctor bills and other incidents arising out of the affair. I have been called upon to arrest the putative father for non-support of this illegitimate child.

"I would like your opinion as to whether or not I would be safe in now indicting this putative father for non-support, having in mind the decision in the case of McKelvy v. State, 87 O. S., p. 1, and State of Ohio v. Veres, 75 O. S., 138."

Sections 12123, 12114, 13008 and 13010 of the General Code provide as follows:

"Section 12123. If, in person or by counsel, the accused confesses in court that the accusation is true, or, if the jury find him guilty, he shall be adjudged the reputed father of the bastard child, and stand charged with its maintenance in such sum as the court orders, with payment of costs of prosecution. The court shall require the reputed father to give security to perform such order. If he neglects or refuses to give it, and pay the costs of prosecution, he shall be committed to the jail of the county, there to remain, except as provided in the next following section, until he complies with the order of the court.

"Section 12114. If during the examination before the justice, or before judgment in the court of common pleas, the accused pays or secures to be paid, to the complainant, such amount of money or property as she agrees to receive in full satisfaction, and gives bond to the state with sufficient surety, to be approved by the justice, court, or judge in vacation, conditioned to save any county, township, or municipal corporation within the state free from all charges for the maintenance of such bastard child, such justice, court, or judge shall discharge him from custody, on his paying the costs of prosecution. Such agreement must be made or acknowledged by both parties, in the presence of the justice, court, or judge, who thereupon shall enter a memorandum thereof on his docket, or cause it to be made upon the journal."

"Section 13008. Whoever, being the father, or when charged by law with the maintenance thereof, the mother, of a legitimate or illegitimate child under sixteen years of age, or the husband of a pregnant woman, living in this state, being able by reason of property, or by labor or earnings, to provide such child or such woman with necessary or proper home, care, food and clothing, neglects or refuses so to do, shall be imprisoned in a jail or workhouse at hard labor not less than six months nor more than one year, or in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than three years."

"Section 13010. If a person, after conviction under either of the next two preceding sections and before sentence thereunder, appears before the court in which such conviction took place and enters into bond to the state of Ohio in a sum fixed by the court at not less than five hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, with sureties approved by such court, conditioned that such person will furnish such child or woman with necessary and proper home, care food and clothing, or will pay promptly each week for such purpose to a trustee named by such court, a sum to be fixed by it, sentence may be suspended."

In the case of State v. Veres, 75 O. S., 138, it was held:

"The pendency of a bastardy proceeding instituted against the father of an illegitimate child, is neither a bar to, nor ground for the abatement of, a criminal prosecution subsequently commenced against him by the state under section 3140-2 Revised Statutes."

Section 3140-2 Revised Statutes, referred to in the above case, was much the same as the present section 13008 G. C. The court in that case said:

"As will be observed, there is nothing whatever in the language of the above act that indicates or suggests a purpose or intent on the part of the legislature that the provisions thereof should be invoked only after a proceeding under the bastardy act had been commenced and terminated. Nor is there anything in the nature of the relief given or the punishment prescribed, that discloses a reason why the mere pendency of a bastardy proceeding previously instituted, should be a bar to or should furnish a ground for, the abatement of a criminal prosecution subsequently commenced under this section. While the two acts are so designed and drawn that each provides a remedy for the enforcement of the same natural duty, namely: the support by the father of his illegitimate child, in this respect only are they alike either in their provisions or purpose. And the remedies they afford for the enforcement of this duty being entirely consistent with each other the rule is well settled that the satisfaction of one is the only bar to the prosecution of the other."

In the case of McKelvy v. State, 87 O. S., p. 1, it was held:

"2. Where a bastardy proceeding has been compromised under and in full accordance with Section 12114, General Code of Ohio, and all the provisions of the compromise have been complied with and carried out by the defendant, this constitutes a complete bar to a subsequent proceeding against him under either Section 13008 or section 12970, General Code, for failure to support his same illegitimate child."

In that case the court said:

"The legislation which is not included in section 13008, et seq., under which the present proceeding is prosecuted, is of comparatively recent origin and is much more comprehensive. It includes within its provisions the mother as well as the father of an illegitimate child, the parents of legitimate children and the husband of a pregnant woman. The punishment is also much more severe, making the offense a felony, and this statute has therefore been construed to be of a criminal nature. For this and other reasons it is claimed that the prosecution of the father of a bastard child under the former statutes, is not a bar to his prosecution under the latter, but that their provisions are cumulative and attention is called to the case of State v. Verse, 75 Ohio St., 138, where it was held that the pendency of a bastardy proceeding instituted against the father of an illegitimate child is neither a bar to nor ground for the abatement of a prosecution under section 13008 above. If the only purpose of this legislation were to declare the offense a crime and to punish the guilty father, there would be force in the contention that there could be no such bar to the criminal prosecution as is claimed herein. But it is provided by section 13010, General Code, that a person convicted under section 13008 may appear before the court in which the conviction took place, and enter into a bond to the State of Ohio in a sum fixed by the court not less than five hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, with approved sureties, conditioned that he will furnish the necessary and proper support for his child, and that sentence may thereupon be suspended. In the bastardy proceeding, when a compromise is effected, the accused must furnish a bond to the approval of the justice, under section 12114, or when he is convicted upon trial in the common pleas court he must give security to the approval of the court, under section 12123, both conditioned for the maintenance of his child. The law has thus expressly provided practically the same remedy to accomplish the same purpose under both acts.

"Having established these two concurrent and identical means of protecting the state and the unfortunate child, by the authority and upon the deliberate judgment of tribunals especially designated under the law for the particular purpose, we can see no reason why the exercise of one remedy, with its complete satisfaction, should not operate as a bar to the exercise of the other, or why a defendant under such conditions should be harassed, and possibly persecuted, by the requirement of a double security, when he has fulfilled his obligation in the one instance and may be unable to do so in the other."

In the case you submit the defendant was convicted in the common pleas court under section 12123 in place of effecting a settlement under section 12114. Under section 12114 the defendant is required to give bond to the state with sufficient surety to be approved by the justice, conditioned to save the county, township or municipal corporation within the state free from all charges for the maintenance of the child. while under section 12123 he does not give bond to the state, but is required to give security to perform the order of the court, in which order is specified the sum in which the defendant shall stand charged for the maintenance of the child.

It may be urged that because section 12123 does not require a bond to the state to save "the county, township or municipal corporation" free from all charges for the maintenance of the child, a payment under said section does not operate as a bar to a prosecution under section 13008, as would a settlement under section 12114 G. C

However, the object of the two statutes is the same and in both cases the amount with which the defendant stands charged is fixed—by the bond in section 12114 and by the order of the court and security in section 12123. In either case, in the event that the defendant neglects to furnish the proper support, the public is only saved to the extent of the amount fixed. This being so, it would seem that, notwithstanding that a bond is required by section 12114, and security for payment of the court's order in section 12123, both statutes effect the same object and are to be viewed, for the purpose of this opinion, in the same light. This is the view taken by the court in McKelvy v. State, supra, in the language above quoted.

Upon authority of the above cases, therefore, I would advise you that prosecution for non-support could not now be maintained in the case you submit.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW—HOSPITAL, MEDICAL AND NURSING SERVICES—PAYMENT FOR SUCH SERVICES UNDER AMENDMENT OF SECTION 1465-89 G. C.

Section 1465-89 G. C. relating to awards to be made under the compensation act for payment of medical, hospital and nursing services, etc., as amended 107 O. L. 528, relates to all such services rendered subsequent to time act took effect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On August 31, 1917, you made the following request for my opinion:

> "Section 1465-89 of the General Code which relates to awards to be made under the compensation act for the payment of medical, hospital and nursing services and medicines, was amended at the last session of the general assembly. The purpose of the amendment was to grant authority to the commission to award in unusual cases of injury a greater amount than $200.00 for the payment of medical and hospital services, etc. The amended portion of this section reads as follows:
> "'* * * unless in unusual cases wherein it is clearly shown that the actually necessary medical, nurse and hospital services and medicines exceed the amount of $200.00, such commission shall have authority to pay such additional amounts upon a satisfactory finding of facts being made and upon unanimous approval by such commission, such finding of facts to be set forth upon the minutes;'
> "Your opinion is desired as to whether the above quoted amendment to section 1465-89 (as contained in senate bill No. 69) applies to cases of injury which occurred prior to the time the amendment became effective but which are still pending and not finally disposed of. In other words, is the above referred to amendment retroactive in its effect or does it apply only to cases of injury which have been actually sustained after the amendment went into effect?"

The amendment to which you refer, of section 1465-89 General Code, is found on page 528-107 O. L. and is as follows

> "Sec. 1465-89. In addition to the compensation provided for herein, the industrial commission of Ohio shall disburse and pay from the state insurance fund, such amounts for medical, nurse and hospital services and medicine as it may deem proper, not, however, in any instance, to exceed the sum of two hundred dollars unless in unusual cases, wherein it is clearly shown that the actually necessary medical, nurse and hospital services and medicines exceed the amount of two hundred dollars, such commission shall have authority to pay such additional amounts upon a satisfactory finding of facts being made and upon unanimous approval by such commission, such finding of facts to be set forth upon the minutes. and in case death ensues from the injury, reasonable funeral expenses shall be disbursed and paid from the fund in an amount not to exceed the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars, and such commission shall have full power to adopt rules and regulations with respect to furnishing medical, nurse and hospital service and medicine to injured employes entitled thereto, and for the payment therefor."

This provision governs the payment of medical, nurse and hospital services and medicine, necessary on account of an injury to an employee; and does not govern the amounts payable to the injured employe, as compensation. The amendment is not retroactive, that is, it would not authorize payment of the additional amount for such purposes, where the services, or medicine had been furnished prior to the taking effect of the amendment; but payment for furnishing the services or medicine must be governed by the law in effect when the same were furnished, not by the date of the accident; I can think of no theory on which the right of payment for the services covered by this amendment should date back to the time of the accident, and be limited by the law then in force.

My opinion therefore, is that in all proper cases where medical, nurse and hospital services and medicines have been furnished since the date when the amendment to section 1465-89 G. C. went into effect, payment of the same should be made under said section as it now stands, irrespective of the date of the accident; but that payment under it can not be made for any such services or medicine rendered or furnished prior to the date said amendment went into effect.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE OF THE TRUSTEES OF VALLEY TOWNSHIP.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

"In re bonds of Valley township, Guernsey county, Ohio, in sum of $40,000.00, for the purpose of improving certain highways therein."

GENTLEMEN:—

In opinion No. 306, rendered by me on May 25, 1917, to your department, I remitted to you the transcript of the proceedings of the township trustees and other officers of Valley township, Guernsey county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue without my approval, for the reason that the transcript was defective, in that it did not show a number of matters material to the validity of the bond in question.

Since rendering said opinion I have received a transcript in reference to the proceedings had in the matter of said forty thousand dollar bond issue, and I am of the opinion that the proceedings in reference to the issuing of the same are regular in all respects which are vital to the validity of the bonds.

The transcript shows that the board of trustees levied a tax of three mills upon all the taxable property of Valley township, Guernsey county, Ohio, in accordance with section 3298-1 G. C., and that by resolution the township trustees designated the particular road which was to be improved as provided in section 3298-3 G. C.

The question of issuing bonds was by resolution put up to a vote of the electors of Valley township in accordance with law and the results of the election were duly canvassed and the proposition to issue bonds carried 544 for the bond issue to 74 against the same, the election being held on April 6, 1917, after due notice being given.

On June 24, 1917, the trustees adopted a resolution to issue forty thousand dollars of bonds numbered from one to forty inclusive, of one thousand dollars each, all to mature in not to exceed ten years, in accordance with the provisions of section 3298-8 G. C., and the transcript shows that the levy made does not furnish sufficient funds for the contemplated improvement.

Provision was also made by resolution to levy a tax upon all the taxable property of the township, sufficient to pay the interest of the bonds and to create a sinking fund to redeem the bonds as they mature.

The transcript shows that the present bonded indebtedness of Valley township is $17,000.00, while it has a tax duplicate of $1,866,350.00. It also shows that the total tax rate of Valley township property is 14 mills, of Pleasant City corporation, a municipality located within the township, 19.20 mills, and of Pleasant City school district, 15.60 mills, of which tax rate for Pleasant City and Pleasant City school district 5.25 mills is for an emergency for school purposes and hence beyond all limitations.

From the transcript which I now have before me, the main facts of which are set out herein, it is my opinion that the township has full authority to issue the bonds herein set out, and that you would be justified in purchasing the same, should you so desire to do.

It is to be noted that the defects in the proceedings of the authorities of Valley township, as set out in my former opinion, have been cured by the facts set out in the transcript now before me.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTION FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN TRUMBULL COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am writing you further in reference to the final resolution of the county commissioners of Trumbull county in reference to the improvement of the Warren-Meadville road, I. C. H. No. 330.

Section 1218 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Each contract under the provisions of this chapter (G. C. sections 1178 to 1231-3) except as otherwise provided in section 156 of this act (section 7199) shall be made in the name of the state and executed on its behalf by the state highway commissioner and attested by the secretary of the department. No contract shall be let by the state highway commissioner in a case where the county commissioners or township trustees are to contribute a part of the cost of said improvement, unless the county commissioners of the county in which the improvement is located shall have made a written agreement to assume in the first instance that part of the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount to be paid by the state. Where the application for said improvement has been made by the township trustees, then such agreement shall be entered into between the state highway commissioner and the township trustees. Such agreement shall be filed in the office of the state highway commissioner with the approval of the attorney-general endorsed thereon as to its form and legality."

The only part of this section which is material in the matter of my consideration of this final resolution is the following:

> "Such agreement shall be filed in the office of the state highway commissioner with the approval of the attorney general endorsed thereon as to its form and legality."

So far as the form of this final resolution is concerned, it is entirely regular and the different parts of the final resolution are in every respect legal. Hence, after further consideration, under the provisions of section 1218 G. C., I am returning this final resolution to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

In submitting this final resolution for my approval, as well as in the submission of other final resolutions for my approval, there is no question raised in reference to the matter of the use of the maintenance and repair funds of the state for the making of the improvements set out in final resolutions. This is plainly shown under the provisions of section 1218 and under the final resolutions themselves. As suggested in a former opinion rendered by me, it is my opinion that my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in an opinion found at page 990 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, has correctly stated the principles which should control in the matter of the use of the maintenance and repair funds of the state in the improvement of the highways of the state, and I therefore approve and confirm the opinion so rendered by my predecessor, as I did in a former opinion rendered your department.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO BOARD OF CLEMENCY—NO JURISDICTION OVER CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTIONS—JURISDICTION LIMITED TO PENAL INSTITUTIONS.

The Ohio board of clemency has no jurisdiction over the correctional institutions of the state, namely, the boys' industrial school and the girls' industrial home, their jurisdiction being limited to the penal institutions, namely, the Ohio state reformatory, the Ohio reformatory for women and the Ohio penitentiary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1917.

The Ohio Board of Administration and The Ohio Board of Clemency, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of July 25, 1917, in which you ask my opinion as follows:

> "Are the institutions named in sections 2083 and 2101 of the General Code included in the institutions mentioned in section 7 of the act creating the Ohio board of clemency as 'reformatory institutions' "

The question presented by you is whether the powers and duties of the Ohio board of clemency extend to the girls' industrial home and the boys' industrial school, or whether their powers and duties are limited to the Ohio state reformatory, the Ohio reformatory for women and the Ohio penitentiary; in other words, whether the powers and duties of the Ohio board of clemency extend not only to those institutions of the state which are called penal, but also to those which are classified as correctional.

In considering your question, let us first notice the classification of our state institutions, made by the legislature itself. In the formation of the General Code, the legislature classified the institutions of our state as benevolent, correctional and penal. The benevolent institutions of the state are grouped under chapters 1, to 12 inclusive, division 2, title V, Part I of the General Code.

The correctional institutions are grouped under chapters 1 and 2, division 3, title V, Part I, G. C. They are the boys' industrial school and the girls' industrial home.

The penal institutions of the state are grouped under chapters 1, 1a, 2 and 3 of division 4, title V, Part I, G. C. They are the Ohio state reformatory, the Ohio reformatory for women and the Ohio penitentiary.

We thus see that the legislature itself has separated those institutions which may be termed penal from those which are correctional. The policy of the state has been to keep separate and distinct the correctional from the penal institutions. The aim seems to be to separate the two classes of institutions in order that none of the taint which often seems to attach to those persons who have been inmates of the penal institutions of the state, shall attach to those who have been inmates of correctional institutions. The correctional institutions are called homes and schools, thus in no way indicating that they are considered as institutions for punishment.

The courts also adhere to this distinction. In State ex rel. Wilson v. Stiles, 12 O. D. 338, the court holds as follows in the first branch of the syllabus:

> "The girls' industrial home is not a penal institution, but a school, in which the state should use its best endeavors for the reformation of incorrigible girls. The fact that girls are subjected to restrictions does not make the institution a prison."

In the opinion on page 341, the court uses the following language:

"The object and purpose of the establishment of the girls' industrial home is declared to be instruction, employment and reformation of evil disposed, incorrigible and vicious girls. The legislature of the state has provided for a committee of visitation composed of three women who shall, at stated times, visit the institution and make a thorough examination as to the general welfare and condition of the girls, and make a written report of the result to the president of the board of trustees. It is provided that the girls shall be under the charge and custody of the superintendent and such subordinate officers as the trustees appoint. The superintendent is required to be and is a constant resident at the home, and that he shall discipline, govern, instruct and employ, and use his best endeavors to reform the girls in such manner as shall, while preserving their health and permitting the development of their physical system, secure the formation, as far as possible, of moral and industrious habits, and regular thorough progress and improvement in their studies, trades and employments.

"It is manifest that this was not intended as a penal institution but as a school in which the state would use its best endeavors for the reformation of incorrigible girls. The fact that the girls are subjected to restrictions does not make it a prison, or their presence in the institution imprisonment, any more than the restrictions of home make home a prison. The welfare of children in all cases requires that they be subjected to wholesome restraint. This is true, especially, of those who show a disposition to be incorrigible and vicious, and the establishment of this institution was a wise and humane provision on the part of the state."

With the above in mind, we will now turn to the act itself, in order to ascertain what its provisions are with reference to the question under consideration. The act creating the Ohio board of clemency is found in 107 O. L. 598. Section 6 of said act reads as follows:

"Section 6. The Ohio board of clemency shall have all the powers and enter upon the performance of all the duties conferred by law upon the board of pardons."

There is no difficulty here. The board of pardons never did have any power or duties in reference to the correctional institutions. Hence the Ohio board of clemency has no jurisdiction over the correctional institutions, under the provisions of this section.

Section 7 of the act reads as follows

"Section 7. Upon the appointment of the members of the Ohio board of clemency as hereinbefore provided, and their qualifications, such board shall supersede and perform all of the duties now conferred by law upon the Ohio board of administration with relation to the release, parole, and probation of persons confined in or under sentence to the penal or reformatory institutions of Ohio; and thereafter the said Ohio board of clemency, shall be vested with and assume and exercise all powers and duties in all matters connected with the release, parole or probation of persons confined in or under sentence to the penal institutions of Ohio now cast by law upon the said Ohio board of administration. The parole officers of the several penal institutions of the state shall be appointed by and subject to the direction and supervision of the managing officers of the institutions herein named."

The provisions of this section cast some doubt upon the question submitted to me for my opinion, and the particular language which creates the doubt is as follows:

> "* * * such board shall supersede and perform all of the duties now conferred by law upon the Ohio board of administration with relation to the release, parole, and probation of persons confined in or under sentence to the penal or reformatory institutions of Ohio; * * *"

The particular words which raise the doubt are "reformatory institutions of Ohio." The question is, whether the word "reformatory," as used in this section, refers to the correctional institutions, namely, the girls' industrial home and the boys' industrial school.

It is my opinion that this word does not refer to the correctional institutions, namely, the girls' industrial home and the boys' industrial school, but that the word "reformatory" is used to distinguish the Ohio state reformatory and the Ohio reformatory for women from what is strictly the only penal institution we have in the state, namely, the Ohio penitentiary. While the Ohio state reformatory and the Ohio reformatory for women in one sense are penal institutions, yet in another they are intended to be reformatory in character and not strictly penal. When we come to consider the other parts of this act, I think the above conclusion is without a doubt the one that was intended to be placed upon this act by the legislature itself. The latter part of section 7 of the act bears this construction, which reads:

> "* * * and thereafter the said Ohio board of clemency, shall be vested with and assume and exercise all powers and duties in all matters connected with the release, parole or probation of persons confined in or under sentence to the penal institutions of Ohio * * *"

Thus we notice that when the legislature came to conferring power upon the Ohio board of clemency, it conferred the power which the Ohio board of administration has heretofore exercised in reference to only the penal institutions of Ohio.

Further, section 8 of said act reads as follows:

> "Section 8. Except during the month of August, the Ohio board of clemency shall meet once each month at each of the penal institutions of the state for the consideration of applications for clemency."

From the provisions of this section it is to be noted that the Ohio board of clemency shall meet once each month, except during the month of August, at each of the penal institutions of the state. It is clear, from this provision, that the legislature had in mind merely the penal institutions when it was making provisions for meetings of the Ohio board of clemency.

When there is doubt as to the construction which should be placed upon the provisions of any act, it is often helpful to look to the title of the act itself. The title is generally drawn with a view to manifesting the intention of the legislature in enacting the act itself. The title of the act under consideration reads as follows:

> "An act creating the Ohio board of clemency, abolishing the board of pardons, transferring all the powers and duties of said board of pardons and all of the powers and duties of the board of administration of Ohio, with relation to the release, parole and probation of persons confined in or under sentence to the penal institutions of this state to the Ohio board of clemency, and to repeal sections 86, 87, 88, 89, 90 and 91 of the General Code."

It will be noted in the title of the act that the board of pardons is abolished and all the powers and duties of the board of pardons are transferred to the Ohio board of clemency. But when it comes to the powers and duties of the board of administration, different language is used. Not all the powers and duties of the board of administration were transferred to the Ohio board of clemency, but only those with relation to the release, parole and probation of persons confined in or under sentence to the penal institutions of this state were transferred to the Ohio board of clemency.

It is but natural to infer that the legislature did not intend to transfer from the Ohio board of administration their powers and duties in reference to the correctional institutions, but only those relating to the penal institutions.

Hence, from all the above, it is my opinion that the Ohio board of clemency has no jurisdiction over the correctional institutions of the state, namely, the boys' industrial school and the girls' industrial home, and that the jurisdiction of the Ohio board of clemency is limited to the penal institutions of the state, namely, the Ohio state reformatory, the Ohio reformatory for women and the Ohio penitentiary.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney General.

DOG TAX—EFFECT OF THE AMENDMENT OF SECTION 5652 G. C.

1. The amendment of section 5652 of the General Code (107 O. L. 534), effective December 1, 1917, does not affect the collectibility of the special dog tax levied in 1917 under the provisions of said section as theretofore in force, but such tax should be collected vided by taxes and distributed in satisfaction of pending sheep claims in the manner pro- as other the sections of the General Code in e ect at the time the amendments made by said act became effective.

2. The imposition of the license tax provided for by the amendments to and supplements of section 5652 of the General Code on or prior to January 1, 1918, and the substantially contemporaneous payment of the special dog tax provided for under the former laws on the same subject are not for the same thing nor for the same year, though collectible substantially at the same time.

3. The dog registration or license act of 1917 does not exact the taxation of dogs as property. The sections providing for the listing of dogs are impliedly modified, but only to the extent of dispensing with the requirement that unvalued dogs be enumerated.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 14, 1917.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 24th, requesting my opinion as follows:

> "The Tax Commission of Ohio desires to call your attention to the act for the regulation of dogs and providing compensation for damages done thereby, enacted by the last general assembly, volume 107, page 534.
> "As this new law appears to conflict with the tax laws for the year 1917, we take the liberty of citing the provisions which we believe are in conflict.
> "In carrying out the provisions of the tax law for the year 1917, the owners of dogs were required to list same, and if they failed to do so, the assessor was required to list same, as provided in sections 5379 and 5380. Section 2583, volume 107, page 29, provides that the county auditor shall include the dogs in the tax duplicate, and section 5652 provides the amount of tax the auditor shall charge against the owners of dogs listed. Section 2583 further provides that the county auditor shall deliver the tax duplicate to the county treasurer on the first day of October of each year.
> The foregoing provides for carrying out the provisions of the law relative to the listing and taxing of dogs as required for the year 1917. The dogs as returned by owners under the voluntary tax return provision or by the assessors, are placed on the tax duplicate, the taxes charged against same, and the duplicate is delivered to the treasurer who makes up his tax receipts in accordance with the duplicate and proceeds to receive taxes as charged thereon.
> "We now call your attention to section 4 of the new dog law, volume 107, page 539:
> " 'This act shall take effect and be in force from and after the first day of December, 1917, but no registration of dogs or dog kennels shall be required or registration tags issued or required to be worn for any portion of the year nineteen hundred and seventeen.'
> "This section provides for the new law becoming effective from and after the first day of December, 1917. As the new law repealed section 5652, which provided for the tax and was in force and required to be carried out in listing and returning dogs up until December 1st, we inquire if the tax assessed against dogs as returned by owners or by assessors for 1917 is to be collected, or does the repeal of section 5652 becoming effective December 1, 1917, make the taxing of dogs for the year 1917 void?

"We also take the liberty of calling your attention to the condition arising between October 1st and December 1st, as after October 1st when the tax duplicate has been delivered to the treasurer by the auditor, persons desiring to pay their tax before December 1st would be required by all the provisions of the law to pay the tax on the dogs.

"We note that the new dog law does not repeal certain sections of the old law, as follows: Section 5379 providing for owners and assessors to list dogs, section 5380 providing a penalty if the assessor fails to list the dog, and section 2583 requiring the auditor to place the dogs on the tax duplicate. These sections are not repealed, and are still in force.

"We respectfully ask your opinion on the foregoing as soon as possible, in order that we may give the information to the county auditors."

Pertinent provisions of the laws necessary to be consulted in answering your question are as follows:

Section 5652, General Code, as now in force:

"In addition to the proper tax on any valuation that is fixed upon dogs by the owners, which shall be included with the personal property valuation and taxed therewith, the auditor shall levy against the owner thereof one dollar on each male and spayed female dog, and two dollars on each unspayed female dog. The receipts from such tax shall constitute a special fund to be disposed of in the payment of sheep claims, as provided by law."

Section 5652, General Code, as amended 107 O. L. 534:

"Every person who owns, keeps or harbors a dog more than three months of age, annually, before the first day of January of each year, shall file together with a registration fee of one dollar for each male or spayed female dog, and registration fee of two dollars for each female dog unspayed, in the office of the county auditor of the county in which such dog is kept or harbored, an application for registration for the following year beginning the first day of January of such year, stating the age, sex, color, character of hair, whether short or long, and breed, if known, of such dog, also the name and address of the owner of such dog."

Section 4 of the Act found in 107 O. L. 534:

"This act shall take effect and be in force from and after the first day of December, 1917, but no registration of dogs or dog kennels shall be required or registration tags issued or required to be worn for any portion of the year nineteen hundred and seventeen."

Section 2583, General Code, as amended 107 O. L. 29:

"On or before the first Monday of August, annually, the county auditor shall compile and make up * * * separate lists of the names of the several persons * * * in whose names * * * property has been listed * * *, placing separately, in appropriate columns * * * (among other things) the number of dogs, and the value, if given by the owner. * * * the county auditor * * * shall certify and on the first day of October deliver one copy thereof to the county treasurer. * * *."

Sections 5379 and 5380 of the General Code provide as follows:

"Section 5379. A dog over three months of age shall be listed, either by the owner or by the assessor in the name of the owner, without affixing a valuation thereto. The owner, if he so desires, may affix a value thereto, without swearing to such valuation. A person who keeps or harbors a dog, or who knowingly permits the keeping or harboring of a dog upon his premises, for the purpose of such listing and taxation, shall be the owner thereof. The assessor shall ascertain the owner or harborer of each dog within his territory, and may examine any person under oath for this purpose.

"Section 5380. If the assessor fails to list a dog kept or harbored within his territory, he shall forfeit and pay to the state not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than seventy-five dollars."

The last two named sections have not been expressly repealed.

While dealing with the laws apparently in force I may say that I find it unnecessary to quote the sections supplementary to section 5652 as they appear in 107 O. L. 534. These sections create, by detailed provisions, a system of licensure or registration for dogs and dog kennels as foreshadowed in section 5652 as amended, and the enforcement of its provisions by seizure of unlicensed dogs, etc. Other sections are amended in the act of 1917 relating to claims for damages on account of domestic animals injured or killed by dogs, but these sections need not be considered.

It is sufficient to observe as a starting point for the discussion of the questions raised by your letter that the legislation of 1917, effective December 1st of this year broadly considered, substitutes for a per capita tax on dogs, collected as a capitation or poll tax, so to speak, a license for the keeping of dogs, the proceeds of which are to be treated substantially in the same manner as the proceeds of the former per capita tax were used, viz: in paying claims for damages on account of the destruction or injury of domestic animals by dogs. In other words, the method of the exaction is changed from that of a straight per capita tax collected on the county duplicate to that of a license or registration fee collected by the county auditor.

In its essential aspects the exaction remains the same, for it was held in Holst v. Roe, 39 O. S., 340, that the per capita tax on dogs was sustainable as against the objection that it violated the uniform rule of property taxation prescribed by Article XII, section 2 of the constitution, on the ground that it was an exercise of the police power rather than of the taxing power; or, put with perhaps greater accuracy, an exercise of the taxing power as a method of the police power. Such combined exercise of the two powers is familiar, as in the case of the tax on the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquor, and our supreme court is thoroughly committed to the doctrine that it is compatible with the limitation on the power of property taxation imposed by the section of the constitution referred to.

What we have always had then is an exaction from owners or harborers of dogs based upon some rule of apportionment proper in itself and made under the police power for the purpose of protecting the public welfare by affording compensation for economic losses caused by the harboring of such dogs. That the assessing machinery of the state, including the functions of the local assessors and the county auditor and treasurer in the preparation of the duplicate have been used to make this exaction does not change its essential character.

Now the legislature proposes to change the method of this exaction by substituting an annual license which is to be payable for the first time in Janauary, 1918.

The old section providing for the listing of all dogs, whether valued as property or not, has not been repealed by express provision. I have no hesitancy, however, in arriving at the conclusion that on and after the time when the act of 1917 (107 O. L. 534) goes into effect sections 5379 and 5380 of the General Code, though not expressly repealed, will be so far modified as to dispense with the listing by the owner, harborer or assessor of each dog, whether valued or not, and that likewise section 2583 will be, by implication, amended so as to dispense with the necessity of listing on the duplicate the number of dogs, whether valued or not.

In so far as dogs are property and a valuation is placed upon them by the owner or the assessor—assuming without deciding that a fine animal clearly having a value as property is to be listed by the assessor under the general tax laws of the state, whether the owner places a value on him or not—they will, of course, continue to be valued and listed under the provisions of these sections; but dogs without value as property will no longer be required to be listed in the tax returns and on the duplicate, for this is manifestly inconsistent with the scheme of the act of 1917. The implied amendment—for it is not a complete repeal of anything—that is worked out here is clearly apparent; for the sole purpose of having the number of dogs, whether valued or not, listed under the sections which still remain in force was to afford a basis for the levying of the per capita tax provided for by section 5652 of the General Code in its present form and as it will be until changed by the going into effect of the act of 1917. Take away the authority to levy the per capita tax and the machinery provisions fall or become obsolete for lack of a foundation upon which to rest.

So that without further discussion I advise in answer to one of your questions that nothing in the act of 1917 affects the listing of valuable dogs as property, and that the taxing machinery of the state should move in the future as it has in the past with respect to such property. In other words, the new law could not constitutionally be, and on its face does not purport to be, a substitute for the taxation of dogs as property, but merely a substitute for the per capita tax on dogs considered not as property but merely as dangerous animals, the keeping or harboring of which is to be safeguarded by appropriate exercise of the police power.

Your first question, however, and the one in which you evince the greater interest is as to whether or not the per capita tax on dogs, which will have gone on the duplicate to be delivered up to the treasurer on October 1st of this year on the basis of the enumeration of such dogs taken in April, 1917, is to be collected in the face of the fact that a license fee for 1918 is payable January 1, 1918.

On the face of things it would seem as if there were some inconsistency in imposing simultaneously two exactions on the same ground. For if the per capita tax which the auditor, acting on the basis of the returns made to him, will under the old law which remains in force until December 1st place upon the duplicate will be collectible in December, 1917, unless the amendment of section 5652 makes it uncollectible, and if the license fees for the keeping of dogs and kennels of dogs for the year 1918 will be payable in January of that year, to the ordinary understanding it would appear that the owner of a dog were being taxed twice on the same account.

This is, however, but a surface view of the situation, assuming for the time that the amendment of section 5652 does not make the tax assessed under favor of that section uncollectible; for under the property tax laws, the machinery of which was adopted by the legislature in the exertion of its police power in the manner above described, the taxpayer is accorded the favor of paying his taxes several months after his liability therefor accrues. We are speaking of the per capita tax on dogs. Such dogs are enumerated as of some period in the early spring of the year. Let us say that A. has ten dogs on the date on which he is required to list them. He was not required to pay the per capita tax on those dogs until the following December—more than six months after the dogs were enumerated. A month after the enumeration his dogs might all die. Nevertheless, he would have to pay this per capita tax, for his liability for it became fixed, though not due, on the date when the enumeration was taken.

It becomes clear, therefore, that the old per capita tax was an exaction payable long after the date on which the basis of it had existence. On the contrary, the new exaction under the form of a license is, like all licenses are, something payable in advance. The vital difference between the two laws is that one takes the tax long after the fact upon which the tax is based; the other takes it in advance, so to speak.

So there is nothing strange about the two payments falling due at the same time. The legislature has merely done away with postponed payment and exacted payment in advance for substantially the same thing, as a result of which two payments, representing different years, happen at the same time; yet they are not for the same thing and not necessarily on account of the same dogs. It is the dogs which existed in April 1917, which furnish the basis for the tax to be collected in December of that year; it is the dogs which have existence on January 1, 1918, that furnish the basis for the exaction in the form of a license then to be made. Consequently, it is not true that the same thing would be taxed twice, and I cannot say for any such reason that there is anything inconsistent between the idea of collecting the license tax in Janauary under the new law and the idea of collecting the per capita tax in December under the old law.

This discussion, however, has proceeded upon the assumption that the amendment of section 5652 will not when it goes into effect render uncollectible the special per capita taxes assessed on the duplicate. The correctness of this assumption remains to be considered.

In my opinion, quite independently of section 26 of the General Code, which may or may not have some bearing on the question, the taxes assessed on the duplicate which will be in the hands of the county treasurer for collection on December 1st, when the new law goes into effect, must be collected. By that time section 5652 except in so far as it relates to the receipts from the tax, will have expended its force. In its present form it provides that the "auditor shall levy" certain per capita dog taxes. This he will have done. Therefore, the amendment of this section, going into effect, at that time will not prevent him from discharging his duties under the present section. Authorities might be cited to show that after a tax has been levied its collection follows as a matter of course, even though the law providing for the levy be repealed. I quote from the opinion of Ranney, J., in Debolt v. Trust Co., 1 O. S. 563.

> "The repeal of a statute will not destroy or affect rights already vested under it * * *. It is very clear to us, that this tax became a vested right in the public, fully perfected within the meaning of this rule, long before the passage of the act of 1852, and could not be affected by the repeal of the law under which it was levied, * * *. Every act required of the public authorities in the assessment and levy had been done, and the liability of the defendant fully fixed. Nothing remained but the payment of the money and the failure of the defendant to do this, surely could not render imperfect the right of the people to receive it, * * *."

This reasoning was partially based, as further quotation from the context would show, upon the inherent nature of the power to tax; nevertheless, it is applicable to the case at hand in so far as it is apparent that the amendment of section 5652 of the General Code can not affect the legal effectiveness of acts already done under that section. The tax is levied and the numerous statutes relating to the collection of taxes remain in effect and afford procedural remedies for its collection.

Indeed, the care of the legislature in postponing the effectiveness of the amendment to December 1, 1917, can be ascribed to no other motive than that of avoiding interference with the collection of the 1917 dog tax. If the act of 1917 had been allowed to go into effect after the expiration of the usual referendum period—and there is some question whether it would not have gone into immediate effect as a law levying a tax—it would have interrupted the machinery of assessment of the old law at a point prior to the official action of the auditor under section 5652 as it then stood and still stands. With this authority taken away the old tax could not have been collected.

As it is, however, the legislature has preserved the effectiveness of the old law until such time as that the act commanded under section 5652 has been done.

Section 26 of the General Code does, in my opinion, so far operate as to preserve the proceeds of the tax collected in December, 1917, to be expended in the manner provided by the law formerly in force, so far as pending sheep claims are concerned. This is so because the amendments to the sections regulating such matters, being sections 5653 and 5840 et seq. of the General Code, speak of the "fund arising from the registration of dogs and dog kennels" and make no provision for any undistributed moneys arising from the payment of the per capita tax. I think it is clear that where a tax has been collected and a law providing for its distribution in satisfaction of specific claims is repealed or amended in such way as not to be applicable to it, a "proceeding" is under way within the meaning of section 26 of the General Code and the proceeds of the tax will have to be distributed as to such claims in the manner required by the law existing at the time it was levied.

This principle disposes of the only real difficulty in the case. Answering your questions specifically I advise:

(1) The amendment of section 5652 of the General Code (107 O. L. 534), effective December 1, 1917, does not affect the collectibility of the special dog tax levied in 1917 under the provisions of said section as theretofore in force, but such tax should be collected as other taxes and distributed in satisfaction of pending sheep claims in the manner provided by the sections of the General Code in effect at the time the amendments made by said act became effective.

(2) The imposition of the license tax provided for by the amendments to and supplements of section 5652 of the General Code on or prior to January 1, 1918, and the substantially contemporaneous payment of the special dog tax provided for under the former laws on the same subject are not for the same thing nor for the same year, though collectible substantailly at the same time.

(3) The dog registration or license act of 1917 does not exact the taxation of dogs as property. The sections providing for the listing of dogs are impliedly modified, but only to the extent of dispensing with the requirement that unvalued dogs be enumerated.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ADOPTION—CONSENT NECESSARY BEFORE CHILD MAY BE LEGALLY ADOPTED—WHO MAY CONSENT.

In a proceeding for the adoption of a child, the consent of the juvenile court to such adoption, in place of the parents of the child, is insufficient and without effect in law. Such adoption must be consented to by the parents unless they are hopelessly insane, intemperate or have abandoned such child, in which case the legal guardian of the child, or a suitable person appointed by the probate court, may consent in the place of such parents, provided, however, that if the juvenile court has awarded a dependent or neglected child to an association, corporation or individual, under section 1672 G. C., and has made the proper order in awarding such child, the association, corporation or individual so appointed may consent to the adoption of such child in place of its parents and such consent is binding.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 14, 1917.

HON. B. O. BISTLINE, Probate Judge, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 24, 1917, as follows:

> "Can the judge of the juvenile court give the required legal consent (the parents of the child being alive) in a case where a person of good reputation and standing desires to adopt a child that has been declared a dependent and neglected child by the juvenile court and has been made a ward of the court? I understand that he can by authority of sections 1672 and 1673 G. C. delegate this power to others, but I am not clear as to his power to give the required consent himself."

Section 8024 of the General Code reads:

> "Any proper person not married, or a husband and wife jointly, may petition the probate court of their proper county, or the probate court of the county in which the child resides, for leave to adopt a minor child not theirs by birth, and for a change of the name of such child. A written consent must be given to such adoption by the child, if of the age of fourteen years, and by each of his or her living parents who is not hopelessly insane, intemperate, or has not abandoned such child, or if there are no such parents, or if the parents are unknown, or have abandoned the child, or if they are hopelessly insane or intemperate, then by the legal guardian, or if there is no such guardian, then by a suitable person appointed by the court to act in the proceedings as the next friend of the child."

Section 1645 G. C. reads:

> " 'DEPENDENT CHILD' defined. For the purpose of this chapter, the words 'dependent child' shall mean any child under eighteen years of age who is dependent upon the public for support; or who is destitute, homeless or abandoned or who has not proper parental care or guardianship; or who begs or receives alms; or who is given away or disposed of in any employment, service, exhibition, occupation or vocation contrary to any law of this state; who is found living in a house of ill fame, or with any vicious or disreputable persons or whose home, by reason of neglect, cruelty or depravity on the part of its parent; step-parent, guardian or other person in whose care it may be, is an unfit place for such child; or who is prevented from receiving proper education because of the conduct or neglect of its parent, step-parent, guardian or other person in whose care it may be; or whose environment is such as to warrant the state, in the interest of the child, in assuming its guardianship."

In the case you submit the ground upon which the court found the child to be a dependent is not apparent; whether it has been abandoned, whether the parents of the child are intemperate or hopelessly insane does not appear. Under this section, however, if such is not the case the consent of the parents to the adoption must be obtained.

In re Maude Fay Olsen, 3 O. D. (N. P.) 668.

However, the legislature has made certain exceptions to the rule requiring parental consent.

Section 1653 G. C. reads:

"When a minor under the age of eighteen years, or any ward of the court under this chapter, is found to be dependent or neglected, the judge may make an order committing such child to the care of the children's home if there be one in the county where such court is held, if not, to such a home in another county, if willing to receive such child, for which the county commissioners of the county in which it has a settlement, shall pay reasonable board; or he may commit such child to the board of state charities or to some suitable state or county institution, or to the care of some reputable citizen of good moral character, or to the care of some training school or an industrial school, as provided by law, or to the care of some association willing to receive it, which embraces within its objects the purposes of caring for or obtaining homes for dependent, neglected or delinquent children or any of them, and which has been approved by the board of state charities as provided by law. When the health or condition of the child shall require it, the judge may cause the child to be placed in a public hospital or institution for treatment or special care, or in a private hospital or institution which will receive it for like purposes without charge. The court may make an examination regarding the income of the parents or guardian of a minor committed as provided by this section and may then order that such parent or guardian pay the institution or board to which the minor has been committed reasonable board for such minor, which order, if disobeyed, may be enforced by attachment as for contempt."

Section 1672 G. C. reads:

"If the court awards a child to the care of an association, corporation or individual, in accordance with these provisions, unless otherwise ordered, the child shall become a ward, and be subject to the guardianship of such association, corporation or individual. Such association, corporation or individual may place such child in a family home and shall be made party to any proceedings for the legal adoption of the child, and if the court, when making such award so orders, may appear in any court where such proceedings are pending, and assent to such adoption. Such assent shall be sufficient to authorize the judge to enter the proper order or decree of adoption, and upon such order being made, all jurisdiction of the juvenile court over such child under section 1643 of the General Code, shall cease and determine. Such guardianship shall not include the guardianship of any estate of the child."

Section 1673 G. C. provides:

"The parents, parent, guardian or other person or persons having the right to dispose of a dependent or neglected child may enter into an agreement with any association or institution, incorporated under any law of this state which has been approved by the board of state charities as provided by law, for the purpose of aiding, caring for or placing in homes such children, or for the surrender of such child to such association or institution, to be taken and cared for by such association, or institution, or put into a family home. Such agreement may contain any and all proper stipulations to that end, and may authorize the association or institution, to appear in any proceeding, for the legal adoption of such child, and consent to its adoption. The order of the judge made upon such consent shall be binding upon the child and its parents, guardian or other person, as if such persons were personally in court and consented thereto, whether made party to the proceeding or not."

It will be seen from these sections that when the juvenile court has found a child to be dependent or neglected, and awards it to the custody of an association, corporation or individual, it may, if it should see fit, confer a special guardianship upon such association, corporation or individual, viz., one with the power of consent in the matter of adoption, regardless of the condition or attitude of the parents. If it confers such guardianship upon such association, corporation or individual, then it has transferred the right of consent in adoption from the parents to such association, corporation or individual. If it does not, but confers only the guardianship of the person of the child upon such association, corporation or individual, the association, corporation or individual so appointed is to be viewed as any other guardian and the consent of such association, corporation or individual, in place of that of the parents, is sufficient for adoption only when the parents are hopelessly insane, intemperate or when such parents have abandoned such child. In other words, section 8024 G. C lays down a certain rule as to when parental consent is necessary in the adoption of children, and that rule must be strictly adhered to. If the adoption is had without parental consent, special statutory authority must be relied upon to make the proceedings valid.

Section 1672, above quoted, provides that the association, corporation or individual to whom the child is awarded may, if the court has conferred such power upon it, in the order of award, consent to the adoption of the child in the place of the parent, but this section says nothing of such power of consent being vested in the juvenile court itself, nor do I know of any principle of law warranting the conclusion that because the court has the power to confer this authority upon a guardian, it of necessity has in itself this authorty to consent to such adoption.

If the juvenile court was the "legal guardian" of the child, it could of course, under section 8024 G. C., consent to the adoption of the child, if the parents were hopelessly insane, intemperate or if they have abandoned such child. However, the juvenile court is not such guardian, although the child is a ward of such court and remains so for the purposes of discipline and protection until such child attains the age of twenty-one years.

For these reasons I am of the opinion that in a proceeding for the adoption of a child, the consent of the juvenile court to such adoption in place of the parents of the child, is insufficient and without effect in law. Such adoption must be consented to by the parents unless they are hopelessly insane, intemperate or have abandoned such child, in which case the legal guardian of the child, or a suitable person appointed by the probate court, may consent in the place of such parents, provided, however, that if the juvenile court has awarded a dependent or neglected child to an association, corporation or individual, under section 1672 G. C., and has made the proper order in awarding such child, the association, corporation or individual so appointed may consent to the adoption of such child in place of its parents and such consent is binding.

Yours truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—ABSTRACT OF TITLE—MARY E. KAUTZ TO STATE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 15, 1917.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, O.

DEAR SIR:—You recently submitted to this department, for examination, an abstract of title covering the following premises:

> "Being Lots or Parcels Nos. Six (6) Seven (7) and Eight (8) of a subdivision of lands belonging to Jeremiah O. Lisle, which subdivision was made by the order of the court of common pleas, Franklin county, Ohio, in case No. 33550, as the same are numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat of said subdivision, of record in Plat Book No. 5, page 431, Recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio."

With the abstract you also sent a deed covering the same piece of property, wherein Mary E. Kautz (widow) deeds said property to the State of Ohio.

I have carefully examined said abstract, dated August 27, 1917, and find that the title to the premises described is in the name of Mary E. Kautz and that the deed submitted will convey a clear title to the State of Ohio, save and except the taxes for 1917, which are now a lien on said premises and which the grantee assumes and agrees to pay.

I note that in the deed from Sarah E. Van Horn to Charles Kautz, Jr., (Section 47 of the abstract), the grantor covenants that the premises are free and clear of all encumberances except the unpaid balance of a mortgage for $2250.00, executed to The Citizens Savings Bank on or about the first day of November, 1898.

The abstract submitted does not show that a mortgage was given by the above mentioned Sarah E. Van Horn to said bank, in the sum mentioned in the deed, namely $2250.00. It does show, however, that on said date, November 1, 1898, Sarah E. Van Horn gave a mortgage to The Citizens Savings Bank in the sum of $1750.00, which mortgage has been cancelled and released.

Said Sarah E. Van Horn purchased lots Nos. Six (6), and Seven (7) from The Ctizens Savings Bank on November 1, 1898, the consideration being $2250.00, and on the same date gave a mortgage to said bank for $1750.00. In all probability the recital in the deed as to the amount of the mortgage is a mistake made by confusing the consideration named in the deed with that of the mortgage, owing to the fact that both instruments were executed on the same day. However, as there is no record of a mortgage on the premises under investigation, given by Sarah E. Van Horn to The Citizens Savings Bank, in the sum of $2250.00, the recital in the deed, that there was such a mortgage, would not affect the title to the premises.

Therefore, I am of the opinion that the deed submitted, if accepted, will fully convey the title to the State of Ohio free and clear of all encumberances except the taxes above mentioned.

I am herewith returning you the abstract and deed submitted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COSTS—SUIT BY TAXPAYER AGAINST BOARD OF EDUCATION—BOARD HAS NO AUTHORITY TO PAY WHEN INJUNCTION ALLOWED BUT NO ORDER FOR COSTS MADE BY COURT.

Where a tax payer brings action against a board of education and an injunction is allowed which prevents said board from further acting in the matter in question and the court makes no order in relation to costs, such tax payer is not entitled to recover his costs made in such action as a matter of right.

A board of education is not warranted in ordering the payment of costs of the adversary party in an injunction suit when no order therefor is made by the court.

A county auditor rightfully refuses to issue his warrant covering costs of the adverse party in an injunction suit when ordered so to do by the county board of education and when the court has made no order in relation thereto.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 15, 1917.

HON. C. A. WILMOT, Prosecuting Attorney, Chardon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion upon the following matter:

"The Geauga county board of education attempted to consolidate Thompson special district No. 2 with Thompson special district No. 1, taking what they believed to be the necessary means to bring about this consolidation.

"The board of education of Thompson special district No. 2 brought suit against the Geauga county board of education, the board of education of Thompson district No. 1 and A. A. Fowler, as auditor of Geauga county.

"Said action was brought against the county board of education to prevent consolidation of the two districts, against Thompson special district No. 1 to enjoin said district from 'interfering in any way with district No. 2, or the board of education thereof, or receiving or expending any money or funds now raised or in the process of collection by taxation in district No. 2, and against A. A. Fowler as auditor 'from transferring any funds collected or in the process of collection belonging to district No. 1.'

"The case was tried in due time and decision was made in favor of the plaintiff. The journal entry of the decision reads as follows:

"This cause came on for hearing upon the petition and answer and the evidence, and was duly argued by counsel and upon consideration thereof the court finds that the prayer of the petition should be granted and the county board of education is hereby enjoined from proceeding further under the resolution of August 14, 1916, and the county auditor, A. A. Fowler, is enjoined from transferring the funds of said district No. 2 to said district No. 1, or from in any way interfering with the funds of said district by reason of any action of the board in relation to the transferring territory from said district No. 2 in Thompson to said district No. 1 in its said resolution of August 14, 1916.

"This action held on the ground that the notice published by the county board of education with reference to the transfer of the territory of district No. 2 to district No. 1 was not published until more than thirty days had elapsed after the filing of the map required by law in such transfers.

" 'The court further finds that the action of July 3d by the county board of education and the filing of the remonstrance to said action by the residents of district No. 2 is not a bar to further proceedings by the county board if those proceedings conformed to the law.

Defendants except. Bond in appeal fixed at $100.00.'

"The costs in the case were certified to the Geauga county board of education by the clerk of courts and the debt was acknowledged by said board and ordered paid from the funds credited to said board.

"Will you kindly give us an opinion as to which party to the suit should pay the costs in the case? Did the county board of education act within its authority in ordering the bill for costs paid and should the auditor honor their order and pay the costs in question.?"

Your inquiry involves a consideration of those statutes of Ohio which permit a party to an action in Ohio to recover of his adversary his costs made.

Section 11624 G. C. provides in part:

"When not otherwise provided by statute, costs shall be allowed, of course, to the plaintiff upon the judgment in his favor in actions for the recovery of money only or of specific real or personal property. * * *"

Section 11627 G. C. provides:

"Costs shall be allowed, of course, to a defendant upon a judgment in his favor in the actions mentioned in the next two preceding sections."

The two preceding sections provide: (section 11625) that if it appears that a justice of the peace has jurisdiction of an action brought in any other court and the judgment is less than $100.00, unless the recovery be reduced below the sum by counterclaim or set-off, each party shall pay his own costs; and, (section 11626) in all actions for libel, slander, malicious prosecution, assault, assault and battry, false imprisonment, criminal conversation or seduction, actions for nuisance, or against a justice of the peace for misconduct in office, when the damage assessed is under $5.00, the plaintiff shall not recover his costs.

Section 11628 G. C. provides:

"In other actions the court may award and tax costs, and apportion them between the parties, on the same or adverse sides, as it adjudges to be right and equitable."

Costs are not allowed as a matter of right in Ohio. They are only allowed as is provided by the statutes of our state. It is entirely within the power of the legislature to change, at its own will, the laws in relation to court costs or even to refuse to allow costs in a given class of cases.

It was held in State ex rel. Judson v. Coates, 11 Ohio Dec. 670, that the matter of the taxation of costs in civil actions, of requiring payments of, or of security for costs, is under legislative control. Phillips, J., on page 672, says:

> "In all times, each party to a civil action has been, both primarily and ultimately, liable for his own costs; and in early times, judgment for costs was not allowed to the prevailing party. And where the prevailing party is given judgment for costs, it is generally said to be upon the theory that he has paid his own costs and that the judgment is for his reimbursement."

In Bell v. Bates, 3 Ohio, 380, the court said:

> "There were no costs, eo nomine, at common law, although in actions sounding in damages, a practice prevailed of allowing to the plaintiff, in the assessment of the damages, a sufficient sum to remunerate him for his necessary expenses. But, in consequence of the hardships which a plaintiff must sustain, in expending large sums of money for the purpose of obtaining his right for which he would have no amends, the statute of Glouster (6 E, 1) was passed, allowing costs in certain cases. The subject was frequently, at subsequent periods, before the parliament of England, and such provisions made as justice and necessity seemed to demand. In this state, costs, as a general rule, have never been allowed to the party recovering judgment. The amount to be taxed, however, has been varied from time to time, the whole being regulated by statute."

In Farrier v. Cairns, 5 Ohio 45, the court says:

> "Costs are unknown to the common law. They are given only by statute and may be changed, or entirely taken away, at the will of the legislature."

It is noted, then, from the above, that unless some provision is made by law for the recovery of costs, a party to an action cannot recover the same. The action in your case does not come within the provisions of section 11624 G. C., that is, it is not an action for the recovery of money only or for specific real or personal property, and it does not come within the provisions of sections 11625 and 11626, above mentioned, but it does come within the provisions of section 11628; that is, it is such an action that the court may award the costs between the parties as it adjudges to be right and equitable.

It was held in Sloane vs. Railway Company, 7 O. C. C., 84, that in a tax payer's unsuccessful suit to enjoin the construction of a street railway, if the suit was apparently justified by irregularities, the court might apportion the costs between the parties; and in Reed v. Cincinnati, 8 O. C. C., 390, it was held that a division of costs is not an abuse of discretion where an amended petition to enjoin an assessment departs from the original and the case is decided against the plaintiff, though the defects in the assessment were cured by statute after the beginning of the suit; and in Lee vs. Dawson, 8 O. C. C., 365, it was held in an injunction against adding personalty to tax returns, part of which was properly added and part improperly added, that each party may be required to pay his own costs. And in Express Company vs. Rattemann, 21 Bulletin, 238, in a suit to enjoin a tax as unconstitutional, both parties having claimed too much, the court properly divided the cost.

So that, it being within the discretion of the court to say which party shall pay the costs, and the several parties not being entitled to recover same as matters of right, and the court having made no order for the payment of costs, I advise you that the county board of education is without authority to order the bill for costs paid and the auditor should not honor their order and should not issue his warrant therefor.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO NATIONAL GUARD—WHO ENTITLED TO PAY AS OFFICERS.

In order that persons may be entitled to pay as officers in the Ohio National Guard, they must have been appointed by the Governor, upon the recommendations of the commanding officers of the orginazations to which such officers are to be assigned for duty, and must have taken and subscribed to the oath of office prescribed by law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 17, 1917.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of August 22, 1917, which reads as follows:

"Plans were undertaken in this state to expand the Ninth Battalion Ohio

National Guard to a regiment and for this purpose Colonel Charles Young, U. S. A., was detailed by the war department to the state of Ohio to assist in the work. Colonel Young reported to the adjutant general of Ohio on or about July 20 and the adjutant general stated to him that as it was the intention to have him command the regiment, the adjutant general had not recommended any commissions to the governor but intended to rely upon the recommendations made by Colonel Young.

"On or about August 1 the war department determined it would not accept the regiment of cavalry which the state of Ohio was raising, and the enlisted men were therefore furloughed to the reserve.

"Certain men were told by Colonel Young that he intended to recommend them for commissions and he had a talk with the assistant adjutant general about the matter but he never took the matter up with the adjutant general and the men in question were not commissioned at that time by the governor of Ohio.

"The men in question, having been told by Colonel Young that he would recommend them for commissions, have now made a claim for pay, as officers. I have refused to pay same under the statement made under date of August 17 to Colonel Charles Young. The men in question have requested that the matter be submitted to the attorney-general of Ohio as to their status. The papers are enclosed herewith."

To this communication you have attached certain other correspondence which has to do with the matter about which you inquire, and for the purpose of rendering this opinion to you, I desire to quote but one of the letters so attached, written by Col. Chas. Young, U. S. A., to the adjutant general of Ohio, on August 20, 1917. This letter reads as follows:

"1. Returned. As you state in the second paragraph of your communication to me, you told me to make recommendations for officers of the proposed regiment which I did and submitted to the assistant adjutant general in your absence. Further than this and the notification of the men selected to that effect I had nothing whatever to do.

I do not know and was not aware of the swearing in even as private soldiers let alone as officers of the persons mentioned in this payroll. I therefore had it returned for Captain Caldwell's signature and for your approval if it came within the law. I am perfectly aware that I could not make officers, nor did I try to do so; I merely followed strictly your instructions to me and made the recommendations as above stated, in order to allow yourself and the governor to act.

2. I heartily agree with paragraphs 4 and 5 of your letter."

I desire, however, to note one fact which I gleam from a letter written to Col. Chas. Young, U. S. A., by the adjutant general of Ohio, on August 17, 1917, namely, that the actions, which took place in reference to the matter about which you inquire, arose on and after July 17, 1917.

From the correspondence submitted to me I gather the following facts, out of which your question arises:

1. Plans were adopted by the state authorities to expand the ninth battalion, Ohio National Guard into a regiment, and the active operations to carry said plans into effect were begun on or about July 17, 1917.

2. Col. Chas. Young, U. S. A., was placed in active charge of the carrying into effect of the plans so adopted.

3. The adjutant general of Ohio referred to said Col. Young, U. S. A., the duty of making recommendations to the governor of the state, of persons who in his mind would be suitable for commissioned officers for the regiment so formed.

4. Col. Young notified certain persons that he would recommend them for commissioned officers in said regiment and submitted his recommendations to the assistant adjutant general.

5. About the 1st of August, 1917, the war department decided that it would not accept the said regiment and the men who enlisted in the same were furloughed to the reserve.

Under these facts the question is whether the persons who were informed by Col. Young, U. S. A., that he would recommend them for commissioned officers in said regiment, are entitled to pay as officers. In answering this question it will be necessary for me to note a number of sections of the General Code, as found in 107 O. L 384.

Section 5180 G. C. (107 O. L. 384) reads as follows:

> "All officers of the Ohio national guard shall be appointed by the governor upon the recommendation of the commanding officers of the organizations to which such officers are to be assigned for duty. Before being commissioned all officers shall be examined with respect to their physical and mental qualifications, according to the rules which are now in effect or may hereafter be prescribed."

Section 5181 G. C. (107 O. L. 384) reads as follows:

> "Commissioned officers of the Ohio national guard now serving under commissions regularly issued shall continue in office, as officers of the national guard, without the issuance of new commissions; provided, that said officers have taken, or shall take and subscribe to the following oath of office: 'I, ----------, do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the constitution of the United States and the constitution of the state of Ohio against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I will obey the orders of the president of the United States, and of the governor of the state of Ohio; that I make this obligation freely; without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office of---------- in the national guard of the United States, and of the state of Ohio, upon which I am about to enter, so help me God.' Any officer of the Ohio national guard who shall not have taken such oath within thirty days after the passage of this act shall be discharged from the service."

Said section 5181 does not apply to the question at hand, other than that it sets out the form of oath to be taken and subscribed to by the persons commissioned as officers.

Section 5182 reads in part as follows (107 O. L. 384):

> "Persons hereafter commissioned as officers of the national guard shall not be recognized as such unless they * * * shall have taken and subscribed to the oath of office prescribed herein: * * *."

From these sections of the General Code we gather the following legal propositions which apply to commissioned officers in the Ohio national guard:

(1.) The commanding officers of the organization to which such commissioned officers are to be assigned for duty must make recommendations of persons to the governor.

(2.) The officers of the Ohio national guard shall be appointed by the governor upon said recommendations.

(3.) Before being commissioned, all officers shall be examined with respect to their physical and mental qualifications according to the rules which are now in effect or may hereafter be prescribed.

(4.) Persons hereafter commissioned as officers of the Ohio national guard shall not be recognized as such unless they shall have taken and subscribed to the oath of office as set out in said section 5181 above quoted.

Now, when we apply the law herein set out to the facts as they are presented, it seems quite evident to me that the persons in question do not at all come within the classification of commissioned officers. In fact none of the said provisions of law have been complied with, unless it would be the one which requires recommendations to be made, and even in reference to this proposition it seems that no recommendations were made to the governor, but the recommendations were simply filed in the office of the adjutant general, with the assistant adjutant general.

At any rate, it is quite evident that these parties were never appointed by the governor of Ohio in accordance with law; neither did they ever pass an examination as to their mental and physical qualifications; nor did they take the oath prescribed by law.

From all the above it is my opinion that the persons suggested by you as claiming pay as officers of the Ohio National Guard are not officers under the law and hence would not be entitled to pay as officers.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—BEQUESTS TO CHURCH ORGANIZATIONS LIABLE.

Bequests to church organizations are liable to the collateral inheritance tax provided for by sections 5331 et seq. of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 17, 1917.

HON. LEWIS D. SLUSSER, Probate Judge, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of August 19, 1917, you ask my opinion whether bequests to church organizations are liable to the collateral inheritance tax provided for by sections 5331 et seq. of the General Code.

The answer to your question depends upon whether such bequests are exempted by the provisions of section 5332 G. C., which so far as material to the question at hand provides as follows:

> "The provisions of the next preceding section shall not apply to property or interests in property transmitted to * * * or for the use of an institution in this state for purposes only of public charity, or other exclusively public purposes."

The phraseology of the statutory provision above quoted is slightly different from what it was before the codification of 1910. Formerly the same exempted bequests, etc., "to or for the use of any institution of said state for purposes of purely public charity or other exclusively public purposes." I assume under familiar rules of construction that the language above quoted from section 5332 G. C. is to receive the same construction as the statutory provisions relating to the subject matter as they stood before said codification.

I note that it was specifically held in the case of Watterson v. Halliday, 77 O. S. 150, 179, that a church organization or society is not an institution of purely public charity within the meaning of section 2732 R. S., which has been carried into the General Code as section 5353.

As recognized by the court in the case above cited, church organizations may and probably in all cases do dispense charity, but this is not the primary object or purpose of the organization. As said by the court, the church is primarily a religious institution and its charity is subordinate to its spiritual teaching, and for this reason cannot be classed as an institution of purely public charity.

With respect to the precise question at hand, I do not think, as before stated, that the present language of section 5332 G. C. is to receive any broader or more liberal interpretation and I am therefore of the opinion that bequests to church organzations are subject to the collateral inheritance tax provided for by the provisions of section 5331 G. C.

In reaching this conclusion I find myself in accord with an opinion of my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, addressed to Hon. Thomas L. Pogue, prosecuting attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio, under date of February 25, 1913 (Attorney-General's Report for 1913, page 1178), and also with an opinion of my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, addressed to Hon. George Thornburg, prosecuting attorney, St. Clairsville, Ohio, under date of February 14, 1916 (Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, volume 1, page 277).

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

"IN ANY ONE YEAR"—AS USED IN SECTION 7629 G. C.—MEANS SCHOOL YEAR.

The words "in any one year" in section 7629 G. C. means in any one school year, which begins on September 1st of any calendar year and ends on August 31st of the succeeding calendar year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 17, 1917.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of recent date reads as follows:

> "Section 7629 provides that the board of education shall not issue bonds in a greater amount in any one year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills.
> "Does this mean the school year or the calendar year "

The calendar year begins on the first day of January and ends on the 31st day of December. The school year, as provided by section 7689 G. C., begins on the first day of September of each year and closes on the 31st day of August, of the succeeding year. Unless it is otherwise designated or clearly to be determined, a year is to be considered as the calendar year.

Section 7629 G. C., to which you refer, reads as follows:

> "The board of education of any school district may issue bonds to obtain or improve public school property, and in anticipation of income from taxes, for such purposes, levied or to be levied, from time to time, as occasion requires, may issue and sell bonds, under the restrictions and bearing a rate of interest specified in sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven. The board shall pay such bonds and the interest thereon when due, but provide that no gretaer amount of bonds be issued in any year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills, for the year next preceding such issue. The order to issue bonds shall be made only at a regular meeting of the board and by a vote of two-thirds of its full membership, taken by yeas and nays and entered upon its journal."

That is to say, the board of education of a school district may obtain property or may improve public school property, and to provide means for the obtaining of such property or the improvement of public school property such board of education may issue and sell bonds therefor; and the board is authorized, for the purpose of the payment of such bonds and the interest thereon, as the same become due and payable, to levy taxes upon the taxable property of such school district. Such board of education, however, is restricted in the payment of interest to the amount of six per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and that the same shall be payable within at least forty years from the day they are issued and shall not issue in any year a greater amount of bonds than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills, which tax is calculated upon the grand duplicate of the school district for the preceding year. That is to say, if the grand duplicate of the taxing district is, for illustration, five millions of dollars, then such board might issue bonds in the amount of ten thousand dollars for said purposes during said year. There is nothing in said section, nor in any of the other sections of the chapter of which said section is a part, which would indicate that anything other than the calendar year is meant. But the history of the legislation from which said section resulted does throw some light upon the intention of the legislature in the use of the language "in any year." In 1873 there was passed an act "for the reorganization and maintenance of common schools," 70 O. L., 195. Section 56 of said act, found on page 211 of said volume, reads in part as follows:

> "Each board of education, at a regular or special meeting, held between the third Monday in April and the first Monday in June of each year, shall determine by estimate, as nearly as practicable, the entire amount of money necessary as a contingent fund to be expended for prolonging the several schools of the district for th· purchase of suitable sites for school houses; for leasing, purchasing, erecting and furnishing school houses; and for all other school expenses, not exceeding seven mills on the dollar of the taxable property of the district, as valued for taxation. And any board of education of any city district of the first class are hereby authorized to issue bonds to obtain or improve public school property, and in anticipation of income from taxes for such purposes levied or to be levied, may, from time to time, as occasion shall require, issue and sell bonds under the restrictions and bearing the rate of interest specified in section sixty three, and shall pay such bonds and the interest thereon when due, but shall so provide that n greater amount of such bonds shall be issued in any one year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills, under this section for the year next preceding such issue. * * *."

The particular language to be observed in the above quoted section is that language which designates when the estimates shall be made, that is, "at a regular or special meeting held between the third Monday in April and the first Monday in June of each year."

The school year was defined in section 70 of said act as beginning "on the first day of September of each year and closing on the 31st day of August of the succeed ing year," so that the first day of September was designated as the time when the school work for the year should begin and for all school purposes the year, unless otherwise designated, would mean the school year; that is, the year beginning September 1st in a calendar year and ending August 31st of the succeeding calendar year; and provision was made in said section 56, above quoted, for estimates for the various purposes in connection with the schools, and it was further provided that in city districts of the first class the board of education might, for the purpose of obtaining or improving public school property, sell bonds, but that the bonds should not aggregate in any year an amount greater than two mills of the taxable property for the year next preceding the year in which said bonds were issued. Said section 56, above quoted, was amended in 1877, 74 O. L. 108, to read in part as follows:

> "Each board of education, at a regular or special meeting held between the third Monday in April and the first Monday in June of each year shall determine by estimate, as nearly as practicable, the entire amount of money necessary as a contingent fund, to be expended for prolonging the several schools of the district , for the purchase of suitable sites for school houses, for leasing, purchasing, erecting and furnishing school houses, and for all other school expenses, not exceeding seven mills on the dollar of the taxable property of the district, as valued for taxation; provided, however, that in cities of the first class having a population of not less than thirty thousand nor more than seventy-five thousand inhabitants, said levy shall not exceed five mills on the dollar of the taxable property. And any board of education of any city district of the first class are hereby authorized to issue bonds to obtain or improve public school property, and in anticipation of income from taxes for such purposes, levied or to be levied, may, from time to time, as occasion shall require, issue and sell bonds, under the restrictions and bearing a rate of interest specified in section sixty-three, and shall pay such bonds and the interest thereon when due, but shall so provide that no greater amount of such bonds shall be issued in any one year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills under this section, for the year next preceding such issue: * * *."

The only change in the language of said section by said amendment is the maximum levy provided for cities having a population of not less than thirty thousand or more than seventy-five thousand inhabitants. Said section was again amended in 1878, 75 O. L. 526, to read in part as follows:

> "Each board of education, at a regular or special meeting held between the third Monday in April and the first Monday in June of each year, shall determine by estimate, as nearly as practicable, the entire amount of money necessary as a contingent fund, to be expended for prolonging the several schools of the district, for the purchase of suitable sites for school houses, for leasing, purchasing, erecting and furnishing school houses, and for other school expenses, not exceeding seven mills on the dollar of the taxable property of the district as valued for taxation: provided, however, that in cities of the first class having a population of not less than thirty thousand, nor more than seventy-five thousand inhabitants, said levy shall not exceed six mills on the dollar of the taxable property, and in such cities of the first class upon settlement of the treasurer of the board of education with the county auditor, there shall be placed of such levy of six mills at the rate of not less than two mills per annum, to the credit of a sinking fund, and said treasurer shall appropriate and apply said fund in payment of school bonds and interest thereon, and to no other purpose whatever, and any board of education of any city district of the first class are hereby authorized to issue bonds to obtain or improve public school property, and in anticipation of income from taxes for such purposes levied or to be levied, may from time to time, as occasion shall require, issue and sell bonds under the restrictions and bearing a rate of interest specified in section sixty-three, and shall pay such bonds and the interest thereon when due, but shall so provide that no greater amount of such bonds shall be issued in any one year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills under this section, for the year next preceding such issue. * * *."

The only change in said section is the provision for the appropriation of money for the purpose of paying school bonds and the interest thereon and that said appropriation shall be used for no other purpose. The time when the estimates for school purposes shall be made and all other provisions was in practically the same language as in the section before amendment. In the codification of the school laws in 1904, said section 36 was numbered 3994 of the Revised Statutes and read in part as follows:

"The board of education of any city district of the first class, except a district embracing a city of the first grade of the first class, may issue bonds to obtain or improve public school property, and in anticipation of income from taxes for such purpose, levied or to be levied, may, from time to time, as occasion requires, issue and sell bonds, under the restrictions and bearing a rate of interest specified in the preceding section and shall pay such bonds and the interest thereon when due, but shall so provide that no greater amount of such bonds shall be issued in any year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills for the year next preceding such issue; * * *"

Provision was made in the last above quoted section that all school districts might have the same rights as districts in cities of the first class theretofore had in the issuing of bonds for the obtaining and improving of school property. In the same codification act, above mentioned, there was enacted Revised Statutes section 3958, which provided:

"Each board of education shall, annually, at a regular or special meeting held between the third Monday in April and the first Monday in June, fix the rate of taxation necessary to be levied for all school purposes * * *."

The provisions of said section are now found in General Code section 5649-3a, as follows:

"On or before the first Monday in June, each year, * * * each board of education * * * shall submit or cause to be submitted to the county auditor an annual budget, setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year, and for each month thereof. Such annual budget shall specifically set forth:

(1) The amount to be raised for each and every purpose allowed by law for which it is desired to raise money for the incoming year.

(2) The balance standing to the credit or debit of the several funds at the end of the last fiscal year.

(3) The monthly expenditures from each fund in the twelve months and the monthly expenditures from all funds in the twelve months of the last fiscal year.

(4) The annual expenditures from each fund for each year of the last five fiscal years.

(5) The monthly average of such expenditures from each of the several funds for the last fiscal year, and also the total monthly average of all of them for the last five fiscal years.

(6) The amount of money received from any other source and available for any purpose in each of the last five fiscal years, together with an estimate of the probable amount that may be received during the incoming year, from such source or sources.

(7) The amount of the bonded indebtedness setting out each issue and the purpose for which issued, the date of issue, and the date of maturity, the original amount issued and the amount outstanding, the rate of interest, the sum necessary for interest and sinking fund purposes, and the amount required for all interest and sinking fund purposes for the incoming year.

* * * * * * * * * *

The local tax levy for all school purposes shall not exceed in any one year five mills on the dollar of valuation of taxable property in any school district. * * * "

It is stated in Rabe vs. Board of Education, 88 O. S., 403-415, that the school year which begins on the first day of September of each year and closes on the 31st day of August of the succeeding year "is recognized as the fiscal year."

So that what was provided for in the original act and in section 36 thereof, in relation to the estimates for school purposes, is now provided for in said section 5649-3a G. C., and what was originally provided for in section 36 of the original act in relation to the issuing of bonds for obtaining and improving school property is now provided for in section 7629 G. C., and in all of said sections the year that is being considered is the school year, that is, the year beginning September 1st in any calendar year and ending on the 31st of August of the succeeding calendar year. At no place is any other year than the school year mentioned except the fiscal year.

I am therefore of the opinion that the words "in any year" in section 7629 means the school year as the same is defined by section 7689, herein mentioned.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—BEQUEST TO WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION OF CHURCH—LIABLE—WHEN PART OF FUNDS USED TO SUPPORT CHURCH.

A bequest to the women's association of a church, which is an auxiliary of the church of which every woman in the church is a member, and which performs charitable work in ministering to the needs of indigent families, etc., but which also aids in the support of the church society by helping to care for the church building, is not exempt from the collateral inheritance tax. Such association, if considered as an institution, can not be said to be an institution "for purposes only of public charity" and a bequest made in aid of its work generally is, therefore, not made "to or for the use of an institution in this state for purpose only of public charity or other exclusively public purposes."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 17, 1917.

HON. D. M. CUPP, Prosecuting Attorney, Delaware, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of a communication in which you ask my opinion upon facts stated therein as follows:

> "Sarah Moore, late of Delaware county, bequeathed to the Women's Association of the William Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Delaware, Ohio, a legacy of five thousand dollars, with which to carry on its work. Said testator made several legacies which are not involved or in any way connected with the matter presented.
> The Woman's Association of The William Street Methodist Episcopal Church is an auxiliary of the church and every woman of the church is considered a member of this organization.
>
> The object of this association is to work for the good of the people of Delaware and vicinity and especially for the welfare of indigent families, reporting each month those who are sick, in trouble, or in need of financial assistance, and this association keeps the pastor continually informed about these various needs.
>
> Shoes and clothing and sewing are furnished children who could not otherwise attend Sunday school and church.
>
> Recently a pastor who was in very ill health was furnished groceries and other necessaries during his long and continued illness.
>
> The association also helps to keep up the church and assists in buying coal and paying electric light bills, and much money is raised by serving dinners and banquets to the public, and working in numerous other ways for the general welfare of the city of Delaware.
> No one derives any profit or compensation from this association, and the association is assisted further by donations from the people.
>
> The society works continuously for the good of the cause of christianity, and of the church and the people, helping the needy ones wherever it finds them. The society is under the constant necessity of soliciting support by voluntary donations from charitably disposed persons, or is compelled to resort to work in the form of serving dinners, banquets, etc.
> With the above statement of facts before you I respectfully ask your opinion as to whether or not said Women's Association will be required to pay the collateral inheritance tax."

The question submitted by you has been the subject of considerable investigation and consideration in keeping with the importance of the question, but in this opinion I shall attempt to do little more than to state my conclusions in the matter. The question calls for consideration and construction of certain provisions of section 5332 G. C., which exempts certain bequests, devises, etc., from the operation of the collateral inheritance tax imposed by section 5331 G. C.

Section 5332 G. C., in so far as material to the question in hand, provides as follows:

> "The provisions of the next preceding section shall not apply to property or interests in property, transmitted to * * * * or for the use of an institutition in this state for purpose only of public charity or other exclusively public purposes."

The first question which suggests itself in the consideration of the above quoted statutory provisions in their application to the question at hand is whether or not the women's association referred to in your communication is an "institution" within the meaning of the term as used in section 5332 G. C.

This question is not free from doubt in view of the decision of the supreme court in Humphreys v. State, 70 O. S. 67. The conclusion at which I have arrived, however, makes it unnecessary for me to consider this phase of the question; and I assume for the present that the society has an existence distinct from that of the church with which it is connected, though not separate therefrom, and that it is an "institution" within the meaning of the statute. Is it "an institution in this state for purpose only of public charity or other exclusively public purposes?" The church itself with which the society is connected is not such an institution. This is the holding of this department based upon decisions like Gerke v. Purcell, 25 O. S. 229, and Watterson v. Halliday, 77 O. S. 150, construing similar language in the constitution and statutes relative to exemptions from property taxation; and based further upon the ground that the phrase "other exclusively public purposes" as used in the collateral inheritance tax law must be interpretedi n accordance with the rule of ejusdem generis as limited in scope to purposes of the class indicated by previous enumeration of like things. In other words, if the bequest were to the church for church purposes generally it would not be exempt from the tax.

As pointed out in Watterson v. Halliday, supra, many of the activities of a church are charitable in character; yet the institution in its preponderant aspect exists rather for the dissemination of religion than the dispensing of charity in the narrower sense in which that term must be interpreted in contexts like the one under consideration. Yet, as shown by both of the decisions cited, there may be fostered under church auspices or connections institutions which are of a charitable nature; and for the purposes of this opinion it will be assumed, though not decided, that an institution might be so broad in scope as not to exist "for purpose only of public charity" and yet, having within its purview some objects which are "purely" or "only" charitable, may be the competent recipient of a bequest which according to its terms is to be applied only to such charitable ends. Hence it will be assumed that the bequest about which you inquire would be a bequest to an institution "for purpose only of public charity" if the terms of the bequest limited its application to public charitable objects.

This assumption, which is as broad a one as the statute is susceptible of under any possible interpretation consistent with the previous opinions referred to, places determining stress upon the purpose of the devise or bequest rather than the general purpose of the institution. In the case you submit, however, there can be no discrimination of this sort, because the bequest is made to the society for the purpose of carrying on its work generally and is not limited to some particular branch of its work.

You state that the association is an auxiliary of the church and that among its objects is to assist in keeping up the church by maintaining its physical plant. In other words, the association does not limit itself to the relief of the needy without discrimination as to denomination, but also works for the support of the church and assists the church to discharge its function of public worship and religious education, as well as in the performance of such acts of charity as may appropriately be performed by a church or a church auxiliary. This fact renders the bequest subject to the same rule as would be applied in the case of a bequest to a church for the purpose of its work generally, and on this ground, if for no other reason, I am of the opinion that the bequest is not one to an institution for purposes only of public charity, but is one to an institution for purposes, some of which constitute public charity but others of which do not constitute such charity. That being the case, the bequest mentioned in your letter is not exempt from the collateral inheritance tax.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—ABSTRACT OF TITLE—JOHN W. ZELLER TO STATE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 18, 1917.

HON. J. E. SHATZEL, Secretary Board of Trustees, State Normal School, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You recently submitted to this department for examination abstract of title covering the following described premises, situate in the city of Bowling Green, county of Wood, State of Ohio, and bounded and described as follows:

> "Commencing 50 feet west of the intersection of the west line of Wayne street with the curb line of the north line of Wooster street in said city, thence north along the west line of Frank L. Deffenback's lot and along said west line extended to the south line of that part of out lot No. 97 in said city, owned by the State of Ohio, thence west along said south line of said part of said lot owned by the State of Ohio 100 feet, thence south parallel with Wayne street to the curb on the north line of Wooster street, thence east 100 feet to place of beginning, being a part of out lot No. 97 in said city.

Also all that part of said out lot No. 97 lying between the north line of said Deffenback's lot and the south line of the land owned by the State of Ohio."

You also submit deed covering the above described premises wherein John W. Zeller and Elizabeth Zeller deed said property to the State of Ohio. I note that the above described premises are incumbered as follows:

"On January 2, 1913, John W. Zeller and Elizabeth Zeller gave a mortgage on said premises to one Charles W. Butler. Said mortgage was "given to secure payment of one note of $900.00, payable at the First National Bank of Defiance, payable five years after date, with interest at 8 per cent. per annum after maturity, payable semi-annually. Said note is dated January 2, 1913, and also secures payment of ten coupon notes for interest of $27.00 each, payable every six months."

The abstract does not show that said mortgage was satisfied or released.

The taxes for the year 1917 are a lien on said premises, but as yet undetermined.

In the deed submitted John W. Zeller and Elizabeth Zeller covenant that they are lawfully seized of said premises and that said premises are free and clear of all incumbrances whatsoever. Therefore, the amount of the mortgage above set forth and the taxes for the year 1917 should be deducted from the purchase price.

I also note that the deed from Helen W. Wooster, the former owner of Out Lot No. 97, in the city of Bowling Green, Wood county, Ohio, to John W. Zeller, dated December 23, 1912, contains the following restriction:

"Said grantee, John W. Zeller, his heirs or assigns, is to build a good and substantial fence along half of the west line of the above described property, and is also to build a dwelling house on said property to cost not less than $3000.00."

The rule of law governing restrictions in deeds is that the restriction may be enforced by any one for whose benefit it was so placed in the deed. Restrictions may be made for the personal benefit of the owner or they may have been imposed for the benefit generally of the purchaser of the other lots in the vicinity, whether or not they were owned by the same grantor. In other words, the grantor owning but one lot in the neighborhood may place a binding restriction thereon for the benefit of the other owners and these latter parties may go into a court of equity and have same enforced. I call attention to this rule of law because of the fact that the lot deeded by John W. Zeller to the state of Ohio does not comprice the whole of Out Lot No. 97 and that Helen W. Wooster has sold parts of said Out Lot to other parties; and further because of the fact that Out Lot No. 97 does not comprise the whole of the block of land facing Wooster street between Thurston Avenue and Wayne street.

It will therefore be necessary, before passing positively on the question of whether or not the restriction in the deed to John W. Zeller has any force and effect, to ascertain for whose benefit this restriction was made, whether it was placed there for the particular benefit of the grantor (Helen W. Wooster), for the benefit of the other lots in said Out Lot No. 97, or whether it was placed there for the benefit of the lot owners in that neighborhood.

The intention of the grantor, Helen W. Wooster, may be ascertained from her acts and the circumstances. That is, if the deed from the grantor to other purchasers contained a like restriction, or from the records it can be ascertained that it was the general scheme in the neighborhood that all dwelling houses should not cost less than a certain sum of money, it would show that the grantor intended this restriction for the benefit of the other lot owners generally and the restriction would be binding in their favor.

However if the circumstances prove the restriction to be for the benefit of the other lots of the grantor Helen W. Wooster and as you state in your communication that she has since sold all her land to the state, then such restriction would be of no force and effect. But if you determine from your investigation that the restriction was for the personal benefit of the grantor, it would then be necessary for you to obtain from her a release; otherwise the restriction would be binding

I advise you, therefore, to investigate and determine for whose benefit this restriction was made. You will then be able to apply the rule of law, as I have pointed out to you, to the facts as found from your investigation and determine whether or not the restriction is binding. The deed submitted, with the exception above noted, will convey a clear title to the state of Ohio.

I am herewith returning said abstract and deed.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CASS HIGHWAY ACT—GOVERNS BOND AND CONTRACT FORMS IN SUBMITTING PROJECT STATEMENTS TO SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE—FEDERAL AID.

In submitting project statements to the secretary of agriculture, the form of bond and the form of contract provided for in the Cass highway act must be used under the facts upon which this opinion is written.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication, in which you ask my opinion as follows:

"This department has submitted and is now ready to submit to the secretary of agriculture, Washington, D. C., projects statements covering proposed construction of certain sections of inter-county highways and main market roads in the state under the provisions of the 'Federal Aid Road Act of 1916.'

"Applications for aid on these projects were received by me from county commissioners and same were approved by me and surveys ordered prior to the time at which Amended House Bill No. 300 came into full force and effect.

"The approval of the highway advisory board to the project statements was not given until after the time Amended Bill No. 300 came into full force and effect.

"The federal government is now requesting that this department submit to it copies of forms of contract and bond which we propose using in all construction work where federal aid is involved.

"With the above facts before you, I respectfully request your opinion on the following:

"Must the contracts for these improvements be let under the provisions of the Cass highway law, or under the provisions of Amended House Bill No. 300."

Your question has to do with the provisions of what is known as the Federal Aid Road Act of July 11, 1916. Section 10 of said act provides:

"That the secretary of agriculture is authorized to make rules and regulations for carrying out the provisions of this act."

In accordance with the provisions of said section, the secretary of agriculture promulgated a set of rules and regulations on September 1, 1916. In section 1 of regulation 4 of these rules and regulations there is a provision made for the submission to the secretary of agriculture of what is known as a project statement by the state highway department. In this section provision is made as follows:

"With each statement there shall be submitted for the approval of the secretary copies of the form of contract, together with all documents referred to therein or made part thereof, and of the contractor's bond which it is proposed to use on the project. No alteration of such forms shall be made until it is approved by the secretary."

From this language it is seen that you are to submit to the secretary of agriculture the form of contract and the form of the contractor's bond which you propose to use on the project submitted to the secretary of agriculture.

Of course the question then simply is as to what form of contract and what form of bond you will use when you come to let the contract for the improvement upon which the federal government will grant the aid, and you ask, therefore, whether you will use the form of bond and contract as provided for under the Cass highway law, or that provided for under amended house bill No. 300.

In answering your query, I desire to call attention to an opinion (No. 449) which I rendered you on July 16, 1917. In this opinion I discussed the question whether a road improvement would be considered a proceeding under the provisions of section 26 G. C. On page 12 of the opinion I arrived at the following conclusion:

"From all these cases it seems to me that there can be no question but that the matter of a road improvement constitutes a proceeding under the terms of section 26 G. C."

I then proceeded to advise when the first step in a road improvement is taken and on the same page stated:

"It is my opinion that the first step is taken when the state highway commissioner approves the application of the county commissioners for the improvement of the inter-county highways or main market roads of the county, or when he approves any part of said highways for which application has been made, and orders the county surveyor to prepare plans, profiles, specifications, &c., for said improvement.

"Hence, if the approval of the state highway commissioner was made and his ordering the county surveyor to make plans, specifications, &c. for an improvement occurred before June 28, 1917, then your department would proceed under the provisions of the old law. But if these steps have been taken since the 28th day of June, 1917, the provisions of the new law would control in the matter of your further proceedings."

In applying the law, as I found it to be in said opinion, to the facts as they are in your present communication, what is the answer to your question?

Before you make your project statement to the secretary of agriculture, the following steps will have been taken: Some county or counties have made application for aid in the improvement of certain highways. Your department has allowed the application either in whole or in part and has ordered plans, profiles, &c. to be made. Further, these plans, profiles, &c. have been approved by your department. Then you send to the secretary of agriculture a statement setting forth the nature of the improvement in detail.

Hence it would seem clear from all the above that the first steps of the road improvement or improvements will have been taken at the time you send your project statement to the secretary of agriculture, and that you should use the form of contract and the form of bond as provided for under the law as it was when you took the first steps in the matter of the road improvements, namely, the Cass highway act, and not the forms set forth in acts which became effective after you took the first steps.

Hence, answering you question specifically, it is my opinion that you should include in your project statement the form of contract and the form of bond provided for under the Cass highway act.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LEASE—STATE LANDS—STATE CANNOT CANCEL SAME BECAUSE OF FRAUD ON PART OF LESSEE TOWARD THIRD PARTY IN SECURING SAME.

1. Where I. M. M. promises S. & R. to secure a lease of certain lands from the state of Ohio for the use and benefit of said S. & R., and after securing the lease refuses to turn same over to S. & R., or their assigns, the state would not be justified in law in declaring the same cancelled, due to the fraud practiced upon S. & R. by I. M. M.

2. The lands belonging to the public parks of the state are subject to being leased, as are the canal lands of the state, but are not subject to sale.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1917.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of recent date, to which you attach a copy of a certain lease to Ira M. Miller, dated October 23, 1916, and also a brief of The Summit Beach Park Company, which communication reads as follows:

> "I am enclosing a brief referring to a lease issued to Ira M. Miller in Akron, Ohio, for a strip of the bank extending along the shore of Summit Lake for a distance of 1945 feet, more or less. This lease was granted October 23, 1916.
> "It is set up in the brief that the said lease was obtained by fraud. Secondly, that the lease was obtained for park purposes and that the said lessee has not used the same for park purposes and has from time to time attempted to sublet the same for commercial purposes, either on a lease or royalty basis. Third, the point is made that this land being part of the state park is not subject to a lease, etc. Another ground for the revocation of the lease is that the lessee has failed to patrol said towing path and water front, as per his contract.

"I would like to know whether these are valid grounds for the cancellation of this lease, viewed in the terms of the agreement and the interests of private parties and the generdl public."

In view of the facts set forth in the brief of the said The Summit Beach Park Company, you ask my opinion whether the lease made to said Ira M. Miller is a legal and valid contract, or if the same ought to be cancelled by you for the state and held to be void and of no effect.

The facts upon which you desire this opinion and as set out in your communication and writings thereto attached are as follows:

1. On August 23, 1916, J. L. Snyder and J. A. Rampanelli of Akron, Ohio, received from Cora W. Miller, wife of said Ira M. Miller, lessee of the state, and one Lewis A. Miller, brother of Ira M. Miller, options to lease certain property owned by them, the lease to be taken for the purpose of building and constructing thereon an amusement park, and that said parties so informed said Cora W. Miller and Lewis A. Miller of their intention so to do.

2. In order that this land, upon which options were taken for leases, would be of any value as an amusement park, it would be necessary for the lessees to secure the rights of the state in and to the tow-path and lands adjoining Summit Lake, Summit county, Ohio, the lands to be leased from said Cora W. Miller and Ira M. Miller lying near said Summit lake.

3. Shortly a ter August 23, 1916, Ira M. Miller, the lessee of the state, husband of said Cora W. Miller in a conversation with said J. L. Snyder and J. A. Rampanelli, said that he had also been working upon the park proposition in connection with the lands of his wife and brother, but that he was never able to get all matters adjusted so that he could carry out his intentions. He asked said Snyder and Rampanelli if they were intending to obtain a lease from the state for the tow-path and the state rights in and to lands adjoining Summit lake. They replied that such was their intention. Said Ira M. Miller then stated to them: "I shall get them for you. I have been after them for some time and if you start you will muddle things all up;" to which proposition of said Ira M. Miller said Snyder and Rampanelli consented and agreed, with the understanding that said Ira M. Miller would turn the lease so secured from the state over to them or to the company which they were promoting.

4. On the 18th day of September, 1916, said Snyder and Rampanelli, for a valuable consideration, sold to The Summit Beach Park Company all their interest in the said option above referred to.

5. The said Ira M. Miller on the 23d day of October, 1916, secured from the state a lease of the tow-path and the rights of the state in lands adjoining Summit Lake, at an annual rental of five hundred dollars per year, taking the lease in his own name.

6. Ever since said date, the said Ira M. Miller has failed and refused to turn said lease over to the said The Summit Beach Park Company, although it has agreed to reimburse him for his services so rendered in securing the lease.

Upon these facts The Summit Beach Park Company submits that the state should cancel the lease to said Ira M. Miller and consider the same void and of no effect, for the following reasons:

(1) That the said lessee, Ira M. Miller, agreed at all times to patrol said tow path and water front and that he has utterly failed and neglected so to do.

(2) That said contract of lease was procured and obtained by fraud.

(3) That the said tow-path was leased for park purposes and that said Ira M. Miller has not used the same for park purposes but has from time to time been attempting to sublet different portions of the same for commercial purposes.

(4) That the tow-path in front of the property of The Summit Beach Park Company is now properly classed as a part of the state park and not subject to lease to any one.

In view of the facts above set forth and as shall hereinafter be noted, let us examine these propositions in the order in which they are set out.

First. As to the fact that said Ira M. Miller does not patrol the tow-path; the lease provides as follows:

> "The party of the second part, hereby agrees for himself his heirs, administrators, successors and assigns to employ a sufficient number of police patrolmen to preserve order in and around the places of amusement to be erected upon the state property herein leased."

In connection with this point it must be remembered that said Ira M. Miller has not as yet erected upon the premises so leased any places of amusement and I am of the opinion that until he does so erect and establish places of amusement, he will not be compelled to patrol the premises, for the reason that the provision for patrolling is to—

> "preserve order in and around the places of amusement to be erected upon the state property herein leased."

So that I am of the opinion that this failure upon the part of the lessee would not be sufficient to warrant a cancellation of the lease.

Second. As to the fact that the contract was procured and obtained by fraud. In so far as the rights of the state in and to this contract of lease are concerned, I am of the opinion that said Ira M. Miller did not practice fraud upon the state of Ohio. If the said Ira M. Miller should proceed to carry out his alleged agreement with said Snyder and Rampanelli, it could hardly be said that any fraud was practiced upon the state of Ohio, and the mere fact that he refuses to carry out said alleged agreement would not be sufficient to enable the state to take advantage of the matter and cancel the lease so made to said Ira M. Miller. The fraud, if any, is practiced upon the said Snyder and Rampanelli and their assigns, rather than upon the state of Ohio. For this reason I am of the opinion that the second ground set forth by The Summit Beach Park Company is not sufficient in law to warrant the cancellation of said lease by the state of Ohio.

Third. As to said tow-path not being used by Ira M. Miller, he from time to time attempting to sublet different portions of the same for commercial purposes. The lease provides, in reference to this matter:

> "It is further distinctly understood and agreed that this lease shall not be assigned, transferred or sublet without the written consent of the superintendent of public works thereto."

From this provision of the contract of lease, it is evident, in my opinion, that if the said Ira M. Miller should assign or sublet any of the premises so leased to him by the state of Ohio, the state of Ohio would be justified and warranted in cancelling the lease so made to said Ira M. Miller, but this principle could hardly be applied to the mere attempting to assign or sublet premises or any part thereof. It is my opinion that the state would have no right to act upon a mere attempt upon the part of said Ira M. Miller to sublet said premises, and that it would not be justified in acting until the said attempts are consummated into an assigning or subletting of the premises so leased to him, or any part thereof. I further desire to say that the mere fact of non-user would not be sufficient to warrant the concellation of the contract of lease.

Fourth. As to the tow-path being a part of a state park and hence not subject to lease to any one. In order to answer this it will be necessary for us to note the provisions of our statutes in reference to state parks.

Section 469 G. C., as amended in an act found in 107 O. L. 183, provides:

> "Section 469. * * * the bodies of water and adjacent lands owned by the state consisting of the Summit county lakes and reservoirs of the Ohio canal, known as the Portage-Summit reservoirs, together with the Summit Lake * * * all situated in Summit county * * * are hereby dedicated and set apart forever for the use of the public, as public parks or pleasure resorts. The bodies of water mentioned in this section shall, in the order in which they are described be named and designated as follows: 'Buckeye Lake,' 'Indian Lake,' Lake St. Mary's,' 'The Portage Lakes,' and 'Lake Loramie'."

So that the Summit Beach Park Company is correct in its contention that the lands so leased to said Ira M. Miller are merely a part of a state park. The question now is as to whether these lands can be leased for any purpose whatever.

Section 470 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The lakes named in the preceding section shall, at all times, be open to the public as resorts for recreation and pleasure, including hunting, fishing and boating, but the privileges of hunting and fishing shall be subject to the fish and game laws of the state, and the boating privileges shall be subject to the rules and regulations prescribed by the superintendent of public works."

But section 471 G. C. reads as follows:

> "Section 471. No state lands, in or adjacent to Buckeye Lake, Indian Lake, Lake St. Marys, or Portage Lakes shall ever be sold, but the superintendent of public works may lease such lands, including marginal strips and marsh lands around said lakes, the outer slopes of artificial embankments, islands, borrow pits and state lands adjacent thereto as he deems proper under the laws governing the leasing of canal lands."

From the provisions of these sections it is my opinion that even though the lands in question do belong to a state park, yet they may be leased under the same terms and conditions as canal lands may be leased.

From all the above it is my opinion that there is no ground upon which the state of Ohio would be justified in cancelling the lease in question and holding it to be void and of no effect.

I am of the opinion that if any one has any remedy against said Ira M. Miller for his alleged false representations, it is The Summit Beach Park Company, under and by virtue of its assignment from said Snyder and Rampanelli.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRUSTEES OF COUNTY CHILDREN'S HOME—THREE MEMBERS OF SAME POLITICAL PARTY—THIRD MEMBER DE FACTO OFFICER—ACTS ARE BINDING—HOME MAY RECEIVE SUPPORT FROM COMMISSIONERS, ALTHOUGH NOT ENDORSED BY STATE BOARD OF CHARITIES.

The board of trustees of a county children's home is composed of three members of one political party and one member of another instead of two members of each party, as the statute provides. HELD, That while the third member of one political party was ineligible for the appointment, he is nevertheless a de facto officer and his acts and the acts of the board are binding.

Also held, that the fact that the state board of charities has refused to endorse this county children's home does not prevent the county commissioners from lending financial support to this institution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1917.

HON. GEO. E. BARCH, Juvenile Judge, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 28, 1917, as follows:

"The Board of State Charities in session February 6, 1917, refused to renew the endorsement of the Pike County Childrens' Home and under Section 1352-1, General Code, the juvenile court is not permitted to commit dependent or neglected children to said home. I am besieged every few days with persons desiring to obtain admission to the Home by friends of dependent and neglected children and the situation has become distressing to the court. The present Board of Trustees is composed of three members of one political party and one from the other and they are still making contracts and disbursing money just as they did when the institution was recognized by the State Board of Charities. Will you please give me your opinion on the following questions:

"(1) Is the Board of Trustees. a legal board?

"(2) If not, are the actions of the board legal and binding?

"(3) Have the county commissioners authority to make a levy for the support and maintenance of the institution?"

Sections 1352-1 and 3081 of the General Code read as follows:

"Sec. 1352-1: Such board shall annually pass upon the fitness of every benevolent and correctional institution, corporation and association, public, semi-public, or private as receives, or desires to receive and care for children or places children in private homes. Annually at such times as the board shall direct, each such institution, corporation or association, shall make a report, showing its condition, management and competency, adequately to care for such children as are, or may be committed to it or admitted therein, the system of visitation employed for children placed in private homes, and such other facts as the board requires. When the board is satisfied as to the care given such children, and that the requirements of the statutes covering the management of such institutions are being complied with, it shall issue to the association a certificate to that effect, which shall continue in force for one year, unless sooner revoked by the board. No child shall be committed by the juvenile court to an association or institution which has not such certificate unrevoked and received within fifteen months next preceding the commitment. A list of each certified institution shall be sent by the board of state charities, at least annually, to all courts acting as juvenile courts and to all associations and institutions so approved. Any person who receives children or receives or solicits money on behalf of such an institution, corporation or association, not so certified, or whose certificate has been revoked, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not less than $5.00 nor more than $500.00.

"Sec. 3081: When the necessary site and buildings are provided by the county, the commissioner shall appoint a board of four trustees, as follows: One for one year, one for two years, one for three years, and one for four years, from the first Monday of March thereafter. Not more that two of such trustees shall be of the same political party. Annually thereafter on the first Monday of March, the county commissioners shall appoint one such trustee, who shall hold his office for the term of four years and until the successor is appointed and qualified."

It will be noted that section 3081 provides in part that "no more than two such trustees shall be of the same political party." From your statement three of the four members of the board belong to one political party and it is evident that the last of these three members appointed should not have been appointed, but that a member of some other political party should have been named. Some of the authorities hold that a provision such as is found in section 3081, to the effect that "not more than two of such trustees shall be of the same political party." is simply directory while others hold the provision to be mandatory.

In 29 Cyc, 1378, it is stated:

"The general provisions in the state constitutions prohibiting 'tests' for holding office are usually so construed as to prevent the requirement by the legislature of religious and political qualifications. But a statute which provides for a board or commission of a certain number, no more than a certain proportion of whose members shall belong to the same political party, is not regarded as providing a political qualification. It is doubtful if such a provision would be enforced by courts."

However, I do not think it is necessary to discuss this question in this opinion. The qualifications of only one member of the board of trustees are in dispute. The other three members of the board, from all that appears, have been regularly appointed and the qualifications of the fourth member, who should have been of another political party, are only important when acts of the board depending upon his vote are under consideration. Even then these acts would be held valid, since he is undoubtedly a de facto officer. The authorities hold that the prime requisites in constituting a de facto officer is the existence of a de jure office. In the case submitted by you this prime requisite is present, since as a matter of law there is and should be a tribunal known as the board of trustees of the children's home.

The second requisite constituting a person an officer de facto is actual possession of the office. In the present case no one, other than the four trustees appointed, is assuming to act as a member of the board of trustees and your letter certainly indicates that this trustee is in possession of the office. The next requisite of a de facto officer is found in the rule that his possession must be under color of title. There can be no question about the existence of this requisite in the case submitted, since his appointment is sufficient color of title.

From the above will be seen that while one of the trustees of the children's home may be ineligible to the office he holds, he is nevertheless a de facto officer and his acts are not subject to collateral attack, and until his right to hold the office has been denied by the courts in some direct proceeding, his acts as trustee of the county children's home will undoubtedly be valid.

Answering your third question, I take it that you mean to inquire whether county commissioners may levy a tax for the maintenance of the children's home which the board of state charities has refused to endorse.

Section 3105 G. C. provides:

> "At their regular quarterly meeting at which such estimate is presented to them, the commissioners shall carefully examine the estimate, and if, in their judgment, it is reasonable and ratably within the assessment for the support of the home for the current year, or so much thereof as they deem reasonable and within such assessment, the board of commissioners shall allow and approve, and shall appropriate and set apart such amount for the use of the home. Upon the order of the trustees of the home, the county auditor shall draw his warrant upon the county treasurer, who shall pay such warrant from the fund so appropriated and set apart."

In an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Edward C. Turner, to Hon. A. C. McDougal, Prosecuting Attorney, Woodsfield, Ohio, on March 27, 1916, and found in Opinions of the Attorney General for 1916, Vol. 1, p. 573, Mr. Turner held:

> "Refusal of the board of state charities to renew its certificate to a county children's home, as provided in section 1352-1 G. C., 103 O. L., 865, does not operate to prohibit the county auditor issuing his warrants on vouchers drawn against funds appropriated for the support of such home, to pay bills incurred after the expiration of the former certificate of the state board of charities."

In that opinion Mr. Turner, after quoting section 3105 and section 1352-1 G. C., both herein quoted above, said:

> "These sections impose a limitation upon the power of the juvenile court to commit children to a children's home which does not have such certificate unrevoked and received within fifteen months next preceding the commitment, and upon the power of the trustees or superintendent of the home to receive children either by way of commitment by a court or otherwise, but do not in terms impose any limitation upon the duty of the commissioners to appropriate funds for the support of the institution, and of the auditor to issue warrants upon vouchers issued against such appropriation by the trustees as provided in section 3105 G. C., supra. Not only is there no specific inhibition against the same, but there is no provision for the disposition of children already in the home, and this strengthens the view that it was not the intention of the legislature that the refusal of the board of state charities to certify, should require that a county children's home should not be further supported by the county for the benefit of children already there.
> "I am therefore of the opinion that the refusal of the board of state charities to issue its certificate to the Monroe county children's home, as provided in section 1352-1 G. C., supra, does not operate to prohibit the auditor from issuing his warrants on vouchers issued by the trustees of the children's home against the appropriation made by the commissioners for the use of such home, to pay bills contracted since the expiration of the last certificate issued to such home by the board of state charities."

I agree with the reasoning in this opinion and would therefore advise you that the fact that the board of state charities has refused to endorse the children's home of your county will not in any way affect the right of the county commissioners to levy taxes for the future maintenance of this institution.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WHEN CLERKS, ETC., HAVE RECEIVED COMPENSATION IN ADDITION TO THAT ALLOWED BY COMMISSIONERS—NOT AUTHORIZED BY COMMON PLEAS COURT—COURT CANNOT AFTERWARD AUTHORIZE SUCH PAYMENT BY NUNC PRO TUNC ENTRY.

When a county auditor has issued his warrant to clerks, assistants or deputies of county officers, covering compensation to them in addition to the amount allowed by the county commissioners to such county officers for clerk hire, etc., without such additional allowance having been authorized by the common pleas court, as provided in section 2980-1 G. C., such court cannot afterward authorize the payment of such additional compensation by a nunc pro tunc entry.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of August 28, 1917, as follows:

"We desire to call your attention to an opinion of Hon. Timothy S. Hogan at page 200 of Vol. 1 of the Annual Reports of the Attorney General for 1913, as to findings to be made by the examiners of this bureau in instances of excess payments over and above the allowances made by the county commissioners for clerk hire in the offices of the officials mentioned in the county officers' salary law; also to an opinion of Hon. Edward C. Turner at page 703 of Vol. 1 of the Opinions of the Attorney General for 1915, which fully sustains Mr. Hogan's opinion in all particulars.

"The examiners of this bureau, in accordance with instructions conformable to the opinions referred to above, have been making findings for recovery of excess payments for clerk hire, but in many instances after findings have been so made, judges of courts of common pleas have caused so-called nunc pro tunc entries to be placed upon the journals of their courts for the purpose of nullifying the findings so made by the state examiners.

Query: Does such entry, if made in any year subsequent to the time when additional allowance should have been made by the court, as provided by section 2980-1 G. C., even though the order directs that said entry be entered as of a date within the year when said allowance should have been made, cure the defect?"

Section 2960 and 2980-1 G. C. read:

"Sec. 2980: On the twentieth of each November such officer shall prepare and file with the county commissioners a detailed statement of the probable amount necessary to be expended for deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks and other employes, except court constables, of their respective offices, showing in detail the requirements of their offices for the year beginning January 1st next thereafter with the sworn statement of amount expended by them for such assistants for the preceding year. Not later than five days after the filing of such statement, the county commissioners shall fix an aggregate sum to be expended for such period for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes of such officer, except court constables, which sum shall be reasonable and proper, and shall enter such finding upon their journal."

"Sec. 2980-1: The aggregate sum so fixed by the county commissioners to be expended in any year for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes, except court constables, shall not exceed for any county auditor's office, county treasurer's office, probate judge's office, county recorder's office, sheriff's office, or office of the clerk of the courts, an aggregate amount to be ascertained by computing thirty per cent on the first two thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, forty per cent on the next eight thousand dollars or fractional part thereof and eighty-five per cent on all over ten thousand dollars, of the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected for the use of the county in any such office for official services during the year ending September thirtieth next preceding the time of fixing such aggregate sum; provided, however, that if at any time any one of such officers require additional allowances in order to carry on the business of his office, said officer may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas of the county wherein such officer was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application and if, upon hearing the same said judge shall find that such necessity exists, he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salary of such deputy, deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes as may be required, and thereupon the board of county commissioners shall transfer from the general county fund, to such officers' fee fund, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay said salary or salaries.

"Notice in writing of such application and the time fixed by such judge for the hearing thereof shall be served by the applicant, five days before said hearing upon the board of county commissioners of such county. And said board shall file in said proceeding their approval or disapproval of the allowance asked for and shall have the right to appear at such hearing and be heard thereon; and evidence may be offered.

"When the term of an incumbent of any such office shall expire within the year for which such an aggregate sum is to be fixed, the county commissioners at the time of fixing the same shall designate the amount of such aggregate sum which may be expended by the incumbent and the amount of such aggregate sum which may be expended by his successor for the fractional parts of such year."

These statutes were considered by the court in In Re Application of Diemer, 17 O. N. P. (n. s.) 369; 25 O. Dec. N. P. 517: The court said at page 523:

'We think these sections when construed in the light of the entire act, and the purpose and intendment thereof, enjoin upon the county commissioners grave duties, powers and responsibilities, which they must exercise with care and deliberation to the end that the public funds be not dissipated, or the public service injured by any act of commission or omission of duty on their part.

"This construction is consistent with the intent and purposes of the salary act, and is necessary to give effect to the duty and power conferred upon the county commissioners to regulate and limit the expenditure of the public funds to the actual needs of the public service. It also harmonizes the duties and powers conferred by the enactment, and does no violence to the rights and privileges of the county officer prescribed by section 2981, to appoint and employ deputies, etc., and to fix their compensation.

"Such officer may appoint and employ deputies, etc., only when the county commissioners or the court, in a proper case for such purpose, have made an allowance therefor. The provisions of this section, that such officer may fix the compensation of such deputies, etc., means that which has been ordered and prescribed by the county commissioners, or the court.

"If we are correct in our interpretations of these statutes, then it follows that there can be no deficiency in the fund provided for compensating the deputy of the applicant.

"In any event, it is clear that there can be no deficiency in the fund allowed by the county commissioners and the former judge of this court for the month of July as claimed by the applicant, for the reason that the mandatory provisions of section 2981 require that the compensation of deputies appointed or employed by a county officer can be paid, to such deputy in equal monthly installments only upon the warrant of the county auditor.

"The county auditor is not authorized to issue a warrant for such compensation to deputies and clerks, except in conformity to the allowance made by the county commissioners or the court, if any, under the provisions of sections 2980, 2980-1 and 2981 G. C., and upon such deputy or clerk having first complied with the provisions of section 2988 G. C.

"The provisions of section 2981 G. C., that county officers may employ necessary deputies, etc., and fix their compensation, does not create a liability against the county if no allowance or compensation has been fixed by the county commissioners or the court under the provisions of the statutes. Halpin v. Cincinnati, 3 Dec. Re 58 (2 Gaz. 386); Lease, In re, 2 Circ. Dec. 386 (4 R. 3); Strawn v. Columbia Co. (Comrs.) 47 Ohio St 404, 408 (26 N. E. Rep. 635); Clark v. Lucas Co. (Comrs.) 58 Ohio St. 107 (50 N. E. Rep. 356); Butler Co. (Comrs.) v. Williver, 5 Circ. Dec. 569 (12 R. 440); Clerk v. Lucas Co. (Comrs.) 4 Dec. 318 (3 N. P. 112); Reeves v. Griffin, 4 Dec. 461 (29 Bull. 281).

"The broad discretionary and administrative or governing power conferred upon the county commissioners by the salary enactment, as we have shown, is not an arbitrary one. The county commissioners must act in reference to it with legal and not arbitrary discretion in the bestowal or refusal of the public funds to the various county officers for clerk or deputy hire. * * *

"As stated heretofore, the contention of the applicant in this proceeding is that this provision clothes the judge with ministerial and discretionary duties only, and in consequence such judge may allow or not allow the sum asked in this instance at his pleasure.

"With such conclusion this court is unable to agree. Without extending this opinion with a review and citation of the numerous authorities upon this point, it is sufficient to say that, in the opinion of this court, the duties enjoined by this statute upon the court or judge are not ministerial in any sense, but that such statute confers a clear and unequivocal judicial power which must be exercised in a judicial capacity. This being true, it follows that the facts of each case must warrant an allowance, or none can be ordered.

"What facts or circumstances then should be shown to justify the court or judge in making an additional allowance under this section of the act in question?

"We have already pointed out the intent and purpose of this enactment, as well as the rule of construction to be applied in construing the same, and we think that a proper interpretation of this provision constrains us to hold, and we do hold, that an additional allowance under it should be ordered only when a necessity for the good of the public service is reasonably and clearly shown to exist, and that the county commissioners are without authority to meet the exigency. And in such cases as it is so shown, that a necessity for the good of the public service exists, and that the county commissioners have acted unreasonably and abused the power conferred upon them in the premises. Neither of these contingencies is shown to exist in the proceeding at bar. It follows that the application must be denied."

The question you now ask is, whether the court of common pleas may make a nunc pro tunc entry, making the county officer an additional allowance to pay the salary of deputies, assistants, clerks or other employes. In other words, can a common pleas court make an order for such allowance and date it back so as to make it appear of record that said order was made by the court prior to the payment of such compensation to such assistants, when in fact no such order was made.

In 29 Cyc., p. 1516, it is said:

"An order can be entered nunc pro tunc to make a record of what was previously done by the court, although not then entered; but where the court has wholly omitted to make an order, which it might or ought to have made, it cannot afterward be entered nunc pro tunc."

In Torbet v. Coffin, 6 Ohio, p. 34, it was stated:

"After the close of the term, it is holden that the court can enter no order nunc pro tunc, unless one was actually made, and omitted to be entered. 1 Ohio 375; * * *"

In Printing Company v. Green, 52 O. S. 487, it was held:

"The province of a nunc pro tunc entry is to correct the record of the court in a cause so as to make it set forth an act of the court, which though actually done at a former term thereof, was not entered upon the journal; and it cannot lawfully be employed to amend the record so as to make it show that some act was done at a former term, which might or should have been, but was not, then performed."

It will be noted that section 2980-1 G. C. provides for a hearing on the application and that a notice in writing of such application and the time fixed for the hearing shall be served by the applicant five days before said hearing upon the board of county commissioners. The statute also provides that the board of county commissioners shall file in said proceeding their approval or disapproval of the allowance asked for and shall have the right to appear at such hearing and be heard thereon; and evidence may be offered.

The nunc pro tunc entries which you refer to would make it appear that all these things had been done as provided by statute, when in point of fact no one of them has been done.

In the light of the above authorities it is plain that a nunc pro tunc entry cannot be employed to perform such function. It is therefore my opinion, in direct answer to your question, that no such nunc pro tunc entry in the common pleas court affects in any way the findings referred to.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

THIRTY-THREE AND ONE-THIRD PER CENT ASSESSMENT LIMITATION—PROVIDED FOR IN SECTION 3819—IN DETERMINING SAME—VALUE OF LAND AND IMPROVEMENTS SHOULD BE CONSIDERED.

The actual value of a lot or parcel of land which is used in determining the assessment limitation of thirty-three and one-third per cent., as contained in section 3819 G. C., has reference to both the lot or parcel of ground proper and any improvement or buildings that are located thereon and considered, in legal contemplation, a part of the realty.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication in which you request my opinion upon the following matter:

Section 3819 G. C. provides:

"In no case shall there be levied upon any lot or parcel of land in the corporation any assessment or assessments for any or all purposes within a period of five years, to exceed thirty-three and one-third per cent of the actual value thereof, after improvement is made."

We also call your attention to court decision, 51 O. S. 390.

"Question: In ascertaining the limitation of thirty-three and one-third per cent, is the value of the lot only to be taken into consideration, or the value of the lot or any buildings thereon?"

Section 3819 G. C. reads, in part, as follows:

"The council shall limit all assessments to the special benefits conferred upon the property assessed, and in no case shall there be levied upon any lot or parcel of land in the corporation any assessment or assessments for any or all purposes, within a period of five years, to exceed thirty-three and one-third per cent of the actual value thereof after improvement is made. * * *"

The identical question that you submit for my opinion was presented to our Supreme Court for its consideration in the case of Findlay v. Frey, 51 O. S. 390, which is cited by you in your communication. The assessment limitation provision that was before our court of last resort in that case for interpretation was contained in section 2270 R. S., which read, in part, as follows:

"In municipal corporations other than cities of the first class, or in corporated villages in counties containing a city of the first grade of the first class, the tax or assessment specially levied and assessed on any lot or land for any improvement shall in no case, except as provided in section twenty-two hundred and seventy-two, amount to more than twenty-five per centum of the value of the property as assessed for taxation. * * *"

Paragraph 1 of the syllabus in Findlay v. Frey, supra, reads:

"Under section 2270, Revised Statutes, the value of the lot or land, with the improvements, as assessed for taxation, is to be taken in determining the limit to which it may be assessed for the improvement of a street on which it abuts, whether made by the foot front or otherwise."

And the opinion, at pages 400 and 401, the court says:

"The principal objection urged to the validity of the assessments made upon the property of the plaintiff below is, that in the aggregate, they exceed the amount that can lawfully be assessed upon her property in any period of five years. Section 2270, Revised Statutes, provides that the assessment shall in no case amount to more than twenty-five per centum of the value of the property as assessed for taxation; and section 2283 further provides that special assessments, whether by the front foot or otherwise, shall be so restricted, that the same territory shall not be assessed for making two different streets, within a period of five years in such amounts that the permitted maximum assessment will be exceeded thereby. Now, it is contended, from a construction, placed on the language of section 2264, Revised Statutes, taken in connection with the provisions of section 2790, fixing the duties of district appraisers of real estate, that the language, 'the value of the property assessed for taxation,' contained in section 2270, means the value of the land simply, without its improvements; because, by section 2264, the council, preparatory to ordering an improvement to be paid for by an assessment on the foot front or otherwise, is, by ordinance, required to set forth 'specifically the lots and lands to be assessed,' and that it appears from section 2790, that lots and lands are, for the purpose of taxation, appraised separately from the improvements upon them. We are unable to collect any such intention from the statutes referred to. The statutes upon the subject have been in force, substantially as they are now, for a great many years, and this is the first time the question has been raised or mooted. The practice has been uniformly the other way; and, as we think, in conformity to the real intention of the legislature. Ordinarily, in legal contemplation, where a lot or tract of land is mentioned or described, it includes, without more, all the improvements upon it, constituting part of the realty; so that the description of the lots and lands to be assessed, required by section 2264, includes the improvements thereon for the same purpose; and it is one-fourth the value of the lot or land as assessed for taxation, that is to furnish the limit to the assessment that can be mabe thereon under the provisions of section 2270. The provisions of section 1790 have, as we think, no reference to, or connection whatever with the subject of assessments; nor were the statutes regulating assessments made with any reference to this section. It requires the assessor to obtain a pertinent description of each tract and lot of real property in his district, and note on his plat book separately the value of dwelling houses, mills, etc., exceeding the value of a hundred dollars which shall be carried out as a part of the value of such tract; and this is its value as assessed for taxation, and on which taxes are in fact levied. The purpose of requiring the value of the improvements to be separately stated, was, in case of their destruction by fire or other agent, to furnish a basis for the taxation of the land, until the next decennial appraisement. It will not be claimed that a street improvement is of no value to the improvements on the abutting property; indeed, its chief value is to such improvements, increasing as it does, the owner's convenience in the enjoyment of his improvements."

In so far as the question that you submit is concerned, I do not understand that the language used in Section 3819 G. C. has any different meaning than that used in old Section 2270 R. S. It is true that under the present section the limitation is based upon actual value of the property, while under the former section the maximum assessment was based on the value of the property as assessed for taxation. This difference, however, is only one of kind of value and does not have any bearing on what makes up the property that is to be valued. Even if it should be considered that the change in language had some effect, it would strengthen the conclusion reached by the court in the above mentioned case rather than weaken it, since the elimination of the words "as assessed for taxation" destroys the main premise upon which the contention of the defendant in error was based.

I therefore advise you that it is my opinion that the actual value of a lot or parcel of land which is used in determining the assessment limitation of thirty-three and one-third per cent, as contained in Section 3819 G. C., has reference to both the lot or parcel of ground proper and any improvement or buildings that are located thereon and considered, in legal contemplation, a part of the realty.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—SECRETARY SINKING FUND TRUSTEES AND DEPUTY CITY AUDITOR.

When council has authorized the trustees of the sinking fund of a city to elect a secretary, the person who holds the position of deputy auditor in said city may not be elected secretary of the board of trustees of the sinking fund of said city, qualify as such and receive separate compensation therefor and at the same time continue to act as deputy auditor since it would be incompatible with the latter position to do so.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication in which you submit for my opinion the following request:

> "May a deputy city auditor act as secretary of the sinking fund trustees and receive compensation as secretary of the sinking fund trustees?"

Section 4276-1 G. C. provides:

> "The auditor of any city may, when authorized by council ordinance, appoint a deputy who, in the absence or disability of the auditor, shall perform the duties of the auditor."

A "deputy" is defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary as > "one authorized by an officer to exercise the office or right which the officer possesses, for and in place of the latter."

The foregoing section of the General Code authorizes and requires a deputy city auditor to perform the duties of the city auditor in the event of the absence or disability of the latter. In other words, under certain conditions the deputy acts for and in the place of the auditor. It is probable that the contingency upon the happening of which the occupant of the subordinate position exercises the functions of his superior will arise at various times and the possibility of its occurrence was the cause no doubt for the enactment of the above provision. The situation then, is that the deputy must hold himself in readiness at all times to act for and in the stead of the principal officer and must be qualified in the same way and to the same extent as the latter. Hence, if the person who fills the office of city auditor is disqualified by reason thereof from holding some other office or position, it would seem to follow clearly that the one who acts as his deputy would be likewise prohibited from doing so.

Such a premise having been established it becomes necessary to consider the right of a person holding the office of city auditor to act at the same time as secretary of the sinking fund trustees and draw compensation therefor.

Section 4509 G. C. provides.

> "The trustees of the sinking fund, immediately after their appointment and qualification, shall elect one of their number as president and another as vice-president, who, in the absence or disability of the president, shall perform his duties and exercise his powers, and such secretary, clerks or employes as council may provide by an ordinance which shall fix their duties, bonds and compensation. Where no clerks or secretary is authorized, the auditor of the city or clerk of the village shall act as secretary of the board."

In connection with section 4509, supra, one of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, had under consideration the question of the right of the occupant of the city auditor's office to fill the position of secretary of the sinking fund trustees and draw separate compensation therefor in an opinion rendered under date of March 16, 1912, to Hon. G. T. Thomas, City Solicitor, Troy, Ohio, found in the Annual Report of the Attorney General for the year 1912, Vol. II, page 1651. At page 1652 it was said:

"The legislature has provided that under certain conditions the same person may be city auditor and secretary to the trustees of the sinking fund, at the same time. In such case the legislature has determined that the positions are not incompatible.

"The case of Commonwealth vs. Tate, 3 Leigh's Rep. 802, (30 Va.) is an authority that incompatibility at common law may be removed by legislative enactment.

"The syllabus reads:

" 'The office of deputy sheriff is incompatible with the office of justice of the peace, though by the statute law of Virginia the office of high sheriff is not so, and the acceptance of the office of deputy sheriff vacates the office of justice.'

"The opinion was rendered by a divided court, ten favoring and eight against the opinion rendered. All agreed, however, that the incompatibility existing at common law as to the positions of justice of the peace and high sheriff had been removed by the legislative act. The difference in opinion arose as to whether the removal of incompatibility between the high sheriff and justice of the peace, extended by implication to the deputy sheriff. The majority of the court held that it did not.

"The trustees of the sinking fund serve without compensation, and the detail work is performed by its secretary or clerk.

"Section 4284, General Code, prescribes certain duties for the city auditor as follows:

" 'At the end of each fiscal year, or oftener if required by council, the auditor shall examine and audit the accounts of all officers and departments. He shall prescribe the form of accounts and reports to be rendered to his department, and the form and method of keeping accounts by all other departments, and, subject to the powers and duties of the state bureau of inspection and supervision of public office, shall have the inspection and revision thereof. Upon the death, resignation, removal or expiration of the term of any officer, the auditor shall audit the accounts of such officer, and if such officer be found indebted to the city, he shall immediately give notice thereof to council and to the solicitor, and the latter shall proceed forthwith to collect the indebtedness.'

"By virtue of this section the city auditor is required to audit the accounts of the trustees of the sinking fund and of their clerk or secretary.

"The rule of incompatibility of office is laid down in the case of State ex rel. v. Gebert, 12 Cir. Ct. N. S. 273, by Dustin J., when he says on page 275 of the opinion:

"'Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both.'

"The city auditor is required to audit the accounts of the secretary of the sinking fund commission. He therefore acts as a check upon that position. The two positions, unless the statutes otherwise provide, are incompatible.

'The statute does not authorize the trustees to appoint the city auditor as their clerk or secretary. The statute authorizes the city auditor to act as such secretary only when council has not authorized a clerk or secretary for the sinking fund commission. The authority to act as such secretary should be limited to the conditions prescribed in the statute and should not be extended to permit the city auditor to be appointed as such secretary or clerk where council had authorized a clerk or secretary."

My immediate predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, reached a similar conclusion in an opinion rendered to your Bureau under date of March 23, 1916, found in the Opinions of the Attorney General for the year 1916, Vol. I, page 509.

I concur in the reasons contained in the above quotation and in the conclusions reached in said opinions.

In view of all the foregoing I advise you it is my opinion that when council has authorized the trustees of the sinking fund of a city to elect a secretary the person who holds the position of deputy auditor in said city may not be elected secretary of the board of trustees of the sinking fund of said city, qualify as such and receive separate compensation therefor and at the same time continue to act as deputy auditor since it would be incompatible with the latter position to do so.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMISSIONERS—MAY HIRE SURVEYOR'S AUTOMOBILE FOR HIS OWN USE ON OFFICIAL BUSINESS.

This opinion only passes upon the power of County Commissioners to hire surveyor's machine for his own use upon official business.

County commissioners may enter into a contract to hire a machine owned by the county surveyor, for the use of said surveyor and his assistants in the performance of their official duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1917.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottowa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of September 6, 1917, wherein you request my opinion on the following statement of facts:

"* * * The question is, (referring to section 7200 G. C., 107 O. L. 115) whether or not the county commissioners may hire a machine owned by the county surveyor, for the use of said surveyor and his assistants, making an agreement with him at so much per mile, the county surveyor to furnish said machine and pay all expenses of running and upkeep of the same while used by the said county surveyor and his assistants in the performance of his duties for the county.

"If such an arrangement cannot be made with the county surveyor to pay him for the use of his own machine for the services above referred to at a fixed price per mile, may the commissioners make any contract with him for the use of his automobile whereby he may be paid for the expense of running and upkeep of the machine while in such service? * * *"

You call my attention to Opinion No. 1161, rendered by my predecessor Hon. Edward C. Turner on January 11, 1916, found in Vol. I of the Opinions of the Attorney General for 1916, p. 11. Mr. Turner then had before him practically the same question you submit in your inquiry—that is, whether or not a highway superintendent could be compensated for the use of his automobile in the performance of his official duties. At the time this opinion was rendered, there was no express authority under the statutes, giving the county commissioners, the right to purchase or hire an automobile or other conveyance for the use of a highway superintendent. This opinion was based on section 7181 G. C., which at that time provided in part as follows:

"Sec. 7181. * * * Such compensation shall be paid out of the county treasury in the same manner as the salary of county officials is paid. In addition thereto, the county highway superintendent and his assistants, when on official business, shall be paid out of the county treasury, their actual necessary traveling expenses, including livery, board and lodging. * * *"

Under the above quoted section the county commissioners had absolutely nothing to do with the making of the contract for the conveyance of said highway superintendent when engaged on his official business, but it was necessary for the superintendent to make such contract himself.

Mr. Turner, in the opinion above referred to, held as follows (p. 12):

"In other words, while the county commissioners or county highway superintendent may not, under the law, purchase an automobile for the use of the county highway superintendent, and pay for the same from public funds, and while the county highway superintendent, being charged with the duty of providing himself with transportation when engaged on official business, may not deal with himself and include in his expense accounts compensation for the use of his own automobile, yet if the county highway superintendent is the owner of an automobile and uses the same in traveling about the county on official business, he may include in his expense accounts and the county commissioners may allow to him the actual and necessary expenses incident to the maintenance and operation of the automobile during the time the same is used in the public business of the county."

The opinion was based on the ground that the principles of public policy prohibit a public official, charged with the duty of making an expenditure on behalf of the public, from dealing with himself.

You will note, therefore, that although practically the same question was put to Mr. Turner in the above opinion, as you raise by your inquiry, there is a distinction between the two cases, arising from the fact that section 7200 G. C. has been amended (107 O. L. 115) since the above opinion was rendered, giving the commissioners authority to hire or purchase automobiles or other conveyances for the use of the county surveyor; whereas, in the former case it was necessary for the highway superintendent himself to make the contract for conveyance. Said section 7200 reads in part as follows:

> "Sec. 7200. * * * The county commissioners may also at their discretion purchase, hire or lease automobiles, motorcycles or other conveyances and maintain the same for the use of the county surveyor and his assistants when on official business. * * *"

This same distinction applies to the question decided by Mr. Turner in Opinion No. 618 under date of July 17, 1915, and found in Vol. II, Opinions of the Attorney General for 1915, p. 1260, which is referred to in your communication.

Mr. Turner simply had before him, in the two opinions above noted, the question of whether or not a public official could enter into a contract, for the expenditure of public funds, with himself; whereas, the question to be decided here is whether or not the commissioners may enter into a contract with the county surveyor for the hire of his machine for his own use upon official business.

There is no statutory prohibition against the county commissioners entering into such a contract with the county surveyor. Therefore, the only ground upon which such a contract would be prohibited would be the one that such contract was against public policy. On this question, my predecessor, Mr. Turner, having before him the question of whether or not a person, employed as janitor at the court house by the commissioner, could be paid for auto livery conveying the sheriff or surveyor in the discharge of their respective official duties, and also the question of whether or not a person regularly employed as deputy sealer of weights and measures could be paid for like service, held, after deciding that there was no statutory prohibition against such contracts, in Opinion No. 625, found in Vol. II, Opinions of the Attorney General for 1915, p. 1276, as follows, said opinion bearing date July 20, 1915:

> "The general assembly of the state has recognized the danger involved in transactions of this same general character by the enactment of sections 12910 to 12914, inclusive, of the General Code, but has not seen fit to include this particular kind of a transaction. This danger was also recognized in an opinion by this department under date of June 13, 1914, being opinion No. 978, in which it was held solely on the grounds of public policy that the sheriff could not pay his deputy livery hire for the use of an automobile owned by the deputy. However, the close relationship which exists between a sheriff and his deputy does not exist between a sheriff or county surveyor and a janitor or a deputy sealer of weights and measures.
> "I am, therefore, of the opinion that, while such an arrangement as you describe should not be encouraged, it is not illegal or prohibited either by statute or on the grounds of public policy, provided of course that the rendition of such service by the janitor or deputy sealer of weights and measures does not interfere with the regular duties of such persons."

In another opinion rendered by Mr. Turner on November 17, 1916, No. 2049, found in Vol. 2, Opinions of Attorney General for 1916, p. 1800, he held as follows:

> "I see no legal objection to the commissioners entering into a contract with the superintendent for the use of his automobile for the infirmary. It is recited in the resolution that the commissioners have been feeding a horse which they did not own in consideration of its use for the infirmary, and I can see no objection to this as a method of providing proper and necessary conveyance for the infirmary. I know of no statute, rule or policy of law which operates as an inhibition against the county commissioners hiring a horse or automobile or other conveyance from the superintendent of the county infirmary at a fair and reasonable price therefor. There is no relationship between them that would prevent them from dealing with each other at arm's length.

"A contract for the use of an automobile for the county infirmary is not a contract for the purchase of property, or supplies for the use of the county within the meaning of sections 12910 and 12911 G. C., which make it a criminal offense for any person holding an office of trust or profit or as agent, servant and employe of such office or board of such officers to be interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, etc."

I agree with the above opinion of my predecessor and see no reason why the county commissioners could not enter into a contract with the county surveyor, under authority of section 7200 supra, for the use of the surveyor's automobile in the discharge of his official duties.

There can be no objection to this arrangement on the ground that it is against public policy, as there is no more connection between the county commissioners and the county surveyor than there is between the commissioners and any other party with whom they might contract for the use of an automobile, and there is no reason why a contract between the commissioners and the county surveyor should not be as beneficial to the county as any other contract the commissioners might make.

Therefore, I advise you, in answer to your first question, that the county commissioners may enter into a contract for the hire of a machine owned by the county surveyor for the use of said surveyor and his assistants in the performance of their official duties.

It will be unnecessary to answer your second question, because of the answer I have made to your first question.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT PLANS, ETC.—CANNOT BE CHANGED AFTER CONTRACT LET—DIFFICULTY IN OBTAINING MATERIALS WILL NOT RELEASE CONTRACTOR FROM THE PERFORMANCE OF HIS CONTRACT.

1. There is no provision of law whereby the plans, specifications and estimates may be changed after the advertising for bids and the letting of the contract to the successful bidder.

2. In order that a contractor might be released from the performance of his contract, due to the fact that he can not secure the material necessary for the same, it requires more than a mere difficulty in getting the material or the mere fact that the material is much higher in price when the work is being done than it was when the contract was entered into.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 19, 1917.

HON. HENRY W. CHERRINGTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: I have your communication of September 3, 1917, which reads as follows:

"During the summer of 1916, W. H. Martt was awarded a contract for the construction of a section of inter-county highway No. 7, in Gallia County, by the state highway commissioner. Mr. Martt was permitted to begin work and proceeded far enough, before bad weather, so that when the work had to be abandoned on account of the said weather conditions, it was absolutely impassable. The road shut off from Gallipolis, the only available market, a very considerable number of people throughout the entire winter. When spring came, it was thought that the road would be rushed to completion, but now winter is impending again, and this section of road, only a mile, is still in a condition which will make is impassable when the fall rains set in. The contract calls for slag. This is a statement of fact. The state highway department is now constructing a section of state road in another part of the county and cannot get slag to complete the work. Mr. Martt's contract on number seven has been rendered literally impossible of performance. I use this term advisedly and after a comprehensive investigation of the facts.

"The contract calls for slag, and there is no slag obtainable. The commissioners of this county desire that the specifications be altered so that the contract may be completed by the use of water bound gravel which makes a great deal better road than slag. Gravel is available. The contractor is willing and anxious to complete his contract with gravel. It has been said that the contract can not be completed with gravel because the specifications call for slag. It is evident that no slag can be had to complete the work this year, and it is altogether possible that next year conditions will be the same. It is entirely possible that slag can never be procured, and if it be true that the specifications can not be changed now, they can never be changed, and the result will be that the road will never be built. When a contract has been rendered impossible of performance by conditions over which the contractor has no control, there ought to be some way out of it for the highway department and for the long suffering public, who pay the bills and get no results. I am well aware that the state highway department can complete the contract by force account, or by contract for the unfinished work. But they can not complete the contract with slag. Isn't there some reasonable solution?"

In reference to modifying the plans and specifications as they were adopted in the matter of this improvement, I do not desire to enter into a lengthy discussion. In an opinion rendered by me to Hon. Clinton Cowen, State Highway Commissioner, under date of June 16, 1917 (No. 369), I went into this matter very fully and am of the opinion that the law set out in said opinion would apply to the facts stated by yourself. I am therefore enclosing herewith copy of said opinion to Mr. Cowen.

There is no provision of law whereby the plans and specifications may be changed after the contract is let at competitive bidding, due to the fact that competitive bidding is one of the essential requisites of letting of contracts for the improvement of highways.

So that if Mr. Martt could be relieved from the contract which he has entered into for the improvement of said highway, the only steps that could be taken in the further improvement of the highway would be to begin over again and let the contract under advertisement and based upon new plans, specifications, estimates, etc.

However, we come to the question as to whether the facts would warrant the release of Mr. Martt from the fulfillment of the contract which he has entered into. The law is generally laid down by the courts that where a contract is entered into to furnish a certain article or to do a work in which a certain article is to be used, and before the article is furnished or the work is completed the article in question is destroyed and thus can not be secured, the one agreeing to furnish the article or to use the same in the fulfillment of the contract may be released from the contract, providing it was due to no fault or act of his that the securing of the article was rendered impossible.

For instance, in Ward v. Vance 93 Pa. 499, A agreed with B, the owner of a hotel, to furnish the same with water by and through the same pipes then used for said purposes. B afterwards leased the hotel to C and covenanted that the hotel should be supplied with spring water in the same manner as them supplied under the agreement with A. B was to keep certain pipes in repair and C others, and B was to see that covenants made by A should be kept.

In a suit by C against B for breach of covenant, the lower court instructed the jury that B was bound to supply water, whether the spring from which it was drawn kept up or not. Held, That this was error; that although the water of the spring had always been the source of supply of the hotel, yet if it failed from drought or other natural cause, it was no breach of any covenant, express or implied, to fail to furnish the supply.

In Powell v. Railway Co., 12 Ore. 488, the court held in the syllabus as follows:

"In every contract for the conveyance of property there is an implied condition that the subject matter of the contract shall be in existence when the time for the performance arrives. If it has then ceased to exist, each party is discharged from the contract."

Many cases could be cited along the same line. But in looking into the matter of the contract about which you write, I find that the facts do not come within the principles of law set out by our courts. For instance, in the plans and specifications under which the contract of Mr. Martt was entered into, there is a provision under the item which provides for a top course of water-bound macadam, as follows:

> "A course of number one (1) stone or slag (unless otherwise specified) shall be spread on the foundation or bottom course prepared as elsewhere described, to such thickness as will produce the complete depth indicated on the plans."

We find under this provision of the plans, specifications, etc., an alternative proposition; that is, the contractor can use either limestone or slag. Even though it would be held that it is impossible to secure slag, yet the contractor would be warranted in using limestone instead of slag, and from the facts which I have gleaned by inquiry, I find that it is not an exceedingly difficult proposition to get limestone, although it costs a little more than slag.

Upon a careful investigation through the state highway department, I also find that it is possible to get slag and that they are getting slag, but it is difficult to do so owing to the conditions existing on account of the war. But the mere fact that it is hard to get slag, or that it costs more now than it did when the contract was let, is not sufficient. In order that the state highway department might be justified in releasing Mr. Martt from his contract, it would have to be impossible to get either slag or limestone anywhere at any price within reason.

I felt that I had better call your attention to the provision found in the contract, to the effect that either limestone or slag might be used, in order that you might be able to govern yourself intelligently in reference to the matter. To be sure, if Mr. Martt uses limestone, he will have to use stone that is up to the standard required by the state highway department under the contract entered into with him by the department.

Hence, answering your question specifically, I am of the opinion that there is nothing connected with the contract of Mr. Martt that would warrant the state highway department in releasing him from the further performance of his contract.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE BY BOARD OF EDUCATION OF EDEN TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, WYANDOT COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1917.

Indutrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:

"RE:—Bonds of the Board of Education of Eden Township Rural School District, Wyandot County, Ohio----------$35,000.00."

In accordance with your request I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the Board of Education of Eden Township Rural School District, Wyandot County, Ohio, concerning the issuance of the bonds of said district in the amount of $35,000.00 for the purpose of making certain improvements in the schools in said district.

I find certain irregularities in the proceedings of the board, such as informality in the method of calling the meetings, which, however, in my opinion, do not affect the validity of the bonds inasmuch as all the essential proceedings relative to the issue thereof were had at the meetings at which all the members of the board were present, as shown by the transcript.

The journal of the board has not been properly kept, in that the proceedings relative to the passage of the resolution providing for the issuance of the bonds are on a separate page of said journal and not included in the proceedings of any recorded meeting. There is attached, however, a letter from the Clerk of the Board certifying that the resolution was passed on July 16, 1917. This letter shows that certain changes in the resolution as originally passed may have been made. If so, the regular way in which the Board should have acted would have been to amend the resolution, taking the ayes and nays thereon.

The record, as explained, seems to be fair on its face, and I am of the opinion that whatever may lie behind it is a mere irregularity.

All the other proceedings of the Board being in proper form, I am of the opinion and hereby certify that the proceedings for the issuance of the above described bonds were in accordance with the provisions of law, and that they constitute good and valid legal obligations against Eden Township Rural School District, to be paid in accordance with the terms specified in said resolution.

It will be observed that I have not passed on the form of the bonds, and I am retaining the transcript so that I may compare the bonds when submitted to me with the resolution providing for their issuance. I have done this because, as I understand it, the bonds are not yet printed, and because the Board of Education is anxious to let the contract at the earliest possible date. This the Board may do, although the bonds are not printed by virtue of the provisions of Section 5660 General Code. When the bonds are submitted to me I will supplement this opinion with a certificate in reference to the bonds themselves and will then re-return the transcript.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN ALLEN, ASHLAND, CLERMONT, HURON AND MAHONING COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 17, 1917, in which you enclose certain final resolutions for my approval, as follows:

"Allen County—Sec. 'D,' Lima-Sandusky road, I. C. H. No. 22.

"Ashland County—Sec. 'A' of the Ashland-Wooster road, I. C. H. No. 141.

"Ashland County—Sec. 'A' of the Columbus-Wooster road, I. C. H. No. 24.

"Clermont County—Sec. 'C' of the Milford-Hillsboro road, I. C. H. No. 9.

"Huron County—Sec. 'L' of the Bellevue-Norwalk road, I. C. H. No. 289.

"Mahoning County—Sec. 'P' of the Akron-Youngstown road, I. C. H. No. 18."

I have carefully examined these resolutions, entered into by the county commissioners of the various counties, and find them correct in form and legal in all respects and am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

I should like, however, to call your attention to a matter connected with the final resolution for the improvement in Huron County. The county commissioners agreed to assume $29,700.00 of the total estimated cost of this improvement, leaving $15,000.00 for the state to assume. Your department appropriated and set aside only $11,314.18, being a sum less than that assumed by the state. While this is not a matter upon which I am required to pass under section 1218 G. C., I am calling your attention to it in order that you may make the necessary correction on your records.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN HURON AND KNOX COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of September 19, 1917, in which you enclose, for my approval, final resolutions as follows:

"Huron County—Sec. 'A' of the Savannah-Vermilion road, I. C. H. No. 149.

"Knox County—Sec. 'K' of the Columbus-Wooster road, I. C. H. No. 24."

I have carefully examined said final resolutions, find the same correct in form and legal, and am therefore returning them to you with my approval endorsed thereon, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE BY THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF GREENVILLE CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:

"IN RE: Bonds of the Board of Education of Greenville City School District, in the sum of $9,000.00, for the purpose of furnishing, repairing and equipping East School Building in said city.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the Board of Education and other officers of Greenville City School District relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers of said school district, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—TRANSCRIPT OF PROCEEDINGS FOR BOND ISSUE BY CITY COUNCIL OF CITY OF MARIETTA.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:

"IN RE: Bond of the City of Marietta, Ohio, in the sum of $45,000.00, for the purpose of extending the time of payment of certain indebtedness which from its limits of taxation the said city is unable to pay at maturity."

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the city council and other officers of the City of Marietta relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers of the City of Marietta, constitute valid and binding obligations of said city.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

INTERURBAN RAILROAD COMPANY—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—CAN NOT BE AMENDED TO AUTHORIZE OPERATION OF COMMERCIAL RAILROAD—MOTIVE POWER.

The articles of incorporation of an interurban railroad company may not by amendment be so changed as to authorize the construction and operation of a commercial railroad; but the use of steam as a motive power of an interurban railroad company may be authorized.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of September 10th, requesting my opinion upon a question submitted to you by Mr. H. H. Hostetler, Attorney at Law, Dover, Ohio. Mr. Hostetler inquires in his letter whether it is competent for a corporation organized for the purpose of constructing and operating an interurban railroad by amendment to its articles of incorporation to acquire the power to construct and operate a railroad.

The section relating to amendment to articles of incorporation forbids the making of such amendments as shall "substantially change" the purpose of the original organization. The question of law therefore becomes an inquiry as to whether or not the proposed amendment to the articles of incorporation of an interurban railroad company would substantially change the purpose of the original organization of such company.

Our courts have frequently held that there are substantial differences between "railroad companies" and "interurban railroad companies." The distinction does not lie in the motive power to be employed, as is perhaps popularly supposed; for a company organized under the general railroad laws may use electricity as a motive power in the propulsion of its cars (Section 8758, General Code), and is not limited by any statute to the precise motive power which it shall use, whether steam, gas, or for that matter even muscular power.

On the other hand, the statutes relative to street and interurban railroad companies authorize the use by such companies not merely of electricity, (which is, to be sure, expressly mentioned), but also of any other power than animal power upon the highways in the state outside of municipalities (Section 9117, General Code); whereas if the right of eminent domain is to be exercised steam power may not be used (Section 9119, General Code). No statute, however, restricts the motive power which may be used by an interurban railroad operating on rights of way privately owned and acquired without the exercise of eminent domain.

The distinction, nevertheless, exists, but the line may be drawn at one place for a given purpose and at another for another purpose. Thus, because a company originally organized as a railroad company has a right to use electricity as motive power, and is not prohibited from withdrawing from commercial service in the absence of objection by the inhabitants of the territory served thereby and entering upon an interurban service by the use of such electric motive power and cars adapted thereto, it follows and has been held that a commercial railroad, originally organized as such, may reform its service and by the manner of conducting its operation become, for excise tax purposes, an interurban railroad. (Railroad Co. v. Poland, 10 N. P., n. s. 617.)

It has also been held that a railroad, without changing its entire character as such, may enter the interurban field without violating its corporate franchise and, having entered, be compelled to perform the service required in such field so long as the public necessity served thereby may require the continuation of such service. (Hocking Valley Railway Company v. Public Utilities Commission, 92 O. S. 9.)

But to hold, as in the one case, that the character of a road has become changed for taxation purposes by the making of lawful changes in the manner of conducting its business is not equivalent to holding that such a change will convert the company into an interurban railroad company for all purposes. For example, a company organized as an interurban railroad company may construct its road along the public highways, proper consents being granted, and in and of itself such construction and operation do not constitute an additional burden upon such highways. (Railway Co. v. Cumminsville, 14 O. S. 523); though the manner of construction and operation may be such as to interfere with the easements of an owner of abutting lands and, if so, an additional burden is imposed thereon. (Schaaf v. Railway, 66 O. S. 215.)

In the case of steam railroads, however, there is no authority at all for their construction along or upon a public road or highway.

This difference between the two classes of companies is merely illustrative. Suffice it to say that while the two classes of companies have much in common, and perhaps many of the statutes relating to one by construction would be held to extend to the other, their powers are distinct and they do form two separate classes of corporations. I know of no authority for consolidating a railroad company and an interurban railroad company.

Moreover, while it is true that a railroad company may convert itself substantially into an interurban railroad company, I do not think that this process of conversion can operate in the other direction. Broadly speaking, it is, I think, obvious that the franchise to be a steam railroad is, so to speak, a more extensive grant of power than the franchise to be an interurban railroad. To demonstrate this to a certainty would require the citation of too many statutes to make it profitable. However, it is broadly true that when a railroad company changes its method of operation so as to afford interurban service it is, as it were, exercising less power than that which was granted to it.

Putting it in still another way, the power to operate a steam railroad includes the power to operate what, for some purposes at least, is an interurban railroad; though the power to construct a steam railroad does not include the power to construct an interurban railroad, because that would imply the right to construct the line of road along the public highway.

On the other hand, the power to construct and operate an interurban railroad does not include the power to construct and operate a commercial railroad. On the whole, though conscious of the inadequacy of my statement of the reasons which lead me to such conclusion, I am of the opinion that a change in the articles of incorporation of an interurban railroad company authorizing the construction and operation of a steam railroad or a commercial railroad would be a substantial one. Such amendment may, therefore, not lawfully be made.

It occurs to me that Mr. Hostetler may wish to know whether or not the company may amend its articles of incorporation so as to authorize the use of steam as a motive power in the operation of an interurban service. Of course, under section 9117 this may be done; but the operations thereunder must be interurban in character, and if steam is used therefor the right of eminent domain must, by virtue of section 9119 G. C., be forfeited, as to such part of the road as is to be so operated.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOL BUILDING—REPAIRS ORDERED BY STATE PLUMBING INSPECTOR—FUNDS MAY BE RAISED UNDER SECTION 7629 G. C.

Where the state inspector of plumbing makes an order that certain repairs shall be made in a school building, and there is no money in the hands of the board with which to make said repairs, funds may be raised under and by the provisions of section 7629 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1917.

The State Department of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of recent date you submit for my opinion the following:

> "In December, 1916, the attention of the State Inspector of Plumbing were directed to the unsanitary condition of the Cadiz Central School Building at Cadiz, Ohio. An inspection of the building was made and under date of December 22, 1916, the following order was sent by the State Inspector of Plumbing to the Board of Education of the village of Cadiz.
> "Under date of December 4, 1916, our Mr. E. J. Wellman, Deputy

State Inspector of Plumbing, made an inspection of the school building at Cadiz, Ohio, and reports that the plumbing and drainage is unsanitary and defective and installed under conditions favorable to the origin and development of disease. Therefore, in conformity with sections 1261-3 and 1261-13, General Code of Ohio, you are hereby notified that this system of plumbing and drainage is condemned and that the present intolerable condition be immediately remedied as follows:

"'That the 8-inch hard tile house drain be taken up and re-laid with pipe of the proper size in perfect alignment and with proper grade to insure a scouring action and avoid stoppage; this pipe to be tested and inspected before it is concealed or enclosed and have the necessary clean outs installed in the change of direction at the base of soil pipe stacks and at the foundation wall;

"'That all floor drains be provided with traps and back pressure valves;

"'That all fixtures be properly trapped and the trap seals protected from siphonage or back pressure by a vent or back vent pipe;

"'That the latrine closets and urinals be removed and replaced with closets and urinals of approved design and sufficient in number, i. e., at the ratio of one closet to every 15 females, one closet to every 25 males and one urinal to every 15 males;

"'That one sink and drinking fountain be installed in each main toilet room;

"'That the two 4-inch soil stacks serving two closets and three lavatories be tested by smoke or air and all defects repaired or replaced;

"'That the toilet room adjoining the rest room and office respectively be ventilated with openings cut in partitions leading to outside windows;

"That a slop sink and drinking fountains be installed in hall on first and second floors;

"'That the disposal of sewage be made according to advice and supervision of the division of sanitary engineering of the State Board of Health;

"'That all conditions and changes herein recommended be installed in accordance with Part 4, Sanitation, Ohio State Building Code, Sections 12600-137 to 12600-273, tested and approved by a representative of this department before it is concealed or enclosed and a certificate of approval issued before any part of the same is put in use.'

"This order to be complied with and made returnable not later than August 1, 1917.

"You will note that the order directs that the improvements and changes shall be made not later than August 1, 1917. A recent investigation shows that nothing has been done by the Board of Education to comply with the orders of State Inspector of Plumbing and the reason is given that the Board of Education is without funds to make the improvements and that when the question of a bond issue for the improvement was submitted to a vote of the electors, the bond issue failed to carry.

"I shall be glad to have your opinion as to whether the Board of Education under the authority of section 7629 G. C. and subject to the limitations contained in section 7630 G. C. can sell bonds to make an improvement found necessary and ordered by the State Inspector of Plumbing."

It is provided by General Code section 1261-2, as amended in 107 O. L. 608, that it shall be the duty of the State Board of Health, within ninety days after the passage and approval of the act of which said section is a part, to appoint an elector of this state to fill the offiice of State Inspector of Plumbing.

Senate Bill No. 101, passed by the eighty-second general assembly, March 21, 1917, in which bill was created the state department of health, provided that the state department of health "shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties now conferred and imposed by law upon the state board of health."

Section 1261-3 G. C., as amended, 107 O. L. 609, provides:

> "It shall be the duty of said inspector of plumbing, as often as instructed by the state board of health, to inspect any and all public or private institutions, sanitariums, hospitals, schools, prisons, factories, workshops or places where men, women or children are or might be employed, and to condemn any and all unsanitary or defective plumbing that may be found in connection therewith, and to order such changes in the method of construction of the drainage and ventilation, as well as the arrangement of the plumbing appliances, as may be necessary to insure the safety of the public health.
> "Such inspector shall not exercise any authority in municipalities or other political subdivisions wherein ordinances or resolutions have been adopted and are being enforced by the proper authorities regulating plumbing or prescribing the character thereof."

So that it must be considered that the provisions of the act which provided that the state board of health should appoint the state plumbing inspector now apply to the state department of health as much as if section 1261-2 should say the state department of health instead of saying, as it does, the state board of health, and the state plumbing inspector, who is provided for in the section as being appointed by the state board of health, shall perform his duties as though he had been appointed by the state department of health.

General Code section 7620 provides that the board of education of a school district may repair the necessary school houses and make all other necessary provisions for schools under its control and may make all necessary provisions for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistricts, and such board of education may issue and sell bonds, the proceeds of which may be used in the improvement of public school property, as provided by section 7629, which reads as follows:

> "The board of education of any school district may issue bonds to obtain or improve public school property, and in anticipation of income from taxes, for such purposes, levied or to be levied, from time to time as occasion requires, may issue and sell bonds, under the restrictions and bearing a rate of interest specified in sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven. The board shall pay such bonds and the interest thereon when due, but provide that no greater amount of bonds be issued in any year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills, for the year next preceding such issue. The order to issue bonds shall be made only at a regular meeting of the board and by a vote of two-thirds of its full membership, taken by yeas and nays and entered upon its journal."

When the use of school property has been prohibited on account of the defective condition of the building by orders of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and funds were needed with which to pay for such improvements or repairs, covering said orders, it has been held that section 7629 G. C. provided authority for the raising of sufficient funds for said purposes.

I call your attention to Opinion No. A-407, Annual Report of the Attorney General for 1911-1912, Vol. 2, p. 1384, wherein it is held:

> "When it becomes necessary for a board of education to improve school buildings by reason of an order from the inspector of workshops and factories and such improvements cannot be made within the ordinary limitations of the Smith tax law, and when furthermore the electors have repeatedly refused to authorize bonds issues under sections 7625 and 7628 General Code, the board of education may have recourse to section 7629 * * * G. C."

Also in Opinion No. 395, Annual Report of the Attorney General for 1913, Vol. 2, p. 1317, it was held:

> "In order to obtain or improve school property, a board of education may issue and sell bonds. No greater amount of bonds can be issued in one year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills for the year next preceding such issue."

I agree with the above opinions and hold that if the chief inspector of workshops and factories prohibits by any order the use of a school house for its intended purpose, and if funds are needed to pay for the improvements or repairs ordered by such chief inspector of workshops and factories, such funds may be raised under the provisions of said section 7629 G. C.

In this case, instead of the chief inspector of workshops and factories making an order which prohibits the use of the school buildings, the order here under consideration is made by the state inspector of plumbing, and your question is, has the board of education the authority to act under section 7629 when the order is made by the state inspector of plumbing? Neither the order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, nor the order of the state plumbing inspector, have any controlling effect as far as section 7629 G. C. is concerned, except, perhaps, that such order calls to the attention of the board of education what improvements or repairs are necessary in order that the school building may be made to conform to the provisions of the state building code and to the provisions of the state plumbing code. All that is necessary for the board of education to find is that public school property shall be improved and whether the improvement is determined by the board to be necessary from an order of the state plumbing inspector, or from an order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, or from both, or neither, can make no difference because the board may act whenever such conditions arise which make the improvement necessary and no matter what causes said conditions to arise.

You refer to section 7630 G. C., but it was held in Rabe v. Board of Education, 88 O. S. 429, that:

> "The provisions of sections 5649-2 et seq. in reference to the rate that may be levied in any taxing district, are so clearly in conflict with the provisions with sections 7591 and 7592, General Code, that these sections are necessarily repealed by implication. That being true, section 7630, General Code, must fall with them, for that section provides only for the application of the limitation in these repealed sections to the issue of bonds under section 7629, General Code. It is suggested in the brief of counsel for defendant in error that section 7630, General Code, is not necessarily repealed, but that, on the contrary, the provisions of this later legislation, limiting the rate of taxes that may be levied in any taxing district, should be read into this section, instead of the specific sections named, to-wit, sections No. 7591 and 7592, General Code. In answer to this it is only necessary to suggest that a law cannot be amended in this way. If sections 7591 and 7592, General Code, are no longer the law of Ohio, it necessarily follows that section 7630, General Code, furnishes no rule for determining the rate of taxes levied or to be levied which may be anticipated by an issue of bonds under the provisions of section 7629, General Code."

Answering then your question specifically, I advise you that a board of education may improve school property as ordered by the state plumbing inspector and may raise funds for such improvement under the provisions of section 7629 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CHILD LABOR—BOY UNDER FIFTEEN YEARS PROHIBITED FROM WORKING IN CERTAIN ESTABLISHMENTS.

Under section 12993 G. C., a boy under fifteen years of age is prohibited from working in establishments or vocations therein named.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1917.

HON. CHARLES L. BERMONT, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of communication from Patrick Purcell, Chief Probation Officer of your county, and yourself, in reference to boys under fifteen years of age doing light work during school vacations and evenings, and, as stated in your letter, "employed in such a way as not to interfere with their school attendance, and in such light employment as would not be objectionable from a physical or moral standpoint." Instances are cited where the poverty of the family seems to render necessary the help from boys under the legal age, and observations are made on the dangers of such boys growing up in idleness, and it is argued that proper light employment should be encouraged, and further urged that a common sense construction of the statute would be wiser than drawing lines too close.

There is much in the communication that is commendable and with which, as general propositions, I would have no hesitancy in agreeing; but, as you well know, the province of this departmnt is the interpretation and construing of statutes as we find them. The arguments adanced in the communication might be very appropriate in an appeal to the legislature, but a court or other person construing the statute before it could give such arguments little if any consideration.

The section referred to is section 12993 G. C., which provides that no male child under fifteen years or female child under sixteen years shall be employed, permitted or suffered to work in, about or in connection with any named establishment. Here follows a list of about twenty-two different kinds of establishments; and the further provision is made that such children shall not be employed in the construction or repair of buildings, in the distribution, transmission or sale of merchandise, nor any boy under fifteen or female under twenty-one years in the transmission of messages.

The language of this section is plain, contains no exceptions and there is no possible ambiguity, and consequently there is no need of construction or interpretation. It is a well settled principle of law that the rules of construction of statutes cannot be invoked when the language is so plain as to not require interpretation.

The language of our Supreme Court in Barker v. State, 69 O. S. 74, is binding upon all officials called upon to construe a statute. Spear, J., in rendering the opinion says (p. 74):

> "We are quite aware that the rule of law and of this court is that a statute defining an offense is not to be extended by construction to persons not within its descriptive terms, yet it is just as well settled that penal provisions are to be fairly construed according to the expressed legislative intent, and mere verbal nicety, or forced construction, is not to be resorted to in order to exonerate persons plainly within the terms of the statute."

As an official you know that we have no law, however good, that is not harsh in some particular case, and no matter what our individual opinions may be, the rule laid down by the general assembly must be followed.

In consequence of the foregoing it is my opinion that no exceptions can be read into the plain term of section 12993 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—LEASE BY STATE TO O. S. COX OF McARTHUR, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 22, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On July 30, 1917, you submitted for my approval a contract with the following communication:

> "We enclose herewith oil and gas lease in triplicate to O. S. Cox of McArthur, Ohio, for school lands in section 16, Elk township, Vinton County, Ohio.
> "It appears that this tract was leased to a man by the name of Warren in 1916 and that subsequently Dr. Cox, representing himself and other citizens of that portion of the state, who were engaged in prospecting and operating for oil, purchased one-half interest in the lease intending to develop it. We have a copy of the assignment on file.
> "In March of this year we received a letter from Mr. Warren asking us to cancel the lease and enclosing the original lease. Acting upon this letter we canceled same. Subsequently Dr. Cox called on us saying that he had been unable to locate Mr. Warren and desired to know the situation and to have a copy of the original lease. It developed that he knew nothing about the cancellation of the lease.

"Upon the application of Dr. Cox we decided to re-execute the lease directly to him in the form in which we transmit the same to you for your approval."

In reference thereto and sometime thereafter certain suggestions were made by me with reference thereto and you have now modified said contract in accordance with said suggestions, and I find the contract to be sufficient and correct, and accordingly hereby approve it.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—LEASE BY STATE TO THE EBERSBACH COAL COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 24, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On September 14, 1917, you submitted for my examination and approval a lease to the Ebersbach Coal Company, with the following communication:

"We herewith transmit to you a copy of a proposed lease and sale of coal of The Ebersbach Coal Company. This coal lies on fractional section 29 abutting upon the Ohio River near Racine in Meigs County, It seems that The Thomas Coal Company, which operates a mine to the north of this fractional section, has entered upon and taken some coal from under section 29. It also appears that a part of the shaft of The Thomas Coal Company is upon this section 29, In order that no injustice may be done by the state we propose to protect Thomas in the use of this shaft, especially in view of the fact that Thomas is the lessee of the surface of this part of the fractional section. We also desire to not only protect Thomas, but Mr. Willard and other owners of coal lands abutting upon this fractional section against danger from flooding. Hence, the special provisions we have inserted in the contract. These provisions are satisfactory to the Ebersbach company.

"The consideration has not yet been inserted for the reason that there is a question as to the amount growing out of the fact that the Thomas people have mined some of the coal. We will have a survey completed by Tuesday of next week which will give the exact quantity and we will then insert the consideration, which will be on the basis of $105.00 per acre of coal.

"We are transmitting the proposed contract to you before it is executed so that when it comes to you for final approval you will already have approved it as to form.

"The matter is somewhat urgent as the sale was affected a long time ago, and the Ebersbach people have been running entries and have desired the consummation of the deal, but we have been compelled to hold it up now because of the trouble with the Thomas people."

Upon examination of said lease there appears to be no time limit, but the same is perpetual, and will be in effect until the lessee has removed all of the coal under said land. This may be in accordance with the prevailing custom and in accordance with your intention, and if so I find the lease to be sufficient and correct, and hereby accordingly approve the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION — FEDERAL AID — APPROPRIATION — EXPENSES—DIRECTOR OF AGRICULTURAL EDUCATION—SALARY.

The moneys appropriated by the general assembly of Ohio for co-operation with the federal government in vocational education may not lawfully be expended for the salary of a director of vocational education, including industrial training and home economics.

Th actual and necessary expenses of the members of the state board of education and the expenses of the board itself, other than for clerical services, are a proper charge against said appropriation.

No present authority exists in the state board of education to employ a director of agricultural education. The state superintendent of public instruction under existing laws has supervisory power respecting the teaching of agriculture. He has authority to employ assistants, with the approval of the governor, but even if an assistant employed in his department for the purpose of attending to the supervision of agricultural teaching might be regarded as a supervisor of agricultural education within the meaning of the federal legislation, the moneys appropriated to the state board of education for co-operation with the federal government could not lawfully be used to pay any part of the salary of such assistant.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1917.

PROF. ALFRED VIVIAN, President State Board of Education, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 25th, calling my attention to Senate Bill No. 139 (107 Ohio Laws, page 579) and the Act of Congress referred to therein, and requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

> "First: Under the provisions of this bill, would it be possible to use any of the moneys appropriated by the state of Ohio for the purpose of the administration of the act, viz: for the expenses of members of the board, or for the salary of the director of vocational education (including industrial training and home economics)?
> "Second: Is there anything in the act to prevent the use of a part of the state funds for the payment of the salary of a director of agricultural education?"

I also acknowledge receipt of your letter of August 30 enclosing copy of a letter received from the federal board for vocational education.

Section 1 of the state law referred to by you accepts the provisions of a certain act of congress. That act is senate bill No. 703, sixty-fourth congress, approved February 23, 1917. Among its provisions are the following:

"Sec. 1. There is hereby annually appropriated, * * * the sums provided in sections two, three and four of this act, to be paid to the respective states for the purpose of co-operating with the states in paying the salaries of teachers, supervisors and directors of agricultural subjects, and teachers of trade, home economics and industrial subjects, and in the preparation of teachers of agricultural, trade, industrial and home economics subjects; * * *

"Sec. 2. That for the purpose of co-operating with the states in paying the salaries of teachers, supervisors or directors of agricultural subjects, there is hereby appropriated for the use of the states, subject to the provisions of this act, * * *(certain named sums for future years).

"Sec. 3. That for the purpose of co-operating with the states in paying the salaries of teachers of trade, home economics and industrial subjects, there is hereby appropriated for the use of the states, * * * (certain named sums for certain future years).

"Sec. 4. That for the purpose of co-operating with the states in preparing teachers, supervisors and directors of agricultural subjects and teachers of trade and industrial and home economics subjects, there is hereby appropriated for the use of the states, * * * (certain named sums for designated future years).

"Sec. 5. That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations provided for in sections two, three and four of this act, any state shall, through the legislative authority thereof, accept the provisions of this act and designate or create a state board, consisting of not less than three members, and having all necessary power to co-operate, as herein provided, with the federal board for vocational education in the administration of the provisions of this act. * * *

"Any state may accept the benefits of any one or more of the respective funds herein appropriated, * * * and shall be required to meet only the conditions relative to the fund or funds, the benefits of which it has accepted. * * *

"Sec. 6. That a federal board for vocational education is hereby created, * * *

"The board shall have power to co-operate with state boards in carrying out the provisions of this act. * * *

"Sec. 8. That an order to secure the benefits of the appropriation for any purpose specified in this act, the state board shall prepare plans, showing the kinds of vocational education for which it is proposed that the appropriation shall be used, the kinds of schools and equipment; courses of study; methods of instruction; qualifications of teachers; and, in the case of agricultural subjects the qualifications of supervisors or directors; plans for the training of teachers; and, in the case of agricultural subjects, plans for the supervision of agricultural education, as provided for in section ten. Such plans shall be submitted by the state board to the federal board for vocational education, and if the federal board finds the same to be in conformity with the provisions and purposes of this act, the same shall be approved. * * *

"Sec. 9. * * * The moneys expended under the provisions of this act, in co-operation with the states, for the salaries of teachers, supervisors, or directors of agricultural subjects, or for the salaries of teachers of trade, home economics and industrial subjects, shall be conditioned that for each dollar of federal money expended for such salaries the state or local community, or both, shall expend an equal amount for such salaries; and that appropriations for the training of teachers of vocational subjects, as herein provided, shall be conditioned that such money be expended for maintenance of such training and that for each dollar of federal money so expended for maintenance, the state or local community, or both, shall expend an equal amount for the maintenance of such training.

"Sec. 10. That any state may use the appropriation for agricultural purposes, or any part thereof allotted to it, under the provisions of this act, for the salaries of teachers, supervisors, or directors of agricultural subjects, either for the salaries of teachers of such subjects in schools or classes or for the salaries of supervisors or directors of such subjects under a plan of supervision for the state to be set up by the state board, with the approval of the federal board for vocational education. * * *

"Sec. 11. That in order to receive the benefits of the appropriation for the salaries of teachers of trade, home economics and industrial subjects, the state board of any state shall provide in its plan for trade, home economics and industrial education that such education shall be given in schools or classes under public supervision or control; * * *

"Sec. 12. That in order for any state to receive the benefits of the appropriation in this act for the training of teachers, supervisors, or directors of agricultural subjects, or of teachers of trade, industrial or home economics subjects, the state board of such state shall provide in its plan for such training that the same shall be carried out under the supervision of the state board; * * *

"Sec. 13. That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations for the salaries of teachers, supervisors, or directors of agricultural subjects, or for the salaries of teachers of trade, home economics and industrial subjects, or for the training of teachers as herein provided, any state shall, through the legislative authority thereof, appoint as custodian for said appropriations its state treasurer, who shall receive and provide for the proper custody and disbursements of all money paid to the state from said appropriations."

Returning now to the state act, the general acceptance declared in the first section is supplemented by section 2 of the act, as follows:

"The benefits of all funds appropriated under the provisions of said act are hereby accepted as to:

"(a) Appropriations for the salaries of teachers, supervisors and directors of agricultural subjects.

"(b) Appropriations for salaries of teachers of trade and industrial subjects.

"(c) Appropriations for the preparation of teachers of agricultural, trade, and industrial, and home economics subjects."

The conditions of the federal act are met by the following sections of the State Law:

"Sec. 3. In order to carry out the provisions of this act, there is hereby created the state board of education, which shall consist of the superintendent of public instruction and six appointive members, who shall be persons of recognized standing and ability in business, the professions, industry or the trades, to be appointed by the governor. * * *

"Sec. 4. The superintendent of public instruction shall serve as secretary of the board and shall designate some employe of the department of public instruction to act as clerk, who shall take charge of all papers and perform all clerical work in connection with the meetings of the board. Regular meetings of the board shall be held at the office of the superintendent of public instruction and special meetings may be held at any place within the state, upon the call of the president or of a majority of the board. No compensation shall be paid to any member of the board, but each shall receive his necessary and actual expenses incurred in attending meetings and while engaged in performing the duties imposed by this act. All such expenses and any other expenses incurred by the board in the official conduct of its business as authorized in this act shall be paid upon receipt of itemized bills authorized by the board and approved by the president. Vouchers for said bills shall be drawn by the auditor of state, payable from appropriations made by the general assembly.

"Sec. 5. The state board of education shall have all necessary authority to co-operate with the federal board for vocational education in the administration of said act of congress and of any legislation pursuant thereto enacted by the state of Ohio, and in the administration of the funds provided by federal government and the state of Ohio under the provisions of this act, for the promotion of vocational education in agriculture, commercial, industrial, trade and home economics subjects. They shall have full authority to formulate plans for the promotion of vocational education in such subjects as an essential and integral part of the public school system of education in Ohio; and to provide for the preparation of teachers of such subjects. They shall have authority to make studies and investigations relating to prevocational and vocational education in such subjects; to promote and aid in the establishment by local communities of schools, departments and classes, giving training in such subjects; to co-operate with local communities in the maintenance of such schools, departments and classes; to establish standards for the teachers, supervisors and directors of such subjects; and to co-operate in the maintenance of schools, departments, or classes supported and controlled by the public for the preparation of teachers, supervisors and directors of such subjects.

"Sec. 6. Any school, department or class giving instruction in agricultural, commercial, industrial, trade and home economics subjects approved by the state board of education in (and) any school or college so approved, training teachers of such subjects, which receives the benefit of federal moneys as herein provided, shall be entitled also to receive for the salaries of teachers of said subjects an allotment of state money equal in amount to the amount of federal money which it receives, as herein provided, for the same year. The state board of education shall recommend to each session of the general assembly the amount of money which will need to be appropriated by the state for such allotments during the succeeding biennial period.

"Sec. 7. The state treasurer is hereby designated as the custodian of all funds received from the United States treasury for vocational education under the terms of this act. All money so received or appropriated by the state of Ohio for the purposes contemplated in the act of congress and in this act, or in the acts supplementary thereto, shall be disbursed in accordance with law, upon the order of the state board of education."

The first noteworthy fact to be mentioned in connection with your first question is the clear distinction that is drawn in both of the laws above quoted between agricultural education, on the one hand, and trade, industrial and home economics education, on the other hand, as affecting the application of federal moneys to the payment of any part of the salary of a supervisor or director. Without again quoting the section, permit me to point out that the state is permitted to expend the first federal appropriation for agricultural education partly in the payment of the salary of a director or directors or supervisors. This is clear enough from the general provisions of the federal law, but is made quite explicit in that part of section 10 thereof which has been quoted. It is therein provided that the state board may set up a plan of supervision for agricultural education, and, if the same is approved by the federal board, may use the moneys allotted to the state under the first federal appropriation for the payment of salaries of supervisors or directors. This is broad enough to include the payment of the salary of a state supervisor or director as well as that of a local supervisor or director, if the federal board assents to such plan. In this connection it is to be noted that section 5 of the state law expressly authorizes the state board of education thereby created to set up the plan of supervision which would be necessary in order to comply with the federal act in this respect.

But while these things are true as to agricultural supervisors, they are not true as to supervisors of trade, industrial and home economics education. Congress has been very careful to make this distinction, and it is very clear, therefore, that the federal moneys are not to be used in the payment of the salaries of supervisors of these last named subjects nor in training such supervisors.

It is very clear to me, therefore, that, granting that some authority exists for the employment of a director of vocational education, including industrial training and home economics, by some agency of the state or under authority of its laws, the federal moneys could not be used to contribute to the salary of such a director.

Your question, however, does not relate to federal moneys, but to state moneys. Nevertheless, the conclusion at which I have arrived furnishes a partial answer to your question; for the state law (Sec. 6) provides that the state money shall be allotted to schools and colleges dollar for dollar with the federal money; that is to say, the money of the state which the state board of education is to disburse must be disbursed in exact and equal co-operation with the federal funds. To the extent, therefore, that the state money might be needed to match the application of the federal money, there would be no authority to withhold any part of it and expend it for some purpose to which federal money could not be applied. Unless, therefore, the appropriation made by the state and subject to the control of the state board of education were sufficient in amount to leave a surplus after the contributions required by section 6 had been made, no part of that money could be used to employ a state supervisor.

But this is not all; for unless the appropriation to the state board of education, which is not found in the act cited, but in the general budget bill, is broad enough to authorize the expenditure of the moneys appropriated for this purpose, such expenditure could not be made even if there were a surplus. The budget bill provides (107 Ohio Laws, page 208) an appropriation of $78,400.00 "for the purpose of co-operating with the United States in vocational education." It is clear that the moneys appropriated for this purpose can not be expended for any purpose not strictly co-operative with the United States. Inasmuch as the United States withholds co-operation in the payment of the salary of any supervisor excepting one whose duties relate strictly to agricultural education, it is clear that regardless of the question of amount the appropriation to the state board of education may not be used for this purpose.

Your first question also relates to the payment of expenses of the members of the board, which are expressly authorized by section 4 of the act to be paid "from appropriations made by the general assembly." If the appropriation referred to were the only one bearing upon the subject, and if its entire expenditure is not necessitated by the requirements of section 6, I would be of the opinion that the expenses of members of the state board would be properly chargeable against the appropriation, even though the legislature did not make a specific appropriation for the expenses of the board or its members. This part of your first question is, however, thrown into some confusion by the fact that some of the expense of carrying on the work of the state board of education is provided for by appropriation made to the department of public instruction. For example, at page 223 of 107 Ohio Laws is found, under the heading of "Department of Public Instruction," an appropriation of $1,000.00 for "Extra help in vocational work." This is consistent with the first sentence of section 4, which provides that an employe of the department of public instruction shall be designated to act as clerk and perform all clerical work in connection with the meetings of the board. The last two sentences of the same section, however, seem to contemplate the incurring of additional expenses by the board, as well as the reimbursement of the members of the board for their actual and necessary expenses. So that the mere fact that an appropriation is made to the department of public instruction for extra help in vocational work does not establish the conclusion that the other expenses of the board are properly chargeable against the appropriations made to the department of public instruction.

On the whole then, I conclude that the actual and necessary expenses for which under the provisions of section 4 of the state law the members of the state board of education are entitled to reimbursement are a proper charge against the state appropriation for co-operation with the federal government. The legislature has made no other appropriation to meet a fixed charge authorized by law; in the broad sense the work of the state board in the performance of which its members incur personal expenses is all co-operation with the federal government; the federal act itself requires the establishment of a state board and the doing of work by its members; and the provisions of section 6 of the law as applied to the appropriation made must be read in connection with those of section 4.

In a word, then, while section 6 of the act, as above stated, requires that state money be expended dollar for dollar with federal money, yet this requirement does not bind the legislature to make a separate and distinct appropriation for this purpose, though it would be more convenient so to appropriate. Therefore, section 6 of the law does not necessarily control the expenditure of all of the moneys appropriated if there is some other proper charge against the appropriation under the law. The expenses of the board and its members, other than clerical help which is to be furnished by the department of public instruction, are a proper charge against this appropriation because the legislature has made no other appropriation for such purpose, and because such expenses are in the broad sense incurred for the purpose of co-operating with the United States in vocational education.

I answer your first question, therefore, by saying that it would not be possible to use any of the moneys appropriated by the state of Ohio to pay any part of the salary of a director of vocational education, including industrial training and home economics; but that it would be possible and entirely proper to use the appropriation to the state board of education for the payment of the actual and necessary expenses of the members of the board and the incidental expenses of the board itself other than for clerk hire.

Your second question, apparently assuming the impossibility of using the state moneys for the purpose of contributing to the salary of a director of vocational education whose functions would be as broad as those referred to in the first question, asks whether it would be possible to use any part of such moneys for the payment of the salary of a director of agricultural education.

As we have seen, the federal moneys may be used for such a purpose; and so far as the mere use of moneys is concerned it would follow, on the principles above outlined, that the state moneys could be likewise expended. At this point, however, another question intrudes—one that might properly have been mentioned as a further consideration in connection with your first question; and that is as to the authority to employ a state director or supervisor of agricultural education.

The State Board is given no authority to employ anybody. Its connection with the educational system of the state may be summed up as follows:

The State Board is to deal with the Federal Board for the purposes of the federal act; it is to formulate plans for the promotion of vocational education as a part of the public school system of education in Ohio; it is to provide for the preparation of teachers; to make studies and investigations; to promote and aid in the establishment of local schools, departments and classes; to co-operate with local communities; to establish standards; and to co-operate in the maintenance of schools for the preparation of teachers, supervisors and directors. The State Board is a continuing body, but it is not a part of the regular educational system of the state except to the extent specified. It disburses the state and federal funds; but if it has any authority to make employments it must be such authority only as is incidental to one of its expressly conferred powers. I find no express power from which such a power would flow by implication, unless it be the authority to make studies and investigations and that to promote and aid in the establishment of local schools. The accomplishment of these objects might require the board to employ investigators and field men, but, in my opinion, they would not justify the board in establishing the the position of state supervisor of agriculture.

But aside from all question as to the implications arising from Section 5 of the act creating the State Board of Education there are other considerations tending in the same direction. The supervision of the educational activities of the state is the subject of other laws on the statute books. These laws, dealing as they do comprehensively with the whole system of public education in the state, provide for local supervision by district superintendents and county superintendents and for state-wide supervision through the Department of Public Instruction. Consistently with this scheme of things, it would appear that if there is to be a state supervisor of any branch of education conducted by the state such office would belong in the educational system of the state as it is and always has been constituted.

Such indeed must have been the view of the General Assembly which enacted this law; for in its appropriations for the Department of Public Instruction it provided the sum of $1,600.00 for the salary of a "vocational supervisor". Here is authority to the Superintendent of Public Instruction to appoint, for the period covered by the appropriation at least, a vocational supervisor.

In my opinion, the legislature acted consistently with the scheme of the general laws in making this appropriation, and it is my opinion, under the general laws and the appropriation, that whatever authority exists for the appointment or employment of a supervisor is reposed in the Superintendent of Public Instruction.

I do not mean to say that the State Board of Education is without any authority in the premises at all. It must set up a plan of co-operation; it is given complete authority and control over the scheme of co-operation in vocational education; so that it is my opinion that in so far as state supervision is a part of the plan "for the promotion of vocational education in such subjects as an essential and integral part of the public school system of education in Ohio," the power to authorize the appointment is reposed in the State Board of Education. That is to say, the State Board of Education has the authority, in my opinion, to determine whether or not there shall be state supervision of education in such subjects; it has the power to create the position in so far as the existence of such power is compatible with the separation of powers under the Constitution, which is a question not necessary to be considered at this time. But when it comes to the actual appointment or employment of the person who is to fill the position, the power to do these things is committed to the Superintendent of Public Instruction, who has control over the appropriation made for such purpose.

It being established, then, that the authority to appoint a state supervisor is reposed in the Superintendent of Public Instructiion, acting with respect to the creation of the position, but not otherwise, with the advice and consent of the State Board of Education, your question still requires me to consider whether the state moneys may be used to supplement the salary of the person referred to in the budget bill as the "vocational supervisor."

This question may be broadly answered in the negative on the simple ground that the legislature has made a specific appropriation for this object and has determined in the first instance the salary which shall be payable. The necessary inference is that the legislature did not intend that this salary should be supplemented by the use of any other funds which it had appropriated.

An additional reason for the same conclusion, however, is furnished by considerations referred to in answering your first question. The $1,600.00 appropriated for the Department of Public Instruction is for the salary of a vocational supervisor. I find no warrant for the use of this appropriation or the employing authority derived from it for the payment of the salary or the employment of a supervisor whose functions are limited to the teaching of agriculture only. If a supervisor is employed at all, therefore, he must be paid the sum of $1,600.00, and no more, as salary, and he must supervise the entire work of vocational education in the state.

But, being so employed, he is not such a supervisor whose salary may be supplemented by the federal appropriation which is available to supplement the salary of a supervisor of agriculture only. In other words, if such a supervisor is employed such employment is not co-operative, but is an independent activity of the state. Therefore, the general appropriation which is made for the purpose of co-operating with the federal government and payable only for such purposes as constitute co-operation with the federal government could not be used to pay any part of his salary.

I therefore conclude that no part of the moneys appropriated to the State Board of Education for co-operation with the United States, nor any part of the federal moneys subject to the disbursements of the State Board may be paid in supplementing the salary of the vocational supervisor whom the Superintendent of Public Instruction is authorized to employ.

One more question must be considered before your second query is fully answered, viz:

> May the State Board of Education or the Superintendent of Public Instruction employ, independently of the authority to employ a vocational supervisor, a supervisor or director of agricultural education, and use the state appropriation for co-operation to pay his salary or to pay part of it, the remainder to be paid by the use of federal moneys?

As I have stated, I do not believe that the State Board of Education has implied power to make an employment of this character. Certainly it has no such express power. If the power were present I would have no difficulty in advising that the fund might be appropriately applied to pay the salary upon the same principles upon which I have held that the expenses of the members of the board are properly chargeable against the co-operation appropriation. But, as stated, the only power of employment which the State Board of Education possesses, if any, is that of employing persons to assist it. If its work amounts to "supervision," in the sense in which the Federal Board for Vocational Education interprets the federal law, then there would be warrant for holding that as a part of the co-operative scheme of things to be worked out between the two boards a position subordinate to the State Board of Education might be created by that board, and the salary of the incumbent thereof paid partly by the use of state funds and partly by the use of federal funds, if the state funds appropriated are sufficient to pay the state's portion of such salary in the face of the duties of the board under Section 6 of the state law. As stated, this question has a federal aspect and I do not desire to foreclose its consideration by the proper authorities. I am bound to say, however, that without knowing exactly what is meant by state supervision, I am impressed with the thought that the functions of the State Board of Education do not extend that far. This is because, as I have pointed out, what limited functions of this sort exist under the statutes of this state seem to be reposed, primarily at least, in the department of public instruction. The state board's authority to set up a plan of organization does not include the power to supervise, no matter how that power be defined; and the State Board's authority to co-operate with local communities and to establish standards is too vaguely put in the law to enable me with assurance to state that the legislature intended to encroach upon the functions of the Department of Public Instruction.

On the whole, therefore, I do not feel able to advise that the State Board has the power as a matter of state law to supervise agricultural education in the state-wide sense, without at least examining into the statutes relative to the powers and duties of the Superintendent of Public Instruction; and if it should appear upon such examination that power approximating the supervision of agriculture as a teaching subject in the common schools of the state is reposed in the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and hence in all likelihood not vested as a matter of legislative intent in the State Board of Education, it would follow that an assistant to or employe of the State Board of Education, who could not have authority broader than the board itself, could not with propriety be called a supervisor of agricultural teaching.

Coming now to the question relative to the powers and duties of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, let me observe that two questions appear to be involved, and may be phrased as follows:

> (1) Has the superintendent of public instruction any supervisory power over the teaching of agriculture in the schools, as such; and
> (2) If it should appear that he has such power, may he delegate it to, or rather execute it through, an assistant, and has he the power to employ such assistant?

The first of these questions is answered by the following statutes: Section 7761-1, General Code:

> "Agriculture shall hereafter be taught in all the common schools of all village and rural school districts of the state of Ohio, which are supported in whole or in part by the state, and may be taught in city school districts at the option of the board of education. Such agricultural instruction in each county district shall be under the general supervision of the county superintendent of schools."

This statute makes it reasonably clear that supervision of agricultural teaching in the common schools is divided between the county superintendent and the superintendents of the city and other exempt districts which offer such instruction. What general supervision over this local supervision is reposed in the Superintendent of Public Instruction? In the first place, I note that Section 7706-4 of the General Code, which relates to the duties of the county superintendent, provides that he shall make all reports required by law to be made to the superintendent of public instruction and "make such other reports as the superintendent of public instruction may require." This statute makes it clear that the county superintendent must at least report to the superintendent of public instruction upon such subjects as the superintendent of public instruction may require.

Section 7645 of the General Code gives to the superintendent of public instruction the power to approve the graded courses of study which the section provides shall be prescribed by the local boards of education in the subjects named in section 7648. Section 7648 defines an elementary school and prescribes the subjects in which instruction shall be given therein. This section in and of itself makes the teaching of agriculture optional, but, as we have seen, section 7761-1 requires the teaching of agriculture and in effect modifies section 7648 to this extent. On the whole I am of the opinion that the concurrent effect of the three sections named is to make the course of study in elementary schools, which now includes agriculture, subject to the approval of the superintendent of public instruction.

Turning now to colleges and normal schools and the work done by them in training teachers and supervisors of agriculture, which is within the purview of the third federal appropriation referred to above, I observe that section 7807-5, General Code, gives to the superintendent of public instruction the authority to approve institutions affording training in special subjects, including agriculture, and to issue provisional special certificates in such subjects to teachers or supervisors thereof.

Still dealing with the matter of preparation of teachers, I find that the superintendent of public instruction is by section 7654-1 and succeeding sections given certain supervisory authority over locally established and maintained normal schools.

Under section 7819, General Code, the superintendent of public instruction is given authority to prepare and charged with the duty of preparing the questions for all county teachers' examinations.

These special sections show that the superintendent of public instruction has rather wide supervisory powers with respect to the conduct of the schools in the state at large, in so far as such supervision is compatible with the local supervisory powers given to the county and district superintendents. There are also some general sections found in the chapter specifically relating to the superintendent of public instruction. Section 354 of the General Code authorizes him "to visit and inspect schools." Section 355 gives him such supervision of the school funds of the state as is necessary to secure their safety and distribution as provided by law, with authority to acquire information from almost any source. Section 357 authorizes him to formulate "instructions for the organization and government of schools." and to transmit them to the local school officers, "who shall be governed thereby in the performance of their duties." This power is very broad.

On the whole, then, I find that whereas some power which might be deemed supervisory could by inference and implication be ascribed to the state board of education under the law creating it, powers which are clearly supervisory are by express provision of law vested in the superintendent of public instruction, as well respecting vocational training and the teaching of agriculture as with respect to the so-called common branches.

It is a well understood principle of statutory interpretation that a subsequent statute repeals or modifies a prior one to the extent only that they may be found to be irreconcilably inconsistent. Another way of putting the same thing is that where the legislature sees fit in the enactment of a new law to leave other laws apparently in force and unmodified by express repeal or amendment, the courts will hold that all the statutes which appear on the statute books of the state are in force and unmodified unless by clear expression in the later act a provision inconsistent with those of the former acts is made.

In this case there is nothing expressed in the act creating the state board of education which is inconsistent with the powers and duties of the superintendent of public instruction. On the other hand, the superintendent of public instruction is a member of the board, his office is to perform all clerical work which the board requires, and it is rather clear that the board acts on the whole in an advisory capacity to him, or perhaps in such capacity respecting the matters within the scope of its powers, viz:co-operation in vocational education, in the same way as the local board of education acts with respect to its superintendent. There is, for example, a county board of education and a district board of education. These boards have their superintendents whom they may control upon all questions of policy, yet it is well understood that the actual supervision of the schools is a function of the superintendent and not of the board.

So also the state board of education with respect to the subject-matter of vocational education may, under its power to set up plans and the like, control the discretion of the superintendent of public instruction in the exercise of his supervisory powers; but the supervision itself is his function and not that of the board.

This interpretation of the law does no violence to anything in the recent act, preserves the integrity of the statutes relating to the superintendent of public instruction which are not repealed, and avoids all conflict. I am of the opinion that it is the one to be adopted, because any other construction would make a mere implication or inference derivable from a subsequent act repeal an express provision of an earlier act, which is violative of every canon of statutory interpretation.

In short, then, the actual function of supervision, in so far as the same exists under the statutes of this state now in force, and in so far as it is to be exercised with respect to the teaching of agriculture and the preparation of teachers of agriculture, is vested in the superintendent of public instruction. In the broad sense he is the supervisor of agricultural education the same as he is the supervisor of all other public education.

The second question involved in the general inquiry under investigation now arises. Has the superintendent of public instruction power to appoint an assistant or other subordinate through whom he may perform the function of supervision that the statutes repose in him? This question is answered by section 353-1 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "The superintendent of public instruction may employ such clerks, stenographers and assistants as will enable him to properly care for the duties of his office. The compensation of such appointees shall be fixed by the superintendent of public instruction with the approval of the governor."

Here is the power to employ assistants, which carries with it by necessary implication the power to prescribe the duties of such assistants and to limit them within appropriate fields. I have no doubt that there is enough power here for the superintendent of public instruction to employ an assistant and to limit the activity of such an assistant to the supervision of agricultural subjects. Of course, the assistant has no independent powers of his own, he acts merely as the representative of the superintendent of public instruction, in whose name and by whose authority everything must be done.

Ordinarily, even an express power to make employments in the statutes of the state will not be practically effective without an appropriation to pay the compensation of the employe. The state is, to be sure, bound by the employment, but the actual money is not forthcoming without the appropriation.

The legislature has made appropriations for the department of public instruction, particular items of which have been referred to heretofore.

The "personal service" appropriations to the department are itemized in such manner as that it is clear that none of the moneys so appropriated could be used to pay all or any part of the salary of an assistant whose activities would be limited to agricultural education. The question which now arises is as to whether, in view of the specific appropriations which the legislature has made to the department of public instruction for personal service, the appropriation for co-operation with the federal government made to the state board of education could lawfully be used to pay all or any part of the salary of an assistant in his office.

This is purely a question of the legislative intent embodied in the appropriation bill; for, as we have seen the power to employ exists independently of that bill. It might be strongly argued that the legislature could not have intended that any part of the moneys appropriated to the state board of education should be used to pay all or any part of the salary of an assistant in the department of public instruction, because full provision has been made for such assistants by the legislature in the appropriations to that particular department, and because, moreover, one of the assistants in that department for which appropriations has been made is one whose functions, viz: vocational education, are of a character related to the work of the state board of education. In fact I believe this to have been the legislative intention and that the legislature did not mean to provide by its appropriation for the state board of education in co-operation with the federal government any money which should be available to pay all or any part of the salary of a subordinate in the department of public instruction. The question is not free from doubt, to be sure. The state board has authority to set up a plan which shall contemplate the creation of a subordinate position in the department of public instruction, which might be appropriately called a director or supervisor of agricultural education, subject to the approval of the federal board on the point as to whether such a subordinate would satisfy the federal requirements. The superintendent of public instruction has ample authority, with the approval of the Governor, to employ such a person as an assistant and to fix his compensation. If the federal board is satisfied with this feature of the plan it could advance federal moneys which could be applied to the salary of such assistant. The state moneys appropriated for co-operation might meet these federal moneys, always keeping strictly within the purpose and intent of the federal law which is accepted by the state law and virtually made a part of the latter by reference. So that the devotion of part of the money appropriated by the state to the state board of education in the payment of a part of the salary of such an assistant would be, broadly speaking at least, co-operation with the federal government.

It will be seen, therefore, that reasons exist on both sides of the question as to whether or not any part of the moneys appropriated for the state board of education may be applied to the salary of a special assistant in the department of public instruction. This question may not even arise, however, if the entire amount appropriated for co-operation is needed to meet the requirements of section 6 of the act and the incidental expense of the board, etc. If such should be the case, and the federal board should insist as a condition of co-operation with the state that a position of the kind named be created, and be satisfied with such position as a subordinate one in the department of public instruction, then the situation would be substantially as follows:

Not enough money being available—regardless of the question of power—to provide for the state's part of the salary of such an assistant, and the federal board making the creation of such position a prerequisite to co-operation, and the power to create the position existing, the furnishing of the funds would seem to be a matter for the consideration of the emergency board.

I understand an application has been made to the emergency board upon this theory. Whether the facts require the board to act upon either hypothesis respecting the applicability of the appropriation made to the board of education, I can not say. Clearly, the power of the emergency board is invoked if the appropriation could not legally be expended for this purpose at all; in all likelihood the power of the emergency board is likewise invoked if the appropriation, though legally available, is not sufficient in amount to justify its expenditure for this purpose.

On the whole, then, I conclude that even though the payment of a part of the salary of an assisant in the office of the superintendent of public instruction whose functions would be limited to the supervision of agricultural education might be regarded as co-operation with the federal government, within the purview of the state and federal acts respecting vocational education, the manner in which the legislature of the state has made its appropriation indicates a legislative intention that the co-operation appropriation shall not be used for this purpose, but that whatever moneys are expended for all or a part of the salary of assistants in the department of public instruction shall be taken from funds appropriated to that department.

It goes without saying, I think, that if a plan of supervision which contemplates the selection of a subordinate in the department of public instruction as a state supervisor, carrying with it the necessary implication that such supervisor shall really act as the representative of the superintendent of public instruction and in his name, is approved by the federal board, the state may have aid from the federal appropriation under section 10 of the federal law in payment of part of the salary of such an assistant.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LICENSES—UNDER LLOYD LOAN ACT—REMAIN IN FORCE UNTIL EXPIRATION OF THE YEAR FOR WHICH ISSUED.

The act of the legislature passed March 27, 1917 (107 O. L. 509), repealing and re-enacting certain sections of the so-called Lloyd law, does not require licensees under said law, holding licenses issued prior to said date, to surrender such licenses and take out new ones. Such licenses remain in force until the expiration of the year for which they were issued.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1917.

HON. P. E. BERRY, Commissioner of Securities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of September 15, 1917, you make an inquiry of this office which is partly but not fully shown in the following communications accompanied by letters hereinafter given:

> "Please advise us relative to the questions submitted to our department in the letters which we herewith enclose.
> "The Lloyd loan law. Sections 6346-1-2-3-4-8-9 and 10, passed May 7, 1915, O. L., Vol. 106, page 281, and requiring a license from the superintendent of banks, are repealed. The present law, passed March 21, 1917, makes it unlawful to make a charge in excess of 8 per cent. per annum without first obtaining a license from the commissioner of securities, and otherwise complying with the provisions of the law, Ohio Laws, Vol. 107, page 509, 510 and 511.
> "The Lloyd loan law, I understand, was repealed and a new law has taken its place. I represent the Ideal Finance Co. who have complied with the law and have a license from the superintendent of banks. Do they now have to take out a new license?"

These documents do not fully show your inquiry, but you have personally supplemented them with the statement that following the passage of the act of March 21, 1917, creating the securities department, found in 107 O. L., pages 509 to 511, which act amends certain sections of the law formerly governing the banking department only, by substituting the name "commissioner of securities" for that of "superintendent of banks;" that the letter from an attorney, copied above, has been circulated to all the licensed money lenders under the jurisdiction of your office and has created great confusion and practically a panic, and has created the impression that all persons engaged in the chattel loan business are required to surrender their licenses issued just before the amendment of the law and take out new licenses. Such is the inquiry and the circumstances giving rise to it.

It is unnecessary to quote the sections of the law referred to in these communications in view of the fact that they are in the same words as they stood before the amendment, except in the respects above indicated, and that they were merely amended to transfer the authority given in them from the superintendent of banks to the commissioner of securities. The amendment plainly and on its face was intended to have no effect in disturbing the business of the department, but was merely made for the purpose of such transfer of authority.

Licenses were taken out and paid for on the first of March; this amendment was enacted on the 21st of that month and went into effect on the first day of July. The impression that it has such effect seems to be founded upon the fact that a section in the old law, no longer necessary in the amendment, was inadvertently carried therein, which is as follows (Sec. 6346-10, 107 O. L. 511.):

"Any licensee, or licensees, who hold a license under the provisions of sections 6346-1, 6346-2, 6346-3, 6346-4, 6346-5, 6346-6, 6346-7 of the General Code, inclusive, which has not yet expired, and who shall present his license for cancellation to the commissioner of securities shall receive therefor a credit in the amount of ten dollars, and the commissioner of securities shall credit the same upon such license."

This section is transferred word for word from the old law to the new; it, therefore, has no effect whatever as an amendment. It was in the former act a practical provision with which compliance was necessary, but it is no longer necessary, nor can have any effect or application as of the time of going into effect of the new law, and is simply an example of what the supreme court in a recent decision speaks of as "the scissors and paste method of legislation." The whole subject of the effect of amendments in the form of codification or re-enactment is discussed in a case in which the above expression is used:

State ex rel Nimberger v. Bushnell, 95 O. S. 177.

The first section of the syllabus is as follows:

"On the re-enactment of a statute in a code the revision does not change its meaning, construction or effect unless the language of the statute as revised clearly manifests the intention of the legislature to make such change."

A fortiori would this be true where there is no revision of the language, but a section recopied in the amendment.

This same subject is further discussed in a still more recent case:

State ex rel. Taylor v. Cowen, 95 O. S.

This case went off upon an amendment of the highway law, an amendment containing such sweeping changes that the opinion was generally entertained that it had abolished the former highway department. Jones, J., in the opinion speaks as follows:

"In the construction of legislation of this character the legal principle has been well established that when the amendatory or re-enactment law substantially re-enacts the existing law, the latter is held to be in effect, continuous and undisturbed, and in contemplation of law is not a repeal, but merely a reaffirmance of the former law. Re Harry Allen, 91 O. S. 315; Re Hesse, 93 O. S. 230."

The present legislation is not different in character from that discussed by the court in the Cowen case, but is a much stronger case for the doctrine above stated as the amendments in this case were less radical and sweeping and seem to leave no doubt whatever that there is no change in the law and no interruption in its enforcement.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—CLERK OF COUNCIL, DEPUTY CLERK OF COUNCIL, OR ASSISTANT CLERK OF COUNCIL AND SERCETARY OF SINKING FUND TRUSTEES.

A person may occupy the position of clerk of council, deputy clerk of council, or assistant clerk of council and also hold the position of secretary of the sinking fund trustees, if it is physically possible to do so, and draw separate compensation for each position.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your communication of recent date you submit for my opinion the following:

> "May the clerk of council, deputy clerk of council, or assistant clerk of council, also hold the position of secretary of the sinking fund trustees and draw separate compensation for each position?"

An examination of the provisions of the General Code does not disclose any statutory inhibition against the same person acting as clerk of council, deputy clerk of council, or assistant clerk of council, and holding the position of secretary of the sinking fund trustees.

There remains then for consideration the question as to whether the positions are incompatible within the meaning of the common law.

The common law rule of incompatibility in office is stated in the case of State ex rel. v. Gebert, 12 O. C. C., n. s. 274, by Dustin, J., at page 275, as follows:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon, the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

As far as I have been able to ascertain there is nothing in the duties pertaining to the positions of clerk of council, deputy clerk of council, or assistant clerk of council that would make them subordinate to or a check upon the position of secretary of the sinking fund trustees.

Therefore, I advise you that it is my opinion that the same person may occupy the position of clerk of council, deputy clerk of council, or assistant clerk of council and also hold the position of secretary of the sinking fund trustees, if it is physically possible to do so, and draw separate compensation for each position.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

RESIDENCE—FEEBLE-MINDED YOUTH BROUGHT INTO THE STATE BY PERSONS CARING FOR HIM DOES NOT ACQUIRE LEGAL SETTLEMENT—RETAINS SAME LEGAL SETTLEMENT AS PARENTS.

A man and his wife moved from the state of Indiana into a county in Ohio, bringing with them a feeble-minded youth whom they were caring for as one of their family. After residing in such county in Ohio for fifteen months, the husband died, and the wife, being unable to longer care for this youth, has requested the county authorities to admit him to the infirmary. The youth in question has not supported himself since coming to Ohio, but has been dependent upon his friends. The boy's mother lives in another state.

Held: This feeble-minded youth did not gain a legal settlement in Ohio, but that this settlement is in the county and state where his mother resides. As soon as the mother is located this boy should be taken to the county and state in which she has a residence by the superintendent of the county infirmary. In the meantime the boy should be cared for in the county infirmary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 26, 1917.

HON. J. H. MUSSER, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 11, 1917, as follows:

"About fifteen months ago a man and his wife came to this county from Indiana, bringing with them a young man who is mentally deficient and who had, some time prior to the time they moved here from Indiana, been an inmate of an infirmary there. The man who brought this young man from Indiana has died and his widow is unable to any longer care for him because of her financial condition, and a request has been made that the county take charge of him and make him an infirmary charge under the poor laws.

"This young man has not supported himself since he came to Ohio, but has been dependent upon the persons who brought him here for his support.

"I would like to have your opinion as to what disposition should be made of the matter as our county commissioners feel that this young man should not be a county charge and would request that you give this your earliest attention as some persons interested are insistent that the county take charge of the young man at once."

Under date of September 18, 1917, you advise me:

"Replying to your letter of September 5th, relative to my inquiry in regard to a certain dependent who had at one time been in an infirmary in Indiana, and whom some people would now have Auglaize county take care of, will say regarding the questions asked by you that this young man is twenty-six or twenty-seven years old. He was an inmate of the infirmary in Tippecanoe county, Indiana, from which infirmary he ran away and went to Benton county, Indiana, where he was taken in by the husband of Mrs. Jennie Meiser. Mrs. Meiser and her husband came to Ohio in April, 1916, bringing this young man with them. Last winter Mrs. Meiser's husband died, and she is unable to care for this young man any longer herself. He has never supported himself at any time since he left the Tippecanoe county, Indiana, infirmary, and he was never adopted by Mrs. Meiser and her husband. I understand that his mother is living, but I have been unable to locate her place of residence.

"Section 3477 G. C. provides that before a person shall be considered to have obtained a legal settlement in any county in this state that he or she shall have continuously provided for and supported himself or herself for twelve consecutive months, subject to certain exceptions.

"I have taken the position that this young man does not come within the law regarding the care for poor by the county, and I believe he ought to be returned to Indiana. If you are of the same opinion I wish you would please give me your ideas as to the manner in which he should be returned and by whom."

Section 3476 G. C. provides:

"Subject to the conditions, provisions and limitations herein, the trustees of each township or the proper officers of each municipal corporation therein, respectively, shall afford at the expense of such township or municipal corporation public support or relief to all persons therein who are in condition requiring it."

Section 3477 G. C. reads in part as follows:

"Each person shall be considered to have obtained a legal settlement in any county in this state in which he or she has continuously resided and supported himself or herself for twelve consecutive months, without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor. * * *"

Section 3478 G. C. provides:

"In an action to compel the support or relief of a pauper, or in an action based upon the refusal of such officers to afford support or relief to any person, it shall be a sufficient defense for the township trustees, or proper municipal officers to show that such person, during the period necessary to obtain a legal settlement therein has been supported in whole or in part by others with the intention to thereby make such person a charge upon such township or municipal corporation. The fact that such person, during the period necessary to obtain a legal settlement therein, has been supported in whole or in part by others shall be prima facie evidence of such intention."

Section 3480 General Code provides:

"When a person in a township or municipal corporation requires public relief, or the services of a physician or surgeon, complaint thereof shall be forthwith made by a person having knowledge of the fact to the township trustees, or proper municipal officer. If medical services are required, and no physician or surgeon is regularly employed by contract to furnish medical attendance to such poor, the physician called or attending shall immediately notify such trustees or officer, in writing, that he is attending such person, and thereupon the township or municipal corporation shall be liable for relief and services thereafter rendered such person, in such amount as such trustees or proper officers determine to be just and reasonable. If such notice be not given within three days after such relief is afforded or services begin, the township or municipal corporation shall be liable only for relief or services rendered after notice has been given. Such trustees or officer, at any time may order the discontinuance of such services, and shall not be liable for services or relief thereafter rendered."

Section 3481 General Code reads:

"When complaint is made to the township trustees or to the proper officers of a municipal corporation that a person therein requires public relief or support, one or more of such officers, or some other duly authorized person, shall visit the person needing relief, forthwith, to ascertain his name, age, sex, color, nativity, length of residence in the county, previous habits and present condition and in what township and county in this state he is legally settled. The information so ascertained shall be transmitted to the township clerk, or proper officer of the municipal corporation, and recorded on the proper records. No relief or support shall be given to a person without such visitation and investigation, except that in cities, where there is maintained a public charity organization, or other benevolent association, which investigates and keeps a record of the facts relating to persons who receive or apply for relief, the infirmary directors, trusteees, or officers of such city shall accept such investigation and information and may grant relief upon the approval and recommendation of such organization."

Section 2540 G. C. reads:

> "The superintendent of the infirmary may remove any person becoming a charge upon the county who has no legal settlement in the state, to the county and state where such person has a legal settlement."

Section 2544 provides:

> "In any county having an infirmary, when the trustee of a township, after making the inquiry provided by law, are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall forthwith transmit a statement of the facts to the superintendent of the infirmary and if it appears that such person is legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown, and the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he should become a county charge, they shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution, or otherwise, and thereupon the liability of the township shall cease. The superintendent of the infirmary shall not be liable for any relief furnished, or expenses incurred by the township trustees."

Section 3476 G. C. thrusts upon the township trustees the duty of affording relief to paupers, subject to certain provisions and limitations in the sections immediately following.

Section 3477 G. C. provides:

> "Each person shall be considered to have obtained a legal settlement in any county in this state in which he or she has continuously resided and supported himself or herself for twelve consecutive months, without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor. * * *"

Section 3479 G. C. provides that a person having a legal settlement in any county shall be considered to have a legal settlement "in the township or municipal corporation therein, in which he has last resided continuously and supported himself for three consecutive months without relief."

The question here is, has the pauper referred to a legal settlement in the township and county in which he has resided for the past fifteen months?

It was held in Henrietta Township v. Oxford Township, 2 O. S. 32, that:

> "In order to obtain a settlement in a township, under our poor laws, the fact of residence is not sufficient, unless attended with the intention, on the part of the resident, of making such township his place of abode."

This being so, a feeble-minded person cannot acquire settlement in Ohio in his own right, for, as stated in 30 Cyc. 1083:

> "An insane person or idiot cannot acquire a settlement in any place by virtue of acts requiring his own volition."

In the case of Payne v. The Town of Dunham, 29 Ill. 125, it was held:

> "An idiot cannot acquire residence or settlement in any place, by virtue of his own acts. The residence or settlement of such person is fixed either by the father or those having paramount control over him."

The court at page 128 said:

"An idiot can acquire no residence or settlement in any place, by virtue of his or her own acts, for an idiot is incapable of exercising a will or doing an act binding on himself or others. His residence or settlement must be derived from his father or those having the paramount right to control him."

This applies as well to adult idiots as minor idiots.

Inhabitants of Gardiner v. Inhabitants of Garmingdale, 45 Me. 537; 30 Cyc. 1083.

In the case submitted the pauper, when he came to Ohio, was not in the custody of his father or mother or neither was he in the custody of a legally appointed guardian. He was brought to this state by a friend. Your letter states that the mother of this young man is still living and he, not being able to acquire a legal settlement in his own right, according to the authorities above quoted, derives his settlement from his mother. This being the case, I must conclude that this young man has never gained any settlement in Ohio, but that he has a settlement in whatever county and state his mother has established a residence.

Under section 2540, above quoted, the superintendent of a county infirmary may remove any person becoming a charge upon the county, who has no legal settlement in this state, to the county and state where such person has a legal settlement.

I would, therefore, advise you to ascertain the residence of this boy's mother and then have the superintendent of the county infirmary remove him to that county and state.

Until this boy's mother is located and his legal settlement determined, he should be cared for in the county infirmary, since under section 2544 G. C. provision is made for the care of pauper's in the infirmary when it appears that they have no legal settlement in the state or that their legal settlement is unknown.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHEN OBLIGED TO PAY TUITION OF GRADUATE OF THIRD GRADE HIGH SCHOOL TO HIGHER GRADE HIGH SCHOOL.

The board of education of a village school district which maintains a third grade high school is obliged to pay the tuition of the graduates of said high school to some other high school of higher grade after their graduation, unless the maximum levy permitted by law has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 26, 1917.

HON. FRANK N. SWEITZER, Prosecuting Attorney, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You ask my opinion upon the following question:

"Is the board of education of a village school district maintaining a third grade high school obliged to pay the tuition of the graduates of this high school to some other high school of higher grade after their graduation?"

General Code section 7748 reads as follows:

*"A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year. Should pupils residing in the district prefer not to attend such third grade high school the board of education of such district shall be required to pay the tuition of such pupils at any first grade high school for four years, or at any second grade high school for three years and a first grade high school for one year. * * * except that, a board maintaining a * * * third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when the maximum levy permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district.* No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the further provisions hereof, residing more than four miles by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from the said high school maintained by the said board of education to said high school. Where more than one high school is maintained, by agreement of the board and parent or guardian, pupils may attend either and their transportation shall be so paid. A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a rural district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a resident pupil of such district."

If the school district about which you inquire were a rural school district, your question would be perfectly clear, for this department held in Opinion No. 260, rendered May 12, 1917, that:

"If a board of education of a district provides only a third grade high school and instead of attending such third grade high school such pupils, resident thereof, desire the schooling provided in the advanced high schools, to-wit, a second or first grade high school, then the board of education which maintained only a third grade high school shall be required to pay the tuition of pupils who attended the first grade high school for a period of two years, or was required to pay the tuition of such pupils at a second grade high school for one year and a first grade high school for one year," and,

"when the maximum levy permitted by law has been reached and all of the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of the district, the law provides that the board is not required to pay such tuition. That is, a particular tuition, the tuition to the first grade high school for two years or the first grade high school for one year and the second grade high school for one year."

The above quoted section (7748) was considered along with other sections in the chapter in which the above section is found.

In the case of State ex rel Nimberger, et al. vs. Bushnell, et al., 95 O. S. 177, decided January 23, 1917, the question presented by the record was as to whether or not a board of education of a village district, wherein no high school is maintained, is required by law to pay the tuition of pupils who have completed the elementary work of such district and are attending a high school in another district. In that case the court held that a village district could not be so compelled to pay such tuition because section 7747, as it then read, provided only for the payment of tuition of pupils who are eligible for admission to high school and who reside in rural districts in which no high school is maintained. Matthias, J., on page 181, uses the following language which seems to indicate that sections 7748, 7749, 7750 and 7751 apply only to rural districts, the same as 7747:

> "In 1910 the codifying commission * * * subdivided section 4029-3, Revised Statutes, making therefrom sections 7747 to 7751 General Code.
> "No change whatever was made in the substance, meaning or application of these provisions at that time except to eliminate joint subdistricts, and that undoubtedly was done because of the fact that in 1904 joint subdistricts had been abolished.
>
> "A comparison of the codification of 1910 with the former sections of the Revised Statutes discloses no change of language which would in any wise affect the operation of any of the provisions to which we have heretofore referred, and it is quite obvious that village boards of education were not affected in any wise by the provisions of any of these sections, either before or after the codification.
> "A dissection of the original sections, making several sections of each for the purpose of convenience merely, does not effect any change in the substance or operative effect thereof, and, under the well known and frequently applied rule, does not alter the meaning of the language used.
> "The presumption is that although the language has been changed in the revision or codification of the statute it has the same meaning and application as before the revision or codification, and the court is warranted in changing the construction thereof only when that is plainly required in order to conform to the manifest intent of the legislature. Ash v. Ash et al., 9 Ohio St. 383, 387; State ex rel Clough & Co. v. Commissioners, 36 Ohio St. 326; Heck v. State, 44 Ohio St. 536; State ex rel Baumgardner v. Stockley, 45 Ohio St. 304, 308; Conger et al. v. Barker's Admr., 11 Ohio St. 1; German American Ins. Co. v. McBee et al., 85 Ohio St. 173, and Myers, Treas., v. Rose, Institute, 92 Ohio St. 238, 247.
> "'A board of education' meant just the same after as it did before the action of the codifying commission. Village boards of education were entirely outside the scope of those statutes before the codification, and there was no change which could possibly serve to include them.
> "Section 7740 was amended April 13, 1910, extending the privilege of taking the examination to pupils of village districts as well as to those of township and special district. However, there was no change in the provisions relative to the payment of tuition. The question thereupon arises whether this amendment, which affords to the pupils of village districts the privilege to take such examination, serves to impose upon the board of education of such district the obligation to pay tuition for any such pupils passing the examination who thereafter attend high school in some other district. It is to be borne in mind that the right and privilege of pupils to attend high school in districts other than those wherein they reside was conferred long prior to the passage of any law requiring boards of education to pay tuition for such attendance. It is, therefore, manifest that the right to take the examination, and, if successful, the privilege of attending a high school in another district, did not imply any obligation whatever upon the local board of education to pay tuition. The right of the pupil to attend a high school elsewhere and the obligation of the board to pay tuition have at all times been treated in legislation as two entirely separate and distinct matters, the privilege of the pupil being broader than the obligation of the board.

"It is to be observed that very shortly after the last amendment to which we have above referred, the legislature, on May 10, 1910, amended section 7748 so as to extend the rights and privileges of a Boxwell-Patterson graduate to a pupil living in a village or city district who had there completed the elementary school course and thereafter transferred his residence to a township or special district. The fact seems significant that the legislature, by the terms of this amendment, limited the tuition privileges to a village pupil who had become a resident of a township or special district, and did not extend the same privilege to the pupil who continued a resident of the village district after completing the elementary course."

It is to be observed, then, that had there been no amendment of any of the sections above referred to, the conclusion that a village district was not permitted to pay the tuition of its high school pupils at other schools would be irresistible, but it is to be further observed that at the time said decision was rendered General Code section 7747 read in part as follows:

"The tuition of pupils who are eligible for admission to high school and who reside in rural districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence. * * *"

But on March 21, 1917, said section was amended as it is now found in 107 O. L. 625, to read as follows:

"The tuition of pupils who are eligible for admission to high school and who reside in village or rural districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month. No more shall be charged per capita than the amount ascertained by dividing the total expenses of conducting the high school of the district attended, which may include charges not exceeding five per cent per annum and depreciation charges not exceeding five per cent per annum, based upon the actual value of all property used in conducting such high school by the average monthly enrollment in the high school of the district. The district superintendent shall certify to the county superintendent each year the names of all pupils in his supervision district who have completed the elementary school work, and are eligible for admission to high school. The county superintendent shall thereupon issue to each pupil so certified a certificate of promotion which shall entitle the holder to admission to any high school. Such certificates shall be furnished by the superintendent of public instruction."

The effect of this amendment is to make the board of education of a village school district, maintaining no high school, liable for the tuition of the pupils who are residents thereof and who attend high schools in other districts.

Sections 7748, 7749, 7750 and 7751 G. C., which were also considered in the case of State ex rel. v. Bushnell, supra, were not amended so that the question is, what, if any, effect does the amendment of section 7747, as above quoted, have upon the following sections of said chapter which refer to the same subject. I am confident from a careful consideration of the language used by the learned court in State ex rel. Bushnell, supra, that a different conclusion would have been reached in that case if section 7747 had read then as it now reads and if the question had been on the payment of the tuition provided for in section 7748 by the board of education which maintains a third grade high school, for it must be remembered that sections 7747, 7748, 7749, 7750 and 7751 were formerly all embodied in Revised Statutes 4029-3, and in separating said section last mentioned the codifying commission made no change whatever in the substance thereof. But if the substance of section 7747 had been changed just as was the substance of section 7748 changed by the amendment of May 10, 1910, then the following sections being read in connection therewith would have not only been sufficient to warrant the conclusion that section 7748 applied to all school districts instead of just to rural school districts, but would have made such construction irresistible. That is to say, the only reason which the court finds that section 7748 does not apply to village districts is that language which says:

> "A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a rural district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a resident pupil of such district."

If, then, the rights and privileges of pupils of village districts and rural districts had been the same, as they are now, then said language would either have been unnecessary or without effect, and the court would have necessarily been compelled to arrive at a different conclusion, viz., that on account of the clear language used in section 7748 that said section would necessarily apply to all schools alike instead of only to the class of schools to which section 7747 was formerly limited.

Holding these views, then, I advise you that the board of education of a village school district which maintains a third grade high school is obliged to pay the tuition of the graduates of said high school to some other high school of higher grade after their graduation, unless the maximum levy permitted by law has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DUPLICATE AMENDMENTS—LEGISLATIVE INTENT GOVERNS.

The determination of the question as to which of duplicate amendments of the same section of the General Code, passed by the legislature on the same day, is governed by the intention of the legislature.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 27, 1917.

The Board of Agriculture, Fish and Game Division, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication of August 31, 1917, wherein you request my opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "There seems to be some confusion in regard to section 1453 of the General Code.
> "On March 21, 1917, the legislature provided by amendment to section 1453 for the catching of carp and mullett in the bays, rivers, marshes, etc., and then seeks to define the limitation in certain rivers and creeks. This law was approved March 29th and filed in the office of the secretary of state on March 30, 1917.
> "It seems as though this section was re-enacted on the same day, approved on March 29th and filed in the office of the secretary of state on March 31st. This is found in volume 107, page 489.
>
> "You will note this section does not include mullett and does not attempt to define the parts of the river and creeks in which carp fishing is permitted, neither does it include the word rivers.
> "The question now would be which is the law. Will you kindly render me an opinion as soon as possible as a conflict of this kind might be a source of some unpleasant litigation?"

House Bill No. 163, 107 O. L. 172, amending section 1453, was passed March 21, 1917, approved by the governor March 29, 1917, and filed in the office of the secretary of state March 30, 1917, and provides as follows:

> "Section 1. That section 1453 of the General Code be amended to read as follows:
> "Sec. 1453. German carp and mullett may be taken or caught at any time in the bays, rivers, marshes, estuaries or inlets bordering upon, flowing into or in any manner connected with Lake Erie, with any seine, having meshes not less than four inches, stretched mesh factory measure. Provided, however, that german carp and mullett shall not be taken or caught under the provisions of this act in the following streams except as hereinafter designated. In the Ottawa river no farther than the Ann Arbor bridge; in the Maumee river no farther than the Toledo Country Club; in the Portage river no farther than one-half mile past poor house flats; in Sandusky river no farther than the mouth of Bar creek; and no farther up the La Carp creek, Little Portage river, Tousaint river, Turtle creek, and Ward's canal than the water level of Lake Erie extends in these streams.
> "Sec. 2. That said original section 1453 of the General Code as amended by the 82nd General Assembly by an act passed on the 10th day of March, 1917, known as house bill No. 115, be, and the same is hereby repealed."

Amended house bill No. 115 (107 O. L., p. 489), amending the same section (1453), was passed March 21, 1917, approved by the governor March 29, 1917, and filed in the office of the secretary of state March 31, 1917, and provided as follows:

* * * * * * * * * * * * * *

"Section 1453. German carp may be taken or caught at any time in the bays, marshes, estuaries or inlets bordering upon, flowing into or in any manner connected with Lake Erie, with any seine, having meshes not less than four inches, stretched mesh. Other nets or devices may be used if authorized by the secretary of agriculture. Written permission to catch carp in such waters shall be granted to any person making application to the secretary for such privileges who satisfies the secretary that he will not violate a law for the protection of fish. Such permission may be revoked by the secretary upon conviction of the holder thereof for taking fish contrary to law."

* * * * * * * * * * * * * *

These two bills were passed on the same day, approved by the governor on the same day, but amended house bill No. 115 was filed in the office of the secretary of state one day later than house bill No. 163.

In the case of State of Ohio v. Lathrop, 93 O. S. 79, the court held:

"We are constrained to hold that the act last actually signed did not operate to repeal the act last passed. We are persuaded that the manifest purpose of the law-making power should not be defeated by means wholly beyond its control. It is the plain duty of the court to give effect, if at all possible, to the latest expression of the legislature on a given subject, and rather than vest the executive with the power of selection, which the constitution neither impliedly nor expressly grants to him—and, indeed, which the constitution in terms, by formal exclusion, denies to him—we hold that the act of April 17, as the later expression of the general assembly, must prevail; and we do this the more readily because thereby the clear intention of both the general assembly and the executive is given effect.

"Authority in support of this holding may be found in the case of Southwark Bank v. Commonwealth, 26 Pa. St. 446, wherein it was held:

"'1. The general rule is that where two statutes contain repugnant provisions, the one last signed by the governor is a repeal of the one previously signed.

"'2. This is so merely because it is presumed to be so intended by the law-making power; but where the intention is otherwise, and that intention is apparent from the face of either enactment, the plain meaning of the legislative power thus manifested is the paramount rule of construction.'"

The court in the above cited case further holds:

"Section 1 of article II of the constitution of Ohio provides that the legislative power of the state shall be vested in a general assembly. * * * If the governor, by mere order of the time of approval of measures passed by the general assembly, can make or unmake laws, then, contrary to the express terms of the constitution, he becomes the law-making power and his intention, rather than that of the legislature, governs."

Let us, therefore, look into the history of the passage of these two acts to ascertain, if possible, the intention of the legislature relative to these two bills.

House bill No. 115, as introduced, was amended by the senate and returned to the house, where it was again brought up on the tenth day of March, 1917, on the question of whether or not the senate amendment should be concurred in, and was voted upon and passed by the house as amended. The bill, however, was not enrolled and signed until March 21, 1917.

House bill No. 163 was passed March 20, 1917, enrolled and signed on March 21, 1917.

This brief history of these two bills shows that while they were both enrolled and signed on the same day—March 21, 1917—which would be considered the date of their passage, one bill, house bill No. 163, was not voted on until ten days after the other. While, as a matter of law, these two bills must be considered as having passed on the same day, in reality house bill No. 163 is the last expression of the legislature, and we cannot but decide that the intention of the legislature was to enact into a law the bill last voted on.

This view is strengthened by the fact that in the repealing clause of house bill No. 163, is found the following language:

> "Sec. 2. That said original section 1453 of the General Code as amended by the 82nd general assembly by an act passed on the 10th day of March, 1917, known as house bill No. 115, be, and the same is hereby repealed."

It might be well, in view of the language used in the above repealing clause, to state in this connection that house bill No. 115 and amended house bill No. 115 are one and the same bill. The legislature, then, by the repealing clause of house bill No. 163 intended and attempted to specifically repeal section 1453 as amended by amended house bill No. 115. The language used by the legislature in the repealing clause of house bill No. 163 mentions house bill No. 115 as having passed March 10, 1917. This seeming inconsistency is explained by reason of the fact that this bill was voted on March 10th, as before pointed out, and not passed until March 21. There is no doubt that the legislature was referring to section 1453 as now found in amended house bill No. 115, 107 O. L. 489.

On authority of the above cited case we must hold that, although section 1453, as amended by house bill No. 115, was filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state one day later than house bill No. 163, and by reason of said fact went into effect one day later, the legislative intent, and not the order in which these bills were filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, must govern in the determination of the question of which bill is in force.

Therefore, answering your question specifically, I am of the opinion that section 1453 as amended by house bill No. 163 is in force and effect and repeals section 1453 as amended by amended house bill No. 115.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LIQUOR LICENSE LAW—HOLDER OF LICENSE THEREUNDER IS PERMITTED TO CONTINUE IN BUSINESS UNDER MANAGER—WHEN CALLED INTO FEDERAL SERVICE UNDER DRAFT LAW.

The holder of a liquor license under our liquor license law, who has been called into the federal service under the provisions of the federal selective draft act, is permitted to continue the conduct of his business with a fit manager or agent in charge of his place of business, and a going away from his place of business under such circumstances would not jeopardize his license.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1917.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of September 4, 1917, you write me that you are in receipt of a letter containing the following:

"We have a client who has been called to the service of the U. S. army. He has been examined by the board and has passed examination. He is not claiming any exemptions.

"He is also operating a saloon under a properly issued license. The question arises as to whether or not under the law he is bound of necessity to sell or dispose of his business, surrender his license, or whether or not there is authority for authorizing his continuing the business by an agent.

"We would appreciate an answer, determining what the ruling of the board is upon this question."

You further state that you are in receipt of a number of inquiries of like kind from different parts of the state, towit, as to whether licensees who have been called to the colors may continue their business. You also state that the license law does not seem to contemplate a manager for any licensee except for a corporation, and that it would seem a hardship for men who are called to the service of their country, temporarily, to be compelled to dispose of their business, and that you are desirous of having an opinion upon the subject.

Under the so-called liquor licensing act, county liquor licensing boards are authorized to grant saloon and wholesale licenses, permitting the holders thereof to engage in the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors.

Section 1261-34 G. C. determines to whom licenses shall not be granted. It will be noted that this language is wholly in the negative and follows the constitutional amendment, Sec. 9 of Art. XIV. This constitutional section, while it provides generally that license to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be granted in this state, and license laws operative throughout the state shall be passed with such restrictions and regulations as may be provided by law, speaks negatively under its further provisions, with the exception of the provision for revoking a license if the holder thereof is interested in the business at another place, and also for the revocation of a license where the licensee has been more than once convicted for a violation of the laws in force to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors, and the further provision that no license shall thereafter be granted to him.

The constitution provides for the two cases for revocation as above stated. The statute, section 1261-34 G. C., provides for the revocation of a license where the licensee is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place. This section also provides that no saloon license shall be issued to any person who has not been a resident of Ohio for more than one year preceding the date of his application.

Under section 1261-49 G. C. there is further provision for both the suspension and revocation of a license. This suspension or revocation is for violation of laws and ordinances by the licensee after having once been convicted of offenses under laws or ordinances concerning the sale of intoxicating liquors.

Section 1261-51 G. C. prohibits the licensee from removing his place of business to a place other than that set forth in his application, unless with the consent of the county board.

In the granting of a license, the county board is prohibited by law from granting same to certain persons. It therefore devolves upon such board to find that the person to whom license is to be granted does not come within the inhibition, and in this conclusion they necessarily make a finding that he possesses certain qualifications.

Since the license cannot be granted to a person who is not a citizen of the United States, or who is not of good moral character, or who is a minor or who is of unsound mind, and, in the case of saloon licenses, who has not been a resident of Ohio for more than one year preceding the date of his application, there must necessarily be a finding that the person is a citizen of the United States, of good moral character, legal age and sound mind, and has been a resident of Ohio, in the case of a saloon license, for more than one year preceding the date of his application.

When a license has once been granted, under the constitution and under our license law, it shall be deemed revoked when a licensee is more than once convicted for a violation of the laws in force to regulate the traffic of intoxicating liquors, or when it shall appear that either the licensee is interested in the business conducted in some other place, or that other persons than the licensee are pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is held.

Under the statute (Sec. 1261-49 G. C.), the right is given the county board in the first instance to suspend a license if said board, after due notice to the licensee and a full hearing, finds that the licensee has, during the license year, been once convicted of an offense under laws or ordinances concerning the sale of intoxicating liquors, and after said conviction has violated said laws or ordinances. This section further provides that if after such conviction and suspension the offenses are, during said license year, again repeated, the said board may, after due notice, as therein provided, and a hearing, revoke said license.

A liquor license under our license law is merely a permit granted to the applicant to carry on the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors, and it has been held that it has been granted to the recipient of it because of his personal fitness to receive it and act thereunder. Being a personal trust, it would not be transferable, were it not for our specific statutory provision therefor. The licensee takes the license with the understanding and full knowledge that the matter is at all times within the control and sovereign power of the state, and is deemed to have consented to all proper conditions and restrictions, not only which have already been imposed by the legislature, but which may in the future be imposed by it, subject of course to such constitutional limitations as exist.

The right to revoke a license can only be given for the cause and in the manner prescribed by statute. This has been the holding of the New York courts.

Lyman v. Malcom Brewing Co., 160 N. Y. 96.
People v. Woodmen, 15 Daly 136.

I think it is well settled by the authorities that when a license has once issued under the provisions of a license law, and in that same law provisions are made for the revocation of such license, such provisions are exclusive. Any inherent right that a body authorized to issue licenses generally might have to revoke same, in the absence of express provisions regarding revocation, is taken away by the legislature in making such express provisions for said revocation.

In the cases of the licensees concerning whom you inquire, the county liquor licensing board which has issued to them a license has under the law found that at the time of the granting thereof they were citizens of the United States, of good moral character, and had been residents of Ohio for one year preceding the date of their application. Under the federal selective draft act these licensees were drawn for service in defense of their country. Their departure from the county of their place of business while willing, as becomes their patriotic duty, was by the very terms of the draft law legally the result of the demand of the federal government. It is my opinion, therefore, that there is nothing in our liquor licensing act or in the constitution of Ohio which would either permit or authorize a forfeiture or a revocation of these licenses merely because such licensees were called to the colors.

It may be, although the language of the act is susceptible of a different construction, that the provision requiring residence in Ohio for more than one year preceding the date of the application for license is a continuing qualification. Yet I am satisfied that no court would hold that the selective call to the federal service and the temporary absence of a licensee on that account would work a loss of residence in this state. I am satisfied that under the election law such temporary absence would not prevent an elector under said circumstances from having his vote received, if he returned to his voting place after having been thus away, and I am more strongly of the opinion that such a person would not lose his vote since the Ohio election law now expressly provides for the voting of absent electors, and this statute was passed in view of the fact that many of the electors of the state by being called to the service of their country would be without the confines of the state on election day.

In your communication you suggest that the license law contemplates a manager for a corporation, but there is no mention of any manager for a licensee other than a corporation. While it is true that section 1261-34 G. C. provides a manager or managers of the place of business belonging to a corporation or other associations of persons applying for license, and prescribes the qualifications of such manager or managers, still there is nothing in the law declaring that a natural person could not designate a manager or managers.

It is well known that the matter of granting licenses to corporations and associations of persons was recognized as a peculiar grant, and that this grant was particularly taken care of by the provision for a particular kind of manager. The law, however, while it does not specifically grant to an individual licensee the authority to appoint agents or managers to conduct his business, does certainly assume that such licensee would have such employes.

Section 1261-71 G. C. provides that:

> "No licensee, agent or employe of a licensee shall be held to answer for an offense under any laws or ordinances regulating the sale or traffic in intoxicating liquors before any probate court * * *."

Section 1261-65 G. C. prohibits a licensee from knowingly employing or keeping in his employ a person who has been a licensee and whose license has been revoked, or a person who has been a licensee and has been refused a renewal thereof because he was not of good moral character.

Under a similar liquor license act in Indiana it has been repeatedly held that a licensed retailer of intoxicating liquors may employ an agent to conduct and carry on the business, and that such an agent would not be liable to prosecution for selling without a license.

Pickens v. State, 20 Ind. 116.
Runyon v. State, 52 Ind. 320.
Keiser v. State, 58 Ind. 379.
Heath v. State, 105 Ind. 342.

In Pelley v. Wills, 141 Ind. 688, it was said:

> "A liquor dealer is responsible for actionable injuries caused by sales of liquors made by his agent or servant, and it is no defense that such sale was made without his knowledge or against his express orders."

In 1895 the Indiana liquor licensing act was further amended as follows:

> "No more than one license shall be granted or issued to any one person, and in no case to any person other than the actual owner and proprietor of said business, who must apply in his own name and be a continuous resident of the township, in which the application for license is made, at least ninety days prior to the time of application."

Prior to that time the law did not require the applicant to be a resident either of the county in which he made his application or of any other subdivision of the state. It was sufficient, as to the matter of residence, if he was an inhabitant of the state. In this it was similar to our law, which requires that the applicant be a resident of the state.

In Welsh v. State, 126 Ind. 71, it was contended that this required a person to whom the license issued to be a citizen of the state, but the supreme court held that the only requirement was that he be a mere inhabitant. That this provision did not require the licensee to remain within the confines of the county for which the license was issued, is apparent, for the Indiana general assembly deemed it necessary by the act of 1895 to make provision that the applicant should be a continuous resident of the township.

In Krant v. State, 47 Ind. 519, the court had under consideration a liquor statute which provided that the applicant must be a resident voter of such county and a citizen of the state of Indiana. The court said the legislature evidently intended to provide that the person who received the permit should, during the existence of such permit, remain a resident voter of the county and a citizen of the state of Indiana, but that a voluntary removal from the state of the person having a permit would work a forfeiture of the rights and privileges under it. In that case they assumed the right of the licensee to have an agent who would have charge of his business, for they further found that when the authority of the principal was determined by his voluntary and permanent removal from the state, the authority of the agent who was conducting the business necessarily ceased.

Even in those jurisdictions where a license is not transferable, it is held that the licensee may carry on business by an agent at the place designated in the license, and that the agent will not be responsible criminally for selling without a license.

A servant may carry on his master's business at a place and have sole charge thereof, and will not be guilty of selling without a license if his master holds a license for that place.

Runyon v. State, 52 Ind. 320.

Of course such sale by the agent or servant is a sale by the principal or the licensee.

In view of the similarity of the Indiana liquor license law, and in consideration of what is provided in our statutes, I am constrained to hold that a licensee who has been drafted into the federal army, necessitating his absence from the place where he is engaged in trafficking in intoxicating liquors, does not of necessity have to sell or dispose of his business and surrender his license. He may put a fit person in charge of his business, who would stand in the shoes of the licensee and render such licensee liable for his every act. Any cause for forfeiture or revocation occurring by act of such agent or manager in the absence of the licensee would be cause for forfeiture or revocation of the license, the same as if such acts had been committed by the licensee.

I do not think it makes any difference whether a person so placed in charge is called a manager, agent or head bartender, but there should be some person who would occupy a managerial capacity, and if such a one were placed in charge, I could see no reason why a business would not go on just as legally as if the licensee were in charge.

Of course it must not be understood that there is any holding in this opinion that a licensee can leave his place of business for an indefinite time, and that such a voluntary going away would not subject such license to be attacked. My holding is that a temporary going away from the place of business would not affect in any way the rights of the licensee, especially under the circumstances set forth in your communication.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DEPUTY SHERIFF—MAY SERVE AS CHIEF PROBATION OFFICER WITHOUT SALARY—OFFICES COMPATIBLE.

Deputy sheriff of a county may legally serve as chief probation officer where he is appointed without salary and receives only his expenses, such as livery hire, etc.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1917.

HON. PERRY POORMAN, Probate Judge, Paulding, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of August 17, 1917, as follows:

> "Can the deputy sheriff of a county legally serve as chief probation officer and if so can he be appointed without any salary and receive only his expenses, such as livery hire, etc."

On November 15, 1913, my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, rendered an opinion as found in Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1913, Vol. 2, p. 1439, in which he held:

> "Where a deputy sheriff is paid for such services as he performs during the year, and his time is only partially taken up with his work as deputy sheriff, such an officer is eligible to appointment as probation officer, where the duties of both will not require all the time of the appointee, and there will be no conflict between the two positions. This does not apply to deputy sheriffs under a regular salary whose entire time is covered by his compensation."

My attention has been called to the fact that the duties of deputy sheriffs in some of the smaller counties of the state, including those deputies serving on a regular salary, are such as to allow them sufficient time to also act as probation officer, and where this can be done without conflicting with the services of the deputy as such deputy sheriff, and such deputy will act without salary, I can see no reason why the same should not be allowed and the actual expense of such deputy, when acting as such probation officer, paid as in other cases.

I, therefore, advise you that the arrangement which you contemplate may be legally effected.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

EMBALMER'S LICENSE—APPLICANT WHO HAS FAILED IN EXAMINATION—MAY SECURE SAME BY AFFIDAVIT—IF ELIGIBLE.

An applicant for an embalmer's license who has failed in the examination may, if he is eligible notwithstanding such failure, secure a license by affidavit under section 1343 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1917.

HON. B. G. JONES, Secretary-Treasurer, State Board of Embalming Examiners, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion upon the following proposition:

"If an applicant for an embalmer's license has taken an examination and failed, can this applicant secure a license by affidavit, assuming that the said applicant comes in under section 1343 G. C.?"

Section 1342 of the General Code provides that every person who desires to engage in the practice of embalming or the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation, in the state of Ohio, shall make a written application to the state board of embalming examiners, to be registered by said board, and in said application shall give to the board such information as it may require for such applicant to be registered, but the fees mentioned in said section must accompany the application and also certificates of three reputable citizens, one of which shall be a licensed embalmer, that the proposed applicant is of good moral character and stating his age and general education, which general education shall be at least such as will entitle the applicant to admission to a high school in this state. If the board finds the facts set forth in the application to be true, it shall issue to the applicant a certificate of registration and the registered applicant can then be admitted to an examination in the branches or subjects provided for in section 1341 G. C., which subjects are as follows:

(a) Visceral anatomy and vascular system of the human body.
(b) The action and comparative value of germicides.
(c) The methods of embalming and of preparing bodies for transportation.
(d) The meaning of "contagion," "infection," the dangers they beget, and the best methods of their restriction and arrest, and bacteriology in relation to contagion and infection.
(e) The signs of death and the manner in which they are determined.
(f) Practical demonstrations on a cadaver.

By section 1343 it is provided that if the state board of embalming examiners finds that the applicant possesses all of the necessary qualifications, as prescribed in the preceding section, and has passed a satisfactory examination in the above mentioned subjects, then such board shall register the applicant as a duly licensed embalmer. It is further provided, however, in section 1343 G. C. that the provisions of said section, and of the preceding sections, shall not apply to any person who is now holding a valid license issued by the state board of embalming examiners of Ohio and which license is in force on July 1, 1917, nor shall it apply to any person who was engaged in the practice of embalming or preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation, prior to January 1, 1903, if such person who has so engaged prior to January 1, 1903, has had at least three years' practical experience and if such person further, prior to January 1, 1918, makes an application to the state board of embalming examiners for a license to practice embalming in this state.

There is nothing in any of said sections which provides that a person who makes an application to take an examination and fails at such examination shall be barred from filing the application mentioned in section 1343 G. C., and secure an application through experience and service.

It is stated as a fact in your letter, and I am assuming the same to be true for the purposes of this opinion, that such applicant does have the experience required by said section; that is, he had had at least three years' practical experience and that he was engaged in the practice of embalming or the preparation of the dead for burial, cremation or transportation prior to January 1, 1903. This being true, and there being no inhibition against any such person being registered after he has once taken an examination and failed, I must advise you that that fact alone—that is, the fact that he has failed in an examination—will not prohibit him from securing a license under the provisions of section 1343, above mentioned.

Therefore, answering your question specifically, I advise you that an applicant who has taken an examination and has failed, can secure a license by and through the provisions of section 1343 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRACTION ENGINE—OPERATION UPON CITY STREETS—WHEN EQUIPPED WITH CLEATS.

Under the provisions of section 13421-12 G. C. (107 O. L. 652), it is lawful to operate a traction engine or tractor over the paved streets of a municipality where the said traction engine or tractor is equipped with cleats to prevent the same from slipping.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am rendering this opinion through your department, in reference to a matter submitted to me by Hon. T. P. Cadle, solicitor of Mentor village, as I deem the matter of sufficient importance to warrant my rendering an opinion thereon. The letter addressed to me by the solicitor of Mentor village reads as follows:

> "Will you kindly advise me whether section 13421-12 of the General Code, as amended in 1917, allows the operation of traction engines upon paved streets, with the tires of such engines equipped as has been the custom in the past—with iron strips about one-half inch in width running diagonally across the tire and placed six to eight inches apart? * * *"

Said communication calls for a construction of section 13421-12 G. C. (107 O. L. 652), which reads as follows:

> "Whoever drives over the improved highways of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, a traction engine or tractor with tires or wheels equipped with ice picks, spuds, spikes, chains or other projections of any kind extending beyond the cleats shall be fined for each offense not less than ten dollars nor more than one hundred dollars. The terms 'traction engine' or 'tractor' as used in this act, shall apply to all self-propelling engines equipped with metal-tired wheels operated or propelled by any form of engine, motor or mechanical power, used for agricultural purposes. No city, county, village or township shall adopt, enforce or maintain any ordinance, rule or regulation contrary to or inconsistent with the terms of this act; or require of any person any license tax upon or registration fee for any traction engine, tractor, or trailer, or any permit or license to operate. Operators of traction engines or tractors shall have the same rights, upon the public streets and highways as the drivers of any other vehicles unless some other safe and convenient way is provided, and no public road open to traffic shall be closed to traction engines or tractors."

The question directly in issue is whether the owners of traction engines may run the same over the paved streets of a village when the tires of such engine are equipped with iron strips about one-half inch in width, running diagonally across the tire and placed six to eight inches apart.

It will be noted that the section to which reference is made reads as follows:

"Whoever drives over the improved highways of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, a traction engine or tractor with tires or wheels equipped with ice picks, spuds, spikes, chains or other projections of any kind extending beyond the cleats shall be fined for each offense not less than ten dollars nor more than one hundred dollars. * * *"

It will be noted that this provision does not state that the traction engine shall not be equipped with ice picks, spuds, spikes, chains or other projections of any kind extending beyond the tires or wheels of the engine, but it provides that the tires or wheels shall not be equipped with ice picks, spuds, spikes, chains or other projections of any kind extending beyond the cleats.

From this language it is quite evident that the legislature intended that it would be lawful to equip the tires or wheels of a traction engine or tractor with cleats, but that it would be unlawful to equip the tires or wheels with a projection of any kind that would extend beyond the cleats.

The question immediately arises as to whether the strips placed diagonally across the wheels of the traction engine as set forth in the communication, are cleats.

The Standard Dictionary defines cleat as follows:

"A strip of wood or iron fastened across other material, as a board or boards, to strengthen, keep in place, prevent slipping, etc."

The Century Dictionary defines the same word as follows:

"A piece of wood nailed down to secure something from slipping."

From these definitions of the word cleat and from what is commonly and generally understood to be the meaning of said word, it would seem to me that the strips placed upon the traction engines as suggested in the communication would come within the meaning of the word cleat. Evidently this was the meaning which the legislature attached to the word cleat as used in the statute; that is, the legislature contemplated that it would be necessary to place something upon the wheels of a traction engine, in order to prevent its slipping, and in using a term to apply to these strips it used the word cleat.

I might say in passing that it seems to me that a strip of iron one-half inch in width is unreasonably narrow, when one takes into consideration the damage to which the roads would be subjected, from the use of a strip so narrow. However, this is a matter of fact to be determined by the legislature and not one of law to be passed upon by this department or the courts. The legislature has not seen fit to limit the width of the strip or cleat used on traction engines, nor the distance apart at which these strips or cleats must be placed upon the wheels, and until the legislature sees fit to speak in reference to this matter, this department and the courts are without authority to pass upon same.

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that under the provisions of section 13421-12 G. C. (107 O. L. 652), it is lawful to equip a traction engine or tractor with cleats or iron strips, and that the owner of an engine so equipped has the right to operate the same upon the paved streets of a village.

Of course it will be noted in the latter part of the section that some other safe and convenient way of travel may be provided. If this should be done, then the owners of said traction engines could be prohibited from using the improved public streets and highways of the state.

In passing I might call attention to section 7246 G. C. (107 O. L. 139). This section provides that no traction engine weighing in excess of twelve tons shall be operated over and upon the improved public streets, highways, bridges or culverts within the state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EMBALMING EXAMINERS—THREE MEMBERS—OFFICERS OF DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH CANNOT SIT AS ADVISORY MEMBERS.

The state board of embalming examiners consists of only three members, one to be appointed each year for a term of three years and as the terms of the present members expire.

The laws creating the state board of health having been repealed and the state department of health being a new and a different body, its executive and clerical officers cannot sit as advisory members of the state board of embalming examiners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1917.

HON. B. G. JONES, Secretary State Board of Embalming Examiners, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion upon the following proposition:

> "The new law regulating the practice of embalming in this state designates the president and the secretary of the Ohio state board of health as members of the state board of embalming examiners.
> "As the new law creating a state department of health of Ohio does not designate who shall be members of our board, I respectfully ask for your opinion in order that I may get out such printing matter at as early a date as possible."

General Code section 1335 provides that there shall be a state board of embalming examiners consisting of five members and that the president and secretary of the state board of health shall be ex officio advisory members and that the other three members of the state board of embalming examiners shall be residents of the state of Ohio and shall have had not less than five consecutive years' experience previous to their appointment in the practice of embalming and be regularly licensed embalmers by the state board of embalming examiners of Ohio.

Section 1336 G. C. provides that the members of the state board of embalming examiners who were such members at the time said section became effective, which was July 2, 1917, shall continue in office until the terms for which they were originally appointed shall expire, and that the governor shall, each year, appoint one member of such board who shall serve for a term of three years from the first day of July of said appointment.

Section 1338 G. C. provides that two members shall constitute a quorum at all meetings of said board.

Section 1232 G. C., prior to the time of its amendment in 107 O. L. 522, read as follows:

> "There shall be a state board of health, consisting of eight members, seven of whom shall be appointed by the governor. Each year the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, shall appoint a member of the board, who shall serve for a term of seven years from the thirteenth day of December. The attorney-general shall be ex-officio a member of the board."

Section 1233, which was in force at the same time, provided for the organization of the board of health, as follows:

> "The state board of health shall meet in Columbus during the month of January of each year and at such other times as it may direct. A majority of its members shall constitute a quorum. The board shall choose one of its members as president, and, subject to the provisions of this chapter, may adopt rules and by-laws for its government."

Section 1234, in force at the same time, provided that the state board of health shall elect a secretary who shall perform the duties prescribed by the board. Section 1237 contained the general powers of the board and read as follows:

> "The state board of health shall have supervision of all matters relating to the preservation of the life and health of the people and have supreme authority in matters of quarantine, which it may declare and enforce, when none exists, and modify, relax or abolish, when it has been established. It may make special or standing orders or regulations for preventing the spread of contagious and infectious diseases, for governing the receipt and conveyance of remains of deceased persons and for such other sanitary matters as it deems best to control by a general rule. It may make and enforce orders in local matters when emergency exists, or when the local board of health has neglected or refused to act with sufficient promptness or efficiency, or when such board has not been established as provided by law. In such cases the necessary expense incurred shall be paid by the city, village or township for which the services are rendered."

Sections 1239 and 1239-1 contain special powers of the board and read as follows:

> "Sec. 1239. The state board of health shall make careful inquiry as to the cause of disease, especially when contagious, infectious, epidemic or endemic, and take prompt action to control and suppress it. The reports of births and deaths, the sanitary conditions and effects of localities and employments, the personal and business habits of the people and the relation of the diseases of man and beast, shall be subjects of careful study by the board. It may make and execute orders necessary to protect the people against diseases of lower animals, and shall collect and preserve information in respect to such matters and kindred subjects as may be useful in the discharge of its duties and for dissemination among the people. When called upon by the state or local governments, or municipal or township boards of health, it shall promptly investigate and report upon the water supply, sewerage, disposal of excreta of any locality and the heating, plumbing and ventilation of a public building.

"Sec. 1239-1. The state board of health shall make necessary arrangements for the production and distribution of diphtheria antitoxin, provided that such antitoxin shall in all respects be equal in purity and potency to the standard of requirements of the United States public health service for antitoxin for interstate commerce. Diphtheria antitoxin shall be distributed in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be adopted by the state board of health."

Sections 1232, 1233 and 1234, above mentioned, were amended in senate bill No. 101, passed March 21, 1917, approved by the governor March 30, 1917, and filed in the office of the secretary of state March 31, 1917, and are found in 107 O. L. 522, as follows:

"Sec. 1232. There is hereby created a state department of health, which shall exercise all the powers and perform all the duties now conferred and imposed by law upon the state board of health and all such powers, duties, procedure and penalties for violation of its sanitary regulations shall be construed to have been transferred to the state department of health by this act. The state department of health shall exercise such further powers and perform such other duties as are herein conferred. The state department of health shall consist of a commissioner of health and a public health council.

"Sec. 1233. There shall be a commissioner of health, who shall be the administrative and executive head of the state department of health. The public health council, hereinafter provided for, shall, with the approval of the governor, appoint a commissioner of health, who shall be a physician, skilled in sanitary science, who shall serve for a term of five years and until his successor is appointed and qualified. The commissioner of health shall perform all executive duties now required by law of the state board of health and the secretary of the state board of health and such other duties as are incident to his position as chief executive officer. He shall administer the laws relating to health and sanitation and the regulations of the state department of health. He shall prepare sanitary regulations for consideration by the public health council and shall submit to said council recommendations for new legislation. During his term of office, the commissioner of health shall devote his entire time to the duties of his office. The salary of the commissioner of health shall be fixed by the public health council, subject to approval by the governor.

"Sec. 1234. There shall be a public health council, to consist of the commissioner of health, and four members hereinafter called the appointive members, to be appointed by the governor. Of the appointive members, at least two shall be physicians, who shall have had training or experience in sanitary science. Of the appointive members first appointed, one shall hold office until July 1, 1918, one until July 1, 1919, one until July 1, 1920, and one until July 1, 1921, and the term of office of members thereafter appointed, except to fill vacancies, shall be four years. Vacancies shall be filled by appointment by the governor for the unexpired term. The public health council shall meet four times each year and may meet at such other times as the business of the council may require. The time and place for holding regular meetings shall be fixed in the by-laws of the council. Special meetings may be called upon request of any three members of the council or upon request of the commissioner of health and may be held at any place deemed advisable by the council or commissioner. Two members of the public health council and the commissioner of health shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. The governor shall, on or before July 1st designate the member of the public health council who shall act as its chairman for the ensuing fiscal year. The commissioner of health shall, upon the request of the public health council, detail an officer or employe of the state department of health to act as secretary of the public health council, and shall detail from time to time such other employes as the public health council may require. The appointive member of the public health council shall receive ten dollars a day while in conference and shall be reimbursed their necessary and reasonable traveling and other expenses incurred in the performance of their official duties."

So that, instead of having a state board of health, as was provided by our laws at the time the embalming board sections were amended, we had at the time said amendments became effective a state department of health and a public health council. Instead of the body consisting of eight members, as provided by the old section 1232, the public health council now consists of five members. Instead of electing a president and secretary, the governor now designates one member as chairman and the commissioner of health shall, upon request of the public health council, detail an officer or employe of the state department of health to act as secretary of the public health council.

In other words, the entire system is now changed. The commissioner of health is the executive head of the state department of health and the board of four act very much in an advisory capacity only. It cannot, therefore, be considered that any of the members of the present state department of health perform the same duties or occupy the same positions as did the president and secretary of the state board of health. In other words, there is no president and secretary of the state board of health at this time and there was no president and secretary of the state board of health on July 2, 1917, when said embalming board sections went into effect, for the amended sections 1232, 1233 and 1234, above quoted, were in effect prior to that time.

I, therefore, advise you that the present state board of embalming examiners consist of three members only, two of which, as provided by section 1338, shall constitute a quorum to do business.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—ABSTRACT OF TITLE—CHARLES M. LUDMAN AND WIFE TO STATE OF OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1917.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary of Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You recently submitted to this department an abstract of title covering the following described premises:

> Situate in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin and state of Ohio, and bounded and described as follows:
> Beginning at a point in the north line of King avenue at the southwest corner of Elizabeth J. McMillen's homestead addition, being the southwest corner of lot 129 in said addition; thence northwardly with the west line of said addition 158 feet to a point in the north line of an alley in the rear of said lot 129, and being the southwest corner of a tract marked "Reserve" on the plat of said homestead addition; thence eastwardly with the north line of said alley and the south line of said Reserve 92 feet to the southeast corner of said Reserve, and the west line of the first alley west of Perry street; thence northwardly with the east line of said Reserve and the west line of said alley 483.65 feet to a point 140 feet south of the north line of said addition; thence west 20 feet to a point; thence north 140 feet to a point in the north line of said addition being 20 feet west of the northeast corner of said Reserve; thence eastwardly along the north line of an alley on the north side of said addition to a point 100 feet west of an iron pin in the west line of Perry street; thence with a line parallel with the west line of Perry street produced northwardly north 3° 14′ east and 100 feet distant from the west line of Perry street 617 feet to a point in the north line of said McMillen's land, and being the south line of lands of The Ohio State University; thence westwardly along the south line of lands of The Ohio State University 252.76 feet; thence southwardly and parallel with the west line of Perry street produced northwardly and with the west line of Perry street 1400-15/100 feet to north line of King avenue distant 102.76 feet westwardly from beginning; thence eastwardly with the north line of King avenue 102.76 feet more or less to beginning; being a parcel off of the east side of tract 'C' set off in partition to Wm. N. King in case of Elizabeth King v. Wm. N. King, Court of Common Pleas of Franklin County, Ohio.

With the abstract you also sent a deed covering the same piece of property, wherein Charles M. Ludman and Anna B. Ludman, his wife, deeded said property to the state of Ohio.

I have carefully examined said abstract, dated September 14, 1917, and note several lapses and defects in the title. These defects, however, are immaterial, as they all occurred prior to the year 1853 and are, therefore, cured by lapse of time.

I find that the title to the premises described is in the name of Charles M. Ludman and that the deed submitted will convey a clear title to the state of Ohio, save and except for the taxes for 1917, which are now a lien on said premises, and special taxes for the improvement of Perry street, against three hundred and forty-two feet, balance unpaid, $1,193.10, of which the second installment, amounting to $132.57, and one year's interest at four and one-half per cent, will be due in June, 1918. Balance unpaid against fifty-seven feet, for improvement of Perry street, $198.88, of which the second installment, amounting to $22.10, and one year's interest at four and one-half per cent, will be due in June, 1918.

The deed submitted, if accepted, will fully convey the title to the state of Ohio, but in the form submitted the said Charles M. Ludman covenants that he is lawfully seized of the premises and that said premises are free and clear of all incumbrances. The amount of taxes for the year 1917 and the special taxes above noted should be deducted from the purchase price.

I am, herewith returning to you the abstract and deed submitted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BRIDGES AND CULVERTS—FOOT BRIDGES—WHO HAS AUTHORITY TO BUILD AND REPAIR THE SAME ON STATE, COUNTY AND TOWNSHIP ROADS.

1. In the matter of building foot bridges, the statutes seem to give no power or authority to any board excepting to the township trustees. (Sec. 7562-1 G. C.)

2. There is no provision of law by virtue of which the jurisdiction of the township trustees and the county commissioners in the building of bridges and culverts on the highways of the county is determined by the cost of the construction of the same. (Sec. 7562 G. C., now repealed.)

3. In the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of bridges and culverts on state roads, the state highway commissioner has jurisdiction, under section 1224 G. C. (107 O. L. 133.)

4. In the construction of bridges and culverts located on county and township roads, as well as the maintenance and repair of bridges so located, the county commissioners have jurisdiction.

5. In the maintenance and repair of culverts located on county and township roads, both the county commissioners and township trustees have jurisdiction, in their respective townships and counties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1917.

HON. JOSEPH T. MICKLEWAIT, Prosecuting Attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 27, 1917, in which you ask my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Has a board of county commissioners authority under the road laws of this state to construct and maintain a bridge, either wagon or foot, on a township road?

"2. Have the township trustees authority to construct such a bridge?

"3. Has the board of county commissioners, jointly with the township trustees, the authority to build such a bridge?

"4. Does the jurisdiction of either of these boards depend upon the amount to be expended on such a bridge?"

The fundamental principle underlying the propositions submitted to me for my opinion is one of considerable importance to the counties and townships of the state and I must admit at the outset of this opinion that I find it extremely difficult to give a satisfactory answer to one or two of the propositions contained in your communication.

The statutes have been so modified and are now in such a condition that it is not easy to arrive at an understanding as to which political subdivision, the county or the townships, is to build or construct the bridges and culverts located on a township road.

There are two matters suggested in your communication about which there is possibly not so much difficulty and I will first dispose of them.

Your fourth question is as to whether the jurisdiction of either the board of county commissioners or the board of township trustees depends upon the amount to be expended on such a bridge. It is my opinion that the amount to be expended on the construction of a bridge has nothing whatever to do with the matter of determining which board has the jurisdiction.

Formerly, section 7562 G. C. provided as follows:

> "The township trustees shall cause to be built and kept in repair all bridges and culverts, except upon improved and free turnpike roads, when the cost of construction does not exceed fifty dollars, and shall keep in repair all bridges constructed by the commissioners. Such repair by said trustees of a bridge in any year shall not exceed ten dollars and they may levy a tax for the payment thereof."

Under the provisions of this section the dividing line between the jurisdiction of the county commissioners and that of the township trustees, in the building and repairing of bridges and culverts, was fixed at fifty dollars, but this section has been repealed and nothing embodying the same idea has been enacted to take its place. Hence, I am of the opinion as above stated.

You also ask who has authority to construct a foot bridge located on a township road. I have made a careful examination of our statutes and find but one section which relates to the construction and maintenance of foot bridges, namely, section 7562-1 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "That the trustees of any township are authorized and empowered to construct, rebuild and repair foot-bridges across the rivers and streams in their respective townships when they may deem it necessary so to do in order to provide convenient means of access to the public schools of their said township by the pupils residing in the school district, wherein a public school house is located; but in no case shall the cost of the aforesaid construction, rebuilding or repair of any said foot-bridge exceed the sum of one thousand dollars."

Under the provisions of this section it is my opinion that only the township trustees have authority and are empowered to construct and keep in repair foot bridges across the rivers and streams in their respective townships, under the limitations and conditions set out in said section 7562-1 G. C.

We come now to the question which causes the main difficulty in giving a satisfactory answer, viz., the jurisdiction of the county commissioners and the township trustees in the matter of constructing and maintaining bridges and culverts on the highways of the state, and I must admit in the beginning that I am not able to give a very satisfactory answer to this question, owing to the uncertainty of the provisions of our statutes as they now exist in reference to this matter.

I note your question is limited to the construction and maintenance of bridges upon the township roads of the state, but this raises the general question as to the jurisdiction of the state, the county and the township in the construction and maintenance of bridges and culverts. In order to have a correct starting point for the consideration of this question, it is well that we keep in mind the provisions of section 7464 G. C. This section classifies the roads of the state upon a different basis than they were classified before the enactment of said section. The section divides the roads of the state into state, county and township roads and defines specifically the roads which shall come within each one of the classes so named. For the purposes of this opinion it is not necessary for me to define the different kinds of roads.

For the purpose of making the matter as clear as possible, let us first eliminate from consideration the bridges and culverts which are located upon state roads.

Section 1224 G. C. provides that:

> "The state highway commissioner shall maintain and repair to the required standard, all inter-county highways, main market roads and bridges and culverts constructed by the state, by the aid of state money or taken over by the state after being constructed."

Further along in this section we find the following provision:

> "When a bridge or culvert on a state highway shall require renewing, it shall be constructed and the cost apportioned as herein provided for the construction and improvement of bridges and culverts on intercounty highways."

Section 1197 G. C. sets forth the method of payment.

From these provisions it is quite evident that the state must maintain the bridges and culverts, under the conditions set out in section 1224 G. C., on state highways, and when a bridge or culvert on a state highway must be renewed or constructed, the state and the county each pays half of the cost thereof.

With the bridges and culverts on state highways eliminated, I will now turn to the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of bridges and culverts located on county and township roads, with a view to ascertaining which subdivision, the county or the township, has jurisdiction therein. This question causes the main difficulty in giving a satisfactory answer.

Section 7464 G. C. classifies the roads of the state upon a different basis than they had been classified prior to the enactment of the Cass highway law. While they are still denominated state, county and township roads, yet they are classified upon an entirely different basis. It will be well to keep this in mind in the further consideration of this question.

With the above in mind, I will turn to the provisions of a number of sections which throw considerable light upon your question, although they do not appear to answer the same as specifically and definitely as one might desire. We are compelled to draw our conclusions by way of inference, rather than from any direct provision of the statutes relative to the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of bridges and culverts located on roads other than state roads.

Section 7182 G. C. (107 O. L. 110) provides:

> "The county surveyor shall have charge of all highways, bridges and culverts within his county under control of the state, unless another engineer be appointed for that purpose by the state highway commissioner. * * *"

This provision simply strengthens the provisions of section 1224 G. C., above quoted and commented upon, in reference to bridges and culverts located upon state roads.

In section 7184 G. C. (107 O. L. 111), we find the following provisions:

> "(1) The county surveyor shall have general charge of the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all bridges and highways within his county under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners.
> "(2) The county surveyor shall also have general charge of the construction, reconstruction, resurfacing or improvement of roads by township trustees under the provisions of sections 3298-1 to 3298-15n inclusive of the General Code.
> "(3) The county surveyor shall have general charge of the construction, reconstruction, resurfacing or improvement of the roads of a road district under the provisions of sections 3298-25 to 3298-53 inclusive of the General Code. * * *"

The matter to which I desire to call attention in the above quotations is, that the county surveyor is given charge of "all highways, bridges and culverts within his county under the control of the state." He is also given charge of "all bridges and highways within his county under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners." But when it comes to the matter of the township trustees, he is merely given charge of the construction and improvement of "roads."

It seems to me this section clearly implies that the township trustees have no jurisdiction or authority in the construction of bridges and culverts and that the jurisdiction over bridges and culverts is divided between the county commissioners and the state highway commissioner; that is, the state is to build all bridges and culverts located on state roads, under the conditions set out in section 1224 G. C., while the county commissioners are to build all bridges and culverts located on the highways of the county, namely, on county and township roads, and not only would they be compelled to construct all bridges and culverts so located, but also to maintain all bridges. I will touch upon the maintenance of culverts later in the opinion.

I also desire to call attention to the provisions of section 7192 G. C. (107 O. L. 115). This section deals with supervision and is as follows:

> "(1) The county surveyor shall supervise the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the highways, bridges and culverts under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners;
> "(2) And shall also supervise the construction, reconstruction, resurfacing and improvement of public roads by township trustees under the provisions of sections 3298-1 to 3298-15n inclusive of the General Code, and sections 3298-25 to 3298-53 inclusive of the General Code.
> "(3) When the county surveyor has charge of the highways, bridges and culverts within his county, and under the control of the state, he shall also supervise the construction, reconstruction, improvement and repair of the same."

Thus again when it comes to the question of supervision, the county surveyor supervises the construction of the highways, bridges and culverts under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners, and the construction and improvement of the highways, bridges and culverts in his county under the control of the state. But when it comes to the supervision of matters under the jurisdiction of the township trustees, it is limited to public roads.

Here again it seems to me the conclusion is fairly inferable that the township trustees have no jurisdiction over the matter of building bridges and culverts, for if they had, bridges and culverts would have been included along with the words "public roads," just the same as they are when speaking of county and state roads. In reference to this point I desire to call attention to the provisions of section 7187 G. C. (107 O. L. 112). This section in part has to do with the approval of estimates and is as follows:

> "Sec. 7187. * * *
> "(1) The county surveyor shall approve all estimates which are paid from county funds for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of roads and bridges by the county. * * *"
> "(2) When the county surveyor has charge of the highways, bridges and culverts within his county, under control of the state, he shall approve all estimates which are paid by the state for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the same.
> "(3) He shall also approve all estimates which are paid from township funds for the construction, reconstruction, resurfacing or improvement of roads under the provisions of sections 3298-1 to 3298-15, inclusive, under the General Code.
> "(4) He shall also approve all estimates which are paid from the funds of a road district for the construction, reconstruction, resurfacing or improvement of the roads thereof under the provisions of sections 3298-25 to 3298-53 inclusive of the General Code."

The same observation that was made in reference to the other sections from which quotations were made along the same line can be made in reference to the provisions of this section. If the township trustees had been given authority to build and construct bridges and culverts, the county surveyor certainly would have been given the power to approve estimates in reference to the same.

I desire to make but one further quotation to the same effect and that provision is also found in section 7187 G. C., supra, being as follows:

> "* * * No contract for the construction of a bridge, the entire cost of which exceeds ten thousand dollars shall be binding upon the county unless the plans are first approved by the state highway commissioner. * * *; and upon notification by the state highway commissioner to the county commissioners and county surveyor that such plans must be submitted for approval no contract for such bridges or culverts shall be entered into by the county until such plans have been approved by the state highway commissioner."

Here again we find that the township trustees are entirely ignored, in reference to the matter of getting the approval of the state highway commissioner on a contract for the construction of bridges and culverts. From this I think it can reasonably be inferred that the legislature did not intend to give the township trustees jurisdiction over the matter of building bridges and culverts.

There are other provisions of the statutes which might be cited on the same point, but I simply desire to note two other sections.

Section 7198 G. C. (107 O. L. 115) reads as follows:

> "The county surveyor may when authorized by the county commissioners employ such laborers and teams, lease such implements and tools and purchase such material as may be necessary in the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance or repair of roads, bridges and culverts by force account."

This section shows pretty clearly that the county commissioners have authority not only to construct bridges and culverts in the county, but also to maintain and repair bridges and culverts located on county and township roads. I shall note later that the township trustees also seem to have authority to maintain and repair culverts.

Section 7200 G. C. (107 O. L. 115) reads in part as follows:

"The county commissioners may purchase such machinery, tools or other equipment for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of the highway, bridges and culverts under their jurisdiction as they may deem necessary, which shall be paid for out of the road funds of the county. * * *"

The provisions of this section are to the same effect as those of section 7198, supra; that is, that the county commissioners have the authority not only to construct bridges and culverts upon the county and township roads, but also to maintain the same.

When we compare the provisions of sections 3298-18 G. C. (107 O. L. 82) and 6956-1 G. C., we are compelled to arrive at the same conclusion, for section 3298-18 provides for the levying of a tax by the township trustees for the maintenance and repair of roads only, while section 6956-1 provides for the levying of a tax by the county commissioners for the repair and maintenance of bridges and county highways.

I desire also to call attention to section 3298-15d G. C. (107 O. L. 79). This section provides in part as follows:

"Sec. 3298-15d. * * * For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the township's proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of constructing, reconstructing, resurfacing or improving roads under the provisions of section 3298-1 to 3298-15n inclusive of the General Code and for the purpose of maintaining, repairing or dragging any public road, or roads, or part thereof, under their jurisdiction in the manner provided in sections 3370 to 3376 inclusive of the General Code, the board of trustees of any township is hereby authorized to levy annually a tax not exceeding three mills upon each dollar of the taxable property of said township.* * *"

Here again we find the same general theory that seems to pervade the entire highway act, namely, that the township trustees have no authority to levy a tax to take care of the construction and repair of bridges and culverts, but merely for the purpose of constructing, improving, maintaining and dragging roads as set out in sections 3370 to 3376 inclusive G. C. (107 O. L. 93).

Sections 5627 and 5630 G. C. also provides for levying a tax by county commissioners for bridge purposes, and there is no such provision as to township trustees.

From all the above it seems fairly clear that the following propositions are correct:

1. The state must construct, maintain and repair all bridges and culverts located upon state roads, under the provisions and conditions set out in section 1224 G. C.

2. The county commissioners must construct and maintain all bridges located upon county and township roads within their respective counties.

3. The county commissioners must construct all culverts located upon the county and township roads within their respective counties, and they also have full power and authority given them to repair and maintain culverts.

With these propositions out of the road, I desire to note the question as to whether the township trustees have not also authority to maintain and repair culverts.

Section 3373 G. C. (107 O. L. 93) makes the following provision:

> "* * * Township trustees are hereby authorized to purchase or lease such machinery and tools as may be deemed necessary for use in maintaining and repairing roads and culverts within the township. * * *"

As above quoted, under the provisions of section 3298-15d, supra, they also have authority to levy a tax for the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of section 3373, supra.

So that under section 3373, supra, it is my opinion that the township trustees also have jurisdiction to maintain and repair culverts within their respective townships, irrespective of the fact whether they are located on county or township roads. This seems to be borne out also by the provisions of section 7214 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "Sec. 7214. The county commissioners or township trustees may contract for and purchase such material as is necessary for the purpose of constructing, improving, maintaining or repairing any highways, bridges or culverts within the county, and also appropriate additional land necessary for cuts and fills together with a right of way to or from the same for the removal of material. * * *"

I am aware that this section is broad enough to authorize the township trustees to construct, improve, maintain and repair bridges and culverts within the county; but in view of the provisions of the sections hereinbefore considered and which were enacted later than section 7214, supra, I am of the opinion that said section 7214 should be limited, in so far as it applies to the jurisdiction of township trustees, to the maintenance and repair of culverts as above set out.

Hence, it is my opinion, in addition to what I find above, that the township trustees also have jurisdiction in the maintenance and repair of culverts within the township.

In arriving at the above conclusions, I am not unmindful of a number of sections of the General Code which might in some respects lead to different conclusions than those herein reached; for example, sections 1197 and 7188-2 (107 O. L. 113) would seem to indicate that it was the intention of the legislature that the township trustees should have authority to construct, improve, maintain and repair bridges and culverts within the township, but as said above, this authority seems nowhere to have been given.

Also in rendering this opinion, I am not unmindful of the provisions of section 2421 G. C., which is in part as follows:

> "The commissioners shall construct and keep in repair necessary bridges over streams and public canals on state and county roads, free turnpikes, improved roads, abandoned turnpikes and plank roads in common public use."

This section provides that the commissioners shall construct and keep in repair necessary bridges on state roads. As shown by section 1224 (107 O. L. 133), this provision is no longer in effect. Section 2421 also provides that the commissioners shall construct and keep in repair necessary bridges on improved roads, but owing to the general scheme and plan of the road laws of the state this provision can no longer be in full force and effect. Many of the improved roads are state roads and, as said before, the commissioners are not compelled to construct and maintain bridges on state roads excepting as provided in section 1224, supra; that is, they must provide one-half the cost of the expense of reconstructing a bridge located upon a state road. So that a part of the provisions of section 2421, supra, are necessarily impliedly repealed by the provisions of the later acts having to do with the highways of the state.

I am not unmindful of opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, on February 16, 1916, and found in Vol. I of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, p. 298, to the effect that township trustees have authority to repair both bridges and culverts on township roads. But the law in reference to this matter has been radically amended since said date.

I am enclosing copy of Opinion No. 320, rendered by me on May 31, 1917, as per request in your communication.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MEMBERS OF SCHOOL BOARD—WHEN AND HOW ELECTED—HOW LONG MEMBERS HOLD OVER.

Where under the Jung-Small school board law it was provided that members should hold over until the end of their terms and three members in a city district held until the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1916, their successors were properly elected for the term of four years.

Section 4702 provides if the number of members of boards of education be odd, one-half of the remainder, after diminishing the number by one, shall be elected in the year preceding and the remaining number shall be elected in the year following the calendar year, divisible by four. Said provision is directory only.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1917.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—A letter is received by this department from the city solicitor of Bucyrus, Ohio, which contains a matter of such general importance that I am directing my answer thereto to you and will send the inquirer a copy. The request reads as follows:

"On August 1, 1913, the board (city board of education of Bucyrus) in pursuance to section 4698 et seq., adopted a resolution providing that the board should consist of five members, that their terms shall be for four years, that two members shall be elected at the regular November election in 1913, for the term of four years each, that three members shall be elected at the regular election in November, 1915, one of which shall be for the term of two years and two of which for the terms of four years and thereafter two members shall be elected in the year preceding and three shall be elected in the year following the calendar year divisible by four as provided by section 4702, and that all terms shall begin and expire on the day fixed by the statutes of Ohio.

"At the regular election in 1913, M. and McC. were elected for the terms of four years each. At the election in 1915, at which time one member was to be elected for a term of two years and two members for four-year terms, on account of the tickets not designating the long and short terms, I held the election invalid on authority of the O'Donnell v. Shaffner case, and advised that the retiring members held over.

"Messrs. R., L. and W. were the hold over members and R., McF. and S. received the highest number of votes at the election, R., the hold over, being also a candidate for re-election.

"On January 3, 1916, at a meeting of the board, L., the hold over member, resigned and his resignation was accepted. The old board adjourned sine die, and on same day the new board organized and the minutes show as follows: 'The vacancy on the board was filled by the appointment of McF., who qualified by taking the oath of office.'

"On January 21, 1916, at a regular meeting of the board, their minutes show that W.'s resignation was received and accepted and on motion S. was appointed to fill the vacancy.

"The appointees, McF. and S., were the same parties who had received the highest number of votes.

"There is no question about the two members to be elected to fill the expired terms of M. and McC. The uncertainty arises as to the length of the term of R., the hold over member, and McF. and S., the appointees.

"Will you kindly advise the number and terms of members of the board to be elected this fall?"

The information called for requires a consideration of what is commonly known as the Jung-Small school board law, Senate bill No. 95, which amended sections 4698, et seq., G. C., and which was passed April 28, 1913. Said section 4698 provides that in city school districts which contain, according to the federal census, a population of less than 50,000 persons (which was the situation in your case), the board of education shall consist of not less than three members nor more than five members, elected at large by the qualified electors of such district.

Section 4699 provides that within thirty days after the act of which said section is a part took effect, the board of education of each and every school district, in which the number of members does not conform to the provisions of section 4698, shall, by resolution, determine within the limits prescribed by said sections the number of members of said board of education. Said resolution shall provide for the classification of the terms of members so that they conform to the provisions of section 4702 G. C., taking into consideration the terms of office of the existing members whose terms do not expire or terminate on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1914. In your case such a resolution was passed, which fixed the number of members of the board of education at five and provided that two of such members should be elected at the regular November election in 1913 for the term of four years, which term would begin or did begin on the first Monday in January of 1914.

Section 4701 G. C. provides that whenever the number of members of the board of education of a city school district, as fixed by the resolution provided for in section 4699, shall be more than the number of members whose terms will not expire or terminate on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1914, the additional members of such board shall be elected at the general school election in 1913 for such terms of two or four years as may be necessary to comply with the two provisions of sections 4698 and 4702. That is, in your case the resolution fixed the number of members of the board of education at five and the number of members whose terms expire on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1914, was two, and those two were elected in 1913 for the term of four years beginning on the first Monday in January, 1914.

Section 4702 provides that all members in office at the time this act takes effect shall serve the unexpired portions of the terms for which they were respectively elected and until their successors are elected and qualified, unless their terms shall expire or shall have been terminated as provided by sections 4698 and 4702.

Accordingly, then, the three members whose terms would not, or did not, expire until the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1916, served the unexpired portions of the terms for which they had been elected—that is, until the day preceding said first Monday in January, 1916.

Section 4702 G. C. further provides that if the number of members of the board of education be odd, one-half of the remainder, after diminishing the number by one, shall be elected in the year preceding and the remaining number shall be elected in the year following the calendar year, divisible by four. The number, therefore, in your case being odd, to-wit, five, two should be elected in the year preceding the calendar year divisible by four, or in the year 1915, and three should be elected in the year following the calendar year divisible by four, or the year 1917. This provision of the statute your board attempted to carry out by providing that at the election in 1915 two members should be elected for terms of four years and one member should be elected for the term of two years. The board, as will be hereinafter noted, had no authority to call an election for a short term in 1915, because such short term election could only be held in the year 1913.

A question very similar to the one contained in the inquiry, and which involves the construction of the same statutes, was decided by our supreme court, July 3, 1917, in the case of State vs. Strawsburg, 96 O. S. ——, wherein the court held:

> "The board of education of Springfield consisted of seven members, the terms of four of whom were to expire in January, 1914, and the terms of the other three in January, 1916. The portions of that law pertinent to the consideration of this case are now sections 4698 to 4702 General Code. The Springfield city school district comes within the class, which, under the provisions of section 4698 General Code, is required to have a board of education consisting of not less than three nor more than five members.
> By a resolution passed July 14, 1913, said board of education attempted to meet the requirements and comply with the provisions of that act. It was therein determined that the number of members of said board should be five, who should be elected at large; that the three members whose terms did not expire until January, 1916, should hold their positions until that date; that at the general election in November, 1913, there should be elected two members to serve the full term of four years; and that at the election in November, 1915, two members should be elected for the full term of four years and one for the fractional term of two years. Two members were elected for the full term of four years at the election of November, 1913.

In the election of November, 1915, the defendants and five others were candidates for the office of members of the board of education of such district. The ballots on which their names appeared were headed:

'For Members of Board of Education'

'Vote for not more than three.'

No designation of or reference to the term, or length thereof, of any candidate was made on any ballot, nor had there been any such designation upon the ballots in the primary election whereat said candidates were nominated. The defendants, Schaefer, Strawsburg and Kitchen, in the order stated, received the highest number of votes at said election. They were declared elected as members of said board of education, certificates of election for a term of four years each were issued, and in pursuance of that authority they assumed to qualify and enter upon, and ever since have discharged, the duties of such position—more than fifteen months—the validity of their election not having been challenged until the bringing of this suit in quo warranto, April 14, 1917.

It is now contended that because of such want of designation of terms, whether for four years or two years, on the ballot or elsewhere, it is impossible to ascertain which of said candidates were elected for the four-year term and which one for the two-year term, and that, therefore, there was no valid election for either term and the certificates of election issued were unauthorized.

An examination of the sections of the General Code, above cited, discloses that as applying to the city of Springfield their several provisions were not in accord, and, therefore, could not be observed and applied. Under their provisions no existing term should be disturbed. If necessary to accomplish the reduction in numbers required by law, two-year terms could be provided by resolution; but an election to such two-year terms was limited to the year 1913. It was expressly provided in above sections that all elections thereafter should be for four-year terms; thenceforward one-half of the remainder, after diminishing the total number of members of the board by one, should be elected in the year preceding the calendar year divisible by four, and the remaining number the year following such calender year. Under that provision, directory in its nature, two members would be elected in 1915, three in 1917, and so on. There was no provision whatever for a two-year-term member to be elected in 1915, and if only two members should be elected the board would consist of but four instead of five members, as had been determined by the board under authority conferred by law.

These provisions are inconsistent; they cannot all be enforced; therefore, the rational solution of the situation seems to lie in such construction and application of the law as to make it feasible and practicable and capable of accomplishing the obvious design and purpose of its enactment, which was to create boards of education, the terms of the members of which should be four years, and, presumably to bring about that condition and situation at the earliest possible time. The mere order in which members are elected seems quite immaterial, and that provision might well have been regarded by the board as only directory. In the theory that all three of the defendants were in fact elected for four-year terms that is the only provision disregarded; and, as we have seen, it is a provision in direct conflict with other and more important and essential provisions of the law.

Although the resolution provided for the election of a short-term member in 1915, such was not authorized by law, and thereafter all matters concerning the election, including notice, proclamation, form of ballots and certificates of election, proceeded in a manner consistent only with the theory that three members for the full term of four years were being elected. Therefore, for the reasons we have indicated, the tenure of those members should not now be disturbed."

But in your case, after the election had been held, and as the court in State ex rel v. Strawsburg, supra, says, was held in the proper form, it was considered as an invalid election and no certificates of election were issued to the three members who received the highest number of votes at said election. Instead thereof it was determined that the members whose terms would expire on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1916, should resign and the board would fill the vacancies by appointing those members who had received the highest number of votes at the election. Accordingly, on the third day of January, 1916, L. resigned and his resignation was accepted. A vacancy caused by said resignation was filled by the remaining members of the board by electing McF. thereto, who qualified and who, under the provisions of section 4748 G. C., was elected for the unexpired term of L. and until his successor would be elected and qualified. On the 21st day of January, 1916, W. resigned and his resignation was accepted and on motion S. was appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of W. McF. and S. were the same members who had received the highest number of votes at the preceding election and who failed to qualify or receive their certificates of election. R., the third highest man at said election, held over. If said three members had received their certificates of election and had qualifed, just as the three members did in the case of State ex rel v. Strawsburg, supra, then this case would stand on all fours with that case and their election would be held following said decision to have been a valid election. Inasmuch as all failed to qualify or receive their certificates of election, those persons who were in office would, under the provisions of section 4748 G. C., hold over until their successors were duly elected and qualified. The successors of L. and W. were duly elected and qualified and they will hold for and during the remainder of the four-year term, which will end the day preceding the first day in January, 1920. R., the hold over member, never resigned and will continue to hold over for and during the term of four years, which will end the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1920.

So that, answering your question specifically, I advise you that the number of members to be elected to your board of education this fall is two and that their terms shall be for the length of four years from and after the first Monday in January, 1918.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COSTS—INCURRED WHERE MINOR UNDER EIGHTEEN IS BOUND OVER FROM MAGISTRATE'S COURT TO COMMON PLEAS—IN CASE WHERE MINORITY IS CONCEALED—PAID UNDER SECTION 3019 G. C.

"A" is under eighteen years of age and is charged with a felony and arrested and taken before a magistrate. He conceals his minority and after examination is had is bound over to the common pleas court. While in custody his minority is revealed. The case and the prisoner are transferred to the juvenile court. Hearing is had in the juvenile court and "A" is sent to Lancaster.

HELD: That the costs incurred in the magistrate's court and in the court of common pleas are to be paid as provided in section 3019 G. C. for state failures in felony cases, and that the same are not to be included in the costs of the case in the juvenile court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1917.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of August 21, 1917, as follows:

> "A. is a minor and is charged with a felony, and arrested and taken before a magistrate. He conceals his minority and after examination is had is bound over to the common pleas court. While in custody his minority is revealed. The case and the prisoner are transferred to the juvenile court. Hearing is had in the juvenile court and A. is sent to Lancaster.
> Query: May the costs contained in the magistrate's cost bill and in the certificate of transfer of the clerk of the court of common pleas, be made a part of the costs in the case before the juvenile court and be by him certified to the county auditor for payment?"

Sections 1659, 1681 and 1682 of the General Code read:

"Sec. 1659. When a child under the age of eighteen years is arrested, such child, instead of being taken before a justice of the peace or police judge, shall be taken directly before such juvenile judge; or, if the child is taken before a justice of the peace or a judge of the police court, it shall be the duty of such justice of the peace or such judge of the police court, to transfer the case to the judge exercising the jurisdiction herein provided. The officers having such child in charge shall take it before such judge, who shall proceed to hear and dispose of the case in the same manner as if the child had been brought before the judge in the first instance.

"Sec. 1681. When any information or complaint shall be filed against a delinquent child under these provisions, charging him with a felony, the judge may order such child to enter into a recognizance, with good and sufficient surety, in such amount as he deems reasonable, for his appearance before the court of common pleas at the next term thereof. The same proceedings shall be had thereafter upon such complaint as now authorized by law for the indictment, trial, judgment and sentence of any other person charged with a felony.

"Sec. 1682. Fees and costs in all such cases with such sums as are necessary for the incidental expenses of the court and its officers, and the costs of transportation of children to places to which they have been committed, shall be paid from the county treasury upon itemized vouchers, certified to by the judge of the court."

This department has frequently held that in cases other than felony cases involving minors under eighteen years the juvenile court has exclusive jurisdiction. It will be noted that section 1659 provides that it "shall be the duty of such justice of the peace or such judge of the police court to transfer the case to the judge exercising the jurisdiction herein provided." However, in this case the statute was not followed and the case was not "transferred" from the justice of the peace to the juvenile court. Instead, the justice of the peace bound the defendant over to the common please court and the latter court finding later that it had no jurisdiction to hear the same, attempted to "transfer" the case to the juvenile court by certifying it to said court. To my mind this was not a transfer but acted rather as a dismissal or at least abandonment of the prosecution by the state in the felony case. The juvenile court had no authority to accept any case from the common pleas court and the attempted transfer could be held to be nothing more, in so far as the juvenile court is concerned, than the filing of a complaint against the minor child. The proceedings in the justice court and in the common pleas court, in the case you submit, had no connection whatever with the case in the juvenile court.

In Opinion No. 98, rendered by this department March 10, 1917, to Hon. C. M. Caldwell, prosecuting attorney, Waverly, Ohio, it was stated:

"The words 'in felonies wherein the state fails,' I think, mean when a prosecution for a felony has been begun and the state has either abandoned the same or has been defeated in its contention. In other words, I think the statute refers to all cases wherein the state has started a prosecution for a felony and has not concluded the same successfully."

In conclusion it was said:

"Taking this view of the law, I am of the opinion that prosecution for felony has been instituted as soon as the affidavit charging the crime has been presented to and filed by the magistrate and if any time thereafter the prosecution is terminated by any means other than conviction, the state has 'failed' within the meaning of section 3019 G. C. and county commissioners may make an allowance to officers in place of fees under such section."

It is my opinion that in the case you refer to in your communication the prosecution for felony instituted in the justice of the peace court and carried into the common pleas court should be treated as a "state failure" and costs paid accordingly. The costs certified by the juvenile court should not include any costs incurred prior to the time the juvenile court assumed jurisdiction.

The conclusion here reached might have been different had the justice of the peace transferred this case to the juvenile court as the statute contemplates.

I have assumed in this opinion that in using the word "minor" in your request you mean to refer to a boy under eighteen years of age.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1917.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of August 30, 1917, in which you ask me to place a construction upon a certain contract therein set out. Your communication reads as follows:

> "I am attaching hereto copy of letter received by me from Mr. C. H. Duncan, representing Mrs. Jennie Warnick, administratrix of the estate of J. P. Warnick, deceased, in which he states that our agreement with J. P. Warnick for the improvement of section 'M' of the Cadiz-Carrollton road, I. C. H. No. 371, Harrison county, is void. Mr. Duncan sets forth various reasons for his contention in his letter, and I am transmitting his letter with the request that you advise me as to the proper proceedure to be pursued by me."

Your inquiry goes to the question as to whether the contract entered into by and between yourself, for and on behalf of the state of Ohio, and J. P. Warnick, for the improvement of section "M" of the Cadiz-Carrollton road, I. C. H. No. 371, is void, or if the same is legal and can be enforced as against said J. P. Warnick or his legal representative.

The statement is made that this contract is void, because of certain irregularities occurring prior to the letting of the contract to said J. P. Warnick. One of these irregularities it is claimed relates to the matter of the advertising for bids preparatory to letting the contract. Another irregularity is in connection with the certificate of the county auditor, provided for in section 5660 G. C.

The particular section of the statute in reference to the advertising for bids is section 1206 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "Sec. 1206. Upon the receipt of a certified copy of the resolution of the county commissioners or township trustees, that such improvement be constructed under the provisions of this chapter (G. C. Secs. 1178 to 1231-3), the state highway commissioner shall advertise for bids for two consecutive weeks in two newspapers of general circulation and of the two dominant political parties published in the county or counties in which the improvement, or some part thereof is located, if there be any such papers published in said counties, but if there be no such papers published in said counties then in two newspapers having general circulation in said counties, and such commissioner shall also have authority to advertise for bids in such other publications as he may deem advisable. Such notices shall state that plans and specifications for the improvement are on file in the offices of the state highway commissioner and the county highway superintendent, and the time within which bids therefor will be received.
> The state highway commissioner shall award the contract to the lowest and best bidder."

It will be noticed, in considering this section, that there are two distinct requisites therein set out in reference to the advertisement for bids, namely:

1. The state highway commissioner shall advertise for bids for two consecutive weeks.

2. This advertisement shall be placed in two newspapers of general circulation and of the two dominant political parties published in the county, if there be any such papers published in the county.

In making an investigation of the facts in reference to the advertising, I find the following to be true: This particular contract was let on June 15, 1916. The advertisement for bids preparatory to the letting of the contract was placed in The Cadiz Republican and The Harrison News, two newspapers of general circulation in the county of Harrison. The first publication was inserted in each of these newspapers on June 8, 1916, and the second was inserted on June 15, 1916.

I further find that both the said newspapers above mentioned are classed as Republican in politics, and that there is published in the county of Harrison a paper called The Democrat Sentinel, which is classed as Democratic in politics.

With these facts before us, what can be said as to the validity of the contract which was let on June 15, 1916? Our courts, as well as the courts of other states, generally place a pretty strict construction upon statutes providing for giving notice to the public in reference to the letting of contracts by public officials. The courts as a rule hold that the provisions of the statute in reference to advertising for bids must be strictly followed, and that the question as to whether a variation from the terms of the statute in the matter of advertising would work a loss or hardship upon the public, can not be inquired into.

In McCloud and Geigle v. City of Columbus, 54 O. S. 439, the court held in the syllabus as follows:

> "Where a municipal corporation, acting under chapter 4, division 7, of title XII, Revised Statutes, improves a public street, the provisions of section 2303, prescribing the mode and time of advertising for bids, are mandatory, the compliance with which is a condition precedent to the power of the municipality to enter into a valid agreement in respect thereof."

In this case the contractor was attempting to recover from the city of Columbus a balance due upon a contract, the terms of which he had fully carried out. The court held that he could not recover for the services rendered, because of the fact that the contract, under and by virtue of which the work was done, was void for the reason that the officials of the city of Columbus had not advertised for bids in accordance with the provisions of the statute relative to the improvement in question.

In the opinion at page 450 the court uses the following language:

"The owners of the abutting property were relieved of any obligation to pay the contractors, plaintiffs in error, any sums excepting the actual cost of the improvement, because of the omission of the city council to cause the notice to bidders to be advertised according to the requirements of section 2303, Revised Statutes. That section requires such notice to be published for four weeks in two newspaper published and of general circulation in the city, where the estimated cost of the improvement exceeds five thousand dollars. The estimated cost of the improvements in this cause exceeded that sum. A notice calling for bids was published, but the mode or length of time does not definitely appear, the record merely showing that it was for less than the statutory period. The duty of publication belongs to the city council."

On page 451 the court further says:

"In the present case the city of Columbus entered into a contract to pay for any balance not collectible from the abutting proprietors, and thereafter if the contract was valid it was bound to perform what the statutes required it to do to charge those abutting proprietors, and therefore if by reason of an omission of anything it was subsequently required to do, those abutting proprietors, who, as we have seen, were primarily liable, were discharged, the city should make good the loss. The question, however, is, was the contract in this case valid. The duty which the council omitted was one which preceded the making of the contract, and was preliminary thereto. The notice which it omitted to publish in the prescribed manner and for the prescribed time was provided by the legislature as a safeguard to the taxpayer, whether local or general, against private rapacity and official indifference. This beneficial provision has no value it it can be disregarded by a city council, and yet a contract entered into binding upon the city and consequently imposing a burden upon the whole body of its taxpayers. The evils that imperatively demand these restrictive statutes are of common notoriety. They can be held in check only by regarding as mandatory statutory provisions designed to circumvent them."

As said before, the court in this case held that the contract was not valid, but void because of the fact that notice had not been given for four weeks, but for some period of time less than four weeks.

In Miller et al. v. Pearce et al., 13 O. D. Rep. 758, the court held in the sylllabus:

"* * * that the requisition of the statute that 'said trustees, before entering into any contract for work to be done, the estimated cost of which shall exceed five hundred dollars, shall cause at least two weeks' notice to be given in one or more daily newspapers of general circulation in the corporation,' is a condition precedent to contracting, and that the contract could not be made until at least two weeks after the first publication. * * *"

The section of the statute upon which the court was placing a construction was section 346 R. S., which read as follows:

"Said trustees, before entering into any contract for work to be done, the estimated cost of which shall exceed five hundred dollars, shall cause at least two weeks' notice to be given, in one or more daily newspapers of general circulation in the corporation, that proposals will be received by said trustees for the performing of the work specified in said notice; and the trustees shall contract with the lowest bidder, if, in their opinion, said lowest bidder can be depended on to do the work with ability, promptness, and fidelity, and if such be not the case, said trustees may give the contract to the next lowest bidder, or decline to contract, and advertise again."

Taft, J., in rendering the opinion in this case, said: (p. 761.)

"The fair interpretation of the language of this section requires 'at least two weeks' advertisement,' as a condition precedent to contracting. The words, 'the trustees, before entering into any contract for work to be done,' standing as they do, at the head of the section, imply a prohibition. The plain sense of the section is, that the board shall not enter into any such contract until they have caused 'at least two weeks' notice to be given.'"

In this case the contract was awarded on the tenth day after the first publication.

On page 762 the following language is used:

"It was claimed, in argument, that the notice was a 'two weeks' notice,' within the meaning of the statute, because it was inserted in the daily newspapers in two successive weeks, although the contract was awarded on the tenth day after the first publication. But it is clear to my mind that 'two weeks' notice' cannot be considered as having been given in the daily papers before the expiration of two weeks from the first publication."

It will not be necessary to quote further from decisions because the above decisions are in line with the holding of courts in general, which is to the effect that a strict construction is to be placed upon statutes providing for notice to the public in reference to the letting of contracts. With this principle in mind, let us note the facts in this case. The notice was published on June 8 and 15, 1916, and bids were opened on June 15, 1916, the day upon which the last publication was made. The notices were published in two Republican newspapers, rather than in two newspapers of opposite political parties, as provided in section 1206 G. C. Does this comply with the provisions of the statute to such an extent that courts would hold the said contract to be valid? I am of the opinion that it does not.

Take for example the fact that the notice was published in two Republican newspapers, when there was published at the time a Democratic newspaper in the county of general circulation therein. It is my opinion that this would no more be a compliance with the law than if notice had been published in but one paper.

The question as to whether advertisement for bids was published for two consecutive weeks is somewhat more difficult. It will be noted that section 1206 G. C. does not provide that two weeks' notice must be given. If it did, the courts are unanimous in holding that the first notice would have to be published at least two weeks before the letting of the contract, and in computing this two-week period the day upon which publication is first made would be included and the day upon which the bids are opened would be excluded.

Said section 1206 G. C. provides:

> "* * * the state highway commissioner shall advertise for bids for two consecutive weeks * * *."

This he did. He advertised on the 8th and on the 15th of June, 1916, two consecutive weeks. While I am not prepared to say that this provision requires a two weeks' notice to be given, namely, that the first notice must be published at least two weeks before the bids are opened, yet it is my opinion that the publication of the notice on the 8th and 15th is, to say the least, not sufficient. The notice published on the 15th, so far as its being of any effect in the way of notifying the prospective bidders is concerned, might as well never have been made, because the public had no opportunity to read this notice when it was published on the very day that the bids were opened.

Hence I am of the opinion that the advertisement for bids prior to the letting of the contract in question was not in harmony with the provisions of section 1206 G. C., and therefore that the contract entered into by and between the state of Ohio and said J. P. Warnick is void. Of course, if the contract is void, Mr. Warnick or his legal representative can take advantage of this fact and refuse to proceed, if he so elects, just as well as the state of Ohio or the county of Harrison could take advantage of the defect herein mentioned.

This being the finding in reference to this proposition, it is not necessary for me to go into the matter as to whether the provisions of section 5660 G. C. have been complied with. In connection with this matter, my attention has been called to an opinion rendered by me on May 11, 1917, No. 258. I will simply suggest that the facts, upon which the former opinion was rendered, are vastly different from those presented in this case, although, as said before, I am not passing upon the latter question in this opinion.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that under the facts as they exist, relative to the letting of this contract, J. P. Warnick or his legal representative can elect not to proceed under the contract, and that you would have no course to follow other than to cancel same as to Mr. Warnick or his legal representative.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL TICKET—WHEN POLITICAL PARTY ENTITLED TO HAVE SAME PLACED UPON OFFICIAL BALLOT—WHEN ENTITLED TO HAVE PARTY EMBLEM PLACED ON BALLOT.

1. Where a nomination paper nominating a municipal ticket in a village containing twenty-seven hundred population is signed by twenty-five per cent of the qualified legal voters of said village, and filed within the proper time with the deputy state supervisors of elections, the election officers must place such municipal ticket upon the official ballot.

3. When a petition signed by twenty-five per cent of the electors of a municipality having a population of twenty-seven hundred, seeking to nominate a municipal ticket, is filed, the petitioners in said petition are entitled, under section 5003 G. C., to designate a party or political principle which the petitioners represent, expressed in not more than three words.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 2, 1917.

HON. DAVID A. WEBSTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Bryan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In a recent communication you state that a situation has arisen in the village of Montpelier concerning which you desire an opinion. The following facts appear:

> The village of Montpelier has a population of about twenty-seven hundred. The Socialist party has never had a county, township or municipal ticket in the county and has now filed a petition, with a complete municipal ticket thereon, with the election board, signed by twenty-five per cent of the qualified legal voters of the village, requesting that a Socialist party ticket be placed upon the official ballot under the Socialist emblem.

The determination of whether or not these petitioners are entitled to what they ask depends upon a consideration of the following sections of the General Code:

Section 4949 G. C., being found in the primary elections law, provides how candidates for public offices shall be nominated, and the succeeding section, 4950, reads as follows:

> "Sec. 4950. Nothing in this chapter shall repeal the provisions of law relating to the nomination of candidates for office by petition, and no elector shall be disqualified from signing a petition for such nomination of candidates for office by petition, because such elector voted at a primary provided for herein to nominate candidates to be voted for at the same election or because such elector signed nomination papers for such primary."

Section 4963 G. C. (107 O. L. 400) provides the time for holding primaries for municipal candidates.

Section 4996 G. C. reads as follows:

> "Nominations of candidates for any elective office in any township or in any municipality which at the last preceding federal census had a population of less than two thousand may be made by petitions, signed in the aggregate for each candidate by not less than twenty-five qualified electors of such township or village."

This section (4996) before its amendment in 103 O. L. 844 read as follows:

"Sec. 4996. Nominations of candidates for any county, township, municipal or ward office may be made by nomination papers, signed in the aggregate for each candidate by not less than three hundred qualified electors of the county or fifty electors of the city or twenty-five qualified electors of the township, ward or village, respectively. In counties containing annual registration cities, such nomination papers shall be signed by petitioners not less in number than one for each fifty persons who voted at the next preceding general election in such county."

It will be noted that prior to the amendment in 103 O. L. 844, there was provision for nomination by petition of candidates for any county, township, municipal or ward office. Amended section 4996 G. C. provides for nominations of candidates for any office of any township and in any municipality which at the last preceding federal census had a population of less than two thousand.

As the village of Montpelier had a population at the last census of over two thousand, this section, as amended, would have no application.

Section 4999 G. C., prior to the amendment in 103 O. L. 844, read as follows:

"Sec. 4999. Nominations of candidates for United States senator, or for other offices, may be made by nomination papers, signed for each candidate by qualified electors of the state or the district, or division, for which such candidates are nominated, not less in number than one for each one hundred persons who voted at the next preceding general election in the state, district or division."

As amended, section 4999 G. C. now reads:

"Section 4999. Nominations of candidates for other offices may be made by petitions, signed for each candidate by qualified electors of the state or the district, or county for which such candidates are nominated, not less in number than one for each one hundred persons who voted at the next preceding general election in the state, district or county."

A comparison shows that section 4999 prior to the amendment provided for the nomination papers in the state, the district or division for which the candidates were nominated. As the section now stands it provides for nomination of candidates of the state or the district or county for which the candidates are nominated.

The case you cite seems to be an omitted case. There does not appear to be any specific statute which applies to municipalities over two thousand in population. But it is my view, taking into consideration the former provisions of section 4999, supra, that the legislature intended by the word "district," in amended section 4999, to include all subdivisions, other than state and county, which were not included in a township or in municipalities with a population of less than two thousand. It is certainly evident that there was no intention on the part of the legislature to make no provision for municipalities having a population of over two thousand, nor would it be seriously argued that the legislature intended to provide that a petition signed by twenty-five qualified electors of any city would be a sufficient number of signatures for the larger cities.

I understand that the construction placed upon section 4999 G. C. by the election officers over the state has been that in municipalities of over two thousand population candidates nominated by petition must have petitions signed by not less in number than one for each hundred persons who voted at the next preceding general election in such municipality.

But under the facts in the case here submitted, whether amended section 4999 G. C. is construed to include municipalities over two thousand in population, or whether the provisions of section 4996 G. C. are construed to include, as it did prior to amendment, all municipalities, the petition containing twenty-five per cent of the qualified legal voters of Montpelier would comply with either or both of said sections. I cannot believe that it is an entirely omitted case and that these petitioners should be denied a right to place a ticket upon the official ballot.

So it is my view that the petition in question is a valid nominating petition for the officers therein nominated and that it is entitled to a place upon the official ballot at the coming municipal election. However, I hold that under the law these petitioners are not entitled to any emblem above their ticket, as held in State ex rel. Lewis v. Kinney, 57 O. S. 221, construing section 12 of the Australian ballot law, which is now section 5014 G. C. The syllabus in said case reads as follows:

> "The state supervisor of elections is not required by section 12 of the Australian ballot law (Bates' Revised Statutes, section 2966-25), to cause to be printed on the ballots to be used at an election, a device selected and certified by a state convention which did not represent a political party that at the next preceding election polled at least one per cent of the entire vote cast in the state; nor a device certified in nomination papers for a ticket nominated by that method."

In 1897, when the above case was decided, the law provided for state conventions as representing a political party which at the next preceding general election polled at least one per cent of the entire vote cast in the state. Under our primary election act, state conventions, as then known, have passed into "innocuous desuetude," and the only provision we have now for a state convention is found in section 4991-1 G. C.

Under section 4949 G. C. the voluntary political parties and associations recognized by the primary act are such as poll for their candidates for governor, in the state or any district, county or subdivision thereof, or municipality, at least ten per cent of the entire vote cast therein for governor, and the officers of such political party must nominate their candidates for public office in the manner provided by our primary act found in section 4948 et seq. G. C.

So the Socialist party not having cast ten per cent of the total vote for governor in the municipality of Montpelier at the last election, and not having qualified as a party under the compulsory primary act, is not entitled to have a separate ticket as a party and to have its emblem above any ticket. While such petitioners are not entitled to the emblem, they are, under section 5003 G. C., entitled to designate the party or political principle which it represents, expressed in not more than three words.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OLEOMARGARINE—WHEN SAME USED EXCLUSIVELY FOR COOKING PURPOSES—WHERE NOTICE MUST BE PLACED.

Under section 12732 G. C., where oleomargarine is being used exclusively for cooking purposes, a posting of the notice provided by said section in the kitchen, where the cooking is done, is not sufficient. The notice must be posted in some conspicuous place in the hotel, boarding house, restaurant, eating house, lunch room, lunch counter, boat, railroad car, or other place of business.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1917.

HON. THOMAS C. GAULT, Chief Dairy and Food Division, The Board of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 11, 1917, as follows:

"I am enclosing an inquiry from the Capital City Dairy Company for a ruling on section 12732 General Code, as there has been quite a variance of opinions on this section as to whether it is meant that cards shall be used in dining rooms where meals are served when oleomargarine is used only in cooking.

If there has been no court decision or ruling relative to this matter, I would like an opinion from your office so that I may direct my inspectors intelligently."

The Capital City Dairy Company's letter, to which you refer, reads as follows:

"The Capital City Dairy Company of this city respectfully asks your department for a definite ruling on the meaning of section 12732 General Code, in reference to exhibiting the card in a place where oleomargarine is used exclusively for cooking purposes. Does the expression 'in a conspicuous place therein,' mean the place where the product is used, i. e., the kitchen place, if it is used exclusively in cooking?

This company is desirous of advising its agents along the line of your department's ruling and your opinion on this subject will help it in this matter."

Section 12732 G. C. reads:

"Whoever, being a proprietor, keeper, manager, or person in charge of a hotel, boarding house, restaurant, eating house, lunch counter, lunch room, boat, railroad car or other place, therein sells, uses, disposes of, furnishes, serves, or uses in cooking, a substance which appears to be, resembles, or is made in, or as an imitation of, or a substitute for butter or cheese which is not wholly made from pure milk or cream, salt, and harmless coloring matter, without keeping a card in a conspicuous place therein, which shall be white and not less than ten by fourteen inches in size, upon which shall be printed in plain, black Roman letters, not less than twelve line pica, the words 'oleomargine sold and used here,' or 'imitation cheese sold and used here,' and no other words, or sells, furnishes or disposes of such substance as and for butter or cheese made from pure milk or cream, salt and harmless coloring matter when butter or cheese is asked for, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than two hundred dollars, and for each subsequent offense shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five hundred dollars and imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than ninety days."

In the above statute the only "places" referred to are "hotel, boarding house, restaurant, eating house, lunch counter, lunch room, boat, railroad car or other place" and the word "therein," as used twice in this section, can, therefore, refer to no other place than a "hotel, etc.," of which the accused is in charge or of which the accused is the proprietor, keeper or manager. In the case you refer to the "kitchen," or place where the cooking is done, is only a part of the hotel or restaurant, and cannot be considered as the place of which the accused has charge or of which he is the proprietor, keeper or manager within the meaning of the statute.

The "place" the statute is concerned with is the entire establishment, including both where the meals are cooked and where they are served, and it is the duty of the owner, keeper, manager or person in charge of such establishment to keep a card "in a conspicuous place therein"—"therein" referring to the entire establishment or place of business. From this it will be seen that the card must be posted in a conspicuous place in the establishment and whether or not the place where the card is posted is really a conspicuous one will, of course, depend upon the facts of each individual case. However, I think it can be stated as a general rule that the posting of such card in the kitchen or place where the meals are cooked would not suffice, since this could hardly, under any circumstances, be held to be a posting in a conspicuous place, since it is a matter of common knowledge that but very few if any of the patrons of hotels, restaurants, lunch rooms, etc., have access to the kitchen.

Answering your questions specifically I am of the opinion that under section 12732 G. C. it is necessary to post the card in a conspicuous place in a hotel, boarding house, restaurant, eating house, lunch counter, lunch room, etc., or other place of business, where the public will be most likely to see it and that the posting of such card in the kitchen or room where the cooking is done and away from the room in which the meals are served would not be sufficient. This rule obtains even though the oleomargarine is being used exclusively for cooking purposes.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LIGHT STATIONS—TO DIRECT FEDERAL AVIATORS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO ERECT SAME.

The erection of light stations to direct federal aviators on their journeys across a county cannot be brought within the object "for ordinary county purposes," as provided in sections 5627 and 5630 G. C., and, therefore, there is no provision of law authorizing the county commissioners to erect said light stations and to pay for the same from the funds of the county raised by taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1917.

HON. P. A. SAYLOR, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 24, 1917, in which you ask my opinion as follows:

> "The county commissioners called on me this morning for an opinion as to the right of the county commissioners to spend the money of the county in erecting a light station to light the federal aviators on their way from Fairfield, Ohio, to Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Indiana.
> Their route is through Preble county, over Eaton, and a village east of here. The Business Men's club of Eaton wants the county commissioners to put a light station on the court house here. This will probably cost two hundred dollars.
> If this is done, other communities will want the county commissioners to build and pay for the light stations, and light the same, at other points of landing in the county.
> I can find no authority in law for such an expenditure of money. The county commissioners are under the impression that this is being done elsewhere by county commissioners in this state."

In order to arrive at a solution of the problem which you submit to me, it will be necessary for us to consider two sections of the General Code which give authority to the county commissioners to levy taxes and the purposes for which they have authority to levy them.

Section 5627 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The county commissioners, at their March or June session, annually, shall determine the amount to be raised for ordinary county purposes, public buildings, the support of the poor, interest and principal of the public debt, and for road and bridge purposes. They shall specifically set forth in the record of their proceedings the amount to be raised for each of such purposes."

When we consider the different objects in reference to which the county commissioners must determine the amount of money to be raised, it is quite evident that there is nothing mentioned in said section that would include the object mentioned in your communication, other than the provision "for ordinary county purposes."

Section 5630 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The commissioners of any county, at their June session, annually, may levy not to exceed three mills on each dollar valuation of taxable property within the county, for county purposes other than for roads, bridges, county buildings, sites therefor, and the purchase of lands for infirmary purposes. For the purpose of building county buildings, purchasing sites therefor, and lands for infirmary purposes, they may levy not to exceed two mills on such valuation."

This section gives the county commissioners authority to levy taxes and the purposes for which they may be levied. The only object, as set out in said section, for which taxes may be levied by the county commissioners, that would include the one mentioned in your communication, is "for county purposes."

The question then which we have to consider is, could the erection of a light station upon the court house at Eaton, for the purpose of lighting the federal aviators on their way from Fairfield, Ohio, to Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, be brought within the phrase used in the statutes, "for ordinary county purposes?"

Section 5627 G. C. was originally section 2822 R. S. This section was construed by the circuit court of Ohio along the very lines which we now have under consideration, in the case of State ex rel. Long v, Brinkman, et al., 7 C. C. 165. The question in that case was whether the county commissioners could furnish an armory and maintain the same for the state militia or any company thereof, and bring the expense of the same under the phrase "for ordinary county purposes," as originally found in section 2822 R. S. and now in section 5627 G. C. In the opinion on p. 170 the court reasoned as follows:

"It cannot be controverted but that the militia of the state and every part and branch thereof, is a state institution, subjected to the powers of the state, controlled by the state, and with which the respective counties of the state, even to the remotest degree, have nothing whatever to do.

How can it be said that the furnishing of an armory and its maintenance, for the sole purpose of the state, viz: to protect the arms of the state, to furnish an abiding place for the militia of the state, which are subjected to no authority or control other than state authority, is an expense created either for 'ordinary county purposes or for county buildings?'

The purpose of an armory for drill and the care of state arms, is nothing more or less than one of the essential elements entering into and forming a part of a complete and perfect state militia, in order that the militia may the more be able to do the service of the state (not the county), when the commander-in-chief shall so require.

Personally each member of the court would desire that Captain Long and his company might be furnished with a suitable armory, but as judges of the court we have an official duty to perform, by declaring the law as we understand it."

If we apply the reasoning of the court in this case to the matter we now have under consideration, it is quite evident that the object which the county commissioners of your county have under consideration cannot be brought within the phrase "for ordinary county purposes." It cannot be controverted but that the federal aviators belong to the federal army, are subjected to the powers of the federal government and are controlled by the United States, and with which the county of Preble, even to the remotest degree, has nothing whatever to do.

The flying of the federal aviators from Fairfield, Ohio, to Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, is one of the essential elements entering into and forming a part of a complete and perfect training of the men, in order that they may be more able to do the service of the federal government in the war between this country and Germany, whenever the commander-in-chief of the armies of the United States shall so require.

As stated by the court in the case above quoted, however much I might desire that the federal aviators be furnished with lighting stations along their route from Fairfield, Ohio, to Fort Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, yet, as the legal adviser of the state, it becomes my duty to declare the law as I understand it. In the performance of that duty I am constrained to hold that the object set out in your communication could not be brought within the phrase "for ordinary county purposes."

In connection with this same matter, I desire to call attention to an opinion rendered by my predecessor Hon. Timothy S. Hogan to Hon. Cyrus Locher, prosecuting attorney, Cleveland, on September 30, 1913, and found in Vol. II of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, p. 1396. In this opinion he was deciding the question as to whether the expenses for maintaining social and civic centers could at that time be brought within the object, "for ordinary county purposes." Mr. Hogan argues as follows on p. 1398 of said opinion:

> "It will not be disputed that the only fund out of which the expenses of maintaining social and civic centers could, at the present time, possibly be paid would be the fund raised for ordinary county purposes. At the time, however, such fund was provided for, the county commissioners did not and could not take into consideration the establishment of the civic centers. Expenditures for this purpose were not in contemplation of the commissioners, nor was the organization of such centers a proper function of county government at the time the levy for ordinary county purposes was made. This would clearly indicate that the legislature did not contemplate the expense of the maintenance of these centers as one that should be paid from the levy or appropriation for ordinary county purposes. When the commissioners made such levy and appropriation they took into consideration the ordinary and necessary county expenses as they existed and were in contemplation at the time of the levy and appropriation. New objects, so foreign to usual county expenditures as are those provided for by the act in question, were not thought of, and consequently to say now that such expenditures should be made would be to infringe upon the necessary contemplated expenses which the commissioners had in view when they levied and appropriated, as we cannot assume that the commissioners extravagantly and carelessly required the tax payers to pay for county purposes a greater amount than was necessary."

It seems to me that the argument used by Mr. Hogan in said opinion would directly apply to the matter now under consideration, in that the commissioners of Preble county, when they were determining the amount to be raised "for ordinary county purposes," last March or June, could not have taken into consideration the erection of light stations such as are set out in your communication.

Hence in view of all the above I feel constrained to hold that the county commissioners would not be authorized in law to erect light stations for the purpose of directing federal aviators, and pay for the same out of the funds from taxation.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FINES—MAYORS AND JUSTICES OF THE PEACE—MAY NOT REMIT —IN CASES BROUGHT FOR VIOLATION OF STATUTES.

Mayors of municipalities and justices of the peace may not remit fines in cases brought for violation of the statutes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1917.

The State Department of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

I have your letter of September 1, 1917, as follows:

"On May 22, 1917, a representative of this department filed with Mr. George W. Chamberlain, justice of the peace, Lorain county, an affidavit charging Dr. B., of Elyria, with failure to report a case of inflammation of the eyes of the new born (section 1248-2 G. C.). Full information in regard to this case was filed with G. B. Findley, prosecuting attorney of Lorain county. Under date of August 31, 1917, I received the following information from Mr. Findley:

'In re Dr. B. The defendant pleaded guilty and was sentenced to pay the fine of $50.00 and costs. However, for good cause shown $40.00 of this amount was remitted. It was evident that defendant had no knowledge of the new law.'

I shall be glad to have your opinion as to whether the trial court in a prosecution for failure or refusal to report a case of inflammation of the eyes of the new born, or to use a prophylactic at birth when such birth occurs in the practice of a midwife, or in a maternity home, hospital, public or charitable institution has the authority to remit all or any part of the fine or other penalty assessed against the defendant. A number of such cases have occurred."

On October 24, 1907, Hon. Wade H. Ellis, former Attorney-General, rendered an opinion to the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, in which he held that a mayor may not remit a fine imposed in prosecution for violation of state law or of municipal ordinance. In this opinion Mr. Ellis said:

"There is no express authority conferred by the statutes of this state upon such officers to remit any fines due the state of Ohio. The duties of such officers in regard to fines adjudged for violations of the statute law and the ordinances of municipal corporations, are included in the following provisions of the Revised Statutes:

Section 7327 R. S. provides:

'When a fine is the whole or part of a sentence, the court or magistrate may order that the person sentenced shall remain confined in the county jail until the fine and costs are paid, or secured to be paid, or the offender is otherwise legally discharged.'

Section 7328 R. S. provides:

'When a magistrate or court renders judgment for a fine an execution may issue for the same, and the costs of prosecution to be levied on the property, or, in default thereof, upon the body of the defendant; * * *'

Section 6802 R. S. provides:

'An officer who collects any fine shall, unless otherwise required by law, within twenty days after the receipt thereof, pay the same into the treasury of the county in which such fine was assessed, to the credit of the county general fund. * * *'

Fines imposed by mayors for violation of city ordinances when collected are to be paid into the city treasury as distinguished from those which, under section 6802, are to be paid into the county treasury. (Section 1864.)

By section 1866 R. S. it is provided:

'When a fine is imposed for the violation of an ordinance of a corporation, and the same is not paid, the party convicted shall, by order of the mayor, or other proper authority, or on process issued for that purpose, be committed until such fine and the costs of prosecution are paid, or the party is discharged by due process of law.'

By section 1028 R. S. the auditor of the county may discharge from imprisonment any person who is confined in the county jail for the non-payment of any fine or amercement due the county, except fines for contempt of court or some officers of the law, when it is made clearly to appear to him that such fine or imercement cannot be collected by such imprisonment. In the proceeding brought pursuant to such provision the circuit court of the third circuit, in the case of In re Moore, habeas corpus (14 C. C. 237), held that a fine imposed by a court on a defendant in a state case, although payable into the county treasury to the credit of the general county fund, is not a debt due the county, and is not a subject for compounding or releasing by the county commissioners.

As the county commissioners could not, in such case, compound, release or remit any fine made payable to the state of Ohio, neither could the mayor after rendering judgment against the accused in a state case, remit, release or compound the same because the same becomes a claim due the state of Ohio, although when collected paid into the county treasury.

With regard to fines imposed for the violation of municipal ordinances such officer has no authority to discharge the same except by full payment thereof.

As the mayor of a city is not entitled to fees in prosecutions for a violation of penal ordinances, he would have no authority to even remit the costs taxed for his services, in such cases, but he should pay the same into the treasury of the corporation.

Smallwood v. Cambridge, 75 O. S. 339.

Section 126 M. C.

Section 200 M. C.

In re William Mullee, 7 Blatchf (U. S.) 23.

Luckey v. State, 14 Texas 400.

It follows that mayors have no authority to remit fines or costs payable either into the county or municipal treasuries, in state cases or cases brought for the violation of municipal ordinances.

In the foregoing, no question is made as to the authority of a mayor to revise or modify his judgment, in any such cases, by proper proceedings for such purpose."

On April 10, 1915, Hon. Edward C. Turner rendered an opinion to the Industrial Commission of Ohio in which he held:

"Mayors of municipalities and justices of the peace may not remit fines in cases brought for violation of the statutes, except in proper proceedings for such purpose."

In this opinion Mr. Turner, referring to the opinion of Hon. Wade H. Ellis, above quoted, said:

"I approve this opinion, found on page 161 of the attorney-general's reports for the year 1907, and herewith enclose copy thereof."

On May 8, 1915, Hon. Edward C. Turner rendered another opinion to the Industrial Commission of Ohio, in which he held:

"Mayors of municipalities and justices of the peace may not remit a part of fine or part of cost when once assessed for violation of statutes."

In this opinion, Mr. Turner, referring to the power of the magistrate or mayor, said:

"In no case can he remit a fine due to the state of Ohio. Neither can the magistrate, or mayor, impose or collect a fine less in amount than the minimum fine fixed by statute. The magistrate or mayor has no authority to disregard the express provisions of the statutes as to the amount of the fines he shall impose. * * * It is the duty of the magistrate or mayor to administer the law as he finds it and not to make unauthorized substitution therefor."

While this question could be considered more fully, I do not believe such further consideration necessary and upon the position taken by this department, as outlined above, I would advise you that a justice of the peace, or mayor, in such prosecutions as you refer to, has no authority to remit all or any part of a fine or other penalty assessed against the defendant.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—SUPPLEMENTAL TO OPINION NO. 623—JOHN W. ZELLER PROPERTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1917.

HON. J. E. SHATZEL, Secretary of Board of Trustees, State Normal College, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of September 25, 1917, in re sale by John W. Zeller of certain lots in the city of Bowling Green to the state of Ohio, which reads as follows:

"Your opinion (No. 623) under date of September 18, 1917, has been received and carefully noted.

The incumbrances, to wit, mortgage held by C. W. Butler and the taxes, will be deducted from the amount to be paid Mr. Zeller, of course.

The restriction clause, to wit, that Zeller, his heirs or assigns, shall build a fence and a dwelling house to cost not less than three thousand dollars on these lots, was inserted in the deed for the personal and exclusive benefit of the grantor, Helen W. Wooster. At the time of this sale Mrs. Wooster owned the property immediately adjacent on the west and sought to benefit her own property by this requirement. Her property was the only one which could be benefited by this provision, as she knew. Shortly after the sale to Zeller, however, she sold her property to the state and removed to Albuquerque, New Mexico, and has her permanent home there. She does not own any part of lot No. 97 in Bowling Green.

Helen W. Wooster did not, I am reliably informed and absolutely believe, have any other person or persons in view as beneficiaries when she had the above restriction placed in her deed but had only her personal interest and benefit in view. After she sold to the state she had no further interest and that clause became, now is and ever will be wholly inoperative and of no effect.

The state of Ohio owns all of the property on the east, north and west of the Zeller lots, and Wooster street is on the south of them. There is no one to force the restriction excepting the state.

I believe this title to be absolutely good and I am as familiar with it as any one here.

I left the abstract with Mr. Follett last Saturday, but brought the deed home with me. When title is approved by you I shall have the deed recorded and send it to you to be attached to the abstract for filing with the auditor of state.

Shall send you also the cancelled mortgage and tax receipt if you desire them."

Under your statement of facts relative to the restriction in the deed from Helen W. Wooster to John W. Zeller, I am of opinion that said restriction will not be binding upon the state of Ohio, and that the deed previously submitted by you will convey a clear title to the state, with the exception of the taxes and mortgage noted in your communication.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1917.

The Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of September 26, 1917, in which you enclose, for my approval, a contract in duplicate between the city of Mansfield and your board, having to do with the sewerage of the Ohio state reformatory.

I have carefully examined this contract and find it correct in form and legal. I am assuming that the resolution of the council of the city of Mansfield was duly and legally passed as set forth on the margin of the contract.

I am therefore sending this contract to the governor, with my approval endorsed thereon, for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—CONTRACTS BETWEEN BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY AND THE BROWN HOISTING MACHINERY COMPANY—H. R. HEINICKE, INC.—M.P. STREET.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1917.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of the several contracts hereinafter mentioned, which I have carefully examined, together with the bonds securing the same.

> "1. Contract between the board of trustees of Ohio state university and the Brown Hoisting Machinery Company, a Delaware corporation, located at Cleveland, Ohio, for the construction and completion of a coal bunker in the new power house on the Ohio state university campus, for the sum of $11,025.00
> 2. Contract entered into between the board of trustees of Ohio state university and H. R. Heinicke, Inc., a corporation organized under the laws of the state of New York, for the construction and completion of a radial brick chimney for the new power house on the Ohio state university campus, for the sum of $9,730.00.
> "3. Contract entered into between the board of trustees of Ohio state university and M. P. Street, of Columbus, Ohio, for the construction and completion of a new power house tunnel on the Ohio state university campus, for the sum of $11,513.00."

Relative to the last mentioned contract, I note that the bond given is a personal bond, and further note your letter of September 28th wherein you state that in the judgment of the board of trustees of Ohio state university the bond is sufficient and recommend the acceptance thereof.

I have found the contracts and accompanying bonds to be in compliance with law and have therefore approved the same and delivered the same to the auditor of state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—INSTRUCTIONS FORMULATED BY TAX COMMISSION—RESPECTING ADMINISTRATION OF THE DELINQUENT LAND TAX.

Approval of certain instructions formulated by the tax commission of Ohio respecting the administration of the delinquent land tax act of 1917 (107 O. L. 735).

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1917.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Some days ago you submitted to me for my approval certain instructions which the commission has prepared for county auditors concerning the uniform operation of the act of April 4, 1917, 107 O. L. 735, relating to delinquent lands. The instructions in full follow:

"1. Although this act repeals sections 5704 to 5743 inclusive, under which certificates of sale have been issued and many of them are now outstanding unredeemed, the same may be redeemed in accordance with the repealed sections and with the penalties and interest therein provided. This by reason of the provisions of section 26 of the General Code.

2. If the whole or any part of the taxes upon a tract of land or lot for the year 1916 due in December, 1916, and June, 1917, are not paid and are carried to the duplicate of 1917 as provided by section 5678 G. C. and the same are not paid before the time fixed for advertising, the tract or lot shall be advertised in accordance with sections one, two and three of the act.

3. The penalties provided by sections 5678 and 5679 G. C. shall be added on the duplicate the same as has been done in the past.

4. The delinquent list should be made up in accordance with the provisions of section 2601 G. C. and all tracts upon which the taxes have been paid before the first insertion of the advertisement, should be eliminated as provided by section 5 of the act, before advertising.

5. The amount advertised should be the amount of the taxes, assessments and penalties of the preceding year and for the current year, including amount due June 20th following the time of advertising.

6. If a tract or lot is certified delinquent and continues to be delinquent from year to year, it should not be again advertised and certified delinquent until it is redeemed or sold on foreclosure.

7. The 8 per cent interest should be calculated on the total amount certified delinquent from the date of certification and upon future taxes, assessments and penalties, not included in the certification, from the date upon which they are due, to the time of redemption or sale on foreclosure.

8. One certificate containing each tract and lot certified is required by section 9 of the act, and not a separate certificate for each. Five copies of the certificate should be made in order to comply with the provisions of section 9 of the act, and section 13 as to posting lists.

9. Under section 15 of the act the county auditor is required to make separate certificates to the auditor of state containing taxes, assessments, penalties and interest on all tracts and lots which have been certified delinquent and which have not been redeemed at the end of four years from the date of their certification. A copy of this certificate is to be filed with the county treasurer. The first certificate under this section will be made in February, 1922.

10. The county auditor should enter on the margin of the tax list and duplicate the words 'certified delinquent' and the date, opposite each entry so certified. This entry should be carried forward to each succeeding tax list and duplicate until such time as a tract is redeemed or sold. When redeemed the word 'redeemed' and the date should be entered on the margin. When sold on foreclosure the words 'sold for taxes' and the date should be entered.

11. Persons desiring to redeem tracts certified delinquent should make application to the county auditor who will ascertain the amount due including taxes, assessments, penalties, interest and fees for certificate and advertising, and give to the treasurer an addition order for the amount of the interest and a pay-in order to the general fund for the amount of the advertising fee. The fee for the certificate will be paid into the auditor's fee fund with his other fees.

12. The proceedings for the collection of real estate taxes provided for by sections 2656 and 2667 to 2673 are in no way affected by this act.

13. After consultation with the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices concerning its circular letter No. 338, it has been determined that no change in the form of tax list and duplicate will be required on account of this act."

Without going into detail I may say that I approve the instructions generally. The act referred to is too long to quote in full here. Many of the points about which you have expressed an opinion are very doubtful. The law is ambiguous in many respects. I believe, however, that the commission's instructions embody an interpretation of it in the particulars to which they relate which is consistent with the more probable legislative intent and which has the outstanding merit of practicability.

I mention only those features of the commission's instruction that have given me considerable trouble:

The sixth instruction is inconsistent with an implication arising from section 15 of the act, designated as section 5718 G. C., which seems to contemplate the recovery in the action therein provided for of the "amount of eighty-five cents due from the defendants" for each year of delinquency "for advertising and issuance of certificates." This arises from the phrase "for the delinquency of each year." On the other hand, however, there is the statement in section 11 to the effect that land which has once been certified delinquent shall be so carried on the duplicate until it is redeemed. There are practical difficulties in the way of readvertising the land as delinquent during each of the three years intervening between the first advertisement and the foreclosure of the lien. Thus by sections 5678 and 5679 of the General Code, which are unrepealed, it is declared that when the taxes have not been paid on an entry of real estate at the December or June collections, such taxes with the penalties therein authorized shall be due and payable in December following with the entire taxes for the current year. This makes two years' taxes due at once, and the amount of such two years' taxes would have to be the amount set forth in the preliminary certificate authorized by section 9 of the act, section 5712 G. C. If, then, another similar certification would have to be made for such tract in the succeeding year, the amount thereof would include all that had been theretofore certified. In other words, if there were annual certifications under said section 9, they would be cumulative in amount and therefore misleading. I do not think the legislature intended this to be done, but required the preliminary certificate referred to in section 9 as a means of establishing the status of the land as delinquent, which status should continue until redemption. Therefore I agree with the sixth instruction, though entertaining considerable doubt thereon.

The seventh instruction is based upon the essential appropriateness of things rather than upon any express language in the law. Interest is referred to twice therein, once in section 9 referred to above, and once in section 10, designated as section 5713 of the General Code. The first allows "interest at the rate of eight per cent per annum," and directs that it be charged on the duplicate without designating the date from which it shall be computed. The second specifies the date from which the interest shall be computed as "the date of delinquency." You have interpreted these two provisions as separate and not as referring to the same thing. In this I think you are correct. The first provision for interest relates to the amount originally certified and must be taken as allowing interest from the time of certification. The second is an additional provision relating to taxes subsequently becoming delinquent and in such case its provision governs. Your interpretation reconciles the two provisions and makes the two sections consistent with one another.

The eleventh instruction seems to be correct, although section 20 of the act, section 5723 G. C., which deals with redemptions, does not mention the advertising fees. That this was a mere oversight appears likely, and at all events the real operative section relating to redemptions is section 21 of the act, section 5724 G. C., which provides that redemption may be made by "tendering to the county treasurer the amount then due and unpaid." Inasmuch as in such amount is included the certificate fees and advertising costs, your eleventh instruction would seem to be justified.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—BOND ISSUE—BOARD SHOULD NOT PROVIDE FOR SUCH ISSUE UNTIL VOTES CAST AT ELECTION HAVE BEEN CANVASSED—DISSAPPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—NEW CONCORD VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

Sections 7626 and 7627, relating to the authority of the board of education to issue bonds for school purposes voted by the electors of the school district under section 7625 General Code should be read in connection with the provisions of section 5120 General Code providing for the canvass by the board of education of the votes of the electors on the proposition of such bond issue, and the board of education should not provide for the issue of said bonds until such vote has been canvassed and the board has thereby determined that a majority of the electors voting on the proposition voted in favor thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE:—Bonds of New Concord village school district in the sum of $10,000.00 for the purpose of repairing and furnishing the school building in said district.

I am herewith returning without approval the transcript of proceedings of the board of education and other officers of New Concord village school district relating to said bond issue.

The transcript shows that the board of education at a regular meeting thereof, under date of July 9, 1917, adopted a resolution in proper form submitting to the electors of said school district the proposition of said bond issue at an election to be held on August 2, 1917. Further, on August 2, 1917, the board of education, at a called meeting thereof, adopted a resolution reciting that inasmuch as the board of elections had failed to prepare election supplies for the bond issue election to be held on said date, the date of August 17, 1917, was by the board fixed as the date of said election. The transcript does not set out sufficient facts in order to enable me to pass upon the question of whether the called or special meeting of the board of education under date of August 2, 1917, was called in such manner as to make said meeting a legal meeting within the meaning of sections 4750 and 4751 of the General Code, but inasmuch as the transcript does show that all the members of the board were present at this meeting any defect with respect to the legal character of the meeting was probably cured by that fact, and without further discussion of this point I pass to the consideration which leads to my disapproval of this bond issue.

The transcript shows that an election was had on the question of the bond issue under date of August 17, 1917—the date fixed by the board in its resolution under date of August 2, 1917. It further appears that on August 27, 1917, said date being the second Monday after said election, the board of education met and canvassed the votes, and that as a result of said canvass it appeared that ninety-three electors voted in favor of said bond issue and forty-six electors voted against the same. The transcript shows, however, that on August 20, 1917, one week before the canvass of the votes of the election was made, the board of education met at a meeting called by the president, all members thereof being present, and adopted the resolution providing for the issue of the bonds.

My objection to this bond issue is that the issue was provided for before the vote at said election was canvassed in the manner and at the time required by the statute. There may be some question as to whether or not the provisions of section 5120 General Code, providing for the canvass of the votes at an election of this kind, are mandatory or merely directory with respect to the time when such canvass shall be made, but I am inclined to the view, giving effect to the manifest purpose of said section 5120 General Code, that the board of education has no right to take official action with respect to the issuance of said bonds until the canvass of the vote of said election has been made and the result thereof officially known, and for the defect in the proceedings here noted said bond issue is disapproved.

It will be noted from what has been said above that the vote at said election has been properly canvassed by the board according to the provisions of section 5120 General Code, and all that the board of education would have to do in order to obviate the defects in the proceedings above noted would be to now adopt a proper resolution at a legal meeting of the board providing for the issue of said bonds.

I note some other defects in the transcript submitted for my examination, such as a failure to state whether said school district now has any outstanding bond issue or issues, and the amount thereof; whether the school district has any board of sinking fund commissioners, as required by the provisions of section 7614 General Code in cases where a school district has outstanding bonded indebtedness; no statement is made in said transcript with respect to the tax duplicate valuation of the taxable real and personal property in said school district, nor of the tax rate for all purposes on the taxable property within the district.

These defects might possibly be cured by further information, but feeling as I do that in order to make said bond issue legal, the board of education should now adopt another resolution providing for the issue of said bonds, the present issue as before noted herein is disapproved for the reason hereinbefore noted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRANSFER OF FUNDS—FROM GENERAL TOWNSHIP FUND TO TOWNSHIP ROAD FUND—HOW SAME CAN BE MADE.

Money cannot be transferred from the general township fund to the township road fund excepting under and by virtue of the provisions of sections 2296 et seq. of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1917.

HON. J. W. WATTS, Prosecuting Attorney, Hillsboro, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of August 4, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "Hon. Edward C. Turner, in opinion No. 1279, rendered to Hon. E. E. Lindsay, prosecuting attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio, on February 16, 1916, holds that under provision of sections 3370 and 7464 G. C. it is the duty of township trustees to maintain and to keep in repair bridges and culverts on township roads.

In one of the townships of this, Highland county, the township trustees are desirous of repairing and rebuilding certain bridges and culverts on township roads but have no money in the bridge fund. They have plenty of money in the general fund as that fund has lately been replenished by the collection of certain sums paid in as collateral inheritance taxes.

What these trustees are anxious to know is as to whether there is any authority of law by which they can make repairs to and rebuild culverts and bridges and pay for the same from the general fund without going to the expense of applying to the common pleas court, under section 2296 G. C., for authority to transfer the necessary funds from the general fund to the bridge fund?"

The question you ask in your communication is as to whether the township trustees may transfer money from the general township fund to the bridge fund without the necessity of following the provisions of sections 2296 et seq. of the General Code.

Section 2296 G. C. reads as follows:

"The county commissioners, township trustees, the board of education of a school district, or the council, or other board having the legislative power of a municipality, may transfer public funds, except the proceeds or balances of special levies, loans or bond issues, under their supervision, from one fund to another, or to a new fund created under their respective supervision, in the manner hereafter provided, which shall be in addition to all other procedure now provided by law."

It will be noted that this section provides that the method therein set out shall be in addition to all other methods provided by law. In answering your question it will be necessary for us to notice the provisions of a number of sections of the White-Mulcahy act, which became effective on June 28, 1917.

Section 3373 G. C., as found in said act, provides, among other things:

"Township trustees are hereby authorized to purchase or lease such machinery and tools as may be deemed necessary for use in maintaining and repairing roads and culverts within the township. They shall have the power to purchase such material and to employ such labor and teams as may be necessary for said purpose, or they may authorize the purchase or employment of the same by one of their number or by the township highway superintendent at a price to be fixed by the township trustees. All payments on account of machinery, tools, material, labor and teams shall be made from the township road fund as provided by law."

It will be noted under the above provisions that the township trustees have authority to maintain and repair the township roads, together with culverts of the township; but there is nothing whatever said as to bridges.

It is further to be noted in this provision that the expense of maintaining and repairing the roads and culverts of the township is to be paid out of the township road fund. With this in mind, let us determine what provisions are made for a township road fund.

Section 3298-15d G. C. (107 O. L. 79), in the same act, provides among other things as follows:

> "For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the township's proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of constructing, reconstructing, resurfacing or improving roads under the provisions of section 3298-1 to 3298-15n inclusive of the General Code and for the purpose of maintaining, repairing or dragging any public road, or roads, or part thereof, under their jurisdiction in the manner provided in sections 3370 to 3376 inclusive of the General Code, the board of trustees of any township is hereby authorized to levy annually a tax not exceeding three mills upon each dollar of the taxable property of said township."

To the same effect are the provisions of section 3298-18 G. C. (107 O. L. 82).

From the provisions of these sections it is evident that it was the intention of the legislature that the funds necessary for the maintenance and repair of the township roads and culverts should be provided by the levy of a tax each year. From your request it is apparent that the taxes levied by the township trustees was not sufficient to take care of the matter of constructing and improving the roads of the township and also the maintenance and repair of the roads therein. But there is no other provision made to provide the funds to take care of the maintenance and repair of the roads coming under the jurisdiction of the township trustees; hence there is only one remedy left and that is, to resort to the provisions of sections 2296 et seq. G. C., viz., to transfer money from the general township fund to the township road fund. You suggest in your communication the township bridge fund, but under the above act provision is made for a township road fund from which the necessary cost and expense of the repair and maintenance of the roads of the township must be paid, as well as the cost and expense of the maintenance and repair of the culverts within the township.

Therefore, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that if the levy made under the provisions of section 3298-15d G. C. does not provide sufficient funds to enable the township trustees to repair and maintain the culverts and highways of the township, as well as to construct and improve township roads, the only remedy is to transfer money from some other fund to the township road fund under the provisions of sections 2296 et seq. G. C.

I have discussed at some length, in another opinion rendered by me recently to Hon. Joseph T. Micklethwait, prosecuting attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio (No. 668), the question as to the jurisdiction of the county commissioners and township trustees in the construction and repairing of bridges located on township and county roads, and am enclosing a copy of same for your consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

RIGHT OF WAY—FROM STATE TO HOCKING POWER COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1917.

Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of September 28th Hon. James P. Wood, Jr., of Athens, Ohio, presented to me the enclosed grant of right of way from the state to the Hocking Power Company, which is submitted in lieu of the one which was submitted to me on August 1, 1917, and which was commented upon in opinion No. 561, dated August 27, 1917, addressed to your board.

The grant in its present form has complied with all the suggestions and seems to be in all respects sufficient and in compliance with the act of the legislature referred to in the former opinion, and is therefore accordingly approved as to form.

In its present form, however, there is no consideration set out for said land, nor is there any execution thereof by your board.

Very truly yours,

SINKING FUND TRUSTEES—WHEN SAID OFFICIALS MAY ACCEPT SURRENDER OF COUPON BONDS AND ISSUE REGISTERED BONDS THEREFOR.

Sections 3928, 3929 and 3930 General Code, authorizing the trustees of the sinking fund of the municipality under certain conditions to accept a surrender of the coupon bonds, issued by it, made by the holder thereof and issue to the to the holder thereof registered bond or bonds of the municipality properly signed and sealed in place thereof, do not authorize such sinking fund trustees to accept a surrender of such registered bond or bonds upon the sale and transfer thereof and issue to the holder of such registered bond or bonds so sold and transferred new registered bond or bonds in place of the registered bond or bonds so sold and transferred.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a letter from you with which you enclose a communication addressed to you by Mr. F. R. Hogue, city solicitor of Ashtabula, Ohio, and with respect to which you ask my opinion. Mr. Hogue's communication is as follows:

> "March 19, 1910, A., being the owner and holder of coupon bonds, numbers 891, 892, 893, 894 and 895 in the sum of $1,000.00, each maturing October 1, 1920, theretofore duly issued by the city of Ashtabula for the improvement of Ashtabula creek, made application to have said bonds cancelled and a registered bond in the sum of $5,000.00 issued in place thereof, under the provisions of section 3928 et seq. of the General Code, and a registered bond No. 1 in the sum of $5,000.00 was duly issued and the coupon bonds cancelled. A has sold said registered bond No. 1 to B, and B now makes application to have said registered bond No. 1 cancelled and a new registered bond with a new number issued in the name of B.

QUERY—Is there any authority in the sinking fund commission or any other officer or officers of the city to cancel said registered bond No. 1 and issue a new registered bond in place thereof, or should bond No. 1 be simply transferred on the bond register to the name of B?

The city is willing to accommodate to B if it can be done legally. An early reply is desired as I have instructed the auditor to hold up this transfer until I hear from you."

I have been unable to find any statutory provisions reflecting upon the question made by Mr. Hogue other than those noted by him, to wit: Sections 3928, 3929 and 3930 of the General Code, which sections read as follows:

"Sec. 3928. On demand of the owner or holder of any of its coupon bonds, a municipal corporation may issue instead thereof a registered bond, or bonds, of the corporation not exceeding in amount the coupon bonds offered in exchange. The registered bond or bonds shall be signed and sealed as other municipal bonds are signed and sealed, and bear the same rate of interest, be payable both principal and interest at the same time and place, as the coupon bonds for which the exchange is made, and shall be of such denomination as the holder of the coupon bonds may elect."

"Sec. 3929. When due, the interest and principal of such registered bonds shall be paid only to the person, corporation or firm, appearing by the records of the municipal corporation to be the owner thereof, or order. Such registered bonds may be transferred on such record by the owner in person or by a person authorized so to do by power of attorney duly executed. The exchange and registration here required shall be transacted by the trustees of the sinking fund at their business office where a registry shall be kept for that purpose which shall show the date, series, denomination and owner of such registered bonds, and the number and series of the coupon bond for which they were exchanged."

"3930. No registered bonds shall be issued by a municipal corporation until the bonds and coupons offered in exchange shall have been cancelled or destroyed. The trustees of the sinking fund may demand of the holder of the coupon bonds a reasonable fee as compensation for the expense of making such exchange."

Briefly stated these sections, so far as concerns the question at hand, authorize a municipal corporation to accept a surrender of its coupon bonds and upon cancellation and destruction thereof issue to the holder of the same a registered bond or bonds of the corporation not exceeding in amount the coupon bonds offered in exchange; and with respect to the authentication and record of the sale and transfer of such registered bonds it is provided that the municipality shall keep a record or registry of such registered bonds that the same may be transferred on such record by the owner in person or by a person authorized to do so by power of attorney duly executed, and it is further provided that when due the interest and principal of such registered bonds shall be paid only to the person, corporation or firm appearing by the record of the municipality to be the owner thereof, or order.

The method prescribed by these sections with reference to the authentication and record on the sale and transfer of registered bonds seems to be in accordance with the procedure generally recognized as appropriate in the commercial world so far as such procedure has been the subject of judicial consideration.

In the case of Benwell v. Newark, 55 N. J. Equity, 262, Vice-Chancellor Pitney, speaking of the essential qualities of the different kinds of municipal bonds, defines the characteristics of a registered bond as follows:

> "A registered bond is one which is a simple certificate of indebtedness, in favor of a particular individual, payable at a day named, with interest at days named. The name of the payee is entered on the books of the corporation debtor—municipal or private—as the registered owner, or, if it be a government bond, on the register of the government. On the days when, by the terms of the bond or certificate of indebtedness, the interest falls due, it is paid directly to the registered creditor, without presentation of the bond, usually by check drawn to his order and sent by mail, or, if he so demands, by cash in hand, but by long-settled course of practise the payment is made by check to the order of the creditor.
> These bonds or certificates of indebtedness are not negotiable, and can be transferred only by an entry on the books of the debtor corporation, with a proper endorsement on the bond itself, or by the issue of a new certificate if it be a government indebtedness. The peculiar value of this class of securities lies in the fact that it is not necessary to produce them to the debtor at each time that the interest is due, and the danger of loss by robbery or fire is entirely removed. As they are usually made to run for a long term of years, so that, as in the present instance, the amount of interest in the aggregate is really greater than the principal, this peculiarity is of great importance."

The question made in the communication of Mr. Hogue, above quoted, is with respect to the right of a purchaser of a registered bond of a municipality in this state to surrender to the municipality the registered bond purchased by him and receive in exchange therefor a new registered bond of the same denomination, interest and maturity, made out in his own name, or more accurately, the question is with respect to the power of the municipality to accept a surrender of a registered bond so purchased and issue a new bond to the purchaser in his own name.

In the consideration of this question, which is one essentially involving a consideration of the powers of a municipal corporation, we are required to recognize the principal that the municipal corporation has only such legislative power as is expressly granted or clearly implied.

> Bloom v. Xenia, 32 O. S. 461.
> Townsend v. Circleville, 78 O. S. 133.
> Ohio Electric Ry. v. Ottawa, 85 O. S. 229, 239.

Or, as has been more accurately stated, perhaps,

> "Municipal corporations, in their public capacity, possess such powers and such only, as are expressly granted by statute, and such as may be implied as essential to carry into effect those which are expressly granted."
> (Ravenna v. Pennsylvania Co., 45 O. S. 118.)

It is hardly necessary to say that this principle applies in its integrity with respect to the power of municipal corporations to issue bonds.

> Cincinnati National Bank v. City of Cincinnati, 13 C. C. N. S. 14, 15.
> Commissioners v. State, 78 O. S. 287, 302.

With respect to the question at hand, it cannot be said that the power of a municipal corporation to issue a new registered bond in exchange for a previous one covering the same issue is a power to be implied as one necessary to carry out and make effective the express power with respect to transfers and the registration thereof of such bonds provided for in the section above quoted. If the power of a municipal corporation to issue a new registered bond in exchange for a registered bond issued by it under the provisions of the above quoted section exists at all it must be by virtue of some implied power independent of the express statutory provision above noted.

Beach, in his work on "Public Corporations," in Vol. II, at section 928, says:

> "When the municipality has the power to issue bonds and they have been issued, it may substitute other bonds of the same nature in their stead —may change the form though not the substance of its liability."

No authorities are cited by Mr. Beach in support of this particular proposition. Some support in favor of the contention of implied authority in municipal corporations in matters of this kind is afforded by the case of Rogan v. Watertown, 30 Wis. 259, which was an action upon certain interest coupons. One of the counts in the action was on a coupon on a bond which was a re-issue in substitution for a prior bond of the same number and amount and corresponding in all particulars with the original bond, the original having been surrendered and cancelled under authority of the resolution of the common council authorizing the mayor and city clerk to cancel any of the bonds of the issue and to execute in lieu of such cancelled bonds duplicates of the same number and amount, and payable at the same time. It was objected to this bond that the power of the mayor and council were exhausted when the bonds were issued, and that the proceedings for cancellation and re-issue were without authority. As to this the court said:

> "By the issue and delivery of the bonds a debt had been created by the city, and with respect to such debt and the securities given, it was competent for the city, as for any other debtor, to enter into negotiations and to cancel or exchange its bonds without special legislative authority."

In the case of Hyde v. Ewert, 16 S. Dakota 133,the court says:

> "Where a municipal corporation has created a valid debt against itself, it has power, like any other debtor, to enter into negotiations concerning such debt and to reduce its amount by the payment or exchange of other bonds without any special grant of legislative authority."

In view of the strict rule obtaining in this state with respect to the construction of the powers of municipal corporations, I am not disposed to extend the doctrine recognized in the authority just cited to the question here presented; and moreover I am constrained to the view that if under any circumstance it can be said that a municipal corporation in this state has the implied power to issue registered bonds in exchange for previous registered bonds issued by it, such implied power is one that can be exercised only by somebody representing the corporation as a whole, such as the council or other corresponding body of the municipality.

Looking to the statutory provisions here under consideration, it appears that they authorize the municipal corporation acting through its trustees of the sinking fund to issue a registered bond or bonds, signed and sealed by the proper officers of the municipality in exchange for coupon bonds previously issued by it. After such registered bond or bonds are issued the only authority granted to any officer or officers of the municipality is that granted by the sections above noted to the trustees of the sinking fund, who are required to keep a record or registry of such registered bonds, and to note thereon all subsequent transfers of such bonds on the sale or transfer thereof.

I am inclined to the view that the power of a municipality to issue to the purchaser of a registered bond a new bond of this character cannot be sustained without reading into the statutory provisions above noted provisions that are not there, either in terms or by necessary implication. I am therefore of the opinion that the question presented in the communication of Mr. Hogue to you should be answered in the negative.

In reaching the above conclusion I assume that the municipality has not attempted to confer any additional authority upon the trustees of the sinking fund with respect to the question at hand under the provisions of section 4519 General Code, and for this reason I do not here consider the possible force and effect of the provisions of this section.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BONDS—ISSUED UNDER SECTION 1223 G. C. TO MATURE IN TEN YEARS—BY RESOLUTION DATED MAY 18, 1917—NOT BINDING OBLIGATIONS AGAINST COUNTY—DISAPPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—SANDUSKY COUNTY.

Bonds issued under section 1223 G. C. and under a resolution of the county commissioners dated May 18, 1917, to mature in ten years, would not be a legal and binding obligation against the county, for the reason that section 1223 G. C., as it stood at the time the resolution was adopted, provided that bonds issued thereunder must mature in five years.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1917.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bond issue of $32,000.00 by the county commissioners of Sandusky county, Ohio, for the improvement of intercounty highway No. 281, section "O."

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the county commissioners leading up to the above bond issue, and find that all the steps taken by the county commissioners are regular. Therefore, so far as the different proceedings had in reference to this bond issue are concerned, I am of the opinion that the county commissioners would have full authority in law to issue said bonds and that they would be a legal and binding obligation against the said county.

Further, the transcript shows that the total amount of such bonds now outstanding does not exceed one per cent of the tax duplicate of the county.

However, there is one matter to which I desire to call attention, namely, that the resolution, in which the county commissioners resolved it was necessary and advisable to issue said bonds, was adopted on May 18, 1917. Said resolution provides that the bonds shall be issued in denominations of five hundred dollars each, shall be dated September 15, 1917, and the last of said bonds shall mature on September 15, 1927, thus making the said issue to mature in ten years from the date of their issue. The question arises here as to whether this is in accordance with law.

Section 1223 of the Cass highway act provided that the bonds should be issued:

> "In such amounts as to mature in not more than five years after their issue, as the county commissioners shall determine."

This section was amended in the White-Mulcahy act to read as follows:

> Such bonds shall be issued "in such amounts, and to mature in not more than ten years after their issue, as the county commissioners shall determine."

The White-Mulcahy act was filed in the office of the secretary of state on March 29, 1917, and in accordance with the provisions of the constitution in reference to the referendum this law was not effective until ninety days after its being filed in the office of the secretary of state, which date was June 28, 1917.

The question is, which one of these provisions should control in the matter of this bond issue? If the provisions found in the Cass highway act should control, the resolution of the county commissioners relative to this bond issue is not in accordance with law. If the provisions of the White-Mulcahy act control, then the resolution is in accordance with law.

The resolution, as before stated, was adopted on May 18, 1917, but it provides that the bonds shall be dated and issued as of the date September 15, 1917; that is, of a date after the time at which the said White-Mulcahy act became effective. At the time the resolution setting forth the necessity for the issuing of bonds and providing for the issuing thereof was adopted, the White-Mulcahy act had been passed by the general assembly, signed by the governor and filed with the secretary of state, but it was not yet effective.

While the resolution provides that the bonds shall be issued as of date September 15, 1917, yet it is my opinion that the validity of these bonds rests entirely upon the question as to whether at the time the resolution was adopted there was any provision of law which warranted the county commissioners in adopting a resolution to the effect that bonds should be issued, all of which were not to mature short of ten years.

Section 3 of the resolution itself provides that:

> "Said bonds shall be signed and executed as required by law to be signed and executed, they shall state therein the purpose for which they are issued, that they are issued under authority of the laws of Ohio and especially under Section 1223 of the General Code of Ohio and of this resolution. * * *"

At the time the resolution was adopted, there was no provision of law authorizing the county commissioners to issue bonds, the maturity of which should extend beyond a period of five years. For this reason it is my opinion that the resolution of the county commissioners that bonds should be issued, the maturity of which should extend beyond the period of five years, would have no force or effect in law, because there was no warrant in law for the adoption of such a resolution.

If the resolution so adopted by the county commissioners was not legal, it is my opinion that the bonds issued under and by virtue of the resolution so adopted would not be a legal and binding obligation against the county, even though at the time the bonds were dated and issued there would be authority in law for issuing them to cover a period of ten years.

For the reasons hereinabove set forth, I am of the opinion that you would not be authorized in purchasing the said bonds so issued, but inasmuch as there is no disposition upon my part to interfere with the sale of these bonds by the said county, it might be well for your department to rescind the resolution to purchase generally, without giving any particular reason therefor.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ABSTRACT OF TITLE—SUPPLEMENTAL TO OPINION NO. 667—CHARLES M. LUDMAN PROPERTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1917.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary of Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Since rendering you Opinion No. 667, under date of September 28, 1917, relative to the abstract of title covering the land in the city of Columbus deeded by Charles M. Ludman and Anna B. Ludman, his wife, to the state of Ohio, I have received information that the abstract submitted was incorrect, in this, to wit: That the special assessments noted therein were not proper charges against the land in question.

The abstract has been resubmitted by the attorney for the grantors in a corrected form, showing no special assessments against said property. Therefore, I am of the opinion that the deed formerly submitted will convey a clear title to the state of Ohio, with the exception of the taxes for the year 1917.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ELECTION—UPON BOND ISSUE—TO FUND EXISTING DEFICIENCIES OF CORPORATIONS AND SCHOOL DISTRICTS—HOW NOTICE THEREOF SHOULD BE GIVEN.

The notice of elections provided for in section 3 of the so-called Terrell act (107 O. L. 575-578), authorizing municipal corporations and school districts to fund existing deficiencies by the issue and sale of bonds on a vote of the electors, should be given by the municipal corporation or school district calling the election rather than by the deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 5, 1917.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of a communication from you under date of September 24, 1917, in which you ask my opinion as to whether it is the duty of the political subdivisions or that of the deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections to give the notices of elections provided in the Terrell act (107 O. L. 575-578), authorizing municipal corporations and school districts to fund its existing deficiencies by the issue and sale of bonds on a vote of the electors of such political subdivision.

Section 1 of this act authorizes the council or other legislative body of a municipal corporation and the board of education of any school district to submit to a vote of the electors of such municipal corporation or school district at the regular election of municipal and school officers in the year 1917 the question of issuing bonds for the purpose of funding the existing deficiency of the municipality or of the school district, as such deficiency is therein defined.

This section further provides that such council, other body or board of education by resolution passed not later than the second Monday in July, 1917, may direct the city auditor, village clerk, or other municipal accounting officer and the board of sinking fund trustees or other municipal sinking fund authorities, or the clerk of the board of education and the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district, if there be such board, to make up a financial statement of such municipality or school district as of the first day of July, 1917. The officers so directed shall immediately examine the records, books and accounts of their respective offices, and shall make up a financial statement as therein provided and file the same in the office of the clerk of the council or other similar municipal officer or with the clerk of the board of education not later than the second Monday of August, 1917. If they find that a deficiency exists, as defined in the act, in any funds under their respective supervision, they shall certify the amount thereof, together with the various funds affected, and the deficiency in cash, under oath, on such statement.

Sections 2 and 3 of said act provide as follows:

> "Section 2. Thereupon, such council, other body or board of education, by resolution passed by an affirmative vote of a majority of all the members elected or appointed thereto not later than the first Monday in October, 1917, may declare it necessary to issue and sell bonds of the corporation or school district for the purpose of funding the existing deficiency of such corporation or school district in the amount certified as the same is hereinafter defined. Such resolution shall go into immediate effect, without publication and without being subject to a referendum of the electors.
> Section 3. A copy of such resolution shall be certified to the deputy state supervisors of elections of the county or counties in which the corporation or district is situated. The deputy state supervisors shall prepare the ballots and make the necessary arrangements for the submission of such question to the electors of such corporation or district at said election. The result of the election shall be certified and canvassed in like manner as regular elections in such municipal corporations and school districts for the election of officers thereof. Twenty days' notice of the election shall be given in one or more newspapers printed in the municipality or district once a week for four consecutive weeks prior thereto, stating the purpose for which the bonds are to be issued, the amount of such bonds, and the time and place of holding the election. If no newspaper is printed therein, the notice shall be posted in five conspicuous places at least twenty days prior to the election and published once a week for four consecutive weeks prior thereto in a newspaper of general circulation in the municipal corporation or school district. The ballots used at said election shall state briefly the proposition to be voted on, indicating the name of the municipal corporation or school district, the amount of bonds to be issued, and further shall be in form as follows:
> 'For the issue of deficiency bonds. Yes.
> 'For the issue of deficiency bonds. No.'"

Looking to the provisions of section 3 of the act above quoted it will be noted that the section does not specifically provide who is to give the notice of election therein provided for, and this circumstance gives rise to the question made in your communication.

It may be stated as a general principle that the calling of an election contemplates the giving of the notices thereof in some manner, and it is the usual practice to direct by statutory provision both the manner and the time of giving notice of all elections, regular as well as special elections, upon a particular question or proposition. The authorities, however, recognize a distinction in the necessity for notices in the two classes of elections and this distinction has been reflected in the attitude of courts in passing upon questions arising from a failure to comply substantially with statutory provisions with respect to notices of the two kinds of elections herein. As to general elections it seems to be established that the fixing of the time for the election by statutory provisions is in itself notice to which all electors must heed, and that as a consequence where an officer is charged with the duty of giving notice of such election or with the duty of issuing proclamations thereof, his failure to perform his duty will not invalidate the election. Where, however, the time for holding an election is not prescribed by law, but is fixed by the officer vested with authority to call it, the voters cannot be expected to have or take notice thereof unless notice of such election be given, and therefore a statutory provision for such notice is to be considered as mandatory and its substantial performance essential to the validity of the elections and this is probably the rule applying when the special election is held at the same time as a general election, although this proposition it seems is not entirely settled. However, it seems that if notice of special elections issue from a proper source provided by law and affords the requisite intelligence, and has been posted in public places or has been published in newspapers for the designated time, it is immaterial who posted such notice or procured the newspaper publication of the same.

See State v. Sengstacken, 61 Oregon, 455.

And it has been likewise held that where notice of an election is actually published or posted in the manner specified by law for that purpose an election will not be held invalid because the direction to publish did not emanate from the proper authority, it appearing in such cases to be the actual giving of the notice which is the essential requirement.

Demaree v. Johnson, 150 Ind. 420, 427;
Hart v. Scott, 50 N. J. L. 585;
Ruling Case Law, Vol. 9, page 993.

Applying the foregoing principles to the question submitted by you, it is probable that inasmuch as the statutes do not specifically state who is to give the notice of election provided for in this act, the same might conceivably be given by either the political subdivision calling the election or by the deputy supervisors and inspectors of elections without impairing the validity of the election held pursuant to such notice.

I am inclined to the view, however, that it was the intention of the legislature in the enactment of section 3 of this act to impose the duty to give such notices upon the political subdivision calling the election pursuant to the provisions of the act. The provisions of section 3 above quoted, with respect to the manner in which such election should be conducted and notice thereof given to the electors, were obviously taken from the provisions of section 5649-5a General Code, the same being a section of the Smith one per cent law so-called, authorizing the electors of the political subdivision to vote on a maximum tax rate in excess of those otherwise provided for by said law. It is likewise quite apparent that the provisions in section 5649-5a General Code with respect to the conduct of elections therein provided for and with respect to the manner in which notice thereof should be given were in turn borrowed from the provisions of the Longworth act, so-called (sections 3944, 3945 and 3946 General Code), authorizing municipal corporations to issue bonds on a vote of the electors in excess of the limitations otherwise prescribed by said law.

In each of the three cases above noted the statutes specifically provide that notice of election shall be given and directs the manner thereof, but in neither case designates the authority who is to give such notice.

The above noted provisions of the Longworth act have been a part of the statutory law of this state for many years, while the provisions of the Smith one per cent law have been in the statutes for about seven years. As far as I have been able to ascertain it has been the uniform practice under both the Smith and the Longworth laws for the political subdivisions calling the election to give notice of such election by the proper officers. This practical construction of the provisions of the Smith law and of the Longworth law with respect to the notice of elections provided for in said respective laws, while not absolutely controlling, is deserving of great consideration and should be regarded as decisive with respect to the question as to who is to give the notices of the elections provided for in the Smith and Longworth laws, inasmuch as in both cases the duty enjoined is not plain and specific.

State v. Smith, 71 O. S. 13, 40.
State of Ohio ex rel. v. Hirstius et al. 177, 181.

It is obvious that the provisions of section 3 of the Terrell act should receive the same construction with respect to the question as to who is to give the notice of election therein provided for, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that such notice should be given by the municipality or the board of education calling the election rather than by the deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—NO AUTHORITY TO LIMIT WEIGHT OF LOADED TRUCK USED IN ROAD BUILDING IN SPECIFICATIONS FOR HIGHWAY CONSRUCTION—NOR REJECT BID BECAUSE BIDDER WILL NOT AGREE TO LIMIT WEIGHT OF SAID TRUCK.

1. Township trustees have no authority to include in their specifications for the construction of highways a limitation upon the weight of the loaded truck which the contractor might use in constructing the highway, other than those limitations set out in section 7246, 7247 and 7248 G. C. (107 O. L. 139).

2. Township trustees would not be authorized in rejecting a bid for the construction of a public highway, simply for the reason that the bidder would not voluntarily agree to limit his loaded trucks, used in the construction of the highway, to a weight less than that set out in said sections.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 5, 1917.

HON. CHESTER PENDLETON, Prosecuting Attorney, Findlay, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in which you request my opinion relative to a matter therein set out, as follows:

"My attention has been called to an opinion from your office, No. 382, under date of June 16, 1917, in which you hold that it would not be legal for the county commissioners to insert, either in their plans and specifications or in the contracts for improvement of county roads, alternative provisions, one providing that the material for the construction of the road should be hauled by teams, and the other providing that it be hauled by trucks.

Several of the boards of township trustees have made objections to me because of the excessive heavy trucks, weighing about twelve tons when loaded and engaged in the building of public roads, for the reason that it is their opinion that these heavy trucks destroy two roads while they are building one. In many cases the loaded trucks are heavier than the road rollers with which the roads are constructed. The situation suggests the following questions:

First. Would it be legal for the township trustees to include in their specifications a limitation upon the weight of the loaded truck that the road builder is permitted to use on the work?

Second. Would it be legal for the township trustees, acting under section 6945 G. C., to reject a bid as not being the lowest and best bid (1) when the lowest bidder refuses to voluntarily agree to limit his loaded trucks to a reasonable weight; (2) when they have reason to believe that the lowest bidder will use a truck of such excessive weight as to have a destructive effect upon the highways?"

I note you are familiar with Opinion No. 382, rendered by me under date of June 16, 1917; hence, I shall not consider the reasoning and conclusions of said opinion, nor shall I enclose a copy for your consideration. But I will go directly to the statutes which relate to the matter that has been presented to you by a number of your township trustees.

Section 7246 G. C. (107 O. L. 139) provides:

"No traction engine, trailer, wagon, truck, steam roller, automobile truck or other power vehicle, whether propelled by muscular or motor power, weighing in excess of twelve tons, including weight of vehicle, object or contrivance and load, shall be operated over and upon the improved public streets, highways, bridges or culverts within the state, except as hereinafter provided. * * * No object shall be moved over or upon such streets, highways, bridges or culverts upon wheels, rollers or otherwise, except as hereinafter provided, in excess of a total weight of twelve tons including weight of vehicle, object or contrivance and load."

This section limits generally the weight of a truck, automoblie truck or other power vehicle to twelve tons, including the weight of the vehicle, which may be operated over or upon the improved public streets, highways, bridges or culverts within the state.

Section 7247 G. C. (107 O. L. 140) gives the county surveyor the authority to grant permission to move vehicles mentioned in section 7246, supra, over the improved public highways, of a heavier weight than twelve tons, under such conditions and restrictions as he deems necessary.

Section 7248 G. C. (107 O. L. 140) makes provision to the effect that the weight which a vehicle may carry over the improved public highways of the state shall be in proportion to the width of the tire used on the wheels of said vehicles.

Section 7249 G. C. (107 O. L. 140) limits the speed at which different vehicles may travel over the improved public highways of the state, the speed to depend upon the weight of the vehicle and the load which it carries.

With these four sections in mind, we will note the provisions of the section which I feel gives an answer to the question proposed by you.

Section 7250 G. C. (107 O. L. 140) reads as follows:

> "The weights of loads prescribed and the rates of speed mentioned in sections 7246 to 7249 inclusive of the General Code shall not be decreased or prohibited by any ordinance, resolution, rule or regulation of a municipal corporation, board of county commissioners, board of township trustees or other public authority."

It will be noted in this section that the weights of loads prescribed in sections 7246, 7247 and 7248, supra, shall not be decreased or prohibited by any ordinance, resolution, rule or regulation of a board of township trustees or any other public authority.

Your question is as to whether the township trustees would be authorized in including in their specifications for the improvement of public highways a limitation upon the weight of a loaded truck, which the road builder might use in the construction of the highway, and whether the township trustees could reject a bid as not being the lowest and best bid, provided the bidder would not consent to limit his loaded trucks to a reasonable weight.

While the object sought to be accomplished in such a rule or regulation is a most worthy one, namely, the prevention of destruction of the improved public highways, yet it is my opinion that such a provision cannot be made in the specifications for the construction of a public highway; neither would the township trustees be authorized in compelling a bidder to agree to limit his loaded trucks to some weight that the township trustees might decide to be reasonable. There is nothing in the law that makes provision for such a condition; hence, the only way it could be done would be for the township trustees to adopt a rule or regulation to the effect that they would not let a contract to any one who would not voluntarily agree to limit the loads hauled by him to a reasonable weight. But it is to be noted that section 7250 G. C., supra, provides that the township trustees, among other public officials, shall not adopt any rule or regulation which will in any way decrease the weights of loads prescribed in the above noted sections. To be sure, the contractor would be compelled to obey the provisions set out in these sections, just as well as any one else, and he could not travel over the improved public highways of the state with a heavier load than that therein designated. It is my opinion that further than this the township trustees could not go.

Hence, answering you specifically, it is my opinion that:

1. Township trustees cannot include in their specifications a limitation upon the weight of the loaded truck that a contractor will use in the construction of a highway, further than that which is provided in sections 7246, 7247 and 7248, supra.

2. Township trustees would not be authorized in refusing to let a contract, upon the ground that the bidder would not agree to limit loads which he would haul to a weight less than that prescribed in said sections 7246, 7247 and 7248 G. C.

In passing I might suggest that in your request you inadvertently mention section 6945 G. C., which relates to the letting of contracts by county commissioners, instead of section 3298-15f G. C. (107 O. L. 80) which covers the letting of contracts by township trustees.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BONDS—MAY BE ISSUED UNDER SECTION 6929 G. C. ONLY FOR PURPOSE OF PAYING COST AND EXPENSE OF ROAD IMPROVEMENTS BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—DISAPPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—CUYAHOGA COUNTY.

Bonds may be legally issued under authority of section 6929 General Code only for the purpose of paying the cost and expense of road improvements conducted by the board of county commissioners, and, therefore, bonds may not be issued under the authority of this section for the purpose of paying the cost and expense of an intercounty highway improvement conducted by the state highway commissioner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 10, 1917.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE: Bonds of Cuyahoga county, Ohio, in the sums of $14,500 and $50,845, to cover the shares of abutting property owners and of said county respectively in the improvement of Som Center road No. 6, improvement. (Chagrin Falls—Cuyahoga Falls intercounty highway No. 91.)

I am herewith returning without approval transcript of proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Cuyahoga county, Ohio, and of the other officers therein designated relating to the above bond issues. This improvement was initiated by the filing of a petition signed by 51 per cent of the property owners to be assessed for the cost and expense of the improvement, and for the most part said transcript indicates proceedings by the board of county commissioners of said county for the improvement of the road in question, under the provisions of chapter 6 of the Cass highway law relating to the matter of road construction and improvements by the county commissioners, and the bond forms covering said proposed issues, which are made a part of the transcript, specifically recite that said bonds are issued under the provisions of section 6929 General Code, enacted as part of chapter 6 of the Cass highway law.

In a resolution of the board of county commissioners under date of August 2, 1916, the cost and expense of said improvement is apportioned in the manner indicated by the following language:

"Be it further resolved, that the county of Cuyahoga shall assume and pay $74,844.58, as its portion of the cost and expense of said improvement, of which amount the state has agreed to pay $24,000. That the trustees of Solon township shall pay $10,836 as its portion of the cost and expense of said improvement, and that the property fronting and abutting thereon shall pay $14,450, as their portion of the cost and expense of said improvement."

Aside from the amount which, according to this resolution, is to be contributed by the state toward the cost and expense of the improvement, the cost and expense thereof is apportioned according to the provisions of paragraph 3 of section 6919 General Code, it appearing from the transcript that the sum of $10,836.00 apportioned to Solon township was agreed upon by the trustees of said township and the board of county commissioners as the amount to be paid by said township toward the cost and expense of the improvement.

In answer to a communication from me with respect to the purpose and authority of the contemplated action of the state in contributing $24,000.00 towards the cost and expense of this improvement I was advised by the board of county commissioners of said county by letter written on their behalf by one of the assistants of the prosecuting attorney of said county, that it was the intention of the board of county commissioners to cover the amount of said bond issue—and I assume the amount to be paid by Solon township as well—into the county treasury there to be at the command of the state highway commissioner who, I am advised, is to conduct said improvement. The reason for the unusual procedure here adopted is stated in said communication above referred to as follows:

> "In explanation as to why provisions of the state highway law with reference to assessments were not followed from the inception of this improvement, it may be stated that in the opinion of the commissioners, benefits conferred upon the abutting property by this improvement are considerably in excess of the ten per cent which the state highway law permits to be assessed against abutting property, and in order that the proportion assessed upon the real estate abutting upon this improvement may be equitable in comparison with the assessment in this county on real estate abutting upon other similar improvements, the board in this improvement has proceeded to levy the assessment under the provisions of the county law."

Section 1214 General Code, the same being part of chapter 8 of the Cass law relating to the construction and improvement of roads by the state highway department, provides for the proportion of the cost and expense of constructing intercounty highways improved by the state highway commissioner under said chapter, and with respect to the amount to be assessed upon the owners of property benefited by said assessment, provides as follows:

> "Ten per cent of the cost and expense of the improvement, excepting therefrom the cost and expense of bridges and culverts, shall be a charge upon the property abutting on the improvement, provided the total amount assessed against any owner of abutting property shall not exceed thirty-three per cent of the valuation of such abutting property for the purposes of taxation."

The township trustees shall apportion the amount to be paid by the owners of abutting property according to the benefits accruing to the owners of land so located.

Assuming both bond issues to be under the authority of section 6929 General Code, I am quite clearly of the opinion that bonds may be issued under the authority of this section for the purpose of paying the cost and expense only of the road improvements conducted by the board of county commissioners, and that for this reason the board of county commissioners of Cuyahoga county was without authority to issue bonds under the authority of this section to pay any part of the cost and expense of an improvement to be conducted by the state highway commissioner; it appearing that with respect to improvements of intercounty highways conducted by the state highway commissioner special authority is granted to the board of county commissioners to issue bonds covering the shares of the cost and expense of such improvements to be paid by the county, township, and property owners assessed, respectively. This authority is granted by the provisions of section 1223 General Code.

Taking the proceedings as a whole, I do not think it can be fairly said that this was an issue of bonds under section 1223 General Code, and if they were to be so considered it is clear that the $14,500.00 bond issue would have to be considered defective from that view-point for the reason that the assessments in anticipation of which said bonds are issued are illegal as being in excess of the amount permitted by statute, and being laid and certified by the board of county commissioners instead of township trustees, as required by the provisions of section 1214 General Code as said section read at the time said assessments were made and certified.

As before indicated, however, there is not enough in this transcript to support either of these issues as issued under authority of section 1223 General Code. Outside of the recitals contained in certain proceedings of the board of county commissioners there is nothing to show any application for state aid on the part of the county commissioners for the improvement of this road, nor any approval of such application by the state highway commissioner. Moreover, there is nothing in the transcript which indicates any right on the part of the county commissioners to issue bonds in the aggregate for a sum to exceed fifty per cent of the estimated cost of the improvement. In other words, there is nothing in the transcript to show that as to this improvement the state is not obliged on the approval of the application for state aid to pay fifty per cent of the cost of the improvement. The transcript leaves us in the dark on these questions.

However, I am considering these bond issues as the same evidently were considered by the board of county commissioners, to wit: As issues under the authority of section 6929 General Code, and I am disapproving said bond issues for the reasons above indicated, that I am of the opinion that the board of county commissioners has no authority to issue bonds under these sections for any other purpose than to pay for improvements conducted by it.

However, I would concede that lawyers might honestly disagree as to the legality of these bond issues, and for this reason I suggest that you rescind your previous resolution generally, providing for the purchase of these bonds, rather than upon the particular grounds of the illegality of the issues as found by this department, this to the end that county officials may not be embarrassed in offering said issue to other persons who may desire to purchase the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—MONEY PAID TO SAID OFFICIAL—FOR USE OF HIS OWN AUTOMOBILE—UPON VOUCHERS REPRESENTING THAT MACHINE HAD BEEN HIRED—MAY BE RECOVERED.

The county surveyor presented expense accounts to the county commissioners representing that he had paid certain sums daily for automobile hire to a certain garage owner when in fact he had not paid such garage owners anything for such hire, but had used his own machine and that of his daughter in his official work. HELD: That the money paid on such vouchers be recovered by the county in an action by the prosecuting attorney.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1917.

HON. JOHN L. CABLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 19, 1917, as follows:

"For more than a year last past, the former county surveyor or highway superintendent has been presenting his expense account as such for payment, a portion of one being as follows:

July 12—To auto hire (A. Bros.) Bucyrus, Elida and the Spencerville roads, with grading outfits $4 00

July 13—To auto hire (A. Bros.) Spencerville and the Delphos and the Bucyrus roads, 3½ hours 3 50

July 14—To auto hire (A. Bros.) St. Johns, Lima-Lafayette and the Bucyrus roads with grading outfits 4 00

July 16—To auto hire (A. Bros.) Spencerville and to the Star Iron Works 3 50

These expense accounts represent that the former surveyor had paid A. Bros. one dollar per hour for the use of A.'s machine, and it was so represented to the county commissioners and county auditor. No record was made in any statement presented to the county auditor that the surveyor had used his own car or the car of his daughter.

The real facts, however, are as follows: The above A. Bros. own a garage in this city. The former surveyor purchased a Cadillac automobile for himself and had one of the A. Brothers apply and obtain a state license for this car in Armstrong's name. The former county surveyor also kept another car in this garage, owned by his daughter.

His Cadillac automobile was used exclusively for county business. The A. Bros. made out two statements of expenses, one to the surveyor, representing that they had furnished their own automobile to the surveyor at one dollar per hour and the second, also to the county surveyor, for gasoline, oil, repairs and the expenses of a driver per hour. The surveyor would then charge the county one dollar per hour for the use of the machine and pay A. Bros. only for gasoline, oil, repairs, tires and time for the driver and the like, and keep the difference.

The surveyor would also use his daughter's machine and charge the county one dollar per hour for its use and he himself would drive it. For example, on the 12th, as above shown, the surveyor's car was used three hours and the daughter's car was used one hour; on the 13th the surveyor's car was used two and one-half hours and the daughter's car one hour; the 14th the surveyor's car was used three hours and the daughter's car one hour; on the 16th, the same way. When a driver was furnished by A. Bros. he was used by the surveyor for field work when on the trip.

The former surveyor claims he has saved the county from fifty cents to one dollar by using his own car or that of his daughter.

I did not discover the above facts until a week ago and completed the investigation today. Neither the auditor nor the county commissioners knew that the surveyor was using his own car or that of his daughter, but had supposed, as shown by the bills, that the surveyor was renting the automobile from A. Bros.

I have instructed the auditor not to pay any pending expense accounts of the surveyor until hearing from you.

The total amount of charges during the last year has amounted to more than $600.00.

I call your attention to the fact that the Cass highway law, section 7181 General Code, provides:

'In addition thereto the county highway superintendent and his assistants when on official business shall be paid out of the county treasury their actual necessary traveling expenses, including livery, board and lodging.'

I also call your attention to the fact that the same section, as amended, under the White-Mulcahy law, specifically excludes the payment by the county of the traveling expenses, including livery, board and lodging of the county highway superintendent.

Section 7200 General Code, however, provides:

'The county commissioners may also at their discretion, purchase, hire or lease automobiles, motorcycle, or other conveyances and maintain the same for the use of the county surveyor and his assistants when on official business.'

"I am familiar with the opinion of your predecessor found on page eleven, volume 1, 1916, Attorney-General's Reports and also with the opinions found in volume II, 1915, Attorney-General's Reports, pages 1276 and 1592, respectively, and 1913 Reports, page 1155."

After stating the above facts you inquire:

"Kindly advise if a county surveyor had the right under the Cass highway law, and has the right under the present law, to use his own automobile for county business and charge the county for its use on time or mileage basis, also, under the above state of facts, if the former surveyor may retain the money he has so drawn, or any part of it; also if he is entitled to be paid for the balance of his expense accounts."

Section 7181 of the General Code, as found in the Cass highway law, read in part:

"The county surveyor shall be the county highway superintendent. The county surveyor shall give his entire time and attention to the duties of his office and shall receive an annual salary to be computed as follows: * * In addition thereto, the county highway superintendent and his assistants, when on official business, shall be paid out of the county treasury, their actual, necessary traveling expenses, including livery, board and lodging. * * * *"

Interpreting this section of the General Code, former Attorney-General Turner, in an opinion found in the Opinions of the Attorney-General, 1916, Vol. I, page 11, held:

"If the county highway superintendent is the owner of an automobile and uses the same exclusively in his work, as such superintendent, the reasonable and necessary expense of maintaining the same may be paid to him. If the automobile is used both for public business and for private purposes, a division of the expense of maintaining the same should be made, which division may be on a mileage basis, or an arrangement may be made involving the payment to the superintendent of a reasonable rate per mile covered by the automobile while used on public business, which rate must not include any item of compensation for the use of the automobile."

Mr. Turner said in part:

"In other words, while the county commissioners or county highway superintendent may not, under the law, purchase an automobile for the use of the county highway superintendent, and pay for the same from public funds, and while the county highway superintendent, being charged with the duty of providing himself with transportation when engaged on official business may not deal with himself and include in his expense accounts compensation for the use of his own automobile, yet if the county highway superintendent is the owner of an automobile and uses the same in traveling about the county on official business, he may include in his expense accounts and the county commissioners may allow to him the actual and necessary expenses incident to the maintenance and operation of the automobile during the time the same is used in the public business of the county."

I agree with my predecessor that under the Cass highway law the county highway superintendent could include in his expense account his actual and necessary expenses incident to the maintenance and operation of his own automobile used in his official duties but could not include in such expense account any item of compensation for the use of such automobile. Under the present law the power to contract for auto service has been taken from the county surveyor and is now lodged in the county commissioners, as provided by section 7200 G. C., 107 O. L. 115, which reads in part:

"* * * The county commissioners may also at their discretion purchase, hire or lease automobiles, motorcycles or other conveyances and maintain the same for the use of the county surveyor and his assistants when on official business. * * *"

On September 19, 1917, this department rendered an opinion, No. 631, in which it was held:

"The county commissioners may enter into a contract for the hire of a machine owned by the county surveyor for the use of said surveyor and his assistants in the performance of their official duties."

However, as I view the case you present, an answer to these questions will not assist in determining whether the payment of the voucher referred to is authorized.

It will be noted that these vouchers purport to cover expenses incurred by the county surveyor or county highway superintendent in hiring automobiles from a certain garage. Your statement of facts shows that no such expense was ever incurred by such county surveyor. Therefore, the vouchers presented were fraudulent and now that payment has been made the only question remaining is, can this money be recovered by the county.

In 11 Cyc, page 597, it is stated:

"A county may recover back money paid on claims audited and allowed by the board if the allowance was made through fraud or mistake of fact."

Section 2921 General Code reads as follows:

"Upon being satisfied that funds of the county, or public moneys in the hands of the county treasurer, or belonging to the county, are about to be or have been, misapplied, or that any such public money have been illegally drawn, or withheld from, the county treasury, or that a contract in contravention of law has been, or is about to be entered into, or has been or is being executed, or that a contract was procured by fraud or corruption, or that any property, real or personal, belonging to the county is being illegally used or occupied, or is being used or occupied in violation of contract, or that the terms of a contract made by or on behalf of the county are being or have been violated, or that money is due the county, the prosecuting attorneys of the several counties of the state may apply, by civil action in the name of the state, to a court of competent jurisdiction, to restrain such contemplated misapplication of funds, or the completion of such illegal contract not fully completed, or to recover, for the use of the county all public moneys so misapplied or illegally drawn or withheld from the county treasury, or to recover, for the benefit of the county, damages resulting from the execution of such illegal contract, or to recover, for the benefit of the county, such real or personal property so used or occupied, or to recover, for the benefit of the county, damages resulting from the non-performance of the terms of such contract, or to otherwise enforce it, or to recover such money due the county."

This section clothes the prosecuting attorney with power to recover back money illegally drawn from the county treasury.

Vindicator Printing Company v. State, 68 O. S., p. 362.

In view of the foregoing, I would advise you that the money heretofore paid out of the county treasury to the surveyor in question covering vouchers such as you set out herein, can be recovered in an action brought by the prosecuting attorney for that purpose and that no such vouchers should in the future be paid.

If the county commissioners should contract with the county surveyor under the present law for the use of the surveyor's machine, such contract would, as above stated, be legal, and payment to the surveyor for the use of such machine would be authorized thereunder.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LEGAL SETTLEMENT—GAINED BY PERSON WHO HAS RESIDED IN COUNTY MORE THAN TWELVE MONTHS WITHOUT SECURING RELIEF UNDER LAW FOR RELIEF OF POOR.

A young man, crippled and deaf, was brought into Ohio by two friends, a man and his wife, and cared for as one of their own children. Because of his unfortunate condition this young man lacked the knowledge of human affairs possessed by ordinary people, but is not feeble minded or insane. Held: That inasmuch as the facts showed this young man capable of making a choice of residence and, inasmuch as he was brought to Ohio by his friends in perfect good faith, he gained a legal settlement in the township and county in which he lived with these people for fifteen consecutive months. This even though he did not support himself but was supported by his friends.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1917.

HON. J. H. MUSSER, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 27, 1917, as follows:

> "I have your opinion No. 657, in reply to my letters of August 11 and September 18, 1917, and after reading the opinion I see that all of the facts have not properly been placed before you. While this young man is mentally deficient to some extent, he is not an idiot, neither is he insane. I have a statement from a reputable physician, who knows the young man, to the effect that he could not be classed either as an idiot or an insane person.
> The young man is deaf and is also a cripple, and because of these infirmitives he lacks the knowledge of human affairs that ordinary people have, but his knowledge and understanding is such that he could not be classed as an idiot. For this reason I think that that part of your opinion in which you say that his place of residence would be that of his mother would not be correct, and as he was an inmate of the Tippecanoe county, Indiana, infirmary after he arrived at the age of twenty-one years, and being neither an idiot or an insane person, my view of the matter is that his proper place of residence would be Tippecanoe county, Indiana.
> With the additional facts set forth herein I wish you would give me your further opinion as to the place to which this young man ought to be transported. The last that ever was heard of his mother was that she was some place in Ohio."

In the opinion you refer to I held that the young man in question could not gain a legal settlement in Ohio in his own right, but that his settlement was derived from his mother and that she must be located before his place of settlement could be determined. This on the ground that an idiot cannot gain a settlement in Ohio in his own right, since in order to gain a settlement in a township, under our poor laws, the fact of residence is not sufficient, unless attended with the intention, on the part of the resident, of making such township his place of abode. Henrietta Twp. v. Oxford Twp., 2 O. S. 32.

I also advised that under section 2544 G. C. this young man could be cared for in the county infirmary of your county until his mother can be located. This because of the fact that section 2544 G. C. provides for admission into the infirmary of not only those persons who have a legal settlement in the county, but also those persons whose settlement is unknown, or who have no legal settlement in the state.

You now advise me that this young man is not insane and is not an idiot. You say:

> "While this young man is mentally deficient to some extent, he is not an idiot, neither is he insane. I have a statement from a reputable physician who knows the young man, to the effect that he could not be classed either as an idiot or an insane person. The young man is deaf and is also a cripple, and because of these infirmities he lacks the knowledge of human affairs that ordinary people have, but his knowledge and understanding is such that he could not be classed as an idiot."

Section 3477 G. C. reads:

> "Each person shall be considered to have obtained a legal settlement in any county in this state in which he or she has continuously resided and supported himself or herself for twelve consecutive months, without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor, subject to the following exceptions:
> First. An indentured servant or apprentice legally brought into this state shall be deemed to have obtained a legal settlement in the township or municipal corporation in which such servant or apprentice has served his or her master or mistress for one year continuously.
> Second. The wife or widow of a person whose last legal settlement was in a township or municipal corporation in this state, shall be considered to be legally settled in the same township or municipal corporation. If she has not obtained a legal settlement in this state, she shall be deemed to be legally settled in the place where her last legal settlement was previous to her marriage."

In 30 Cyc., page 1083, it is stated:

> "An insane person or idiot cannot acquire a settlement in any place by virtue of acts requiring his own volition. * * * If the mind is diseased to such an extent as to deprive the person of volition, free-will, and power of choice, or deprive him of self control as to matters involved in a choice of settlement, this is sufficient."

In Westmore v. Sheffield, 56 Vt. 239, the court, in passing upon the question of legal settlement of Daniel Leland, said:

> "If Daniel was an idiot he could acquire no settlement by residence, because he was incapable of forming an intent to live anywhere. But the defendant's evidence tended to show he was above an idiot, and had sufficient mental capacity or power to form an intention and to have a choice and desire as to his place of abode. We think if he had that degree of mind and went to Westmore to live voluntarily, as a matter of choice, and without compulsion, and so resided there for the required period without assistance from any town, he thereby acquired a settlement in Westmore. If he fell short of this degree of mental capacity, his residence there availed nothing towards a settlement. Being a person of weak intellect he would naturally rely upon and be influenced and controlled in making a choice of residence by his friends, but this fact, as stated by Pierpoint, Ch. J., in Ludlow v. Landgrove, 42 Vt. 137, would constitute, of itself, no sufficient reason why his residence for the required time should not give him a legal settlement. If he was there under compulsion or restraint and against his wishes, then the essential quality of intent to live there was wanting. He was not there animo manendi. His being there was only the stay of a transient person analogous to an imprisonment without choice or purpose, as in the case of Brownington v. Charleston, 32 Vt. 411. The plaintiff's evidence tends to show that Daniel was taken by his brother to the latter's home in Westmore, and there supported until his sister and her husband took and supported him in the same way; but this does not necessarily impart the idea of compulsion or exclude the idea of choice on Daniel's part. The case as presented does not show conclusively that while he resided in Westmore he did not do so freely, and of his own choice."

In Inhabitants of Fayette v. Inhabitants of Chesterville 77 Maine, page 28, the court approved the following charge to the jury:

"To find that a person has capacity to acquire a settlement, within the meaning of the statute, you must find in the first place, that he had intelligence enough to form and retain an intention with respect to his dwelling place; that he had a mind sound enough to give him will and volition of his own, and such power and control over his mind and his action as to enable him to choose a home for himself; that he must have mental capacity sufficient to act with some degree of intelligent understanding with respect to the choice of his dwelling place, and to form some rational judgment in relation to it."

It is suggested, however, that because the youth in question has been supported by his friends, he has not "supported himself * * * for twelve consecutive months, without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor;" as provided in section 3477, above quoted. The authorities, however, lead to an opposite conclusion.

In the case of Ridgefield v. Fairfield, 73 Conn. 47, it was held that:

"A person 'maintains' himself without becoming 'chargeable' to the town within section 3288 of the general statutes, provided the town is put to no actual expense for his support. It is immaterial in such case that the person was supported in whole or in part by charity."

The court said at page 51:

"The court charged, in substance, that if during her four years' residence in Fairfield, Janes Coe was supported by herself or by her friends without aid from Fairfield, she had maintained herself without becoming chargeable to that town, within the meaning of the statute. The defendant objects to this charge. It claims that if she was wholly or in part supported by friends she did not 'maintain' herself within the meaning of the statute. This claim overlooks or disregards the controlling words of the statute 'without becoming chargeable to such town.' These words mean 'without subjecting the town to actual expense' for her support during the four years. Beacon Falls v. Seymour, 44 Conn. 210, 217; Norwich v. Saybrook, 5 id. 384, 387. The fact that others may have gratuitously or otherwise contributed, wholly or in part, to her support, is of no consequence. Lebanon v. Hebron, 6 Conn. 45, 47; Colchester v. Lyme, 13 Conn. 274; Plymouth v. Waterbury, 31 Conn. 515. Under the circumstances of this case, where no claim was made or apparently could be made, that the parties who contributed to Jane Coe's support in Fairfield were not acting in so doing in good faith, the charge in question was correct."

From the facts submitted in this case it appears that this youth was brought into your county by his two friends in good faith, and with the sole intention of taking up a residence in such county.

In view of the above authorities, and in the light of the information contained in your letter of September 27th, above quoted, I am of the opinion that the youth referred to in your communications has gained a legal settlement in your county and that he should now be admitted to your county infirmary as a county charge.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—MEMBER OF THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF PUBLIC AFFAIRS AND CLERK OF SAID BOARD.

The officers of member of the board of trustees of public affairs of a village and clerk of the board of trustees of public affairs are incompatible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1917.

HON. GEORGE C. VON BESELER, Prosecuting Attorney, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 20, 1917, inquiring whether the offices of member of board of trustees of public affairs and clerk of board of trustees of public affairs are compatible.

Sections 4357, 4360, 4361 and 4219 read:

"Sec. 4357. In each village in which water works, an electric light plant, artificial or natural gas plant, or other similar public utility is situated, or when council orders water works, an electric light plant, natural or artificial gas plant or other similar public utility, to be constructed, or to be leased or purchased from any individual, company or corporation, council shall establish at such time a board of trustees of public affairs for the village, which shall consist of three members, residents of the village, who shall be each elected for a term of two years."

"Sec.4360. The board of trustees of public affairs shall organize by electing one of its members president. It may elect a clerk, who shall be known as the clerk of the board of trustees of public affairs."

"Sec. 4361. The board of trustees of public affairs shall manage, conduct and control the water works, electric light plants, artificial or natural gas plants, or other similar public utilities, furnish supplies of water, electricity or gas, collect all water, electrical and gas rents, and appoint necessary officers, employes and agents. The board of trustees of public affairs may make such by-laws and regulations as it may deem necessary for the safe, economical and efficient management and protection of such works, plants and public utilities. Such by-laws and regulations when not repugnant to the ordinances, to the constitution or to the laws of the state, shall have the same validity as ordinances. For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing such water works, plants and public utilities, of making necessary additions thereto and extensions thereof, and of making necessary repairs thereon, such trustees may assess a water, light, power, gas or utility rent, of sufficient amount, in such manner as they deem most equitable, upon all tenements and premises supplied with water, light, power, or gas, and, when such rents are not paid, such trustees may certify the same over to the auditor of the county in which such village is located to be placed on the duplicate and collect as other village taxes or may collect the same by actions at law in the name of the village. The board of trustees of public affairs shall have the same powers and perform the same duties as are possessed by, and are incumbent upon, the director of public service as provided in sections 3955, 3959, 3960, 3961, 3964, 3965, 3974, 3981, 4328, 4329, 4330, 4331, 4332, 4333 and 4334 of the General Code, and all powers and duties relating to water works in any of these sections shall extend to and include electric light, power and gas plants and such other similar public utilities, and such boards shall have such other duties as may be prescribed by law or ordinance not inconsistent herewith."

"Sec. 4219. Council shall fix the compensation and bonds of all officers, clerks and employes in the village government, except as otherwise provided by law. All bonds shall be made with sureties subject to the approval of the mayor. The compensation so fixed shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which any officer, clerk or employe may have been elected or appointed. Members of council may receive as compensation the sum of two dollars for each meeting, not to exceed twenty-four meetings in any one year."

On April 25, 1910, former Attorney-General U. G. Denman rendered an opinion, found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1910-1911, page 1020, in which he held that a member of the board of health could not act as clerk of such board and receive a salary therefor. In that opinion Mr. Denman said that a member of the board could not be elected secretary because of "the paramount principle of public policy that prohibits a member of an administrative board from holding a salaried position under the authority of such board."

On January 26, 1915, former Attorney-General Turner rendered an opinion in which he held.

"A member of the board of sinking fund trustees of a city cannot be selected as secretary of said board and draw a salary fixed by ordinance of council for services of such secretary."

Mr. Turner gave two reasons for this conclusion: First, that there was a certain specific statutory duty resting upon the secretary of the board, which made his office a check upon the board itself and then gave the following additional reason:

> "A further and additional reason why the two offices are incompatible is not only that the one may be a check upon the other but that it would be against public policy for a member of an administrative board to hold a salaried position under the authority of such board, unless expressly authorized so to do. This matter was considered in a somewhat similar case by Hon. U. G. Denman, the then attorney-general, under date of April 25, 1910. * * * Although in the case considered by Mr. Denman the board fixed the salary of its secretary whereas in the case in question said salary is fixed by ordinance of council, yet after a careful consideration of the opinion hereinbefore mentioned, I agree with Mr. Denman relative to the question of public policy."

An examination of our statutes will disclose the fact that in a number of instances the legislature has given its express consent to the appointment or election of a member of a board as its secretary or clerk, and it would seem that, inasmuch as they have done this, they meant to withhold such consent in all other cases.

For this reason, and on the authority of the position taken by this department in the past, as above outlined, I would advise you that the offices of member of the board of trustees of public affairs of a village and the clerk of the board of trustees of public affairs are incompatible.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COSTS—IN CASE WHEN TAXPAYER HAS RECOVERED FINAL JUDGMENT IN HIS FAVOR AND HAS BEEN ALLOWED COSTS AND REASONABLE ATTORNEY FEE—HOW PAID.

The costs of a taxpayer, who has recovered a final judgment in his favor under the provisions of section 4316 G. C., and has been allowed his costs including a reasonable attorney fee, are a part of the final judgment and together with the costs of the municipal corporation, unless the latter have been previously paid by the municipality, are to be paid by the trustees of the sinking fund out of funds in their hands in accordance with the provisions of section 4517 G. C.

There is no authority to pay the costs, including attorney fees, which have been assessed against the city in a taxpayer's suit in regard to a bond issue, out of the proceeds of said bond issue.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication in which you request my opinion upon the following matter:

> "We are in receipt of a letter from the city auditor of Zanesville, Ohio, under date of July 24, 1917, as follows:
> 'In 1916 the city council issued bonds in the sum of $20,000.00 to rehabilitate the market house under an emergency ordinance, on account of the market house being partly destroyed by fire in December, 1912.

The ordinance to issue these $20,000.00 market house repair bonds was passed by council after an initiative ordinance had been filed by the people to erect a combination city hall and market house by the issue of $75,000.00 bonds, and before the people had a chance to vote on the initiative petition.

The service director after the $20,000.00 bonds were sold and money in the fund entered into a contract to rehabilitate the market house, and then a taxpayer's suit was begun to enjoin the expenditure of money under this contract, and the court of appeals found in favor of the taxpayer and perpetually enjoined the contractor and the city from going ahead under the contract, and the court order provided that the city should pay all costs in the cases in the common pleas and appeals courts with attorney fees in the sum of $350.00.

Should these costs, including the attorneys' fees, be paid from the general sinking fund, or should they be paid from the proceeds of the $20,000.00 market house repair bond issue?'

We call your attention to section 4316 G. C., relative to the costs and attorney fees in a taxpayer's suit, also to the provisions of section 4517 G. C., relative to the payment of judgments by the trustees of the sinking fund, and we most respectfully ask you the following:

1. Should same be paid by the sinking fund trustees as a judgment?
2. Could such costs and attorney fees be paid from the proceeds of the bond issue in question?"

Section 4517 G. C. provides:

> "The trustees of the sinking fund shall have charge of and provide for the payment of all bonds issued by the corporation, the interest maturing thereon and the payment of all judgments final against the corporation, except in condemnation of property cases. They shall receive from the auditor of the city or clerk of the village all taxes, assessments and moneys collected for such purposes and invest and disburse them in the manner provided by law. For the satisfaction of any obligation under their supervision, the trustees of the sinking fund may sell or use any of the securities or money in their possession."

The foregoing section vests the trustees of the sinking fund of a municipal corporation with the power and charges them with the duty of paying all final judgments against the corporation except in condemnation cases.

Section 11582 G. C. defines a judgment as "the final determination of the rights of the parties in action," and also contains the provision:

> "A direction of a court or judge, made or entered in writing and not included in a judgment, is an order."

Section 4316 G. C. reads:

> "If the court hearing such case is satisfied that the taxpayer had good cause to believe that his allegations were well founded, or if they are sufficient in law, it shall make 'such order as the equity and justice of the case demand. In such case the taxpayer shall be allowed his costs, and, if judgment is finally ordered in his favor, he may be allowed as part of the costs a reasonable compensation for his attorney."

This section vests the taxpayer with the right of allowance of his costs, if he is successful in his suit, and also permits the court in its discretion to allow him a reasonable compensation for his attorney as part of his costs.

Section 3026 G. C. provides in part:

"On the rendition of judgment, in any cause, the costs of the party recovering, together with his debt or damages, shall be carried into his judgment, and the costs of the party against whom judgment is rendered shall be separately stated in the record, or docket entry."

This section makes the costs recovered by the successful party a part of his judgment and provides that the costs of the unsuccessful party shall be separately stated in the record or docket entry.

Section 3027 G. C. reads:

"The clerk or justice of the peace, issuing execution for such judgment, shall indorse thereon the amount of the costs of the party condemned, which costs shall be collected by the officer to whom such writ is directed, in the same manner and at the same time as the judgment mentioned in the execution."

This section provides in effect that when an execution is issued on a judgment, including the costs of the successful party, the costs of the condemned or unsuccessful party shall be endorsed on the writ and collected in the same manner and at the same time as the judgment mentioned in the execution.

It seems to follow, from the provisions contained in this section, that it was the intention of the legislature to have the costs assessed against the unsuccessful party collected in the same manner and at the same time as the judgment which includes the costs of the successful party. It is true that as far as the trustees of the sinking fund of the municipality are concerned no execution will be issued against them since that would not be the proper way to enforce the judgment. However, when sections 3026 and 3027 are taken in connection with each other, it would seem that the conclusion is inevitable that both kinds of costs therein mentioned are to be collected against the unsuccessful party in the same way. As is stated in your communication, the court has assessed all of the costs against the municipal corporation and has rendered judgment in favor of the taxpayer for all of his costs including an attorney fee in a certain amount. There does not seem to be any doubt from the facts but what a final judgment has been rendered against the municipal corporation and, hence, the requirement contained in section 4517 G. C. that the judgment must be final is net.

In answer to your first question, then, I advise you that the costs of a taxpayer, who has recovered a final judgment in his favor under the provisions of section 4316 G. C. and has been allowed his costs including a reasonable attorney fee, are a part of the final judgment and, together with the costs of the municipal corporation, unless the latter have been previously paid by the municipality, are to be paid by the trustees of the sinking fund out of funds in their hands in accordance with the provisions of section 4517 G. C.

Your second question inquires whether the costs, including attorney fees, in the particular case could be paid from the proceeds of the bond issue in question.

Section 5654 G. C., as amended 103 O. L., 521, is in point and provides:

> "The proceeds of a special tax, loan or bond issue shall not be used for any other purpose than that for which the same was levied, issued or made, except as herein provided. When there is in the treasury of any city, village, county, township or school district a surplus of the proceeds of a special tax or which is not needed for the purpose for which the tax was levied, or the loan made, or the bonds issued, all of such surplus shall be transferred immediately by the officer, board or council having charge of such surplus, to the sinking fund of such city, village, county, township or school district, and thereafter shall be subject to the uses of such sinking fund."

The express inhibition is contained in the section to the effect that the proceeds of a bond issue shall not be used for any other purpose than that for which the same was issued, except as therein provided. The exception contained in the section provides that when there are proceeds of a bond issue which cannot be used or are not needed for the purpose for which the bonds were issued, all of such surplus shall be transferred immediately by the council having charge of same to the sinking fund of such city and shall thereafter be used for sinking fund purposes.

In the facts as set forth in your communication the statement is made that these bonds were issued for the purpose of rehabilitating the market house of the city of Zanesville, and that later on a larger bond issue was had for the purpose of building a new market house, and that in consequence of said latter act the court held that the city was not authorized to expend the funds derived from the first issue of bonds for the repair of the old market house.

The bonds being issued for the purpose of providing funds for repairing and rehabilitating the market house, it could not be said that these funds could be used for the purpose of paying any costs, including attorney fees, which might be assessed against the city by reason of a taxpayer's suit in regard to said bond issue, since this purpose would be something altogether different from the purpose for which the bonds were issued.

In view of the court's holding, then, funds derived from the twenty thousand dollar bond issue cannot be used for the purpose for which said bonds were issued and, hence, in accordance with the provisions of section 5654 G. C. whatever surplus remains from the proceeds of said bond issue should be transferred to the sinking funds to be used for sinking fund purposes.

I therefore advise you that there is no authority to pay the costs, including attorney fees, which have been assessed against the city in a taxpayer's suit in regard to said bond issue out of the proceeds of the bond issue in question.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

STREET IMPROVEMENT—WHAT RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY MUST CONTAIN RELATIVE TO MATERIAL TO BE USED—WHAT ORDINANCE MUST CONTAIN—ALTERNATIVE BIDS—RIGHT OF SERVICE DIRECTOR TO SELECT MATERIAL.

(1) It is good practice for the council of a city in passing a resolution of necessity providing for a street improvement to have said resolution contain a statement of the materials which may be used in said improvement, although it is not required to be set forth therein unless it becomes necessary so to do in determining the general nature of the improvement. However, the plans, specifications and estimates which are required to be approved in the resolution of necessity should refer to the several kinds of materials which may be used in making such improvement.

(2) That in passing its legislation for a street improvement on the assessment plan council may specify several kinds of material that may be bid upon for said improvement in the alternative, and leave the selection of the particular material to be used to the determination of the proper administrative officials of the city.

(3) That the director of public service, in the event the contract is for five hundred dollars or less, is authorized, in pursuance of the provision contained in the ordinance of council determining to proceed with the improvement that several kinds of material may be bid upon in the alternative, to select the particular material that will be used from the list set forth in the ordinance, and to enter into a contract for same without any further action on the part of council; and that the action of said director in making said selection amounts only to the performance of a ministerial act and does not involve the exercise of delegated legislative power on his part. However, if said contract is for an amount in excess of five hundred dollars, same should be awarded only on approval of the board of control, which shall direct the director of public service to enter into said contract as provided in section 4403 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1917.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication in which you submit for my opinion the following request:

> "We call your attention to the provisions of Sec. 3815 G. C., that the resolution of necessity shall determine the general nature of a special assessment improvement, also that such resolution shall approve the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles for the proposed improvement; also to the form of such resolution giving as an illustration, on page 266 of Ellis's Municipal Code, fifth edition, you will notice that section 1 of this resolution provides for the general nature of the improvement, material to be used, etc.
> Question: Can council pass a resolution of necessity for a special assessment paving improvement, omit in such resolution the material to be used for such paving, or can council legally insert in such resolution to be paved with brick, wood blocks or asphalt, and after the bids have been received, determine the class of material to be used, or leave it to the discretion of the service director, or must such material be determined in advance and so set forth in the resolution of necessity?"

Section 3814 G. C. provides:

"When it is deemed necessary by a municipality to make a public improvement to be paid for in whole or in part by special assessments, council shall declare the necessity thereof by resolution, three-fourths of the members elected thereto concurring, except as otherwise herein provided. Such resolution shall be published as other resolutions, but shall take effect upon its first publication."

Section 3815 G. C. as amended 107 O. L. 151, reads:

"Such resolution shall determine the general nature of the improvement, what shall be the grade of the street, alley, or other public place to be improved, the grade or elevation of the curbs, and shall approve the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles for the proposed improvement. In such resolution council shall also determine the method of the assessment, the mode of payment, and whether or not bonds shall be issued in anticipation of the collection thereof. Assessments for any improvement may be payable in one to twenty installments at such time as council prescribes."

Section 3825 G. C. provides:

"If the council decides to proceed with the improvement, an ordinance for the purpose shall be passed. Such ordinance shall set forth specifically the lots and lands to be assessed for the improvement, shall contain a statement of the general nature of the improvement, the character of the materials which may be bid upon therefor, the mode of payment therefor, a reference to the resolution theretofore passed for such improvement with date of its passage, and a statement of the intention of council to proceed therewith in accordance with such resolution and in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles provided for such improvement."

Section 3834 G. C. provides:

"When special assessments are made upon property for the construction of an improvement, and several kinds of material have been named in the ordinance, or ordinances, providing therefor, and on which bids have been received for the construction of such improvements with any or all of such materials, such assessments shall be valid and binding assessments upon the property so assessed. In the construction of sewers, excepting main or district sewers, notice of the passage of the resolution therefor shall be made in the manner hereinbefore provided."

Section 3815 G. C., which is cited in your communication, and section 3814 G. C. have reference to the preliminary resolutions of the council of a municipality in making improvements, and provide, among other things, that council shall determine therein the general nature of the improvement and shall also approve the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles for the proposed improvement.

These sections do not provide specifically that the council shall set forth in the resolution the particular materials that may be used in the improvement, and unless it would be necessary to do so in describing the general nature of the improvement such action would not be required. However, the plans, specifications and estimates must, of necessity, refer to the materials that may be used in said improvement, since without this reference they would not be comprehensive. It would follow, then, that by approving the plans, specifications and estimates in the resolution the council would thereby indicate the materials that may be used in the improvement.

I am informed that it is the practice in municipalities over the state to set forth in the resolution in determining the general nature of the improvement the materials that may be used in said improvement, in addition to doing so by the approval of the plans, specifications and estimates. It would seem that the statement in the resolution of the materials that may be used would be good practice in the drafting of said resolution, and I would recommend such procedure.

After the resolution provided for in sections 3814 and 3815 G. C. has been passed and the other steps provided for in sections not quoted have been taken, if the council decides to proceed with the improvement it is necessary then for the council, under the provisions of sections 3825 G. C., to pass an ordinance in which it determines to proceed with said improvement. Such ordinance must contain, among other things, a statement of the general nature of the improvement and the character of the materials which may be bid upon therefor. We have, then, the specific requirement with respect to the ordinance determining to proceed that the same shall contain a statement of the character of the materials which may be bid upon therefor, and, regardless of whether it is necessary to set forth that fact in describing the general nature of the improvement, it is necessary to have that provision in the ordinance to proceed. In regard to the ordinance to proceed, then, the question is raised directly as to what it meant by the requirement that the character of the materials which may be bid upon shall be set forth therein.

I take it from your communication that the question you have in mind is whether the materials which may be bid upon in the making of an improvement may be set forth in the alternative in the proceedings with reference to said improvement, and if it is legal to describe the materials in the alternative, that you are desirous of knowing what officer or body of the city is vested with the authority to make the final selection as to the particular material to be used when it becomes necessary to do so.

Our supreme court in the case of Emmert v. City of Elyria, 74 O. S. 185, had before it for consideration the question as to what is meant by the statutory provision that the ordinance to proceed shall contain a statement of the general nature of the improvement and the character of the materials which may be bid upon therefor. The holding of the court on this point is set forth in the first branch of the syllabus, which reads as follows:

> "A statement in an ordinance, providing for the improvement of a street by paving, that the paving material shall be asphalt, brick or other material as may thereafter be determine, meets the requirement of section 55 of the municipal code (1536-215 Revised Statutes), that the ordinance shall contain a statement of the general nature of the improvement and the character of the materials which may be bid upon therefor."

It seems to follow clearly from the foregoing holding that the requirements of section 55 of the municipal code, now section 3825 G. C., have been met by the council of a municipality in deciding to proceed with the improvement of a street when it provides in the ordinance that said street shall be improved with asphalt. or brick, or some other material. In other words, in view of this decision it seems to be undoubtedly true that a municipal council may set forth in the alternative in the ordinance providing for the improvement of a street what materials may be bid upon therefor.

Section 3834 G. C., which is quoted above, is declaratory of this interpretation of the law, and provides that assessments made in pursuance of improvement legislation in which several kinds of material had been named in the ordinance or ordinances shall be valid and binding upon the property assessed.

The situation then is that the council may provide in the ordinance to proceed that several kinds of material may be used in the making of said improvement. It becomes necessary thereafter for some officer or officers of the city to make a selection as to what particular material out of the several kinds set forth in said ordinance shall be used in said improvement. In determining this question it is necessary to consider several sections of the General Code which refer to the powers and duties of the council and administrative officers of a city.

Section 4325 provides, in part:

> "The director of public service shall supervise the improvement and repair of streets, avenues, alleys * * *."

Section 4328:

> "The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

Section 4403:

> "No contract in the department of public service or the department of public safety in excess of five hundred dollars shall be awarded except on the approval of the board of control, which shall direct the director of the appropriate department to enter into the contract. The members of the board shall prepare estimates of the revenue and expenditures of their respective departments to be submitted to the council by the mayor, as provided by law."

Section 4211 (formerly section 123 of the municipal code, section 1536-618 R. S.):

> "The powers of council shall be legislative only, and it shall perform no administrative duties whatever, and it shall neither appoint nor confirm any officer or employe in the city government except those of its own body, except as is otherwise provided in this title. All contracts requiring the authority of council for their execution shall be entered into and conducted to performance by the board or officers having charge of the matters to which they relate, and after authority to make such contracts has been given and the necessary appropriation made, council shall take no further action thereon."

With reference to the relation between the powers and duties of the council and the administrative officials of a city, after quoting section 123 of the municipal code (section 4211 G. C.), our supreme court says, in the case of Akron v. Dobson, 81 O. S. 66, at page 76 and 77:

"Prior to the adoption of the municipal code of 1902, the city council was an administrative, as well as a legislative body, and one of the reforms contemplated by the adoption of the new code was to make its powers legislative only. * * * The council provides the money for carrying on the government, either by a levy of taxes, or an issue of bonds, and it is proper that it should have some control over the expenditures, but considering these sections in the light of the purpose of the code we think their requirements are met by an ordinance making an appropriation and stating generally the purpose for which it is made, and authorizing the directors to enter into contracts to effect that purpose."

In Emmert v. City of Elyria, supra, at page 195, in the opinion, it is said:

"* * * under the code council is relieved of administrative matters and such duties are imposed on a board of public service. Section 55 of the (municipal) code (now section 3825 G. C.) provides that if council decides to proceed with the improvement an ordinance for the purpose shall be passed and that it shall contain a statement of the general nature of the improvement and the character of the materials thereof. It appears from the finding of facts that council determined that the paving material should be asphalt, brick or other materials as might thereafter be determined. This meets the requirement of the statute."

It is true that in the Elyria case the court does not state in the opinion or the syllabus what particular officer or body is to make this final selection; but when we consider in connection with the court's decision the provision of section 4211 G. C. (formerly section 123 of the municipal code) that "all contracts requiring the authority of council for their execution shall be entered into and conducted to performance by the board or officers having charge of the matters to which they relate, and after authority to make such contracts has been given and the necessary appropriation made, council shall take no further action thereon," we must conclude that the court had in mind that the proper administrative officer or officers of the city were to make the selection from the several kinds of material set forth in the ordinance. In other words, it must have been the view of the court that the making of the particular selection of material from the several kinds authorized to be bid upon was the performance of an administrative function to be exercised by the administrative officials of the city, since the passing of the ordinance to proceed with the improvement is the last action that council is authorized to take up to the time that the contract is let and awarded.

However, the particular questions that are presented to me for my opinion were before the court for consideration in the case of Scott v. City of Hamilton, 4 O. N. P. n. s. 1. At page 7 it was said by the court:

"Was there an illegal delegation of power of council to the board of public services in this case in regard to the selection of material?

The council passed what is called a determining ordinance, providing that this street might be paved with block asphalt, sheet asphalt, or brick. The board of public service advertised for bids upon these three materials, and they selected the bid, and awarded the contract to the bidder for asphalt block."

At page 9 the court further says:

"Now the question in this case is whether council has acted. Undoubtedly if council would pass an ordinance declaring East High street should be paved, and name no material, that would not give the board of public service power to select the material. But here they have named three materials, in the alternative. Council has named them—not simply the board of public service—but the legislative body has named the three materials, and the question is whether delegation of power to select one of three materials named is delegation of legislative authority."

At page 10 the court quotes from the opinion of Ranney, J., in Railway Co. v. Commissioners, 1 O. S. 77, the following:

"The true distinction, however, is between the delegation of power to make the law, which necessarily involves a discretion as to what it shall be, and conferring an authority or discretion as to its execution to be exercised under and in pursuance of the law. The first cannot be done; to the latter no valid objection can be made."

After making this quotation the court goes on to say:

"Now, it seems to the court that this was authority or discretion conferred as to the execution of this particular matter passed by the council, and it falls within the principle laid down by Judge Ranney."

At page 12 the court concludes:

"So in this case when the city council designated the kind of materials to be used, in the alternative, its agents, the board of public service, had the right to make a selection, and when made, such selection became the material chosen by the city council. The contract is binding upon the city because the city council, the local legislature, authorized the selection of the material.

The contract required the authority of council, but after that authority was given the execution of the contract devolved upon the board of public service. See sections 123 and 143, Municipal Code.

The voice which speaks the will of the municipality is the council, but the hand which records that expression is the board of public service."

The foregoing case of Scott v. City of Hamilton was affirmed by the circuit court, and the holding of that court is set forth in the head note of Scott v. City of Hamilton, 7 O. C. C. n. s. 493, as follows:

"A board of public service, where required by a street improvement ordinance to choose one of three materials after bids were received, performs only a ministerial act, and as the agent of the city council executes its legislative command."

In view of all the foregoing, then, I advise you:

(1) That it is good practice for the resolution of necessity providing for a street improvement to contain a statement of the materials which may be used in said improvement, although it is not required to be set forth therein unless it becomes necessary so to do in determining the general nature of the improvement. However, the plans, specifications and estimates which are required to be approved in the resolution of necessity should refer to the several kinds of materials which may be used in making such improvement.

(2) That in passing its legislation for a street improvement on the assessment plan council may specify several kinds of material that may be bid upon for said improvement in the alternative, and leave the selection of the particular material to be used to the determination of the proper administrative officials of the city.

(3) That the director of public service, in the event the contract is for five hundred dollars or less, is authorized, in pursuance of the provision contained in the ordinance of council determining to proceed with the improvement that several kinds of material may be bid upon in the alternative, to select the particular material that will be used from the list set forth in the ordinance, and to enter into a contract for same without any further action on the part of council; and that the action of said director in making said selection amounts only to the performance of a ministerial act and does not involve the exercise of delegated legislative power on his part. However, if said contract is for an amount in excess of five hundred dollars, the same should be awarded only on the approval of the board of control, which shall direct the director of public service to enter into said contract as provided in sections 4403 G. C.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

FEES—OF APPLICANT FOR ADMISSION TO TAKE MEDICAL EXAMINATION—WHEN PAYABLE—BOARD HAS NO RIGHT TO REFUND SAME—NURSES.

The fees provided for by section 1270 G. C. shall be paid at the time the entrance examiner's certificate is issued to the applicant showing him to have proper preliminary educational qualifications.

The fees provided by sections 1274-2, 1277, 1282, 1284, 1289, 1292 and 1295-11 shall be paid when the several applications are filed.

Fees are not properly received by the board from an applicant for a preliminary examination and hence there would be none to return in case he failed to qualify educationally. If, however, such applicant pays the fee when he files such application for a preliminary examination, such fee is simply held for his use and would be returned in case he failed to qualify educationally.

No fees, after being once properly received, for the use of the state or an officer or board thereof, can be returned.

The state medical board can make no rules which provide for the collection of fees not authorized by statute.

There is authority to collect a fee of $3.00 from nurses for a preliminary educational certificate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1917.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of September 17, 1917, you ask my opinion upon the following questions:

"1. Should the fees designated in sections 1270, 1274-2, 1274-3, 1277, 1282, 1284, 1289, 1292 and 1295-11 be paid at the time the various applications are filed with the board?

2. If said fees are required to be deposited with the applications, may they be refunded under any of the following conditions:

A. Failure to qualify educationally?

B. Failure to pass final examination?

C. Withdrawal of application?

D. Or for any other cause?

3. If any of said fees may be properly refunded, how should it be done in view of the provisions of section 24 of the General Code?

4. May the medical board in its rules, authorized by section 1267 G. C., provide for the collection of any fees not authorized by statute?

5. Is there any authority in the provisions of section 1295-5 to collect the fee of $3.00 from nurses which is authorized by section 1270 G. C. to be collected from doctors?"

The sections of the General Code referred to in your question No. 1 are a part of the chapter which provides for the state medical board and for the examination and registration of persons to practice medicine in Ohio.

Said sections read as follows:

"Sec. 1270. The state medical board shall appoint an entrance examiner who shall not be directly or indirectly connected with a medical college and who shall determine the sufficiency of the preliminary education of applicants for admission to the examination. The following preliminary educational credentials shall be sufficient:

A diploma from a reputable college granting the degree of A. B., B. S., or equivalent degree.

A diploma from a legally constituted normal school, high school or seminary, issued after four years of study.

A teacher's permanent or life certificate.

A student's certificate of examination for admission to the freshman class of a reputable literary or scientific college.

"In the absence of the foregoing qualifications, the entrance examiner may examine the applicant in such branches as are required for graduation from a first class high school of this state, and to pass such examination shall be sufficient qualification. If the entrance examiner finds that the preliminary education of the applicant is sufficient, he shall, upon payment to the treasurer of the state medical board of a fee of three dollars, issue a certificate thereof, which shall be attested by the secretary of the state medical board.

The applicant must also produce a certificate issued by the entrance examiner and a diploma from a legally chartered medical institution in the United States, in good standing, as defined by the board, at the time the diploma was issued, and which institution, subsequent to May 1, 1913, requires for admission for the degree of M. D. to such institution, a preliminary education equal to that required for graduation from a first grade high school in this state, or a diploma or license approved by the board which conferred the full right to practice all branches of medicine or surgery in a foreign country.

"Sec. 1274-2. For the purpose of establishing the practice of such limited branches the state medical board shall call to its aid the designated persons as provided in section 1274-3 of the General Code, and such designated persons shall examine any person who has practiced any such branch in Ohio for a period of at least one year prior to June first, 1915, and who makes application prior to October first, 1915, on a form prescribed by the board in those subjects only which are appropriate to the limited branch of medicine or surgery, for a certificate to practice which his application is made. No such applicant shall be required to comply with the preliminary educational qualifications provided for in section 1274-5 of the General Code. Any person, practicing in Ohio, who at the time of the passage of this act shall actually be engaged in this state for a period of five years continuously prior to October first, 1915, in the practice of any one or more of the limited branches of medicine or surgery hereinbefore enumerated, and who shall present to and file with the state medical board an affidavit to that effect after the passage of this act shall be exempted from the examination, and shall be entitled to receive from said board a license to practice, upon the payment to said board of a fee of twenty-five dollars. The examination of all other applicants shall be conducted under rules prescribed by the board and at such times and places as the board may determine. Such examination shall be given in anatomy, physiology, chemistry, bacteriology, pathology, hygiene, diagnosis, and in such other subjects appropriate to the limited branches of medicine or surgery, certificate to practice which is applied for, as the board may require; provided, however, that applicants for certificates to practice massage or Swedish movements shall not be examined in pathology and diagnosis.

"Sec. 1274-3. For the purpose of conducting such examinations the state medical board shall call to its aid any person or persons of established reputation and known ability in the particular limited branch in which the examination is being held; and in the event that there is in existence a state association or society of practitioners of any such limited branch of medicine or surgery, such association or society, except a state association or society of chiropodists, shall recommend the person or persons to be designated for this service by the board. Any person called by the state medical board to its aid, as provided in this section, shall receive for his services not more than ten dollars per day and his actual and necessary expenses to be fixed and allowed by the state medical board.

If the applicant passes such examination and has paid the fee of twenty-five dollars as required by law, the state medical board shall issue its certificate to that effect. Such certificate shall authorize the holder thereof to practice such limited branch or branches of medicine or surgery as may be specified therein, but shall not permit him to practice any other branch or branches of medicine or surgery nor shall it permit him to treat infectious, contagious or venereal diseases, nor to prescribe or administer drugs, or to perform major surgery.

"Sec. 1277. Each applicant for a certificate to practice medicine or surgery in this state shall pay a fee of twenty-five dollars for an examination. On failure to pass such examination the fee shall not be returned to the applicant, but within a year after such failure he may present himself and be again examined without the payment of an additional fee. All fees for examination shall be paid in advance to the treasurer of the board and by him paid into the state treasury to the credit of a fund for the use of the state medical board.

"Sec. 1282. The state medical board may dispense with the examination of a physician or surgeon duly authorized to practice medicine or surgery in another state, a territory or the District of Columbia, who wishes to remove from such state, territory or district, and reside and practice his profession in this state, upon his complying with the following conditions:

Such physician or surgeon shall make an application on a form prescribed by the board, pay a fee of fifty dollars and present a certificate or license issued by the medical board thereof; provided the laws of such state, territory or district require of physicians and surgeons practicing therein qualifications of a grade equal to those required of physicians and surgeons practicing in Ohio, and equal rights are accorded by such state, territory or district to physicians and surgeons of Ohio holding a certificate from the state medical board who desire to remove to, reside and practice their profession in such state, territory or district.

Sec. 1284. If the applicant passes a satisfactory examination and has paid a fee of ten dollars, the state medical board shall issue its certificate to that effect, which must be deposited with the probate judge of the county in the manner provided for a physician's certificate, and thereupon entitled its holder to practice midwifery in this state. Such certificate may be refused, revoked or suspended as in the case of certificates to physicians and surgeons.

Sec. 1289. Before he shall be admitted to an examination before the state medical board a person who desires to practice osteopathy shall pay a fee of twenty-five dollars to its treasurer and file with its secretary such evidence of preliminary education as is required by law of applicants for examination to practice medicine or surgery, together with a certificate from an osteopathic examining committee as hereafter provided, showing that the applicant holds a diploma or a physician's osteopathic certificate from a reputable college of osteopathy as determined by such committee, and he has passed an examination in a manner satisfactory to the committee in the subjects of pathology, physiological chemistry, gynecology, minor surgery, osteopathic diagnosis and the principles and practice of osteopathy.

Sec. 1292. Upon recommendation of the osteopathic committee, the state medical board may dispense with the examination of an osteopath, duly authorized to practice osteopathy in another state, a territory or the District of Columbia, who wishes to remove from such state, territory or district and reside and practice his profession in this state, upon his complying with the following conditions:

Such osteopath shall make an application on a form prescribed by the board, and pay a fee of fifty dollars and present a certificate or license issued by the proper board of such state, territory or district; provided the laws of such state, territory or district require of osteopaths practicing therein qualifications of a grade to those required of osteopaths practicing in Ohio, and equal rights are accorded by such state, territory or district to osteopaths of Ohio holding a certificate from the state medical board who desire to remove to, reside and practice their profession in such state, territory or district.

Sec. 1295-11. Each applicant for a certificate to practice nursing as a registered nurse in this state shall pay a fee of not to exceed ten dollars for examination, which fees shall be fixed by the state medical board. The fees for examination shall be paid in advance to the treasurer of the state medical board and by him paid into the state treasury to the credit of a fund for the use of the said board in the enforcement of this act."

In each one of the above sections there is provided that certain fees shall be paid by those who desire to secure the advantages of the provisions of the sections in which such fees are mentioned and the sections in the same chapter which refer to the same subjects. To illustrate, section 1270 provides a fee of $3.00 shall be paid to the treasurer of the state medical board. This is a certificate fee and is paid for the certificate which is issued to the applicant and which shows that the applicant has the proper preliminary educational credentials, either from a school or college or from such examiner, and which certificate and a diploma from a legally chartered medical institution in the United States are necessary for such applicant prior to the time he files his application to take the examination to practice medicine or surgery in this state.

The fee must be paid after the entrance examiner has ascertained that the educational qualifications of the applicant are sufficient and when the applicant files his application and receives his certificate showing his educational qualifications to be sufficient.

The provisions that the same shall be paid to the treasurer of the state medical board is equal to language which would designate that the same be paid to the board because the payment to an officer of a board having authority to receive the same is a payment to the board.

Section 1274-2 G. C. provides how persons who desire to engage in a limited branch of the practice of medicine may receive certificates to do so. Such limited branches are set out in the preceding section, to wit, section 1274-1. If, as provided by section 1274-2 a person had actually been engaged in the practice of one of such limited branches in the state of Ohio for a period of five years prior to the first day of October, 1915, and would file an affidavit stating such fact, a license would be issued to such person upon the payment of a fee of $25.00; that is, the fee of $25.00 was and is the license fee for such license certificate. If, however, the person had only practiced such limited branch or branches of medicine for a period of at least one year prior to June 1, 1915, then such person could make an application prior to October 1, 1915, for an examination, the examination to be conducted under the rules prescribed by the board and at such times and places as the board may determine. If the applicant passes such examination "and has paid a fee of $25.00 as required by law," the state medical board shall issue such applicant a certificate to that effect. While it is not clear just when said fee shall be paid, yet it seems to be an examination fee and under the general course provided for by the other sections in said chapter, I take it that the same must be paid at the time the application is filed, that is, prior to the taking of the examination and not after the applicant has passed or attempted to pass such examination. It is, in other words, an application fee and not a certificate or license fee, and I, therefore, advise you that the same should be paid at the time the application is filed for the examination. But in case the applicant has practiced for five years, then the fee is paid at the time the affidavit is filed and the license is granted, for in such case no examination is had.
